In an interview Friday, White House director of legislative affairs Marc Short declined to say what the administration would do if Garrett fell short of the necessary votes in committee.

"There are some who look at it myopically and will say, 'Here's your challenge in committee,'" Short said. "But I think focusing on the committee in and of itself doesn't factor in other members of Congress who will oppose a different nominee."

Underscoring the wedge that the Export-Import Bank has driven between Republicans, manufacturers on Tuesday applauded Rounds for announcing his opposition, while conservative groups went on the attack.

"Sen. Rounds is placing special interests and lobbyists above the interests of the American people," Club for Growth President David McIntosh said. "A vote against Scott Garrett is a vote for business as usual in Washington. Rounds' opposition will serve to protect the swamp and its creatures rather drain it."

Andrew Restuccia contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

ANWR drilling in tax bill draws opposition from a dozen House Republicans Back

By Nick Juliano | 11/30/2017 06:33 PM EDT

A dozen House Republicans raised concerns today about a rider in the Senate tax bill that would allow drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The lawmakers did not mention the tax bill by name in their letter, and they stopped short of promising to pull their support if ANWR drilling is included. But they said they had "concerns with any proposal that would implement an oil and gas leasing program in the Refuge" and questioned whether new drilling there was necessary.

"Further, the resources beneath the Refuge's Coastal Plain simply are not necessary for our nation's energy independence," wrote Reps. Brian Fitzpatrick, Dave Reichert and 10 of their GOP colleagues.

Six of the 12 lawmakers already voted against the House tax bill earlier this month, citing objections such as its elimination of the state and local tax deduction.

Opening ANWR is a priority for Sen. Lisa Murkowski, a key swing vote in the upper chamber, which hopes to pass its version of the bill as soon as this week.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke booked government helicopters to attend D.C. events Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/07/2017 06:31 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke spent more than $14,000 on government helicopters this summer to take himself and staff to and from official events near Washington, D.C., in order to accommodate his attendance at a swearing-in ceremony for his replacement in Congress and a horseback ride with Vice President Mike Pence, according to previously undisclosed official travel documents.

The travel logs, released to POLITICO via a Freedom of Information Act request, show Zinke using taxpayer-funded vehicles from the U.S. Park Police to help accommodate his political events schedule.

In a case detailed in the new documents, Zinke ordered a U.S. Park Police helicopter to take him and his chief of staff, Scott Hommel, to an emergency management exercise in Shepherdstown, W.Va., on June 21.

Zinke's staff justified the $8,000 flight by saying official business would prevent him leaving Washington before 2 p.m., too late to make the two-hour drive to the exercise, according to the documents.

The event that prevented Zinke from leaving before 2 p.m. was the swearing-in ceremony for Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-Mont.), according to Zinke's official Interior calendar. Gianforte, who won a special election for Zinke's old seat in May after assaulting a reporter, contributed along with his wife $15,800 to Zinke's two congressional campaigns.

"Secretary Zinke's last engagement in Washington D.C. is at 2 p.m.," an Interior staffer wrote as justification for using the helicopter. "Driving to [the West Virginia event] would not enable him to be on time and fully participate as scheduled."

Interior defended the trips.

"The swearing in of the Congressman is absolutely an official event, as is emergency management training," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in an email Thursday. "Shame on you for not respecting the office of a Member of Congress."

Zinke also ordered a Park Police helicopter to fly him and another Interior official to and from Yorktown, Va., on July 7 in order to be back in Washington in time for a 4 p.m. horseback ride with Pence. The trip cost about $6,250, according to the documents.

The horseback ride through Rock Creek Park also included Sen. Roy Blunt (R-Mo.) and CMS Administrator Seema Verma, according to a post on Pence's Facebook page.

While in Yorktown, Zinke completed a walking tour of the local Revolutionary War battlefield and attended a boating industry roundtable discussion, according to the documents. The day before the trip, an Interior trip planner added to the schedule a 30-minute flyover of an area where Dominion Energy is building high-voltage electric transmission lines to run across the James River.

Interior officials originally estimated that driving to Yorktown would take about three hours, although one noted that "there is a major construction project on I-64, which will slow things down."

In an email to Interior travel scheduler Tim Nigborowicz, an Interior employee justified Zinke's using the helicopter instead of less expensive method by saying "the Secretary will be able to familiarize himself with the in-flight capabilities of an aircraft he is in charge of" and that the Park Police staff on board would "provide an added measure of security to the Secretary during his travel."

Interior officials certified ahead of the flight that Zinke's use of the helicopter would not compromise law enforcement obligations.

The Park Police helicopter, Eagle One, is deployed for medevac and emergency response situations around Washington, a part of its mission Zinke praised later that month.

"U.S. Park Service helicopter pilot and crew provided a life-saving medevac flight during the attack on members of Congress during baseball practice," Zinke said in the July 25 video celebrating American Heroes Week.

The former Montana congressman and Navy SEAL is already being investigated by the Interior Department's Inspector General and the independent Office of Special Counsel for his mixing of official travel and political events. Interior earlier this year released records documenting Zinke's use of charter and military aircraft, including a $12,000 flight from Las Vegas to Montana that allowed him to give a speech for a hockey team owned by a major campaign donor.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Electric grid weathers total eclipse of the sun — Big biodiesel ruling expected today — Taking stock of California's climate situation
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 5:43:56 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 08/22/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff, Lauren Gardner, Alex Guillén and Esther Whieldon

PASSED WITH FLYING COLORS: Solar panels across a swath of the U.S. went dark Monday as the first domestic total solar eclipse since 1979 transfixed the country, but the electric grid appeared to weather the disruption easily. Applying lessons Europe learned during its own 2015 eclipse, utilities leaned more heavily on alternate supplies to fill in gaps in solar generation. As Pro's Esther Whieldon reports, Eric Schmitt, California ISO's vice president of operations, told reporters about 3,000 megawatts to 3,500 megawatts of solar generation stopped during the eclipse, but hydropower and natural gas power supplies filled in that gap. "We didn't have any major challenges on the system, even minor challenges," he said. "We're very pleased with how smooth it went. All the resources performed the way they were supposed to perform."

How'd others do? The PJM Interconnection, the grid operator for more than a dozen Mid-Atlantic and Midwestern states saw a decrease of about 520 megawatts utility scale solar during the eclipse, which is not even a drop in the bucket for the system that has 185,000 megawatts of power on call. Duke Energy estimates it saw a drop of 1,700 megawatts-worth of output from utility-scale solar generation in North Carolina. (The grid's success did not extend to traffic where numerous apocalypses were reported after the eclipse passed).

Cabinet secretaries took a break. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke tweeted it was a "pretty cool view" from his agency's rooftop, while EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said his staff enjoyed a "great view" from headquarters. Energy Secretary Rick Perry said the total eclipse "rocks" and linked to National Renewable Energy Laboratory staff enjoying the view.

Away from Washington, senior lawmakers did as well. Senate EPW Chairman John Barrasso "really enjoyed watching the eclipse" from Casper, Wyo. (where the totality lasted more than two-and-a-half minutes). Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski was underground in a "permafrost tunnel" near Fairbanks, Alaska, at peak eclipse, but later caught a glimpse from visiting Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette.

WELCOME TO TUESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and SEIA's Christopher Mansour was first to name Italy as the spot with two other independent countries within its borders (San Marino and Vatican City). For today (in honor of Monday's incredible eclipse): What is the only major U.S. city (more than 500,000 people) that enjoyed more than two minutes of totality? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

THE MITCH MCCONNELL CONNECTION: Anthony Pugliese exited the Department of Transportation to join FERC as its chief of staff, Transportation Pro's Lauren Gardner scooped for Pros. He was DOT's senior White House adviser — a role that was intended to help 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. keep tabs on their goings-on. In this case he served next to Cabinet Secretary Elaine Chao, wife of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, and the two didn't appear to have gotten along. POLITICO reported in May how Pugliese informed Chao that he expected her to check in with him on all policy moves, a declaration that got a chilly reception.

Now Pugliese has a job as the top staffer for newly anointed FERC chairman Neil Chatterjee — for years McConnell's top energy policy aide — despite limited energy experience. The FERC announcement says Pugliese learned energy matters from his time working for Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Corbett, where he spent a year working for the department of Community and Economic Development, and as a consultant for Pugliese Associates, a Pennsylvania lobbying shop founded by Pugliese's father, Rocco. The company's website shows that it's energy clients included Tesla Motors, a filling station chain, and an energy efficiency non-profit. Pugliese's lobbying disclosure form for the state of Pennsylvania show his only energy client was Tesla.

BIODIESEL PRODUCERS CROSSING FINGERS FOR COMMERCE TRADE

RULING TODAY: The Commerce Department is expected to issue a preliminary ruling today on whether to impose a tax on Argentine and Indonesian imports of biodiesel to counter those two countries' subsidies. Biodiesel exporters have been arguing for months that biodiesel feedstocks in Argentina and Indonesia are underwritten by their governments so they can sell into the U.S. market.

RFS credits in discord: Today's decision could drive up the biofuel credits that oil refiners use to comply with the Renewable Fuel Standard, because it would potentially shrink supplies and increase the price of biodiesel. Those biodiesel credits can be used for compliance with the ethanol part of the program, too. But Tom Kloza, a founder of the oil tracking service OPIS, says RIN prices have been buffeted by "cross winds" since a court ruling last week that let some small refiners out of the program. "There's a little uneasiness about this small refinery exemption," he said. Today's "ruling isn't as big as the anti-dumping. It would probably provide an upward lift, but right now you have this downdraft related to small refinery exemption."

Just the first step in the trade dispute tango: A victory today for domestic producers would signal what may be a larger victory in October, when Commerce will rule on whether the two countries dumped biodiesel on the U.S. market in an effort to undermine U.S. production. Kloza said that one could potentially rattle biofuel markets. Neither decision will likely be finalized until next year.

A PRIZE PODCAST: This week's episode of Global POLITICO podcast features Dan Yergin, the Pulitzer-winning historian and expert on the geopolitics of energy, as well as Angela Stent, a former U.S. national intelligence officer for Russia, discussing the current "frigid, antagonistic, confrontational" relationship between U.S. and Russia. Yergin also discusses the dissolution of Trump's advisory council of business leaders last week, which he called very much "a comment about what's happening to our politics."

CALIFORNIA'S CLIMATE PUSH FUELS ECONOMIC GROWTH: Since the adoption of landmark climate legislation in 2006, California's gross domestic product growth has nearly doubled what's been seen at the U.S. more broadly, but the rate of the state's emissions reductions have slowed recently due to a spike in transportation-related emissions, according to a new report out from the nonpartisan group Next 10. "Transportation sector emissions vastly outweigh other carbon-producing areas of California's economy, and the recent spike should alert policy-makers that despite our best efforts, more must be done," Adam Fowler, an economist at Beacon Economics, which prepared the report, said in a statement. Among the other findings: Energy-related carbon dioxide emissions in California were down 12.5 percent in 2016 from their 2006 levels and renewable energy made up 21.9 percent of total electricity generation in the state.

CHECK OUT THAT HASHTAG: Zinke's wife Lola raised a few eyebrows around Washington with a tweet of her and the secretary on a run to the Capitol that included the hashtag #senaterun. ME readers likely remember the Montana congressman was considered a likely Senate candidate against Democrat Jon Tester — who's up for reelection next year — prior to being tapped by the Trump administration for the Interior slot.

MAIL CALL! SCHATZ CRIES FOUL OVER EPA GRANT POLICY: Hawaii Democratic Sen. Brian Schatz sent a letter Monday to EPA's Pruitt urging him to reverse course on a new directive in which a political appointee — John Konkus within the Office of Public Affairs — now will evaluate grant solicitations. "I fail to understand the beneficial role a political appointee, without any meaningful scientific background, could have in the grant review process," Schatz wrote. He added the new policy appeared to be in "direct conflict" with the agency's scientific integrity policy.

THERE'S A HEARING! It may be August recess, but the Senate EPW Subcommittee on Superfund, Waste Management and Regulatory Oversight, chaired by Mike Rounds, today holds a field oversight hearing at his former office — the South Dakota state capitol. It'll examine efforts from the Army Corps of Engineers to manage the Missouri River to "make certain the agency is working in an appropriate and responsible manner." More information here.

DEMOCRATS TOUT ECONOMIC BENEFITS OF MONUMENTS: Ahead of Interior's Zinke's Thursday deadline to issue recommendations on the fate of nearly two dozen national monuments, the Joint Economic Committee Democrats released a series of fact sheets highlighting what they say are the substantial economic benefits the sites provide to local communities. "Removing designation in whole or in part from national monuments, as the Trump administration has proposed, would eliminate this economic engine," Sen. Martin Heinrich, the committee's ranking Democrat, said in a statement.

PUT UP YOUR DUKES: The nomination of one of their own, former New Jersey Rep. Scott Garrett, to run the Export-Import Bank has emerged as the latest battle in the Republican Party's civil war, POLITICO's Zachary Warmbrodt reports. Business groups are expected to ramp up efforts to block his appointment, while opponents of the bank are warning the Senate Banking Committee about the consequences of failing to advance Garrett's nomination. "The divides among congressional Republicans appear to be deepening, and I am left with the sense that for some issues, the GOP is closer to a coalition government than a unified party," Compass Point analyst Isaac Boltansky said.

TAKE A GLANCE! DISSECTING NEW YORK'S ENERGY GOALS: The Manhattan Institute is out with a report today arguing, among other findings, New York's goal of reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent from 1990 levels by 2050 is "unrealistic, unobtainable, and unaffordable." In addition, meeting renewable energy and GHG goals will mean shifting to electric-powered equipment across most sectors of the state's economy "adding many billions of dollars in costs in both the private and public sectors," the report argues. Lower-income New Yorkers would bear more of the brunt of those policies to hit the interim reduction goals, it says.

NOT A FAN: German Chancellor Angela Merkel slammed her predecessor Gerhard Schroeder for taking a high-paying post at Russian oil company Rosneft, POLITICO Europe's Victor Brechenmacher reports. "I do not find what Mr. Schroeder is doing appropriate," Merkel told German daily BILD. Schroeder has drawn criticism in Germany for his involvement in the Russian energy sector and his friendship with Russian President Vladimir Putin. He already holds a leadership role at Nord Stream AG, a gas-pipeline consortium set up by Gazprom, to transport Russian gas across the Baltic Sea and into Germany.

LET THERE BE REGIONAL ADMINISTRATOR! A former Alabama environmental regulator will serve as EPA's Region 4 Administrator, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. Trey Glenn was director of the Alabama Department of Environmental Management from 2005 through 2009 and has owned an engineering consulting firm in Birmingham for the last eight years. Alabama's ethics commission found "probable cause" back in 2007 that Glenn may have violated ethics laws but a grand jury in 2009 concluded there were no "provable violations." Regional administrators do not require Senate confirmation.

COURT REVIVES DUGONG SUIT: The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals has revived an environmentalist lawsuit dating back to 2003 alleging a plan to place a U.S. Marine Corps air base in Okinawa, Japan, threatens a local population of dugongs, which are similar to manatees. A lower court previously said the green groups did not have standing to bring the case, and the suit raised "political questions" the court could not answer. But the 9th Circuit reversed that Monday, saying the case must be heard. The green groups will now get to present their case that the new military base will threaten the Okinawa dugong, which is listed as endangered in the U.S. and Japan. However, they may still fail to change anything about the base; the 9th Circuit said the green groups "may face challenges in securing relief on the merits." The base construction has been controversial for reasons beyond dugongs, with the prefecture government taking Japan's central government to court this summer to halt work on seawalls and new land.

LOTS OF FREE TIME? Sebastian Gorka, Trump's deputy assistant, posted the personal phone number and other contact information of a blogger after he put up a post detailing how Gorka's son made an environmental documentary, Death and Taxes reports. The video at issue, made by 18-year-old Paul Gorka, looks at how plastic pollution contributes to water quality issues.

REPORT: NUCLEAR NEEDS CONGRESSIONAL HELP: Kirk Lippold, an energy policy expert who served as commanding officer of USS Cole, is out with a new report arguing Congress must extend a nuclear production tax credit for the U.S. to remain a worldwide leader in that energy sector. "It is incumbent for that leadership to continue through public support of this clean energy source in order for it to remain a reliable power backbone for decades into the future," he writes in the paper for the Electric Reliability Coordinating Council.

QUICK HITS

— Most new Permian oil likely to be exported from Houston, Corpus Christi. Houston Chronicle.

— Coal country is ready for tech jobs — if techies will just give them a chance. Recode.

— Saudis Could Get $21 Billion Non-Oil Boost in 2018, BofA Says. Bloomberg.

— OPEC to discuss ending or extending production cut in November: Kuwait minister. Reuters.

— Support for climate change bill is haunting a California Republican leader. The Mercury News.

— UT System oil money is a gusher for its administration — and a trickle for students. Texas Tribune.

HAPPENING TODAY

10:00 a.m. — Nuclear Threat Initiative hosts a teleconference highlighting the impending launch of a new low-enriched uranium bank in Kazakhstan, contact: tsmith@mrss.com

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/08/electric-grid-weather-total-eclipse-of-the-sun-024338>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

California grid emerges from solar eclipse unscathed Back

By Esther Whieldon | 08/21/2017 03:53 PM EDT

The California grid survived today's total solar eclipse without a hitch, California Independent System Operator officials said.

About 3,000 megawatts to 3,500 megawatts of solar generation stopped producing power during the eclipse, and the grid operator was able to cover that loss largely with hydropower and natural gas power supplies, Eric Schmitt, ISO vice president of operations, told reporters.

The grid operator had expected to lose up to 4,600 megawatts of utility scale solar during the eclipse and about 1,300 megawatts of residential rooftop solar.

Schmitt said months of planning had enabled the grid operator to accommodate the solar event.

"We didn't have any major challenges on the system, even minor challenges," he said. "We're very pleased with how smooth it went. All the resources performed the way they were supposed to perform."

Electricity prices were normal, peaking in the low $20s per megawatt-hour. But as the eclipse abated, they then went negative — meaning generators would need to pay to ship their power — as the solar power plants began to come online, Schmitt said.

WHAT'S NEXT: The ISO expects to release more details about how the grid performed during the solar eclipse, such as how much battery storage was used and how much rooftop solar went offline, at a later time.

To view online click here.

Back

DOT adviser jumps to FERC Back

By Lauren Gardner | 08/21/2017 12:33 PM EDT

Anthony Pugliese has left DOT to become the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's chief of staff, POLITICO has learned.

Brigham McCown, a former Republican DOT official who worked on the Trump administration's transition team with Pugliese, confirmed the move.

Pugliese was the department's senior White House adviser, a role that Cabinet secretaries across the administration have chafed against.

A FERC spokesman confirmed the move. DOT didn't respond to a request for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

Court says EPA overstepped in denying small refiners RFS exemption Back

By Alex Guillén | 08/15/2017 02:09 PM EDT

The Obama administration in 2016 wrongly forced two small refineries in Wyoming to comply with the Renewable Fuel Standard, a federal court ruled today.

The Sinclair Oil-owned facilities had requested exemptions from the RFS, citing language in the law that allows EPA to spare small refiners from the program's biofuel blending requirements if they would experience "disproportionate economic hardship." While DOE recommended granting them a 50 percent waiver, EPA in October 2016 said both facilities were profitable enough to bear the RFS's costs and thus would have to comply fully with the program.

However, a split panel from the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals today said EPA overstepped its authority by concluding that the exemption could only be granted if complying with the RFS presented a long-term, "existential threat" to the refineries' survival.

EPA "chose a definition of economic hardship plainly at odds with Congress's statutory command," concluded the two majority judges, Timothy Tymkovich, a George W. Bush appointee, and Nancy Moritz, an Obama appointee. They sent the matter back to EPA for further action.

In a dissent, Carlos Lucero, a Clinton appointee, said he believed EPA had relied on "a more nuanced analysis" than the majority said which may have been permissible.

The decision comes just weeks after the D.C. Circuit ruled in a separate case that the Obama EPA had misappropriated a broader waiver authority under the RFS to require using less corn ethanol in 2016 than Congress required.

WHAT'S NEXT: EPA must review the refineries' petitions in light of the ruling. The agency could find further reasons for denying the petitions or it may grant Sinclair the sought-after exemptions.

To view online click here.

Back

2018 showdown looms: House Republicans vs. Democratic senators Back

By Elana Schor and Burgess Everett | 11/18/2016 05:22 AM EDT

As Democratic senators weigh when to fight and when to compromise with Donald Trump, Republicans on the other side of the Capitol are watching — with 2018 in mind.

Several of the 10 Democrats up for reelection in states that Trump won are likely to face off against members of the House Republican Conference. And on Thursday, one of those potential Senate hopefuls, Montana Rep. Ryan Zinke, fired a warning shot at his possible rival, Democratic Sen. Jon Tester.

"What I'm hoping, quite frankly, is that Sen. Tester moves rapidly to the middle," Zinke said of the two-term incumbent he is considering taking on. "His votes have not been consistent with Montana."

Zinke said he's preparing "to get a lot of pressure" to run against Tester, who chaired the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee during a disappointing 2016 election cycle for his party. The two-term congressman has met with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) about a possible bid.

Tester would be "a formidable opponent, should I run," Zinke added. "I'm in no hurry to make a decision."

Democrats had hoped to defeat Zinke this year to kill off the Senate prospects of the affable former Navy SEAL. But despite Tester's personal attention to the campaign of Democrat Denise Juneau, who challenged Zinke for Montana's at-large House seat, the Republican coasted to an 18-point victory.

Tester said Thursday he'd bet a steak dinner that Zinke will run against him. No matter what, the Democrat is girding for a fight.

"They're going to get someone tough," Tester said Thursday.

Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.), who was elected in 2014 in the increasingly red state, said it was "too soon" to say definitively how much trouble Tester might be in.

"Every election has a different dynamic," Daines said. "You saw what happened last cycle. It was assumed we were going to lose the majority."

Beyond Montana, Sen. Heidi Heitkamp (D-N.D.) could face a strong challenger in Rep. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.). Like Zinke, Cramer was an early backer of Trump's presidential bid even as the Republican establishment chafed at the New York developer.

Cramer often appears on short lists to lead Trump's Department of Energy, though one source working on the president-elect's transition said the two-term Republican is expected to take on Heitkamp rather than join the administration.

Sen. Cory Gardner (R-Colo.), the former House member chairing the National Republican Senatorial Committee for 2018, praised Cramer as a "tireless advocate."

"He puts the people of North Dakota before everything else, and that's what people want in their elected member of the Senate," Gardner said. "And obviously, in the 2018 election cycle, we just have to plan on winning every race. And of course, he'd be very good at it."

Heitkamp has long made clear that she expects a bruising reelection battle and plans to remind voters of her work with the GOP.

"My whole purpose in being here is trying to bridge some of these partisan divides and try and get things done," Heitkamp said. "I don't care what their label is. When I agree with them, we're going to do business. When I disagree with them, we're going to have a conversation."

Democrats are expecting a challenge to Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.) from either Rep. Evan Jenkins (R-W.Va.) or state Attorney General Patrick Morrisey. Manchin is hoping for a repeat performance of this year's election, when his state installed a Democratic governor at the same time it overwhelmingly voted for Trump.

"It's a very good sign. Basically people look at the individual," Manchin said. Voters "know who I am."

Still, Manchin acknowledged that his next campaign is "going to be more challenging." He joined an expanded Senate Democratic leadership slate on Wednesday, giving him a chance to make his case for making deals with Trump — but also potentially allowing Republicans to directly tie Manchin to any Democratic obstructionism.

Given how quickly his state has gone from blue to red, it's unclear how effective Manchin's earlier campaign strategies for governor and senator might be.

"I've been in office since 2001, the state has dramatically changed its politics," said Sen. Shelley Moore Capito (R-W.Va.), who added: "Every election's a challenge and he knows that, I think. He's up for the challenge. He's a very intuitive politician."

In Missouri, which Trump carried by 19 points, several GOP House members are seen as potential challengers to Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill: Reps. Vicky Hartzler, Ann Wagner, or Billy Long. Incumbent GOP Sen. Roy Blunt just survived a nimble challenge in the state by Democrat Jason Kander.

In Indiana, meanwhile, Republican Rep. Luke Messer could end up squaring off against Democratic Sen. Joe Donnelly. Trump won the Hoosier State by a staggering 28 points.

Historically the party in power has lost ground during the first midterm election under a new president. In 2010, Democrats lost the House and relinquished six Senate seats as voters recoiled at some of Barack Obama's early initiatives, especially his health care law.

The 2018 Senate map gives the GOP a buffer to weather that trend. But if the country doesn't like what the next two years out of Washington brings, Republicans won't be able to shirk the blame.

Sen. Mike Rounds (R-S.D.) said he and other Republicans who were elected to the Senate in 2014 ran as outsiders vowing to shatter the status quo. Asked if Republicans will have to retool that message after they take the wheel in Washington, he said, "That depends on whether or not we actually deliver on what we said we were going to do. So the first 100 days with the new president are going to be critical."

To view online click here.

Back

GOP divided over Trump's Ex-Im Bank nomination Back

By Zachary Warmbrodt | 08/21/2017 02:30 PM EDT

President Donald Trump's nomination of former Rep. Scott Garrett to lead the Export-Import Bank has opened up yet another front in the Republican Party's civil war.

Pro-business trade groups, free-market advocates and even social conservatives and gay-rights activists are targeting GOP senators with competing lobbying efforts as they clash over Garrett's past attempts to shut down the bank and his controversial views on LGBT issues.

The issue could come to a head this fall if Senate Republicans move forward with a hearing and confirmation votes for Garrett. Some of the leading groups opposed to the credit export agency are warning the Senate Banking Committee about the consequences of failing to advance the nomination. Meanwhile, business groups are expected to ratchet up efforts to block Garrett's appointment.

That has raised the political stakes around the New Jersey Republican's confirmation and underscored divisions that have contributed to the GOP's lack of success in pushing major legislation through Congress.

"The logjam over the Ex-Im Bank is just the most recent battle in the ongoing ideological war within the GOP between its pro-business wing and the free-market absolutists," Compass Point analyst Isaac Boltansky said. "The divides among congressional Republicans appear to be deepening, and I am left with the sense that for some issues, the GOP is closer to a coalition government than a unified party."

Outside groups are stepping up their efforts as the Trump administration gives Garrett a chance to sell his nomination, which has been under fire since the president announced his pick in April.

At least three Senate Republicans — the number it would take to block his confirmation if Democrats uniformly were to oppose him — have indicated they are on the fence.

Businesses that rely on the Export-Import Bank are stepping up their drive to rally opposition to Garrett because of his attempts to kill the agency when he served in Congress. In 2015, he said the bank "embodies the corruption of the free enterprise system" by promoting crony capitalism.

The bank, which offers loan guarantees to foreign buyers of U.S. exports, hasn't been able to back deals that exceed $10 million since 2015, when its authorization temporarily lapsed and it lost a needed quorum of board members. Though its charter was renewed by Congress in December of that year, the lack of a quorum continues today.

U.S. manufacturers including Boeing and GE view it as a critical financial backstop.

As Garrett met with senators on Capitol Hill earlier this month, he offered a friendlier public message than he had while in Congress. He said he backed the president's desire to have a "functional" agency and that his job would be to "fulfill the administration's agenda of creating more jobs and helping manufacturing in this country."

But his pitch left a bipartisan group of senators less than satisfied.

"He lost his reelection bid last year, and he's now saying lots of things to try to get a new job," said Hamilton Place Strategies partner and former Bush administration official Tony Fratto, who represented a business coalition that supported the Export-Import Bank.

In response to the industry lobbying, outside groups that have worked for years to close the bank are jumping in to help push Garrett's nomination.

On Aug. 7, the Club for Growth and Heritage Action for America were among the conservative organizations that sent a letter to Senate Banking Chairman Mike Crapo (R-Idaho) warning that they would oppose any appointments to the agency's board if Garrett's name did not move forward.

Even after rushing to Garrett's defense, the bank's opponents would still like the agency to be shuttered. And if he ends up saying he's now in favor of reauthorizing the bank as part of his attempt to win confirmation, "it's politics, pure and simple," said Andrew Roth, Club for Growth's vice president of government affairs.

"The fact remains, if the bank is going to have a president, the only person out there that's capable of reforming the bank or reducing its size is Scott Garrett," Roth said.

Another issue dogging Garrett among Republicans is his record on gay rights.

His views attracted controversy in July 2015, when POLITICO reported that he told a group of fellow Republicans that he had refused to pay National Republican Congressional Committee dues because it recruited gay candidates.

Garrett later denied that he was against gay candidates and said his concern was with support for same-sex marriage. But the political fallout contributed to his failed 2016 reelection bid and is becoming a more prominent issue in his Senate confirmation.

American Unity Fund, a pro-LGBT conservative group founded in 2013, plans to aggressively lobby to defeat his nomination if it proceeds, said Tyler Deaton, a senior adviser for the organization.

Deaton said nominating someone with Garrett's record of "vilifying gay Americans" is like "throwing a wrench into something that's already complicated."

"We've shared our concerns with the White House," he said. "They've not even tried to defend Mr. Garrett's anti-gay behavior."

The White House declined to comment on Garrett's LGBT record.

The Family Research Council, the conservative Christian nonprofit that describes homosexuality as "unhealthy and destructive," has come to Garrett's defense. The group has also been critical of the Export-Import Bank.

In a post last month, the group said Garrett's views on sexuality had "absolutely nothing" to do with his résumé.

"Scott Garrett's got a strong history of supporting not only free markets but fighting against government largess," said David Christensen, the Family Research Council's vice president for government affairs, in an interview. "He would be good at leading the Ex-Im bank. We also think it's unfair for some groups to try to raise his stance on social issues as a weapon against him."

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt picks ex-Alabama regulator for regional chief Back

By Alex Guillén | 08/21/2017 04:57 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt has appointed a former Alabama environmental regulator as the agency's Region 4 Administrator, EPA announced today.

Trey Glenn was director of the Alabama Department of Environmental Management from 2005 through 2009. For the last eight years, Glenn has owned an engineering consulting firm in Birmingham.

Glenn "will help us carry out President Trump's vision of creating a more streamlined and efficient EPA that focuses on the Agency's core mission, while also providing more regulatory certainty to our nation's businesses," Pruitt said in a statement.

Alabama's ethics commission in 2007 found "probable cause" that Glenn, in his prior job as director of the state Office of Water Resources, may have violated ethics laws to land the ADEM position. But a grand jury in 2009 concluded there were no "provable violations," according to local news reports.

EPA's 10 regional administrators are political appointees but do not require Senate confirmation. EPA's Region 4 covers Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and North Carolina.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: EPA plans carbon rule replacement — Clinton's big energy idea that wasn't — Carper won't back Trump's EPA air pick Date: Wednesday, September 13, 2017 5:53:36 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 09/13/2017 05:49 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff, Alex Guillén, Esther Whieldon and Darius Dixon

EPA PLANS FOR CLEAN POWER PLAN REPLACEMENT: EPA plans to take the first step toward replacing the Clean Power Plan by the first week of October as it publishes its plan to rescind the Obama administration's carbon limits for power plants, Pro's Emily Holden reports.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt had been averse to replacing the rule, and sources tell Emily that when OMB first began reviewing the Clean Power Plan withdrawal in June the agency did not have plans to replace it. The decision to signal the agency will write a replacement comes after months of lobbying from electric company executives and suggests Pruitt may not challenge the legal finding that EPA must regulate greenhouse gases. One likely approach to a new emissions regulation would focus on improving coal-plant efficiency, so generators make more power while burning less coal.

The repeal-and-replace proposals come as patience was wearing thin at the D.C. Circuit, which has avoided issuing an opinion on the Clean Power Plan itself while EPA reconsidered the rule. In an August warning shot to EPA, judges said failing to propose a replacement meant the agency was avoiding a "statutory duty" to regulate carbon emissions, though it agreed to keep the case on ice through Oct. 7. EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman said she "would not comment on proposals going through interagency review."

TRUMP OFFICIAL TO HOST CLIMATE MEETING: National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn will host a breakfast meeting to discuss "international energy and climate issues" the day before the opening of the U.N. General Assembly next week, POLITICO's Andrew Restuccia reports. The invitation obtained by POLITICO says the huddle is an "opportunity for key ministers with responsibility for these issues to engage in an informal exchange of views and discuss how we can move forward most productively." But an administration official stressed the meeting will not focus solely on climate change.

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the Analysis Group's Sue Tierney was first up to identify Massachusetts as the home of eight previous House speakers. For today: Two speakers have gone on to serve as vice president. Name them. Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

New! Legislative Compass: A powerful, easy-to-use tool that simplifies federal and state legislative tracking. Learn More.

HILLARY'S CAMPAIGN IDEA THAT ALMOST WAS BUT THEN WASN'T: Among other revelations contained in her new book, Hillary Clinton said she was intrigued by Peter Barnes' proposal to create a sort of Alaska Permanent Fund for the whole country. The idea, dubbed by her campaign "Alaska for America," would have taken royalties from oil and gas production — plus receipts from a carbon tax, financial transactions taxes, fees on airwaves used by cell phones and broadcasters, and other resources — and used them to give Americans a guaranteed minimum income. But, alas, as she and Bill worked the calculator, they found the math didn't work.

"We decided it was exciting but not realistic, and left it on the shelf. That was the responsible decision," she wrote in "What Happened." "I wonder whether we should have thrown caution to the wind and embraced 'Alaska for America' as a long-term goal and figured out the details later."

About that carbon tax: Clinton says her campaign also looked more specifically at the idea of a carbon tax dividend, but once again could not get math to work out without new costs for the middle class, which she had vowed against. "Still," she added, "it's tantalizing."

Canary was the coal mine: Clinton argues the Obama team's slow efforts to counter the emerging Republican narrative that his administration began a "war on coal" hurt Democrats in 2016, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. "The Obama administration was slow to take on this false narrative," she wrote. Clinton encouraged Obama to roll out the Clean Power Plan in 2015 in coal country, and pair it with a major initiative to bring new investments and jobs to the region as a way of softening the blow.

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke also makes a cameo: Clinton recounts an awkward encounter at the inauguration when she said she was surprised Zinke came over to greet her because in 2014 he had called her the "Antichrist." "Maybe he'd forgotten, because he didn't come equipped with any garlic or wooden stakes, or whatever one uses to ward off the Antichrist. But I hadn't forgotten," Clinton writes, adding that she absolutely reminded Zinke of his remark. "He was taken aback and mumbled something about not having meant it. One thing I've learned over the years is how easy it is for some people to say horrible things about me when I'm not around, but how hard it is for them to look me in the eye and say it to my face." (Zinke's wife, Lola, disputed the story.)

CARPER WON'T BACK WEHRUM: Top EPW Democrat Tom Carper told reporters Tuesday he won't back Trump's nominee to run the EPA's air office, Bill Wehrum. "This nominee is troubling," he said. "I don't say that about all of this administration's nominees, but this one is troubling." Chairman John Barrasso told reporters the committee would have "four or five" confirmation hearings next week, though he wouldn't specify which nominees that includes. He separately said EPW was "working on a time" for EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to come testify before it.

NELSON: GOP 'DENYING REALITY' ON CLIMATE CHANGE: Even as he said he didn't want to play partisan politics in the aftermath of Hurricane Irma, Florida Sen. Bill Nelson knocked Republicans — including his likely 2018 opponent Gov. Rick Scott — for opposing action to address manmade climate change, POLITICO's Michael Grunwald reports. "It's denying reality," Nelson said. "You can call it politics or whatever, but the Earth is getting hotter. This storm is another reminder of what we're going to have to deal with in the future." He added it would be a crucial issue during his reelection contest.

EPA-INTERIOR VOTES EXPECTED: You'd be forgiven for forgetting the House is still working through its mega-spending package H.R. 3354 \(115\), but five outstanding EPA and Interior-related amendments should get votes today. The amendments would bar EPA from enforcing its methane rule, block the social cost of carbon from future rule makings, prohibit the closure of EPA regional offices and slash the agency's budget by an additional $1.87 billion, among others. Full list of all pending amendments to the bill here.

CCS WEEK KICKS OFF IN EARNEST: Senate EPW today holds a hearing on how to accelerate deployment of carbon capture and sequestration technologies around the country. Look for lots of discussion of the FUTURE Act, S. 1535 \(115\), one of the few pieces of legislation ME can remember that boasts the support of both Barrasso and Sheldon Whitehouse. Witnesses include Matthew Fry, a policy adviser to Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead and former DOE senior official Julio Friedmann.

HELPING OUT THE LITTLE GUYS? The House Energy and Commerce Committee's environment panel will hold a hearing today on a quartet of bills aimed at postponing or loosening various emissions regulations. H.R. 1917 \(115\) would delay the brick MACT until legal challenges have played out (coincidentally, the D.C. Circuit revealed Tuesday that oral arguments over that rule will take place Nov. 9). H.R. 1119 \(115\) would expand Cross-State Air Pollution Rule compliance options for 19 plants, mostly in Pennsylvania, that burn coal waste for electricity. H.R. 453 \(115\) would extend some deadlines for a residential wood heater emissions rule. And H.R. 350 \(115\) aims to clarify that anti-tampering provisions in vehicle emissions rules do not apply to vehicles used only for racing, an issue that flared up last year under EPA's Phase 2 heavy-duty truck rule. Some of these bills passed the House in previous years, but failed to gain traction in the Senate. If you go: The hearing kicks off at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2123.

ENDANGERED SPECIES MEASURES GETTING MARKED UP: A litany of controversial measures get marked up today at the House Natural Resources Committee, including H.R. 3668 \(115\) a sportsmen's package that Democrats have condemned as enabling the deregulation of gun silencers and five bills taking bites at the Endangered Species Act. They are: H.R. 424 \(115\), which would redo Interior rules delisting the gray wolf; H.R. 2603 \(115\), which would bar non-native species from being listed as endangered or threatened under the statute; H.R. 3131 \(115\), which would lower attorney fees that could be awarded in ESA litigation; H.R. 717 \(115\), which would allow federal agencies to factor cost into listing decisions and prioritize listing petitions rather than decide them in the order they're received; and H.R. 1274 \(115\), which would require the availability of all data used in listing decisions to impacted states. The fun kicks off at 10 a.m. in Longworth 1334.

BLAST FROM THE PAST: ME got to briefly chat with former EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy after she met with Senate climate caucus members to "catch up" on various environmental issues. She declined to weigh in on Pruitt's comment that it's "insensitive" to discuss climate change in the aftermath of hurricanes Harvey and Irma, but said, "I think we all know that storms like that get as intense as those storms were because of an impact on climate. If you want safe and healthy communities, you're going to have to address the issue of climate change. Period."

ICAHN'T BELIEVE EPA: Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse cast a jaundiced eye over Pruitt's letter denying email communication with billionaire Carl Icahn. "On its face, this letter suggests Mr. Icahn had far less control over RFS policymaking than he had suggested publicly," Whitehouse spokesman Rich Davidson told ME. "On the other hand, Pruitt has a long-established skill in obscuring his contacts with the industry that pulls his strings." Pruitt said the agency searched the inboxes of 39 agency officials and came up empty on Icahn emails.

RESHUFFLED ELECTRICITY BOARD REVS UP TODAY: DOE's newly configured

Electricity Advisory Committee assembles this afternoon to kick off a meeting with a half dozen fresh faces and a two-day agenda that will cover the agency's much-discussed electric grid study, include a two-hour panel on cybersecurity and a rundown of a National Academies report on grid resiliency. Perry let the membership of 14 EAC members lapse recently and installed six new members, effectively shrinking the board's overall size. But the person Perry tapped as the new EAC chairman, Michael Heyeck of American Electric Power, isn't apparently able to attend, according to the agenda, which describes ERCOT engineer John Adams as acting chairman this week. Most of the cybersecurity talk — including panel discussion and a presentation on a draft DOE multiyear energy sector cybersecurity plan — is slated for Thursday morning. The meeting starts at 1:30 p.m. at the offices of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association in Arlington, Va.

GAO TO PROBE PERRY'S HEALTHCARE TWEETS: GAO has agreed to a request from Rep. Frank Pallone, top Energy and Commerce Democrat, to issue a legal opinion on whether DOE's use of its Twitter account to promote an op-ed by Secretary Rick Perry on health care violated the Antideficiency Act, the Anti-Lobbying Act and the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2017. Pallone first made the request in late July.

ZINKE TELL STAFF TO UP GAME ON FIRE PREVENTION: Zinke directed staff on Tuesday to be much more proactive on fire prevention, including by hiring contractors if necessary to clear dead trees, removing vegetation away from roads and buildings that could prove quick fire fodder and to include fire prevention in resource management planning. The move comes as wildfires rage in the West. "It makes little sense to be thinning to protect structures when we see flames on the ridge and smoke in the air—fuel management is more effective when undertaken before fires break out," Zinke said in the memorandum.

ITC VOTE ON SOLAR TRADE CASE COMING NEXT WEEK: The U.S. International Trade Commission will vote Sept. 22 on whether the U.S. solar industry has been injured by low-cost imports, according to an ITC website announcement. The case has the solar industry on tenterhooks, as domestic companies that install cheap foreign-made panels believe raising equipment costs will harm business. A Trump administration official has already signaled the administration would likely impose tariffs if the ITC determines there has been injury.

MAIL CALL! HOUSE SCIENCE PROBES OBAMA APPOINTEE: After DOE's inspector general found the government spent $138,000 on an employee's graduate degree unrelated to his job, House Science Chairman Lamar Smith sent a letter requesting documents on what the agency is doing to prevent something similar from happening again. "The Committee is concerned this could be an indication of a more widespread occurrence of inappropriate training authorizations and expenditures within DOE," Smith wrote.

McCOLLUM HITS PRUITT OVER ATTACK ON JOURNALIST: Rep. Betty McCollum, who oversees the Appropriations Interior and EPA Subcommittee, sent a letter to Pruitt Tuesday condemning the agency's personal attacks on an AP reporter as an "inappropriate use of taxpayer resources" and urging the agency to "act in a more professional manner and refrain from such unacceptable personal attacks."

WEIGHING IN ON TAX REFORM: Citizens For Responsible Energy Solutions Forum sent letters to House and Senate tax writers outlining their priorities as tax reform efforts get off the ground in earnest. Atop their wish-list? Maintaining existing energy investment and production tax credits, sunseting tax credits for mature energy industries and reducing the corporate tax rate to at least 25 percent.

PRIORITIES OUTLINED FOR STATE ENVIRONMENTAL REGULATORS:

Wyoming's Todd Parfitt became president of the Environmental Council of the States on Tuesday and said in a welcome note a key priority would be "reorienting the state-U.S. Environmental Protection Agency relationship." He's also a rumored candidate for regional EPA administrator.

MOVER, SHAKER: Sam Hirsch, former principal deputy at DOJ's Environment and Natural Resources Division, has rejoined Jenner & Block as a partner in its Washington office.

FREE FOOD ALERT! Stop by 406 First Street SE today between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. for some Old Bay, Parmesan garlic and sea salt french fries courtesy of the National Biodiesel Board and some of the city's best food trucks. You'll also learn how the oil used to cook the fries can be turned into clean-burning biodiesel.

QUICK HITS

- OPEC Discusses Extending Oil Cuts by More Than Three Months. Bloomberg.
- Pompton Lakes DuPont site needs Superfund status, advocates say. NorthJersey.com.
- EPA long-term plans to manage Hanford office in limbo. Tri-City Herald.
- Harvey toppled storage tanks in the oil patch, spilled nearly 2,000 barrels. Houston Chronicle.
- Florida Power & Light Co. nuclear reactors still down, but unharmed by Hurricane Irma. TC Palm.

HAPPENING TODAY

8:30 a.m. — API holds an event on the natural gas and oil industry's impact in all 50 states, G11 Dirksen

10:00 a.m. — "Big Relief for Small Business: Legislation Reducing Regulatory Burdens on Small Manufacturers and Other Job Creators," House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — The full House Natural Resources Committee holds a markup of pending calendar business, Longworth 1334

10:00 a.m. — "Expanding and Accelerating the Deployment and Use of Carbon Capture, Utilization, and Sequestration," Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Dirksen 406

11:00 a.m. — National Biodiesel Board holds its BioFry event for congressional staff, 406 1st St. SE

12:00 p.m. — Save the U.S. EPA holds a press conference and march to the EPA, National Press Club, Zenger Room, 529 14th Street N.W., 13th floor

2:30 p.m. — "The Venezuela Crisis: The Malicious Influence of State and Criminal Actors,"

The House Foreign Affairs Committee Western Hemisphere Subcommittee, 2200 Rayburn

3:00 p.m. — "The Economic Impacts of Climate Change on Tourism and Recreational Activities," House Climate Solutions Caucus, Longworth 1142

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/09/epa-plans-carbon-rule-replacement-024564>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

EPA to replace Clean Power Plan Back

By Emily Holden | 09/12/2017 09:04 PM EDT

EPA plans to publish its proposal to rescind the Clean Power Plan and take its first step to replace the rule by the first week of October, according to a source familiar with the process.

The decision to publish an advance notice of EPA's intent to issue a new regulation on carbon emissions from power plants comes after months of lobbying from electricity company executives who think it would be the smart legal move. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt had previously been resistant to replacing the Obama-era rule.

Without a rule on the books, environmental advocates could sue the agency — leaving businesses in limbo while the courts sort out the issue, industry officials had warned.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has frozen consideration of lawsuits against the Clean Power Plan while asking for status updates from EPA. In August, judges told EPA that without a replacement rule in place it was avoiding a "statutory duty" to regulate carbon emissions under the Clean Air Act. The judges agreed to keep the case on hold through Oct. 7.

EPA's decision to pursue a replacement rule suggests Pruitt may not challenge a legal finding that EPA must regulate greenhouse gases.

The agency told the court it would publish a rule to withdraw the Clean Power Plan this fall. The OMB first reviewed the rule withdrawal in June. At that time, EPA did not have plans to replace the Clean Power Plan, sources said.

Pruitt, as attorney general of Oklahoma, joined other states' lawyers in arguing that the Obama administration went too far in trying to curb carbon levels by encouraging states to shift away from burning coal and toward renewable power and natural gas.

One likely approach to a replacement rule would focus on improving coal-plant efficiency, so generators make more power while burning less coal.

"We aren't going to comment on proposals going through interagency review," EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman said via email.

To view online click here.

Back

Cohn to participate in energy, climate discussion at United Nations Back

By Andrew Restuccia | 09/12/2017 03:37 PM EDT

National Economic Council director Gary Cohn will host an energy and climate change discussion with international officials in New York next week, an administration official confirmed.

The Monday meeting comes the day before the opening of the United Nations General Assembly, where President Donald Trump and dozens of other world leaders will speak.

Cohn invited officials from more than a dozen countries to the breakfast meeting to discuss "international energy and climate issues," according to a copy of the invitation obtained by POLITICO.

The invitation, which Cohn sent on Sept. 7, says the huddle is an "opportunity for key ministers with responsibility for these issues to engage in an informal exchange of views and discuss how we can move forward most productively."

The administration official stressed that the meeting, first reported by the New York Times, will not focus solely on climate change.

Trump infuriated foreign diplomats when he announced in June that he would withdraw from the Paris climate change agreement, which has won the support of nearly 200 nations. Cohn was among White House officials pushing Trump not to exit the Paris agreement at the time.

But so far, the United States has not formally withdrawn, and Trump administration officials have sent mixed signals about whether it is willing to reach a deal to remain in the pact.

The State Department announced last month that the U.S. would continue participating in international climate change negotiations, including talks aimed at implementing the Paris pact, "to protect U.S. interests and ensure all future policy options remain open to the administration."

Trump, who has called climate change a "hoax" perpetrated by the Chinese, has said the United States is getting an unfair deal in the Paris agreement.

To view online click here.

Back

Clinton: Obama was too slow to counter 'war on coal' narrative Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/12/2017 03:30 PM EDT

Hillary Clinton says in her new book that former President Barack Obama took too long to challenge Republican criticism that his administration had started a "war on coal," which hurt

Democrats in last year's election.

"The Obama administration was slow to take on this false narrative," she wrote in "What Happened."

But Clinton did admit that her infamous comment at a March 2016 town hall event that "we're going to put a lot of coal miners and coal companies out of business," was a gaffe and an "unfortunate comment."

And she argued that the politics around coal are a microcosm of how Democrats have fallen out of touch with white working class voters.

Democrats' support for air and water pollution regulations made them an "easy scapegoat" for long-term misfortunes in coal country, Clinton wrote, "despite strong evidence that government regulation is not the primary cause for the industry's decline."

The former secretary of State wrote that she suggested Obama roll out the Clean Power Plan in 2015 in coal country, and pair it with a major initiative to bring new investments and jobs to the region. "That might have softened the blow a little," she wrote.

Obama ultimately announced the regulation from the White House alongside EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy, which Clinton argued was "seen by many folks in West Virginia as another signal that Democrats didn't care about them. Once that perception takes hold, it's hard to dislodge."

Embracing a narrative about how industrial areas can "reinvent" themselves for 21st century jobs was a vote-winner, according to Clinton. Clinton lost Pennsylvania, but won a landslide victory in Pittsburgh, the city President Donald Trump cited as a concern when he pulled out of the Paris climate agreement earlier this year.

"Trump may think of that city as an emblem of the industrial past ... but the reality is that Pittsburgh has reinvented itself as a hub of clean energy, education, and biomedical research," Clinton writes.

Pittsburgh's mayor has committed the city to meeting the Paris deal's reduction goals, even as the U.S. withdraws from the agreement.

But ultimately, the coal issue remains as one of her top disappointments, particularly since it contributed to her losses in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

"Did they turn against me because I served as Obama's Secretary of State and believed climate change was a real threat to our future? Or did their rage flow from a deeper tribal politics?" she wrote. "All I knew for certain was they were angry, they were loud, and they hated my guts."

Despite the campaign promises of Trump, "the hard truth is that coal isn't coming back," Clinton wrote, adding, "Politicians owe it to communities that have relied on the industry for generations to be honest about the future."

Clinton also criticized Don Blankenship, who headed Massey Energy when its Upper Big Branch disaster killed 29 workers in 2010. Shortly before he reported to prison last year, he showed up outside a Clinton campaign event in West Virginia.

"Blankenship endangered his workers, undermined their union, and polluted their rivers and streams, all while making big profits and contributing millions to Republican candidates," Clinton writes. "He should have been the least popular man in West Virginia even before he was convicted in the wake of the death of twenty-nine miners. Instead, he was welcomed by the pro-Trump protesters in Williamson. One of them told a reporter that he'd vote for Blankenship for President if he ran.

"Meanwhile, I pledged to strengthen the laws to protect workers and hold bosses like Blankenship accountable — the fact that he received a jail sentence of one year was appalling — yet I was the one being protested."

To view online click here.

Back

Trump picks Bush-era EPA official for air chief Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/07/2017 07:16 PM EDT

President Donald Trump has nominated Bill Wehrum, a George W. Bush-era EPA official who since has represented a variety of energy industry interests, to run EPA's powerful air office.

POLITICO reported in July that Wehrum was expected to receive the nod.

As head of EPA's Office of Air and Radiation, Wehrum will play a key role in undoing many of the Obama-era regulations most opposed by Republicans, including the Clean Power Plan, the 2015 ozone standard and forthcoming vehicle emissions rules. Wehrum has been critical of EPA's authority to regulate greenhouse gases, even after the Supreme Court's 2007 ruling saying EPA did have such authority.

He served as a counsel to Jeff Holmstead, Bush's first-term air chief, before replacing Holmstead in an acting capacity from 2005 to 2007. Bush nominated Wehrum to the job permanently, but Democrats blocked his nomination from proceeding in the Senate.

Wehrum spent the past decade as a partner at the Washington, D.C., law firm Hunton & Williams. His clients have included the American Petroleum Industry, American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers, the Utility Air Regulatory Group, the American Chemistry Council, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Forest & Paper Association.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will review Wehrum's nomination in what is certain to be a contentious process.

To view online click here.

Back

Florida Sen. Bill Nelson: Republicans 'denying reality' on climate change Back

By Michael Grunwald | 09/12/2017 09:06 PM EDT

Democratic Senator Bill Nelson of Florida, after surveying the damage that Hurricane Irma inflicted across his state, blasted Republican politicians who reject the science and minimize the importance of climate change—including his likely opponent in 2018, Governor Rick Scott.

In an interview Tuesday evening with POLITICO, Nelson said it's clear that manmade global warming made Irma worse by increasing the temperature and the height of the seas that fueled the storm. He said he didn't want to play partisan politics in the aftermath of a hurricane, but then went on to criticize Republicans in general and Scott in particular—though not by name—for opposing climate action. He noted that both the Trump administration in Washington and the Scott administration in Tallahassee have reportedly discouraged government employees from even talking about climate change.

"It's denying reality," Nelson said. "You can call it politics or whatever, but the Earth is getting hotter. This storm is another reminder of what we're going to have to deal with in the future."

Nelson, a former astronaut, launched into a detailed explanation of the science of climate change and the greenhouse effect, and how it has helped make the waters around Florida higher and warmer in recent decades. He said it would be a crucial issue in his reelection campaign, even as he avoided the words "Rick Scott."

"It's certainly going to be an important issue, and if certain people such as the one you mentioned is my opponent, there's a significant contrast in what we believe," Nelson said.

Florida is a swing state in presidential elections, but its state government and statewide offices tilt heavily Republican; Nelson has been an exception to the red wave, but a well-known, well-funded opponent like Scott would be by far his most difficult challenge to date. He clearly sees climate as a potential wedge issue in a state with a heavily coastal population and increasing vulnerability to Irma-type disasters. Scott did not discuss the issue in his frequent Irma briefings; a spokesperson for the governor, when asked about Nelson's comments, said, "Now is not the time for politics. This storm is not a partisan issue. Now is the time to focus on helping Florida rebuild."

But in the past, he has questioned climate science—or declined to affirm the scientific consensus that it's being caused by humans, often noting, "I am not a scientist"—and fossil-fuel interests have supported his campaigns. In 2015, the Miami Herald reported that Scott's administration had even banned the use of the terms "climate change," "global warming" and "sustainability" in official documents.

Nelson is not known in Washington as a leader on climate issues, but he said he's focused on them since he was Florida's insurance commissioner in the 1990s. He's fought against President Trump's proposed cuts to climate science at agencies like NOAA, NASA and EPA, and said he helped persuade the Obama administration to launch a satellite, first dreamed up by Al Gore, that takes continuous pictures of the Earth from deep space.

But Nelson didn't really argue that he deserved kudos for accepting the conclusions of the scientific community; he argued that Republicans on the other side of the issue need to explain why they think "99.5 percent of climate scientists" are wrong. Several prominent Republicans in South Florida—including Miami-Dade County mayor Carlos Gimenez and Reps. Carlos Curbelo and Ileana Ros-Lehtinen—have made it clear they believe Washington needs to take climate seriously. Nelson pointed out that politicians don't question government scientists when they say a hurricane is coming—but when the same agencies use the same scientific instruments to measure long-term climate trends, opinions suddenly differ.

"It's ironic, isn't it?" Nelson said. "They accept the hurricane information, but deny the climate information ... Look, some people still think the Earth is flat."

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt: EPA had no emails communications with Icahn Back

By Eric Wolff | 09/12/2017 02:28 PM EDT

EPA had no email communication with billionaire and former Trump adviser Carl Icahn, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt told Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.) in a letter this week.

In the letter sent Monday and provided to POLITICO by an EPA official, Pruitt said EPA searched the inboxes of 39 high-ranking officials for messages to or from Icahn between Feb. 17 and Aug. 18, and they found no emails on any subject.

Pruitt's letter was a response to four different letters from Whitehouse and other Senate Democrats seeking information on Icahn's efforts to modify the Renewable Fuel Standard to benefit his refining company. Icahn was an unpaid adviser to Trump until last month, when he resigned his title after questions arose about his advocating for policies that would help his businesses.

Pruitt did acknowledge meeting with Icahn as part of his vetting process to join the Trump administration.

"Mr. Icahn was one of many of the president's advisors that I met with during my confirmation process," he wrote. "During that meeting, I made no assurances with regard to the point of obligation or any other substantive issue."

To view online click here.

Back

DOE shrinks electricity advisory board Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/06/2017 05:34 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry is installing new members to the Energy Department's Electricity

Advisory Committee even as he whittles down the size of the board.

The 2016-17 roster for the board, which reports to the assistant secretary for electricity deliverability and energy reliability, had numbered 32 people, but including the new members, it will now total 24, since 14 members didn't have their terms renewed.

DOE says that three members had asked the agency not to renew their terms because of other commitments or because they had left the country.

Perry installed six new members: Mike Heyeck, a former AEP executive and founder of Grid Group; Paul Hudson, ex-chairman of the Texas Public Utilities Commission; Mladen Kezunovic, an engineering professor at Texas A&M; Bryan Olnick, an executive with Florida Power & Light; David Wade, CEO of the Electric Power Board of Chattanooga; and Tom Weaver, an official with AEP.

EAC members serve two-year terms, but about half of the positions are staggered so that some measure of continuity is maintained.

The board, which typically meets three times a year, is purely advisory and works on a range of power-related issues. The panel's charter states that there be "approximately 30" members.

Those not returning are: Ake Almgren, Merwin Brown, Paula Carmody, Paul Centolella, Carlos Coe, Phyllis Currie, Mark Lauby, Janice Lin, Anne Pramaggiore, Paul Roberti, Sue Tierney, Rebecca Wagner, Audrey Zibelman, and Carl Zichella.

WHAT'S NEXT: The electricity advisory committee will meet next Wednesday and Thursday in Arlington, Va.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Fate of some energy provisions remains murky in tax overhaul — Dourson withdraws nomination for EPA chemicals post — Disaster relief may complicate spending package's fate
Date: Thursday, December 14, 2017 5:44:36 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 12/14/2017 05:41 AM EDT

MUDDLING THROUGH THE TAX MESS: What's clear at this point is Republicans intend to include language opening ANWR to oil and gas drilling in their compromise tax package, but the fate of other energy-related measures remains murky at best. Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski said a whole host of energy provisions, including a tax break for electric vehicles and tweaks to the wind production tax credit, remained "in flux" following the first meeting of the conference committee on Wednesday, Utility Dive reports. Multiple Senate Republicans have floated adding energy-related provisions, as well as other "orphan" tax credits, into another extenders package before the end of the year though House leaders have seemed cool to the idea.

