

Grand Tetons National Park, Wyoming

“... it is your park. It's the park of every person who lives in America, and we've got to remember that. We're stewards of the people's land. We have an obligation to leave this [place] a better place than when we found it—and there's no doubt in my mind, thanks to the hard work of... employees, to the volunteers who come, thanks to a Congress that recognizes that we need to maintain this incredibly important asset for our country, we'll do our job.”

President George W. Bush
speaking at the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, August 2003, regarding the preservation of America's natural treasures.