As prominent wind-backer Sen. Chuck Grassley said he wasn't aware of the wind production tax credit's fate in the final package, 10 House Republicans sent tax leaders a letter urging them to remove a provision in the House-passed bill that would substantially reduce the value of the PTC, as well as the so-called BEAT provision that would result in high taxes on equity investments for renewable energy projects. Bloomberg reported the final package would save the wind production tax credit, as well as the electric vehicle tax break, but would eliminate the corporate alternative minimum tax staunchly opposed by the coal industry after its inclusion in the Senate bill.

The ever-quotable conferee Rep. Don Young on ANWR: "Thank God I'm wearing my cowboy boots today. You know why cowboys wear cowboy's boots? To keep their damn pants clean from the horse manure that comes from people that don't know what the hell they're talking about."

Reality check: Call ME skeptical at best that Congress will have any appetite for a separate tax extenders package after they wrap up their work on the tax bill and funding the government. Jet fumes (especially around the holidays) are a potent force in Washington.

Meanwhile, Democrats and liberal groups asked for the tax bill to be put on hold until Alabama Democrat Doug Jones is sworn in. "There should be no votes on the despicable GOP tax scheme or other dangerous efforts to put the profits of corporate polluters and billionaires before the people until the voice of every voter is represented in the Senate," Sierra Club Executive Director Michael Brune said in a statement Wednesday.

DOURSON'S OUT: Michael Dourson, the controversial toxicologist with deep ties to industry, withdrew his selection to run EPA's chemical offices on Wednesday after it became clear he lacked the votes to clear the GOP-led Senate, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. North Carolina Republican Sens. Thom Tillis and Richard Burr opposed his selection, while Maine Sen. Susan Collins made clear she was leaning against his selection. Jones' victory on Tuesday may have been the final nail in the coffin for his nomination. However, it was not immediately clear whether Dourson would remain at EPA in his adviser role.

That comes as The New York Times reports having obtained documents from Greenpeace showing Dourson, while working at the University of Cincinnati, sent a draft paper to the American Chemistry Council, after having accepted money from the trade group, for review prior to submitting it to a journal for review. At issue was trichloroethylene, known as TCE, which Dourson would have had to decide how to regulate if confirmed to his post at EPA (the agency had proposed banning it).

EPW Ranking Member Tom Carper hailed the news: "The withdrawal of Dr. Dourson's nomination should serve as a lesson to the Senate. In this body, our responsibility is to provide advice and consent — not to rush to approve unqualified or controversial nominees or ill-advised legislation for shortsighted political wins. I hope that we can all learn from this moment."

As did environmental advocates: "It was clear from the beginning that Dr. Dourson was a dangerous choice. His record of mercenary science made clear he would have undermined public health and damaged the historic chemical safety reforms passed by Congress last year. The administration should now nominate a person of integrity, with a demonstrated commitment of protecting public health," Richard Denison, lead scientist for the Environmental Defense Fund, said in a statement.

No word from EPW Chairman John Barrasso (who told ME on Tuesday he remained committed to the Dourson nomination), EPA or the White House.

WELCOME TO THURSDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the Southern Environmental Law Center's Nat Mund was first to identify former Sen. Jim Jeffords as the most recent Independent to serve prior to Sens. Sanders, King and Lieberman. For today: With Minnesota's Tina Smith joining the Senate, Minnesota will have two female senators. How many states currently have two female senators? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

Faster, Smarter Legislative Tracking: Don't wait until 2018 to try Legislative Compass, POLITICO Pro's powerful, easy-to-use tool for federal and state legislative tracking. 2017 preferred pricing expires 12/31. Start my trial.

TROUBLE ON THE HORIZON: House Republicans released a short-term spending package late Wednesday that would provide a full year of defense spending and fund the rest of the government through Jan. 19, but kick the can on disaster spending until next month. However, Florida Rep. Tom Rooney told his party's leadership at a meeting Wednesday that a majority of Texas and Florida lawmakers would oppose a spending bill if they don't have help for their stricken states by Christmas, Pro Budget & Appropriations Brief's Sarah Ferris reports. Several lawmakers from the storm-battered states say they refuse to accept a January timeline and won't leave for Christmas without approving the rebuilding money. More here.

Simpson agrees: House Appropriations Energy cardinal Mike Simpson told reporters Wednesday he wasn't sure how Congress would resolve the year end spending package yet but expressed his strong desire for disaster spending to be included. "Get it done — whether you do it individually or put it in the CR. It's got to get done. Everyone knows it's got to be done. Do it however you can," he said.

PRUITT'S ODD MOROCCAN TRIP: EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, accompanied by four staffers, racked up a total of $40,000 for his four-day trip to Morocco where he pushed fossil fuels, The Associated Press reports. Rep. Betty McCollum, top Democrat on the House panel that oversees EPA spending, questioned the appropriateness of the trip: "I question whether promoting fossil-fuel sales abroad aligns with the EPA's core mission of protecting human health and the environment." ME would note EPA's stated mission is to protect human health and the environment, while making no mention of energy or trade issues that would typically fall to the departments of Energy, State or Commerce.

STILL ON HOLD: Sen. Ted Cruz confirmed to ME he still has hold in place on Bill Northey, the nominee to be USDA undersecretary for farm production and conservation, but touted "real progress towards a productive solution" that balances the needs of ethanol sector with oil refiners struggling with high compliance costs under the Renewable Fuel Standard. "We're making positive and productive steps forward to reaching a win-win solution that both protects corn farmers and avoids bankrupting refineries," he said, declining to provide a time frame for when that agreement might emerge.

Waiting on details: No major breakthroughs emerged following a closely-watched meeting at the White House Wednesday that included aides to pro- and anti-RFS senators as well as executive branch staffers. One Senate GOP aide said Cruz's staff said they want to reduce the price of biofuel credits but did not offer any "win-win" proposals to do so. Cruz is expected to propose a cap on RIN prices, but that's an idea that RFS defenders say would run afoul of the law's intent, according to the aide.

A spokesman for RFS champ Grassley after Wednesday's White House meeting: "The next step is for Sen. Cruz to circulate specific proposals for consideration. The integrity of the RFS is Sen. Grassley's priority and there was an understanding expressed broadly in the meeting that any outcome can't undermine the integrity of the RFS." And Sen. Joni Ernst's office said: "While we are happy to review any proposals Senator Cruz offers in the time ahead, we remain firm that our top priority in these meetings is ensuring that the spirit and the letter of the RFS is supported as intended by Congress." Sources say there is no timeline for when Cruz might circulate his proposals.

BISHOP OKAY WITH PATAGONIA WAR OF WORDS: House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop isn't concerned by the escalating war of words between Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and outdoor clothing retailer Patagonia. "If that company is engaged in public policy discussions — and especially if the company calls the president evil and everyone in Utah wackos — we have a right to say they're wrong, they're lying," he said. "Patagonia is wrong."

A House Natural Resources subcommittee takes a first look at legislation H.R. 4558 \(115\) codifying Trump's reductions to the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument last week and establishing management plans for the area. Watch here at 9:30 a.m. and check out a background memo here.

Not concerned by helicopter flights: Bishop also said he wasn't concerned by Zinke spending more than \$14,000 on several helicopter flights this summer, including to get back for a horseback ride with the vice president. "Unless he can levitate, it's as good as any other means of doing it," he said.

NOAA NOMINEE ADVANCES: A split Senate Commerce Committee advanced the nomination of Barry Myers to run NOAA on Wednesday by a 14-13 vote. Remember the selection of Myers, currently CEO of AccuWeather, has raised alarm from some who fear he'll place restrictions on the products that the National Weather Service offers to the public.

TRANSPARENCY PUSH IN CROSSHAIRS: The House Financial Services Committee voted Wednesday to advance a bill, H.R. 4519 \(115\), permanently axing a requirement for U.S. oil and gas companies to disclose payments they make to foreign governments. The vote was 33-27. "To act any further on this bill would be a gift to kleptocrats and unscrupulous oil companies that seek to do deals behind closed doors," the Natural Resource Governance Institute said in a statement. Congress used the Congressional Review Act to nullify an Obama-era regulation from 2016 on the topic earlier this year, but that did not strike the underlying provision from Dodd-Frank.

BACK FROM THE DEAD? The future of Nord Stream 2, a second 1,200-kilometer Baltic pipeline between Germany and Russia, appears once again alive and kicking with the Social Democrats now back in the German government's coalition picture, POLITICO Europe's Matthew Karnitschnig reports. Read about the complicated European pipeline politics here.

MAIL CALL! ABOUT THAT DIRECTIVE ... Democratic Sens. Sheldon Whitehouse and Carper sent letters to DOJ and EPA seeking information about a new directive from Administrator Scott Pruitt meant to address what he's called the agency's "sue and settle" practices. "We are concerned that the Directive may introduce unnecessary delays and extra costs into a litigation process that was previously more straightforward, sensible and transparent," they wrote in the letter to Pruitt.

KING DROPS GRID BILL: Independent Sen. Angus King today is unveiling legislation he says will remove barriers to the deployment of distributed energy resources as the country looks to build a more resilient grid. Among the provisions of the legislation: Establishing a right of interconnection for distributed energy resources under PURPA; asking states and electric utilities to conduct assessments of their grid systems and develop plans for incorporating the technology; and pushing state regulators to consider new models for utility regulation. Link to one-pager here.

REPORT LINKS EXTREME WEATHER TO CLIMATE CHANGE: New research released Wednesday finds clear ties between human-caused climate change and record global heat in 2016, extreme heat in Asia and unusually warm waters in the Bering Sea. The report, released in a supplement to the "Bulletin of the American Meteorological Society," presents 27 peer-reviewed analyses of extreme weather across five continents and two oceans during 2016. "Finding multiple extreme events that weren't even possible without human influence makes clear that we're experiencing new weather, because we've made a new climate," Jeff Rosenfeld, editor-in-chief of the journal, said in a statement. Read it here.

Another good quarter for solar: For the eighth consecutive quarter, the solar industry installed more than 2 gigawatts of solar photovoltaics in spite of policy uncertainty and higher prices across all parts of the market, according to a report released by GTM Research and the Solar Energy Industries Association.

Getting more efficient: The amount of tech devices in U.S. homes has increased 21 percent since 2010 but they use 25 percent less residential energy than they did then, according to a Consumer Technology Association study out Wednesday.

MORE REINFORCEMENTS: Pennsylvania Attorney General Josh Shapiro, Oregon Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum and Virginia Attorney General Mark Herring will receive backing from the State Energy & Environmental Impact Center at NYU School of Law to hire staff focused on clean energy, climate and environmental matters. They join the AGs of seven other states who already received fellows through the program.

QUICK HITS

— Study Links Lower Birth Weights to Living Near Fracking Sites. Wall Street Journal.

— Trump is pushing coal abroad. Markets may abide — for now. E&E News.

— Climate change made Harvey's 51 inches of rain 3 times more likely, scientists say. Houston Chronicle.

— Jones Win Resurrects Extinct Species—Southern Pro-Climate Senator. Bloomberg Environment.

— Nobody hurt in Central Texas natural gas pipeline fire. AP.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:30 a.m. — House Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on the Grand Staircase Escalante Enhancement Act, Longworth 1334

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/12/fate-of-some-energy-provisions-remains-murky-in-tax-overhaul-051910>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

McConnell: ANWR drilling included in final tax bill Back

By Anthony Adragna | 12/13/2017 03:23 PM EDT

Language opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge will be included Republican compromise tax package, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said in prepared remarks today.

"Our legislation will also provide for our nation's energy future," McConnell said. "By further developing Alaska's oil and gas potential, this bill will help create jobs, support energy independence and promote our national security."

The provision's inclusion is not surprising given the presence of two powerful Alaskans, Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski and former House Natural Resources Chairman Don Young, on the conference committee.

Current House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop confirmed opening the ANWR area to oil and gas drilling would be included in Title II of the legislation. "I'm very proud of that particular section and I appreciate all those who worked so hard on that," he said at the tax conference open meeting.

Democrats remained staunchly against the move, arguing it posed a threat to the wildlife refuge and would not generate the revenues that have been forecast.

"This should be taken out," Rep. Raúl Grijalva said. "It's wildly optimistic that because of what's going to happen in the Arctic refuge that somehow that is going to offset part of the huge deficit that's being created by this legislation. We don't need the oil."

WHAT'S NEXT: Republicans have apparently reached an agreement on the bill but final text has not yet been released.

To view online click here.

Back

Dourson withdraws nomination for EPA's chemicals office Back

By Alex Guillén | 12/13/2017 07:22 PM EDT

Michael Dourson has withdrawn his nomination to run EPA's Office of Chemical Safety and Pollution Prevention, according to a Senate source.

His withdrawal, first reported by Bloomberg this evening, comes after it became clear that Dourson lacked the votes to be confirmed by the full Republican-controlled Senate.

Dourson, a longtime toxicologist and university professor, was opposed by Democrats and environmental groups who said his history of studying chemicals for corporations showed he set looser safety standards than other authorities, including, oftentimes, EPA.

Although he cleared the Environment and Public Works Committee on strict party lines, Dourson's nomination came into doubt after North Carolina Sens. Richard Burr and Thom Tillis said they would not support him. Other Republican senators, including Susan Collins of Maine, were thought to be leaning against him as well, and Tuesday's election of Democrat Doug Jones in Alabama made Dourson's confirmation even more unlikely.

Dourson also drew criticism after he began working as an adviser on chemical issues to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt shortly after his confirmation hearing in October. Democrats complained that it bypassed the Senate's confirmation process.

EPA's chemicals office is charged with implementing the updated Toxic Substances Control Act and is reviewing several high-profile substances, including asbestos.

WHAT'S NEXT: It was not immediately clear whether Dourson would remain at EPA in his adviser role. Neither EPA nor the White House immediately returned questions.

To view online click here.

Back

Aid for disaster-stricken states could be punted into January Back

By Sarah Ferris | 12/13/2017 04:41 PM EDT

Lawmakers from Texas and Florida are exceedingly anxious that hurricane recovery aid will be sidelined in next week's government funding scramble amid internal disputes over who should get how much cash.

Congress was widely expected to approve its next multibillion-dollar disaster request as part of the year-end spending bill. But with just days to go until the Dec. 22 deadline when government funding expires, lawmakers are still haggling over the fine points of the next round of disaster aid.

House GOP leaders are now preparing to take up a stopgap spending bill next week that would not include any money for hurricane relief, potentially causing problems for passage if members from affected states rebel.

In a closed-door meeting Wednesday afternoon, GOP leaders cautioned lawmakers that the disaster package may not be ready by next week, according to members who were in the room.

The biggest holdup is over how much money should be spent on rebuilding in the Lone Star state, according to lawmakers briefed on the talks. Appropriators are still sifting through a massive binder of requests, worth over $61 billion, from Texans alone.

The delay is rattling lawmakers from both Texas and Florida. Rep. Tom Rooney, (R-Fla.), a vocal advocate for his state's ailing citrus industry, stood up during Wednesday's meeting, warning that a majority of Texas and Florida lawmakers would oppose a spending bill if they don't secure help for stricken states by Christmas.

Even the No. 2 Republican in the Senate now fears disaster assistance could be punted another month.

"We've been told time and time again by the speaker and the House leadership that the supplemental is going to be coming, but it never seems to come," Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas) told reporters Tuesday. "The can always seems to be kicked down the road."

"Now I'm worried that it may end up moving us into January. So I'm very concerned," Cornyn added.

House GOP appropriators say they're closing in on a final agreement for the disaster package and hope to release the text by next week. Lawmakers involved in the negotiations are expecting the package to exceed $60 billion, far more than the White House's $44 billion request.

Still, those members say they've received no assurance that the package would be included in the Dec. 22 continuing resolution — the last must-pass bill Congress is slated to consider this month.

"It's a possibility, but no guarantees," Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-Fla) told POLITICO after the meeting.

That could be problematic for House GOP leaders as they look to round up votes to avert a government shutdown when funding expires.

Several lawmakers from the storm-battered states, including Rooney and Curbelo, say they refuse to leave for Christmas without approving the money. They fear that a month-long delay would lessen the political urgency needed to pass a multi-billion-dollar package.

At least some of those members have vowed to take a hard line on the issue. A bipartisan coalition of more than 60 lawmakers from Texas and Florida said in early December that they would block any year-end spending bill that doesn't include disaster funding.

That includes Texas Republicans with powerful perches, like House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady (R-Texas) and Homeland Security Chairman Michael McCaul (R-Texas).

Since then, Texas and Florida lawmakers have been meeting regularly and have largely agreed to vote as a bloc to increase their leverage on disaster aid.

Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-Fla.) told POLITICO on Tuesday that she won't back a spending bill if it doesn't include "adequate" recovery dollars for Florida or Texas. "This is how our delegations feel about this," said Wasserman Schultz, whose district spans parts of Miami Beach, which was eroded by Hurricane Irma.

If they make good on their threat, those Texas and Florida lawmakers — representing two of Congress' largest state delegations — would have enough votes to tank the final spending bill.

With a government shutdown on the line, however, that's a big "if."

Rep. John Carter, who is both a Texan and chairman of the spending subcommittee that funds federal disaster assistance, said he won't threaten to oppose a funding bill before the final details are worked out, with or without disaster funding.

"I'm born and raised in Houston. I want disaster aid," Carter said. "I'm not going to say how I'll vote until I see what the plan is. We got to get the disaster aid right now, not six months from now. I'm not a one-issue voter. I vote for the big picture."

Rep. Mike Conaway (R-Texas), who also has not drawn an ultimatum on the disaster aid, said he has repeatedly voiced his demands for funding to House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy.

"I've indicated to anybody who will listen that we need to get that supplemental done before we leave for Christmas," Conaway told POLITICO, adding that McCarthy and Speaker Paul Ryan "understand how important I think it is."

If the package isn't included on the next spending bill, Conaway said GOP leaders could simply put the disaster measure on the floor for a standalone vote — as long as it's done before Dec. 22.

Another appropriator, Calvert, also said that scenario is possible. And some Republicans even speculated Wednesday that a supplemental package could be attached to a controversial bill to reauthorize online surveillance powers, which would also require Democratic votes.

Under the House GOP's plan, the next spending deadline would be Jan. 21 — about 20 weeks after Hurricane Harvey wrecked hundreds of thousands of homes in Houston.

Texans, in particular, fear this package will be their last shot at securing aid for Hurricane Harvey victims. The White House has said more money is coming for Puerto Rico but has not promised to revisit funding needs in Texas.

At this point, many of the unmet demands come down to "a guarantee" about where money will be spent, according to Rep. Pete Sessions (R-Texas), a leadership ally.

Faced with a barrage of funding requests from cash-strapped local officials, Sessions said GOP leaders have asked every state to narrow down its top priorities and "to understand what it's going to get."

Among the lawmakers lobbying for more funding: dozens of California lawmakers who have seen deadly wildfires burn large swaths of their state.

That includes senior members like McCarthy and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi. A group of California members, led by McCarthy, met with Vice President Mike Pence on Tuesday to discuss the federal response to the wildfires.

Votes for next week's spending bill may also be scarce among the many New York Democrats with close ties to Puerto Rico. Members like Sen. Bob Menendez (D-N.J.) have taken a hard line demanding Puerto Rico funding.

The White House formally asked Congress for a $44 billion disaster package on Nov. 17, but members quickly panned that request, which they called paltry, and appropriators began writing their own version. The final bill is expected to far exceed the White House's request, in Congress' latest rebuke of the White House's budget office.

Congress has already approved $52 billion for this year's unexpectedly catastrophic storm season — a small fraction of what local officials say is needed to rebuild. Puerto Rico alone requested $96 billion. Texas and Florida asked for $61 billion and $27 billion, respectively.

The next funding package will be largely focused on Texas and Florida, where residents began rebuilding before Hurricane Maria slammed into Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands in late September.

Still, aides acknowledge there could be additional pressure to make more funding available for Puerto Rico after a blistering New York Times investigation found that as many as 1,000 people may have died from Hurricane Maria. The official death toll is 64 people.

Jennifer Scholtes, Seung Min Kim and John Bresnahan contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

House Republicans unveil 'defense-only' spending bill Back

By Sarah Ferris | 12/13/2017 07:29 PM EDT

House GOP leaders are forging ahead with a controversial spending strategy that would jam the Senate with a politically untenable product before the Dec. 22 government funding cliff.

The House Appropriations Committee released a bill this evening that would fund the Pentagon for a full year while covering five weeks of domestic spending — legislation Senate Democrats have already panned.

Under the House GOP measure, H.J. Res. 124, domestic funding would run out again on Jan. 21.

The stopgap strategy was the focus of a closed-door House Republican conference meeting this afternoon. During the hour-long session, Republicans mostly agreed to go ahead with the bill, even as some members openly predicted it would be rejected in the Senate.

The vast majority of Senate Democrats have said they would oppose any spending bill that doesn't increase budgets for the Pentagon and all other domestic departments by equal amounts.

GOP leaders, however, have so far rejected the Democratic demands for "parity," which has led to a weeks-long standstill on a deal for overall spending caps.

Congressional leaders must agree to raise spending levels in the next few weeks to avoid the triggering of automatic cuts to both domestic and defense programs. The House GOP's bill would permanently waive that automatic sequester, which was created under the 2011 Budget Control Act, but only for defense programs.

The bill would also extend funding for the Children's Health Insurance Program for five years.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke booked government helicopters to attend D.C. events Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/07/2017 06:31 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke spent more than $14,000 on government helicopters this summer to take himself and staff to and from official events near Washington, D.C., in order to accommodate his attendance at a swearing-in ceremony for his replacement in Congress and a horseback ride with Vice President Mike Pence, according to previously undisclosed official travel documents.

The travel logs, released to POLITICO via a Freedom of Information Act request, show Zinke using taxpayer-funded vehicles from the U.S. Park Police to help accommodate his political events schedule.

In a case detailed in the new documents, Zinke ordered a U.S. Park Police helicopter to take him and his chief of staff, Scott Hommel, to an emergency management exercise in Shepherdstown, W.Va., on June 21.

Zinke's staff justified the $8,000 flight by saying official business would prevent him leaving Washington before 2 p.m., too late to make the two-hour drive to the exercise, according to the documents.

The event that prevented Zinke from leaving before 2 p.m. was the swearing-in ceremony for Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-Mont.), according to Zinke's official Interior calendar. Gianforte, who won a special election for Zinke's old seat in May after assaulting a reporter, contributed along with his wife $15,800 to Zinke's two congressional campaigns.

"Secretary Zinke's last engagement in Washington D.C. is at 2 p.m.," an Interior staffer wrote as justification for using the helicopter. "Driving to [the West Virginia event] would not enable him to be on time and fully participate as scheduled."

Interior defended the trips.

"The swearing in of the Congressman is absolutely an official event, as is emergency management training," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in an email Thursday. "Shame on you for not respecting the office of a Member of Congress."

Zinke also ordered a Park Police helicopter to fly him and another Interior official to and from Yorktown, Va., on July 7 in order to be back in Washington in time for a 4 p.m. horseback ride with Pence. The trip cost about $6,250, according to the documents.

The horseback ride through Rock Creek Park also included Sen. Roy Blunt (R-Mo.) and CMS Administrator Seema Verma, according to a post on Pence's Facebook page.

While in Yorktown, Zinke completed a walking tour of the local Revolutionary War battlefield and attended a boating industry roundtable discussion, according to the documents. The day before the trip, an Interior trip planner added to the schedule a 30-minute flyover of an area where Dominion Energy is building high-voltage electric transmission lines to run across the James River.

Interior officials originally estimated that driving to Yorktown would take about three hours, although one noted that "there is a major construction project on I-64, which will slow things down."

In an email to Interior travel scheduler Tim Nigborowicz, an Interior employee justified Zinke's using the helicopter instead of less expensive method by saying "the Secretary will be able to familiarize himself with the in-flight capabilities of an aircraft he is in charge of" and that the Park Police staff on board would "provide an added measure of security to the Secretary during his travel."

Interior officials certified ahead of the flight that Zinke's use of the helicopter would not compromise law enforcement obligations.

The Park Police helicopter, Eagle One, is deployed for medevac and emergency response situations around Washington, a part of its mission Zinke praised later that month.

"U.S. Park Service helicopter pilot and crew provided a life-saving medevac flight during the attack on members of Congress during baseball practice," Zinke said in the July 25 video celebrating American Heroes Week.

The former Montana congressman and Navy SEAL is already being investigated by the Interior Department's Inspector General and the independent Office of Special Counsel for his mixing of official travel and political events. Interior earlier this year released records documenting Zinke's use of charter and military aircraft, including a $12,000 flight from Las Vegas to Montana that allowed him to give a speech for a hockey team owned by a major campaign donor.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump's pick for NOAA chief causes a storm Back

By Andrew Restuccia | 10/12/2017 07:59 PM EDT

As a top executive at AccuWeather, Barry Myers has pushed for limits on the kinds of products that the National Weather Service offers to the public, saying they offered unfair competition to his industry.

Now, President Donald Trump's nomination of Myers to lead the weather service's parent agency could allow him to make those kinds of restrictions mandatory — to the benefit of his family-run forecasting company.

The AccuWeather CEO's nomination to head the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is stirring criticism from people who worry he would hobble the weather service, which provoked an industry backlash more than a decade ago by making hour-by-hour forecasts, cellphone alerts and other consumer-friendly data widely available online. A bill that Myers supported 12 years ago, sponsored by then-Sen. Rick Santorum, would have prohibited the agency from competing with private providers in most circumstances.

Myers, who has served as a NOAA adviser, has more recently spoken of cooperation with the agency, including industry's advocacy for Congress to fund its budget. But his critics expressed misgivings nonetheless.

"I fear that he'll do irreparable harm to an agency whose primary mission is to save lives," said Daniel Sobien, the president of the National Weather Service Employees Organization, which strongly opposes Myers' nomination. "There seems to be a huge conflict of interest considering his business background and belief system."

Sen. Brian Schatz (D-Hawaii) agreed, calling Myers a "questionable" choice.

"As the CEO of AccuWeather, Barry Myers views NOAA as a direct competitor that provides high-quality forecasts for free," Schatz said in a statement Thursday. He added that "Mr. Myers will have to work very hard to persuade me that he will run NOAA for the public good."

Myers' defenders say they hope he'll use his long experience running a major weather enterprise to modernize NOAA, which also oversees fisheries, marine sanctuaries, endangered species, climate research, satellite data and its own uniformed officer corps.

"In past decade, AccuWeather has embraced 'Big Data' and become an advertising & digital innovation behemoth under Myers' leadership," wrote Ryan Maue, the chief operations officer at the website Weather.us, in a post on Twitter. Maue separately told POLITICO: "I expect Myers to bring that same vision to NOAA and enhance collaboration with the private sector especially in the role of space-based remote sensing and satellites."

Myers did not return a call to his office Thursday, and a lobbyist who works with AccuWeather did not respond to emails seeking comment.

Myers, whose brother Joel founded AccuWeather in 1962, would join a roster of other business leaders whom Trump has installed atop his agencies — many of them bringing considerable potential conflicts of interest to the job. He has degrees in law and business, not the science and math degrees that Bush's and President Barack Obama's NOAA chiefs had.

Richard Painter, who served as the top ethics official for President George W. Bush, said Myers can probably meet the legal requirements to separate himself from his business. But, he added: "The appearances are awful. He should recuse from any matter that could have a financial impact on the company. And he should sell the stock."

Myers indeed "will be liquidating all of his private sector holdings," said a spokesman for NOAA's parent agency, the Commerce Department, adding that he'll "be subject to the same ethics and recusal requirements as any federal official."

The spokesman also rejected suggestions that Myers would clamp down on the weather service's public offerings. He said Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, who chose Myers for the job, "sees the provision of timely, accurate data to the public as one of the Department's core missions. This includes weather data provided by the NWS, so there is no risk that Myers will restrict NWS provision of data to the public."

"Myers has also been a strong proponent of free and open weather data to the public," the spokesman added.

But in 2005, Myers supported Santorum's widely panned bill, which would have prohibited the weather service from offering a product or service "that is or could be provided by the private sector" — a provision that would have benefited companies like AccuWeather.

The bill made some exceptions, including information needed to protect life and property, but weather entrepreneurs, hobbyists, airline pilots and open-government advocates said it would have choked off a wealth of data that the National Weather Service had begun making widely available. The legislation would have countered a 2004 policy change by the Bush administration that had eased restrictions on the weather service's ability to offer new products and services.

"It is not an easy prospect for a business to attract advertisers, subscribers, or investors when the government is providing similar products and services for free," Santorum said when introducing his bill. Critics, including Sen. Bill Nelson (D-Fla.), noted that taxpayers had already paid for the weather service's data.

Myers told The Palm Beach Post at the time that he wanted the weather service to return to its "core mission ... which is protecting other people's lives and property," rather than spending "hundreds of millions of dollars a year, every day, producing forecasts of 'warm and sunny.'"

"We work hard every day competing with other companies and we also have to compete with the government," he told ABC News a month later.

Myers had donated $1,000 to Santorum's Senate campaign in 2004 and 2005, though the executive also has a track record of donating to both Democratic and Republican politicians, including Trump, Hillary Clinton and Mitt Romney. Santorum and Myers are both prominent alumni of Penn State University, and AccuWeather is based near the school's main campus in State College, Pa.

Santorum's bill went nowhere, however — an outcome that Maue said turned out to be "the best thing that could have happened for Accuweather as they were on the ground floor of the digital/smart phone App revolution for weather apps."

More recently, Myers testified to the House Science Committee last year about the need for "embracing free and open data in all situations," while maintaining that "the best public facing forecasts and information comes from the weather industry." Still, he said government, industry and academia each bring their own strengths to the relationship, adding that "NWS need not do everything to keep Americans safe. Others can share the load."

Myers estimated that cooperation among the federal government, the private weather industry and academic researchers had saved 1 million to 2 million lives since the late 1950s.

But Sobien, the union chief, expressed skepticism about the kind of partnership Myers envisions.

"In the past, he has supported proposals that essentially made it so the National Weather Service's only function was to provide data to companies like AccuWeather who would then repackage that data and sell them," Sobien said.

AccuWeather, which says its forecasts appear on more than 200 major television stations, 900 radio stations and 180,000 websites, has also been aggressive over the years in criticizing the weather service for what it sees as its shortcomings. Among other incidents, the company complained that the weather service had underestimated the strength of Hurricane Claudette before it hit Texas in 2003, and it said the federal agency was late to issue warnings about a 2015 tornado in Oklahoma.

As recently as February, AccuWeather's website highlighted an incident in which some of NOAA's weather data suffered a "significant outage," while noting that "AccuWeather-produced services remained available and reliable."

AccuWeather's sharp-elbowed approach also extends to competition with its rival The Weather Channel, which it replaced two years ago on Verizon's FiOS television lineup. AccuWeather's website has also inspired eye-rolling among some in the weather community by offering 90-day forecasts, which one meteorologist blogging for the American Geophysical Union dismissed as "scientifically indefensible" and "even worse than the Farmer's Almanac."

Members of the small community of weather watchers, who never forgot AccuWeather's support for Santorum's bill, contend it will be nearly impossible for Myers to fully eliminate his conflicts of interest.

Myers' brother Joel still serves as the company's president and chairman of the board. Their brother Evan is the chief operating officer.

"His family owns the business and he knows the decisions he makes are going to affect the business for years and potentially decades to come," said Andrew Rosenberg, director of the Union of Concerned Scientists' Center for Science and Democracy. He added, "My biggest concern is not that somebody has a business background, but do they genuinely recognize that a job in government is a fundamentally different one from managing and running a private business for profit."

Others are reserving judgment.

David Titley, a former NOAA official during the Obama administration, said he prefers not to comment on personnel decisions. "We will all have to wait & see in what direction Barry wants to take NOAA," he said in an email.

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt issues EPA directive to curb 'sue and settle' Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/16/2017 12:34 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt today signed a directive and accompanying memo meant to curtail what he has criticized as EPA's "sue and settle" practice.

The new directive calls for more agency outreach to industry groups and will require EPA to post various documents related to such lawsuits online.

Pruitt and other Republicans have long been critical of EPA for settling suits with environmental groups over missed statutory deadlines. Green groups and Democrats note the consent decrees generally only lock in a timeline for the agency to act, not the underlying regulatory details.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: FERC may have an August pulse — Asian carp plan set to jump — No changes for Grand Canyon-Parashant
Date: Monday, August 07, 2017 5:44:26 AM

By Darius Dixon | 08/07/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Esther Whieldon, Annie Snider, Alex Guillén and Eric Wolff

AUGUST WATCH: Free of Congress, wilting from the heat and anxious for some vacation time before the kids are back in school, most of Washington's policy apparatus is likely to shut down now for the rest of August. But this summer may be different for FERC since the Senate approved two nominees last week. After losing its quorum for the first time in its history early this year, the pressure is on for the agency to shrink the backlog that built up over the past six months. Remember, it's not just natural gas pipelines. There are also mergers, rehearings, and electric and natural gas rate cases, not to mention enforcement probes and potential settlements. Digging out from under that backlog — while dealing with the day-to-day workload — will take several months to get FERC caught up.

Neil Chatterjee and Rob Powelson were confirmed to FERC last Thursday, but it's not clear when they'll take the oath. When former FERC Chairman Norman Bay was confirmed by the Senate as a commissioner three years ago, he wasn't sworn in for 20 days. Of course, the circumstances are a bit more urgent now and a lot of people who depend on FERC may get more than a bit impatient if Chatterjee and Powelson head out for summer vacation. Just remember: They weren't the ones who brought FERC's work to a standstill or slowed the confirmation process. FERC commissioners don't normally hold a monthly meeting in August, but that's just tradition, not a rule. They also aren't limited to holding only one meeting a month, and there's plenty they can approve without having a public session. All in all, this may be a different sort of August for FERC.

BROUILLETTE IN THE BUILDING? One of the Senate's last votes before jetting out of town last week was to confirm Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette, a move that was welcomed by the Energy Department and those groups and companies who work with the agency. One of the most frequent complaints inside and outside the agency for months has been about the lack of confirmed nominees (Brouillette is just the second at DOE) to help take the bureaucratic busy work off of Perry's plate. Although it's August, we may see more activity out of the agency as Brouillette settles in. His swearing-in date hasn't been publicly released yet.

HAPPY MONDAY! I'm Darius Dixon, returning to the morning slot and attempting to fill Anthony's big ME shoes. Hayley Moller at Glover Park Group was the first by a mile to call out the myth/rumor of President William Howard Taft getting stuck in a bathtub. He apparently weighed about 354 pounds around the time of his inauguration in 1909. Annie dove into atomic history trivia last week and your new host can't resist jumping in the deep end. What Manhattan Project physicist later founded a science museum? Name the museum and its location. Send your answers to moi — along with your tips, energy gossip and commentary — at ddixon@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @dariusss, @aadragna, @bjlefebvre, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro. And tell me if that was too easy!

CARP PLAN A-COMING: The Army Corps of Engineers is poised to dodge a major controversy when it releases a long-awaited draft plan for blocking invasive Asian carp from reaching Lake Michigan. A notice posted in the Federal Register Friday indicates the plan, due out today, will recommend using noise, electric barriers, water jets and other measures to deter carp from migrating further upstream, where recreational and environmental interests fear they would devastate the ecosystem and pose a safety threat to boaters. That's a much less controversial approach than others under consideration, like shutting down barge traffic on the waterway. The draft plan was originally due out at the end of February, but the Trump administration put it on hold amid worries from shippers. That delay drew an outcry from Great Lakes lawmakers, and multiple appropriations riders were aimed at speeding its release.

One fish, two fish, every fish! If you're reading about Asian carp then you probably know how frustrating they are to deal with. But for the uninitiated, who may not know how crazy this fish is, watch this.

NEVERMIND! NO EPA RFS ANNOUNCEMENT AFTER ALL: EPA has changed course, and will not announce its intent to leave the Renewable Fuel Standard as-is, multiple sources tell ME. Instead, it will wait until the official documents are ready for the Federal Register, most likely in a few weeks. The sources say nothing has changed with the agency's policy decision, which is backed by the president: It will still leave refiners on the hook for the cost of complying with the program. But while it had been planning to announce the decision last week or today, it has now decided that industry and the public were sufficiently notified by POLITICO and other media reports last week. No public statement will be issued until all the t's are crossed and i's are dotted.

MC ZINKE WON'T TOUCH THIS: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke announced on Friday that Arizona's Grand Canyon-Parashant national monument is "no longer under review" and that he's recommending that it be left alone amid a White House-directed study. The monument, which spans more than a million acres, was designated by President Bill Clinton in 2000. "The land has some of the most pristine and undeformed geological formations in North America, which show the scientific history of our earth while containing thousands of years of human relics and fossils," Zinke said. He has now officially removed five monuments from the original list. Seventeen remain under the microscope.

GREENS SCORE KEY WIN IN COAL ASH SUIT: A federal judge ruled for the first time Friday that a coal-fired power plant would have to remove the material from a leaky coal ash pond, rather than simply cap it and leave it in place — a pricey proposition. The lawsuit, brought by the Southern Environmental Law Center and a local Tennessee group, challenged the Tennessee Valley Authority's management of coal ash at its Gallatin Fossil Plant, although the conditions there are similar to those at plants across the south. "While the burden of closure by removal may be great, it is the only adequate resolution to an untenable situation that has gone on for far too long," Chief District Judge Waverly Crenshaw, Jr. of the Middle District of Tennessee wrote in his order.

DOCS SHOW ENERGY CONNECTIONS AMONG EPA APPOINTEES: Key Trump administration appointees at EPA previously provided legal representation or held investments in some of the companies the agency regulates, according to newly released financial disclosures. Erik Baptist, EPA's senior deputy general counsel who arrived from the American Petroleum Institute in June, recently sold off investments of less than $1,000 apiece in Exxon Mobil and ConocoPhillips. Another top appointee in the general counsel's office, David Fotouhi, still holds a number of energy-related investments, according to his disclosure. They include Phillips 66, Dow Chemical, Halliburton, Clorox, Solar Capital Ltd. and Energy Select Sector SPDF, an index with oil and gas holdings. Fotouhi, previously an attorney at Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, had a client list there that included Tesoro, General Electric and oil company Maxus Energy.

Meanwhile, Patrick Traylor, the deputy assistant administrator in the Office of Enforcement and Compliance Assurance, previously represented a number of energy interests at Hogan Lovells, including Southern California Edison, the American Petroleum Institute, Transocean, Koch Minerals, NRG Energy, Venture Global LNG, Delfin LNG, Denbury Resources, AES Corp., Vopak, Flint Hills Resources, The C. Reiss Coal Company, BHP Billiton and Bloom Energy, as well as Daimler Truck North American and U.S. Steel. And Byron Brown, EPA's deputy chief of staff, disclosed that his wife owns between $265,000 and $550,000 in stock in Hess, where she is a senior lobbyist.

Meanwhile, a new Interior nom is Mr. Clean: Trump's pick for Interior Department assistant secretary on land and minerals management, Joe Balash, has an ethics agreement and financial disclosure form that are as boring as they come, listing his pension fund and less than a handful of index funds. Balash, who works for Sen. Dan Sullivan, is a former Alaska Department of National Resources commissioner and ex-staffer for Sarah Palin when she was governor. Balash has advocated for opening up the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska for additional leases — a goal he shares with Zinke.

BOEM WRAPS UP WORK ON STALLED CAPE WIND: The Interior's Bureau of Ocean Energy Management on Friday issued its final supplemental environmental impact statement for the stalled 468-megawatt Cape Wind project after a court in July 2016 held the agency should have used better data to determine the conditions of the seafloor for the project before it issued a lease for the project. The final EIS says that the additional data it gathered does not change its prior finding that drilling foundations for the project in the seabed would only temporarily disturb sedimentation and the overall impacts to water quality would be minor. Cape Wind is on ice after it missed a financing deadline, prompting National Grid and NStar (now Eversource) to cancel contracts to buy power from the project.

SCANA CHIEF 'SORRY' FOR SHUTTING NUCLEAR PROJECT: The CEO of SCANA made a public apology to its customers for its plans to walk away from its V.C. Summer nuclear project last week. "I want to express that I am deeply disappointed and sorry that we were unable to complete the new nuclear units. You put your trust in us to build these units in order to bring additional clean, reliable energy to our state," CEO Kevin Marsh wrote in an op-ed. "I understand your frustration and share in your disappointment."

MOVERS, SHAKERS: Susanna Murley has taken over as the head of communications for the Energy Department's SunShot Initiative. Murley replaces Jamie Nolan who left last week. Murley's previous jobs include at the Solar Energy Industries Association and the Chesapeake Climate Action Network.

QUICK HITS

— Under Trump, coal mining gets new life on U.S. lands. The New York Times.

— Keystone XL foes rally in Lincoln ahead of hearings on pipeline route. Omaha World-Herald.

— Power grid showing its age as more renewable energy produced. The Maui News.

- Pa. Senate's budget package raises hackles of environmental groups. The Associated Press.
- South Carolina's cloudy energy future: Will it affect manufacturing? The Post and Courier.
- Rep. Polis touts green energy in gubernatorial campaign stop in Pueblo. The Pueblo Chieftain.

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

Pack an umbrella. It's supposed to rain all day in the D.C. area, with a high of 74.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/08/ferc-may-have-an-august-pulse-024100>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: FERC wants more time to decide on Perry's grid resiliency push — Democrats try to breathe new life into ANWR doubts — Zinke's helicopter flights draw scrutiny
Date: Friday, December 08, 2017 5:43:24 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 12/08/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén, Eric Wolff, Aaron Lorenzo and Emily Holden

FERC SEEKS EXTRA TIME: Within hours of being sworn in as the new FERC chairman, Kevin McIntyre asked Energy Secretary Rick Perry for a 30-day extension to take action on DOE's proposal calling for new rules to protect coal-fired and nuclear power plants. "The proposed extension is critical to afford adequate time for the new Commissioners to consider the voluminous record and engage fully in deliberations," McIntyre writes in a letter issued Thursday night that cites the fact that two new commissioners have joined the agency in the past two weeks. "The DOE Act does not limit the means by which deadlines can be altered or amended but instead vests such determinations squarely in the discretion of the Secretary."

McIntyre also notes the high volume of comments —more than 1,500 — received on the proposal. Remember FERC is currently slated to take action on Dec. 11, the end of the 60-day deadline set by DOE, a much shorter timeline than the agency typically has for making big decisions. A DOE spokeswoman responds from Qatar: "We have received the Chairman's letter to the Secretary and it is being reviewed."

Perry's urgency seems to be driven by fears that coal-fired power plants operated by FirstEnergy Solutions could shut down if the company falls into bankruptcy — an occurrence that Murray Energy chief Bob Murray has warned would sink his coal mining company. (More on the Murray-Perry links below.)

REDOING THE MATH ON ANWR?: Democrats are asserting that the weak demand from oil companies in this week's lackluster lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska is a good reason not to buy Republican claims in their tax package H.R. 1 \(115\) that allowing drilling in a portion of ANWR would generate $1 billion over 10 years, Pro's Ben Lefebvre and your ME host report. House Natural Resources ranking member Raul Grijalva and two other committee members asked CBO Director Keith Hall in a letter to redo its math in light of the poor lease sale, which generated only $1.2 million. Energy and Natural Resources ranking member Maria Cantwell summed up her position: "The dismal response to this lease sale proves what we've been saying all along: even the small amount the GOP claims will be raised by drilling in the Arctic is a sham."

But Republicans were unmoved: Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski said it was misleading to compare Wednesday's sale with prospects for ANWR, noting the refuge is believed to hold as much as 10 times the billion barrels of oil estimated to lie buried in the petroleum reserve. "Different fields, different prospectivity," Murkowski told reporters. And Rep. John Shimkus, another conferee, noted the plan had always been to fill whatever revenue shortfall from the ANWR proceeds with cash raised from selling oil from the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve. "Part of the reason why the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is now part of the tax bill is that in the 10-year window, ANWR doesn't score anyway," he told ME. (The latest report from the CBO, shared internally with budget staffers, estimated ANWR revenues would fall short by about $366 million).

Bottom line: With Murkowski and Alaska Rep. Don Young on the tax conference, ANWR won't lack for support even if the outlook for leases is weak.

ZINKE'S HELICOPTER HABIT: Travel logs show Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke spent more than $14,000 on government helicopters over the summer, Ben reports. In one case, Zinke took a $8,000 ride so he could make emergency management exercise in Shepherdstown, W.Va., on June 21 because he said official business would prevent him leaving Washington before 2 p.m. What was that business? The swearing-in ceremony for Zinke's congressional successor, Rep. Greg Gianforte.

In another instance, Zinke ordered a Park Police helicopter — at a cost of about $6,250 — to fly him and another Interior official to and from Yorktown, Va., on July 7 so he could make a horseback ride with Vice President Mike Pence. He was coming from a walking tour of the local Revolutionary War battlefield and attended a boating industry roundtable discussion. Heather Swift, an agency spokeswoman, told ME: "The swearing in of the Congressman is absolutely an official event, as is emergency management training. Shame on you for not respecting the office of a Member of Congress."

TGIF MY FRIENDS! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Caitlin Hart from Sen. Bill Nelson's office was first to identify Arizona as the state with the most national monuments. For today: How many states overall have at least one national monument? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

LET'S MAKE A DEAL! Oil-state Republican senators left a Thursday meeting with President Donald Trump with a directive to get to work on a biofuels compromise that will benefit both gasoline makers and corn growers, your ME host reports. "[Trump] wants us to come to him with something that's going to make both sides happy, and I believe we can do it, and believe he thinks we can do it after this meeting," Jim Inhofe said, adding he and John Cornyn had begun working with corn-state Republicans on possible solutions.

What's Sen. Chuck Grassley think? "I'm waiting for Senator Cruz to give me a plan. He said he had a win-win plan."

Team ethanol not so thrilled: Ethanol Industry groups Growth Energy and the Renewable Fuel Association were skeptical of Cruz's claims that RIN prices were hurting biofuels. RFA noted the numerous analyses that show refiners are making money on RINs this year, while Growth suggested that maybe they could take the pressure off by allowing year-round sale of E15. And a spokesman for POET, which makes more ethanol than anyone, minced no words. "It looks like Ted Cruz is doing the same old thing playing with the facts," said Kylie Gilley, POET Senior Vice President of External Affairs & Communications. "The fact is in the current market, some oil companies win and some don't playing the RIN market."

EPA floats administrative action: Senators who attended the meeting said EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt floated administrative actions to cut the costs refiners bear to comply with the Renewable Fuel Standard. "There's some indication that the EPA administrator could have some authority with regard to the RINs prices," Cornyn said. "So I think that was kind of interesting to hear from the EPA administrator that is something they might be able to do." An agency spokesman did not confirm Pruitt's remarks, but said EPA had the authority under RFS to take action to alter RIN pricing.

White House spokesman Hogan Gidley on the meeting: "President Trump had a productive meeting today with senators and administration officials. The president confirmed his commitment to RFS and his support for our farmers and energy workers. He understands there are differing views on this issue, and the administration looks forward to working with all the stakeholders toward a mutually agreeable path forward."

A THOUSAND WORDS: Photos published Thursday show coal magnate Bob Murray personally pitching Perry on his plan to save struggling coal companies just three weeks before Perry ordered a grid study later used to support a proposed rule to reward coal and nuclear power plants for providing "grid resiliency," Pro's Eric Wolff reports. Among those in attendance was Andrew Wheeler, a lobbyist for Murray Energy Corp. at the time, who has since been nominated as EPA's No. 2 official. One of the photos obtained by In These Times shows Perry and Murray in a big bear hug.

DOE's spokeswoman Shaylyn Hynes responds: "Industry stakeholders visit the Department of Energy on a daily basis. The DOE proposal to FERC was about the future and resiliency of the nation's power supply, an issue much bigger than one industry or company."

NO SHUTDOWN! Lawmakers cleared a two-week stopgap spending package Thursday to avoid a government shutdown but remain a ways away on a broader budget agreement, POLITICO's John Bresnahan, Sarah Ferris and Nancy Cook report.

MORE VIEWS ON TAX CONFERENCE: The Business Council for Sustainable Energy released a letter Thursday outlining its priorities and suggestions for the final compromise version of the tax bill. It finds flaws in both versions with some in the House's "extremely problematic" for how they treat a variety of energy technologies. "We urge Congress to address these issues during the conference on the tax reform legislation or in a year-end extenders bill," it suggests.

DECISION WITH BIG CONSEQUENCES: How the Securities and Exchange Commission rules on a shareholder proposal from Jantz Management LLC that asks Apple to set a specific date for when it could eliminate its carbon footprint will have major implications for investors, Pro Financial Services' Patrick Temple-West reports, citing an asset manager involved in a fight with the company. If the agency allows Apple to block the proposal, the decision "could have serious repercussions not just for Apple shareholders, but for investors in all other companies," said Jantz. "The SEC has long made it clear that proposals on a company's actions on climate change are not ordinary business, and that there is a dire need for leading companies to set a timeframe to reduce [greenhouse gas] emissions aggressively now," the company said.

O CANADA! Rather than trying to eliminate the NAFTA energy chapter, the U.S. should work with Canada and Mexico to improve it, Pro Trade's Doug Palmer reports, citing the head of the Canadian Electricity Association. "We believe ... the chapter has worked well and that it does not require major fixing or nixing," CEA President and CEO Sergio Marchi said Thursday. "It provides a consolidated energy space in NAFTA, and offers an effective framework for adding new elements as we modernize this agreement."

A SCIFMAS CAROL: Pruitt testified before lawmakers on Thursday that his new secure phone booth is for both classified matters and communicating with the White House. "There are secure conversations that need to take place at times," he told Rep. Diana DeGette. "I believe there are secure conversations that need to take place that I didn't have access to. ...

Cabinet-level officials need to have access to secure communications." Pruitt would not say how much time he spends working in the booth. DeGette wrote on Facebook later that she was concerned Pruitt "couldn't say how often it's used" given the $25,000 price tag and the administration's proposed budget cuts.

Spotted: Pruitt taking his staff to dinner at Le Diplomate.

MAKING HIS CASE: As lawsuits against Trump's Monday order to shrink two national monuments continue to pile up, Zinke defended the case for downsizing both the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante in a CNN op-ed. "The Antiquities Act is not a weapon for presidents to arbitrarily restrict the uses of hundreds of thousands of acres of land to prevent uses like timber harvesting and cattle grazing," he writes. "It is also not a tool for presidents to use to restrict access for outdoor recreation on land that belongs to all of us."

REMOVED: EPA has removed references to climate change and greenhouse gases on web pages about its own sustainability plans and dialed back language on its commitment to using renewable energy, according to changes that the Environmental Data & Governance Initiative reports happened in September. EDGI says EPA also took down some links to climate adaptation resources.

LAUTENBERG'S WIDOW SLAMS DOURSON: Bonnie Lautenberg, the wife of late-Sen. Frank Lautenberg and tireless advocate for the overhaul of TSCA, slammed Trump's pick to run the EPA's chemicals office and urged senators to oppose Michael Dourson's nomination. "Michael Dourson will only serve to undermine Frank's legacy and threaten the safety of families and children across our country," she wrote on CNN.

TAKE A GLANCE! Environment New York released its scorecard Thursday evaluating the state delegation's environmental voting records. Though its lawmakers are above the national average, the group knocked seven House Republicans — Lee Zeldin, Pete King, Dan Donovan, John J. Faso, Claudia Tenney, Tom Reed and Chris Collins — for their anti-environmental voting records. Read it here.

MAIL CALL! WATCHING OUT FOR THE WATCHDOG: Ten Democratic senators urged appropriators to protect EPA's inspector general from budget cuts in the upcoming spending packages. Read the letter, led by Sheldon Whitehouse, here.

SAVE THE EV CREDIT! Mayors from 22 cities, including Atlanta, Phoenix, Louisville, Ky., and Los Angeles, sent a letter to tax conferees urging them to protect an electric vehicle tax credit as they negotiate a final package. "Electric vehicles afford Americans greater energy independence by reducing demand for imported fossil fuels," they write.

FOR YOUR RADAR: EDF Action is launching a training program to help candidates at all levels incorporate successful environmental messaging into their political campaigns. Candidates will learn through a web-based curriculum about how to develop an environmental message, keep it consistent through the campaign and respond to attacks. More information here.

TAKE A GLANCE! LCV's Chispa is out with a new video urging governors to take advantage of funding available through the VW settlement to transform diesel-powered school bus fleets to electric. Watch it here.

MOVERS, SHAKERS: Former FERC Chairman Norman Bay has joined the Duke University Energy Initiative and Nicholas Institute for Environmental Policy Solutions for a three-year term as a non-resident senior fellow.

The Edison Electric Institute has added Seth Levey as director of external affairs. He previously worked for Exxon Mobil. (h/t POLITICO Influence)

Molly Block started as press secretary at EPA on Monday. She was previously House National Resources press secretary (h/t Playbook).

QUICK HITS

- Areas cut out of Utah monuments are rich in oil, coal, uranium. Washington Post.
- Rising threat: As the climate changes and seas swell, coastal colleges struggle to prepare. Chronicle of Higher Education.
- U.S. Interior Department wants more oil drilling, expedite ANWR permits. Reuters.
- N. Carolina regulators want more information on pipeline. AP.
- Trump officials examining states' authority in pipeline delays. Houston Chronicle.
- Oil rises over 1 percent on threatened Nigeria strike, short covering. Reuters.

HAPPENING TODAY

POSTPONED — "Examining the Role of the Department of Energy in Energy Sector Cybersecurity," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/12/ferc-wants-more-time-to-decide-on-perrys-grid-resiliency-push-045153>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

'Largest ever' Interior Alaska oil lease sale draws little interest Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/06/2017 08:26 PM EDT

The Interior Department received only seven bids from two companies today in what it had billed as the "largest ever" oil and gas lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska.

The bids on the 10.3 million unleased acres in the NPR-A generated just $1.2 million in high bids, according to a Bureau of Land Management summary. The relatively low amount could undercut GOP arguments that opening up the nearby Arctic National Wildlife Refuge would generate $1 billion in revenue.

A BLM Alaska lease sale last year generated $18 million for 1.4 million acres offered.

Subsidiaries of ConocoPhillips and Anadarko were the only two companies that participated in the lease sale. The companies only bid for 80,000 acres, or less than 1 percent of the acreage offered. The highest bid amount was $14.99 per acre.

Low oil prices and the relatively cheap and plentiful land available for hydraulic fracturing in the lower 48 has hurt oil company interest in the out-of-the-way fields of Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) have pushed to open more public land to drilling, however, saying that doing so is important to increase domestic energy production.

Zinke had previously said that today's "large and unprecedented sale in Alaska will help achieve our goal of American Energy Dominance."

An Interior spokesperson did not immediately respond to questions.

WHAT'S NEXT: Republicans hope to keep ANWR drilling provisions in their budget proposal.

To view online click here.

Back

Democrats worry Arctic National Wildlife Refuge being lost amid tax debate Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/29/2017 05:17 AM EDT

Democrats' fight to keep oil and gas rigs out of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is losing ground as the Republican tax plan advances — and it's almost as if no one has noticed.

The prospect of drilling in the untouched Alaskan tundra is as close to reality as it's been in more than a decade, with none of the political drama that in past decades turned the refuge's fate into a top-tier rallying cry for liberals. Legislation to allow drilling in ANWR is quietly hitching a ride on the tax code overhaul that Senate Republicans hope to complete by the end of the week, overshadowed by larger debates on whether the bill is a giveaway to rich people and corporations at the expense of the poor and working class.

"It's really not gotten the attention that it should," Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-Ill.), a member of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, told POLITICO about the ANWR provision. "It's not just the budget discussion. It's about everything else that's going on, the flurry of all sorts of other news."

Angus King (I-Maine) said Republicans were trying to shield ANWR from opposition by adding it to the larger bill rather than bringing it to the floor separately under rules, which would require it to win support from 60 senators to overcome a filibuster.

"Well, clearly the strategy is to try to get it through as part of this tax reform effort and thereby avoid a direct up-or-down vote," King said in an interview earlier this month.

The nonstop news cycle and preponderance of other concerns with the tax bill are making it difficult to focus on an issue that normally fires up Democratic voters.

"I do think that putting ANWR in the budget reconciliation package hasn't drawn as much extremist opposition because it is completely overshadowed by tax reform, which is the center of the package," said Chris Guith, senior vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Global Energy Institute. "But there are some who aren't exactly supportive of tax reform that support ANWR, and it's possible to see ANWR bring a vote or two to help pass tax reform."

Senate Energy Chair Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) easily advanced legislation through her committee directing the Interior Department to hold two lease sales for drilling in ANWR over the next decade. It would raise $1 billion over that period, according to the Congressional Budget Office, making it eligible for inclusion in a budget reconciliation package that Democrats cannot filibuster.

The reconciliation package also will include Republicans' tax plan and a repeal of the Obamacare individual mandate. While Murkowski helped scuttle the Obamacare repeal push earlier this year, she says she supports ending the mandate. Murkowski's office did not respond to a request for comment.

ANWR, a swath of tundra on the northern Alaska coast, is home to polar bears, porcupine caribou and a landscape that hasn't been touched in thousands of years. Congress designated the 19 million-acre area a wildlife refuge in 1980, but it set aside a 1.5-million-acre parcel known as "10-02" for possible drilling if future lawmakers approved such a plan. The U.S. Geological Survey estimated in 1998 that part of ANWR could hold up to 12 billion barrels of oil, and President Donald Trump and Alaska Republicans have called it essential for their plans for American "energy dominance."

Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), who is undecided on the tax bill for a several reasons, said she will support an amendment on the Senate floor to eliminate the ANWR language, but she said success there is not a prerequisite for her to vote for the underlying bill. "No it is not, but I would certainly try to get it out of the package," Collins told reporters Tuesday. Collins was the only Republican to cross the aisle on an unsuccessful amendment to keep pro-drilling language out of the underlying budget resolution, meaning it is unlikely that she would be able to strip the ANWR provision from a reconciliation bill.

But Democrats say that passing a deficit-increasing tax bill in order to open ANWR would actually harm energy-producing states. That's because the $1.5 trillion shortfall from the GOP tax cuts would trigger required "pay-as-you-go" cuts to mandatory spending programs, according to a CBO analysis sent to House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer (D-Md.).

One of the programs on the pay-go chopping block would be the energy royalty revenue sharing program carried out through the Mineral Leasing Act. Cutting those payments would lose Alaska an estimated \$15 million in energy royalty payments next year alone, an amount important to a state already facing budget shortfalls.

"Communities throughout the West would be impacted by the loss of revenue, which is used to support a variety of needs including infrastructure, school funding, conservation, and recreation," Hoyer said in a statement to POLITICO. "This is yet another example of the consequences associated with forcing through legislation to add $1.5 trillion to the deficit in order to give tax cuts to the wealthy."

Pay-go cuts also would hit popular programs like Medicare and student loans, but Congress can waive the law with 60 votes in the Senate. Democrats are not yet on board with that approach.

The current push to open ANWR, coming amid a swarm of competing headlines and buried in larger legislation, has come nearer to succeeding than the GOP's two previous attempts. President Bill Clinton vetoed a budget package in 1995 that included language opening ANWR, while a Democratic filibuster thwarted a second attempt in 2005.

Environmental groups have targeted public engagement at only a handful of congressional districts. The League of Conservation Voters spent $550,000 on television ads in three Republican congressional districts. The LCV also paid for a bipartisan polling firm to probe public opinion on opening ANWR, but even that focused only on registered voters in eight congressional districts.

"The reason they're trying to sneak it into the tax package is they know they don't have the votes otherwise," said Tiernan Sittenfeld, the league's senior vice president of government affairs. "They know they can't pass it under regular order, that's why they're doing a sneak attack."

Even ANWR supporters are staying out of the spotlight.

"I haven't seen any full-out, front-page ads, nothing like that," Alaska Oil and Gas Association President Kara Moriarty said. "We're a little battle-weary, to be honest. Alaskans support opening up ANWR. There's been a few statements reiterating that."

Nick Juliano contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Poor Alaska lease sale sows confusion on ANWR drilling plan Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Anthony Adragna | 12/07/2017 05:47 PM EDT

The weak results from the lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska are giving Democrats ammunition in their fight to stop Republicans from opening the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge under the tax bill.

Democrats are making hay out of the fact only two companies bid in what Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had hailed as an "unprecedented" offering of acreage in the NPR-A, and they say the lease sale, which generated only $1.2 million, undercuts Republican claims that allowing drilling in a portion of ANWR would generate $1 billion over 10 years. The latest report from the CBO, shared internally with budget staffers, estimated ANWR revenues would fall short by about $366 million.

House Natural Resources ranking member Raul Grijalva (D-Ariz.) and two other committee members sent a letter to CBO Director Keith Hall asking for a re-do on ANWR drilling revenue estimates in light of the poor NPR-A showing.

But Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), the driving force behind putting the refuge in the budget package, said the lease sale had little bearing on prospects for ANWR, however. The refuge is believed to hold as much as 10 times the billion barrels of oil estimated to lie buried in the petroleum reserve, Murkowski said.

"Different fields, different prospectivity," Murkowski told reporters.

Meanwhile, House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop (R-Utah) said negotiations over ANWR and how much money it might bring to federal coffers is ongoing.

"I'm going to see all sorts of numbers being thrown out at the last few minutes," Bishop told POLITICO. "We'll look at them. We'll still negotiate this process."

WHAT'S NEXT: Republicans will meet in conference to reconcile the House and Senate versions of the tax bill.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke booked government helicopters to attend D.C. events Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/07/2017 06:31 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke spent more than $14,000 on government helicopters this summer to take himself and staff to and from official events near Washington, D.C., in order to accommodate his attendance at a swearing-in ceremony for his replacement in Congress and a horseback ride with Vice President Mike Pence, according to previously undisclosed official travel documents.

The travel logs, released to POLITICO via a Freedom of Information Act request, show Zinke using taxpayer-funded vehicles from the U.S. Park Police to help accommodate his political events schedule.

In a case detailed in the new documents, Zinke ordered a U.S. Park Police helicopter to take him and his chief of staff, Scott Hommel, to an emergency management exercise in Shepherdstown, West Virginia, on June 21.

Zinke's staff justified the $8,000 flight by saying official business would prevent him leaving Washington before 2 p.m., too late to make the two-hour drive to the exercise, according to the documents.

The event that prevented Zinke from leaving before 2 p.m. was the swearing-in ceremony for Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-Mont.), according to Zinke's official Interior calendar. Gianforte, who won a special election for Zinke's old seat in May, and his wife contributed $15,800 to Zinke's two congressional campaigns.

"Secretary Zinke's last engagement in Washington D.C. is at 2 p.m.," an Interior staffer wrote as justification for using the helicopter. "Driving to [the West Virginia event] would not enable him to be on time and fully participate as scheduled."

Interior defended the trips.

"The swearing in of the Congressman is absolutely an official event, as is emergency management training," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift wrote in an email Thursday. "Shame on you for not respecting the office of a Member of Congress."

Zinke also ordered a Park Police helicopter to fly him and another Interior official to and from Yorktown, Virginia, on July 7 in order to be back in Washington in time for a 4 p.m. horseback ride with Pence. The trip cost about $6,250, according to the documents.

While in Yorktown, Zinke completed a walking tour of the local Revolutionary War battlefield and attended a boating industry roundtable discussion, according to the documents. The day before the trip, an Interior trip planner added to the schedule a 30-minute flyover of an area where Dominion Energy is building high-voltage electric transmission lines to run across the James River.

Interior officials originally estimated that driving to Yorktown would take about three hours, although one noted that "there is a major construction project on I-64, which will slow things down."

In an email to Interior travel scheduler Tim Nigborowicz, an Interior employee justified Zinke's using the helicopter rather than a less expensive method by saying "the Secretary will be able to familiarize himself with the in-flight capabilities of an aircraft he is in charge of" and that the Park Police staff on board would "provide an added measure of security to the Secretary during his travel."

The former Montana congressman and Navy SEAL is already being investigated by the Interior Department's inspector general and the independent Office of Special Counsel for his mixing of official travel and political events. Interior earlier this year released records documenting Zinke's use of charter and military aircraft, including a $12,000 flight from Las Vegas to Montana that allowed him to give a speech for a hockey team owned by a major campaign donor.

To view online click here.

Back

Perry seeks plan for new grid study by Wednesday Back

By Darius Dixon | 04/17/2017 03:17 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry's memo starting a review of federal policies affecting the electric grid calls on his staff to submit an "implementation schedule" by Wednesday.

The text of Perry's Friday memo to his chief of staff, Brian McCormack, urges that the "full resources and relationships available to the [Energy] Department" should be used to determine which federal taxes and regulations have undermined baseload power plants.

"By Wednesday, April 19, 2017, present to me an implementation plan to complete this study 60-days [sic] from that date," Perry wrote.

The study would focus on the evolution of wholesale electricity markets, whether wholesale energy and capacity markets are adequately paying baseload power sources, and "extent to which continued regulatory burdens ... are responsible for forcing the premature retirement of baseload power plants."

Many of the issues targeted by Perry have been high on FERC's agenda for more than a year under its so-called price formation initiative, which focuses on how power plants are paid in an increasingly complex grid. FERC is also trying to navigate the complicated impacts of several state-level energy policies.

DOE, under former Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz, spent roughly a year analyzing the electric grid, including many of the issues raised in Perry's memo. The memo also raises concerns about the "diminishing diversity" of fuel types on the grid.

Bloomberg first reported on the memo Saturday.

WHAT'S NEXT: Perry's senior staff will submit a plan Wednesday for getting the full grid study to him by June 18, which is a Sunday and may push the deadline to the following day.

To view online click here.

Back

Bob Murray had early access to Rick Perry to share coal plan Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/07/2017 05:30 PM EDT

Coal magnate Bob Murray pitched Energy Secretary Rick Perry on his plan to throw an economic lifeline to coal companies less than a month before Perry set in motion plans to aid the industry, according to newly disclosed photographs that show the two meeting.

The liberal magazine In These Times obtained pictures of Murray and Perry from a March 29 meeting at Energy Department headquarters, less than a month after Perry was sworn in. Several other officials were in attendance, including Andrew Wheeler, who at the time was a lobbyist for Murray and has since been nominated as the Environmental Protection Agency's No. 2 official.

The meeting puts Murray and Perry together at a crucial moment in the timeline of the Trump administration's push to save the struggling coal industry, an effort that would benefit Murray Energy in particular while raising electricity prices for potentially millions of people. A month before the meeting, one of Murray's biggest customers, FirstEnergy, told investors it was seriously considering seeking bankruptcy protection for its merchant division, FirstEnergy Solutions, a move that would likely void its supply contracts with Murray's coal mines.

Three weeks after Murray's visit, Perry would order a grid study that later became part of the justification for a proposed rule to reward coal and nuclear power plants for providing "grid resiliency." FERC, which has jurisdiction over the proposal, must make a decision on it by Monday.

At the time of the meeting, Wheeler was already the leading candidate to become the deputy administrator for EPA. Wheeler, who represented Murray as a lobbyist for Faegre Baker Daniels, would not be officially nominated for months. Wheeler, who has acknowledged participating in meetings on Murray's coal plan at DOE and on Capitol Hill, cleared committee last week and is awaiting Senate confirmation.

Murray is an outspoken supporter of President Donald Trump and held a fundraiser for him during the 2016 campaign.

DOE did not dispute the validity of the photos.

"Industry stakeholders visit the Department of Energy on a daily basis," DOE spokeswoman Shaylyn Hynes said, when asked about the meeting. "The DOE proposal to FERC was about the future and resiliency of the nation's power supply, an issue much bigger than one industry or company."

The photographs show Perry sitting at the head of a table in the Department of Energy, with Bob Murray, CEO of Murray Energy, to his left, and Wheeler down the table from Murray.

"Enclosed is an Action Plan for achieving reliable and low cost electricity ... and to assist in the survival of our Country's coal industry, which ... power grid reliability and low cost electricity," Murray writes in a cover letter to Perry, parts of which are visible in one photo from the meeting.

Though the document has never been publicly released, DOE critics say Murray's plan appears to have inspired DOE's grid study and the proposed rule Perry sent FERC in September. Copies are visible at the seats of most of the participants, including Perry and Murray. Wheeler, who told members of the Senate Environment Committee he had only seen the memo briefly, is not holding a copy in the photos obtained by In These Times. Murray told Greenwire in November he "didn't have any involvement" in writing the rule.

Murray has acknowledged sharing the plan with Trump.

"I gave Mr. Trump what I called an action plan very early," Murray said in a recent PBS Frontline documentary on EPA. "It's about three-and-a-half pages and — of what he needed to do in his administration. He's wiped out page one."

The meeting appears to have been successful for all. One of the photos shows Perry and Murray in a big bear hug.

To view online click here.

Back

Congress clears spending bill, averting shutdown Back

By John Bresnahan, Sarah Ferris and Nancy Cook | 12/07/2017 09:10 AM EDT

Congress passed a two-week funding bill Thursday, staving off a government shutdown a day ahead of the deadline. But lawmakers face a turbulent next few weeks as they try to clinch a broader budget deal by the end of the year.

Senators approved the measure on a 81-14 vote, soon after the House passed it 235-193. Despite initial reluctance from conservative House Republicans, GOP leadership was ultimately able to pass it with votes to spare.

The more interesting action was arguably taking place across Pennsylvania Ave.

President Donald Trump met with the "Big Four" congressional leaders — Speaker Paul Ryan, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer — at the White House on Thursday afternoon in a bid to jump-start negotiations over a two-year budget deal.

Per one senior Democratic aide, the vast majority of the talks focused on spending levels, and the two parties did not come to a consensus. Democrats want parity for any defense and non-defense spending boost, while Republicans want to see the Pentagon get the bulk of any spending increase.

"We had a good meeting. We agreed to keep on talking," McConnell said after returning from the meeting. Asked if they were any closer to a deal on spending caps, he said, "I wouldn't say that, but it was a good meeting. Everybody wants to get to an outcome."

"We had a productive conversation on a wide variety of issues," Pelosi said in a statement following the meeting. "Nothing specific has been agreed to, but discussions continue."

The group also discussed the fate of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. GOP leaders argued the issue would have to be dealt with separately from funding the government — something many Democrats will not support.

Earlier in the day, Pelosi told reporters, "We will not leave here without a DACA fix."

The shutdown dance comes as Republican leaders and the White House are pushing to finish work on a trillion-dollar-plus tax cut plan being hashed out by House and Senate tax writers. Ryan and McConnell are hoping to buy enough time in the budget talks to complete work on the tax bill, all while mollifying their defense hawks and conservative hard-liners in the House Freedom Caucus. And that's to say nothing of Democratic demands for a deal to help hundreds of thousands of Dreamers who face possible deportation next year, as well as a host of other controversial policy issues.

Ahead of the meeting, a senior administration official said Trump's main push would be to keep DACA out of the budget deal, increase defense spending without boosting non-defense funding, and get Democrats to agree to allow his hugely controversial border wall project.

That, Democrats say, is a White House pipedream. During a Thursday speech on the floor, Schumer said Trump and Republicans will have to be open to real negotiations in order to reach a budget deal, and added that the GOP would pay politically if there is a shutdown.

"Congressional negotiators are making good headway on a budget deal that would meet our commitments to our military and also urgent priorities here at home," Schumer said on the floor.

"Unfortunately, the progress here in Congress is in stark contrast to the rhetoric coming from the White House. President Trump again suggested yesterday that 'a shutdown could happen.' If a shutdown happens, as the president seemed to be rooting for in a tweet earlier this year, it will fall on his shoulders. His party controls the Senate, the House, and the presidency."

But first, Republicans had to put up the 217 votes to keep the government open Thursday — not an easy feat for a conference populated with conservatives who rarely vote for any spending bills.

That's why Ryan, House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) and other GOP leaders spent much of Wednesday huddling with conservative hard-liners unhappy with the leadership plan to avert a shutdown. McCarthy even brought in McConnell to talk to frustrated rank-and-file members grumbling about the strategy at one point.

By Thursday morning, however, House GOP leaders were predicting they'd have the votes to pass the continuing resolution. And they were right.

Rachael Bade, Jennifer Scholtes and Seung Min Kim contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Apple's fight with shareholders tests SEC stance on activist proposals Back

By Patrick Temple-West | 12/08/2017 05:01 AM EDT

How the Securities and Exchange Commission rules on a bid by Apple Inc. to block a shareholder proposal could have "serious repercussions" for investors, an asset manager involved in a fight with the iPhone-maker said on Thursday.

Boston-based Jantz Management LLC argues that Apple is "out of line with longtime SEC rulings" in its request to block a shareholder proposal from Jantz that asks the company to set a specific date for when it could eliminate its carbon footprint.

Apple's defense is untested because it is using little-noticed SEC guidance published on Nov. 1 to ask the agency for permission to block Jantz's proposal.

The guidance said the SEC would weigh any recommendation by a company's board of directors on whether a shareholder proposal involves a significant policy issue and should be included, or if it is "ordinary business" and should be disallowed.

Apple said its board determined that the Jantz proposal should not be considered at the company's 2018 annual shareholder meeting.

The Cupertino, Calif.-based company says it is already working to eliminate the carbon footprint in its supply chain. The company did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

The matter is pending before the SEC. If the agency allows Apple to block the proposal, the decision "could have serious repercussions not just for Apple shareholders, but for investors in all other companies," said Jantz, which has about $41 million of assets under management.

"The SEC has long made it clear that proposals on a company's actions on climate change are not ordinary business, and that there is a dire need for leading companies to set a timeframe to reduce [greenhouse gas] emissions aggressively now," said Jantz, which often tries to agitate for politically progressive changes at companies with shareholder proposals.

Apple is also asking the SEC for permission to block a shareholder proposal offered by Zevin Asset Management that's seeking a report about how CEO Tim Cook's compensation could be tied to sustainability metrics, including diversity among senior executives. In this dispute, Apple is also using the SEC's Nov. 1 guidance to bolster its case.

Zevin is a Boston-based socially responsible investment fund with $554.5 million under management.

Historically, "proposals related to environmental matters or executive compensation are generally considered weighty policy matters and not ordinary business," law firm Davis Polk said in a client note last month.

An SEC spokesman declined to comment.

Shareholder activism can have a big impact on corporate actions. In May, almost two-thirds of Exxon Mobil's shareholders defied corporate executives and voted for the company to incorporate the Paris climate agreement into its business models, regardless of what the U.S. government does.

Similar resolutions won majority shareholder support at Occidental Petroleum and PPL Corp.

In response, the Trump administration in October proposed making it harder for shareholders to file proposals, which can cost companies tens of millions of dollars to deal with.

The Treasury Department recommended that the SEC raise the thresholds for when an investor can resubmit a proposal that previously drew low voter support. From 2007 to 2016, almost a third of all shareholder proposals were resubmissions, Treasury said.

Treasury argued that big investors with overt social, religious or policy objectives — and just six individual investors — were responsible for two-thirds of all shareholder proposals filed in 2016.

To view online click here.

Back

Canadian industry leader urges U.S. not to dump NAFTA energy chapter Back

By Doug Palmer | 12/07/2017 03:59 PM EDT

The United States should abandon the idea of eliminating the NAFTA energy chapter and work with Canada and Mexico to improve its provisions, the head of the Canadian Electricity Association said today.

"We believe ... the chapter has worked well and that it does not require major fixing or nixing," CEA president and CEO Sergio Marchi said during a discussion on NAFTA energy issues hosted by the Washington International Trade Association. "It provides a consolidated energy space in NAFTA, and offers an effective framework for adding new elements as we modernize this agreement."

That is also Canada's position, a Canadian embassy spokesman said. Mexico has also expressed support for including an energy chapter in the revamped agreement now being negotiated. That's a major change from 25 years ago, when it insisted on being excluded from NAFTA energy commitments.

Marchi, a former Canadian trade minister, said his group has been told the U.S. wants to eliminate the chapter based on the rationale its provisions can be covered by other sections of the agreement.

"We also hear, for example, that without a chapter it makes it a lot easier for USTR to run the show, rather than relying on interdepartmental consultations," Marchi said.

The Office of the U.S. Trade Representative declined to comment on whether the U.S. was proposing to eliminate the chapter.

Marchi said scrapping the chapter wouldn't necessarily undo the energy reforms contained in the pact. But he argued it would make it appear the chapter hasn't worked, when that's not the case.

"We think [eliminating the chapter] would be a mistake," Marchi said, adding that Canada and Mexico could just as easily argue that the U.S. demand for a textiles chapter is unnecessary.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Grading Pruitt on his promises — Questions raised over Lola Zinke's role — Decision day for crucial Keystone XL permit
Date: Monday, November 20, 2017 5:43:32 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 11/20/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén and Sara Stefanini

IS HE KEEPING HIS WORD? EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt came into office boasting of returning the agency to its mission of cleaning up the air, water and land, but Pro's Alex Guillén and Emily Holden look at what he's accomplished so far and how it stacks up to his ambitious rhetoric.

- Tackling air pollution: He's rolled back or delayed a host of air quality regulations from the Obama administration, but signed off on 378 actions related to state plans as of Sept. 25, compared with 213 during the same period under Obama. Some environmentalists worry those quick approvals suggest laxer plans that are inadequately protective.
- Cleaning up Superfund sites: Pruitt's taken action to develop a top 10 list of priority Superfund sites and issued task force recommendations designed to speed up cleanups, but critics say the actions are toothless and actually hurt other cleanup efforts.
- Upgrading drinking water infrastructure: He's identified the need to upgrade water infrastructure to avoid similar crises like Flint, Mich., but hasn't offered many details on how to pay for it.
- Undoing Obama's climate agenda: Pruitt's stuck to his vows to unravel Obama administration actions addressing climate change through steps like revoking the Clean Power Plan and promising to open up a debate on climate science.
- Expanding outreach to states and businesses: The former Oklahoma attorney general has conducted outreach to almost entirely to Republican-controlled states, while industry groups have given high marks to Pruitt's approach.

EPA's take: "We're only 10 months on the job and eight years from today, Americans will be impressed with how President Trump and Administrator Pruitt were able to protect the environment and American jobs," agency spokesman Jahan Wilcox said.

LOLA ZINKE ROLE SCRUTINIZED: New documents show Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's wife, Lola, used Interior staff time to coordinate some of her activities while traveling with her husband during jaunts that gave her access to high level politicians and GOP donors who could benefit her as a political operator in her own right, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. "These emails show that the leadership at the Department of Interior treats basic ethical standards like an inconvenience," Western Values Project Executive Director Chris Saeger said.

In one instance, records show the secretary's wife helped decide the guest list for a Young America's Foundation town hall forum with her husband on April 17 at its Reagan Ranch in Santa Barbara. She sent a "list of people I have invited to the event" to two Interior staffers, according to a series of April 7 emails. Interior says she pays her own way when she accompanies her husband and that travel is cleared by ethics officials in advance. "DOI incurred no expenses due to Mrs. Zinke's presence" with the secretary, Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in an email Friday.

GOBBLE GOBBLE GOBBLE! IT'S THANKSGIVING WEEK! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and DNV GL's Ethan Tremblay was first to identify John Marshall and Salmon P. Chase as our Supreme Court justices who once graced currency. For today: In what year did Congress pass a resolution formally setting Thanksgiving as the fourth Thursday of November? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

PROGRAMMING NOTE: Morning Energy will not publish from Nov. 23-Nov. 26. Our next Morning Energy newsletter will publish on Nov. 27. Please continue to follow Pro Energy issues here.

YOU GOTTA MAKE A DECISION: What once was a sleepy little panel in Nebraska today decides whether to allow the Keystone XL pipeline to follow the path that developer TransCanada has proposed in the latest battle over the pipeline that's become a national fight. The Nebraska Public Service Commission, consisting of four elected Republicans and one Democrat, will decide whether to grant a permit to 1,200-mile proposed pipeline that would carry up to 830,000 barrels of oil per day. It's the last regulatory hurdle for the project, which President Donald Trump has pushed to complete and which has galvanized mass protests from the environmental movement.

Commissioners have faced intense lobbying from the White House, environmental advocates, TransCanada lobbyists and their own state politicians ahead of the decision. One development they won't be taking into account, though, is the spill of 210,000 gallons of oil from the existing Keystone pipeline in Amherst, South Dakota last Thursday. Officials said Nebraska law bars the consideration of spills or pipeline safety in the decision-making process. TransCanada said in an update the spill is "under control and that there is no significant environmental impact observed or threat to public safety" but that it continued to send crews to the site. But green groups immediately seized upon the incident as an example of what they say are the safety and environmental risks of moving forward with Keystone XL.

Regardless of the decision, environmental and Native American groups say they will continue to fight the project's completion. They'll hold a press conference in Lower Brule, South Dakota and sign a treaty against Keystone XL after the commission meets in the morning. "Nothing has changed at all in our defense of land, air and water of the Oceti Sakowin Lands," said Faith Spotted Eagle, a member of the Yankton Sioux Nation. "If anything, it has become more focused, stronger and more adamant after Standing Rock," referring to the protests of the Dakota Access pipeline. TransCanada, for its part, hasn't committed to building the controversial project yet, though it said earlier this month it was "quite encouraged" by industry interest in reserving space on Keystone XL. Oh, and the Associated Press reports the commission's decision is subject to legal challenges, setting up another potentially lengthy court battle.

Watch the meeting, which kicks off at 11 a.m. EST, online here.

IT'S A WRAP FROM BONN: The White House left climate talks in Bonn, Germany feeling pretty good about its efforts and the international community seemed relieved by the constructive role career negotiators played in quieter diplomatic efforts to help write the rulebook for the Paris deal, Pro's Emily Holden reports from Germany. Most political leaders at the talks sought to highlight U.S. activity in the negotiating rooms rather than the provocative move to press the case for the fuels blamed for warming the Earth and boosting sea levels. "You couldn't have expected more," said German Environment Minister Barbara Hendricks. "It's diplomats who are working here, they act professionally."

White House energy adviser George David Banks said the U.S. had in fact been "indispensable in thwarting efforts by some countries to get a free pass" under the Paris agreement. The American negotiating team, he said, had "led across many issues, promoted U.S. national interests, and protected U.S. taxpayers and businesses."

Potential pitfalls ahead: The success of the Paris agreement, which built on cooperation between the U.S. and China in the run-up, was that it set up a system that gives flexibility to developing countries that lack the capacity to meet its goals, Todd Stern, the Obama administration's special envoy for climate change, told POLITICO Europe's Kalina Oroschakoff and Sara Stefanini on Friday. That marked a change from the "firewall" between rich and poor built into many years of climate negotiations and agreements. "In a world where somewhere between 60-65 percent of global emissions are coming from developing countries at this point — you can't have that," Stern said. Read their Q&A with Stern here.

Meanwhile, an agreement to phase down emissions of hydrofluorocarbons, extremely potent greenhouse gases, will go into effect in 2019 after getting enough countries to ratify the deal on Friday, the New York Times reports. That mark was hit when Sweden became the 20th country to ratify the Kigali amendment, which is expected to hold down climate change by 0.5° C [0.9° F] by 2100. The State Department still hasn't sent the treaty to the Senate for ratification, despite the entreaties of industry to do so.

INTERIM UTILITY HEAD NAMED IN PUERTO RICO: After Ricardo Ramos resigned his post as the head of Puerto Rico's utility Friday, its governing board named Justo González the interim chief, El Nuevo Día reports. Ramos said his resignation "has nothing to do with any matter covered in the media," but described it as "very personal." And the island's government said it had begun searching for a permanent head of the utility "inside and outside Puerto Rico."

Quick check: More than two months after the hurricane, more than 50 percent of the island still lacks electricity. Stats here.

WHAT'S THE VETTING CRITERIA? The Climate Solutions Caucus has added Reps. Josh Gottheimer and Matt Gaetz to its ranks, but it's the latter's inclusion that caught ME's attention. Gaetz introduced legislation H.R. 861 \(115\) abolishing the EPA earlier this year and told a Florida newspaper in 2016: "In our fervor to protect the environment, we lose sight of economic and scientific reality."

WATER, WATER EVERYWHERE: The Supreme Court will visit Water World on Jan. 8, when in its first arguments of the new year the court will hear arguments in two high-profile water cases. First up is Texas v. New Mexico and Colorado; this case is about Texas's allegations that New Mexico is sucking too much water out of the Rio Grande. These arguments aren't to settle the dispute, merely to determine whether the federal government can play a role in the proceedings. Next on the docket will be Florida v. Georgia, a fight over the use of water from the Apalachicola River. The case's "special master" recommended the justices dismiss the suit, as POLITICO Pro Florida's Bruce Ritchie reported last month.

HIS MIND SEEMS MADE UP: Trump seemed like his mind was pretty made up not to reverse an Obama-era ban on importing elephant hunting trophies from Zimbabwe and Zambia (reversing course on his administration's original decision last week) in a Sunday evening tweet. "Big-game trophy decision will be announced next week but will be very hard pressed to change my mind that this horror show in any way helps conservation of Elephants or any other animal," he offered.

COAL ASH GETS ITS DAY IN COURT: The D.C. Circuit hears oral arguments today (at the unusual time of 2 p.m. so heads up) on EPA's 2015 coal ash regulation and Pro's Alex Guillén runs through in Energy Regulation Watch all of the twists and turns in recent months leading up to today's hearing. Judge Karen LeCraft Henderson, a George H.W. Bush appointee, and two Obama appointees, Judges Patricia Millett and Cornelia Pillard, will today consider hear arguments about whether to put the case on hold indefinitely at the Monday arguments, alongside the various legal and technical challenges. Remember EPA intends to reconsider various aspects of the regulation and Congress made a major change to the rule's enforcement mechanism last year.

Alex's take: "This sustained tug-of-war has made things a little hazy, and it's not clear where the court will land on all this. This suit has been pending for more than two years, and the court did not grant EPA the same indefinite delay it did on a cavalcade of other rules. But the judges could still decide to wipe their hands of it and avoid the headache of navigating their way to a ruling."

LEFT OUT: Not included in the White House's latest $44 billion disaster recovery request was a $12 billion Houston area coastal barrier project sought by Texas Gov. Greg Abbott, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. The so-called coastal spine project aims to protect communities and infrastructure from massive storm surges, but green groups want the federal government to finish an environmental review on the project before it moves forward.

ICYMI: Merchant power companies are afraid an exemption included in the Senate and House tax bills for regulated power utilities — but not them — would leave them at a disadvantage, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. Both bills would exempt the regulated entities from the new cap on interest deductions for businesses at 30 percent of their adjusted income. "Since we compete with [regulated utilities], the tax provisions likely raise competitive issues which we will need to raise on the Hill," said John Shelk, CEO of the Electric Power Supply Association.

MAIL CALL! AIDING ZINKE'S CAUSE: Echoing Zinke's own calls from a couple weeks ago, 16 Senate Republicans released a letter Friday asking Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to prioritize four Interior nominees for confirmation. The chamber confirmed one of the four — Brenda Burman — on Thursday, but the senators still want action on the nominations of Susan Combs to be Interior's assistant secretary of policy management and budget, Joseph Balash to be assistant secretary for Land and Minerals Management and Ryan Nelson to be agency solicitor. "As you proceed in scheduling the next nominations to bring to the floor, we urge you to make these well-qualified nominees a top priority," the letter, led by Steve Daines, says.

Please, pretty please? Seven Senate Democrats are once again urging Trump to nominate a science adviser and fill other positions within Office of Science and Technology Policy. "Without adequate OSTP staffing, the country lacks key insights from those with deep experience in science and technology," the letter, led by Maggie Hassan, says.

Another RFS plea: Seven House Democrats asked Pruitt to reverse course in EPA's final renewable volume obligations regulation so it does "not unreasonably reduce advanced biofuels and cellulosic biofuel blending targets." Link here.

Solar plea to Trump: Six solar finance firms are asking Trump to consider the broader ramifications of whether to slap steep tariffs on imported solar equipment would have on broader markets and industries. "Tariffs not only will substantially and negatively impact the U.S. solar sector and the 260,000-plus well paying manufacturer, supplier, developer and installer jobs it supports, but also seriously undermine the billion-dollar financial markets and companies, such as ours, that rely on the success of the domestic solar industry," they wrote.

TAKE A GLANCE! The Center for American Progress is out with a report identifying members of Congress hostile to national monuments and who sponsored bills targeting public lands access. There are 19 members, with a heavy presence of Alaskans and Utahns, called out specifically.

MOVER, SHAKER: Tom Simchak starts Nov. 28 at the National Governors Association's Environment, Energy, and Transportation Division. Simchak (an American) was previously an energy policy adviser at the British embassy.

QUICK HITS

- Former Murray maintenance chief sentenced to probation. Charleston Gazette-Mail.
- Owners: Coal-Fired Power Plant Losing Money, May Be Closed. AP.
- PFAS record may sink Trump EPA chemical safety nominee. MLive.
- Pipeline opponents claim Enbridge skirted permit rules for storage yard. Minneapolis Star Tribune.
- Norway Oil Bosses Insist End Isn't Nigh After $35 Billion Shock. Bloomberg.
- What Nevada can learn from its attempt (and failure) to deregulate the energy market in the 1990s. Nevada Independent.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

9:30 a.m. — "Modernization of the North American Free Trade Agreement," Senate Finance Committee field hearing, San Antonio Marriott Plaza Hotel, Cavalier Meeting Room, 555 S. Alamo Street, San Antonio, Texas

12:00 p.m. — "The Carbon IRA: The Most Rad Idea You've Never Heard of For Shrinking Our Carbon Footprint," U.S. Energy Association, 1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Suite 550

12:00 p.m. — "Cities Research Seminar Series: Powering Cities in the Global South: How Energy Access for All Benefits the Economy and the Environment," World Resources Institute, 10 G Street NE, Suite 800

1:00 p.m. — NRDC Experts Discuss Tax Bill and the Arctic in phone call, RSVP:

eheyd@nrdc.org

TUESDAY

9:30 a.m. — The American Coal Ash Association holds its annual production and use news conference, National Press Club (Lisagor Room) - 529 14th Street NW

WEDNESDAY

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/11/grading-pruitt-on-his-promises-027892>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

TransCanada 'encouraged' by interest shown in KXL shipments Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/09/2017 12:39 PM EDT

TransCanada says it is "encouraged" by industry demand to reserve space on Keystone XL, but it hasn't yet committed to building the controversial project.

TransCanada received enough commitments to ship oil along the proposed 1,200-mile pipeline to make it profitable, but the company is still analyzing the conditions shippers requested, Paul Miller, TransCanada's president of liquids pipelines told a conference call. The company is targeting commitments to ship 500,000 barrels a day via 20-year contracts, he added.

"We're quite encouraged by the results," Miller said during the company's third-quarter earnings call. "I believe the conditions are manageable."

The company still needs the approval from Nebraska's Public Service Commission for the pipeline's proposed route through the state. That decision is expected later this month

"We still have a lot of work to do," Miller said. "We are still working through the bid conditions, and that will take some time. It will take us some time to review the decision from the PSC."

Overall commitments to ship oil are "substantially similar" to what the company received when Keystone XL was first proposed nearly a decade ago, TransCanada said in its quarterly earnings report.

TransCanada had asked the Alberta government to reserve space on Keystone XL to help push the project forward, according to a Bloomberg report.

To view online click here.

Back

How the Bonn climate talks survived Trump Back

By Emily Holden | 11/17/2017 07:52 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — The White House goaded activists at the international climate talks by pushing coal and other fossil fuels. But behind closed doors, U.S. negotiators stuck to their Obama-era principles on the 2015 Paris deal — despite President Donald Trump's disavowal of the pact.

State Department negotiators at the U.N. conference that ended Saturday hewed to the United States' long-established positions on the details of how to carry out the Paris agreement. And that's the U.S. role that most foreign political leaders sought to highlight, despite the low expectations inspired by Trump's "America First" agenda and his dismissal of human-caused climate change as a hoax.

"You couldn't have expected more," said German Environment Minister Barbara Hendricks, who described the U.S. delegation as constructive and neutral. "Its diplomats who are working here, they act professionally."

White House energy adviser George David Banks portrayed the outcome in even more glowing terms, saying the U.S. had been "indispensable in thwarting efforts by some countries to get a free pass" under the Paris agreement.

The American negotiating team, Banks said, had "led across many issues, promoted U.S. national interests, and protected U.S. taxpayers and businesses."

Among the contentious issues that arose were efforts by poorer nations to allow them to use less arduous systems than wealthier countries to ensure they are measuring their greenhouse gas emissions. China had led that push, which the European Union and U.S. have long opposed, though ultimately the issue was left largely unsettled.

Negotiations at the conference, which began Nov. 6, wrapped up Saturday morning after developing nations launched an 11th-hour campaign to require wealthier nations to outline in advance how much climate funding they will provide — a sticking point for countries like the U.S. that amend their budgets each year.

Although observers said the U.S. made no effort to disrupt the talks, former Obama administration climate diplomat Todd Stern said Washington was "not in the negotiations with the same credibility as before."

"It's not that the U.S. isn't there, but it's not the same," said Stern, who had led the U.S. negotiators in Paris nearly two years ago. "It's the EU, the U.K. ... New Zealand, Australia, Canada, Japan, etc. They don't weigh as much as the U.S. did, but they can be very important."

The State Department sent fewer than 20 staffers, a far smaller delegation than it has sent to other climate gatherings in recent years.

Some observers said a U.S.-sponsored panel discussion earlier this week that promoted coal, natural gas and nuclear power appeared designed to please Trump's political base and energy industry supporters in the U.S. At the event, which provoked a high-profile protest, Banks told the audience that the U.S. would support "universal access" to affordable and reliable energy, which for many places in the world meant coal.

Andrew Light, who was part of Obama's delegation and is now a fellow at the World Resources Institute, said bringing that pro-fossil fuel event to the climate talks showed that the U.S. can remain a party to the international talks without substantively changing its positions.

"This administration can continue telegraphing its core beliefs, whether or not anyone one believes that with them," Light said. "In the long run there's everything to be gained from an environment where the United States does cooperate with other parties on whatever they want to cooperate on."

Other U.S. representatives, from companies to a group Democratic governors and mayors led by California Gov. Jerry Brown, sought to reassure the world that many in the U.S. still want to take action to ratchet down carbon pollution, even without Trump. Microsoft Corp. announced own its goal to slash carbon emissions 75 percent by 2030 and pitched sustainable technology, including for agriculture and land-cover mapping, in meetings it held with foreign governments.

But the talks on carrying out the Paris agreement will face major hurdles before the next major gathering next year in Poland. Countries will also face a deadline to finish deciding how they achieve the deal's goal of keeping global warming to below 2 degrees Celsius, the mark that scientists warn would cause irreversible damage.

"Parties haven't allowed the threatened U.S. withdrawal to derail this process," said Elliot Diringer, a former Clinton administration adviser who is executive vice president for the Center for Climate and Energy Solutions. "They've made good progress and set themselves up for a more focused negotiation next year. At the same time, the talks here have underscored the significant political challenges ahead next year."

But Tosi Mpanu-Mpanu, the lead climate change specialist for the environment ministry in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, said many major issues were pushed until next year. "I have a feeling that people were a little bit complacent," he said, disappointed in what he called a "self-fulfilling prophecy" that countries wouldn't make much progress this year.

Environmental advocates insisted they still aren't seeing the emissions reductions or money necessary to achieve the goals of the Paris deal.

"The conference gets a grade of 'meets expectations,'" said Andrew Deutz, director of international governmental relations for The Nature Conservancy.

Deutz said that while the U.S. didn't blow up the process, "the absence of national U.S. leadership was evident within the negotiating process this week and for driving more ambitious climate action in the future."

Island nations that face the most immediate threats from climate change and sea-level rise pressed their case throughout the two weeks. Allen Chastanet, the prime minister of Saint Lucia, told reporters that island nations are "paralyzed," because they can't stop rising temperatures alone.

Hurricane Maria demolished Barbuda and brought heavy damage to Puerto Rico, after passing just 40 miles from Saint Lucia.

"I have to say to you deep down inside of me I'm angry, I'm anxious and I'm fearful," he told a news conference. "It can't be that a prime minister's only resource is to get on the side of your bed on your knees and pray, and that's what I feel every time I'm here and a hurricane is developing over the Atlantic, is 'Lord, please take care of our people.'"

Kalina Oroschakoff and Sara Stefanini contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Q&A with former U.S. climate envoy Todd Stern Back

By Kalina Oroschakoff and Sara Stefanini | 11/19/2017 02:12 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — The United States traditionally pushed hard during international climate talks to ensure that both developed and developing countries shoulder the burden of dealing with global warming.

But a weakened U.S. delegation played a much more marginal role at the COP23 summit that wrapped up Friday, thanks to the Trump administration's decision to pull out of the Paris agreement.

That helped lead to the resurgence in Bonn of the idea of "differentiation," under which poorer countries do less, arguing that the rich ones caused the problem of climate change thanks to more than a century of industrialization.

Without U.S. support, the rest of the developed world is having a tougher time arguing back.

Todd Stern, the U.S. special envoy for climate change from 2009 to April 2016, spoke to POLITICO on the sidelines of the summit about what a lower-profile America means for climate talks.

This summit was meant to make progress on rules that are due at the 2018 meeting in Poland. What will be at stake at the COP24?

It's the place where all these various guidelines get done. It might be boring for readers, but it's actually really important.

Setting up a transparent monitoring system for national emissions is critical to tracking progress toward the Paris agreement's goals. Why are the discussions on the topic so tough?

One of the important sentences that we actually negotiated with China talks about essentially setting up a system where there will be flexibility provided to those developing countries who need it on basis of capacity. If you instead take that flexibility and say, OK, it applies to all developing countries, then you are kind of de facto getting back to a bifurcated system. The U.S. was always the loudest, strongest voice in pushing that back.

And now?

There were many, many countries supporting us, but that was something we cared about a lot, both for substantial reasons and political reasons. The U.S. is not in the negotiations with the same credibility as before. The EU, the U.K., the Umbrella Group countries — New Zealand, Australia, Canada, Japan, etc. — they don't weigh as much as the U.S. did, but they can be very important. There's no reason this should get messed up, but there are a bunch of countries who would like it to get messed up.

The Paris agreement helped bury the idea of differentiating responsibilities for the developing and developed sides, but the idea made a comeback in Bonn. What's behind that?

The DNA of these negotiations was this separation, this firewall. It's built into the Kyoto Protocol, and it's been an article of faith for all these years for developing countries, which in the period of time from Copenhagen [in 2009] to Paris, bit by bit, got pushed back and turned into something that was absolutely still a form of differentiation but not that sharp division. It's not that countries are trying to just throw grenades. They want to go back to that more comfortable system where they're not expected to do much.

And that's a problem?

In a world where somewhere between 60 percent and 65 percent of global emissions are coming from developing countries at this point, you can't have that. We shouldn't be fighting this battle all over again. We're going to have to fight it a little bit because people are pushing. We just need to have these guidelines, implementing measures, to be faithful to what happened in Paris.

What role did coal play at this conference? A White House coal event, for instance, provoked public protest in the conference halls.

I think the U.S. did a kind of stunt with that. It was designed to provoke the kind of reaction it got, I suppose. Coal continues to be a difficult political issue in Germany. It's a difficult political [issue in the U.S.], but it was a difficult issue before the election. There are not very many coal miners in either country, but there's a lot of this political attachment to that world and the symbolism of it.

Several developing countries pushed hard for a greater focus on climate efforts up to 2020. Why?

Pre-2020 is a hobby horse that a number of countries have been riding for several years now. One thing we know for sure is that issue is going to fade away before too long because it will become 2020. Obviously, what countries are doing now matters, but most countries, and this is all about developed countries, are doing what they pledged to do after Copenhagen. They have legislation, regulation, all of that. At least an element of this, I think, is a tactical way of trying to put developed countries on the defensive again. Pre-2020 is still seen as a period where the capacity to say you're the ones who are supposed to be acting is greater than post-2020.

Again, I think there's a certain amount of political theater going on.

This interview was edited for clarity and length.

This article first appeared on POLITICO.EU on Nov. 19, 2017.

To view online click here.

Back

Reports: PREPA chief resigns Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/17/2017 01:53 PM EDT

The head of the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority has resigned from the utility following extended power outages on the island in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria, according to news reports.

PREPA Director Ricardo Ramos had come under fire for signing a $300 million contract with Whitefish Energy to restore the power grid that was destroyed by the storm. That contract with Whitefish Energy, which had only two employees when the storm hit Puerto Rico, has come under scrutiny in Congress.

The resignation will take effect today. Neither PREPA nor the governor's office were immediately available for comment.

The FBI and the House Natural Resources Committee are probing PREPA's $300 million contract with Whitefish Energy, which had two employees when it won the no-bid contract to rebuild Puerto Rico's electric grid after the territory suffered a direct hit from Hurricane Maria in September.

To view online click here.

Back

Supreme Court to settle federal role in Texas-New Mexico water dispute Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/10/2017 11:38 AM EDT

The Supreme Court today said it will hear oral arguments about federal involvement in a long-running water dispute between Texas, New Mexico and Colorado.

The case involves allegations from Texas that irrigators in New Mexico are sucking up water from the Rio Grande that should flow downstream under a 1938 compact. The federal government intervened as an interested party, arguing that New Mexico's actions affect its obligation to deliver Rio Grande water to Mexico, and it is seeking a court order prohibiting New Mexico from continuing the water use.

The case's special master, New Orleans attorney Gregory Grimsal — a lawyer picked by the justices to hear the case — recommended earlier this year that the Supreme Court reject parts of the U.S.' claims that apply under the compact.

The federal government objected, arguing that it can bring claims under the compact even though it is not a member because it is a "third-party beneficiary." Meanwhile, Colorado argued that the U.S. claims should be limited to those brought under the 1906 Boundary Waters Convention between the U.S. and Mexico.

Grimsal did recommend the justices hear certain claims brought by the U.S. under federal reclamation laws.

The justices agreed to weigh only the issues determining what the federal government can contest, focusing on the "threshold" issue of the federal government's role in the case, not the underlying water use dispute, which likely will take several more years to resolve.

WHAT'S NEXT: Arguments likely will occur this winter, with a decision coming in the spring.

To view online click here.

Back

POLITICO Pro Florida: U.S. Supreme Court sets arguments in Florida v. Georgia water lawsuit Back

By Bruce Ritchie | 10/10/2017 11:47 AM EDT

The U.S. Supreme Court today said it is setting oral arguments in Florida's lawsuit against Georgia over the use of water from the Apalachicola River.

That means the court isn't inclined to act quickly on a special master's recommendation to dismiss the case.

Florida Gov. Rick Scott, in 2013, sued Georgia in the Supreme Court seeking a cap on Georgia's use of water from the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers, following the collapse of the Apalachicola Bay oyster population.

After a six-week hearing in the fall of 2016, court special master Ralph Lancaster last February recommended dismissal because Florida had not included the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in the lawsuit, which operates federal hydropower dams on the Chattahoochee River.

Even if water use by Georgia cities and farms was capped, there was no guarantee the Corps of Engineers would provide more water to Florida, Lancaster wrote.

But the court allowed the states to file exceptions in the case and other interested parties to file briefs.

In disputing Lancaster's recommendation, Florida told the Supreme Court that it represents the state's last legal remedy for saving the Apalachicola River and the oysters and people who depend on it.

But Georgia argued that Lancaster got it right and that Florida failed to show how potentially "catastrophic" cuts in water use would benefit the downstream state.

A timetable for hearings was not set by the court today.

View the Supreme Court's Oct. 10 list of orders here.

This article first appeared on POLITICO Pro Florida on Oct. 10, 2017.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump reverses hunting trophy decision, says he will review Back

By Akela Lacy | 11/17/2017 08:42 PM EDT

President Donald Trump on Friday reversed his own administration's decision to allow hunters to import elephant hunting trophies from two African countries, saying he will perform a review before making changes.

Earlier this week, the Fish and Wildlife Service announced it would allow imports of wildlife trophies, including elephants, from Zimbabwe and Zambia. The move sparked immediate outcry from conservation groups and even some of President Trump's most staunch supporters.

"Put big game trophy decision on hold until such time as I review all conservation facts," Trump tweeted Friday night. "Under study for years. Will update soon with Secretary Zinke. Thank you!"

After Trump's tweet, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke released a statement confirming the decision.

"President Trump and I have talked and both believe that conservation and healthy herds are critical. As a result, in a manner compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations, the issuing of permits is being put on hold as the decision is being reversed," the statement from Zinke reads.

Early Saturday, Trump retweeted prominent media figures who'd expressed their support for the policy reversal.

The original announcement made late Wednesday at the African Wildlife Consultative Forum in Tanzania received immediate backlash from conservationists and wildlife supporters, including groups like the Natural Resources Defense Council and Conservation International.

Fox News host Laura Ingraham, a vocal supporter of the president, also tweeted her opposition to the measure. "I don't understand how this move by @realDonaldTrump Admin will not INCREASE the gruesome poaching of elephants. Stay tuned," Ingraham tweeted Thursday.

The National Rifle Association's Institute for Legislative Action had applauded the move.

The decision, pending further review, would have reversed an Obama-era 2014 decision to ban all imports of elephant trophies from Zimbabwe and Zambia.

Put big game trophy decision on hold until such time as I review all conservation facts. Under study for years. Will update soon with Secretary Zinke. Thank you!

— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) November 18, 2017

Environmental groups applauded Trump's decision to review the policy change.

"It's great that public outrage has forced Trump to reconsider this despicable decision, but it takes more than a tweet to stop trophy hunters from slaughtering elephants and lions," said Tanya Sanerib, senior attorney with the Center for Biological Diversity, in response to Trump's apparent change of heart. "We need immediate federal action to reverse these policies and protect these amazing animals."

A spokesperson for the Center for Biological Diversity also noted that the Fish and Wildlife Service already began issuing permits to import trophies from lion hunting. That began over a month ago, according to ABC News.

During a press briefing Friday, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said the decision to reverse the ban came after a review that showed the original criteria for establishing it — insufficient data from Zimbabwe and Zambia on whether or not they were effectively managing wildlife — indicated that "both Zambia and Zimbabwe had met new standards, strict international conservation standards that allowed Americans to resume hunting in those countries."

Sanders added that "a ban on importing elephant ivory from all countries remains in place," emphasizing that the process of the review of the ban's criteria started under the Obama administration, which Trump also noted in his tweet.

The White House did not immediately reply to a request for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

Texas coastal spine left out of Trump disaster recovery request Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/17/2017 05:39 PM EDT

The White House's latest request for congressional disaster recovery funding does not include a $12 billion Houston area coastal barrier project sought by Texas Gov. Greg Abbott, handing a win to green groups that want the federal government to finish an environmental review on the project before it moves forward.

The White House on Friday asked lawmakers to approve $44 billion in additional funding to aid storm-ravaged areas in Texas, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Florida, including $12 billion for a flood mitigation program run by the Community Development Block Grant.

But the coastal barrier project that was part of Abbott's $61 billion storm recovery funding request in late October would not qualify for that program under the rules set by the White House because it would not address the damage caused by Hurricane Harvey in August. Instead the state's so-called coastal spine project aims to protect communities and infrastructure from the kind of storm surges last seen during Hurricane Ike in 2008 that caused about $30 billion in damages.

One of a few possible designs for the proposed coastal spine would extend a 10-mile seawall at Galveston Bay by another 50 miles and include massive floodgates that could be closed ahead of a storm to block the surges of water from pummeling the coastline.

Environmental advocates say they are not opposed to the project that's designed to protect coastal communities, critical marine and avian habitat, the Port of Houston, the Houston Ship Channel and oil refining and processing plants that are all vital to the state's economy and could create an environmental disaster if damaged.

But they say its not yet clear how a new barrier would affect the flow of water, and whether it could hurt marine and other ecosystems.

"We don't know what that would do to the ecology of the bay or to the shoreline there," said Amanda Fuller, National Wildlife Federation deputy director of Gulf of Mexico Restoration. "It's just a bunch of unknowns at this point."

The Army Corps of Engineers is performing a five-year study it expects to complete in 2021 on design options for the coastal spine that would avoid harming the marine and avian ecosystem of the Galveston Bay area that serves as a nursery for marine creatures before they mature and move into the Gulf of Mexico.

Bob Stokes, president of the Galveston Bay Foundation, which focuses on wetland preservation and restoration, said the project could be funded in the future through federal appropriations and he continues to "firmly believe that [the study] process is necessary before we fund the coastal spine."

Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn of Texas — who has placed a hold on President Donald Trump's nomination of Russell Vought to be deputy director of OMB until the Texas funding comes though — has called the president's latest recovery request "wholly inadequate."

Abbott's office did not respond to requests for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

Independent power sector worried by tax carve-out for regulated utilities Back

By Eric Wolff | 11/17/2017 05:23 PM EDT

A tax carve-out for regulated power utilities included in both the House and Senate tax bills doesn't apply to merchant power companies, which fear the provision could put them at a competitive disadvantage.

Both the Senate bill that advanced out of committee and the bill passed by the House Thursday would cap interest deductions for businesses at 30 percent of their adjusted income. That would serve to offset "bonus depreciation" that the two bills include that allow businesses to deduct the full cost of capital investments from their taxes.

But regulated utilities convinced congressional tax writers to insert an exemption in the bills for them — but didn't provide the same exemption for the merchant power companies or subsidiaries of regulated companies that sell power into the competitive wholesale markets.

"Since we compete with [regulated utilities], the tax provisions likely raise competitive issues which we will need to raise on the Hill," John Schelk, CEO of the Electric Power Supply Association, a trade association which represents the owners of merchant plants. "Needless to say, our argument will be we should get equal treatment."

Winning the exception to the interest deduction has been a high priority for all power providers, since building power plants requires huge capital expenditures, and the debt required to finance them extends for decades. Regulated utilities' expenses are covered by payments from ratepayers, and they prefer using straight-line depreciation that stretches over years for their assets rather than the bonus depreciation. That bonus depreciation can threaten their rate base, since state regulators often view the quicker depreciation as a tax benefit that must be returned to ratepayers.

But independent power producers, which include market-only power plant owners as well as divisions of companies like Dynegy, NRG Energy and FirstEnergy that run competitive power plants don't get that benefit — and they want it. Companies that own merchant power plants tend to have a lot of debt from past investments, but they aren't building many new plants.

"For them, expensing the capital is not a big deal right now, so it doesn't help them," said Toby Shea, an analyst with Moody's. "But the interest expense, which they have a lot of, would help them a lot."

And while regulated utilities and unregulated utilities do not generally compete inside markets like PJM or Texas, there are exceptions. For example, Schelk points out that power plants run by regulated utilities in South Carolina and North Carolina that sometimes sell power into PJM's market would be able to offer lower prices thanks to their exemption.

"Good example is right here in Virginia," Schelk said. "Virginia is in the PJM regional market, but Dominion has rate-based generation while there are also merchant generation IPP plants in [the state]. They compete to be dispatched in PJM and also compete for procurement of new projects."

Other analysts were skeptical that the bill as written would create a big problem for independent power providers. Christi Tezak, managing director for ClearView Energy Partners, said that if competitive arms of holding companies are treated the same as independent power producers, then it's hard to see how either has an advantage in markets.

But, utilities could win a change to the bill in conference or on the Senate floor that would expand the carve out to their competitive divisions.

"If [utility holding companies] get it and IPPs don't then there would be a competitive issue vis-à-vis the two different owners.," she said.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke demands 'immediate action' on 4 Interior nominees Back

By Anthony Adragna | 11/08/2017 10:59 AM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke sent a letter to Senate leadership demanding "immediate action" on four agency nominees, some of whom have waited four times as long as their predecessors for a vote.

"Several of our nominees for leadership positions have been waiting an exorbitant amount of time to be confirmed in the Senate," he wrote in the letter obtained today. "These delays are hampering DOI's ability to do the work of the people we are all supposed to be serving."

He called for the chamber to immediately process the nominations of Brenda Burman to lead Interior's Bureau of Reclamation, Susan Combs to be Interior's assistant secretary of policy management and budget, Joseph Balash to be assistant secretary for Land and Minerals Management and Ryan Nelson to be agency solicitor.

Zinke bashed senators for working "behind the guise of the cloakroom, putting random and unknown holds on these nominations," a practice he called "senseless and unexplainable."

To view online click here.

Back

Senate confirms Burman to lead Bureau of Reclamation Back

By Anthony Adragna | 11/16/2017 06:11 PM EDT

The Senate cleared Brenda Burman's nomination to run the Bureau of Reclamation by voice vote on Thursday.

"FINALLY! Excited to finally have Brenda Burman confirmed to lead @usbr," Secretary Ryan Zinke tweeted in response.

Burman's nomination to lead the nation's wholesale water and hydroelectric power provider got caught up in the battle over Zinke's national monument designation review.

Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin placed a hold on her nomination until he landed a meeting with Zinke to discuss the review and lifted it after that meeting took place earlier this week.

WHAT'S NEXT: Burman will assume her position running the Bureau of Reclamation.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Murray benefits big league under Perry grid plan — Oil's big tax bill win — FERC back at full strength after Senate confirmations — Lamar Smith announces retirement
Date: Friday, November 03, 2017 5:41:45 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 11/03/2017 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Ben Lefebvre, Darius Dixon, Nick Juliano and Esther Whieldon

ONE REALLY BIG FAN OF PERRY'S PUSH: Energy Secretary Rick Perry's push to require power markets to cover the costs to run coal and nuclear plants that are being squeezed economically has earned a powerful supporter in President Donald Trump's orbit in the form of coal magnate Bob Murray, Pro's Darius Dixon and Eric Wolff report. The proposal, which must be approved by FERC, would be mostly limited to plants in a stretch of the Midwest and Northeast where Murray's mining company, Murray Energy, is the predominant supplier. One stretch of the Rust Belt and Appalachia, overseen by an electricity market called the PJM Interconnection, accounts for roughly 44 percent of Murray's sales and Perry's rule was "certainly targeted at the PJM region," said Andy Ott, CEO of PJM.

An unlikely group of allies that includes environmental groups, the natural gas, wind and solar industries and the American Petroleum Institute has vocally opposed Perry's plan. "Customers get less than nothing while a few companies and their investors get a whole lot of something," Nora Mead Brownell, a Republican former electricity regulator, said of Perry's plan. "Money that gets spent there doesn't get invested in doing what you really need to do, which is upgrading the grid." Perry argues his proposal is an effort to ensure that the power network can withstand threats like terrorist attacks or severe weather.

Among the nation's roughly 280,000 megawatts of coal-fired power, Perry's rule is tightly written to affect only about 40,000 megawatts, according to POLITICO's analysis. Murray Energy acknowledged in written comments it has a "vital and critical interest" in whether the plan flies. "Given the current threats to those resources, Murray Energy, along with other coal producers and related industries ... is threatened with bankruptcy and significant economic harm if those resources are forced out of the market by unreasonable and unsupportable market pricing mechanisms," it wrote. Since Trump's swearing-in, Murray has made personal pleas for help in face-to-face meetings with Trump and DOE officials, including Perry and Brian McCormack, Perry's chief of staff.

WELCOME TO FRIDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and your state attorneys general turned senators are: Luther Strange, Sheldon Whitehouse, Tom Udall, John Cornyn, Kamala Harris, Heidi Heitkamp, Richard Blumenthal and Catherine Cortez Masto. For today: It was 60 years ago that the Russians sent the first animal into space. What was she and what was her name? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to adragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

Pro subscribers: Are you getting all the content you want? Make sure your keywords are up to date and customized via your settings page at <http://politico.pro/1iDALk9>.

FOR YOUR AFTERNOON RADAR: Three major scientific reports acknowledging manmade climate change are expected to be released today by the Trump administration, Pro's Emily Holden reports. They include: two volumes of the National Climate Assessment and a draft of the State of the Carbon Cycle Report. The documents will go against numerous public statements by Trump Cabinet officials refusing to accept mainstream climate science.

OIL'S TAX WIN: Along with keeping most of their existing incentives, multinational oil companies won a new tax break that would cost the government nearly $3.9 billion over the next decade in the latest GOP tax proposal. The House bill's elimination of a tax on "foreign base company oil related income" received relatively little attention in the initial flurry of tax-bill coverage Thursday, and it caught even some seasoned policy-watchers off guard. The tax typically applies to income from refineries, pipelines and other assets near multinational oil companies' overseas operations, according to a research note from ClearView Energy Partners. The industry has long complained that it is being treated unfairly compared to other types of industries, such as manufacturing. "FBCORI surprised us, but it appears to reinforce the pro-fossil bent of House Republican leadership," ClearView analysts wrote Thursday night.

Two thumbs up: The oil industry also loves the 20 percent corporate rate outlined in the proposal and is happy to see no changes to two provisions that favor its high-capital, low-operating-cost business model (the intangible drilling cost deduction and well depletion allowance, for those paying attention at home). Meanwhile, a pair of credits/deductions the House plan does jettison won't shave too much off the bottom line for most companies, industry folks tell ME. In a statement, API President Jack Gerard said "significant proposals, like lowering the corporate tax rate and strong cost-recovery provisions, will help ensure that our tax system is smart, fair and pro-growth to benefit American consumers, businesses, and the economy."

Horse-trading ahead: Release of the House bill is a starting point for tough negotiations in the weeks and months to come, in which energy provisions will, admittedly, play a relatively minor role. One House idea already encountering headwinds from the upper chamber is the proposal to slash the value of the production tax credit. "The wind energy production tax credit is already being phased out under a compromise brokered in 2015. It shouldn't be reopened," Sen. Chuck Grassley said in a statement. "I'm working within the Senate Finance Committee to see that the commitment made to a multi-year phase-out remains intact."

FULL HOUSE: For the first time in more than two years, when Phil Moeller left the agency, FERC is on the path to having all five leadership seats filled again. Kevin McIntyre, President Donald Trump's pick to lead the agency, and Democratic commissioner Rich Glick, were confirmed Thursday afternoon. The pair still need to be officially sworn in to seal the deal, but they're both locals so we expect them to take the oath pretty soon. McIntyre and Glick have terms running through 2023 and 2022, respectively.

The hot potato: FERC Chairman Neil Chatterjee passes the baton. During Kentucky native's brief tenure in the agency's center seat, Perry lobbed — as former FERC Chairman Pat Wood has called it — "a scud missile of the NOPR" at regulators, directing them to act on a controversial plan to prop up coal and nuclear power plants. FERC is taking reply comments through Tuesday, and the agency is expected to stick to the Dec. 11 deadline to take some "final action." Given the particularly political lens FERC has been seen through over the past few months, FERC World will also be trying to read between the lines of McIntyre's staffing decisions and how he addresses the agency's independence.

Filling out DOE: The Senate sent Perry a few extra hands to run the Energy Department. Paul Dabbar and Mark Menezes were confirmed as undersecretaries of science and energy, respectively. Steven Winberg, Trump's pick to lead the agency's fossil energy office, also got a thumbs-up from lawmakers.

Attractions yet to come: William Wehrum's nomination to run EPA's air office may get a Senate floor vote as soon as next week after Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell filed cloture Thursday, Pro's Alex Guillén reports.

Oh, and: Trump announced late Thursday his nomination of Linda Capuano, a fellow at Rice University's Baker Institute for Public Policy's Center for Energy Studies, to run the Energy Information Administration. She's previously been a vice president at both Marathon Oil Co. and Advanced Energy Industries. Biography here.

SCIENCE CHAIRMAN CALLS IT QUILTS: Noting his House Science chairmanship runs out next year, Lamar Smith announced his retirement Thursday. Since ascending to the top of the science panel in 2013, the controversial Texan has tussled with academics, scientific organizations and government regulators, with Obama-era figures from the National Science Foundation, EPA and DOE among those who ended up in his crosshairs. The vocal climate science skeptic undermined the Obama administration's efforts to address climate change and elevated the minority of scientists who question that human activity drives the problem to equal footing as others. Pro's Darius Dixon has more here.

Smith's take: "The time is the right time. No regrets. Well, I should quote Frank Sinatra in 'My Way' where he said 'regrets I have a few but too few to mention,'" he told reporters.

Science organizations and green groups welcome his exit: Andrew Rosenberg with the Union of Concerned Scientists expressed hope his exit would allow the science community to rebuild its relationship with Congress. "I hope that the next representative to serve as chair will return this committee to its intended purpose—strengthening America's scientific enterprise, providing thoughtful and constructive oversight of federal policy and protecting the health and safety of the people Congress is supposed to serve," he said.

Who might the next chairman be? Current Vice Chairman Frank Lucas didn't rule out a bid to succeed Smith but noted Financial Services Chairman Jeb Hensarling is also departing Congress. "Life's all about options, right?" he quipped to reporters.

IT'S LAW: Trump signed into law legislation S. 190 \(115\) that exempts certain equipment that needs to remain on at all times from energy use restrictions for an additional six years.

STOP ME IF YOU'VE HEARD THIS BEFORE: Two corn-state Republican EPW senators — Deb Fischer and Joni Ernst — are publicly undecided about Kathleen Hartnett White's nomination to run the White House Council on Environmental Quality after meeting with her over past critical comments toward the Renewable Fuel Standard. "I am withholding judgement right now," Fischer told reporters Thursday. A spokeswoman for Ernst said she plans to ask additional questions on White's views at her Nov. 8 confirmation hearing. Remember: Just one Republican defection sinks a nomination in the tightly divided EPW panel.

What has White said about the RFS? She has been far more vocally opposed than even Bill Wehrum, whose selection to run the air office was briefly delayed over the issue. Back in July 2013, she wrote: "It is time to repeal the renewable fuel standard — not to expand or entrench this market distortion." White also wrote its importance to the Iowa presidential caucuses explains the durability of the "counterproductive and ethically dubious" RFS in her book.

She's repeatedly argued biofuels are creating a "global food crisis" and urged Congress to end the program's "destructive food-as-fuel folly."

Fears of a repeat from some: Jim Inhofe told ME "there's reason to suspect" the bloc of biofuels backers might withhold support for White over her RFS stance and called their efforts to impede the Wehrum nomination "a little extreme." But Chairman John Barrasso, as always, projected confidence when asked if he worried they'd derail the confirmation process: "I'm committed to the president's nominees and we're going to go ahead with the hearing next week."

WITH SOME HELP FROM HIS FRIENDS: In the 24 hours before he sent his hotly anticipated national monument report to the White House, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke called just one non-GOP lawmaker — Maine Independent Sen. Angus King, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports, citing copies of Zinke's August and September calendars. Among those he called on Aug. 23 were Sens. Orrin Hatch, Dean Heller and Murkowski, Reps. Rob Bishop and Greg Walden, and the Republican governors of Utah, Maine and New Mexico.

Speaking of which, six green groups are suing Interior and the White House Council on Environmental Quality for copies of Zinke's national monuments report and related review records. The suit, filed Thursday by Earthjustice on behalf of the Sierra Club, Natural Resources Defense Council, The Wilderness Society and three other groups, say the agency has not responded to their public records requests.

MORE QUESTIONS ON WHITEFISH: Senate Homeland Security ranking member Claire McCaskill released a set of letters to FEMA, the Army Corps of Engineers and Whitefish Energy seeking additional information on the now-cancelled grid restoration contract. Among other things, she alleges the Puerto Rican utility may have already used FEMA funds to pay Whitefish, notes the Army Corps also considered using the tiny Montana-based company and questions a similar $200 million contract with Oklahoma-based Cobra Acquisitions.

9/11 invoked in EPA's Puerto Rican response: New York Rep. Jerry Nadler slammed EPA's assurances that drinking water around Superfund sites in Puerto Rico is safe to drink as "eerily similar" to the agency's response following the 9/11 terrorist attacks. "This is exactly what we got from EPA after 9/11... and thousands of people are sick and hundreds of people are dead because [air quality levels] weren't fine. And that's why I'm skeptical," he said. Video here.

MAIL CALL! GET SERIOUS ABOUT TRANSPORTATION-RELATED EMISSIONS: The New England Power Generators Association, along with several environmental and science groups, asked four governors — Massachusetts' Charlie Baker, Connecticut's Dan Malloy, Rhode Island's Gina Raimondo and Vermont's Phi Scott — to develop and implement a "regional, market-based policy" to address greenhouse gas emissions from the transportation sector. Letter link here.

Waiver please? Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf asked Pruitt in a letter Thursday to waiver RFS volume requirements. "I request that you reduce the 2017 and 2018 volumes to a level that avoids the severe economic harm experienced by the Northeast region of the United States as a result of the high costs of purchasing RINs to comply with the RFS," he wrote.

Higher park fees? Please no! Ninety House Democrats, led by Arizona's Tom O'Halleran, sent Zinke a letter Thursday urging him not to follow through with plans to raise entrance fees to 17 national parks. "Raising the entrance fees to these popular destinations will make our public lands inaccessible to hardworking families, and it will devastate tribal and rural economies that support tourism," they wrote.

NEW SCIENTIST WHISTLEBLOWER HOTLINE LAUNCHED: 314 Action invited 36,638 government scientists at EPA, NASA and the National Science Foundation to anonymously report examples of science being undermined. Website with more information here.

PRICE SHOCKER! Resources for the Future released a study Thursday finding releases from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve can have substantial effects on oil prices and spreads. Link here.

POINTS FOR HONESTY: Via Rolling Stone's Matt Laslo: "I don't think frankly that you need an EPA period," Rep. Liz Cheney tells me... "98% of the environmental regulation being done effectively at the state level that's where it ought to be," Cheney continued

WHO'S GRAMIN': Jack Gerard, the president and chief executive of the American Petroleum Institute, has joined Instagram, which the association says makes him the first head of a Washington trade group who's active on the platform. You can check out his Instas of children and the Oval Office here (h/t POLITICO Influence).

QUICK HITS:

— The Puerto Rico Contract's Lack Of Transparency? It's Not Unusual. International Business Times.

— EPA's Pruitt and staff to attend chemical industry meeting at luxury resort next week. Washington Post.

— Clash emerges over Puerto Rico power restoration. AP.

— Kentucky coal report shows no sustained job rebound so far under Trump. Lexington Herald-Leader.

— US coal's upturn favours open-pit mines in western states. Financial Times.

— Trump Team to Promote Fossil Fuels and Nuclear Power at Bonn Climate Talks. New York Times.

HAPPENING TODAY

12:30 p.m. — "Dr. Ben Zaitchik on Water, Food, and Energy in the Eastern Nile Basin," Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies , 1619 Massachusetts Avenue NW, Rome Auditorium

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/11/murray-benefits-big-league-under-perry-grid-plan-025368>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Major climate science reports coming Friday Back

By Emily Holden | 11/02/2017 06:19 PM EDT

The Trump administration will release three major scientific reports on Friday acknowledging manmade climate change, according to a source familiar with the studies.

The U.S. Global Change Research Program will publish two volumes of the National Climate Assessment, which is required by law to be issued every four years and expected in late 2018. The first volume is a final version of the Climate Science Special Report. The second is a draft for public comment that focuses on impacts of climate change on humans and the environment.

USGCRP also will post a draft of the State of the Carbon Cycle Report, a supporting document.

An early version of the science report, published by the New York Times in August, found that human activity is the driving force behind increasing temperatures that are already intensifying extreme weather and causing sea-level rise.

The reports will contradict President Donald Trump and cabinet officials like EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and Energy Secretary Rick Perry, who have expressed doubts about mainstream climate science. Some green advocates had worried the administration might suppress the research.

The source told POLITICO that the reports, which include the work of multiple agencies and are reviewed by outside scientists, are expected to stick to the science, avoiding discussions of politics or mitigation policies.

USGCRP was not available to comment.

To view online click here.

Back

House tax bill slashes value of wind energy tax credit Back

By Eric Wolff | 11/02/2017 02:20 PM EDT

The House tax bill released Thursday would substantially reduce the value of a key wind energy incentive, tighten requirements on what renewable energy companies have to do to qualify for tax credits, extend a nuclear energy tax break, and restore support for clean energy technologies that had been "orphaned" from an earlier tax extenders law.

The bill also eliminates an electric vehicle tax credit and jettisons some little-used oil industry tax breaks — as well as getting rid of the more significant domestic production tax deduction enjoyed by oil companies and other manufacturers.

The wind industry was quick to condemn the changes to its tax treatment.

"Despite comments to the contrary, this proposal reneges on the tax reform deal that was already agreed to, and would impose a retroactive tax hike on an entire industry," Tom Kiernan, CEO of the American Wind Energy Association, said in a statement. "The House proposal would pull the rug out from under 100,000 U.S. wind workers and 500 American factories, including some of the fastest growing jobs in the country. We expect members of the House and Senate to oppose any proposal that fails to honor that commitment, and we will fight hard to see that wind energy continues to work for America."

Here are some highlights from the text and a section-by-section summary provided by the Ways and Means committee.

— PTC cutbacks: The bill would reduce the value of the Production Tax Credit to 1.5 cents per kilowatt-hour, the level it was set at in 1992, rather than indexing it for inflation. That would reduce its value far beyond the terms of a tax credit phase-out that was implemented with bipartisan support in 2015. Wind farms and other eligible projects that begin construction this year can now claim a 1.9 cents/kWh credit, down from 2.3 cents/kWh for projects that started last year. The credit is scheduled to disappear for projects built after 2019 under current law, a schedule maintained in the House bill.

Developers also would face tougher requirements to claim the credit, the value of which is determined by when construction begins. The House bill requires a "continuous program of construction" until a facility comes online in order to qualify for the credit, eliminating provisions of existing law that allow developers to make "safe harbor" investments to qualify. The Joint Committee on Taxation says eliminating the inflation-adjustment and tightening the construction requirements will save $12.3 billion over 10 years, according to the bill summary.

— ITC repealed after 2027, orphan credits revived : The House bill extends the investment tax credit for a set of "orphaned" technologies left out of the 2015 legislation phasing out the ITC and PTC over five years. Fuel cells, small wind turbines, combined heat and power systems and microturbines can now claim the ITC until Jan. 1, 2022, with the credits phasing down at the same rate as the solar ITC. But what was to be a permanent 10 percent tax credit for solar investments will now terminate at the end of 2026. The House bill includes similar "continuous construction" requirements for the ITC as for the PTC. The changes would cost the government $1.2 billion in reduced revenues over 10 years, according to JCT estimates cited in the bill summary.

— Advanced nuclear tax credit extended: The bill extends a tax credit for advanced nuclear projects, allowing the secretary of Treasury to transfer unused credits after 2020, which was the in-service deadline under current law. The extension has long been a priority for South Carolina Republican Sens. Lindsey Graham and Tim Scott, among others. The credits would cost $400 million over 10 years.

— Utilities keep interest deduction: The bill would change how much loan interest some businesses can deduct from their taxes, while allowing them to take advantage of full expensing of capital investments. However, it excludes regulated utilities from the new rules, providing a win for the industry. Eric Grey, director of government relations for the Edison Electric Institute, a trade group, told POLITICO in September that losing the interest tax deduction was a major concern for utilities. Overall, JCT estimates the deduction-and-expensing changes would save the government $172 billion over 10 years.

— No more 199: The House bill would eliminate the domestic manufacturing credit known as section 199. Current law allows certain oil and gas companies to claim a 6 percent tax deduction, and other manufacturers can claim a 9 percent deduction, but the House bill would strip section 199 from the tax code starting next year. Doing so would save $95.2 billion over 10 years.

— Minor oil credits repealed: The bill repeals two small oil industry credits that have barely been used because they only kick in when commodity prices are low. Repealing the enhanced oil recovery credit would cost the government about $200 million over 10 years, while eliminating the marginal well production credit would have no effect on revenues.

— EVs lose credit: The bill repeals a $7,500 tax credit for electric vehicles. It is part of a slew of tax credits, along with a mortgage credit, and an adoption credit, that the bill proposes repealing. Repealing all of the credits would save $4 billion over 10 years, but the summary does not include a JCT estimate for the electric vehicle credit alone.

— Biodiesel, CCS missing: An expired biodiesel blenders credit was not restored, something likely to become an issue in the Senate where Sen. Chuck Grassley wants it revived as a producers credit; and a credit for carbon capture and sequestration did not get in the text, despite having bipartisan support.

To view online click here.

Back

Senate tees up Wehrum vote next week Back

By Alex Guillén | 11/02/2017 05:56 PM EDT

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell filed cloture today on William Wehrum's nomination to run EPA's air office, setting up a floor vote for as early as next week.

Wehrum's committee vote last week was held up briefly over a spat between corn-state Republicans and an EPA proposal to weaken biodiesel mandates. EPA subsequently promised not to roll back the mandates and Wehrum cleared committee on an 11-10 party-line vote.

It is not clear precisely when the Wehrum vote will occur.

McConnell also filed cloture on nominees to the Transportation Department, Justice Department and National Labor Relations Board. A vote on the DOJ nominee is slated for noon on Tuesday.

To view online click here.

Back

Lamar Smith won't seek reelection to House Back

By Darius Dixon | 11/02/2017 03:40 PM EDT

Rep. Lamar Smith, the controversial chairman of the House Science Committee, announced Thursday that he will leave Congress when his term ends in 2018.

The 16-term Texas Republican is one of the longest-serving members of the state's congressional delegation, and has often tussled with academics, scientific organizations and government regulators since become Science chairman in 2013. In a letter to constituents, Smith said there were several reasons he is choosing not to seek reelection next year, including that he will complete his term as chairman of the House Science Committee. Smith said he is looking forward to spending more time with his grandchildren, and "I hope to find other ways to stay involved in politics."

This year, Smith has been instrumental in resurfacing old allegations about Russian efforts to fund activists opposed to oil and gas drilling, an effort critics say is designed to distract from controversy over whether any members of President Donald Trump's campaign were involved with Russia's efforts to disrupt last year's election. On Tuesday, he wrote to executives at Facebook, Twitter and Alphabet requesting information about Russian purchases of anti-fracking ads on social media platforms.

Smith said he looks forward to staying busy.

"With over a year remaining in my term, there is still much to do," he wrote in the letter Thursday. "There is legislation to enact, dozens of hearings to hold, and hundreds of votes to cast."

During the Obama administration, officials at the National Science Foundation, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Energy Department all found themselves in Smith's cross-hairs. The 69-year-old lawmaker, who previously chaired the House Judiciary Committee, also made regular attempts to expand his committee's jurisdiction over cybersecurity to launch far-reaching probes targeting the New York Federal Reserve, Healthcare.gov and the companies that provided software to Hillary Clinton's email server.

He antagonized the broader science community when he touted a number of NSF grants as "frivolous" and sought to restructure how different areas of science were funded by the federal government.

Smith has also used his perch on the Science panel to undermine the Obama administration's efforts to address climate change, elevating several global warming skeptics to question the agreement among the vast majority of climate scientists that humans are the main driver of the phenomenon.

Smith's 21st District, which takes in parts of Austin and San Antonio as well as rural counties to the west, has been solidly Republican in the past. Mitt Romney won nearly 60 percent of the vote there in 2012.

But Trump got 52 percent to Hillary Clinton's 42 percent in the district in 2016, and several Democrats saw an opportunity to challenge Smith before he announced his retirement. One Democrat, veteran Joseph Kopser, outraised Smith in the third quarter and has over $219,000 in his campaign account.

"The people of Texas are losing a dedicated public servant and skilled legislator, but we are confident they will select another conservative Republican like Chairman Smith who shares their values," said National Republican Congressional Committee Chairman Steve Stivers (R-Ohio).

Smith' relationship with Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, the top Democrat on the Science Committee and a fellow Texan, has been rocky for years. Both lawmakers are soft-spoken and have served together in Congress for more than two decades. But Johnson has accused Smith of bringing "disrepute to our institution" and turning his panel into "little more than an arm of the Republican National Committee," particularly when he started issuing subpoenas in 2013, the first in 21 years.

Smith has subpoenaed the EPA for health data used for clean air regulations, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under the suspicion that a scientific paper on climate change was mishandled.

Scott Bland and John Bresnahan contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Lamar Smith plows through criticism to create 'activist' Science Committee Back

By Darius Dixon | 08/12/2016 05:03 AM EDT

The escalating subpoena showdown between Rep. Lamar Smith and two state attorneys general is the culmination of a long-running effort by the Science chairman to assert unclaimed territory and turn a once-sleepy panel into an investigative powerhouse.

The Texas Republican, who took over as chairman of the House Science, Space and Technology Committee in 2013, has tried to shift federal science dollars toward basic research and away from ambitious efforts to reshape the energy system that he feels the private sector should be tackling instead. But Smith has earned more attention for a series of confrontations with scientists, activists and public officials that have raised the public profile of what has traditionally been a B-list committee.

Smith accuses the Obama administration and environmental activists of politicizing scientists' findings about climate change in an effort to expand the size of government and more aggressively regulate businesses. Democrats say Smith is doing the bidding of his donors in the fossil fuel industry to shield companies from having to pay to reduce their carbon emissions.

The National Science Foundation, NOAA, EPA and the Energy Department all have found themselves in Smith's crosshairs, and the 69-year-old lawmaker has seized on his jurisdiction over cybersecurity to launch far-reaching probes targeting the New York Federal Reserve, Healthcare.gov and the companies that provided software to Hillary Clinton's email server.

When Congress reconvenes next month, Smith will have to decide whether to escalate his showdown with the AGs of New York and Massachusetts, both of whom rejected subpoenas from Smith seeking records related to their own investigations into whether ExxonMobil misled the public about climate change. Smith also has subpoenaed several nonprofit groups who worked with the AGs. The chairman acknowledges his request is likely unprecedented but says his goal is to protect scientists from political interference.

"It's bigger than Exxon. It's the whole idea of trying to silent dissent and trying to silent what I consider to be legitimate scientific skepticism maybe," Smith told POLITICO last month in a wide-ranging interview in his personal office. "But they clearly are trying to intimidate individuals and trying to stop them from claiming that the science is not settled and that's about as basic as it comes when you talk about academic freedom, scientific right of speech or whatever."

Smith's critics argue that it's the chairman who is guilty of using intimidation tactics.

"He's using the chairmanship of the Science Committee, in my view, not only in a very partisan way but as a political tool, not really in consultation with or listening to the science community," said Andrew Rosenberg, a former regional administrator at NOAA and professor of natural resources at the University of New Hampshire.

"He's basically turned the entire discussion around the Exxon issue on its head," added Rosenberg, who now directs the Center for Science and Democracy with the Union of Concerned Scientists, which is refusing to comply with a subpoena from Smith. "That somehow we, the Union of Concerned Scientists and other organizations and state attorneys general, are trying to stifle scientific speech when in fact what we are saying is that Exxon did that — they suppressed the science that they had internally."

Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, a fellow Texan, has excoriated Smith's work from her post as the panel's top Democrat.

Both lawmakers are soft-spoken and have served together in Congress for more than two decades, which makes her criticism all the more biting. In a series of dismissive letters and statements challenging his various investigations, Johnson has accused Smith of bringing "disrepute to our institution" and turning his panel into "little more than an arm of the Republican National Committee."

Johnson first felt that Smith was veering off-course in 2013 when he issued the committee's first subpoena in 21 years, hoping to get the EPA to turn over health data it used for its clean air regulations even though the agency said the information belonged to Harvard and the American Cancer Society.

Last year, Smith subpoenaed records from NOAA under the suspicion that a scientific paper refuting a widely touted "hiatus" in global warming was mishandled because it did not incorporate satellite data. Smith accused the agency of relying on "clearly cherry-picked" data to produce "politically correct science." Smith says an anonymous whistleblower told the committee the paper was rushed and the episode has made him question the peer review process at Science, which has long enjoyed a reputation as one of the most respected journals.

NOAA says the paper's nine authors did not incorporate satellite measurements because they were studying a dataset of land stations, ships and buoys at sea, and 23 former NOAA scientists, who have collectively worked under every president since Richard Nixon, say Smith's charge is baseless. Moreover, after corrections were made to satellite data this spring, they too refuted the hiatus, although there's still debate over the degree of warming. There also haven't been any complaints filed with NOAA's anonymous scientific integrity system, the agency said.

Smith's critics say the episode exemplifies the chilling effect that such inquiries can have on the scientific community.

"Anybody can look at the paper, the methods and the data, and the results. And they can disagree with them or can come up with a different analysis — knock yourself out. That's the scientific process," Rosenberg said. "Now, we're going to investigate somebody's emails because you didn't like the answer? Tell them to take a month out of their time, compile everything you've ever written with the word 'climate' in it? That's not supporting the science work of the country."

Given the long odds of Democrats flipping control of the House next year, Smith is likely to return to his post, where he is eligible for one more term as chairman under party rules and could try to stretch his portfolio even further.

"Certainly, we are taking initiatives that haven't been taken on before, but I feel like I'm in Congress to do more than just vote," Smith said in the interview. "I want to maximize the potential of the committee, simple as that. And one way to maximize the potential is to explore the jurisdiction that we have."

Those following the Science Committee scratched their heads when Smith pinged the New York Fed about a Bangladeshi "cyberheist." subpoenaed Healthcare.gov, and sent letters to companies involved with the server Hillary Clinton used while secretary of State.

But the Science Committee has jurisdiction over federal cybersecurity programs as well as cyber standards developed by the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

People weren't thinking about cybersecurity 15 years ago, said David Stonner, who led NSF's congressional affairs for 16 years. "And the fact that it has become a huge issue opens the door for whoever on the Hill wants to be responsible for oversight of this issue, rather than oversight of just an agency."

Smith says he takes a special point of pride in all the buzz around the committee's work.

"I will say that one of my goals when I became chairman was to make the committee a committee that attracted members — that people wanted to be a part of what we were doing," Smith said. When he took over the panel, he said, it was the first time in 20 years that there were more Republican lawmakers who wanted to be on the committee than there were spots for.

Rep. Randy Weber, a two-term Texas Republican who chairs a Science subcommittee, was attracted to Smith's panel by an opportunity to represent his constituents who work at NASA's nearby Johnson Space Center and to scrutinize activities across the federal government.

"Chairman Smith does a great job attracting new members, because he gives every member an opportunity to take a leading role in committee action," Weber said in an emailed statement. Smith, he added, "consistently reinforces the principle of good governance and fiscal responsibility over the federal agencies the committee oversees."

Johnson, on the other hand, is convinced that Smith has driven the committee off the reservation.

"I don't expect that we're going to agree on everything. But it's really not a political committee," said Johnson, who has served on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee in addition to the science panel over her nearly 24 years in Congress. "For the most part I'd bragged for all these years that I was on two committees that didn't get into the politics and would stick to the issues. ... I can no longer say that."

For all his activism, Smith is not one to display a bombastic personality. He doesn't raise his voice and says that he doesn't let the many critiques of his leadership sink in.

Oddly enough, Smith has an unlikely advocate on the Science Committee: Rep. Alan Grayson, a controversial left-wing Senate candidate uninhibited in his criticisms of Republicans.

"The chairman is a fair-minded, honest person," the Florida Democrat said of Smith. "In his heart he is a legislator, not an ideologue."

Smith appears to be a man who truly loves science — he draws inspiration from an "ultra-deep" field photograph of galaxies taken by the Hubble Space Telescope hanging near his desk, and talks fondly of taking physics and astronomy in college — but the Texan is considerably out of step with the larger science community on climate change.

He considers himself a "climate skeptic" who wants more detail in the science behind global warming — a position that distinguishes him from someone like GOP presidential nominee Donald Trump, who dismisses the issue as a hoax.

"I think human activity does have an impact on climate," Smith said. "I don't think we know exactly how much of an impact and I think that is a separate legitimate debate despite what some people might suggest."

To Smith, in clamoring for government programs to reduce carbon emissions, policymakers have lost faith in technology.

"Throughout our nation's history technology has always solved our problems and why suddenly now we don't think technology will solve our problems, I don't know," he said, adding that he supports more spending on R&D for "coming up with technological breakthroughs to address climate change."

Alongside his battle with NOAA, Smith ruffled feathers in the broader science community when he touted a number of NSF grants as "frivolous."

"The purpose of the science committees should be to help research progress, to get the barriers out of the way, not to generate barriers," said Rush Holt, a physicist and former Democratic congressman who is the CEO for the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Holt, who said he didn't have "personal bone to pick" with Smith, said, "it was not lost on the science community that the House Science Committee, several times in the couple of years, has substituted political opinion for peer review."

Basic R&D is the bread-and-butter issue of the Science Committee, and Smith's support of it isn't unusual for a Republican. But he still managed to ruffle the ranks of the science community last year in his efforts to renew the America COMPETES Act, a major piece of research legislation. The bill cut spending levels for renewables and earth science, parceled out funds depending on preferred fields and would require NSF grants to include an explanation of why they're in the "national interest."

Smith and his staff say that Congress has a responsibility to set priorities, and to some degree believe previous Science committee leaders have treated the science community with kid gloves even though most of them are accepting taxpayer cash.

"I think that there was initially pushback by academics and other researchers because they weren't used to anybody conducting any kind of oversight as to how the taxpayer dollars were being spent," Smith said. "And I consider that ... to be my obligation and responsibility."

A member of Smith's staff put it more bluntly: "Back in the good old days, very often, chairmen of the Science Committee were shoveling gold off the stagecoach. We're not in that era right now. We're in an era of very tight fiscal constraints and in general, if you can maintain the fraction of the federal spending dollars that basic research gets, it's a win every year."

To view online click here.

Back

Lamar Smith won't seek reelection to House Back

By Darius Dixon | 11/02/2017 03:49 PM EDT

Rep. Lamar Smith, the controversial chairman of the House Science Committee, announced Thursday that he will leave Congress when his term ends in 2018.

The 16-term Texas Republican is one of the longest-serving members of the state's congressional delegation, and has often tussled with academics, scientific organizations and government regulators since become Science chairman in 2013. In a letter to constituents, Smith said there were several reasons he is choosing not to seek reelection next year, including that he will complete his term as chairman of the House Science Committee. Smith said he is looking forward to spending more time with his grandchildren, and "I hope to find other ways to stay involved in politics."

This year, Smith has been instrumental in resurfacing old allegations about Russian efforts to fund activists opposed to oil and gas drilling, an effort critics say is designed to distract from controversy over whether any members of President Donald Trump's campaign were involved with Russia's efforts to disrupt last year's election. On Tuesday, he wrote to executives at Facebook, Twitter and Alphabet requesting information about Russian purchases of anti-fracking ads on social media platforms.

Smith said he looks forward to staying busy.

"With over a year remaining in my term, there is still much to do," he wrote in the letter Thursday. "There is legislation to enact, dozens of hearings to hold, and hundreds of votes to cast."

During the Obama administration, officials at the National Science Foundation, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Energy Department all found themselves in Smith's cross-hairs. The 69-year-old lawmaker, who previously chaired the House Judiciary Committee, also made regular attempts to expand his committee's jurisdiction over cybersecurity to launch far-reaching probes targeting the New York Federal Reserve, Healthcare.gov and the companies that provided software to Hillary Clinton's email server.

He antagonized the broader science community when he touted a number of NSF grants as "frivolous" and sought to restructure how different areas of science were funded by the federal government.

Smith has also used his perch on the Science panel to undermine the Obama administration's efforts to address climate change, elevating several global warming skeptics to question the agreement among the vast majority of climate scientists that humans are the main driver of the phenomenon.

Smith's 21st District, which takes in parts of Austin and San Antonio as well as rural counties to the west, has been solidly Republican in the past. Mitt Romney won nearly 60 percent of the vote there in 2012.

But Trump got 52 percent to Hillary Clinton's 42 percent in the district in 2016, and several Democrats saw an opportunity to challenge Smith before he announced his retirement. One Democrat, veteran Joseph Kopser, outraised Smith in the third quarter and has over $219,000 in his campaign account.

"The people of Texas are losing a dedicated public servant and skilled legislator, but we are confident they will select another conservative Republican like Chairman Smith who shares their values," said National Republican Congressional Committee Chairman Steve Stivers (R-Ohio).

Smith' relationship with Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, the top Democrat on the Science Committee and a fellow Texan, has been rocky for years. Both lawmakers are soft-spoken and have served together in Congress for more than two decades. But Johnson has accused Smith of bringing "disrepute to our institution" and turning his panel into "little more than an arm of the Republican National Committee," particularly when he started issuing subpoenas in 2013, the first in 21 years.

Smith has subpoenaed the EPA for health data used for clean air regulations, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under the suspicion that a scientific paper on climate change was mishandled.

Scott Bland and John Bresnahan contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Calendar: Zinke primarily called GOP lawmakers, governors ahead of sending monuments report Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/02/2017 07:20 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke called mostly Republican lawmakers and governors the day before he sent his national monument report to the White House, according to copies of Zinke's August and September calendars the Interior Department released today.

Zinke's calls on Aug. 23 included Sens. Lisa Murkowski, Orrin Hatch and Dean Heller, Reps. Rob Bishop and Greg Walden, and the governors of Utah, Maine and New Mexico, among others. Sen. Angus King (I-Maine) was the only non-Republican to receive a call that day, less than 24 hours before Zinke submitted his draft monument recommendations. Zinke met earlier in the month with Democratic Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley.

White House officials involved in the monument discussions included energy advisor Mike Catanzaro, Intergovernmental Affairs Director Justin Clark, Domestic Policy Council Director Andrew Bromberg, Cabinet Secretary Bill McGinley and White House deputy chief of staff Rick Dearborn, according to Zinke's calendar entries.

The calendar also showed that Zinke was off for two weeks earlier in August, just before the report was due. The secretary's wife, Lolita, posted photos to social media of the couple vacationing in the Mediterranean, drawing flak from critics who said he was not sufficiently focused on the monument review.

Only a few meetings were listed in August and September involving energy issues including one with oil and gas exploration company Hilcorp Energy CEO Jeffrey Hildebrand and some on more general topics such as sage grouse in early August and another on "solar emphasis areas" in early September.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Offshore wind faces serious legal test — Trump team won't rule out international energy sanctions — Signs of life in filling political agency vacancies
Date: Monday, May 15, 2017 5:49:57 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 05/15/2017 05:43 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff, Esther Whieldon and Anca Gurzu

OFFSHORE WIND'S BIGGEST HURDLE? Legal action from several cities, fisheries and fishery associations in New England, New York and New Jersey is threatening to delay the growth of the nascent offshore wind industry, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. The suit threatens to set back a clean energy industry that has found itself in the new administration's good graces. Notwithstanding President Donald Trump's past battles with offshore wind farms and his work to reverse Obama-era climate change policies, his administration has so far supported offshore wind projects. Of more than 14,000 megawatts of offshore wind power installed globally, just 30 megawatts are so far operating in the U.S., but wind developers are eager to grow that number. BOEM is considering additional lease sales in Massachusetts, New York, California, South Carolina and Hawaii.

A loss in the New York case "would likely delay the new American energy revolution by a couple years," said Collin O'Mara, president and CEO of the National Wildlife Federation, a wind industry supporter. The U.S. District Court for D.C. in February rejected the fisheries' request to put Statoil's lease on hold, but a hearing has not been scheduled. Plaintiffs argue BOEM violated the National Environmental Policy Act by failing to adequately consider the effects of granting offshore wind leases on their businesses or to consider alternative sites. "They have offered no off-ramp, no way to avoid litigation in this matter because they never offered a process to discuss location," Drew Minkiewicz, a partner at the firm Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, tells Esther.

EVERYTHING 'ON THE TABLE' FOR SAUDI ARABIA: The president departs for his first international trip Friday and U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley told ABC's "This Week" Sunday that everything's "on the table" to get Saudi Arabia — where he will be stopping first — more involved in the fight against ISIS. "I would never say that there's anything off the table," Haley said when asked if Trump would halt purchasing oil from Saudi Arabia if they didn't commit additional ground troops or funds to the fight. "But that's not the intention of why he's going." Trump told The New York Times in March 2016 "Oh yeah, sure. I would do that" when asked if he'd consider stopping oil purchases from Saudi Arabia.

On North Korea: Haley also raised the possibility of invoking new sanctions on North Korea, including several energy-related ones, after the reclusive nation tested another missile over the weekend. "I mean there's a lot of sanctions left that we can start to do, whether it's with oil, whether it's with energy, whether it's with their maritime ships, exports, we can do a lot of different things that we haven't done yet," she said. "So our options are there."

WELCOME TO MONDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the 18th-century era George Clinton was our nation's second-longest serving governor. For today: What are the three U.S. states that were previously independent countries? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

ADMINISTRATION FINALLY STAFFING UP: There are signs Trump may finally be getting serious about bringing his Cabinet secretaries some reinforcements to carry out his policy agenda. Late Friday, the Trump announced his intent to tap Susan Bodine, chief counsel on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, to be EPA's assistant administrator for enforcement and compliance assurance. As Pro's Alex Guillén reports, she's the latest EPW staffer with ties to Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.) to land at the agency and previously served the last three years of the George W. Bush administration as EPA's top waste official.

EPW Chairman John Barrasso praised her selection in a Saturday statement: "Susan is committed to finding commonsense ways to protect America's land, air, and water. In this new role, I know that she will work to help communities and small businesses comply with the law, while holding polluters accountable." Her selection comes on the heels of Trump nominating two to fill vacancies at FERC last week. And it comes as the Senate Energy and Natural Resources panel prepares to take consider the nomination of David Bernhardt to be number two at Interior this Thursday. They're small steps, but appear to indicate the White House is finally heeding the pleas of Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski and Cabinet officials themselves to fill political vacancies across the agencies.

PETITION SEEKS RECONSIDERATION OF COAL ASH RULE: The Utility Solid Waste Activities Group petitioned EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt Friday to reconsider "specific portions" of the agency's regulation governing coal ash. The petition argues aspects of the rule warrant changes due to legislation passed last year that included changes to permitting and enforcement provisions, and also asks the agency to put a legal challenge on ice while it reconsiders those aspects of the rulemaking. In addition, USWAG seeks an extension of upcoming compliance deadlines. "USWAG believes that the modifications to the Rule identified in this Petition will result in a more practical and workable, yet equally protective regulatory program," Jim Roewer, the group's executive director, wrote in a cover letter.

Greens slam request: Environmental groups warned pulling back on the October 2015 rule would endanger human health and the environment. "The new EPA safeguards were finally starting to make progress in protecting people from what is now the nation's second-biggest industrial waste problem," Lisa Evans, an attorney with Earthjustice, said in a statement. "Cutting back protections at this point would be reckless and would put people's health at risk."

CANTWELL VISITS HANFORD: Senate Energy ranking member Maria Cantwell toured the Hanford site Saturday in Eastern Washington less than a week after a tunnel storing nuclear waste collapsed. "The events of last week highlight the need for America to keep our commitment to the Hanford site cleanup, and I stand ready to make sure my colleagues and this administration do just that," she said in a statement after being briefed. Picture from the tour here.

BIG GOP GUNS RALLY TO DEFEND ZINKE'S SEAT: Vice President Mike Pence and Donald Trump Jr. rallied in support for Republican Greg Gianforte across Montana as they try to rev up GOP enthusiasm to keep Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's congressional seat in their party's hands, POLITICO's Elena Schneider reports. "I talked to the president this afternoon and he asked me to say two things. First, he said, 'Tell Montana, thanks,'" Pence said at a rally Friday evening, referring to Trump's 2016 victory. "And then he said to me, 'Tell them that Trump needs Greg Gianforte in the Congress of the United States."

The trip comes as public and private polling shows Gianforte's margin against Democrat Rob Quist, the folk singer and political novice, has dropped to single digits in the last weeks of the race. "To me, it just shows they're really worried," Quist said. "They're bringing out all their big guns. They know that they're in danger of losing this race." And that comes as Quist outraised Gianforte $2.36 million to $1.77 million from April 1 through May 5, though the Republican has more cash to spend in the weeks before the May 25 vote, POLITICO's Scott Bland reports.

And, ICYMI, Pence toured the Westmoreland Coal Company's Absaloka Mine on the Crow Indian Reservation by horseback on Friday afternoon. "I just want to assure you that this administration is absolutely determined to continue to expand the opportunities to develop American energy in an environmentally responsible way," the vice president said after the tour, according to the Billings Gazette. Pics from Pence, Zinke and Sen. Steve Daines from the visit.

FRANCIS VOWS SINCERE TALK WITH TRUMP: Pope Francis promised to be sincere during a meeting with Trump later this month, but said he wouldn't try to soften the president's views on policy matters such as the environment, according to the Associated Press (complete the awesome dateline of "ABOARD THE PAPAL PLANE"). "That is a political calculation that I don't allow myself to make. Also in the religious sphere: I don't proselytize," he said. Francis, of course, issued an encyclical calling for action to address climate change back in 2015, while Trump has denied the scientific consensus that human activity is fueling climate change.

SEIA OBJECTS TO SUNIVA TRADE CASE: The Solar Energy Industries Association in a letter to the U.S. International Trade Commission said the agency should not launch a formal review of Suniva's request to impose trade restrictions on imported solar cells and modules. Not only would such a move, which could lead to Trump's creation of import tariffs or minimum prices, be "extremely damaging" by driving up the cost of the cells in the U.S., but doing so would not necessarily stimulate domestic production, the letter said.

COURT FREEZES MARINE MONUMENT SUIT: The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia on Friday stayed a lawsuit by fisheries groups over President Barack Obama's creation last year of the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts National Marine Monument off the East Coast. The Commerce Department and Interior Department asked to stay the case while Commerce reviews the monument designation under a Trump directive.

INTERN PROTECTION BILL GETS HOUSE VOTE: Not much on the House floor this week in terms of energy policy, but a bill guaranteeing unpaid government interns get workforce protections from sexual harassment is due to get a vote on Wednesday. The Federal Intern Protection Act (H.R. 653), introduced by Rep. Elijah Cummings, came after the Oversight and Government Reform Committee heard testimony in July 2015 that a young EPA intern was inappropriately touched and kissed by an employee called a "predator" by Chairman Jason Chaffetz.

MAIL CALL! DON'T MESS WITH JERSEY: Nine New Jersey lawmakers, led by top Energy and Commerce Democrat Frank Pallone, sent Zinke a letter Friday urging him to reconsider plans to allow offshore drilling in the Atlantic Ocean. "The costs and risks associated with drilling in the Atlantic are simply too high for New Jersey," they wrote.

"Elected leaders on both sides of the aisle have long opposed any efforts to potentially open the Atlantic to oil and gas development." Both senators — Robert Menendez and Cory Booker — also signed onto the letter.

OTHER ENERGY GROUPS ENTER PERRY'S GRID STUDY: Representatives from the hydropower, biomass, waste-to-energy, biogas and geothermal energy sectors sent a letter to Energy Secretary Rick Perry last week requesting a meeting as the agency conducts its review of the electric grid. "We believe this review will demonstrate the need to better recognize, value, and properly compensate renewable baseload technologies for the grid benefits and services they provide," they wrote.

POET IS A POET, DONCHA KNOW IT: Ethanol giant POET took to the DC air waves starting with ads during Sunday morning newscasts on broadcast and cable. POET is based in Sioux Falls, S.D., but has refineries in five other Midwestern states. The company wants to make its reach more obvious to policy makers and legislators considering key decisions. The campaign will broaden beyond video and run through the end of the year.

RALLYING FOR NAVAJO PLANT: The Arizona Mining Association hosts a rally in Phoenix today in support of the continued operation of the Navajo Generating Station, a coal-fired power plant. That comes as the Interior Department kicks off four listening sessions this week across the state to gather input on what to do about the plant. The four utility owners announced back in February that they would end their three-quarter stake in the plant by the end of 2019

PERRY'S CLOSE TO HOME: Perry tours the Michael E. DeBakey VA Medical Center in Houston today at 10 a.m. CST as the Energy Department touts a new partnership with the Department of Veterans Affairs to "better understand trends specific to veterans and combat problems such a veteran suicide, prostate cancer, cardiovascular disease, and more."

WINNING: Kára McCullough, the Miss District of Columbia who became Miss USA 2017 on Sunday night, works at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, according to her official biography. She describes her as a "scientist" and "technical reviewer" in her LinkedIn profile.

MOVER, SHAKER: Lisa Hymas starts today as climate and energy program director for Media Matters For America; she was previously a senior editor for Grist.

QUICK HITS

- West Texas oil boom threatens recovery in Canadian oilpatch. CBC.
- Signs of oil boomlet in North Dakota after pipeline finished. AP.
- Power plant owners limit Toshiba's Westinghouse liabilities: sources. Reuters.
- Rising conservative voices call for climate change action. PBS Newshour.
- Trump is deleting climate change, one site at a time. The Guardian.
- As Tesla's focus shifts, so do plans for Buffalo solar factory. Buffalo News.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

10:30 a.m. — "Digitizing the Power Sector," Bipartisan Policy Center, 1225 Eye Street NW, Suite 1000

12:30 p.m. — "Energy Emergency Preparedness: A Critical Federal-State-Private Sector Partnership," The Environmental and Energy Study Institute and the National Association of State Energy Officials, 334 Cannon

2:30 p.m. — Infrastructure and green jobs briefing, NRDC, 406 Dirksen

TUESDAY

8:30 a.m. — "Distorting Financial Markets: The Role of Disclosure, Sustainability and the Importance of Materiality," U.S. Chamber of Commerce, 1615 H St. NW

10:30 a.m. — Business groups presentation on advanced and renewable energy, Arnold & Porter Kaye Scholer LLP, 601 Massachusetts Ave. NW, 10th floor, conference room #10340

12:00 p.m. — Natural Gas Roundtable featuring New York Commissioner Diane Burman, American Gas Association, University Club, 1135 16th St. NW

3:15 p.m. — "Leveraging Federal Funding: Innovative Solutions for Infrastructure," Senate Environment and Public Works Subcommittee on Transportation and Infrastructure, 406 Dirksen

6:30 p.m. — "Sustainable Profit: Investment Opportunities in a Changing Climate," Harvard Business School Club, US Trust Penthouse, 730 15th Street NW

WEDNESDAY

8:30 a.m. — The American Council for Capital Formation Center for Policy Research and the ClearPath Foundation energy policy forum, Newseum, 8th floor conference room, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW

10:00 a.m. — "Energy Opportunities in South America," House Foreign Affairs Western Hemisphere Subcommittee, 2172 Rayburn

10:00 a.m. — "Reviewing Recent State Successes with the Rigs to Reefs Program," House Natural Resources Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee, 1324 Longworth

10:00 a.m. — "Improving America's Transportation Infrastructure: The Road Forward," Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, 406 Dirksen

11:00 a.m. — Climate Reality Project panel on carbon pricing, The Climate Reality Project, First Floor Conference Room, 750 9th St. NW

1:00 p.m. — House Appropriations Committee hearing on Native Alaskan funding, House Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies, 2007 Rayburn

1:00 p.m. — "The Future of Energy Infrastructure in the DC Metro Region," AECOM, 3101 Wilson Boulevard, Arlington, Va.

2:00 p.m. — "Seeking Better Management of America's Overgrown, Fire-Prone National Forests," House Natural Resources Subcommittee on Federal Lands, 1324 Longworth

THURSDAY

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Committee hearing on water rights and western power, 1324 Longworth

10:00 a.m. — "Building a 21st Century Infrastructure for America: Improving Water Quality through Integrated Planning," House Transportation and Infrastructure Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment, 2167 Rayburn

10:00 a.m. — Hearing on nomination of Bernhardt for deputy Interior secretary, Senate Energy and Natural Resources, Dirksen 366

FRIDAY

12:00 p.m. — "Petroleum Geology of Shale Gas & Tight Oil -and- How To Do It," National Capital Area Chapter of the U.S. Association for Energy Economics, Chinatown Garden, 618 H St. NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/05/signs-of-life-in-filling-political-agency-vacancies-022823>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump tweeted about Scottish wind farm 60 times Back

By Brent Griffiths | 11/22/2016 11:32 AM EDT

President-elect Donald Trump's unusual move of pressing his opposition to wind turbines during a meeting with politician Nigel Farage of the United Kingdom is far from the first time the New York businessman has complained about a project that would alter the landscape surrounding one of two Scottish golf courses he owns.

Starting in 2012, Trump began firing off tweets about the offshore turbines, which he said would spoil views of the coastal course, which is named Trump International Golf Links. All told, the incoming commander-in-chief has sent at least 60 tweets about the project over several years.

Trump purchased his resort near Aberdeen in 2006, but he soured on the country and its leaders after an 11-turbine windfarm was proposed near the course. Trump's mother immigrated to the United States from Scotland before he was born.

Beginning with a simple message calling for English taxpayers to "stop subsidizing the destruction of Scotland by paying massive subsidies for ugly wind turbines," Trump launched a full-on Twitter tirade against local politicians and the company that dare to finance the proposed off-shore wind farm — at one point, even then Prime Minister David Cameron became a target.

Offline, Trump took his opposition to the project all the way to the highest court in the U.K. But in a unanimous decision, the U.K. Supreme Court rejected his case in 2015.

The Swedish company Vattenfall announced in July that it was moving ahead with the project, formally known as the European Offshore Wind Deployment Centre, but the Trump Organization said it would continue its efforts to stop it.

"There are 16 planning conditions which have not been purified, and we intend to lodge formal written objections with Marine Scotland, challenging each one of them," the Trump Organization said. "The project can't proceed until the conditions are satisfied and we will also pursue additional remedies before the European Courts as necessary."

Trump last tweeted about the wind farms on May 1, 2015 — more than a month before he announced his presidential bid.

But according to Andy Wigmore, a Farage ally who was in the meeting with Trump, the president-elect remains passionate about the issue.

"[O]ne thing Mr Trump kept returning to was the issue of wind farms," Wigmore told Britain's Express newspaper this week. "He is a complete Anglophile and also absolutely adores Scotland, which he thinks is one of the most beautiful places on Earth. But he is dismayed that his beloved Scotland has become overrun with ugly wind farms which he believes are a blight on the stunning landscape."

To view online click here.

Back

U.S. will 'tighten the screws' on North Korea, Haley says Back

By Louis Nelson | 05/14/2017 12:33 PM EDT

The U.S. and its international partners will continue to "tighten the screws" on the regime of North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un following its test of a ballistic missile over the weekend, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley said Sunday morning.

Haley told ABC's "This Week" that Kim is "in a state of paranoia" and that his nation's barrage of missile tests are a symptom of that. She also said that pressure imposed by the U.S. has already been felt by the Kim regime.

"Well, I think you first have to get into Kim Jong Un's head, you know, which is he's in a state of paranoia. He's incredibly concerned about anything and everything around him," Haley told ABC anchor George Stephanopoulos. "What we're going to do is continue to tighten the screws. He feels it. He absolutely feels it. And we're going to continue, whether it's sanctions, whether it's press statements, anything that we have to do."

While President Donald Trump and other White House officials have met North Korea's most recent bout of saber-rattling with harsh rhetoric and promises of collaboration with the Chinese government to more fully rein in the Kim regime, the president himself has also said that he would be "honored" to meet with the North Korean dictator under the right circumstances.

On Sunday morning, Haley said North Korea's missile test would preclude those circumstances from coming about.

"Having a missile test is not the way to sit down with the president, because he's absolutely not going to do it," the former South Carolina governor said. "And I can tell you, he can sit there and say all the conditions he wants, until he meets our conditions, we're not sitting down with him."

To view online click here.

Back

Trump picks Inhofe aide for EPA compliance chief Back

By Alex Guillén | 05/12/2017 06:45 PM EDT

President Donald Trump plans to nominate Susan Bodine, chief counsel on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, to be EPA's assistant administrator for enforcement and compliance assurance.

Bodine is the latest EPW staffer with ties to Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.) to land at EPA. Other former Inhofe aides at the agency include chief of staff Ryan Jackson, deputy chief of staff Byron Brown and deputy associate administrator for policy Brittany Bolen.

Before joining EPW in 2015, Bodine spent six years as a partner at Barnes & Thorburg. She spent the last three years of the George W. Bush administration as the Senate-confirmed assistant administrator for EPA's Office of Solid Waste and Emergency Response (now the Office of Land and Emergency Management).

The White House's "skinny budget" in March proposed cutting $129 million from the OECA budget, to $419 million, with the savings coming from reducing EPA efforts to areas not policed by the states. Critics say there actually is not much overlap and that federal investigation is often required as states tighten their own belts.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump to nominate Chatterjee, Powelson to FERC Back

By Darius Dixon | 05/08/2017 08:47 PM EDT

President Donald Trump tonight announced he planned to appoint Neil Chatterjee and Rob Powelson to fill two of the three vacancies in the FERC leadership, according to an official White House statement.

Chatterjee, a senior energy adviser to Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, and Powelson, a Pennsylvania regulator, would take positions that expire in 2021 and 2020, respectively. POLITICO has reported that both were expected to be tapped for the FERC.

The new Republican members would, if confirmed by the Senate, restore the agency's quorum.

FERC has been operating with just two sitting commissioners for more than two months, since Norman Bay resigned the chairmanship after Trump elevated Cheryl LaFleur to that position. While staff can address most of the agency's business, the absence of a quorum hinders FERC's ability to enact final orders dealing with interstate natural gas pipeline projects and contested electricity rate plans.

POLITICO has also reported that Kevin McIntyre, who co-leads Jones Day's global energy practice, is expected to fill the third FERC vacancy. Some sources have suggested that he may be in line for the chairmanship.

In recent months, members of Congress and more than a dozen industry groups have pressed the administration to appoint new members.

WHAT'S NEXT: Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski has vowed to prioritize moving new FERC nominees through her committee, although the full confirmation process could easily take several weeks to complete.

To view online click here.

Back

Bipartisan coal ash provision included in final WRDA Back

By Alex Guillén | 12/05/2016 04:28 PM EDT

The final version of the Water Resources Development Act released today by House and Senate negotiators includes a tweaked version of language passed earlier this year by the Senate that would change the permitting and enforcement regime for EPA's coal ash rule.

The language will require states to get EPA approval for their coal ash disposal permitting plans, and the agency will also gain more enforcement powers, on top of potential citizen lawsuits.

"This new permitting authority fixes the main problems with the recent coal ash regulation issued by the Environmental Protection Agency, by removing citizen suits as the sole means of enforcement and allowing states to tailor permit requirements on a case-by-case basis," Sens. Jim Inhofe, Joe Manchin, Shelley Moore Capito and John Hoeven said in a joint statement.

The provision won bipartisan backing, although various environmental groups, including the Sierra Club, Environmental Integrity Project and the Waterkeeper Alliance, raised issues with the language.

The new language would also extend EPA's timeline to review authorized state programs from every five years to every 12 years. And it gives EPA more time to review state programs, includes language allowing states to ask EPA to review a neighboring state's program, and requires EPA to operate a backstop permit program for states without authorized programs.

The bill is expected to hit the House floor this week.

To view online click here.

Back

Pence, Trump Jr. rally GOP as Montana special election tightens Back

By Elena Schneider | 05/12/2017 11:58 PM EDT

BILLINGS, Mont. — Vice President Mike Pence and Donald Trump Jr. crisscrossed Montana in the last 24 hours to gin up support for Republican Greg Gianforte in the upcoming special House election, as Gianforte's margin in public and private polling has shrunk to single digits in the last weeks of the race.

While President Donald Trump's poll numbers sag nationwide, Gianforte has tied himself closely to the administration ahead of the May 25 red-state special election. The Trump surrogates, along with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Sen. Steve Daines, are trying to rev GOP enthusiasm back up six months after Trump carried Montana by 20 percentage points in the presidential race. Republican groups are also pouring in millions of dollars to avoid unexpected surprises after some closer-than-expected special elections in Georgia and Kansas.

"I talked to the president this afternoon and he asked me to say two things. First, he said, 'Tell Montana, thanks,'" Pence said at a rally Friday evening, referring to Trump's 2016 victory. "And then he said to me, 'Tell them that Trump needs Greg Gianforte in the Congress of the United States.'"

But Democrat Rob Quist, the folk singer and political novice who's running against Gianforte, has broken $4 million in contributions for his underdog campaign — powered by the same anti-Trump fervor that raised millions of dollars for Georgia Democrat Jon Ossoff in the other high-profile House special election.

"To me, it just shows they're really worried," Quist said. "They're bringing out all their big guns. They know that they're in danger of losing this race."

Quist has also embraced national help, with Sen. Bernie Sanders set to headline four rallies across the state next weekend.

But Republican jitters are calmed somewhat by Trump's popularity here. Despite low approval numbers nationwide, WPA Intelligence, the Republican polling and analytics firm, estimated in its national voter models that that Montana voters who approve of Trump's job performance outnumbered disapprovers 2.4 to 1 last month.

"I voted for Obama twice and I got caught up in his message, but I love Trump," said Chris Groscop, a 40-year-old small business owner who attended the rally with his wife, Brandy.

"He speaks to us. I like that it's something different every day with him."

In embracing Trump for the special election to replace Zinke in the House in 2017, Gianforte is breaking with his own losing campaign for governor in 2016.

Gianforte didn't campaign with Trump during his sole appearance in the state last May, and several GOP operatives noted that there was "chatter that he wasn't very pro-Trump," as one Republican source in the state put it. (A Gianforte spokesman said that Gianforte had already committed to another campaign event on the same day last year.)

"Greg's team probably thinks using Trump is a good move because Trump won the state, and Greg didn't," said one Republican strategist who's worked in Montana. "But Trump wasn't a factor in the governor's race, and now it's their whole strategy to ride [Trump's] coattails to win."

While Trump scored a dominant victory in 2016, Gianforte lost to Democratic Gov. Steve Bullock by 4 points in Montana last year.

Gianforte's supporters attribute the loss to Bullock's incumbency and Gianforte's failure to "get in front of some attacks that had a lot of untruths in them, as maybe he should have done," said state Rep. Sue Vinton. "I think he's learned from that in this race."

But Democrats say the problems that dogged Gianforte in his gubernatorial race are sticking to him again in the House race. The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee's TV ads describe Gianforte as a millionaire transplant who doesn't support access to public lands, echoing Bullock's strategy from 2016.

"You've seen it before — millionaires buying trophy ranches in Montana, then suing to block you out. Well, it's exactly what this millionaire from New Jersey did," the narrator says in one DCCC ad. "When he wanted to be governor, Montana said 'no.' Now Gianforte is desperate to be congressman, but Montana is not buying it."

Quist echoed the sentiment on the stump in Great Falls, where he said to three-dozen supporters, "We don't need more millionaires in Washington, D.C."

"Gianforte is a millionaire lapdog," said Marla Embody, a 62-year-old retiree who attended the Quist event, which featured a musical performance by Quist's daughter. "If Trump says jump, he says how high."

While Gianforte draws on national Republicans to boost his campaign, the GOP is also using a time-honored strategy of linking Quist to national Democrats, to paint Quist as a bad fit for Montana.

Quist "wants to join liberal Nancy Pelosi in Washington to spend even more and stick us with the bill," one National Republican Congressional Committee ad says. The GOP has also attacked Quist's financial troubles, spotlighting debts that are "piling up" in "property taxes liens, over $400,000 in foreclosure notices, collections."

At the rally Friday, Republicans also hammered Quist's position on guns and his "F" rating from the National Rifle Association, which has endorsed Gianforte.

"Let me tell you something — when you flunk the gun test in Montana, you flunk the election," Daines said to loud cheers. One sign read: "NRA + Greg = A+."

Quist said his financial struggles are relatable to Montana voters, who see him as "one of us," who's "fallen on hard times and gotten out of them," he added.

Republicans are girding for a close finish on May 25 — an unusually timed Thursday election, just before Memorial Day weekend, which has strategists uncertain about voter turnout. But the GOP is already arguing that a small winning margin months after Trump crushed Hillary Clinton in the state won't signal doom for Republicans in 2018.

According to Yellowstone County Commissioner Denis Pitman, Montana isn't the place to look for answers on national politics, given how regularly the state has elected both Democrats and Republicans to major offices.

"Is it going to be a referendum on Trump? Montanans are fairly independent-minded," Pitman said. "We don't always send very clear signals."

To view online click here.

Back

Quist outraised Gianforte leading up to MT-AL special Back

By Scott Bland | 05/14/2017 09:45 AM EDT

Democrat Rob Quist outraised Republican Greg Gianforte in the FEC reporting period before Montana's special election, but Gianforte had more cash to spend in the weeks before the May 25 vote.

Quist raised $2.36 million to Gianforte's $1.77 million from April 1 through May 5, according to his FEC report. Most of Gianforte's money came from a $1 million loan from the candidate himself, according to his report. Quist's money came largely from small donations ($1.69 million), as Democrats around the country continue pouring online cash into campaigns and other political causes at a high rate.

Quist spent $2.38 million and had $669,000 on hand for the final days of the special election, while Gianforte spent $1.49 million and had $826,000 left in the bank on May 5.

Outside spending has favored Gianforte: Congressional Leadership Fund, the NRCC and the RNC have combined to spend over $3.8 million attacking Quist and helping Gianforte, according to FEC disclosures. The DCCC has announced transferring nearly $200,000 to the state Democratic Party and, per the FEC, has spent another $340,000 on a media buy so far. Planned Parenthood Action Fund and the Progressive Turnout Project have spent about $300,000 combined backing Quist and hitting Gianforte.

Gianforte is favored in the red-state special election, but his polling margin has shrunk to single digits as Quist tries to capture the longtime Republican district.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: On TSCA the world — WOTUS repeal imminent — Zinke goes paperless
Date: Friday, June 23, 2017 5:43:09 AM

By Eric Wolff | 06/23/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Darius Dixon, Alex Guillén, Annie Snider, and Kathryn Wolfe

ON TSCA THE WORLD: The suite of rules released by EPA to implement last year's bipartisan reforms to the Toxic Substances Control Act include significant, industry-friendly changes compared to the proposal released by the Obama administration in January - changes that were overseen by a former industry advocate now at EPA. A shift to allow EPA to look only at certain uses of potentially hazardous chemicals has drawn particular ire, not just from environmentalists and congressional Democrats, but also from EPA experts, according to a May EPA staff memo that POLITICO cited earlier this week. More from Annie Snider and Alex Guillén here.

The American Chemistry Council, the industry's influential lobbying group and former employer of Nancy Beck, currently the top political appointee at the EPA office working on TSCA, said it still needs to digest the details, but it expects EPA to "establish the framework for a modern chemical management system capable of meeting 21st century demands."

Soon after the implementation rules came out Thursday, environmentalists and Democrats started having a bad reaction. Rep. Frank Pallone (D-N.J.), the ranking member on the Energy and Commerce Committee, said they undermine the "bipartisan intent" of the TSCA law. "In an apparent handout to industry, EPA is committing to labeling as many chemicals safe as possible in order to avoid review," he said. Richard Denison, the Environmental Defense Fund's lead senior scientist, said the changes "heighten our concern" that the Trump administration won't protect public health. And Scott Faber of the Environmental Working Group said that "Trump's lackeys will ensure that cancer-causing chemicals... continue to sicken and kill our friends and families," adding: "See you in court, Donald."

Hot docs: Click for the prioritization rule, evaluation rule, inventory "reset" rule and guidance for submitting draft risk assessments.

SCOPE OUT THE SCENE: EPA also released scoping documents for the first 10 chemicals chosen for review, laying out what uses the agency will review and how. The A-list celebrity among the ten is asbestos, which EPA infamously was unable to ban under the old TSCA law. Other chemicals on the list include TCE, a degreaser that EPA is already considering banning from several uses, along with PERC, a dry cleaning chemical, and a purple dye used in paints and coatings.

Industry groups were cautiously optimistic about the scoping documents last night. ACC said it needs to review the proposals to ensure they rely on the "best available, verified information" and focus on uses that pose the greatest risks. The American Cleaning Institute, meanwhile said that EPA's proposed scope for a chemical used in waxes and varnishes is "an important development that hopefully demonstrates a pragmatic approach." It will take several more years for EPA to actually study those chemicals and potentially restrict or ban them.

WOTUS REPEAL COMING: EPA's first formal repeal of a major Obama-era environmental regulation could come as soon as today. The proposed rule to formally take the 2015 Clean Water Rule off the books and put the previous rule and guidance back on the books has been undergoing White House review since the beginning of May.

While the rule itself is expected to be fairly straight-forward, it's virtually certain to set off a court fight with environmentalists, blue states and other supporters of the Obama rule, and could preview other similar fights over Trump administration rollbacks of environmental rules.

FRIDAY FRIDAY KICK IT DOWN IT'S FRIDAY! I'm your fill-in host Eric Wolff, covering for Anthony as he celebrates his nuptials. ME sure does host some life events, no? Longtime readers will recall my twins were born almost two years ago, shortly after I took over the newsletter controls. Now as then, send your tips, quips and comments to me, ewolff@politico.com for your Monday news, or send 'em to blefebvre@politico.com for Tuesday and Wednesday. Your man Anthony will be back Wednesday, along with trivia answers, so don't lose his address: aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @ericwolff, @aadragna, @bjlefebvre, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

WHERE ARE OUR NOMINEES? Kristine Svinicki, the chairwoman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission Chairwoman, is on the move: The Senate is slated to vote on her confirmation at 5:30 p.m. Monday, and she may be one of the few energy nominees getting any love. Svinicki's something of a special case: She's got well-placed friends on Capitol Hill, a scary June 30 hard-stop on her term, and, as one Senate aide told ME, "just retains the status quo."

Yet after months of dramatic demands from energy industry associations to restore FERC's leadership quorum, it's become clear that the agency's partial paralysis will stretch well into its fifth month, given the upcoming July 4 recess. Democrats have insisted that their price for not gumming up the gears of the Senate is that Republican nominees to regulatory agencies get packaged with Democratic picks (See: Sen. Tom Carper's efforts to pair up GOP NRC picks David Wright and Annie Caputo, with a renomination of NRC Commissioner Jeff Baran). FERC nominees Neil Chatterjee and Robert Powelson, whose nominations have already been voted out of committee, don't have Democratic dance partners yet. The debate over healthcare is also likely to consume next week.

Remember DOE? Rick Perry was in the spotlight this week, but Trump's pick to be the No. 2 at the Energy Department, Dan Brouillette, seems to have fallen off the map. He was approved by the Senate energy committee more than two weeks ago, and while there is plenty of competition for the Senate's attention these days, two sources tell ME that Nevada Sen. Dean Heller has put a hold on Brouillette. (Heller's office hasn't responded to our questions about it, but there's likely a direct line to the senator's concern with Trump's plans to revive the Yucca Mountain nuclear waste project in his state).

THE DOE POLITICAL APPOINTEE AND THE 'DISTURBING' TWEETS: Trump appointee William C. Bradford published a slew of "disturbing" Tweets before taking a job working with tribes at the Department of Energy, the Washington Post reports. Bradford has now deleted his account, but last year he posted slurs on Obama and Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg, and Megyn Kelly, and he called Japanese internment camps "necessary". Whitford is responsible for assisting Native American and Alaskan tribes with energy projects.

ZINKE GOES PAPERLESS?: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said he'd be responsive to letters from legislators of both parties, but not through written responses, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. Zinke was making the rounds for budget hearings this week, and when pressed on his department's failure to answer Democrats, he said, "If I can't answer them in written form I will call you directly."

But Democrats want a paper trail. "The executive branch has, since the founding of our democracy, been expected to respond to the inquiries of Congress, regardless of party or majority or minority status," Sen. Tom Udall said. "I expect Secretary Zinke to uphold this standard and his commitment to respond in writing to our questions — not as a 'courtesy' to members of Congress, but because of his obligations to serve the public interest."

NUCLEAR WASTE APPLICATION DECISION SUSPENSE: The Nuclear Regulatory Commission suspended an application by Waste Control Specialists to build a high-level nuclear waste facility in Texas. The news comes a day after a judge prevented WCS from merging with Energy Solutions, a company that handles low-level waste.

This application has been fairly drama-prone but, interestingly enough, a failed merger may boost the chances of WCS following through with the application to build a nuclear waste storage site. Energy Solutions has honed a business around managing low-level nuclear waste, and wanted to buy a competitor. But some industry observers are skeptical that the company would want to delve into the uncertain world of handling high-level material that was supposed to go to Yucca Mountain.

FERCIN' 9-5, WHAT A WAY TO MAKE A LIVIN': FERC dug into cybersecurity, gas-electric coordination, and reached out for advice from international partners Thursday at its annual reliability conference. In general, grid reliability has improved, according to a recent report from NERC, the grid reliability company, but threats abound, especially from hacking. Witnesses on the cybersecurity panel discussed a variety of threats to the system, including a few quality minutes on the danger posed by the "Internet of Things," i.e. the hacking vulnerabilities created by all the smart light bulbs, smart appliances, and possibly rooftop solar panels now getting connected to the 'net.

It's been an Honor: FERC Commissioner Collette Honorable sure sounded like she was sitting in her last meeting as a FERC commissioner as she gave her closing remarks Thursday. Honorable has said she wouldn't seek a second term, and there's no quorum to hold future meetings. "My time at FERC has been the highest honor and that's been because of the man and women I've served with," she said at the end of the meeting.

DEPARTURE LOUNGE: DOE SAFETY OFFICIAL ANNOUNCES EXIT: The Energy Department's director of Enterprise Assessments, Glenn Podonsky, announced in a Thursday afternoon email to office staff that he plans to leave the federal government at the end of the summer. Enterprise Assessments has the thankless job of conducting enforcement and independent oversight of environmental, safety, health, cybersecurity and emergency management programs at DOE, including those under the National Nuclear Security Administration. Podonsky, who joined the agency in 1984, said that he expects his deputy of the past eight years, Bill Eckroade, to take his place but didn't have a chart mapped out for himself. "As far as any future plans for myself I have absolutely no idea what lies ahead, but I do know that my wife is not interested in having twice the husband with only half the pay, so some form of employment is inevitable," Podonsky wrote, though he made it clear that he won't look for other work until after he leaves.

PRUITT BACK TO THE HILL TUESDAY: If last week's appropriations hearing was any indication, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt won't get his way on Tuesday when he goes before a subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee: he'll be told he's getting more money than he wants. Pruitt will meet with the senators at 9:30 a.m. sharp with nothing but his protective glasses and senior adviser Holly Greaves to shield him.

ME FIRST — ADS GO LIVE AGAINST ZINKE'S SAGE GROUSE REVIEW: The Western Values Project will go live today with a six-figure print and tv ad campaign aimed at winning support for the existing sage grouse plan. The ads are scheduled to coincide with a meeting next week of the Western Governors Association. Zinke is reviewing than the current Obama-era state-local-federal collaboration.

BETSY, GRAB YOUR GUN: Interior declared on Thursday the grizzly bear population in Yellowstone National Park has sufficiently recovered and will no longer receive federal protection. The decision covers parts of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho, though populations in other areas will still be protected under the Endangered Species Act. "This achievement stands as one of America's great conservation successes," Zinke said in a statement.

Reax: The Center for Biodiversity called the decision "tragic." But ME imagines Education Secretary Betsy DeVos must be relieved that well-armed school staff can now, at least around Yellowstone, let loose upon grizzlies.

OLD WATER BILL, KEEP ON ROLLIN': Rep. Tom McClintock can sit back and wait for the Senate to do its work now that the House passed his bill Thursday, 233-180, to streamline permitting for water storage projects and give the Bureau of Reclamation more authority to approve dams and reservoirs. The mostly party-line vote saw eight Democrats vote yes and five Republicans vote no. Democrats opposed the bill in committee out of concern that it could short-circuit environmental review.

DO COAL MINING ROBOTS DREAM OF SOOT-COVERED SHEEP? The Senate draft of a bill to reauthorize the FAA would not regulate robots used underground for mining purposes. That makes sense — FAA regulates things that fly, not dig — but it also highlights a growing trend toward automated mining that bodes ill for Trump's promise to re-employ coal miners. A McKinsey study in 2015 said that 45 percent of all mining work could be automated, and mining giants Rio Tinto and BHP Billiton are experimenting with automated trucks and drillers at mining sites.

QUICK HITS

- Trump's putdown of wind energy whips up a backlash in Iowa, AP
- Renewable energy no longer a niche to institutional investors, Reuters
- Clarion call for scientists: 'Use your voice ... or lose it', E&E News
- Traders test OPEC 'whatever it takes' resolve to defend oil price, Reuters

HAPPENING FRIDAY

8:30 a.m. — "What Works: Miami," POLITICO Magazine, Eden Roc, Pompeii Room - 4525 Collins Ave, Miami Beach, FL

12:00 p.m. — "Energy Demand Disruptions: Aspirations vs Reality," National Capital Area Chapter of the U.S. Association for Energy Economics, Chinatown Garden, 618 H St. NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/06/on-tsca-the-world-023444>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

EPA staffers, Trump official clashed over new chemical rules Back

By Annie Snider and Alex Guillén | 06/22/2017 07:28 PM EDT

The Trump administration released the nation's most important chemical-safety rules in decades Thursday — but only after making a series of business-friendly changes overseen by a former industry advocate who holds a top post at the EPA.

Career agency employees had raised objections to the changes steered by EPA Deputy Assistant Administrator Nancy Beck, who until April was the senior director of regulatory science policy at the American Chemistry Council, the chemical industry's leading lobbying group. Those include limits on how broadly the agency would review thousands of potentially hazardous substances, EPA staffers wrote in an internal memo reviewed by POLITICO.

Such limits could cause the agency to fail to act on potential chemical uses "that present an unreasonable risk to health or the environment," EPA's top chemicals enforcement official argued in the May 23 memo.

The rules are meant to implement last year's landmark rewrite of the 1976 Toxic Substances Control Act, a major bipartisan achievement in a deeply divided Congress. Both parties agreed that the law needed an update — the original version didn't even allow EPA to ban asbestos, a known carcinogen, and some states had begun to step in and create their own patchwork of regulations for chemicals.

But the Trump administration's steps to implement the law, and Beck's role in particular, are drawing alarm from environmental groups and congressional Democrats.

Melanie Benesh of the Environmental Working Group called Beck the "scariest Trump appointee you've never heard of," and pointed to a 2009 Democratic congressional report that accused Beck of working to delay and undermine EPA's chemical studies during her previous tenure at the OMB.

New Jersey Rep. Frank Pallone, the top Democrat on the House Energy and Commerce Committee, argued in a letter to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt on Wednesday that Beck's appointment "has the potential to undermine the scientific integrity of EPA's TSCA implementation and the consumer confidence we sought to build with a reformed TSCA." Pallone is seeking information about Beck's involvement with the chemicals rules and the issues she is ethically allowed to work on.

Beck told POLITICO that she has been "very involved" with the rulemaking for the past two months at EPA. She also defended the changes in the rules.

"The development of a rule when you go from proposal to final, or even as you develop a rule, it just evolves over time," she said in an interview Wednesday, before the rules came out. "So I think that this has been a moving target, and will continue to be a moving target until it gets through the OMB review process."

A statement from EPA's senior ethics counsel said Beck did not need to recuse herself from working on the TSCA rules because they are "matters of general applicability." The counsel added that Beck was cleared to consider comments her former employer had submitted.

The American Chemistry Council spent more than $9 million on lobbying last year, and its employees and PAC donated $541,000 to federal candidates in the 2016 cycle, giving Republicans 2½ times as much as it gave Democrats, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

EPA officials told POLITICO that the issues raised in the memo from the agency's Office of Enforcement and Compliance Assurance were part of a typical intra-agency consultation process.

Jeff Morris, director of EPA's Office of Pollution Prevention and Toxics — the division charged with writing the rules implementing TSCA — said chemical safety officials met with the enforcement office "and talked through their comments, and based on that discussion, we moved forward with the rule. At the end of the day, OECA concurred on our approach."

That doesn't mean the final rules necessarily incorporated OECA's suggestions, he added, but in the end it produced a rule "that we could all support."

Thursday marked the anniversary of the 2016 revamp of the 40-year-old TSCA, which regulates the tens of thousands of chemicals used in the United States. It took Congress two years to hash out the compromise, ultimately winning support from chemical makers and some environmental groups for legislation that beefed up EPA's power to regulate harmful chemicals.

Rather than relying on EPA to prove that a substance was dangerous, the law shifted some of the burden to industry to show a chemical's safety. But TSCA also gave EPA latitude to determine how to go about examining thousands of chemicals — effectively setting the scope of the review for substances ranging from corrosive chemicals used in refining to the paints and plastics in children's toys.

EPA's plans to implement TSCA came out Thursday in the form of three final regulations known as the "framework rules." One rule lays out how EPA will set priorities for its assessments of chemicals, dividing them into high- and low-risk categories. Another rule details methods for studying the health and environmental risks of each chemical. And the third culls from EPA's list any substances not used commercially since 2006.

That last change will ultimately shrink the inventory from 85,000 chemicals to around 30,000, once companies weigh in on which chemicals they still use, according to a recent estimate from Jim Cooper, a senior petrochemical adviser at American Fuel and Petrochemical Manufacturers. Future use of those chemicals will be prohibited until the agency reviews them.

Pruitt has made TSCA a top priority under his "back to basics" strategy, which has been marked by the rollback of several Obama-era environmental regulations, especially major rules on climate change. Funding for TSCA implementation would be increased under the Trump administration's 2018 budget proposal, while other chemical safety programs and nearly every other aspect of EPA would be cut sharply.

"The activities we are announcing today demonstrate this Administration's commitment to providing regulatory certainty to American businesses, while protecting human health and the environment," Pruitt said in a statement releasing the rules.

EPA's political leaders have pressed the agency's staff to meet the law's aggressive deadlines for writing new rules and evaluating individual chemicals, but environmentalists say they are more concerned with the substance of the implementation rules. Congressional Democrats and green activists were already worried about the approach an anti-regulatory administration might take to toxic substances, especially given President Donald Trump's past support for asbestos, which he once complained got a "bad rap."

Those fears rose with the arrival of Beck, who worked as an OMB analyst for a decade before joining the American Chemistry Council. She represented the council at a March Senate hearing where she criticized the Obama administration's proposed TSCA implementation.

EPA career employees, in turn, have expressed concern about the changes the implementation rules have taken since Beck arrived.

The staff memo reviewed by POLITICO was sent by the head of EPA's Waste and Chemical Enforcement Division to Wendy Cleland-Hamnett, the acting assistant administrator for EPA's chemical office, on the same day part of the final rules package was sent to the White House for review. It laid out a number of concerns about changes the Trump administration made to a section of the Obama EPA's January proposal governing which chemicals warrant the most thorough safety evaluation.

Among those concerns was that EPA would consider only a limited set of uses for a chemical when deciding whether it warrants further scrutiny and then determining the risks to human health, rather than examining all the ways people could be exposed to it. For instance, while most Americans think of asbestos as a building material, its largest use by far in the U.S. today is in equipment used to make chlorine gas. Chemicals manufacturers have argued that that use needn't be considered, saying humans are highly unlikely to come in contact with the asbestos during that process, but environmentalists contend that EPA shouldn't ignore it when deciding how risky the chemical is for human health.

In an interview, Cleland-Hamnett said EPA is aiming to set the highest priorities for the chemical uses that present the greatest risk, and that it wasn't prohibiting a broader analysis.

"Not that those are the only uses we would evaluate, but we do want to make sure that we're evaluating those uses," she said. "So I think we've addressed the concern that we might not evaluate the uses that could prevent unreasonable risk."

This issue has been a chief sticking point among environmentalists, public health advocates and the industry. Chemical manufacturers may produce a substance for a specific use, said Richard Denison, lead senior scientist at the Environmental Defense Fund, but once it's put on the market, it can end up being used in a wide variety of ways.

"That chemical that the company may intend to use solely in industrial settings may very well be bought by another company that decides to put it in a consumer product that is sold at your local hardware store," he said.

But Mike Walls, vice president of regulatory and technical affairs at the American Chemistry Council, said the process should differentiate among various uses of each chemical to determine specific restrictions for each.

"Risks can be managed along a spectrum of measures, running from a ban at its most extreme, to things like labeling or warning requirements," he said. "So that risk-evaluation process is really critical."

EPA also released a decision on the scope of its first 10 chemical reviews, which include asbestos, several dry-cleaning chemicals and a purple dye thought to hurt fish and other aquatic life. Industry groups are closely watching whether EPA decides to review those chemicals for all possible exposures, or whether it will limit its review to narrow, specific uses. Further study of those chemicals will take years.

But even as greens have raised alarms about the efficacy of the new chemicals law under the Trump administration, both sides say industry has an interest in making sure it works. After all, it was lack of public trust in the old system that brought everyone to the table a year ago to fix it, said Dimitri Karakitsos, who negotiated the chemicals overhaul measure as a staffer for Senate Republicans.

"Industry and Republicans care very much about a credible system that works, and so does EPA," said Karakitsos, now a partner at the law firm Holland & Knight. "If implementation isn't happening, states ramp up activity again, and that can result in an inconsistent patchwork of regulations and significant impediments to interstate commerce."

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke pledges transparency, but Democrats worry paper trail will disappear Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 06/22/2017 04:05 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has promised to make his department more transparent, but Democrats are complaining his office is actually pulling a disappearing act.

Zinke promised congressional Democrats during budget hearings this week that although he hasn't responded to letters from their offices, he would be happy to make time to call them or meet in person if necessary — but pushed back against having to put his words in writing.

"I intend to be the most transparent Interior there's been at least in my lifetime," Zinke said during a Senate Appropriations subcommittee budget hearing on Wednesday. "I will be happily transparent and responsive. Public lands stewardship is not a partisan issue."

But ranking member Tom Udall (D-N.M.) reminded Zinke he had not responded to 11 letters the senator's staff sent inquiring about recent Interior policy decisions. He then asked Zinke to promise to review and respond to them.

Zinke agreed to review the letters, but hedged on whether he would send a written reply, saying the information might fall under executive privilege.

"If I can't answer them in written form I will call you directly," Zinke said.

His refusal to commit to reply in writing comes after the White House's instructions to Cabinet secretaries to communicate only with committee chairman, a move that would effectively keep Democrats out of the policy loop.

"The executive branch has, since the founding of our democracy, been expected to respond to the inquiries of Congress, regardless of party or majority or minority status," Udall said in an email to POLITICO. "I expect Secretary Zinke to uphold this standard and his commitment to respond in writing to our questions — not as a 'courtesy' to members of Congress, but because of his obligations to serve the public interest."

Interior has been rolling back several Obama-era environmental regulations, including calling for shrinking the Bears Ears monument established by the former president. Zinke has pledged to open up more coastal waters for oil and gas drilling and has said he is preparing to shuffle about a quarter of the agency's senior staff and lay off up to 4,000 regular employees.

Tyson Slocum, energy program director for Public Citizen, said while telephone or face-to-face meetings may be more efficient, they make it more difficult to keep a record of public policy decision-making and also avoid creating a paper trail that could be subject to Freedom of Information Act requests.

"There is a certain advantage of cutting to the chase" through in-person meetings, Slocum said. "But it can't serve as a substitute for establishing a document trail. It's important for effective transparency for a paper trail to exist."

At a House Natural Resources Committee budget hearing Thursday, Zinke repeated his stance of only dealing with Democrats on a verbal basis. Ranking member Raul Grijalva (D-Ariz.) complained to Zinke that he has not responded to letters they sent him seeking explanations of his department's policy.

Zinke sidestepped the issue, only saying he would respond to them in the future — but not necessarily in writing.

"I'll talk to you in person — I think that's a better service," Zinke said.

To view online click here.

Back

Interior Department releases order for sage grouse rule review Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 06/08/2017 10:35 AM EDT

The Interior Department released the order Department Secretary Ryan Zinke signed

Wednesday night calling for an internal review of the department's sage grouse conservation plans.

The orders directs the Bureau of Land Management, Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Geological Survey to identify parts of BLM's land use management plans that should be tweaked or rescinded because of their effect on development or due to differences with each state's own plans.

WHAT'S NEXT: Interior will take 10 days to choose a team to conduct the review.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Peer-reviewed study finds Exxon misled public on climate — Monument decisions imminent — U.S. biodiesel sector gets trade win
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 5:43:40 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 08/23/2017 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Esther Whieldon, Alex Guillén, Adam Behsudi and Eric Wolff

PEER-REVIEWED STUDY FINDS EXXON MISLED ON CLIMATE: Harvard researchers are out this morning with a peer-reviewed analysis concluding Exxon Mobil misled the public over the course of 40 years of climate change communications. After poring over its scientific research, internal company memos, and paid, editorial-style advertisements, the study concluded that 83 percent of Exxon scientists' peer-reviewed papers and 80 percent of the company's internal communications acknowledged climate science — but just 12 percent of its advertisements did so, and 81 percent actually doubted human activity's role in the problem.

"We conclude that ExxonMobil misled the public," the report concludes. "We stress that the question is not whether ExxonMobil 'suppressed climate change research,' but rather how they communicated about it." The study, supported by Harvard University Faculty Development Funds and by the Rockefeller Family Fund, acknowledges "textual analysis is inherently subjective" but says the overall trends are "clear." The findings will be published in the journal Environmental Research Letters.

Exxon, which did not have advance access to the study, did not immediately respond to a request for comment on Tuesday night. A spokesman for the fossil fuel giant previously said allegations from environmental groups it misled the public and investors on climate change were based on "distorted reports that they have commissioned and a distorted history of climate research that we've done openly with government bodies."

MONUMENT DECISIONS IMMINENT: Rumors are swirling around Washington that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke may send over his verdict as soon as today on what to do with the nearly two dozen national monuments the White House put up for review. The House Natural Resources Democratic staff released a report complaining Zinke used a secretive review process, obscuring the true purpose was to open up lands for fossil fuel development. "If President Trump and Secretary Zinke don't listen, then the courts and the voters will teach them that our public lands are not industry playthings to dispose of as they see fit," Ranking member Raul Grijalva said in a statement.

Religious leaders weigh in: A group of Christian leaders sent Vice President Mike Pence a letter Tuesday urging the administration to "not rescind or rollback any designations" of the national monuments currently under consideration. They called the Antiquities Act an "important tool" for "protecting the special places of God's Creation where we play, pray and learn."

Irony alert: During an interview with Fox News' "Fox and Friends," Pence said he was in favor of building more monuments around the country rather than tearing down existing ones. "I'm someone who believes in more monuments, not less monuments," he said in response to questions about whether statues commemorating the Confederacy should be removed. We'll see if that desire to preserve monuments extends to ones designated by other presidents. Remember Zinke already preliminarily suggested shrinking Utah's Bears Ears National Monument back in April.

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and ACC's Jonathan Corley nailed Nashville as the biggest U.S. city to glimpse Monday's total eclipse. For today: What is the only U.S. state to grow coffee commercially? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

DO YOUR DUTIES: Biodiesel shipments from Argentina and Indonesia will face import duties after the National Biodiesel Board notched up an early victory in a trade case from the Commerce Department Tuesday, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. In light of the preliminary ruling, Argentine and Indonesian companies will have to pay a cash deposit on shipments to the U.S. to cover potential future penalties. The Commerce Department will now take comment on the preliminary ruling and then issue a final decision likely next year. Here are the decisions on Argentina and Indonesian biodiesel.

RIN-sanity: The price for credits in biodiesel jumped 8 cents on the news, to $1.17, the oil tracking service OPIS tells ME. Biodiesel credits are critical for refiners who need to buy them to comply with the Renewable Fuel Standard. EPA requires more ethanol blending than happens in reality, and some refiners buy the biodiesel credits to make up the difference. The ruling from Commerce has now raised their compliance costs.

MORE MURKOWSKI INTRIGUE: Zinke's July calendar, which the agency released Tuesday, was relatively light compared to prior months on meetings with energy industry interests. But it did provide further evidence that the secretary may have pressed Alaska Sen. Dan Sullivan on July 26 over Sen. Lisa Murkowski's vote on the healthcare bill, something the secretary has not denied doing. Hours before calling Sullivan that day, Zinke had a number of White House meetings and calls, including with Vice President Mike Pence, then-White House chief strategist Steve Bannon and Trump's top energy aide Mike Catanzaro. Zinke's calendar did not include a call with Murkowski, but the senator has said they did talk that day.

Zinke's July calendar also included a meeting with President Donald Trump's daughter-in-law Lara Trump on wild horses and animal welfare issues and a call with a number of lawmakers on both sides of the aisle, including Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee ranking Democrat Maria Cantwell.

Fascinating tidbit: From an excellent New York Times report on the simmering feud between Trump and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell: "Senator Lisa Murkowski of Alaska told colleagues that when Mr. Trump's interior secretary threatened to pull back federal funding for her state, she felt boxed in and unable to vote for the health care bill." Back in late July, Murkowski told the Alaska Dispatch News that Zinke's forceful call didn't sway her vote on the healthcare bill.

FIRSTENERGY'S TOUGH SELL: FirstEnergy Solutions, a unit of FirstEnergy Corp., wanted the federal government to use its emergency powers to save coal plants that teetered on the edge of insolvency — saving some of Trump supporter Robert Murray's coal mines that supply fuel for the plants — but it had a major problem: The power from the plants isn't deemed especially critical. The federal government has authority to keep plants open when crucial to local supplies, but PJM Interconnection, which manages the largest grid in the country, has plenty of power. In an April letter, the grid operator told Ohio Governor John Kasich that thanks to its capacity market, which pays power plants to remain on standby even if they don't run, it had 6 percent more power on reserve than it needed. The letter also said the operator maintained a robust process for managing retirements, and that typically new plants could come in to replace older ones.

That badly undermined FirstEnergy's position, as did the fact that the company asked for a three-year commitment to keep the plants operating. Normally the authority granted under section 202 of the Federal Power Act is used for short periods when there's an unexpected disruption, like when in April lightning struck a plant in Oklahoma, creating a need to change how nearby transmission operated for a few months. Keeping the plants open for so long would entail paying their owners to stay available — which presumably was FirstEnergy's point, but it adds costs for PJM and its ratepayers.

ICYMI: Pro's Alex Guillén and Eric Wolff look at how two wealthy backers of Trump — coal magnate Robert Murray and Wall Street billionaire Carl Icahn — failed to get their policy priorities turned into action despite the president's backing. Murray's failure to get DOE to use its emergency powers to force some Rust Belt coal-fired power plants to stay open, and Icahn's earlier inability to convince EPA to alter its ethanol rule, show the limits of trying to circumvent the federal bureaucracy even with a sympathetic ear in 1600 Pennsylvania.

INSIDE TRUMP WORLD'S NAFTA STRUGGLES: The Trump administration is grappling with its position on an investor-state dispute settlement mechanism in NAFTA, ratcheting up concerns among businesses eager to see the U.S. make a clear commitment to continue with the controversial provision as it has in past trade deals, according to sources with knowledge of the deliberations. The controversial international arbitration mechanism allows private companies to seek damages from government actions that violate their investment rights under a trade deal. Business groups, particularly in the oil and gas sector, have launched a full-court press on Hill offices to request that they put pressure on the administration to include the dispute provision. One lobbyist source said the energy sector's support of a modernized NAFTA deal hinges directly on the inclusion of ISDS.

Speaking of which, Trump on Tuesday night in Phoenix: "I think we'll probably end up terminating NAFTA at some point."

DEVIL'S IN THE DETAILS, GUYS: Trump's administration may seek to secure stakes in Afghanistan's vast mineral deposits — estimated at $1 trillion by one U.S. government report — as a way to offset ongoing military costs there, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. "We're looking at all those types of options," a senior White House adviser said. Analysts caution extracting and processing tons of minerals from a war zone and then transporting them out of a country with little modern infrastructure won't be happening anytime soon.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR: A coal industry source tell ME the Energy Department's big grid study will finally be released on Thursday.

DAKOTA ACCESS COMPANY SUES 'ECO-TERRORIST' GROUPS: Energy Transfer Partners, the owner of the Dakota Access pipeline, filed a lawsuit Tuesday against Greenpeace International and Earth First!, asserting they worked to spread misinformation about the project and damage the company, Diamond Naga Siu reports. The federal racketeering lawsuit alleges the groups launched "attacks [that] were calculated and thoroughly irresponsible, causing enormous harm to people and property along the pipeline's route."

In response, Greenpeace USA General Counsel Tom Wetterer bashed the filing as the second "meritless" lawsuit filed against them by the law firm led by Trump's former personal attorney Marc Kasowitz. And Earthjustice President Trip Van Noppen called the lawsuit "an unprovoked and malicious attack on those who would use the power of the law and free speech for good."

EPA IG TO REVIEW TSCA DATA REPORTING: EPA's inspector general has begun an inquiry into chemical data reporting under the reformed Toxic Substances Control Act, according to a newly posted memo. The reformed law requires chemical makers and importers to give EPA key data about those chemicals used to review potential risks, and to update that data every four years. Investigators will look specifically at "how the EPA is ensuring that companies are compliant" and whether EPA is using that data to prioritize which chemicals to review for health and environmental risks.

PELOSI, OTHERS TALK MARINE MONUMENTS: House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, Reps. Jared Huffman and Jackie Speier, and others are hosting a public forum today at the Bay Model Visitor Center in Sausalito, Calif. on protecting national marine sanctuaries and monuments. As a reminder, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross has until Oct. 25 to send Trump a report on the potential for offshore fossil fuel production, among other things, in 11 marine national monuments and sanctuaries. Members of the public will have an opportunity to comment at the event, which kicks off at 10:30 a.m. PST and can be streamed here.

MAIL CALL! PUMP THE BRAKES ON LNG EXPORTS: The Industrial Energy Consumers of America sent a letter Tuesday to the Trump administration asking for a moratorium on additional approvals of natural gas exports. "If we export too much LNG, prices will eventually rise to global levels," Paul Cicio, the manufacturing group's president, wrote. "At that point, foreign nations demand for LNG will dictate what price Americans pay. This is certainly not in the interests of the American public."

ELECTRIC CONTRACTORS OPPOSE SUNIVA PETITION: The National Electrical Contractors Association sent a letter to the International Trade Commission Tuesday opposing an effort from Suniva and SolarWorld to have imported solar cells or panels slapped with steep tariffs. "We believe the proposed remedies will significantly harm American manufacturers of solar parts and panels and ultimately crush demand for solar installations nationwide," the group wrote.

ME FIRST — CLEAN ENERGY WEEK EXPANDS! The Center for Liquefied Natural Gas has joined the steering committee of National Clean Energy Week, bringing the number of groups planning the events of the week of Sept. 25 to 29.

HERE'S ZINKE IN AN APRON: His wife, Lola, tweeted a picture of him cooking breakfast in a pretty sweet apron. Check it out here.

REPORT: HERE'S HOW TO BOOST RGGI: Resources for the Future released a report Tuesday outlining ways to strengthen the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative. Their top idea is a new mechanism known as an emissions containment reserve, which would be triggered when carbon allowance prices drop below a threshold that would be set to ensure it was still driving emissions reductions.

MOVER, SHAKER: Colin O'Neil has been promoted to legislative director at the Environmental Working Group where his portfolio includes agriculture and food, cosmetics and chemicals outreach efforts on Capitol Hill. Before joining EWG, he was director of government affairs at the Center for Food Safety.

QUICK HITS

- In Italy's Drought-Hit Vineyards, the Harvest of a Changing Climate. New York Times.
- Chris Christie Leaves A Trumpian Legacy On Climate Change. But It Won't Last. Huffington Post.
- Kentuckians to Trump: Restart study of how surface mining hurts health. Lexington Herald-Leader.
- California sees strong results from cap-and-trade auction after program extension. Los Angeles Times.
- Oil prices climb as traders eye another U.S. crude drawdown. Reuters
- In Alaska, One Man Fights To Save Oil Fund As Reserves Dry Up. NPR.
- Climate change serves as central concern at annual Lake Tahoe Summit. Tahoe Daily Tribune.

HAPPENING TODAY

crickets

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/08/peer-reviewed-study-finds-exxon-misled-public-on-climate-024357>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Exxon scrambles to contain climate crusade Back

By Andrew Restuccia | 05/09/2016 05:28 AM EDT

On Nov. 3, ExxonMobil dispatched its top lobbyists to Capitol Hill on an urgent mission — tamping down an escalating campaign aimed at making the country's largest oil company pay a legal and political price for its role in warming the planet.

The meeting marked a striking shift in Exxon's handling of the controversy. The notion of holding oil companies responsible for global warming, in the same way tobacco companies had to pay billions of dollars in damages over the health effects of cigarettes, had long been seen as a quixotic quest led by scruffy, oil-hating extremists. But POLITICO's interviews with dozens of activists, industry officials and lawmakers suggest that support for a legal crusade against Exxon is growing far beyond the political fringe — and now poses the biggest existential threat the company has faced in decades.

Just five days before the meeting on Capitol Hill, Democratic presidential front-runner Hillary Clinton had urged the Justice Department to investigate whether the petroleum giant spent decades deceiving the public about the threat of climate change. State attorneys general had Exxon in their sights as well, preparing to issue subpoenas that would eventually rope in virtually all of Washington's conservative policy apparatus. A four-year effort by green activists, scientists and lawyers to turn Big Oil's biggest player into the poster child for climate change — deliberately patterned after the successful campaign to take down tobacco — was shaking the descendant of John D. Rockefeller's Standard Oil empire to its core.

So the four Exxon executives arrived at the office of California Democrat Rep. Ted Lieu with one job: convincing four of their most vocal congressional critics that the company wasn't the polluting villain its enemies were making it out to be.

Exxon supports "sound climate policy" and has tripled its greenhouse-gas cuts since 2008, the executives boasted to the lawmakers in a 10-page glossy presentation, later obtained by POLITICO. Exxon was even on record in favor of a tax on carbon emissions — a climate remedy more radical than anything President Barack Obama has proposed.

The company left empty-handed, though, after refusing to directly answer questions about whether it had suppressed internal research that underscored the threat of climate change while publicly sowing doubt about climate science, according to people in the room.

The presentation made at least one thing clear, however: After years of shrugging off pressure from eco-activists, Exxon was showing signs of worry.

And Exxon wasn't the only one with reasons to be nervous.

Interviews with advocates on both sides of the feud reveal how quickly the anti-Exxon movement has sprouted, to the point that it's now consuming op-ed pages, airwaves and courtrooms across the country. Once merely intent on shaming the oil giant into better behavior, environmentalists are pursuing a strategy to discredit the company, weaken it politically and perhaps make it pay the kinds of multibillion-dollar legal settlements that began hitting the tobacco industry in the 1990s.

The campaign — led by some of the same climate activists who defied Beltway wisdom by killing the Keystone XL oil pipeline — has mushroomed into far more than a greens-versus-Exxon feud.

Just last week, a leaked subpoena from the attorney general in the U.S. Virgin Islands revealed a vast probe that demanded Exxon's communications with more than 100 free-market think tanks, conservative consulting firms and climate-skeptic scientists — proof, the company's supporters say, that environmentalists are using the legal system to launch a broad attack on their political opponents. The subpoena targets Exxon's dealings with parties including the Competitive Enterprise Institute, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce Foundation, the Hoover Institution, George Mason University and scientists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the University of Alabama and the University of Delaware.

The first subpoena to Exxon came from New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman, who used his state's powerful consumer fraud law to hit the company with legal papers just a day after the lobbyists' meeting on the Hill. AGs in California and Massachusetts have also launched investigations into the company.

Members of Congress have weighed in too, with Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.) and presidential contender Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) urging DOJ to consider bringing civil racketeering cases against oil companies.

"Obviously, we take it extremely seriously," Exxon spokesman Alan Jeffers told POLITICO, noting that the company is complying with the New York subpoena while it fights the racketeering summons from Virgin Islands Attorney General Claude Walker. The greens' campaign is built on "distorted reports that they have commissioned and a distorted history of climate research that we've done openly with government bodies," Jeffers added.

Both sides describe the political stakes of the campaign as huge.

"Exxon's been able to work its political will for a quarter of a century — they shouldn't be able to," said climate activist Bill McKibben, a leader of the fight against Keystone. "They should be a toxic political brand."

"Exxon is taking this real seriously, and that tells you something, doesn't it?" Matt Pawa, a Massachusetts lawyer who has repeatedly gone after Exxon in court, said in an interview. "Maybe they've got something to hide."

Even rival oil companies that disdain Exxon's support for a carbon tax are spooked about how far the greens' campaign has gotten, especially when the industry is already reeling from a huge slump in fuel prices.

"Industry doesn't look at this and say, 'Too bad for Exxon,'" one fossil-fuel lobbyist said. "We say it's very chilling, a horrible precedent, and no one wants to see themselves next."

Underscoring the industry's anxiety is the breadth and intensity of the counterattack it has mounted. Industry consultants are accusing the state AGs of colluding with environmentalists, and have questioned the role of foundations created by the Rockefeller family — petroleum heirs turned anti-oil activists — in helping bankroll some news organizations' Exxon investigations.

The industry is even exploring the idea of launching a counter-probe: A lobbyist for one of Exxon's industry rivals told POLITICO he has reached out to red-state attorneys general to gauge their interest in probing where environmental groups are getting their funding. No takers have emerged so far.

But industry backers' main argument is that the greens are assaulting the constitutional rights of anyone who dissents from mainstream climate science. Heritage Foundation fellow Hans von Spakovsky has denounced Schneiderman's probe as a "Soviet-Style investigation," while conservative columnist George Will called it an example of "gangster government."

"Instead of honoring legitimate academic and scientific inquiry, the far-left has gone to extremes to silence those who disagree," Oklahoma Republican Sen. Jim Inhofe, the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, said Wednesday. He added, "This is nothing more than a misuse of power to score cheap political points."

Exxon itself has made similar arguments, fighting the Virgin Islands subpoenas in court as an infringement on the company's free-speech rights. But Walker, the territory's AG, dismissed that reasoning.

"The First Amendment is not a defense to fraud," Walker told POLITICO through a spokesman, and "the Constitution provides no right to mislead shareholders."

"The tobacco companies," he added, "raised exactly these arguments. ... That was soundly rejected by the courts."

The seeds of the Venus flytrap closing around Exxon were planted in June 2012 in the wealthy seaside town of La Jolla, Calif., where two dozen scientists, lawyers and academics huddled for a scholarly conference on an issue that had vexed the environmental movement for decades: How, on a planet filled with 7 billion people, do you hold oil companies liable for their role in worsening climate change?

"This wasn't a strategy session," said Peter Frumhoff, a conference organizer and the director of science and policy at the Union of Concerned Scientists. "This was a kind of first cut at, for lack of a better word, an exercise in applied scholarship."

But attendees emerged with two strategies that would set the tone for today's anti-Exxon fight.

First, they underscored the importance of building a catalogue of peer-reviewed research making the case that individual corporations could be held responsible for their contributions to climate change, a step that could serve as Exhibit A in future legal action. That tactic took a page from Exxon itself, which funded research after its 1989 Valdez spill arguing that Alaska's Prince William Sound was already recovering from the damage.

Richard Heede, a climate researcher who helped organize the La Jolla conference, said the attendees realized the "value" of having credible peer-reviewed research.

Working with other academics like Naomi Oreskes, whose book "Merchants of Doubt" drew parallels between the climate and tobacco fights, Heede published articles in peer-reviewed journals that placed the responsibility for climate change at the feet of major fossil fuel companies. In a November 2013 study, for example, Heede estimated that 63 percent of worldwide emissions of industrial carbon dioxide and methane came from a group of 90 "carbon major" entities. (ExxonMobil was prominent in the list.) Environmental groups like Greenpeace immediately trumpeted the research.

"For a long time, fossil fuel companies have benefited from the idea that everyone is responsible for climate change — and if everyone is responsible, then nobody is responsible," said Carroll Muffett, the president of the Center for International Environmental Law. "Now the science is moving into a much finer resolution."

Second, the La Jolla attendees agreed that obtaining and publicizing internal corporate documents was the key to turning public opinion against the oil companies and eventually securing a legal victory.

"A key breakthrough in the public and legal case for tobacco control came when internal documents came to light showing the tobacco industry had knowingly misled the public," the 2012 conference organizers wrote in a memo on the meeting. "Similar documents may well exist in the vaults of the fossil fuel industry and their trade associations and front groups, and there are many possible approaches to unearthing them."

Exxon's opponents are likely to get hold of more internal records as the attorneys general proceed with their investigations. Schneiderman's aides are culling through tens of thousands of pages of documents from the company, according to a person familiar with the probe.

"I'd be amazed if there aren't several paper trails that will be found through subpoenas," said veteran lawyer Richard Ayres, one of the Natural Resources Defense Council's co-founders and an attendee at the 2012 conference. "Once subpoenas are answered, the trails will begin to be more visible and people will find this idea of litigation a lot more appealing."

The source familiar with Schneiderman's probe said the wide leeway afforded by his state's financial fraud law, the Martin Act, aided his request for documents. Those include records of Exxon's internal research into climate change's causes, the role of climate information in business decisions, and marketing, advertising and company communications.

From the start, Exxon's critics drew heavily on the lengthy legal crusade against tobacco companies that culminated in a massive settlement in 1998 totaling hundreds of billions of dollars.

Tobacco critics made little headway in the 1950s, when few Americans knew of the dangers of smoking. But the anti-tobacco fight gained steam as studies directly linked cigarettes to cancer and other ailments, eventually allowing the states to collect huge windfalls from the tobacco companies as compensation for smoking's health costs.

For the people gathered in La Jolla, even getting to the lawsuit stage would be a victory. "No matter what the outcome, litigation can offer an opportunity to inform the public," anti-tobacco litigator Sharon Eubanks said at the meeting, according to the meeting notes.

At the heart of any legal strategy is proof of a conspiracy or fraud — in this case, an alleged effort by oil companies to conceal their internal knowledge of their product's contributions to climate change. The activists' big break came in September and October, when the nonprofit investigative website InsideClimate News and the Los Angeles Times published stories alleging that Exxon's scientists had known as far back as the 1970s that the company's fossil fuels would cook the planet, even as its executives hid that knowledge.

The stories, citing internal Exxon documents, didn't make an immediate splash in Washington. Lieu and Rep. Mark DeSaulnier (D-Calif.) didn't ask DOJ to launch an investigation until Oct. 15. Exxon addressed the controversy for the first time on Oct. 21, singling out InsideClimate as "an anti-oil and gas activist organization" — the first of many times that the industry would slam the news outlet for taking money from the anti-fossil-fuel Rockefeller Brothers Fund and Rockefeller Family Fund.

Then the activists scored a political coup on Oct. 29 by injecting the issue into the mainstream of the presidential race. Responding to a question at a New Hampshire town hall, Hillary Clinton told an activist from McKibben's climate group that the Justice Department should look into Exxon's activities, saying, "There's a lot of evidence they misled."

Days later, Exxon's lobbyists were taking the meeting in Lieu's office with Lieu, DeSaulnier and two other liberal House Democrats. They aimed to "show the source documents that we think are the complete opposite of what the media reports have showed," Exxon spokesman Jeffers said afterward.

Their message: Exxon "believes in climate change, they believe it's largely caused by the burning of fossil fuels and human activity, and they support a fee on carbon," Lieu recalled in an interview. "That is the company line."

But when Lieu asked if Exxon supported any current proposal to tax the carbon in its nearly 25 billion barrels in proved worldwide oil reserves, the lobbyists said no. Nor would the company admit to the greens' accusations of deceiving the public.

"The basic questions were not at all resolved or seriously addressed in the meeting," Rep. Peter Welch (D-Vt.) told POLITICO. DeSaulnier called Exxon's pitch an attempt at "damage control," rather than an effort to be "open and honest and corrective."

American oil companies are coping with the anti-Exxon campaign at a uniquely vulnerable time, with oil prices dropping to a 13-year low in February. Exxon lost its top-ranked credit rating last month thanks to a debt load that has more than tripled since 2012 and earnings that fell by 50 percent last year.

To be sure, Exxon's status as one of the world's most profitable companies remains unshaken. Its market value is nearly double that of Chevron, the nation's second-biggest oil and gas company.

But as the greens' campaign matures, Washington's conservative firmament is broadcasting its fury at what it sees as a fishing expedition aimed at ferreting out embarrassing information about the company.

Among those fighting back is CEI-affiliated conservative activist Chris Horner, who has used public records requests to uncover internal documents about coordination between activists and state attorneys general. Horner, who runs an anti-environmentalist research machine called E&E Legal, released emails last month that showed the attorneys general consulting with an anti-Exxon lawyer and an official at the Union of Concerned Scientists before holding a news conference in March with former Vice President Al Gore.

Two BakerHostetler litigators, David Rivkin and Andrew Grossman, have also founded a project called Free Speech in Science accusing the environmentalists of attacking climate skeptics' constitutional rights.

"You don't normally choose a target first, based on their speech, and say you're going to pursue all theories" available to attack that target, said Grossman, also an adjunct scholar at the conservative Cato Institute. "What's really going on here is intimidation."

Leaders of the Federalist Society, an alliance of conservative lawyers that counts Supreme Court Justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito as members, have penned lengthy attacks on Schneiderman and other attorneys general investigating Exxon. National Review, Reason, Powerline and others followed suit in defending the oil giant, as have members of The Wall Street Journal's editorial board.

Exxon is "considering all of our options" for potential legal action against InsideClimate News, the Los Angeles Times or activist groups, spokesman Jeffers told POLITICO.

Aside from the company itself, the most vocal resistance to the greens has come from FTI Consulting, a firm filled with former Republican aides that has helped unify the GOP in defense of fossil fuels. Under the banner of Energy in Depth, a project it runs for the Independent Petroleum Association of America, FTI has peppered reporters with emails that suggest "collusion" between green activists and state AGs, and has raised questions over InsideClimate's Rockefeller grants.

The intensity of Energy in Depth's counter-assault reflects the degree of potential pain the entire industry faces from Exxon's troubles. IPAA senior vice president Jeff Eshelman said its efforts "haven't been to defend one company or interest, but rather to showcase [InsideClimate's] ongoing attacks on the American oil and gas industry that seem to be funded by multi-million-dollar activists."

InsideClimate News, which was named a Pulitzer Prize finalist last month for its Exxon stories, says it has received $25,000 from the Rockefeller Family Fund, or about 2 percent of the company's budget. The idea that the funding is influencing its news coverage is "an easy accusation, but it's completely baseless," founder and publisher David Sassoon told POLITICO. "Our funders have no access to our editorial and they never have."

As for Exxon, he said: "They have never asked us for a correction. They don't dispute the authenticity of the documents that our report is based on."

While nearly 200 nations hammered out a global climate agreement in Paris in December, many establishment environmentalists took a victory lap. But the anti-Exxon forces were girding for their next fight.

On the sidelines of the United Nations conference in Paris, Pawa — the Massachusetts lawyer — delivered a private talk to activists that McKibben described as his "opening argument in the case" against Exxon. Columbia Law School professor Michael Gerrard also spoke that day at Pawa's request about what he described as "some of the defenses that would be raised" by a corporation facing legal threats linked to its greenhouse gas emissions.

Pawa is a veteran Exxon antagonist, having won a $236 million judgment against Exxon in 2013 for polluting New Hampshire's groundwater. He helped an Alaskan Inuit village sue the company in 2008 over the rising seas that threatened the local economy.

And the previously unreported closed-door huddle in Paris wasn't the only place Pawa has touted his legal theory of Exxon's culpability.

He delivered a courtroom-style presentation titled "What Exxon Knew About Global Warming, and What it Did Anyway" in March at an environmental law conference in Oregon. Later that month, he led a closed-door briefing with Democratic attorneys general and their staff, according to emails obtained by Horner's conservative think tank.

Pawa's central role in the escalating bombardment of Exxon has made him a target, as the company's allies liken him to a puppet master orchestrating the campaign behind the scenes. But he told POLITICO that he is not formally involved in any state investigations, even as he suggested that more AGs could jump into the fray.

"There will be a successful outcome some day, whether it's my or another generation of lawyers," Pawa said. He added: "I do think we will be successful. I hope it's in the short term."

Activists plan to make a public stand at Exxon's annual shareholder meeting May 25, where several resolutions intended to force the company into acknowledging the climate threat will come to a vote.

The calls for a DOJ racketeering investigation from Clinton, Sanders, Lieu and Whitehouse, a former state attorney general, are also paying off. The Justice Department told Lieu in March that it had referred the requests to the FBI, a move that doesn't preclude DOJ later filing a civil complaint.

Walker, the Virgin Islands' AG, predicted that his Exxon probe will take longer than the four months it took for his office to secure an $800 million settlement in a separate case against Hess Oil. But otherwise, he said, a thorough inquiry "takes time, and my job is to get it done right, not fast."

Oil companies may face yet another headache if Democrats regain the Senate in November: Lawmakers such as Whitehouse told POLITICO they will push to hold hearings like those in the 1990s where tobacco executives had to testify under oath.

The prospect of intensifying political trouble for Exxon and other major oil companies while a legal case drags on is an integral design feature of activists' campaign against the company. Whether the endgame is the type of multibillion-dollar settlement that crippled cigarette makers, or whether it's a Beltway surrender that forces the company to do more on climate change, no longer matters.

What matters, the company's critics say, is sending a message to the industry that its days of climate obstructionism are over.

In the meantime, Whitehouse is betting that the flood of internal Exxon documents emerging as a result of the investigations will uncover damaging information.

"It wouldn't surprise me if some of these organizations were busily scrubbing their files to get rid of culpatory materials," he said.

Meanwhile, the industry's seemingly united pro-Exxon front belies a paradox: Other American oil companies are frustrated by the company's stated advocacy of a "revenue-neutral" carbon tax. No Democrat or environmentalist takes that stance seriously, but Exxon's willingness to even utter the phrase makes it an outlier among U.S. drillers and refiners, which fear that a levy on greenhouse gases could gain momentum if Clinton wins in November.

Many in the industry are also skeptical of Exxon's ties to the Democratic front-runner: The company's Washington office includes senior lobbyist Theresa Fariello, who bundles contributions for Clinton's campaign, and former Democratic aide Dan Easley, both of whom attended the Election Day meeting in Lieu's office.

"Exxon was one of the first companies out of the gate on a carbon tax, and they've made no secret they want to get along with the Clinton guys," said one fossil-fuel lobbyist unaffiliated with the company. "Their chickens are coming home to roost."

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke recommends shrinking Bears Ears monument Back

By Esther Whieldon | 06/12/2017 04:07 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke proposed shrinking the Bears Ears National Monument on Monday, trimming back the controversial Utah monument created by former President Barack Obama during his final days in office.

A preliminary review of the 1.4 million-acre monument that Zinke sent to the White House over the weekend shows his "belief that the monument needs to be right-sized," Zinke said in a statement.

Any move by President Donald Trump to alter the monument designed to protect thousands of sensitive archaeological sites will set off a legal fight with tribes and conservation groups that have complained the Native American ruins there were being damaged and would be threatened by oil and gas development in the area.

Zinke's preliminary recommendations to Trump show he did not plan to go as far as revoking Obama's monument designation — a move that has been sought by the state's congressional delegation.

"Rescinding the monument was an option, but looking at it, there are some antiquities within the monument that I think deserve to be protected," he said in a press call.

Trump has ordered Zinke to review 22 of the national monuments that were established in the past two decades to determine if they should be altered or revoked. The secretary has until Aug. 24 to send his final recommendations to the White House, and Zinke has extended the comment period on Bears Ears to July 10.

Zinke is also pressing Congress to look at the Bears Ears boundaries "to see whether the lands are more appropriately designated as national conservation areas or national recreation areas," he said. "There's certainly a high demand of recreation. There's certainly a demand for conservation in some parts, but we believe that those areas are better suited under congressionally mandated designations than they are a monument."

The secretary also asked Congress to grant tribes the ability to co-manage specific areas within Bears Ears, and for Congress to clarify how wilderness areas that overlap with monuments should be treated, an issue for Bears Ears and some other monuments under review.

A former congressman from Montana, Zinke cited his concern that the federal government restricts activities on the land it designates as protected, saying that designating a monument the size of Bears Ears where "multiple-use management is hindered or prohibited is not the best use of the land and is not in accordance with the intention of the Antiquities Act."

President Barack Obama created the monument in southeast Utah in December, angering Republicans who accused the administration of federal overreach by ignoring locals who opposed the move and using the Antiquities Act to cut off commercial activity such as mining and oil and gas drilling.

Prior legislative attempts by the Utah delegation to curb federal monuments in the state have failed. Utah Republicans Rob Bishop and Jason Chaffetz did manage last year to get their Utah Public Lands Initiative legislation through the Natural Resources Committee, which Bishop chairs, but it never received a floor vote.

If Trump ultimately decides to alter Bears Ears or the other monuments on the list, he is certain to face legal challenges from environmental groups. "An attack on one monument is an attack on all of them," said Jesse Prentice-Dunn, advocacy director at the Center for Western Priorities.

Past presidents have changed the size of monuments but none have revoked them entirely, and legal questions remain as to whether the law allows a president to fully undo their predecessor's actions.

Zinke last month traveled to the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante monuments and this week he will head to New England to visit the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument in Maine, which is also under review.

Zinke has repeatedly talked about the need to balance conservation with commercial and recreational demands on public lands, and has already this year ended the moratorium on new coal leases and launched reviews on ways to open up more areas for oil and gas development.

To view online click here.

Back

U.S. biodiesel industry gets early win in trade case Back

By Eric Wolff | 08/22/2017 05:05 PM EDT

The Commerce Department will impose import duties on biodiesel shipments from Argentina and Indonesia as a result of a trade case brought by domestic producers, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said Tuesday.

"The U.S. values its relationships with Argentina and Indonesia, but even friendly nations must play by the rules," Ross said in a statement announcing the rulings.

The department found the Argentine and Indonesian governments set up subsidies in violation of international trade laws, and penalties are needed to even out prices. "The subsidization of goods by foreign governments is something that the Trump administration takes very seriously, and we will continue to evaluate and verify the accuracy of this preliminary determination," Ross added.

Because the ruling is preliminary, companies in Argentina and Indonesia will have to pay a cash deposit on exports to the U.S. to cover potential future penalties. The cash deposit rates will range from 50.29 percent to 64.17 percent of the value of Argentine biodiesel, and from 41.06 percent to 68.28 percent for product from Indonesia.

Commerce also imposed a retroactive penalty so that the deposit rates will apply to biodiesel exports to the U.S. from those countries dating back to May, rather than starting Tuesday, as would normally be the case.

The National Biodiesel Board and 15 biodiesel producers brought the case in response to rapidly increasing imports of biodiesel from the two countries.

"The Commerce Department has recognized what this industry has known all along — that foreign biodiesel producers have benefited from massive subsidies that have severely injured U.S. biodiesel producers," Doug Whitehead, NBB's chief operating officer, said in a statement.

The National Association of Truck Stop Operators opposed the rulings, arguing they would raise fuel prices in the U.S. and ultimately lead to higher costs for consumer goods transported by truck in the U.S. "Any outcome that results in cutting off Americans' access to cleaner burning fuels, such as biodiesel, from foreign markets is a bad day for the United States," David Fialkov, NATSO's vice president of government relations, said in a statement.

Commerce will take comment on the preliminary rulings and then issue final decisions, which are likely to come next year.

Commerce is expected in October to issue a preliminary ruling in a separate case on whether Argentina and Indonesia deliberately dumped biodiesel in the U.S., undermining U.S. producers. NBB and the 15 biodiesel producers brought that action as well.

A memo Commerce released Tuesday on Argentine imports is here. The decision is here. A memo on Indonesian imports may be read here. The decision is here.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump rejects wealthy friends' pleas for help Back

By Alex Guillén and Eric Wolff | 08/22/2017 07:30 PM EDT

Coal magnate Robert Murray has just joined Wall Street billionaire Carl Icahn in an exclusive club — wealthy backers of President Donald Trump who tried and failed to get lucrative concessions from his administration.

Murray, CEO of Murray Energy, one of the nation's biggest and most politically active coal miners, complained in an Aug. 4 letter made public Tuesday that the Energy Department had dragged its feet on his request that it use its emergency powers to force some Rust Belt coal-fired power plants to stay open. Trump was so taken by the idea that he immediately turned to Energy Secretary Rick Perry and ordered him to do it, wrote Murray, who said he had witnessed the conversation.

But DOE said no.

Murray's failure to shift the policy, and Icahn's earlier inability to convince the Environmental Protection Agency to alter its ethanol rule, raises questions about the limits of bulldog business leaders to circumvent the government's bureaucracy, even in an administration run by a sympathetic billionaire.

"These are two people who really don't understand how government works talking to a president who came into office not understanding how government works," said Jeff Navin, a founder of Boundary Stone Partners and former acting chief of staff at the Department of Energy under President Barack Obama. "What they're asking for causes serious legal problems for the agencies they're asking to take these steps."

Some conservatives, meanwhile, praised Trump for sticking up for market principles by refusing to grant favors to individual supporters.

The Trump administration "is committed to making sound policy decisions based on market principles and the rule of law, not political favoritism," said Tom Pyle, president of the industry-funded American Energy Alliance and former head of the Trump transition team at the Energy Department. "This is welcome news for Main Street and a wake-up call for K Street."

Icahn was an early Trump supporter — the two men go back decades — and though Murray started 2016 backing Texas Sen. Ted Cruz, he eventually boarded the Trump train, hosting a major fundraiser in West Virginia and offering to educate Trump on coal issues. Trump's victory in November meant both had a chance to advance pet policies, especially since it seems both men have regular access to the president.

Yet both met with defeat.

The Energy Department rejected Murray's request that it use a special authority meant to protect the electric grid during emergencies to order FirstEnergy Solutions, part of Ohio-based utility FirstEnergy Corp., to keep open its coal-fired plants supplied by Murray's mines, even if the utility enters bankruptcy proceedings and would otherwise shut them down. Murray said that if those power plants shut down, it would force his company into bankruptcy.

Trump seemed fully supportive in private meetings, Murray revealed in letters to the White House, which were first published by The Associated Press.

At one meeting with the president, Trump turned to Perry in front of Murray "and said three (3) times 'I want this done,'" the coal company owner wrote. During a subsequent meeting with Murray and FirstEnergy Corp. CEO Charles Jones, Trump told an aide to "'tell [National Economic Council Director Gary] Cohn to do whatever these two want him to do.'"

But despite Trump's reported enthusiasm about granting Murray's unusual request, and despite Murray's assurances that other coal producers would benefit as well, the administration this week rejected it. DOE said in a short statement that "the evidence does not warrant the use of this emergency authority."

A White House spokeswoman did not address whether Trump had made the promises to Murray but said the president had acted on behalf of coal miners by killing Obama-era rules.

"Whether through repealing the Clean Power Plan and the 'Waters of the U.S. Rule,' removing the U.S. from the Paris Climate Agreement, or signing legislation to overturn rules and policies designed to stop coal mining, President Trump continues to fight for miners every day," White House spokeswoman Kelly Love said in a statement.

Similarly, Icahn's push to change a federal biofuel program to help his oil refining company CVR Energy suffered defeat earlier in the month. The Wall Street investor for years had railed against the EPA's Renewable Fuel Standard, which requires gasoline refiners to blend ethanol into their fuel, and Icahn's role as an unofficial Trump adviser on regulations presented him the opening he had sought.

In the early weeks of the Trump administration, Icahn presented the White House with language for an executive order to overturn the rule, which was costing his company hundreds of millions of dollars. But Icahn's effort hit a wall of opposition from oil companies and biofuel makers, and by spring, the proposal was largely left for dead. Sources told POLITICO earlier this month that the president would not be changing the biofuel program, though EPA has yet to make the decision official.

Icahn "comes in hot, his guy wins, Trump places a crown on Icahn's head, and Icahn says 'OK, it's corporate raider time,'" said Tyson Slocum, energy director for the nonprofit consumer advocacy group Public Citizen. "He knows hardball tactics. What Carl Icahn doesn't know is D.C."

Last week, Icahn resigned his title, and in another sign that he was wrapping up his affairs in D.C., he settled a court challenge to an enforcement action brought by the Federal Railroad Administration against American Railcar Industries, another Icahn-controlled company. That final settlement largely resembles the inspection regime the agency originally imposed, an FRA spokeswoman said.

One critic said the lack of experience in the new administration appeared to open the door for both Icahn and Murray, even if neither managed to step through it.

"I think we've seen, in this administration, at least, reports of an under-attentiveness to those procedural and institutional safeguards. That creates risk for unsound decisions to be made," said Ali Zaidi, a former Obama White House energy adviser now at the law firm Morrison & Foerster.

Icahn and Murray aren't the only ones seeking special treatment.

Coal billionaire-turned-West Virginia Gov. Jim Justice has proposed a federal subsidy for Appalachian coal in a plan that could net his own mines millions of dollars.

Justice privately pitched Trump on a subsidy that would pay utilities $15 per ton of Appalachian coal burned, and he said in a recent interview the president was "really interested" in the plan, which would cost an estimated $4.5 billion a year and likely require congressional approval.

But Justice's proposal has not been received well by key circles. It's gone over "like a fart in church" with Western coal miners, according to Travis Deti, executive director of the Wyoming Mining Association. And Wyoming's congressional delegation — including Senate Environment and Public Works Chairman John Barrasso, a Republican — panned the idea in a letter to Trump. Democrats, environmentalists and budget-hawk Republicans are also opposed to any coal subsidy.

Justice might look to the results that Icahn and Murray got.

Icahn and Murray "both became completely consumed with their own narrow self-interest, and they completely lost sight that there are a lot of stakeholders — including corporate stakeholders — that may not like their proposals," said Public Citizen's Slocum.

To view online click here.

Back

White House eyes Afghanistan resources to defray costs Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 08/22/2017 03:01 PM EDT

President Donald Trump may press for a U.S. role in tapping Afghanistan's vast mineral reserves to defray the cost of military operations there, a senior adviser to Trump confirmed to POLITICO Tuesday.

Trump, who repeatedly called for the U.S. to take Iraqi oil to pay for its mission in that country, plans to increase troop levels in Afghanistan. But while he vowed in his policy speech on Monday that the U.S. would not engage in "nation-building again," he also said the U.S. would "participate in economic development to help defray the cost of the war to us."

Asked whether Trump was considering grabbing a stake in Afghanistan's vast mineral deposits — estimated at $1 trillion by one U.S. government report — a senior White House adviser said it was on the table.

"We're looking at all those types of options," the adviser said.

A White House spokeswoman said there were no new announcements at the moment.

The war-torn country has an estimated 60 million metric tons of copper and 2.2 billion metric tons of iron ore, plus deposits of magnesium, gold, silver, rubies and other valuable resources spread across the country, according to a U.S. Geological Survey study. It also holds up to 1.6 billion barrels of recoverable oil and 16 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, according to government data — a relative pittance compared to some of its Middle East neighbors, but enough that Exxon Mobil and other oil companies sniffed around the area briefly.

But extracting and processing tons of minerals in a war zone and transporting it out of the mountainous country with few modern roads or bridges is not something that can be done anytime soon, analysts said. Armed guerrilla groups and warlords currently mine the deposits to fund their own operations, according to a study by Global Witness, a nonprofit that campaigns for transparency in mining, oil and gas sectors.

Afghanistan's inherent infrastructure difficulties, both physical and political, blocked the building of a natural gas pipeline through the country in the late 1990s.

In 1997, Unocal, which was later bought by Chevron, joined a group of companies seeking to build a $2.5 billion pipeline transporting natural gas from across the country, but it abandoned the effort. A company executive told the House Foreign Relations Committee in 1998 the lack of a strong government in the country posed a serious challenge to getting any energy infrastructure built there.

Trump can look at China for an example of how things can go wrong on the mining front, said Tony Cordesman, Burke chair in strategy at the Center for Strategic International Studies.

In 2007, two Chinese mining companies obtained Afghan government permission to extract copper from the country's Aynak region. A decade later, the project has stalled amid security concerns, contract disputes and controversy over the Chinese consortium's handling of Buddhist relics at the site.

"Above all it's a security problem. Is there mineral wealth there? Yes. Are we in position to secure a mine? If you don't have security, it is extremely difficult," Cordesman said.

To view online click here.

Back

Dakota Access owner sues green groups Back

By Diamond Naga Siu | 08/22/2017 04:44 PM EDT

Dakota Access Pipeline owner Energy Transfer Partners filed a federal racketeering lawsuit today against Greenpeace International and Earth First!, contending the environmental groups worked together to spread false information about the company to raise money and damage Energy Transfer's business.

"The alleged Enterprise is comprised of rogue environmental groups and militant individuals who employ a pattern of criminal activity and a campaign of misinformation for purposes of increasing donations and advancing their political or business agendas," ETP and its parent company said in a statement. "The Complaint asserts that the attacks were calculated and thoroughly irresponsible, causing enormous harm to people and property along the pipeline's route."

The 187-page complaint additionally alleges that "smaller, more violent eco-terrorist organizations and radicalized individuals" are mishandling their funds and instead of using it to help the environment, they used the money for personal gain.

"Under the 'Greenpeace Model,' raising money and the network's profile is the primary objective, not saving the environment," their complaint wrote. "Greenpeace's most senior leaders have admitted that their goal is not to present accurate facts, but to 'emotionalize' issues and thereby 'pressure' (i.e. manipulate) their donor audiences into parting with their money."

Greenpeace USA General Counsel Tom Wetterer said this is the second "meritless" lawsuit filed against them by the law firm led by President Donald Trump's former personal attorney Marc Kasowitz.

"They are apparently trying to market themselves as corporate mercenaries willing to abuse the legal system to silence legitimate advocacy work," Wetterer said in a statement.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include:

Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Pruitt heads to House grilling today — Major flop in Alaska lease sale bodes ill for ANWR estimates — McIntyre gets sworn in at FERC today
Date: Thursday, December 07, 2017 5:45:34 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 12/07/2017 05:43 AM EDT

With help from Emily Holden, Eric Wolff and Alex Guillén

WELCOME TO CONGRESS, MR. PRUITT: EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt makes his long-awaited first appearance before a House Energy and Commerce subpanel this morning where he's expected to get grilled on a host of issues. The session will be broken into two segments — 10-11 a.m. and then 2 p.m. onwards — to allow Pruitt to attend a White House meeting on biofuels (more on that below). Look for E&C Environment Chairman John Shimkus to recognize the arrangement is "not ideal, but gives members maximum ability to personally question the administrator about the agency's mission" during his opening remarks.

What Republicans will say: Expect Chairman Greg Walden to press Pruitt on budget transparency and his plans to address staffing issues: "I expect that 'Back to Basics' is not an abdication of environmental protection, but rather a rededication to mastering the most fundamental aspects of EPA's mission," he'll say, according to prepared remarks glimpsed by ME. Shimkus said his questions could touch on a range of topics, including TSCA, brownfields, safe drinking water and the agency's staffing.

And Democrats? "We're all noticing the orientation toward the environment is completely different with respect to budgeting, with respect to climate change, potentially with respect to methane, particulates," Rep. Scott Peters, a subcommittee member, told ME. "So, I just think we want to get a sense of where he's going and how he'll measure success." The committee's top Democrat, Frank Pallone, wouldn't reveal what he intends to grill Pruitt about when ME caught up to him in the hall.

Pro's Alex Guillén's expectations for Pruitt's first Capitol Hill appearance in six months: "Lawmakers have probably built up some serious questions in that time, so we could see questioning on practically any issue before EPA: the Clean Power Plan repeal effort; the Waters of the U.S. rewrite; Superfund work; proposed budget cuts; Pruitt's decision earlier this year not to ban chlorpyrifos; and his increased security and travel. Pruitt's prepared testimony offers a standard overview of his EPA philosophy."

Rally time: Environmental and public health advocates, including the Union of Concerned Scientists, Sierra Club, Business Forward and the Alliance of Nurses for Healthy Environments, will rally outside Rayburn at 9:20 a.m. to draw attention to Pruitt's lagging enforcement efforts, spending habits and overhauls of science advisory panels. Ahead of the session, the Environmental Defense Fund updated their "Pruitt Playbook" and the Union of Concerned Scientists offers some suggested questions to ask.

If you go: The hearing kicks off at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2123.

WHY PRUITT'S LEAVING: Sen. Ted Cruz has secured a meeting today at 11:30 a.m. with President Donald Trump and several Cabinet members, including Pruitt, for what he told ME is likely to be a "free-ranging discussion" about biofuels and the recent fights over the Renewable Fuel Standard. His message? "We need to find a solution that is a win-win. That is a win for corn farmers across the Midwest but at the same time is a win for blue-collar union members who work in refineries and right now are being bankrupted by a regulatory system that isn't working," the Texas Republican said. Other Senate Republicans are expected to attend as well (perhaps the ones who signed this letter). Remember Cruz still has a hold on Bill Northey's USDA's farm and conservation mission nomination, so watch to see if that's lifted as the most immediate outcome of the session.

Oilies only: Sen. Chuck Grassley wasn't invited to the meeting, his spokesman said, but not to worry: Grassley has said that a White House RFS meeting would be "a waste of time." And if there's one thing energy world knows now, it's that if you don't have Gang Grain, you got nothing.

WELCOME TO THURSDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and no one was able to name the Father Millet Cross national monument (which has since been transferred by Congress to a state park) as our nation's smallest at just 0.0074 acres when designated. For today: Which state currently has the most national monuments at 18? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

ARCTIC LEASE SALE FLOP: Despite touting the "largest ever" lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska, BLM received just bids on seven of the 900 tracts offered, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. Those bids, generating just $1.2 million in high bids, came jointly by ConocoPhillips and Anadarko for 80,000 acres, or less than 1 percent of the acreage offered. The highest bid amount was $14.99 per acre. The relatively low amount could undercut GOP arguments that opening up the nearby Arctic National Wildlife Refuge would generate $1 billion in revenue. Leasing of state land did quite a bit better, according to the Anchorage Daily News.

For perspective: At the price of $14.99/acre, "leasing the entirety of the Arctic Refuge Coastal Plain's 1.5 million acres would raise slightly more than $11 million in revenue for the federal government, a far cry from the billion dollar lie that Trump and Republicans are feeding the American public," the Alaska Wilderness League's Kristen Miller said in a statement. Remember the Republican budget calls for Senate ENR to kick in $1 billion in revenue (which CBO said would come through ANWR drilling), though the lease results seem to bolster skepticism from environmental advocates and Democrats about those estimates.

Situational awareness: Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski was named a tax conferee late Wednesday, along with Sens. Orrin Hatch, Mike Enzi, John Cornyn, John Thune, Rob Portman, Tim Scott and Pat Toomey. "With Congressman [Don Young] representing the House of Representatives on our energy provisions, Alaskans will have a very strong voice at the table to ensure this bill crosses the finish line," she said in a statement.

No (strategic petroleum) reservations: Count Shimkus, a tax conferee, among the backers of the Senate's approach of selling off 7 million barrels from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve as part of the final tax package H.R. 1 \(115\). "There was a reason to have the SPR," he told ME. "There is a credible reason to debate whether, for now and in the immediate future, there is a need." He also said he's a "big ANWR supporter" and that he doesn't see the Arctic drilling provision getting pulled from the final version.

INHOFE, PRUITT'S TOXIC LEGACY: POLITICO Magazine's Malcolm Burnley takes a

deep dive into the contaminated Oklahoma region of Tar Creek, an area so poisonous that only 10 holdouts live there, and he finds a buyout program for residents that left Sen. Jim Inhofe awash in scandal and litigation. Then-Attorney General Scott Pruitt ultimately concluded an audit into possible criminal wrongdoing didn't warrant charges and he shielded his review from public release, only to have some in the state believe his efforts were designed to spare Inhofe embarrassment. Many residents in the polluted zone of Tar Creek continue to express shock that no one was prosecuted over what happened in their federal buyout program

Pruitt and Inhofe flatly denied there was any political motivation in shielding the audit. "It was important to protect the individuals' reputation that were in that investigation," Pruitt said in an interview. "You would think that this wouldn't be a political issue, that people wouldn't put on the red and blue jerseys." One interesting fact though: Ryan Jackson, now Pruitt's chief of staff, was once Inhofe's point person on the Tar Creek issue. Photo gallery here.

Pruitt's new gig: Trump named the EPA administrator to chair the Gulf Coast Ecosystem Restoration Council, a group formed after the Deepwater Horizon oil spill restore the ecosystems and economies of the Gulf Coast, your ME host reports. Pruitt named Kenneth Wagner, a senior adviser, to be his designee on the council.

MAY FERC NOW BE WHOLE: New FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre will be sworn in today, bringing the five-member agency to full power, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. His swearing-in will put to rest rumors that either the Trump administration or McIntyre himself were delaying his start date to give current Chairman Neil Chatterjee enough service time to make staffing changes

MORE HEARINGS COMING ON CLEAN POWER PLAN: EPA announced Wednesday it would hold additional public hearings on its plan to repeal the Clean Power Plan in San Francisco; Gillette, Wyo.; and Kansas City, Mo., Pro's Emily Holden reports. Pruitt said the change was "due to the overwhelming response" and the agency will announce the dates and locations of the meetings in the coming weeks.

SPLIT OVER EXTENDERS? Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady told reporters Wednesday he doesn't like the idea of moving a package of extenders this year but hasn't made a final decision yet, Pro Tax's Brian Faler reports. "It's horrible policy and process," he said. But those comments come as Thune, the Senate's number three Republican, said lawmakers will revive biodiesel, geothermal and other energy-related breaks along with other "cats and dogs." Doing an extenders package as the chambers work to iron out differences between their broader tax bills is likely to test tax writers' bandwidth.

Shutdown watch: Congressional leaders head to the White House for a meeting with Trump on government funding today, but GOP lawmakers expect to pass a two-week spending package despite internal division within their party, POLITICO's Rachael Bade and Sarah Ferris report. House Freedom Caucus leaders have been asking for a commitment GOP leadership does not believe it can give them: a promise to "hold the line" and refuse Senate Democrats' demands for increased spending on non-defense programs.

House Democrats, including Minority Whip Steny Hoyer, hold a press conference at 10 a.m. in Cannon 234 to call on Republicans to take up additional federal assistance for Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Watch here.

ICYMI: Both sides framed their arguments at a hearing of the U.S. Trade Representative over whether to impose tariffs on solar equipment imports in language aimed at swaying Trump, Pro's Eric Wolff reports.

PATAGONIA SUES OVER BEARS EARS: A coalition of groups, including Patagonia, became the latest to file a lawsuit challenging the Trump administration's downsizing of Bears Ears National Monument on Monday. Link to the lawsuit filed in Washington federal court here.

ENDANGERMENT FINDING PUSHBACK STALLS: Conservative state lawmakers and businesses that are members of the American Legislative Exchange Council on Wednesday shot down an effort to urge Pruitt to challenge a science-based endangerment finding that requires EPA action on greenhouse gas emissions. "In subcommittee, a substantive conversation occurred where arguments were made for and against the draft model policy," said Bill Meierling, executive vice president of external relations for the group. "After debate, it was clear that neither the public nor the private sector supported the draft as written."

Meierling added that "ALEC members prefer to advance policy only after a consensus opinion has been reached." Reports suggested later the resolution had been pulled in the aftermath of strong opposition, including from Exxon Mobil. Pruitt was expected to speak at the ALEC meeting on Friday but canceled due to a "scheduling conflict," Meierling said.

NO COMMENT: Murkowski forcefully urged Sen. Al Franken to step down amid sexual harassment allegations on Wednesday, but a spokeswoman declined to state whether Roy Moore would be welcome on her committee if he wins the Alabama special election next week. "We aren't commenting until after the special election and decisions about committee seats are made by conference," she said. Outgoing Alabama Sen. Luther Strange currently has a slot on the energy panel.

THERE'S ALWAYS A TIE: Congressional Democrats said Tuesday they have evidence then-national security adviser Michael Flynn sent assurances to former business partners that a U.S.-Russia energy partnership in the Middle East, which reportedly would have included more than two dozen nuclear plants in the region, was "good to go," POLITICO's Kyle Cheney reports. The revelations from a whistleblower came in a letter released Tuesday.

MAIL CALL! LET'S BOOST EFFICIENCY CAPS! A collection of energy efficiency organizations, led by the Alliance to Save Energy, sent a letter to congressional appropriators on Wednesday urging them to boost "budget cap allocations for federal energy efficiency programs." Failure to do so could result in steep cuts to EPA and DOE programs across the board, the groups warn. Link here.

TAKE A GLANCE! LESSONS FROM THE RFS: The American Enterprise Institute is out with a report looking at policymaking lessons from the RFS. It argues the biofuels mandate would be better as a rate standard than a volume standard, EPA should issue multiyear rather than annual rules and that uncertainty should be explicitly incorporated into future rulemakings, among other things.

BAD SOLAR ACTORS: Campaign for Accountability released the results of a years-long investigation concluding two companies — Vivint and SolarCity — received more complaints about their sales tactics than others in the solar industry. "Unfortunately, the deceptive sales tactics of solar companies, like Vivint and SolarCity, are making rooftop solar a risky bet," Daniel Stevens, the group's executive director, said in a statement. Read it here.

DREAMS TURNED REALITY? The Center for Western Priorities is out with a report finding the Trump administration has already granted 13 of the energy industry's 24 top priorities. Read it here.

SUGGESTIONS GIVEN: American Council for Capital Formation released a paper this morning with ten ideas for improving the regulatory process. It's the product of a November 2016 roundtable with Sens. Mike Rounds, Angus King, James Lankford and others. Link here.

MOVER, SHAKER: Michael Boucher has joined Crowell & Moring LLP environment and natural resources practice as a partner in Washington. He joins from Dentons US LLP, where he led that firm's chemical, pesticide, and consumer product regulation team.

QUICK HITS

- California AG on Trump EPA: 'It's almost as if they believe they're above the law'. The Hill.
- Wall Street's Fracking Frenzy Runs Dry as Profits Fail to Materialize. Wall Street Journal.
- The IHS Markit electric resiliency study - much less than meets the eye. Utility Dive.
- Patagonia sues over Trump's monuments order. AP.
- Volkswagen Official Gets 7-Year Term in Diesel-Emissions Cheating. New York Times.
- Pipeline explodes in southeastern New Mexico oil patch. AP.
- Christie backs nuclear subsidies but won't sign 'wish list' bill from environmental groups. POLITICO New Jersey.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:00 a.m. — The Washington International Trade Association holds an event as part of its NAFTA series: "Energy and the NAFTA," Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave. NW

10:00 a.m. — EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt appears before the House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — "Transforming the Department of the Interior for the 21st Century," House Natural Resources Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

11:00 a.m. — The World Bank conference call briefing on the One Planet Summit, RSVP: himtia@worldbankgroup.org

12:00 p.m. — "The Business Case for Tax Incentives Promoting Energy Efficiency," Alliance to Save Energy, Rayburn 2203

2:00 p.m. — The House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee holds a hearing on various bills, Longworth 1324

2:00 p.m. — "OPEC's World Oil Outlook 2017," Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Avenue, NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/12/pruitt-heads-to-house-grilling-today-043377>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Biofuel backers claim victory in EPA battle Back

By Eric Wolff | 10/20/2017 05:37 PM EDT

Biofuels backers were breathing a sigh of relief on Friday after EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt backed away from changes to the Renewable Fuels Standard, a reversal that left oil refiners frustrated.

Pruitt acceded to demands from Sen. Joni Ernst that he publicly promise not to pursue plans to change the biofuel program rules — changes that had been sought by oil refiners who have long complained about the costs of implementing the program that many see as a giveaway to the corn states.

Pruitt's letter to Ernst, Sen. Chuck Grassley and five other Midwestern Republican senators delivered what they'd asked for: A promise not to expand the group of companies required to comply with the program, to keep the biodiesel volume requirements at levels proposed in July, to not alter the policy that strips RFS credits from exported ethanol, and to explore allowing year-round sale of gasoline with 15 percent ethanol nationwide.

The quick reversal by Pruitt — at the direction of President Donald Trump — showed the influence of the biofuel lobby, corn growers and farm-state lawmakers to scuttle changes in the decade-old policy sought by the energy industry.

"This was a basket of bad ideas for biofuels," said Brooke Coleman, head of the industry lobby group Advanced Biofuels Business Council. "And there's no way that we could have any other response than to take this approach. [Pruitt] didn't kick tires on changing the RFS, he tried to take a baseball bat to the program, and the response was matching and in response to, from a magnitude perspective, to the initial foul."

The push by the senators, as well as Midwestern governors, "made a huge difference in this matter," said Michael McAdams, head of the Advanced Biofuels Association. "In addition, the collective unity of the entire biofuels industry, including those who distribute and market these fuels, made a significant impression on the importance and support for the RFS program."

But oil refiners who have said the high cost of biofuel credits, called Renewable Identification Numbers, was costing them hundreds of millions of dollars, lamented the power of the biofuels lobby and the corn-belt lawmakers.

"The [Pruitt] letter is a result of political pressure applied by Midwestern politicians," said one refining source. "Some Midwesterners cannot accept any premise that the RFS could be improved. As a result, their overreaction included everything from holds on confirmations to even more personal threats launched at the White House and EPA."

The unified and vociferous campaign by the biofuels industry in attacking the proposal that would have lowered biodiesel volume mandates surprised some in the refining industry, as well as the political staff in the EPA, sources tell POLITICO.

The Trump administration's embrace of the oil industry had raised refiners' hopes that it could have the best opportunity in years for significant RFS changes, and refining giant Valero Energy, along with a group of Pennsylvania companies, believed they would get relief from what they considered an onerous program.

But Grassley took to the Senate floor to blast Pruitt's biofuel plans as a "betrayal" of Trump's promises to protect ethanol, and he arranged a call with Trump and Pruitt that led to the meeting in his office with Pruitt and Ernst as well as Deb Fischer (Neb.), John Thune (S.D.), Ben Sasse (Neb.), Pat Roberts (Kan.) and Mike Rounds (S.D.). Following that meeting, Ernst demanded the public statement from Pruitt, and said she would withhold her support for Bill Wehrum, who was nominated to run the agency's air office, forcing a delay in the Environment and Public Works Committee's vote until next week.

Ernst spokeswoman Brook Hougesson told POLITICO, "Now that Sen. Ernst has received the assurances that the EPA will support the spirit and the letter of the RFS, she will support Mr. Wehrum."

Valero was disappointed its efforts to change the program had been shot down by the fierce political opposition.

"These senators have intervened in a regulatory process, and the proposals and concepts in the letter address RFS implementation problems to which these senators have offered no constructive solutions," Valero said in a statement. "The only unifying principle of their bullying opposition seems to be a desire to maintain the status quo at all costs and to protect windfall profits associated with unregulated trading of renewable identification numbers, or RINs. Their position advances neither the goals nor the efficient implementation of the RFS, and places U.S. manufacturing jobs at risk."

But in a statement, the White House made clear that Trump remained fully behind the biofuels program.

"President Donald J. Trump promised rural America that he would protect the Renewable Fuel Standard, and has never wavered from that promise," spokeswoman Kelly Love said in a statement. "The president has had constructive conversations with several key officials about the RFS over the past week, and he understands their concerns. The Trump administration will protect the RFS and ensure that our Nation's hardworking farmers continue to fuel America."

One energy executive said the biofuel backers were victorious because they were unified in their support for the RFS, while Republicans, the oil industry, and even the refiners were not on the same page.

"The ethanol boys won this round, no doubt, but at a pretty high cost," said Stephen Brown, vice president for federal government affairs for Andeavor. "The refining industry is anything but united on the RFS beyond a sunset as individual companies have each made investments and honed mitigation strategies to comply with the statute. As those investment decisions become increasingly operationally embedded, the industry will continue to splinter on the suite of RFS issues."

But some producers are still wary of Pruitt's pledge in his Thursday letter, and they note that he promised to release a final rule in which none of the mandatory volumes will be less than he proposed in July. For some producers, those volumes were already too low.

"There's some work to do here," Coleman said. "We won't know until the rule is done. And we recognize it's an ongoing rulemaking, it's not like they're going or republish the rule, they've said what they can say. The final rule really matters."

To view online click here.

Back

'Largest ever' Interior Alaska oil lease sale draws little interest Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/06/2017 08:26 PM EDT

The Interior Department received only seven bids from two companies today in what it had billed as the "largest ever" oil and gas lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska.

The bids on the 10.3 million unleased acres in the NPR-A generated just $1.2 million in high bids, according to a Bureau of Land Management summary. The relatively low amount could undercut GOP arguments that opening up the nearby Arctic National Wildlife Refuge would generate $1 billion in revenue.

A BLM Alaska lease sale last year generated $18 million for 1.4 million acres offered.

Subsidiaries of ConocoPhillips and Anadarko were the only two companies that participated in the lease sale. The companies only bid for 80,000 acres, or less than 1 percent of the acreage offered. The highest bid amount was $14.99 per acre.

Low oil prices and the relatively cheap and plentiful land available for hydraulic fracturing in the lower 48 has hurt oil company interest in the out-of-the-way fields of Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) have pushed to open more public land to drilling, however, saying that doing so is important to increase domestic energy production.

Zinke had previously said that today's "large and unprecedented sale in Alaska will help achieve our goal of American Energy Dominance."

An Interior spokesperson did not immediately respond to questions.

WHAT'S NEXT: Republicans hope to keep ANWR drilling provisions in their budget proposal.

To view online click here.

Back

Democrats worry Arctic National Wildlife Refuge being lost amid tax debate Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/29/2017 05:17 AM EDT

Democrats' fight to keep oil and gas rigs out of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is losing ground as the Republican tax plan advances — and it's almost as if no one has noticed.

The prospect of drilling in the untouched Alaskan tundra is as close to reality as it's been in more than a decade, with none of the political drama that in past decades turned the refuge's fate into a top-tier rallying cry for liberals. Legislation to allow drilling in ANWR is quietly hitching a ride on the tax code overhaul that Senate Republicans hope to complete by the end of the week, overshadowed by larger debates on whether the bill is a giveaway to rich people and corporations at the expense of the poor and working class.

"It's really not gotten the attention that it should," Sen. Tammy Duckworth (D-Ill.), a member of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, told POLITICO about the ANWR provision. "It's not just the budget discussion. It's about everything else that's going on, the flurry of all sorts of other news."

Angus King (I-Maine) said Republicans were trying to shield ANWR from opposition by adding it to the larger bill rather than bringing it to the floor separately under rules, which would require it to win support from 60 senators to overcome a filibuster.

"Well, clearly the strategy is to try to get it through as part of this tax reform effort and thereby avoid a direct up-or-down vote," King said in an interview earlier this month.

The nonstop news cycle and preponderance of other concerns with the tax bill are making it difficult to focus on an issue that normally fires up Democratic voters.

"I do think that putting ANWR in the budget reconciliation package hasn't drawn as much extremist opposition because it is completely overshadowed by tax reform, which is the center of the package," said Chris Guith, senior vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Global Energy Institute. "But there are some who aren't exactly supportive of tax reform that support ANWR, and it's possible to see ANWR bring a vote or two to help pass tax reform."

Senate Energy Chair Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) easily advanced legislation through her committee directing the Interior Department to hold two lease sales for drilling in ANWR over the next decade. It would raise $1 billion over that period, according to the Congressional Budget Office, making it eligible for inclusion in a budget reconciliation package that Democrats cannot filibuster.

The reconciliation package also will include Republicans' tax plan and a repeal of the Obamacare individual mandate. While Murkowski helped scuttle the Obamacare repeal push earlier this year, she says she supports ending the mandate. Murkowski's office did not respond to a request for comment.

ANWR, a swath of tundra on the northern Alaska coast, is home to polar bears, porcupine caribou and a landscape that hasn't been touched in thousands of years. Congress designated the 19 million-acre area a wildlife refuge in 1980, but it set aside a 1.5-million-acre parcel known as "10-02" for possible drilling if future lawmakers approved such a plan. The U.S.

Geological Survey estimated in 1998 that part of ANWR could hold up to 12 billion barrels of oil, and President Donald Trump and Alaska Republicans have called it essential for their plans for American "energy dominance."

Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), who is undecided on the tax bill for a several reasons, said she will support an amendment on the Senate floor to eliminate the ANWR language, but she said success there is not a prerequisite for her to vote for the underlying bill. "No it is not, but I would certainly try to get it out of the package," Collins told reporters Tuesday. Collins was the only Republican to cross the aisle on an unsuccessful amendment to keep pro-drilling language out of the underlying budget resolution, meaning it is unlikely that she would be able to strip the ANWR provision from a reconciliation bill.

But Democrats say that passing a deficit-increasing tax bill in order to open ANWR would actually harm energy-producing states. That's because the $1.5 trillion shortfall from the GOP tax cuts would trigger required "pay-as-you-go" cuts to mandatory spending programs, according to a CBO analysis sent to House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer (D-Md.).

One of the programs on the pay-go chopping block would be the energy royalty revenue sharing program carried out through the Mineral Leasing Act. Cutting those payments would lose Alaska an estimated \$15 million in energy royalty payments next year alone, an amount important to a state already facing budget shortfalls.

"Communities throughout the West would be impacted by the loss of revenue, which is used to support a variety of needs including infrastructure, school funding, conservation, and recreation," Hoyer said in a statement to POLITICO. "This is yet another example of the consequences associated with forcing through legislation to add $1.5 trillion to the deficit in order to give tax cuts to the wealthy."

Pay-go cuts also would hit popular programs like Medicare and student loans, but Congress can waive the law with 60 votes in the Senate. Democrats are not yet on board with that approach.

The current push to open ANWR, coming amid a swarm of competing headlines and buried in larger legislation, has come nearer to succeeding than the GOP's two previous attempts. President Bill Clinton vetoed a budget package in 1995 that included language opening ANWR, while a Democratic filibuster thwarted a second attempt in 2005.

Environmental groups have targeted public engagement at only a handful of congressional districts. The League of Conservation Voters spent $550,000 on television ads in three Republican congressional districts. The LCV also paid for a bipartisan polling firm to probe public opinion on opening ANWR, but even that focused only on registered voters in eight congressional districts.

"The reason they're trying to sneak it into the tax package is they know they don't have the votes otherwise," said Tiernan Sittenfeld, the league's senior vice president of government affairs. "They know they can't pass it under regular order, that's why they're doing a sneak attack."

Even ANWR supporters are staying out of the spotlight.

"I haven't seen any full-out, front-page ads, nothing like that," Alaska Oil and Gas Association President Kara Moriarty said. "We're a little battle-weary, to be honest. Alaskans support opening up ANWR. There's been a few statements reiterating that."

Nick Juliano contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

The Environmental Scandal in Scott Pruitt's Backyard Back

By Malcolm Burnley | 12/06/2017 05:57 PM EDT

PICHER, Okla. — Tar Creek, Oklahoma, is breathtaking in a terrible way: At one time the world's deepest source of lead and zinc, the three-town region is now a cratered landscape so poisonous that no one, aside from 10 holdouts, can live there. Mountains of ashlike "chat," a toxic residue from lead-zinc milling, rise majestically among the remains of homes torn from their foundations. Abandoned pets forage around the ruins. A child's teddy bear lies sprawled in a ghostly living room. A gorilla statue fronts an empty high school, atop a sign proclaiming "1A Football State Champs, 1984."

Tar Creek is also part of the environmental legacy of one of the state's—and nation's—leading politicians, Senator Jim Inhofe, and his longtime ally, Scott Pruitt, the former Oklahoma attorney general who is now head of President Donald Trump's Environmental Protection Agency. After the EPA struggled to clean up the area, in 2006, Inhofe endorsed a plan in which a trust overseen by local citizens would use federal dollars to purchase homes and businesses in the toxic region so residents could move elsewhere. Then, when the plan proved so problematic that it spawned more than a half-dozen civil lawsuits and an audit into possible criminal wrongdoing, Pruitt, as the state's attorney general, invoked an exception to state freedom-of-information laws to keep the audit from being an open public record.

Now, that decision is coming into new light as many Oklahomans clamor for the audit to be released, suggesting that its revelations will prove embarrassing to Inhofe, who played a key role in designing the buyout plan, and cast doubt on Pruitt's decision not to move forward with charges. Last week, a Washington, D.C., nonprofit called the Campaign for Accountability raised the stakes even further, filing suit in Oklahoma courts to force the release of the audit.

"If you take a look at Scott Pruitt's record, you see a general disregard for transparency," said Daniel Stevens, the group's executive director. "I don't think it's outside our bounds to say that Pruitt is trying to hide evidence of criminal wrongdoing."

Pruitt, in an interview, dismissed the idea that he was covering anything up, saying his former office's grand jury unit reviewed the audit and determined that no charges were warranted. He said he declined to make it public because he didn't want innocent people to be besmirched, even though the auditor rejected that reasoning and maintained it should be a public document. "It was important to protect the individuals' reputation that were in that investigation," Pruitt said.

Nonetheless, the mess at Tar Creek continues to follow Pruitt in other ways. As EPA administrator, he has assumed full responsibility for the still-faltering cleanup. And eyebrows were raised in Oklahoma this past January when, as Pruitt was awaiting confirmation for his EPA post, a White House spokesperson told Bloomberg News that the handling of Tar Creek was emblematic of Pruitt's philosophy: "national standards, neighborhood solutions."

Pruitt, in an interview, said he knew nothing about the Bloomberg article, saying only that he endorses the EPA's current work at Tar Creek and the principle of combining federal resources and state and local leadership, rather than the buyout that occurred before his time as EPA administrator, while he was Oklahoma's attorney general.

"I think as far as a model going forward outside of the buyout, what we're trying to do is have a renewed focus on what I think are some of the most beneficial things we can do for citizens across the country, and that's to address some of these legacy sites that have substantial environmental challenges that allow them to once again enjoy the communities in their backyard," he said.

But many residents of the Tar Creek area, who gave up their homes in a buyout they considered both coercive and corrupt, continue to blame Pruitt for the fact that no one was prosecuted. They described a program so rife with good-old-boy corruption that certain individuals received outsize payoffs while some homeowners got so little they couldn't relocate anywhere nearby; meanwhile, they said, the people hired to demolish the homes received inflated contracts through a flawed process.

"We were lied to and deceived from Day One," said Gloria Workman, who said her son has learning disabilities from growing up in the polluted zone of Tar Creek, which had lead-poisoning levels in children that were three times higher than those registered in Flint, Michigan, during the peak of its recent water crisis. "Not only were we losing our homes, we were raped in the process."

"It was a nightmare," said Mary Thompson, who was still awaiting a resolution from the trust when an EF4 tornado ripped through Tar Creek in 2008, throwing bodies and trailers through the sky, killing six people and destroying more than 100 homes. Without homes, many people took lower-than-expected buyout offers—however insufficient they were perceived to be—because they had nothing left, she said.

"They preyed on us after the tornado," said Thompson, whose home was leveled.

Nonetheless, Inhofe, in a 2015 news release touting the completion of the buyout, cast it as a success because it did not lead to an expanded federal role.

"This is an example of a government program created for a specific purpose and then dissolves after the job is completed," Inhofe proclaimed.

Now, he continues to defend it but sounds less celebratory. "The first thing to know about the Superfund site at Tar Creek is that it's what's called a 'mega-site' and that it is an exceptional circumstance in every way. You can't compare it to any other Superfund site in the country," Inhofe said in a statement to POLITICO. "The voluntary relocation assistance to get people out of harm's way was right for the situation at Tar Creek, but may not be for every other Superfund—that is why state and local partnership is critical."

To many former residents, who still want the investigative report by the state auditor to see the light of day, even these modest and conditional endorsements feel like slaps in the face.

"People hate the government out here, and it's because of things like this," said Aletha Redden, a lifelong resident of the area who has a Donald Trump bumper sticker on her pickup truck. "I want Scott Pruitt to know: This is not the model."

A flat expanse of dusty roads and scrubby vegetation situated in the heart of Tornado Alley, the Tar Creek area was once the mainstay of the Quapaw Tribe, which was forcibly relocated there by the U.S. government in 1834. At the time, the territory had little economic value, but a half-century later, prospectors discovered enormously rich ore. By the turn of the 20th century, companies broke ground with drill rigs on Quapaw land.

Many of those firms made fortunes, luring white settlers into an uneasy state of coexistence with the Quapaw. Tar Creek proved to be the deepest reservoir of lead-zinc ore in the world, producing a whopping $1 billion in minerals between 1908 and 1950, according to the Oklahoma Historical Society. Picher, the largest of the mining towns, swelled to a population of 14,000.

Almost every aspect of life in Tar Creek traced back to the mines. The high school took on the mascot of a gorilla, a reference to workers in the mines who broke up boulders with hammers. Children played in sandboxes filled with chat, the chalky mining debris. Teenagers earned the nickname "chat rats" for climbing up the pillowy piles of toxic rubble throughout town and rolling tires down their slopes.

By the end of World War II, however, the boom was over. Most of the mining companies decamped for richer pastures. For the families left behind—including that of Yankees slugger Mickey Mantle, who grew up in the Tar Creek area in the 1940s—it was a slowly unfolding disaster. The extent of Tar Creek's collapse was reflected in the words of John F. Kennedy, who barnstormed into Joplin, Missouri—25 miles away from Tar Creek—in the closing days of the 1960 presidential campaign.

"My own judgment is I know no tougher occupation in the world that [sic] to be a miner, lead, zinc, coal. I am always glad to meet them because I think they live with peril," Kennedy declared. "They have as tough a life as there is. Every other one whose hand you shake has a finger off, a foot crushed, the chances of in 20 years their having a bad accident are more than any of the rest of us. And yet in this community and in West Virginia and Idaho and in other sections of the United States, there has been no group that has been harder hit, no group that has been more forgotten."

Indeed, after the last prospector looking for ore packed up and left in the mid-1970s, people looked to casinos and farming to make a living. But the residue from decades of mining was poisoning them. In 1979, acid mine water leached into the ground, threatening the area's aquifers, killing fish and turning creeks a rusty orange color. When the federal Superfund program—designed to clean up the nation's most polluted and contaminated land—kicked off in the early 1980s, Tar Creek was named to the inaugural National Priorities List. It's still on the list.

The EPA has spent more than $176 million over the past 25 years on cleanup work inside the 42-square-mile-area, on projects from plugging mine shafts to removing contaminated surface soil in people's yards. Though the amount of money sounds large, it hasn't been nearly enough to remove the toxic dangers, and many residents insist the cleanup was mishandled from the get-go. In some cases, the removal of soil resulted in sloping yards, which, during bouts of rain, caused flooding and mold inside houses. In 2000, the FBI raided the offices of the EPA's prime contractor at Tar Creek, Morrison-Knudsen. The company later settled a lawsuit brought by the federal government alleging false representation of billing and progress reports for a sum of $1 million. In the settlement, the company made no admission of wrongdoing.

Meanwhile, the environmental hazards began to multiply: Shortly after the start of that Superfund spending spree, in 1993, researchers at the University of Oklahoma found that 34 percent of Quapaw children were living with lead concentrations above the federal limit. Further studies found alarming rates of lead and arsenic in both the tribal and non-tribal populations. In 1997, a university-lead study estimated that 21 percent of children near Tar Creek had elevated blood-lead levels (defined as 10 micrograms per liter at the time), which is three times higher than the highest measurements found in Flint, Michigan, in 2015. The learning disabilities and memory loss that had plagued the schools and curtailed lifespans for decades suddenly had a culprit.

As the dangers became ever-more visible and the cleanup lagged, residents rallied around the idea that the government should quickly buy them out of their homes, rather than wait for the hazardous materials to be removed. They thought they might have an ally in the state's senior senator, Inhofe, a Republican who was chair of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. But Inhofe, who has a skepticism about environmental science that exceeds that of any of his colleagues, refused to consider the idea. "There will never be a buyout. I promise you that," Inhofe told the Tulsa World in late 2003.

Inhofe's refusal to take action of any sort was often criticized in local press, due in part to the relentless attacks of a young Democratic congressman named Brad Carson. "If you'd asked people in Oklahoma politics at the time, they'd say we were mortal enemies," said Carson, referring to himself and Inhofe. "I was elected [to Congress] in 2000, and my goal was to untie the Gordian knot. The area is desperately poor. If it was in suburban Tulsa or Oklahoma City, there would've been outrage."

In 2004, Governor Brad Henry signed a bill authorizing the use of state dollars for the relocation of roughly 100 families with children under the age of 6. Under pressure to take further action, the senior senator began to come around. At first, he secured $2 million in federal funding to pay for a study that discovered that 286 homes within Tar Creek were at risk of being swallowed up from cave-ins of underground mine shafts. This provided an opportunity for Inhofe to reverse himself on the buyout, supporting it on the grounds of protecting residents from cave-ins.

"The stability with the underground mine workings was worse than anyone had previously been thought," recalls Ed Keheley, a retired nuclear engineer and native of Picher who co-authored the study's final report. In the spring of 2006, Inhofe announced a joint federal and state buyout program that would begin with $20 million in funding, with the express purpose of relocating any and all people who'd voluntarily leave Tar Creek.

Having once opposed the buyout to his political detriment, Inhofe now used his clout to keep on funding it, but with the idea that decision-making would be concentrated among local leaders, not the federal government. With Inhofe's support, the Oklahoma legislature created a nine-member panel called the Lead Impacted Communities Relocation Assistance Trust to assume control over the project. The members were all volunteers, helping their community, but some had a vested interest in the buyout: They included, for example, a local banker whose institution would later give loans to people to help them relocate; local property owners whose own homes—and those of relatives—would be subject to the buyout; town officials; and a leader of the Quapaw Tribe.

Inhofe cast himself in the role of the community's protector, putting out a 2008 campaign ad that declared: "Tar Creek: poisoned earth, the threat of schools and churches sinking into abandoned mines. Everyone thought it would be too much to tackle, except for one stubborn man named Inhofe."

But over a five-year period, the buyout would become the subject of a host of civil lawsuits and the subject of a state investigation.

The local members of the trust—few, if any, of them schooled in environmental management—had two major tasks: figuring out how much each property owner should be paid for their home or business, and then choosing a company to demolish the properties. Both tasks would become the subject of complaints about cronyism, with residents saying the trust members rewarded their friends and politically connected individuals.

It didn't help that the trust often met behind closed doors, and that the vice chairman of the trust resigned within a year. The trust's sole employee, operations manager Sonya Harris, also quit, declaring in her resignation letter that she could no longer continue "with a clear conscience without recommending a change; I will not place myself in a position to be perceived as approving of the operations to this point."

The first case to raise eyebrows involved the mayor of Picher, Ernest "Sam" Freeman. In 2005, when the buyout was first being discussed as a probability, he acquired three large parcels of former mining land covered with chat from the Picher Development Authority, which he chaired. Freeman bought them at 3 cents per square foot, for a total price of $2,088.50, according to the findings of a state audit at the time. It was, the audit declared, a violation of state laws forbidding members of public boards from entering into contracts with those boards. Ottawa County District Attorney Eddie Wyant called on Freeman to return the properties to the development authority in lieu of charges.

"If Sam wanted to buy that land, he needed to get off the board and purchase it legally," Wyant told a local newspaper at the time. "I am not one to put anyone in jail over this, but he needs to clear it up." Wyant, when reached by phone, declined to comment further.

Freeman returned the land, but, in a move that enraged some neighbors, profited off it anyway. The trust had decided that, because so much former mining land had been taken over by state authorities and tribal members, those who owned mobile homes or other shelters on land they didn't own would be eligible for buyouts. Freeman made a claim based on the fact that he had been maintaining and renting out homes on the chat-infested property for years before he tried to buy it.

Trust documents show that Freeman received at least $274,000 from the buyout, more than half of which came from the same lots he had been ordered to return by law enforcement. (Freeman told POLITICO a payout of more than a quarter-million sounded accurate enough, though he declined to provide an exact figure.) Neighbors suspected cronyism. Freeman, who is no longer mayor, denied receiving any preferential treatment. "These people thought I bought the lots to make a killing in the buyout," he said. "I don't think I got more than anyone else would have."

The size of the mayor's profit diminished public confidence in the trust, just as it was engaged in the most delicate part of its task, figuring out how much to pay each individual property owner. Property owners were supposed to receive fair market prices as if pollution hadn't existed in Tar Creek, based on the sales of similar properties elsewhere in northeast Oklahoma. But those calculations appeared to lack uniformity.

The average payout for the 695 properties involved in the buyout was just over $65,000, but the disparity in prices between two properties could be dramatic. Residents complained about lowball offers on some decent properties and overly high payouts for others that were rundown or minuscule in size.

"I got $3,000 for my gun shop. It took me $16,000 to build it," said former Tar Creek resident John Frazier.

Wally Long said he and his wife got $35,000 for their Dairy Queen, while another Dairy Queen right up the road got substantially more.

"We were told [by the trust] that's all the money there is," Long said. "It bothered my wife a lot. She put 23 years of her life into this business."

Meanwhile, a trust member named Janell Trimble got $185,000 for her house, and her brother collected $115,000 for his fiberboard house.

"I may be a member of the [relocation trust's committee], but I honor my duties and I recuse myself when family members are involved," Trimble told the Tulsa World in 2008. "[B]ut as a buyout participant I also expect to be treated just like the next person."

Nonetheless, both Trimble and her brother received more than 35 percent above the average price per square foot. On the other end of the spectrum, an elderly woman named Betty Betts received an offer of $12,000 for her home; when she protested, the appraised value was raised to $20,000. Many people got so little for their homes that they had to turn around and take out loans in order to resettle elsewhere in Oklahoma. In the end, the trust finished up with millions in unspent funds.

Residents concentrated their anger on the company that the trust hired to conduct the appraisals, Cinnabar, which had previously made headlines for its management of a noise-insulation program at the Tulsa Airport, which involved multiple lawsuits. In response, the trust engaged an "appraisal reviewer" to go back over Cinnabar's work. But the reviewer, a company named Van Tuyl Associates, quickly came under criticism as well. "They [often] didn't get out of their car. They never entered these homes," said Keheley, who was a member of the trust at the time. (Van Tuyl Associates is now defunct; its former president could not be reached for comment.)

When the unrest over the buyout made the local newspapers, the trust's leadership pointed to a 95 percent acceptance rate for buyout offers. But some residents accused trustees of pressuring them with "take it or leave it" offers, according to a class-action lawsuit brought against the trustees, Cinnabar and Van Tuyl by more than 250 residents affected by the buyout. Plaintiffs also complained that they were denied the right to view the appraisal paperwork. There was even a fake camera—and posters notifying residents they were being videotaped—in the room where buyout offers were made, an apparent attempt to compel residents to take the offers, according to documents in the suit.

The suit, filed in Oklahoma district court, accused the defendants of cheating average property owners and rewarding friends and associates of the trustees. Depositions revealed an explanation for some of the inconsistencies in appraisals: For certain properties, Cinnabar expanded the boundaries of where it could find "comparables"—properties in adjacent counties whose sale prices were used to calculate the appraisals—with the approval of a state employee named J.D. Strong, who, according to the lawsuit, played a significant role in overseeing the trust.

One of the properties appraised in this fashion was that of Trimble, whose $185,000 payout, according to appraisal documents, had infuriated other residents.

When, in 2008, residents outlined their frustrations in a scathing six-page letter to Inhofe, Henry and other elected officials, Strong dictated the governor's reply, which was co-signed by Inhofe, lawyers for the plaintiffs asserted in his deposition. "I may have drafted this," Strong responded, when presented with a copy of the letter saved on Strong's computer.

In an interview, Strong defended the trust and its system of appraisals: "We knew going in that we weren't going to be the most popular. We went in with the idea that we were going to be fair. I can honestly say that, looking back, we were fair and unbiased and frugal."

During the six years the lawsuit was making its way through the state court system, both Cinnabar and Van Tuyl Associates declared bankruptcy. Eventually, the plaintiffs and the trust settled the case in 2015 for $1.3 million, which, after deducting attorney fees, meant that each resident ended up receiving an additional $2,600.

But that didn't satisfy many property owners.

"The people of Tar Creek were treated like second-class citizens, based on where they were born and lived," concluded Wally Kennedy, a columnist at the Joplin Globe who reported on northeast Oklahoma, including Tar Creek, for more than 30 years. "For someone to portray the buyout of the people of Tar Creek as a successful program is lying through their teeth."

Once the trust obtained the properties on the toxic land, the next problem was how to destroy the empty structures that were on them.

Inhofe made sure there was enough money for the job. Even as he joined fellow Republicans in condemning President Barack Obama's 2009 stimulus bill as an unwarranted giveaway, the senior senator helped secure an additional $15.7 million in the bill to help the trust finish its work.

The trust hired a local businessman named Jack Dalrymple to oversee bids for the demolition contract. He was best known for organizing an annual deer hunt for paralyzed veterans, an endeavor that earned him a lifetime achievement award from a local Chamber of Commerce. His payment was to be 10 percent of the value of the winning bid. He formulated a scoring system to evaluate bids and, in March 2010, the trust awarded the contract to Stone's Backhoe, the most expensive of all four bids. At $2.1 million, it was nearly four times the cost of the lowest bidder.

Just 14 days after Stone's was declared the winner, it asked that the contract be reassigned to two subcontractors, CWF Enterprises, a carpet-cleaning business, and Vision Construction and Management. Former residents contend that there were longstanding ties between Dalrymple and the subcontractors. Whether or not they were friends before, they soon became hunting buddies. In October 2012, local coverage of Dalrymple's annual event for paralyzed veterans pictured the heads of the two firms setting up the flag for the hunt.

One of the losing contractors filed suit against the trust and individual trustees in Oklahoma district court, accusing them of violating the state's open-meeting act and competitive bidding act. The district county judge sided with the plaintiff, reopening the bidding process.

But rather than blame Dalrymple, the trust gave him a new contract. It included a flat rate for his services, $305,472—about $100,000 more than he would have received had the contract remained with Stone's.

In January 2011, a $1.7 million demolition contract was awarded to none other than CWF Enterprises, the carpet-cleaning business, which was also the least expensive of the three bids received. A month later, however, the estimated cost of the contract ballooned to $3,050,786—almost exactly 10 times what Dalrymple received in his new contract.

While many residents cried foul, Andy Lester, the trust's attorney, attributed the increase to the fact that the EPA-controlled repository for dumping debris had just closed down. Trekking the remains of the houses and businesses to a dumping ground further away caused the massive change order, and a near doubling of the contract.

Lester also defends the choice of Dalrymple to handle the bids, contending that he was an engineer with some prior experience with public contracts and that the trust members couldn't handle the process on their own.

"It is important to remember that the trust board consisted of nine members—including, for example, a physician, a school teacher, and a mushroom farmer. They were volunteers, not professionals at this kind of work," Lester said. "Jack Dalrymple is a professional engineer with significant experience. And candidly, there are very few professional engineers in northeast Oklahoma."

Nonetheless, lawyers out of the Tulsa region filed a lawsuit in 2012 under the False Claims Act that accused the trust members, Dalrymple and the heads of the companies hired to do demolition work of being part of a "good old boy network" and defrauding federal taxpayers.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs, Zach and Brad Barron, say the lawsuit fizzled when the Department of Justice took the stance that "the government didn't sustain damages" from the charges laid out in the complaint. In a false claims lawsuit, where the plaintiffs are effectively trying to recoup money that's owed to the government, a lack of willingness from the government is effectively a death knell, the Barrons said. The lawsuit was eventually dismissed.

In an interview, Dalrymple insisted the allegations of cronyism were entirely unfounded.

"There were a lot of emotions and feelings during that period," he said. "When you ask someone to leave their home, it's a tough thing. But ... there was nothing there."

Still, the drumbeat of complaints continued, eventually reaching the ear of Jerry Morris, the state director for Oklahoma's then-junior senator, Republican Tom Coburn.

It was no secret that Coburn, a physician who cast himself as a political outsider, didn't look upon Inhofe with any sort of fond feelings of mentorship.

"I think they were often seen as having very different approaches to politics," said David Blatt of the Oklahoma Policy Institute. "Inhofe is seen as a classic, pork-barrel politician who'd bring federal dollars to Oklahoma, the more the merrier." Whereas Coburn, Blatt says, "hated that kind of politics and did as little of it as he possibly could. In fact, he spoke disdainfully and caustically about it the whole time he was in the Senate."

Coburn was not shy about stepping on his fellow Republican's toes. Morris forwarded a memo with a lengthy list of allegations related to the awarding of contracts in the Tar Creek buyout, especially regarding the demolition work, to then-Attorney General Pruitt. In April 2011, Pruitt asked the state auditor and inspector, Gary Jones, to look into the memoranda sent from Coburn's office.

"I have determined that these concerns are serious in nature such that an investigation of the matter is warranted," Pruitt wrote to Jones. A 17-point list of allegations for Jones to investigate followed, including whether there was collusion between Dalrymple and the contractors hired to do the demolition work.

After spending almost two years on the investigation, Jones turned over the results of the audit to the attorney general's office in January 2014, apparently believing it had uncovered important information.

For a year and a half, the attorney general sat on the findings. Then, in May 2015, Pruitt announced that he wouldn't press charges. In addition, he vowed to keep the audit secret by refusing to release it.

Jones fired back at the attorney general's office days later, penning a letter to Pruitt that described his rationale for withholding the audit as "baffling."

"To our knowledge, the individuals named in the report are members of a public trust or contractor whose services were retained as part of this substantive project," Jones wrote. Further, he contended, "our office has received no inquiries from you or your staff regarding the content of the audit report."

Pruitt justified the secrecy by comparing the investigation results to the findings of a grand jury. "Specifically, our office is concerned about publication of unsubstantiated criminal allegations against private citizens," Pruitt wrote in a 2015 statement.

In an interview with POLITICO, Pruitt appeared to go one step further, suggesting the audit had in fact been vetted by a grand jury.

"You're addressing issues that it's been some months since I've looked into," Pruitt said. "I know the decision I made at that time was based upon the investigative audit. The investigative audit didn't yield anything to the grand jury, and, as such, it was important to protect the individuals' reputation that were in that investigation."

But when asked to clarify, a Pruitt staff member indicated that he was using the term "grand jury" as shorthand for the Multi-County Grand Jury Unit, a division of the AG's office, headed at the time by a Pruitt appointee, which decides whether to take cases to a grand jury for indictment.

It's not the same as a grand jury finding. Nonetheless, the attorney general's office, now overseen by Mike Hunter, Pruitt's former top deputy, has denied all open records requests for the audit, declaring it to be "under the supervision of the Multi-County Grand Jury Unit." A spokeswoman for the Oklahoma attorney general's office said that if there was in fact a grand jury, the office couldn't confirm or deny that.

These rationales befuddle open records experts.

"I don't think there's anything in the law that would prohibit it [the investigation] from being released," said Joey Senat of Oklahoma State University, the president of FOIA Oklahoma. "The law doesn't require that the audit be kept secret. What would its release be harming? They've closed the investigation and decided not to prosecute."

Jones, who is now running for governor, reiterated his call for the attorney general's office to release the audit, saying in a statement that "regarding any investigation of this kind, we always err on the side of transparency and the people of Oklahoma have a right to know."

Concluded Senat: "When you have the state auditor [Gary Jones] saying these are not unsubstantiated claims and this is a serious problem, good government would call for letting the public know what happened and showing the public the audit. Transparency helps alleviate a lot of concerns about favoritism, corruption, and incompetency—if those are indeed unfounded."

Tar Creek today looks like an abandoned landfill. Illegal dumping has added a fresh layer of grime to the already ruined patch of earth. Giant craters from collapsed mine shafts, some as large as 200 feet in diameter, are filled with Bud Light cans, shotgun shells and the tangled remains of kids' playground equipment. "We call this urban renewal, Picher style," quipped former resident Gloria Workman.

Abandoned houses that were not part of the buyout are now coated with graffiti. The charred remains of the former mining museum in Picher, which burned down at the hands of arsonists, stands as a teetering monument to Tar Creek's former way of life. And the sense of danger and destruction extends beyond the former buyout area: On rainy days, local fields used for football practice bleed a toxic shade of orange.

The EPA is continuing its now 33-year-old cleanup effort, and it's thrust the Quapaws back into stewardship of the land. Although the tribe leased away or sold off significant chunks of Tar Creek to mining companies throughout the 20th century, the Quapaws have at least temporarily regained control of all of it. Since 2012, the tribe—a sovereign nation with roughly 5,500 members—has been the primary EPA contractor for environmental remediation at Tar Creek. It's the first time any tribe has been a prime contractor on a Superfund site, assigning all the contracts and overseeing all the work.

"It's a great story," said Craig Kreman, assistant environmental director of the Quapaw tribe. "We're employing tribal members a lot of the time and members of the community. So that income [from the EPA contract] stays here in this community and is being spent in this community. We're not hiring a contractor out of Georgia."

Every day, a steady stream of trucks haul away more than 2,000 tons of soil saturated with cadmium, lead and other metals at the site. Each patch of earth requires years of passive soil treatments before it tests clean enough to plant row crops like winter wheat. Half-acre by half-acre, the hope is that Tar Creek can be put into productive agricultural use decades from now.

In August, after touring the abandoned area and surrounding towns, Pruitt's senior adviser Albert "Kell" Kelly, praised the EPA's efforts surrounding Tar Creek in sweeping terms: "People from all across the country count on the Superfund program to address pollution and revitalize their communities. Tar Creek cleanup is an excellent example of how the program should work. State and local partners, tribal partners, and EPA—all working together year after year to address historical pollution at this mega-site. It's cooperative federalism working at its best."

But many local observers, including Ed Keheley, aren't nearly as positive.

"Usually, the EPA comes in, they do their dirty work, sprinkle some wheat seed, take a picture to show Congress, and next year it looks like this," he said, pointing to a barren pasture. "Clearly, the EPA hasn't had the best interests of the people at heart. So I get personally offended when people like Scott Pruitt suggest otherwise."

For his part, Pruitt announced a fresh grant of $5 million to the Quapaw-led project last May, and he is quick to distance this experiment in local control from the one that preceded it.

"We [the EPA] can't impact the buyout. We didn't authorize the buyout. I didn't manage the buyout and its unique situation," Pruitt said. "I think what's most tangible is what we can do together with the tribe to advance and continue remediation."

When asked to respond to the undying complaints of residents in rural Ottawa County, where Tar Creek is located—a county in which Trump received 71 percent of the vote in November 2016—Pruitt changed the subject. "I had no experience with Tar Creek, to be honest with you," he said.

That's true, except it was his office's decision, when he was attorney general, not to prosecute the people accused of mishandling the trust money, Keheley and other local residents point out.

But what galls them more than the failure to prosecute is the failure to release the results of a government investigation—an audit that they believe will raise questions about Pruitt's unwillingness to press charges and cast a negative light on a project near and dear to Inhofe's heart.

Pruitt's connections to Inhofe are extensive. One of Pruitt's first hires as EPA chief was Ryan Jackson, a longtime Inhofe staffer and the senator's point person on Tar Creek, who is now Pruitt's chief of staff. He also brought on four other former aides to Inhofe, the Senate's leading proponent of the idea that man-made pollution contributing to climate change is a conspiracy and a hoax. Three of them are Pruitt's senior advisers on air, climate and legal issues.

"It gives me a level of comfort to know that we have a bureaucracy that's actually going to be serving instead of ruling," Inhofe told the Washington Post, applauding Pruitt for hiring his staff.

Numerous veteran Oklahoma political watchers, some of whom spoke to POLITICO on condition of anonymity, suggest that there may be an ulterior motive in Pruitt's embrace of Inhofe: It's widely believed that Pruitt, who is 49, wants to run for Inhofe's seat when the senator retires. Many observers think Inhofe is unlikely to seek reelection in 2020, when he'll be 85. And some have noted that Pruitt's decision not to advance the case against the buyout trust spared Inhofe the embarrassment of seeing the program he personally tailored and promoted go down in scandal.

"Pruitt is a rising Republican political star previously in Oklahoma and now nationally," said one journalist who closely follows the Oklahoma political scene. "There have been rumblings that Pruitt might have his eye on higher office. ... Pruitt would do everything to keep Inhofe close, assuming he wants to run for that seat."

Wally Kennedy, the Joplin Globe columnist who has covered the Tar Creek trust more closely than any other journalist, said, "My sense of the way that unfolded was that Pruitt decided he was not going to do any kind of prosecution, and then Inhofe writes a letter saying what an outstanding job the trust did. My reaction was 'Huh?'"

"The fact that the audit was not publicly disclosed tells me that somebody is hiding something," he added. "This is Oklahoma taxpayers' money being committed to ratting out what appears to be some apparent corruption. But everybody looks the other way. That's why I'm talking to you. Because if you can shed a light on this, maybe somebody will say 'We need to take a second look at this.'"

Pruitt, however, insists his decisions were strictly based on the law, and an Inhofe staffer flatly dismissed the possibility of Inhofe influencing Pruitt's decision.

"Senator Inhofe would have had no involvement in the case or in any of then-Attorney General Pruitt's decisions," the staffer said.

Pruitt was similarly bemused by the idea that there would have been any sort of political calculation behind his decision to shield the audit. The only politics in this case, he suggested, was on the part of those who want to embarrass him and Inhofe.

"You would think that this wouldn't be a political issue, that people wouldn't put on the red and blue jerseys," Pruitt said in frustration.

Others argue that transparency in this case is not a political issue as much as a legal right.

"The open records act seems pretty clear this audit should be released," said Stevens, executive director of Campaign for Accountability. "You have to ask why he's not releasing it? Pruitt should have to be held accountable for this."

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt named chair of Gulf Coast Ecosystem Restoration Council Back

By Anthony Adragna | 12/06/2017 07:28 PM EDT

President Donald Trump announced today that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt would chair the Gulf Coast Ecosystem Restoration Council.

The group, formed in 2012 after the Deepwater Horizon oil spill, helps restore the ecosystems and economies of the Gulf Coast. Pruitt was unanimously selected by Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas, the five states on the council.

"I am honored to be selected by the states and look forward to working with the governors to continue the excellent work of this Council to further the critical mission of restoring the Gulf of Mexico ecosystem," he said in a statement.

Pruitt named Kenneth Wagner, a senior adviser, to be his designee on the council. He takes over the chairmanship from the Secretary of Agriculture.

WHAT'S NEXT: Pruitt begins his chairmanship of the group.

To view online click here.

Back

Powelson says McIntyre to be sworn in Thursday Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/06/2017 03:33 PM EDT

New FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre will be sworn in on Thursday, FERC Commissioner Rob Powelson told an audience of electric power officials in Philadelphia today.

"At a general session this afternoon in Philadelphia, one of the key speakers was FERC Commissioner Rob Powelson, and during his speech this afternoon he confirmed that Kevin McIntyre will be sworn in tomorrow," PJM Interconnection spokeswoman Susan Buehler said.

President Donald Trump nominated McIntyre, a partner at the law firm of Jones Day, to be commissioner and designated him to be chair months ago. The Senate confirmed him in early November, and he received his signed commission just before Thanksgiving.

His swearing in will put to rest rumors that either the Trump administration or McIntyre himself were delaying his start date to give current Chairman Neil Chatterjee enough service time to make staffing changes. Chatterjee will miss that deadline by a day.

It also puts McIntyre in charge of the process initiated by Energy Secretary Rick Perry that is aimed at supporting coal-fired and nuclear power plants in an effort to protect the power grid's resilience. Action on that proposal is expected by Monday.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA to hold more hearings on Clean Power Plan withdrawal Back

By Emily Holden | 12/06/2017 03:28 PM EDT

EPA will hold three additional public hearings on a proposal to withdraw the Clean Power Plan, in San Francisco; Gillette, Wyo.; and Kansas City, Mo., the agency announced today.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt in a press release said the change was "due to the overwhelming response" to two days of hearings in West Virginia last week. Many environmental advocates criticized EPA for initially scheduling hearings only in coal country.

The agency will announce the dates and locations of the meetings in the coming weeks, and speakers must register.

The Obama administration, by comparison, held public hearings on the proposed climate standards in 2015 in Pittsburgh, Denver, Atlanta and Washington, D.C.

WHAT'S NEXT: Comments on the draft withdrawal are due Jan. 16.

To view online click here.

Back

Republicans divided over taking up tax extenders this year Back

By Brian Faler | 12/06/2017 05:40 PM EDT

Republican leaders are divided over whether to take up a second tax-cut bill this year.

Senate Republicans want to move legislation reviving a rump group of tax "extenders," separate from their more sweeping plan to rewrite the code.

But the House's top tax writer isn't so sure.

"I don't like the extenders," said House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady (R-Texas). "It's horrible policy and process."

"No decision yet," he added, saying lawmakers need to talk it over.

His comments came after Sen. John Thune, the chamber's No. 3 Republican, said today lawmakers will revive biodiesel, geothermal and other energy-related breaks along with other "cats and dogs," including a tax credit to maintain short-line railroads.

Thirty-four temporary tax provisions expired at the end of last year, including 16 energy ones, and lawmakers are now facing demands to revive them. Some want to attach the provisions to funding legislation needed to keep the government open H.J. Res. 123 \(115\).

Many Republicans had sworn off the "extender" ritual after a 2015 tax agreement made many of the breaks permanent while giving others what lawmakers said was one final extension — which, for some, ended last year.

Putting together an extender bill, even as lawmakers negotiate a final compromise on their tax-overhaul plans, is likely to test tax writers' bandwidth.

To view online click here.

Back

Solar pitches target Trump at USTR hearing Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/06/2017 03:46 PM EDT

Supporters of tough trade tariffs on solar energy equipment and their opponents squared off again at a hearing of the U.S. Trade Representative today, with both sides coloring their arguments in language aimed at swaying the White House.

The two companies seeking tariffs on foreign shipments of solar panels and cells, Suniva and SolarWorld Americas, pressed the case that barriers were vital for protecting U.S. manufacturing of the clean energy technology because of its importance for national security — issues at the heart of President Donald Trump's "America First" agenda.

"A strong remedy is required to persevere the U.S. industry, provide breathing space for this American-invented manufacturing technology," said Matt Card, vice president of operations for bankrupt Suniva. "Anything less would ... result in the loss of this industry. That would have a dramatic negative impact on national security."

Witnesses at the hearing opposed to instituting tariffs raised the same issues, but contended that trade barriers would threaten other businesses, and that the benefits of tariffs would help only a narrow segment of the solar industry.

"Factories in South Carolina and across the nation would suffer from solar tariffs," South Carolina Gov. Henry McMaster told the panel. "While there is only one operating factory in the U.S. petitioning for these tariffs, there are over 50 American-owned factories employing thousands of people that would be the ones harmed, including a steel mill in South Carolina that provides American-made steel for many of the U.S. factories that produce metal equipment for the utility scale solar farms."

The panel, which included representatives from the departments of Energy, Treasury, State, Labor and Commerce, and from the Council of Economic Advisers, appeared unmoved by the national security arguments, and instead peppered parties with detailed questions about the potential tariffs' impacts on U.S. solar power demand. Panel members also questioned whether a few years of trade protections would be enough time for Suniva and SolarWorld to hike their production enough to catch up to overseas competition.

They pressed witnesses from both side on how tariffs would effect the domestic solar market, whether a modest tariff would be effective, and their opinions on the recommendations the U.S. International Trade Commission sent the White House last month. ITC members recommended a range of options, from sliding scale of tariffs to a cap on total shipments.

The Trade Representative will send the White House a recommendation, and Trump has until Jan. 26 to make a decision.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Trump visits Utah for monument announcement today — Energy world reacts to Senate tax bill passage — EPA axes mining cleanup rule
Date: Monday, December 04, 2017 5:42:44 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 12/04/2017 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén

TRUMP'S MONUMENTAL DECISION: The news spotlight will shift to Salt Lake City today, where President Donald Trump is expected to unveil his decision to drastically trim Utah's Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments after deciding the designations under the Antiquities Act were overreach. The moment marks a huge victory for the state's congressional delegation, which fought hard to undo the designation. "Every elected official from the mayors to the commissioners, every single elected representative, got engaged in it. It was the real, Utah cumulative, everybody-pull-together kind of thing," Boyd Matheson, president of the Sutherland Institute, told the Salt Lake Tribune. Look for a whole bunch of VIPs, including Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Sen. Orrin Hatch and House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop, to be on hand for the Trump's announcement.

But expect the pushback to be instantaneous and lengthy legal battles to follow. Some 5,000 people protested the anticipated decision outside the Utah State Capitol over the weekend (picture via League of Conservation Voters here). Look for Native American, public lands and environmental groups to lodge lawsuits arguing the Antiquities Act doesn't provide the president authority to change a prior designation. Representatives from the Navajo, Ute, and Hopi Tribes will hold a telephone press conference tomorrow at 5 p.m. EST responding to announcement.

Trump is due to speak at 2:40 p.m. EST in Salt Lake City. One thing to watch for is whether his comments touch on the other national monument designations that Zinke recommended shrinking such as Cascade-Siskiyou, Organ Mountain-Desert Peaks, Rio Grande del Norte and Katahdin Woods and Waters.

Also, look for Trump to use the trappings of a presidential trip — and a roundtrip flight on Air Force One — to heap praise on Hatch as he tries to persuade the seven-term Utahn to seek reelection and block Mitt Romney's path to the Senate, POLITICO's Alex Isenstadt reports.

ANWR IN AS HOUSE-SENATE MOVE TO TAX CONFERENCE: House lawmakers vote today on whether to go to conference on their tax plans H.R. 1 \(115\) after senators voted 51 to 49 early Saturday morning to pass their massive tax overhaul. Sen. Maria Cantwell's push to block language opening ANWR to oil and gas drilling fell short on largely party lines 48 to 52 during the debate. Here's what the energy and environment world had to say following the vote:

—Clean energy groups: "We applaud the reduction in the corporate tax rate and preserving frameworks that support the clean energy sector. However, we are concerned about provisions that will have a negative impact on clean energy investments, including Base Erosion Anti-Abuse Tax (BEAT) provision and the impact of the corporate Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) on investment tools that have been critical to the growth of the clean energy sector," a statement, signed by six groups including American Wind Energy Association and Citizens for Responsible Energy Solutions, reads.

—Oil, gas and utility industry groups liked what they saw and encouraged the chambers to iron out their differences ASAP. "We are encouraged that both the House and Senate agree that reducing the corporate tax rate is vital to modernizing the tax code, and urge Congress to quickly finalize legislation for the President to sign into law," American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers said in a statement.

—Environmental groups warned the bill would undermine public health and environment: "The bill would threaten the climate by leaving billions of dollars of fossil fuel subsidies intact while changing the tax code in ways that would jeopardize the financing of numerous clean energy projects under construction and discourage future clean energy investments in wind and solar," Ken Kimmell, president of the Union of Concerned Scientists, said in one such statement.

Someone's not happy: Coal magnate Bob Murray bashed the Senate's plan as a "mockery" of the tax reform process and warned it might put him out of business, according to the Wall Street Journal. "This is not job creation. This is not stimulating income. This is driving a whole sector of our community into nonexistence," he said.

Speaking of ANWR, two-thirds of voters (including 43 percent of Republicans) don't think Congress should make ANWR drilling a major priority, according to a new poll conducted by Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health and POLITICO, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports.

What's next on taxes? Pro Tax's Brian Faler has an excellent rundown.

WELCOME TO MONDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Squire Patton Boggs' James Eklund was first to identify Michael Bennet as the senator who once led the public schools of his state's largest city. For today: Which current senator was once roommates (briefly) with former Sen. Trent Lott? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

Legislative Compass - Preferred Pricing for 2017: Test out POLITICO Pro's powerful, easy-to-use tool that simplifies federal and state legislative tracking. Get started.

THE PLAYBOOK POWER LIST: 18 TO WATCH IN 2018: The final Playbook Power List of the year highlights 18 politicians, activists and operatives across the country who are poised to make waves in 2018. From the anti-Trump "Resistance" on the left to the far right Bannontite wing trying to remake the GOP, keep an eye on these people over the next 12 months. Click HERE to find out who made the list.

Please welcome to the stage: The Pro Energy team's Darius Dixon and his wife recently expanded their family. Marcus Inali Dixon was born at 3:06 a.m. Friday at a healthy 8lbs. 10oz. All is well with the Dixon clan but it's not yet clear whether Marcus will share Dad's interest in FERC and nuclear waste. Here's a pic!

EPA SAYS NEVERMIND ON MINE BONDING RULE: EPA on Friday evening backtracked on the Obama administration's proposal to require hardrock miners to prove they have the money to clean up their mines, saying that it's actually "not appropriate" to regulate. The issue has been brewing for years following an environmentalist lawsuit that said EPA had never fulfilled part of the Superfund law requiring it to write financial assurance regulations for industries that could leave behind toxic messes. The Obama administration's proposed rule required hardrock miners to obtain some type of bonding or collateral would have cost $171 million annually and was projected to save taxpayers $527 million in Superfund clean-ups over 34 years. It was strongly opposed by industry and Republicans.

On Friday, at the court-ordered deadline to finalize a rule, EPA said no regulation was necessary. "EPA is confident that modern industry practices, along with existing state and federal requirements address risks from operating hardrock mining facilities," Administrator Scott Pruitt said in a statement. "Additional financial assurance requirements are unnecessary and would impose an undue burden on this important sector of the American economy and rural America, where most of these mining jobs are based." The final rule noted especially that the savings for taxpayers would have been "relatively small" and that miners would have faced costs "an order of magnitude greater" than the government's savings.

Industry, Republicans celebrate: Supportive statements flooded in Friday night from the National Mining Association, Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski, Senate Environment and Public Works Chairman John Barrasso, and Bishop. EPA's own release included praise from three Republican governors and Sen. Steve Daines, who chairs the Senate Western Caucus. Earthjustice, which represented a coalition of green groups in the lawsuit, vowed to sue over the decision in a statement over the weekend.

Two more points: 1) The Obama administration's plans to write similar rules for chemical makers, electric utilities and petroleum and coal products manufacturers are looking unlikely to happen following this decision. 2) Coal mines are regulated differently and are required to obtain financial assurance, a practice regulated by the states. Hardrock mining covers a variety of non-fuel resources, including gold, copper, silver, iron, gypsum and sulfur.

TAKE A PASS? Ahead of a Thursday meeting between Trump, Sen. Ted Cruz and other senior officials about biofuels policy, Texas Gov. Greg Abbott formally asked for a Renewable Fuel Standard waiver from Pruitt. "The time is ripe for EPA to grant substantive relief from the unique, adverse impacts the RFS program is having on the state of Texas," he wrote in a Friday letter. "The extreme, detrimental impacts on large portions of the refining sector have now placed unacceptable burdens on the Texas economy and the economy and security of the nation as a whole." Abbott, in particular, cited high RIN prices as causing hardship to refiners across the state.

SHUTDOWN? WHAT SHUTDOWN? Senior Republicans projected strong confidence Sunday they'd be able to avoid a government shutdown by passing a short-term funding package before the Friday deadline, POLITICO's Kevin Robillard reports. "There's not going to be a government shutdown," Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said on ABC's "This Week." "It's just not going to happen." House Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen on Friday released a two-week CR that would keep the lights on through Dec. 22.

But disaster aid will wait: House Republicans are tentatively planning to package the next installment of disaster aid with the Dec. 22 stopgap funding bill, Pro Budget & Appropriations Brief reports. "There's working agreement to that model," Texas Rep. Pete Sessions said Friday. "I think some of these things all collide together." No word yet on how much bigger that package will be compared to the White House's $44 billion request.

WHITEFISH HIRES MORE LOBBYISTS: Whitefish Energy, the tiny Montana-based company that drew controversy for its now-canceled $300 million grid repair contract in Puerto Rico, hired the Tallahassee office of Foley & Lardner to lobby on its behalf, POLITICO's Matt Dixon reports. Lead lobbyists will be Robert Hosay, a former Gov. Jeb Bush administration official, and Jason Allison, who once led the Scott administration's Agency for State Technology. The hiring comes as the company filed a lawsuit Friday alleging a subcontractor interfered with tens of millions in payments, the Associated Press reports.

Speaking of which, Senate Homeland Security ranking member Claire McCaskill sent a letter Friday seeking additional information about a $200 million contract inked by Puerto Rico's utility with Cobra Acquisitions LLC, another newly-formed company, for grid restoration work. Link here.

OBAMA LAMENTS CLIMATE LEADERSHIP PAUSE: Speaking in France on Sunday, former President Barack Obama said U.S. states and cities were making up for what he called "a temporary absence of American leadership" on climate action, Reuters reports. Obama also met with French President Emmanuel Macron, his predecessor Francois Hollande and Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo.

CALLING ALL COMMENTERS! EPA convenes a public hearing this morning at 10 a.m. at agency headquarters on its plan to repeal the Obama-era Phase 2 emissions rule for heavy-duty trucks that classified "glider kits" as new vehicles or engines that are subject to more stringent requirements. More information here.

PERRY'S IN THE MIDDLE EAST: Energy Secretary Rick Perry continues his Middle East swing this week. Among this weekend highlights: Meeting with His Royal Highness Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman in Saudi Arabia and touring Aramco's facilities in Dhahran. ME readers will of course remember that Trump asked the oil giant to make its hugely anticipated stock offering on the New York Stock Exchange.

GETTING IN THE FAST LANE: Zinke used a trip to Louisiana over the weekend to pledge to remove regulatory barriers slowing down coastal restoration projects, The Advocate reports. "Louisiana and the coastline are important, and we're losing too much of it. ... There's a lot of things that Interior can do," Zinke said. Photos from his visit here and here.

CLARIFYING: ME wrote last week that coal magnate Robert Murray said at a conservative energy conference that he had met with Pruitt seven times. A spokesman clarified that Murray was referring to all meetings with anyone from the Trump administration, not just Pruitt, including "before and after the election." It was previously reported Murray has met several times this year with President Trump himself to discuss strategies to boost the coal industry, including his ultimately unsuccessful proposal to use the Energy Department's emergency authority to keep coal plants operating.

QUICK HITS

- VW Bosses Coached Me to Lie, Jailed Manager Tells U.S. Judge. Bloomberg.
- Anchorage's climate change conundrum. The Week.
- A county in Utah wants to suck 77 million gallons a day out of Lake Powell, threatening the Colorado River. Los Angeles Times.

— Builders Said Their Homes Were Out of a Flood Zone. Then Harvey Came. New York Times.

— Blankenship has told courts that Las Vegas is his 'home'. Charleston Gazette-Mail.

— Study aims to determine feasibility of underground carbon storage. Bismarck Tribune.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

10:00 a.m. — EPA holds hearings on proposed repeal of emission requirements for glider vehicles, glider engines, and glider kits, 1201 Constitution Avenue NW

5:00 p.m. — Representatives from the Navajo, Ute, and Hopi Tribes will hold a telephone press conference tomorrow on national monuments, RSVP: BearsEars@fenton.com

TUESDAY

9:30 a.m. — U.S. International Trade Commission holds meeting and vote on "Biodiesel from Argentina and Indonesia," 500 E Street SW

10:00 a.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee holds a hearing on nominations, Dirksen 366

2:30 p.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Energy Subcommittee holds a hearing on a series of bills, Dirksen 366

5:30 p.m. — "Subnational Climate Diplomacy: New Roles Post-Paris," German Marshall Fund, 1744 R Street NW

WEDNESDAY

9:30 a.m. — USTR hearing on crystalline silicon photovoltaic cells, 1724 F Street NW, Rooms 1 and 2

10:00 a.m. — Hearing on "Endangered Fish Recovery Programs Extension Act of 2017," House Natural Resources Water Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

10:00 a.m. — Senate Environment and Public Works holds a hearing on the nomination of R.D. James to be assistant secretary of the Army for civil works, Dirksen 406

12:00 p.m. — "The Role of Natural Gas in the US Economy," Women's Council on Energy and the Environment, Denton's, 1900 K Street NW

12:30 p.m. — "Agriculture and the environment in 2018: Conservation programs, the waters of the United States, and the Renewable Fuel Standard," American Enterprise Institute, 1789 Massachusetts Avenue NW

1:00 p.m. — "Fleeing Change: Relocating the Village of Newtok, Alaska," Wilson Center,

Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave. NW

2:30 p.m. — "Challenges Facing Superfund and Waste Cleanup Efforts Following Natural Disasters," Senate Environment and Public Works Superfund and Waste Management Subcommittee, Dirksen 406

2:45 p.m. — Senate Indian Affairs Committee hearing on water rights, Dirksen 628

THURSDAY

9:00 a.m. — The Washington International Trade Association holds an event as part of its NAFTA series: "Energy and the NAFTA," Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave. NW

10:00 a.m. — EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt appears before the House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — "Transforming the Department of the Interior for the 21st Century," House Natural Resources Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

11:00 a.m. — The World Bank conference call briefing on the One Planet Summit, RSVP: himtiaz@worldbankgroup.org

12:00 p.m. — "The Business Case for Tax Incentives Promoting Energy Efficiency," Alliance to Save Energy, Rayburn 2203

2:00 p.m. — The House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee holds a hearing on various bills, Longworth 1324

2:00 p.m. — "OPEC's World Oil Outlook 2017," Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Avenue, NW

FRIDAY

9:00 a.m. — "Examining the Role of the Department of Energy in Energy Sector Cybersecurity," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/12/trump-visits-utah-for-monument-announcement-today-038971>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump moves to block Romney from the Senate Back

By Alex Isenstadt | 12/03/2017 08:23 PM EDT

Donald Trump is going all out to persuade seven-term Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch to seek reelection — a push aimed in no small part at keeping the president's longtime nemesis, Mitt Romney, out of the Senate.

Romney has been preparing to run for Hatch's seat on the long-held assumption that the 83-year-old would retire. Yet Hatch, the longest-serving Republican senator in history, is now refusing to rule out another campaign — a circumstance Romney's infuriated inner circle blames squarely on the president. Their suspicions are warranted: Trump has sounded off to friends about how he doesn't like the idea of a Senator Romney.

The president's mostly behind-the-scenes campaign to sway Hatch will burst into public view on Monday, when he arrives in Salt Lake City to hold a well-choreographed event designed to showcase his affection for the powerful Senate Finance Committee chairman.

Trump's appearance is ostensibly official in purpose: He will announce his decision to reduce the size of Utah's Bears Ears and Grand-Staircase Escalante national monuments, a cause that Hatch has championed. But it's also undeniably political: To use the trappings of presidential power to get a veteran lawmaker to rethink his long anticipated plans to leave the Senate.

Trump is slated to ride with Hatch both ways on Air Force One — a total of roughly nine hours round-trip. After descending from the plane together, the two will meet with Mormon leaders and then head to the state capitol for the signing of the executive order, according to three White House officials. Hatch will introduce Trump, who in turn is expected to lavish praise on the senator. After the order is signed, Hatch is expected to receive the president's pen.

The public display of affection isn't just about blocking Romney, senior administration officials say. Trump has felt loyal to Hatch since the senator defended him in the wake of the "Access Hollywood" tape episode late in the 2016 campaign. Hatch stuck by Trump even as other members of Utah's Republican delegation withdrew their support.

More recently, Hatch has played a key role in moving Trump's prized tax reform bill through the Senate.

Trump aides say the president's bond with Hatch began long before Romney emerged as a potential successor. Hatch visited Trump in the Oval Office during the first week of his presidency for a lengthy discussion about the then-vacant Supreme Court seat and Utah's national monuments.

Yet people close to Romney are convinced that Trump's main motivation is to keep the 2012 GOP presidential nominee out of the Senate. Romney himself has expressed frustration with the ongoing uncertainty about Hatch's plans, said three Republicans who've spoken with him recently. The former Massachusetts governor has pointed out that it was Hatch who urged him to consider running in the first place, but now appears to be wavering on whether to step aside.

"Hatch is a known entity for Trump and has been really good for the president for the most part," said Kirk Jowers, a friend of Romney who formerly served as the chairman and general counsel of his political action committee. "He knows for a fact he's not going to get that with Romney. I don't know that he knows what he's going to get with Romney, but it's not going to be what he's got with Hatch."

Indeed, there's widespread concern within the White House that Romney in the Senate could make Trump's life difficult. During the 2016 campaign, the former Massachusetts governor emerged as the de-facto leader of the GOP establishment's "Never Trump" campaign, delivering a nationally-watched speech in which he blasted candidate Trump as a "phony, a fraud" and implored the party to stop him.

Hatch, by contrast, went all-in for Trump in Utah, where Trump received just 46 percent of the vote but still carried the state because of a third-party candidate. Before the election, the senator also campaigned for Trump in four states, hitting the trail with the candidate's son, Donald Trump Jr. While many Republicans air their issues with Trump publicly, Hatch has usually chosen to telegraph his concerns in private discussions with the president.

"I'll just put it this way. Sen. Hatch was one of the leading voices for the president during the entire campaign," said Don Peay, a Trump family friend who led his Utah campaign. "Hatch clearly was a strong supporter of Trump from the beginning," said Peay, who helped to organize Monday's event.

Trump's push to get Hatch to run for an eighth term has taken place in furtive phone calls and West Wing visits. In early October, the senator called the president to invite him to Utah to announce his monument plan, said one person briefed on the discussion.

Near the end of the call, the president conveyed a request. "Orrin," he said, "I really hope you will consider running again."

Hatch told Trump he hadn't made up his mind.

Their mutual endearment has at times been public. When Hatch was asked last week by reporters about Trump's decision to retweet several anti-Muslim videos, the senator said he wasn't "aware" of the firestorm — and then praised Trump.

"I'll say this for ya.' He's been one of the best presidents I've served under, and the reason is he's not afraid to make decisions. He's not afraid to take on the big boss around here," Hatch said.

Trump responded by tweeting out a video of the remark. "Thank you @SenOrrinHatch," he added. "Let's continue MAKING AMERICA GREAT AGAIN!"

Romney's post-election relationship with Trump has been far more ... complicated.

During the transition, Trump considered appointing Romney as secretary of state. Trump was expecting not to like Romney but was surprised by how well they gelled during the interview process, something he told aides repeatedly at the time. Trump ultimately decided against Romney.

As the year wore on, the former governor praised the new president for some of his personnel choices. But he also made his differences known.

During an appearance in Park City, Utah, in June, Romney told a group of prominent Republican donors that Trump's White House was too consumed by palace intrigue. He also offered an implicit critique of the president's "America First" approach to foreign policy, growing emotional as he outlined the country's humanitarian responsibilities overseas.

Then, in August, Romney struck again — this time to implore the president to apologize for equating white supremacists who sowed violence in Charlottesville, Va. with their counter-protesters.

"Mr. President," Romney wrote in a Facebook message, "act now for the good of the country."

Romney has been making the rounds in Utah amid speculation that Hatch is nearing retirement, huddling with an array of Republican figures including state House Speaker Greg Hughes. Romney has told people that while he wouldn't be reflexively anti-Trump as a senator, he would be more than willing to let his criticisms be known.

Some Trump allies contend that Utah would be better served by having a presidential loyalist in the seat.

"I think he could be a great ally of the president but, as you well know, they're very different people and have very different personalities," said Hughes, who recently met with Romney in his office in the state capitol. "Sen. Hatch," he added, "understands the president very well."

Asked who the president would rather have in the seat, Hughes, who was once mentioned as a candidate for a position in the Trump administration, said he had little doubt: "I think the president enjoys having a strong ally."

Romney, for his part, won't be at Monday event. He was invited but, several people close to him said, will be out of town.

Over the weekend, Romney wrote a tweet that underscored his respect for Hatch but also, perhaps, hinted at a belief that the senator had now accomplished what he needed to before moving on.

"A very big week for Utah's own Senator @OrrinHatch," he wrote, "with tax reform, Bears Ears reversion, and a presidential visit."

To view online click here.

Back

Trump to meet with Cruz over biofuel policy Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Andrew Restuccia | 12/01/2017 04:04 PM EDT

President Donald Trump will meet with Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) and several Cabinet members next week to discuss U.S. biofuel policy and fuel efficiency standards, an administration official told POLITICO on Friday.

The Thursday meeting is an attempt by the White House to reach a compromise between Cruz, who has held up a Trump nominee to the Agriculture Department nominee over the administration's support for the Renewable Fuel Standard, and the farm-state lawmakers who pressured EPA to back down from potential changes to the regulations for biofuels.

The White House had until now ignored Cruz's requests for a meeting. Cruz and eight other senators sent a letter in October requesting changes to the program overseen by EPA, which sets the minimum volumes of ethanol and biodiesel to be used in the fuel market. Refiners must either purchase the biofuels to blend with their gasoline or diesel fuel, or buy credits to show their compliance — credits the refiners say are too expensive and threaten to push some refiners out of business.

Cruz retains a hold on Trump's nomination of Bill Northey to a senior USDA post, a move seen as payback after EPA backed down from considering changes in how the biofuels program is implemented amid an outcry from farm-state lawmakers.

"The key here is they need to get Cruz something to get rid of that hold," said one industry representative familiar with the meeting.

The meeting will include Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, Energy Secretary Rick Perry, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn, the administration official said, though the person added that the attendee list could change. No industry representatives are expected to attend.

While biofuels will most likely be the first topic discussed, attendees will also delve into the higher CAFE standards the Obama administration put into place, as well as octane requirements. The Trump administration has delayed implementing an increase in civil fines for automakers who violate the fuel economy standards, a move that triggered a lawsuit from environmentalists.

Cruz and Trump have had a rocky relationship in the past, including after Trump linked Cruz's father to the assassination of President John F. Kennedy during the 2016 campaign, though they have been on better terms in recent months.

Cruz's office did not reply to a request for comment, and the White House declined to comment.

To view online click here.

Back

McConnell: 'There's not going to be a government shutdown' Back

By Kevin Robillard | 12/03/2017 10:16 AM EDT

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said Sunday he was confident there wouldn't be a government shutdown when funding runs out at the end of the week.

"There's not going to be a government shutdown," he said on ABC's "This Week" when asked whether the Republican-controlled Congress could keep the government running. "It's just not going to happen."

Democrats have threatened to withhold their votes for government funding unless Congress acts to provide legal relief to tens of thousands of children of undocumented immigrants who are protected by an Obama-era program that is set to end in March.

McConnell argued there is no "crisis" that would justify tying saving the so-called Dreamers to government funding.

"That's a ridiculous position. There is no crisis," McConnell said. "There's no emergency. The president has given us until March to address it. I don't think the Democrats would be very smart to say they want to shut down the government over a non-emergency."

Government funding is expected to run out on Friday.

OMB Director Mick Mulvaney, appearing on CBS' "Face The Nation," was slightly less confident, but predicted Republicans would be able to avoid a shutdown despite a "broken" system of government spending.

"I think there's a group of right-wingers in the House who say they want to shut the government down," he said. "There's a group of Democrats who want to shut the government down over DACA. And there's a group of lawmakers from some of the hurricane states who want to shut the government down until they get what they want. This just sheds light on the fact that the appropriations, the spending system is broken when any little group can sort of hold the government hostage. We need to get beyond that. I think that we will, I don't think you'll see a government shutdown."

When host John Dickerson noted Mulvaney was once a fiscal hardliner in the House, the OMB director replied: "All the more reason the system should be fixed. We don't spend money properly in Washington, D.C."

To view online click here.

Back

EPA proposes repealing 'glider kit' part of truck rule Back

By Alex Guillén | 11/09/2017 12:48 PM EDT

EPA today proposed repealing part of the Obama-era Phase 2 emissions rule for heavy-duty trucks that classified "glider kits" as new vehicles or engines that are subject to more stringent requirements.

Glider kits are new truck chassis with rebuilt engines and can cost significantly less than a new truck with a new engine. The proposal argues that EPA does not have the authority to regulate glider kits under the Clean Air Act.

In a statement, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said the Obama administration unlawfully tried to expand the Clean Air Act's reach. "Gliders not only provide a more affordable option for smaller owners and operators, but also serve as a key economic driver to numerous rural communities," he said.

Pruitt announced plans to revisit that part of the rule in August following a May meeting with and a July petition from Fitzgerald Truck Sales, the biggest U.S. manufacturer of glider kits.

WHAT'S NEXT: EPA will take public comment through Jan. 5 and hold a hearing on Dec. 4 at EPA headquarters in Washington.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: What to expect in agency action in 2018 — Where are those EPA officials? — Iranian unrest could fuel higher oil prices
Date: Wednesday, January 03, 2018 5:42:17 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 01/03/2018 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Ben Lefebvre, Eric Wolff, Darius Dixon, Annie Snider, Emily Holden and Alex Guillén

DIDN'T AGENCY THAT COMING: President Donald Trump's deregulatory agenda is expected to shift into high gear in 2018. Expect to see more moves to open more land to fossil fuel exploration, aggressive pushes to rewrite (or ax altogether) Obama-era rules and major legal battles take shape in the courts. With that in mind, here's what ME will be on the lookout for across a host of agencies this year:

—FERC response to DOE grid proposal: Regulators at FERC are slated to weigh in next week on the Energy Department's controversial effort to prop up struggling coal and nuclear power plants in the name of making the electric grid more resilient across the Northeast and parts of the Midwest. The "final action" could take one of several forms — technical conferences, a new proposed rule, requests for information etc. — and recently minted FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre expects the agency to meet its new Jan. 10 deadline.

—What'll happen on Clean Power Plan? EPA officials are hoping to finalize a narrow replacement to the Clean Power Plan quickly enough to ensure that the Trump administration gets to defend it as the regulation winds its way through the courts. Promised additional opportunities for public comment on the regulation's withdrawal in San Francisco; Gillette, Wyo.; and Kansas City, Mo. are not yet on the calendar even as the Jan. 16 comment deadline approaches. But Democrats are trying to use climate change and the environment as a wedge against the Trump administration, as attorneys general in New York, Delaware and Maryland hold their own hearings next week.

—Will Trump dim solar trade prospects? The Trump administration has until Jan. 26 to decide whether or not to put a tariff on solar imports. The U.S. International Trade Commission said last year that cheap foreign imports harmed the U.S. solar industry, and it sent recommendations to the White House. Now the U.S. Trade Representative is preparing a report for Trump, who will make the final call.

—See you in court (a bunch): Litigation will start really moving for various delays and withdrawals of rules that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt did last year — a product of courts usually taking their time on these matters. His agency is going to have to fight off lawsuits over its ozone implementation, as well as litigation over its decision not to require financial assurance for hardrock miners. So many other rules are in hiatus this year that future litigation or regulatory rollbacks are difficult to predict. Meanwhile, Pruitt likely will dig in on revamping the National Ambient Air Quality Standards and New Source Review air quality programs, although those are likely to be fairly private processes.

—More acreage, more drilling? Interior's new five-year offshore drilling plan is expected out any moment now and could open up waters in the eastern Gulf of Mexico, the mid-Atlantic and even the Pacific. Only time will tell if the agency's strategy of offering every acre available will generate any new demand for federal leases while oil prices remain low.

—Reorganization across the nation: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has talked a big game of reorganizing his sprawling agency, so significant attention goes to whether he decides to go ahead with combining BSEE and BOEM. (The Obama administration cleaved the agencies from the larger Mineral Management Service following the Deepwater Horizon disaster.) There remain questions about how Zinke could feasibly do that and whether it's a good call in the first place. Significant attention will also go to whether he follows through on idea of moving BLM headquarters to Denver and reshaping agencies' local jurisdictions to be based on watersheds instead of states.

—How corny will EPA be? The agency spent last year courting controversy over the Renewable Fuel Standard, but it eventually yielded to the influence of corn-state senators and took the path of least resistance. The RFS is an annual exercise, so EPA will get another run at setting blending requirements this year. What Pruitt will do remains to be seen, including whether he would take the dramatic step of offering small oil refiners a blanket waiver from the program. Taking all of these small plants out of the program would cut credit prices, no doubt once again inflaming Gang Grain.

—Can the WOTUS knot be detangled? Trump's promise to repeal and replace the Obama administration's controversial water rule may sound simple, but it's proven to be anything but. EPA's schedule for the undertaking keeps slipping, with the latest plan being to finalize the repeal in April and propose a new rule defining a narrower scope for the Clean Water Act in May. Not only are those moves apt to provoke lawsuits from environmental groups and blue states, but that slower timeline means the Obama-era rule could actually take effect for a time, if the Supreme Court rules that challenges should have first gone through district court and an appellate court stay dissolves before EPA can finalize a stop-gap rule to delay its effect.

—Rebuilding our water infrastructure: EPA is due to propose changes to the rule governing lead levels in drinking water this year, albeit seven months later than previously planned. The agency will next week collect input from state, local and stakeholder groups ahead of its August deadline for proposing a new rule. Pruitt has promised a "war on lead," and public health advocates say that would mean full removal of all lead water lines - a pricey proposition that raises questions about who would pay: homeowners or utilities. Keep an eye out for this issue, too, as talk of an infrastructure package on Capitol Hill continues.

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Clean Energy Business Network's Andy Barnes was first to identify the Gettysburg Address and President Abraham Lincoln's Second Inaugural address as the two speeches etched on the Lincoln Memorial. For today: Which president's initials at birth were H.U.G.? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

SHUSTER EXIT FUELS T&I SHUFFLE: The departure of House Transportation Chairman Bill Shuster guarantees the Republican leadership on the panel will look radically different next year. Three current subcommittee chairmen — Frank LoBiondo, Lou Barletta and Jeff Denham — are either leaving the chamber or face competitive reelection bids, perhaps allowing others to move up in leadership of the committee. Of particular interest to ME readers will be the move of current Water Resources and Environment Chairman Garret Graves.

New senators arrive: Two new Democratic senators — Alabama's Doug Jones and Minnesota's Tina Smith — are expected to take their seats today but their committee assignments remain unclear to date. Both succeed members of the Senate Energy Committee, though a spokesman for Smith told ME they "don't know committee assignments just yet but hopefully will soon."

CRAMER TOUTS TRUMP BACKING: He's still playing coy about his plans, but Rep. Kevin Cramer left a Tuesday meeting with Trump vowing the president promised to endorse and campaign for him if he takes the plunge to challenge Sen. Heidi Heitkamp in North Dakota, according to a local television interview. Meanwhile, Campaign Pro's Kevin Robillard reports Cramer's history of paying his family members more than $150,000 and receiving more than $200,000 in reimbursements from his campaign account has raised eyebrows among ethics watchdogs.

O EPA OFFICIALS, WHERE ARE THOU? Two uncontroversial EPA nominees who were confirmed by a voice vote on Dec. 14 apparently have not yet arrived at the agency. EPA's website does not list Matthew Leopold as general counsel or David Ross as head of the water office. Both positions are key to the Trump administration's environmental agenda, with EPA reworking the Waters of the U.S. and Clean Power Plan regulations. It's not clear why they haven't been sworn in yet, but there are several possible reasons for a delay, including Senate paperwork issues, the holidays and personal requirements as both men relocate to Washington. EPA did not explain the delay or say when Leopold or Ross will arrive at the agency.

— It's not clear who is running the water office for the moment. Mike Shapiro, the career deputy who served as the acting assistant administrator for 2017, was slated to retire on Dec. 31. The office's site still lists Shapiro as the acting AA.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE: Sam Coleman, the retiring acting administrator for EPA Region 6, is confident the agency will make it through the Trump administration with its mission intact, he told the Tulsa World. "It's running the way it always has," he said. "The thing about government that I will say is our democracy always has its problems until you compare it to anything else — and then it looks pretty dag-gum good." Coleman supervised the agency's response to Hurricane Katrina back in 2005.

CALM BEFORE THE OIL STORM: Ongoing government protests in Iran, combined with the Trump administration's looming decision later this month on whether to reimpose some sanctions on the country, are leading some to fear the turmoil could raise oil prices. "Renewed US sanctions would not only result in an oil price spike by removing nearly 1 million barrels per day of Iranian crude exports from global markets, but would likely cause the entire nuclear deal to unravel," Joe McMonigle, senior energy policy analyst at Hedgeye Potomac Research, writes in a note. White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters Tuesday the administration hadn't made any final decisions but would "certainly keep our options open" with regards to sanctions.

ANOTHER PUNT? Some GOP lawmakers are already mulling yet another stopgap funding bill for fiscal 2018, Pro Budget & Appropriations Brief reports. Rep. Tom Cole said Tuesday that another short-term bill could kick the Jan. 19 deadline until President's Day. "Until we have an agreement, I don't think you have a choice but to think about another CR," he said about the still-unsettled issue of overall budget caps. "Both sides need to get back to running the government." And POLITICO's Sarah Ferris and Jennifer Scholtes report there's little sign of conciliation as congressional leaders from both parties sit down with top White House officials today to try and iron out the details of a potential budget agreement.

NEW YORK UNVEILS NEW ENERGY GOALS: New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo announced a host of unilateral actions in the energy space Tuesday meant to help his state hit ambitious emissions reduction and renewable energy goals, POLITICO New York's Marie J. French reports. They include setting specific amounts of offshore wind the state will procure and a new target for energy storage. "With this proposal, New York is taking bold action to fight climate change and protect our environment, while supporting and growing 21st century jobs in these cutting-edge renewable industries," the governor said in a statement.

MOVER, SHAKER: Jessica Bennett has joined the Renewable Fuels Association as vice president of external affairs. She was previously with the National Corn Growers Association as director of renewable fuels.

Jungmin Kang, a former research fellow with the Natural Resources Defense Council, has been sworn in as chairman of South Korea's Nuclear Safety and Security Commission.

QUICK HITS

- Trump plan to shrink ocean monuments threatens vital ecosystems, experts warn. The Guardian.
- Coal, oil get a boost from Northern cold snap. Utility Dive.
- Proposed Changes to Offshore Drilling Rules Raise Safety Questions. Wall Street Journal.
- Golf, Beaches and Power: How utilities wine and dine the public officials that set your rates. Post and Courier.
- China, Moving to Cut Emissions, Halts Production of 500 Car Models. New York Times.

HAPPENING TODAY

2:00 p.m. — The Federalist Society hosts a teleforum about the Clean Power Plan, RSVP: massenmacher@crcpublicrelations.com

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2018/01/what-to-expect-in-agency-action-in-2018-062946>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

EPA to hold more hearings on Clean Power Plan withdrawal Back

By Emily Holden | 12/06/2017 03:28 PM EDT

EPA will hold three additional public hearings on a proposal to withdraw the Clean Power Plan, in San Francisco; Gillette, Wyo.; and Kansas City, Mo., the agency announced today.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt in a press release said the change was "due to the overwhelming response" to two days of hearings in West Virginia last week. Many environmental advocates criticized EPA for initially scheduling hearings only in coal country.

The agency will announce the dates and locations of the meetings in the coming weeks, and speakers must register.

The Obama administration, by comparison, held public hearings on the proposed climate standards in 2015 in Pittsburgh, Denver, Atlanta and Washington, D.C.

WHAT'S NEXT: Comments on the draft withdrawal are due Jan. 16.

To view online click here.

Back

Pennsylvania's Shuster to join GOP exodus Back

By Tanya Snyder, Elena Schneider and Jake Sherman | 01/02/2018 03:21 PM EDT

House Transportation Committee Chairman Bill Shuster announced Tuesday that he's stepping down at the end of his term, joining a fast-growing wave of GOP lawmakers heading for the exits.

Since he is term-limited out of the committee's chairmanship after three terms, many insiders had speculated that this would be Shuster's last year in Congress.

With Tuesday's announcement, the Pennsylvanian joins a long list of Republicans stepping down in 2018, including Aviation Subcommittee Chairman Frank LoBiondo of New Jersey, Transportation and Infrastructure Committee Vice Chairman John Duncan of Tennessee and committee member Blake Farenthold of Texas.

The news of Shuster's impending departure was overshadowed by the announcement that Orrin Hatch of Utah, the longest-serving GOP senator, would also be stepping down in 2018, opening the door to a juicy contest involving President Donald Trump's nemesis, Mitt Romney, the 2012 GOP presidential nominee.

Shuster said he planned to devote his final year to pushing for an infrastructure bill, an initiative both parties have said is long overdue but which has yet to gain momentum because of Congress' failure to identify politically viable funding options.

"Rather than focusing on a reelection campaign, I thought it wiser to spend my last year as Chairman focusing 100 percent on working with President Trump and my Republican and Democratic colleagues in both Chambers to pass a much needed infrastructure bill to rebuild America," Shuster said in a statement sent by his congressional office.

Shuster and Trump met last month, and both were surprisingly tight-lipped afterward about what they discussed. A source close to Shuster said he won't be joining the administration.

Shuster hasn't faced a serious general election challenge for his southwestern Pennsylvania seat, winning reelection by wide margins in a district that backed Trump by 42 points. But in 2016, he squeaked by frequent primary challenger Art Halvorson by 2 points. Halvorson went on to run against Shuster as a Democrat in the 2016 general election, losing by 26 points. Halvorson announced later Tuesday that he would again run for the seat.

Republican operatives identified state Sen. John Eichelberger Jr. as a potential candidate to replace Shuster, and other candidates are expected to jump into the race now that the nine-term congressman formally confirmed his retirement. Despite the absence of any declared candidates, National Republican Congressional Committee Chairman Steve Stivers claimed victory for the party in a statement: "PA-09 is a solidly red district and we look forward to electing the next Republican leader to represent it."

In 2015, POLITICO reported that Shuster was dating Shelley Rubino, a top lobbyist at Airlines for America, the trade group that at the time represented all the major U.S. air carriers. Airlines for America spends millions of dollars lobbying Congress on behalf of the airlines, including the House Transportation Committee — which Shuster has led since 2012. In 2014, as Shuster and his wife were divorcing, the congressman filed paperwork to disclose the relationship to his committee. Shuster said Rubino would not lobby him or his staff.

But Shuster advanced some of Airline for America's priorities. In 2014, he muscled the Travel Transparency Act through the House. The legislation allowed airlines to advertise the price of tickets without including fees and taxes. In promoting the bill, Shuster and A4A used similar verbiage. GOP leaders stood by Shuster at the time, despite some internal Republican unease regarding Shuster's personal relationship with Rubino.

POLITICO also reported in 2015 that Shuster attempted to rewrite an obscure rule regulating the number of passengers on uninspected charter boats in the U.S. Virgin Islands, where the congressman owns a timeshare. Later that month, he held a fundraiser on the island. Many of the donors said they gave him money because he worked to overturn the rule.

Finally, Shuster has campaigned relentlessly to separate the air traffic control system from the Federal Aviation Authority, putting it under the authority of a nonprofit corporate board. General aviation interests, Democrats and appropriators of all stripes opposed the plan, which stymied passage of a long-term FAA reauthorization in 2016 and again in 2017.

Shuster's assertion that he's now throwing his full focus behind the infrastructure push is likely the nail in the coffin for his air traffic control plan, which is already on life support since he failed to garner enough backing in the GOP-controlled House to bring it to the floor. It's the latest in a decades-long string of disappointments for proponents of the spin-off scheme.

The infrastructure plan will need all the help it can get from well-positioned lawmakers like Shuster. Though infrastructure spending is wildly popular with Democrats, it tends to be lower on the GOP priority list.

But so far, Democrats are recoiling from Trump's plan. The details that have been floated so far involve no new spending, with a $200 billion down payment on the "trillion-dollar" infrastructure plan paid for by cutting other domestic programs. Proposals to make up the other $800 billion with private investment or state and local dollars have also turned off Democrats.

News of Shuster's retirement was first reported by the Washington Examiner.

Lauren Gardner contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Paying family with campaign funds could dog Cramer in Senate bid Back

By Kevin Robillard | 01/03/2018 05:02 AM EDT

North Dakota GOP Rep. Kevin Cramer, who is being courted by President Donald Trump to challenge Democratic Sen. Heidi Heitkamp this year, has paid his family members more than $150,000 and received more than $200,000 in reimbursements from his campaign account, a practice ethics watchdogs have questioned in the past.

Cramer, who met with Trump on Tuesday to discuss a run against Heitkamp, publicly hemmed and hawed on a run for much of 2017. National Republicans initially viewed him as a top recruit but soured on him after a series of gaffes last spring. Trump won North Dakota by more than 30 points in 2016, and the GOP views Heitkamp as one of the three most vulnerable Democratic senators up for reelection in 2018.

But a number of other candidates have passed on challenging Heitkamp, including state Treasurer Kelly Schmidt and businesswoman Tammy Miller, so Republicans have now returned to recruiting Cramer as an alternative to self-funding potato farmer and state legislator Tom Campbell.

In a phone interview in December, Cramer said he hoped to make a decision by late January and was in "pretty regular contact" with Trump and Senate Republican leaders about possibly entering the race.

"I want to be cognizant of the fact that Tom Campbell is in the race, and there are others looking at the congressional race," he said.

After meeting with Trump on Tuesday, Cramer told a local television station Trump has promised to back him in the contest.

"What's most important is that we have his strong moral support, that he will endorse me, that he'll come out in full support and that he will campaign as his schedule allows," Cramer said, adding that the president had "obvious infinite power but a finite calendar."

If Cramer did enter the race, he'd instantly become the front-runner in the GOP primary. Republicans, including Cramer himself, persistently claim he leads Heitkamp in internal polling. And the GOP is now less worried about his history of gaffes, saying the state's voters have been inoculated against his verbal missteps over his past three statewide congressional runs.

But Cramer's history of paying his family out of his campaign account could become an issue in the Senate contest. Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, a watchdog group, released a report in 2012 documenting how members can legally use campaign funds to pay their family members, as long as they don't pay above market rate.

The practice is "legally alright but morally kind of sticky," said Jordan Libowitz, the communications director at CREW. "It's important for supporters to know this money is basically going back into [the candidate's] own pocket."

FEC records show Cramer has paid his wife, Kris, nearly $140,000 since 2013. That includes $119,000 in salary, plus thousands more in mileage, per diems and other reimbursements. He's paid Reel Love Videos, a video production company owned by one of his daughters, over $11,000. Other family members have received about $12,000, including a $327 payment for "event babysitting" to one of his daughters.

Cramer defended the payments as a way to save donors' money. He said his wife has served as his campaign manager. Cramer hasn't faced a serious challenge since his Republican primary in 2012 and said he would hire a new campaign manager if he ran for Senate.

"She's considerably cheaper than a 25-year-old from Washington," Cramer said.

And Cramer defended the $200,000 in reimbursements to himself as a way of saving taxpayer money, saying he charges basically all travel expenses to his campaign instead of to his congressional office.

"I'm pretty sure I haven't turned in a finance voucher since my first year in office," he said.

Heitkamp could be a tough out for Republicans. She had $3.7 million on hand as of Sept. 30, a significant amount in a state where airtime is dirt-cheap. (Cramer had about $824,000 in his campaign account, while Campbell has already spent about $500,000 on television ads tying himself to Trump.)

The Democratic incumbent — a former state agriculture secretary who ran 12 points ahead of President Barack Obama in 2012 and earned just over 50 percent of the vote against then-Rep. Rick Berg — has staked out moderate positions on energy and agriculture issues designed to appeal to the state's voters.

The importance of those issues to the state is also weighing on Cramer, who could quickly move up the ranks of the House Energy and Commerce Committee because of the departure of more seniors members like Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.) and Joe Barton (R-Texas).

"It all becomes part of a formula to make a difficult decision more difficult," he said. "It's a factor that I'm considering for sure. We only have one member from an entire state. Influence matters all the more."

Anthony Adragna contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

As protests rage in Iran, Trump backs demonstrators, blames Obama Back

By Louis Nelson | 01/02/2018 07:49 AM EDT

President Donald Trump's administration backed anti-government protesters in Iran on Tuesday, seizing an opportunity to criticize not just a foreign government that the White House has framed as a chief foe but also the administration of Barack Obama.

Trump tweeted that "the U.S. is watching" the ongoing anti-government demonstrations across Iran, blaming the nuclear deal struck with the support of former President Obama for, he said, lining the pockets of the Iranian government.

"The people of Iran are finally acting against the brutal and corrupt Iranian regime. All of the money that President Obama so foolishly gave them went into terrorism and into their 'pockets,'" the president wrote on Twitter. "The people have little food, big inflation and no human rights. The U.S. is watching!"

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley said the U.S. would call for emergency sessions of the U.N. security and human rights councils in New York and Geneva, respectively, to address the Iranian government's crackdown on protesters. She said the Islamic Republic's suggestion that the protests had been fueled by outside influences was "complete nonsense."

"This is the precise picture of a long-oppressed people rising up against their dictators. The international community has a role to play on this," Haley said at a news conference at the U.N. in New York. "If the Iranian dictatorship's history is any guide, we can expect more outrageous abuses in the days to come. ... The people of Iran are crying out for freedom. All freedom-loving people must stand with their cause."

Tuesday marked the sixth day of protests in Iran, where a flagging economy and an uptick in food prices have prompted demonstrators to chant anti-government slogans. The Associated Press reported Tuesday that at least nine people had been killed overnight, including a member of Iran's Revolutionary Guard, raising the overall death toll from the protests to at least 20.

In Tehran, the Iranian capital, 450 protesters have been arrested since demonstrations began, the AP reported.

The protests are the largest in Iran since 2009, when the disputed reelection of Iran's then-President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad sparked anti-government demonstrations. In what seemed a veiled criticism of the Obama administration's response to those demonstrations, Haley said Tuesday that "the international community made the mistake of failing" to support Iranian protesters in 2009. "We must not make that mistake again."

At Tuesday's news briefing, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders echoed Haley's warning, telling reporters that "the international community cannot sit silent as it did" in 2009. She stopped short of saying that the president would like to see regime change in Iran, instead listing Trump's priorities as "basic human rights" for the Iranian people and an end to Iran's support for groups deemed by the U.S. government to be terrorist organizations.

"The Iranian people are angry at the rising tide of corruption in their daily lives. The people are tired of paying the price for their violent and corrupt rulers," Sanders said. "The citizens of Iran have paid a heavy price for the violence and extremism of their leaders, and the Iranian people long to reclaim their country's proud history, its culture, its civilization and its cooperation with its neighbors."

Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif took a shot on Twitter at Trump and U.S. foreign policy, writing that "Iran's security and stability depend on its own people, who — unlike the peoples of Trumps [sic] regional 'bffs' — have the right to vote and to protest. These hard-earned rights will be protected, and infiltrators will not be allowed to sabotage them through violence and destruction."

U.S. Undersecretary of State Steve Goldstein on Tuesday called on Iran, however, to stop blocking social media sites, including Instagram and the messaging service Telegram, calling them "legitimate avenues for communication," according to an Associated Press report. The U.S. has an obligation "not to stand by," Goldstein said, and will "encourage the protesters to continue to fight for what's right."

Trump's Tuesday tweet echoed sentiments he had expressed online over the previous three days. He has long been critical of the landmark nuclear deal negotiated in part by the Obama administration, taking steps last year to imperil it without yet making good on his campaign promise to remove the U.S. from it entirely.

Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei hinted that outside influence may be playing a role in the unrest in his nation, suggesting via a statement on his official website that "in the recent days' incidents, enemies of Iran utilized various means — including money, weapon, politics and intelligence apparatuses — to create problems for the Islamic system."

To view online click here.

Back

Iran protests could move Trump to kill nuclear deal Back

By Michael Crowley and Eliana Johnson | 01/02/2018 07:40 PM EDT

Anti-government protests in Iran offer President Donald Trump a new reason to scrap the Iran nuclear deal later this month — a risky move that Trump's supporters are cheering but that critics warn could play into Tehran's hands.

Trump and his senior officials have offered rhetorical support for the protesters and denounced the government in statements and on Twitter. They are also exploring such further steps as targeted sanctions and warnings to social media companies not to comply with Iranian censorship.

But Trump will have an opportunity for far more dramatic action in less than two weeks, when he must decide by law whether to continue waiving economic sanctions against Iran that were lifted by the 2015 Iran nuclear deal. The sanctions waivers must be renewed every 120 days.

Trump could be further motivated to move boldly given bipartisan complaints that President Barack Obama failed to act forcefully in response to the last round of major Iranian protests, in 2009, sources familiar with administration deliberations said.

Although Trump has repeatedly threatened to withdraw unilaterally from the nuclear deal, his senior national security team has persuaded him that the diplomatic costs outweigh the benefits of keeping a campaign promise and undoing one of Obama's proudest achievements.

But some people familiar with administration deliberations say that the moment of vulnerability for Iran's nearly 40-year-old fundamentalist regime may move him to grander action.

"He's not going to want to waive sanctions and keep money flowing to dictators when there are people protesting in the streets," said Richard Goldberg, a former Senate Republican aide who helped design Iran sanctions and is now a senior adviser at the hawkish Foundation for Defense of Democracies.

Another Middle East analyst with ties to the Trump administration agreed.

"I think there's a calculus that you take advantage of this moment and you don't waive the sanctions, and put further pressure on a regime which is already facing a lot of economic problems," said Andrew Bowen, a visiting scholar at the American Enterprise Institute. "You use this as a wedge to try to renegotiate the deal."

Many other Middle East experts and former U.S. officials dispute that rationale, however, warning that pulling the plug on the nuclear deal would throw Iran's embattled Islamist leaders a lifeline. The agreement retains strong support from the five other nations that negotiated it with Tehran — China, Russia, Great Britain, France and Germany.

"I would not walk away" from the nuclear deal, said Dennis Ross, a Middle East adviser to three presidents of both parties. "It basically diverts attention back onto us. We have an interest in keeping the spotlight on what the Iranians are doing, not shifting it to a step that we took."

A senior administration official told POLITICO that waiving the sanctions again, amid the popular upheaval in Iran's streets, "sends a horrible message," but that Trump would also be presented with the option of preserving the deal. Even if Trump decides to continue providing Tehran with sanctions relief, the official said, the protests offer the U.S. "additional pressure over the Europeans" to modify the terms of the nuclear agreement.

Iran insists it will not renegotiate the nuclear deal. The July 2015 agreement slowed Iran's steady march toward a nuclear weapons capability, scaling back and limiting its atomic program in return for an end to punishing U.S. and European economic sanctions.

Obama called Washington's furious argument over the deal "the most consequential foreign policy debate that our country has had since the invasion of Iraq," and warned that the alternatives were a nuclear-armed Iran or war.

As a candidate, Trump repeatedly denounced the nuclear deal and vowed to shred it once in office. He has been dissuaded by top officials, including national security adviser H.R. McMaster, Defense Secretary James Mattis and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson. None are enthusiastic defenders of the agreement, but all say the costs of withdrawing now — including international isolation and the risk of a second nuclear emergency even as Trump confronts North Korea — are not worth the uncertain benefits.

European leaders have also urged Trump to preserve the deal, arguing that restored U.S. sanctions would empower regime hard-liners who say the U.S. cannot be trusted and would lead Iran to restart its nuclear program.

Confronted with an Oct. 15 legal deadline to certify whether Iran had complied with the deal, Trump declined to do so — despite the findings of international inspectors who say Iran has complied with its obligations, which include dismantling centrifuges and limiting uranium enrichment.

Trump's refusal to certify Iran's compliance was mainly symbolic. But he warned that unless Congress and European countries took unspecified steps to crack down on Tehran, "the agreement will be terminated."

No such action has followed, although Sen. Bob Corker of Tennessee, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has been talking with his Democratic counterpart, Ben Cardin of Maryland, about legislation that might satisfy Trump that the deal has been strengthened while still winning 60 votes for Senate passage. That would require coming up with language that would not violate the nuclear deal's terms while providing Trump with political cover to preserve the agreement.

Senate aides familiar with the negotiations, however, said it was unlikely that the upper chamber would produce that sort of legislation by the time the president has to decide — on Jan. 11 and over the following week — whether to certify the deal and, more important, to waive the sanctions the agreement lifted.

Seizing on the drama of the protests, Republican hawks are now pushing for a tougher bill. Corker is working to win over one of those hawks, Sen. Tom Cotton of Arkansas, a confidant of McMaster and an influential foreign policy adviser to the administration. Two sources familiar with administration thinking say it's unlikely the president would support a bill that Cotton himself has not signed on to.

Cotton is pushing for legislation that targets short-range missiles, which have become a matter of contention in the negotiations. Because they are not nuclear missiles, they fall outside the purview of the nuclear agreement, yet they pose a real threat to Iran's neighbors in the region.

"That is outside the nuclear deal, and that gives the Democrats and the Europeans heartburn," a senior administration official said.

Congress could also pursue legislation in response to the protests, unrelated to the nuclear agreement. Potential bills include enforcing provisions of existing laws against the Tehran, including the Global Magnitsky Act, a 2016 law that expanded an initial statute targeting human rights abusers in Russia to violators worldwide.

Another option would be for the Senate to pass transparency legislation cleared by the House in December that would make public the financial assets of top Iranian officials.

Sources with ties to the administration said the protests may have raised the bar for what new action against Iran will satisfy Trump when it comes to the nuclear deal.

"The protests come at a time when the politics were really against Trump and the administration internationally. Now you have a situation where Iranians are pouring into the streets. [The protests] are a reminder of the type of regime you've been dealing with," said Goldberg, the former Senate Republican aide. "I think the threshold" for congressional action "goes up much, much more."

Some supporters of the nuclear deal unhappily agree.

"I suspect that this is giving him the pretext to do what he was planning to do anyway," said Trita Parsi, president of the National Iranian American Council. "It is definitely going to make him more comfortable, but the U.S. will still be isolated and other countries will be upset."

Parsi added that negating the nuclear deal would also do a favor to Iranian hard-liners, who he said would blame President Hassan Rouhani of Iran for brokering a failed bargain with the U.S.

Obama administration officials viewed Rouhani and Mohammad Javad Zarif, his foreign minister and Iran's lead nuclear negotiator, as reformers willing to thaw decades of U.S.-Iranian hostility. Critics say that was never true, and that Rouhani's crackdown on the protesters reveals his lack of genuine support for greater political freedom.

At least 20 people have been killed over nearly a week of protests in several cities around the country, with 450 arrested in Tehran alone, according to The Associated Press.

Ross, who served as a top national security aide in the Obama White House during Iran's so-called Green Revolution in 2009, said Obama did not respond forcefully enough at the time, and he applauded the Trump administration's repeated statements drawing attention to the protests and their violent repression.

Trump administration officials are trying to back the protests without playing into Iranian propaganda that accuses the U.S. of fomenting "regime change" inside the country. In a Tuesday news conference, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, quoted anti-government chants from some of the demonstrations, noting: "Those are not my words. Those are not the words of the United States. Those are the words of the brave people of Iran."

But Ross, who supports non-nuclear sanctions against Tehran, cautioned that top Iranian officials — including the nation's supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, a militant Shiite cleric — would happily exploit a decision by Trump to walk away from the nuclear deal.

"Reimposing all the nuclear sanctions allows the regime to say they are standing up to pressure from the outside," Ross said. "They want to turn this into a nationalist issue. We want to raise the costs of a crackdown. Don't give them a reason to focus on us."

Seung Min Kim contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Shutdown threat revived as Congress returns Back

By Sarah Ferris and Jennifer Scholtes | 01/02/2018 06:55 PM EDT

Another shutdown showdown looms this month, and Congress isn't even back yet. Happy New Year, Washington.

Congressional leaders from both parties will sit down with top White House officials on Wednesday to haggle over the basics of a budget deal they were supposed to settle last spring. And while aides say the talks will stick to spending, a fight over immigration looms, along with a host of other thorny policy disputes that will shape the 2018 legislative agenda.

Ahead of the meeting, there was little sign of conciliation on either side.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi sent a letter to her Democratic colleagues on Tuesday insisting that Democrats would demand higher domestic spending. President Donald Trump tweeted a broadside at Democrats, saying the party is "doing nothing for DACA — just interested in politics." That missive came days after Trump egged on Democrats over his plan to eliminate the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, tweeting that "there can be no DACA deal" without a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border — which Democrats have ruled out.

Whether the parties can reach a deal on immigration is still unclear, but one certainty is that they need to come together by Jan. 19 to avoid a shutdown.

The key players meeting Wednesday afternoon at the Capitol are Pelosi, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, House Speaker Paul Ryan, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, White House legislative director Marc Short and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney.

Republicans are eager to separate a debate on Dreamers from the latest budget fight, with White House officials saying Tuesday that the meeting's focus will be on raising stiff budget caps for defense and domestic programs over the next two years — not on immigration.

"The president wants a two-year budget deal that provides realistic budget caps, and provides certainty for our national security," White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters Tuesday. "That'll be the focus, front and center, for the conversations that are taking place this week."

A senior congressional aide said the meeting was called by the speaker's office, with the topic focused specifically on trying to reach a budget caps deal.

But Democratic votes will be needed for any spending measure, giving them leverage to force the issue.

Wednesday's meeting is the first of several key strategy sessions taking place in the coming days. Trump is meeting with Ryan and McConnell at Camp David this weekend to map out the GOP agenda, including whether and how to tackle welfare programs, health care and infrastructure. House and Senate Republicans will hold their annual joint retreat at month's end.

However, even if a budget deal can be clinched soon, aides and lawmakers say Congress still will likely need to pass another short-term funding bill to avoid a shutdown later this month. That would mark the fourth patch in as many months.

"Until we have an agreement, I don't think you have a choice but to think about another CR," Rep. Tom Cole (R-Okla.), a longtime spending leader, told POLITICO on Tuesday. He said he expects another continuing resolution to last possibly through Presidents Day.

"We've been waiting 110 days for five people to come to a deal, and they're holding up the entire funding of the government of the United States because they can't sit down and find a common number," Cole said, though rank-and-file Republicans also acknowledged they previously slow-walked spending negotiations to avoid derailing their tax overhaul push.

Democratic leaders say they'd be willing to back another stopgap bill as long as both parties have agreed to an overall budget deal.

"If you have a situation where everything is done and this is just about inking the deal, then it's not going to be controversial to do a short-term CR," a Democratic House aide said.

Along with immigration, the parties are split over federal spending levels.

Democratic leaders have demanded a spending deal that matches every additional dollar spent at the Pentagon with a dollar for domestic programs.

Republicans have blasted the idea, accusing Democrats of holding the Pentagon hostage to their domestic priorities. Some conservatives say they'd prefer that Trump attend the meeting. But with two of the administration's most fiscally conservative officials at the other end of the negotiating table, Democrats may be hard-pressed to secure their demands.

In her letter to Democrats on Tuesday, Pelosi said she and Schumer will "continue to insist on parity" in the defense and nondefense budget caps during the Wednesday meeting. She also said they will be fighting for additional spending on veterans programs, disaster relief, the National Institutes of Health, the Children's Health Insurance Program, community health centers, combating the opioid epidemic and propping up faltering pension plans.

Other key deadlines Congress must address by Jan. 19 include extending federal spying powers under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act and reauthorizing the National Flood Insurance Program.

Lawmakers also are under pressure to quickly approve a massive disaster relief package to help communities rebuild from deadly hurricanes and wildfires last year and to raise the debt ceiling before the nation reaches its borrowing limit in the next few months.

All of those issues were punted at the end of last year.

While Pelosi also wrote in her letter that Democratic leaders are "firmly committed to swiftly passing the DREAM Act," the letter was silent on a demand for a DACA fix in return for their support of a spending agreement.

Instead, congressional leaders have chosen to let a group of negotiators in the Senate try to strike a deal that would offer permanent protection for Dreamers — undocumented immigrants who arrived in the United States as minors — while including border security and other restrictive immigration provisions.

The informal group of seven senators, including Sens. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) and Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.), have been quietly working with White House officials on the issue.

Late last month, White House chief of staff John Kelly pledged to send senators a list of immigration provisions that the Trump administration wants to see attached to any agreement for Dreamers. But the White House has yet to send over such a list, three congressional aides said Tuesday.

Senators have been open to modest boosts in border security and have discussed somewhat restricting the ability of Dreamers to sponsor relatives for permanent residency. McConnell has said he would bring an immigration bill to the Senate floor by the end of January if lawmakers and the White House can reach a compromise.

Heather Caygle and Seung Min Kim contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: What to expect when you're expecting a new congressional term — Administration rolls back fracking, drilling rules — Pruitt headed to Israel in late January
Date: Tuesday, January 02, 2018 5:44:43 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 01/02/2018 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Ben Lefebvre, Daniel Lippman and Eric Wolff

WELCOME TO 2018! We're heading into year two of the Trump presidency, and the administration's deregulatory drive is expected to keep chugging along. Congress will start the year with a lengthy potential to-do list on ethanol mandates, energy tax credits and EPA funding, among other things, but there's no guarantee lawmakers will get much done before attention shifts to the midterm elections. Here's what your ME host reports is likely to top lawmakers' attention in the coming year.

—An ethanol 'grand compromise': Oil- and corn-state Republicans kick off the year hoping to strike a bargain that would help refineries struggling with high compliance costs associated with the Renewable Fuel Standard while protecting the overall integrity of the biofuels program. It's an issue that's consistently vexed the GOP, fouling everything from agency confirmations to Congressional Review Act challenges during 2017. And some observers are skeptical the new push will ultimately bear fruit: "Corn-state stakeholders still lack a compelling reason to come to the table," says Kevin Book, an analyst at ClearView Energy Partners.

—Funding those federal agencies: It's déjà vu as Congress has just three weeks to strike a deal by Jan. 19 to avoid a government shutdown and set spending levels for EPA and the Energy and Interior departments. The GOP-led Congress shrugged off most of the deepest cuts pushed by the Trump administration, but its spending packages contained numerous riders deemed unworkable by Democrats.

—Energy tax extenders: Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch unveiled a bill containing a smorgasbord of renewable energy credits just before the holidays, and even though he doesn't like extenders on principle, House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady has pledged to explore a way to move them this year.

—Infrastructure opportunities: Trump is expected to unveil a long-awaited statement of infrastructure "principles" and some see the forthcoming infrastructure push as an opportunity to advance energy priorities and water infrastructure investments. "It's a good context to revisit things like siting, permitting, certainly some of the export terminal issues," Rep. Kevin Cramer told ME.

—New nomination challenges: Two new Democratic senators — Alabama's Doug Jones and Minnesota's Tina Smith — join the chamber this week, and the Republican Senate majority will shrink to 51-49. That means just two GOP defections would kill a selection and just one would force Vice President Mike Pence to break the tie. An early test will be Kathleen Hartnett White, Trump's controversial selection to run the White House Council on Environmental Quality.

—Ambition? Do we have more ambition? Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski is ready to roll on her energy legislation S. 1460 \(115\) and House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop hopes his own bill H.R. 4239 \(115\) will hit the floor early in January so both chambers "can actually go to conference." Other lawmakers have talked a big game of overhauling the Antiquities Act, Endangered Species Act and reauthorizing DOE, though those efforts have steered clear of the Democratic buy-in needed to get them out of the Senate.

WHAT ABOUT THE REGULATORY FRONT? ME will have a second part of agency expectations for 2018 tomorrow, but here's a couple of important things that happened while you were opening presents.

—Fracking rule repealed: Interior repealed the Obama-era rule requiring companies to disclose what chemicals they use in fracking operations on Friday, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. In its notice, the agency said "any marginal benefits" of the regulation did not outweigh the costs "even if those costs are a small percentage of the cost of a well." The rescission takes effect immediately, so ME expects lawsuits to swiftly follow.

—Rolling back offshore drilling rules: The Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement proposed undoing a series of rules put in place following the Deepwater Horizon disaster. The agency said the move will address "certain unnecessary regulatory burdens" and implement a series of changes to the rules long-sought by industry. The changes will be open for public comment until Jan. 29.

—Another ozone-related lawsuit: Eight state attorneys general, led by New York's Eric Schneiderman, sued EPA for deciding in October to deny their petition to add nine upwind states to the Ozone Transport Region, a move that would have required those new states to implement more stringent pollution controls.

—Oil reserves hiked: Shortly before Christmas, Interior boosted its estimates for the amount of oil contained in Alaska's lands and waters to more than 17 billion barrels, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports.

—Flying free: Energy companies and others will no longer face charges for inadvertently harming protected bird species under a new Interior legal memorandum, Pro's Nick Juliano reports.

WELCOME TO A NEW YEAR! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and I hope everyone enjoyed some family time over the holiday season. A couple of weeks back, the Duberstein Group's Dan Meyer was first to name Canada's Justin Trudeau as our nearby neighbor with the Christmas birthday. For today: Which two speeches are inscribed into the Lincoln Memorial? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

POINT OF PERSONNEL PRIVILEGE: It's been ME's distinct honor to hit your inboxes each morning for the last year and a half, but soon it will be time to pass the baton to someone new. Pros will recognize ME's talented successor, Kelsey Tamborrino, as the author of our subscriber-only Afternoon Energy. For anyone worried, ME's not going far: I'll be headed over to full-time duties covering energy and environmental issues on Capitol Hill.

ICYMI, Pros got a ton of amazing articles over the holiday break, so here's a roundup:

—Cabinet secrecy: Pro's Emily Holden (aided by two dozen POLITICO reporters) looked at how Trump officials often shield their schedules from public view, keep their travel plans secret and won't release information on the groups with whom they meet.

—DOE Deputy speaks: Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette tells Pro's Darius Dixon in an interview the new Energy team wants to prioritize nuclear waste cleanups and he pushed back on critiques that senior DOE staff lack adequate scientific expertise.

—Delivering on 'energy dominance'? Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports the Trump administration's pro-fossil fuel policies come as the U.S. hits record high oil and gas production (though that may be nearing a plateau), but they have also hindered the shift to newer technologies like renewable energy and electric vehicles that are likely to play a key role in the global economy in the coming years.

—Weapon no more? EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's moves to ease enforcement on new pollution limits under the National Ambient Air Quality Standards are drawing praise from industry groups and conservatives who say the air quality program that's reduced emissions of ground-level ozone, particulate matter and carbon monoxide is in need of fixing, Pro's Alex Guillén reports.

—Praying for Puerto Rico: Pro's Eric Wolff examines the regulatory and legal obstacles facing Puerto Rico as the island looks to transform its grid, add renewables, and develop microgrids in the aftermath of devastating hurricanes.

USITC FILLS LEGAL GAP AS SOLAR TARIFF DECISION APPROACHES: Trump has until Jan. 26 to decide whether or not to impose tariffs or quotas on solar equipment imports under a "safeguard" provision in the U.S. trade law. While most of U.S. solar industry exerts is pushing hard to sway Trump's decision, the U.S. International Trade Commission closed a key legal loophole over the break, issuing a report stating the surge in Chinese solar production that the agency said harmed U.S. solar manufacturing could not have been predicted. "Unforeseen by the U.S. negotiators ... the government of China implemented a series of industrial policies, five-year plans, and other government support programs favoring renewable energy product manufacturing, including CSPV products," the agency said. The document, which was requested by U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer last year, will be critical if a future tariff is challenged under World Trade Organization rules. The WTO ruled against U.S. steel tariffs in 2003 in part because it felt the U.S. had failed to prove the rise of cheap overseas steel manufacture was unforeseen.

MURRAY FURIOUS WITH GREENS AS FERC GRID RESILIENCE DECISION LOOMS: FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre and his band of merry commissioners have until Jan. 10 to decide whether and how to pay nuclear and coal generators for providing vaguely defined resiliency services to the grid, and if he's going to go down, coal magnate Bob Murray wants to go down fighting. Murray's target in his Boxing Day filing is a Dec. 20 submission by the Sierra Club, the Natural Resources Defense Council and Earthjustice highlighting photos uncovered by In These Times showing Energy Secretary Rick Perry meeting with Murray in March. The green groups assert the photos show that Murray essentially wrote the grid resiliency rule, an argument Murray calls "replete with absolute lies." Murray accuses the groups of contradicting their own earlier filing, and saying, "Murray Energy has never proffered a proposed Grid Resiliency Rule to Secretary Perry or DOE."

HMMM: Pruitt will visit Israel from Jan. 26-28, according to a list released Monday from the country's Foreign Affairs Ministry. Couple of questions: What's the purpose of the trip? Who's paying for it? The agency didn't respond to request for comment. Hard to imagine Pruitt will be promoting LNG, as he did in Morocco, since Israel is sitting on some fairly lucrative fields.

STILL DESPERATE IN PUERTO RICO: More than 100 days after Hurricane Maria pummeled the island, just 55 percent of Puerto Rico's 1.5 million electric customers have power and not everyone will get it until May, the Associated Press reports. That comes as an additional 1,500 workers from member companies of the Edison Electric Institute are expected to hit the ground in early January to help get the lights back on.

ROOKIE MISTAKE: The record cold East Coast temperatures did not escape Trump's radar, who tweeted, "Perhaps we could use a little bit of that good old Global Warming that our Country, but not other countries, was going to pay TRILLIONS OF DOLLARS to protect against." The president seems to have conflated short-term regional weather patterns with longer-term changes in the overall climate. But that comes as former White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci said over the weekend people would be "surprised" about the president's views about climate change. Good New York Times explainer here.

ACCOUNTING MISTAKE: Interior will pay for a nearly $40,000 helicopter trip Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke took of a Nevada national park from a "more appropriate account" after Newsweek questioned why the agency initially used wildfire preparedness funds to pay for it. "There are different accounts for different functions, and it's the department's position that there are more appropriate accounts to fit this particular expenditure," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said.

OILED AGAIN! South Korea on Sunday seized a second ship suspected of transporting oil to North Korea in violation of international sanctions, the BBC reports. That comes after Trump blamed China last week for allowing illegal shipments to reach North Korean shores. "Caught RED HANDED - very disappointed that China is allowing oil to go into North Korea. There will never be a friendly solution to the North Korea problem if this continues to happen," the president tweeted on Dec. 28.

UNIMPEACHABLE MOTIVES? What started as a quixotic Trump impeachment push by billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer has instead garnered four million digital signatures and left Democrats around the country wondering what he'll use his newly-gathered tool for, POLITICO California's Carla Marinucci and David Siders report. Mike Madrid, a Republican consultant in California, said Steyer's efforts show "there's a huge vacuum for somebody like Tom Steyer to come in and tap into the activist base — and even beyond that — where some are willing to sign up." During a C-Span "Newsmakers" appearance, Steyer refused to rule out a run for higher office: "I haven't ruled it out, and I'm actually trying to determine what will have the most positive differential impact," Steyer said. "I'm absolutely ambitious."

NO MORE: Major oil services company Halliburton closed its Washington D.C. government affairs shop as of December 31, a source tells ME. A Halliburton spokeswoman did not immediately elaborate on the thinking behind the closure, but the new absence of any D.C. representation whatsoever for one of the biggest names in the oil patch raises questions of whether at least some in the industry are banking on the Trump administration's continued good graces.

MOVER, SHAKER: Brandon Breczynski has joined the Alaska Oil and Gas Association as external affairs manager. He's worked for years in various roles in the state legislature.

QUICK HITS

- Fighting Climate Change, One Laundry Load at a Time. New York Times.
- Feds optimistic Utah's history of failing to meet air quality rules is coming to an end, new EPA boss says. Salt Lake Tribune.
- The Daughter Of An Ex-Coal Executive Helped Lead Trump's National Monuments Review. Huffington Post.
- Clock runs out on proposed coal export terminal in Plaquemines Parish. New Orleans Advocate.
- Christine Todd Whitman Sees Danger in New EPA Approach. WCAI.
- Environmental deregulation helped Trump win rural America. Now some fear he's gone too far. Washington Post.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

CRICKETS

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2018/01/what-to-expect-when-youre-expecting-a-new-congressional-term-061992>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Election year politics leaves low expectations for energy policy Back

By Anthony Adragna | 01/02/2018 05:06 AM EDT

Ethanol mandates, energy tax credits and EPA funding are among the issues fighting for attention as Republicans begin their second year with unified control of the government.

But first, Congress has less than three weeks to avoid a government shutdown. Passing a yearlong spending bill by Jan. 19 will be lawmakers' top priority, and President Donald Trump has lofty plans for a major infrastructure bill to follow his first significant legislative achievement, the tax law he signed last month.

Republicans have some ideas about overhauling major environmental statutes and grand compromises, but it remains to be seen whether any turn into actual policy victories.

Momentum for heavy legislative lifts tends to wither during election years — not to mention if the political climate worsens for Republicans — and several senior GOP lawmakers weren't able to articulate specific goals for 2018.

"Let's get through this year first," Senate Environment and Public Works Chairman John Barrasso said when asked before the holiday break what his committee hoped to accomplish in the coming year.

As Congress settles in, here's six things to look for from lawmakers on the energy and environment front this year.

1. Pursuit of a 'win-win' grand RFS compromise

Oil- and coal-state Republicans start 2018 engaged in talks with the White House in hopes of reaching a grand bargain that would rein in high prices of credits needed to comply with the Renewable Fuel Standard, while maintaining the integrity of the underlying program. Texas Sens. John Cornyn and Ted Cruz are seeking a deal on behalf of refiners in their states, though Cruz's initial pitch to the White House of capping the biofuels credits, also known as Renewable Identification Numbers, or RINs, at 10 cents per gallon, landed with a thud.

Iowa Sen. Chuck Grassley, an ally of biofuels producers, plans to meet with several senators on the issue after the holidays, but he was unwilling to tip his hand. "I don't want to talk about it, because we'll be negotiating in the press," Grassley told POLITICO. Some observers remain skeptical such a "win-win" agreement can be found, noting similar efforts have come up short multiple times previously. "Corn-state stakeholders still lack a compelling reason to come to the table," Kevin Book, an analyst at ClearView Energy Partners, said.

It's a high-stakes battle for both sides. Last fall, Cruz placed a hold on USDA nominee Bill Northey, who's expected to play a key role in negotiating this year's farm bill, and continues to block him even after meeting Trump on the issue. But the Texan halted the nomination only after Sen. Joni Ernst temporarily blocked EPA air chief Bill Wehrum's nomination and won concessions from the agency not to make changes to the RFS. With their narrow 51-49 margin in the chamber this year, small blocs of oil- or corn-state Republicans could wreak havoc on their own party's agenda this year if they don't get their way.

Negotiations over potential RFS reform continue in the House as well where House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee Chairman John Shimkus hopes to move some sort of legislative package this year. But, in spite of months of behind-the-scenes talks about the issue, he said reaching agreement would remain an uphill climb. "It's hard. It's always been hard," he told POLITICO. "It's just, how many things can you juggle at one time?"

2. More agency funding fights

Congress left town after passing a short-term spending patch for federal agencies through Jan. 19, but they'll have to almost immediately figure out where to set spending levels for EPA and the departments of Energy and Interior. The Trump administration pushed deep cuts to those agencies in its fiscal 2018 budget, but even most congressional Republicans seemed cool to many of those such as trimming EPA by an additional third. More than 40 Senate Democrats sent a letter urging the removal of any anti-environmental riders from spending legislation back in December, so look for a similar push to emerge this month as well.

Senate Appropriators have released legislation covering EPA and Interior that would spend \$32.6 billion in fiscal 2018, roughly $5.3 billion above what the administration requested. House lawmakers cleared their $31.4 billion version back in September as part of a broader spending package, H.R. 3354 \(115\). Both measures avoid the deepest cuts by Trump but contain riders deemed unworkable by Democrats.

3. Tax extenders and energy legislation

Before breaking for the holidays, Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch unveiled legislation extending or expanding just about every energy credit imaginable. House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady vowed to explore a strategy for moving the extenders package early this year but comes starting off as "the chairman who doesn't want to do extenders."

The Senate bill contains a smorgasbord of renewable energy credits long sought by various industries. Chief among them are a nuclear tax credit extension, an expansion of the carbon capture tax credit and the biodiesel blenders credit. But the package would also extend incentives through 2018 for biodiesel blenders, cellulosic biofuel producers, fuel cells, energy efficient homes, energy efficient commercial buildings, small wind, two-wheeled electric scooters, solar water heaters, geothermal heat pumps, and coal production on Indian land.

4. Infrastructure packaging

Trump plans to start off the year pushing a lengthy statement of infrastructure "principles" that's expected to call for as much as $200 billion in federal spending over the next decade. Surface transportation and water infrastructure authorization laws are set to expire next year, providing a possible starting point for a legislative push. And some see that as an opportunity to advance energy priorities.

"It's a good context to revisit things like siting, permitting, certainly some of the export terminal issues," Rep. Kevin Cramer, who advised Trump on energy issues during his campaign, told POLITICO.

Others see the still-evolving infrastructure package as a moment to push new investments in drinking water infrastructure, as well as efforts to address coastal erosion.

5. New nomination dynamics

With Republicans' Senate majority falling to 51-49 once Alabama Democrat Doug Jones is sworn in, confirming Trump's nominees will get even tougher. Just two GOP defections would kill a selection (and just one Republican "no" would force Vice President Mike Pence to break the tie). "Whether it's any of our [nominees] or just generally, when you've got a closer margin some of these are perhaps going to be a bit more difficult," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairman Lisa Murkowski said.

There will likely be several early tests of whether Republicans can hold their caucus in line to approve controversial nominees. Chief among them will likely be Kathleen Hartnett White's selection to run the White House Council on Environmental Quality. Democrats forced the Senate to return her nomination to the White House at the end of the year, forcing the process to start anew. Maine Republican Sen. Susan Collins has already expressed concerns about her dismissal of climate science, and Democrats believe they may be able to convince other GOP senators to buck the nominee too.

Renominating White also could complicate things for Andrew Wheeler, who has been nominated to be EPA deputy administrator. "If the administration wants to continue to push hard on [White's] nomination, I think it makes progress on Andy Wheeler more difficult," top Senate EPW Democrat Tom Carper said before the holidays.

6. More ambitious energy or environmental bills?

Republican chairmen talked an ambitious agenda of environmental statute overhauls last year, but it remains to be seen whether they turn that lofty rhetoric into actual legislation this year. Furthest along the path is House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop, who has already unveiled a broad overhaul of the Antiquities Act and intends to tackle a Land and Water Conservation Fund bill as well. Senior House Energy and Commerce member Joe Barton has been working on a DOE reauthorization package, but his unexpected retirement announcement may pump the brakes on those efforts.

Across the way, Barrasso vowed to overhaul the Endangered Species Act as chairman and held a number of hearings on the topic last year, so is expected to produce some sort of legislation along this year. But it's worth noting none of these efforts have included Democratic participation, which would be needed to get any of the measures out of the tightly-divided Senate.

Murkowski and ranking member Maria Cantwell unveiled their energy legislation, S. 1460 \(115\), in June that is nearly a carbon copy of a version that garnered more than 80 votes last Congress, and the Alaskan vowed to make moving it an early priority of 2018. "That's first up because we're ready to go," Murkowski told reporters before the holidays. Across the Capitol, Bishop is pushing his own bill, H.R. 4239 \(115\), which he expects to be "on the floor in the first part of January" so both chambers "can actually go to conference on it."

To view online click here.

Back

Democrats cool to Trump's infrastructure pitch Back

By Lauren Gardner and Tanya Snyder | 12/14/2017 05:07 AM EDT

The White House is preparing to unveil its long-awaited $1 trillion infrastructure plan soon after President Donald Trump signs the GOP tax overhaul, hoping to begin 2018 with another big legislative win — but its approach is already drawing resistance from Democrats who are in no mood to cooperate.

The plan set for release in January is expected to call for as much as $200 billion in federal spending over the next decade, with the rest coming from private investment, state or local funding and cuts to other federal programs. An administration official added new details this week, telling POLITICO that a wide variety of projects — from bridges to broadband — would have to compete for federal assistance, while showing they're prepared to put their own money on the table.

The "primary" factor for cities and states wanting help from Washington would be how much revenue they are willing to raise, from taxes, fees or other sources, the official said.

White House officials have said they plan to release their plan as a lengthy statement of "principles" sometime before Trump delivers his State of the Union address Jan. 30. It would be up to Congress to convert it into legislation — and it's unknown how quickly that will happen as lawmakers wrestle with other priorities like a spending bill, potential changes to safety net programs or perhaps another whack at repealing Obamacare.

None of the package's details so far are music to the ears of Democrats, who have pitched their own proposal for $1 trillion in new federal infrastructure money and who have said they won't support a plan stuffed with budget cuts and environmental rule rollbacks. An infrastructure package would need 60 votes in the Senate, making Democrats the key to its success, even before Alabama Sen.-elect Doug Jones' upset victory Tuesday.

Many questions remain, but Democrats say they've already heard enough about the still-unreleased plan to be skeptical.

"I don't know what the path is," said Rep. Peter DeFazio of Oregon, the top Democrat on the House Transportation Committee. "I think we're lost in the wilderness."

DeFazio observed that the administration has been "rolling out concepts for a year," and ticked off some of the ways its proposal has morphed since Trump took office. Those include the administration's flirtation with so-called public-private partnerships, in which private entities would use tolls or other revenue to recoup the costs of projects — a concept that Trump told lawmakers in September he had soured on.

"They've gone from a trillion dollars to $200 billion that would be done with [public-private partnerships], and then Trump doesn't like [public-private partnerships], so it's $200 billion that [White House aide D.J. Gribbin] said last week would be cut from other domestic spending," DeFazio said.

Florida Sen. Bill Nelson, the Senate Commerce Committee's top Democrat, scoffed at the thought that states and localities would raise their own taxes or enter into public-private partnerships to pay for infrastructure needs, including those already covered by the cash-strapped Highway Trust Fund.

"They're not going to do that to repair the Interstates. They're not going to do that to repair the 50,000 bridges that are structurally unsound," Nelson said. "They're not going to do that for the expansion of sewer and water systems and broadband."

Even a top Republican infrastructure advocate, House Transportation Chairman Bill Shuster, has had questions about the idea of expecting states and local governments to pick up at least some of the tab.

"Well, I gotta see exactly what they mean by it," the Pennsylvania Republican said last week. "Some of it sounds a little bit like devolution. And I've not talked to a single governor that wants the federal government not to have a role. It's a national transportation system."

Shuster later met with Trump in the White House on Monday to discuss the plan. He has declined repeatedly to elaborate on what was discussed, beyond a short statement declaring the meeting "productive."

The administration is well aware it needs Democrats on board to get its infrastructure push formalized into legislation and then passed by Congress, the White House official told POLITICO this week.

"I think we are very cognizant of the fact that this bill is not going to be under reconciliation and we'll need 60 votes in the Senate, so it needs to be a bipartisan effort," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity to discuss a plan that has yet to be unveiled.

But he said Democratic governors and mayors — without naming them — have given positive feedback "on components of the plan," particularly regarding its focus on doling out dollars to state and local governments who can raise some of the money needed for infrastructure projects on their own.

The plan is engineered to give those levels of government a greater say in how infrastructure decisions are made, the official said. "That plays not surprisingly well to them," he added.

Asked whether states want more control over infrastructure decisions, Nelson responded: "I'm sure they do." But he added, "They don't have the money."

The White House has said the $200 billion federal share of the package would be split into four buckets: funding for states and localities that promise to take on more of the financial burden of infrastructure building and upkeep; block grants for rural areas; existing federal loan programs; and money for "transformational" projects "that will truly change the face of our country."

Potential uses for the money include transportation needs such as highways, bridges, railroads, airports and transit, including potentially the $30 billion "Gateway" rail tunnel between New Jersey and Manhattan that is a major priority of Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer. But a range of other types of projects may also qualify, including upgrades to veterans hospitals and expansions of rural broadband service.

The administration has not made it clear exactly where it would find even $200 billion for the federal share of the package, beyond saying it would come from cuts from other places in the federal government. Democrats had expressed interest over the years in getting the cash from corporations' "repatriated" overseas earnings as part of an overhaul of the tax code — but that opportunity is vanishing with the GOP's tax bill, which doesn't steer any of that money to infrastructure.

The administration official said White House aides have met with several Democratic members and aides on infrastructure, including leadership. But one Democrat who has been a champion of using repatriated dollars for infrastructure said that outreach doesn't appear to be widespread.

"They haven't really talked to any Democrats as best I can tell," said Maryland Rep. John Delaney, who is retiring to pursue a 2020 presidential bid. "And it seems like their plan is based on regulatory relief — some of which may make sense, I bet a bunch of it doesn't — and if you really want to do infrastructure on any kind of meaningful scale, it has to have some funding associated with it from the federal government. And if they want to fund that by cutting other programs that we think are important, no Democrat is going to support it."

Delaney has long railed against the Trump administration for failing to tie infrastructure to the tax code overhaul barreling through Congress, arguing that would have been the best — and most realistic — shot at infusing a large chunk of federal money into infrastructure.

Administration officials likely have their work cut out for them in wooing congressional Democrats after a long year of partisan bickering over nominations, health care and taxes — especially given the monthslong wait for a plan that was originally promised within the first 100 days of Trump's presidency.

"In terms of what they're going to share with us, it's always 'next month,'" said Delaware Sen. Tom Carper, the Environment and Public Works Committee's top Democrat. "And I'm just looking forward to when 'next month' actually arrives."

To view online click here.

Back

Interior repeals Obama-era fracking rule Back

By Alex Guillén | 12/28/2017 10:04 AM EDT

The Interior Department will repeal the Obama administration's fracking rule that would have required companies to disclose what chemicals they use, according to a notice to be published in Friday's Federal Register.

"The BLM believes that the 2015 rule, which would impose compliance costs and information requirements that are duplicative of regulatory programs of many states and some tribes, is redundant and therefore unnecessarily burdensome on regulated entities," the Bureau of Land Management wrote in its notice. "Any marginal benefits provided by the 2015 rule do not outweigh the rule's costs, even if those costs are a small percentage of the cost of a well."

The rule's rescission will take effect immediately.

The Trump administration made repealing the rule a priority as part of its effort to expand oil and gas production on federal lands. The rule never took effect, having been frozen by a federal judge who ruled it an unconstitutional expansion of Interior's regulatory powers.

An ongoing appeal to the 10th Circuit was halted recently after the judges concluded the impending repeal of the fracking rule made the matter moot. The 10th Circuit said it would wipe the lower court's ruling off the books in a move that could allow environmental groups to press for a new version of the fracking rule.

On Wednesday, the court gave Interior until Jan. 12 to finish repealing the rule.

WHAT'S NEXT: The repeal will be published in Friday's Federal Register with immediate effect.

To view online click here.

Back

Interior hikes Alaska oil, natural gas reserve estimates Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/22/2017 02:58 PM EDT

The Interior Department sharply hiked its estimate of oil reserves contained in Alaska's lands and waters today, estimating that more than 17 billion barrels of oil could be tapped there.

The estimate from the U.S. Geological Survey and BOEM comes after Congressional Republicans opened a portion of the Alaska National Wilderness Refuge to drilling in their tax package this week, and as President Donald Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke press to boost oil and gas drilling in Alaska as part of the effort to achieve "energy dominance."

The updated estimates put the undiscovered, technically recoverable resources on federal, state and tribal land and offshore at 17.6 billion barrels of oil and more than 50 trillion cubic feet of gas.

"That's important because with the scientific knowledge, industry partners are more willing to explore the area," Zinke said. "New discoveries have changed our geologic knowledge of the area — and these assessments show that the North Slope will remain an important energy hub for decades to come in order to meet the energy needs of our nation."

USGS estimates a mean of 8.7 billion barrels of oil and 25 trillion cubic feet of gas could be recovered from the NPR-A. A 2010 resource assessment had put the figure at 1.5 billion barrels of oil.

BOEM's updated estimates of undiscovered technically recoverable resources in the Beaufort Sea Outer Continental Shelf Planning Area are 8.9 billion barrels of oil and 27.7 trillion cubic feet of gas, up 700 million barrels from its 2016 assessment.

Interior has struggled to sell oil and gas drilling leases in Alaska, particularly those on shore, as current low fossil fuel prices makes it difficult to profitably drill and transport oil from Alaska to market in the lower 48.

To view online click here.

Back

Interior says accidental bird deaths won't trigger prosecution Back

By Nick Juliano | 12/22/2017 05:13 PM EDT

The Interior Department today said it will no longer bring charges under the Migratory Bird Treaty Act against energy companies or others who inadvertently harm the protected creatures.

A legal memo released this afternoon reverses an Obama administration opinion that found accidental deaths or injuries to migratory birds could be prosecuted under the law.

The MBTA "is a law limited in relevant part to affirmative and purposeful actions, such as hunting and poaching," wrote Daniel H. Jorjani, Interior's principle deputy solicitor, in the memo to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and other top officials.

The Trump administration move is welcome news for oil companies and wind energy developers, among others.

"Like many other laws, the MBTA was abused by the Obama Administration, in this case to apply Endangered Species Act-type liability for impacts to birds that are not listed as threatened or endangered," Kathleen Sgamma, president of Western Energy Alliance, an oil and gas industry-backed group, said in a statement. "Those restrictions that reduce jobs and economic opportunity are justified when birds are truly threatened or endangered and any impact can threaten their survival, but not for species that are not."

Conservationists decried the move.

"Christmas came early for bird killers. By acting to end industries' responsibility to avoid millions of gruesome bird deaths per year, the White House is parting ways with more than 100 years of conservation legacy," David O'Neill, the Audubon Society's chief conservation officer, said in a statement.

To view online click here.

Back

Where is Trump's Cabinet? It's anybody's guess. Back

By Emily Holden | 12/26/2017 05:05 AM EDT

The Cabinet members carrying out President Donald Trump's orders to shake up the federal government are doing so under an unusual layer of secrecy — often shielding their schedules from public view, keeping their travels under wraps and refusing to identify the people and groups they're meeting.

A POLITICO review of the practices of 17 Cabinet heads found that at least eight routinely decline to release information on their planned schedules or travels — information that was more widely available during the Obama and George W. Bush administrations. Four other departments — Agriculture, Labor, Homeland Security and Education — provide the secretaries' schedules only sporadically or with few details. The Treasury Department began releasing weekly schedules for Secretary Steven Mnuchin only in November.

In addition, at least six Cabinet departments don't release appointment calendars that would show, after the fact, who their leaders had met with, what they discussed and where they traveled — a potential violation of the Freedom of Information Act, which says agencies must make their records "promptly available to any person." Two departments — Education and the Environmental Protection Agency — have released some of those details after watchdog groups sued them.

This information clampdown is occurring with little oversight by Trump's White House, which said only that agencies should follow the law when it comes to deciding what information to release.

"The White House does not issue guidance specifically addressing the daily schedules of Cabinet agency heads," deputy press secretary Hogan Gidley said in a statement. On the other hand, he added, "The White House expects federal agencies to comply with FOIA requests."

Government watchdog groups and activists who closely follow the departments' policies say the secrecy is more than just a Trumpian swipe at political enemies and a meddlesome news media: It's an attempt, they say, to conceal the special access that some powerful interests have gotten in shaping policies that directly affect them.

"How officials spend their time is the best window into what their priorities are," said Austin Evers, a former Obama State Department lawyer who heads the watchdog group American Oversight, which has sued for the calendars of EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and Education Secretary Betsy DeVos. "When public officials resist public disclosure of what they do, people should be skeptical of what they're trying to hide."

Criticisms that some agency heads are concealing meetings with businesses they're supposed to regulate have been leveled especially often against Pruitt, a former Oklahoma attorney general who has made it his explicit mission to ease regulatory burdens on industries including oil, gas, coal, auto manufacturing and agriculture.

Pruitt meets frequently with leaders of these and other industries, based on the three months of detailed calendar records that American Oversight managed to pry out of EPA under a court order. But the agency makes it difficult to track his activities in real time — refusing to provide schedules or advisories of his upcoming meetings, confirm his attendance at specific events, or say what city he plans to be in on a given day.

Recent events that EPA refused to disclose ahead of time include a speech Pruitt delivered at a fuel marketers' conference in Chicago co-sponsored by BP, whose U.S. oil and gas interests are governed by EPA regulations. Pruitt's staff wouldn't even say where he was headed that day, after POLITICO asked about a tip that he was seen sitting in first class on a Delta Air Lines flight.

Earlier this month, EPA wouldn't disclose information about a dinner discussion that Pruitt was holding with a pro-business think tank in D.C. It gave no advance notice that he was traveling to Morocco on a trip that included a discussion of the country's interest in importing U.S. natural gas, a fuel source his agency helps regulate. EPA also wouldn't confirm that Pruitt was scheduled to speak this month in Nashville before the American Legislative Exchange Council, a conservative policy organization — even though the printed program listed him as a lunchtime speaker. (ALEC later said Pruitt had canceled his appearance.)

Even after the fact, EPA resists releasing the detailed calendars that would make it easier for journalists and watchdogs to track how often Pruitt meets with business leaders before making decisions that benefit their bottom lines.

The records released to date offer some clues, however: In May, for instance, Pruitt met with executives from an automotive company, Fitzgerald Truck Sales, to discuss an Obama-era air pollution rule for refurbished heavy trucks, according to the calendars obtained by American Oversight. Six months later, Pruitt agreed to weaken the rules, as the company had requested.

The partial meeting records released to date reveal similar meetings Pruitt has held with auto executives affected by his upcoming decision on whether to ease greenhouse gas requirements for cars and trucks; coal mining and power executives opposed to Obama-era regulations on their industries; and developers who received Pruitt's approval to seek a permit for a proposed gold and mineral mine in Alaska, according to documents previously obtained and analyzed by The New York Times and The Washington Post.

Alarmed that many more such examples must exist, at least three watchdog and environmental groups have filed separate suits seeking detailed copies of Pruitt's calendars. The Times and reporter Eric Lipton filed a similar suit against EPA this month, arguing in court documents that calendars are "often the only way the public has visibility into who provides Administrator Pruitt with input as he devises policy positions that affect all Americans."

Pruitt "uses the word transparency a lot," said Ann Weeks, legal director for the Clean Air Task Force, an environmental group not involved in the suits. But she added, "To whom is the transparency being offered? Because it's not the American people because we're not able even to see who he's talking to."

EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman calls the criticism baseless, arguing that the agency is providing more information to the public than past administrations, "despite lawsuits from The New York Times for the sake of scoring political points and making headlines." As evidence, she cites actions such as listing EPA's upcoming regulatory actions online — as required by law — as well as a posting a public online calendar for Pruitt that often omits the names of the people he's meeting with and the topic of discussion.

"The fact is that the current EPA is the most transparent EPA has been in years," Bowman said.

Pruitt isn't the only Cabinet member holding unpublicized meetings with businesses or groups who have a stake in his decisions.

While the Interior Department readily provides calendars after the fact for Secretary Ryan Zinke, it doesn't publish his schedule ahead of time for events such as a September speech to the National Petroleum Council, whose members include companies that drill for oil and gas on federal land. (He made headlines that day by declaring that 30 percent of Interior employees aren't "loyal" to his and Trump's agenda.) It also issued no advance notice of political fundraisers he attended in Alaska, Montana and the Caribbean that are now under investigation by government watchdogs.

In August, after Zinke's wife tweeted photos showing the couple relaxing along the Bosphorus, an Interior spokesperson would not say when the secretary had left the U.S., when he was returning or whether the trip to Turkey was a vacation.

Similarly, when then-Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price went to an Ohio drug manufacturer in April as part of a listening tour about the opioid epidemic, Price tweeted about the trip only after he had already visited. HHS' press office also didn't email national news organizations about the trip until two days later — after he published an op-ed in The Cincinnati Enquirer that mentioned it.

Since Sept. 29, when Price resigned following POLITICO's revelation that he had charged taxpayers for at least $1 million in private and military flights, HHS has refused to publish schedules for acting Secretary Eric Hargan. Department employees responding to POLITICO's request for Price's calendars have said they're swamped with FOIA requests they're working to fulfill.

The departments of Commerce, Energy, Transportation and Veterans Affairs and the office of U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer also do not release advance schedules for their leaders.

"These are top public officials who work for the U.S. citizens, and they have a right to know who they're meeting with and what they're doing," said Sean Moulton, the open government program manager at the Project on Government Oversight, a watchdog group.

Several of the Trump agencies' policies on releasing schedules and calendars are notably more restrictive than either the Obama or George W. Bush administrations — though they, too, faced criticism for lack of transparency.

Former Vice President Dick Cheney won a court battle to avoid having to disclose details about his energy task force's meetings with industry executives, rejecting a challenge by the Sierra Club and the conservative group Judicial Watch. Under Obama, The Associated Press sued the State Department for copies of former Secretary Hillary Clinton's calendars. The department said at the time that it was coping with a load of records requests but "does its best to meet its FOIA responsibilities."

More than 40 journalism and watchdog organizations also objected in 2015 to what they called a growing array of "constraints on information in the federal government" under Obama, including agencies that prohibited rank-and-file staff from talking to reporters.

Hiding information ultimately harms the agencies themselves, said Christine Todd Whitman, who led EPA during Bush's first term and said she posted her schedule for the entire EPA staff to see and made reporters aware when she was traveling.

"It all leads to an atmosphere of distrust, even if you're doing absolutely nothing wrong," Whitman said.

She added that she is wary of Pruitt's secrecy and has been "startled" by his frequent meetings with industry. "I worry about meeting with people who might have enforcement action coming before the agency, and, on the flip-side, seeming at this point to be locking out the environmentalists, because you've got to hear from both sides," she said.

Under Obama, Education Secretary Arne Duncan's staff emailed reporters a schedule of his upcoming week of activities, typically on Fridays. DeVos, in contrast, provides a much sparser public schedule that often omits meaningful details about the vast majority of her meetings.

The Department of Homeland Security also released weekly alerts during the Bush and Obama eras for the news media about the secretary's events, even if it wasn't always complete. Under Trump, DHS has yet to issue such schedules on a regular basis, although its staff will confirm information about specific events.

Obama Transportation Secretary Anthony Foxx not only provided his weekly schedule in advance but held monthly question-and-answer sessions with reporters. Trump's DOT chief, Elaine Chao, declines to provide advance schedules, and has yet to hold this type of session in Washington, D.C.

Bush's environmental agencies also publicized any events where leaders would speak publicly, said Jim Connaughton, who headed the White House Council of Environmental Quality at the time. And under Obama, then-EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy noted that her office provided a week-ahead guidance about her activities and regularly published her calendars after the fact.

"When we were delayed at all, we would certainly hear from reporters," McCarthy said.

But the Energy Department didn't publish then-Secretary Ernest Moniz's schedules when Obama was in the White House — and doesn't publish them for Secretary Rick Perry now. In both cases, however, DOE staff have sent advisories to the press for most of the secretaries' public events.

The Project on Government Oversight has called for years for Cabinet-level secretaries to at least publish their calendars online, calling it "the fundamental floor of what all agencies should be disclosing."

"It has been hit or miss, even under the Obama administration," Moulton said. But he said the Trump White House set the tone when it announced in April that it would refuse to publish its visitor logs on the grounds of "national security risks and privacy concerns," breaking with the Obama administration's policy. (POLITICO has responded by publishing its own unofficial White House visitor log, based on publicly available information.)

Agency officials offer varying explanations for not releasing this information, including a crush of backlogged FOIA requests, as well as previous statements by EPA and the Education Department that they're concerned about security. EPA staff says Pruitt has gotten an unusually high number of death threats — several times more than former Obama's agency chiefs received — while DeVos' staff notes that her public appearances have drawn protesters, including a crowd that briefly blocked her from entering a D.C. middle school in February.

On the other hand, Cabinet members who have immense security concerns are more open about their plans, including Defense Secretary James Mattis and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, whose offices issue daily advisories to the media about their public plans.

Pruitt and DeVos also don't lack for protection: Each has a round-the-clock security entourage, unusual by the standards of their predecessors. DeVos' security detail, projected to cost as much as \$6.54 million during the current fiscal year, consists of U.S. marshals. Pruitt maintains tight secrecy even when he's in his headquarters a few blocks from the White House, according to news reports that say he restricts employees' access to his office area, ordered a $25,000 soundproof communications chamber installed in his office and recently had his office swept for bugs.

For some of Trump's Cabinet appointees, who include wealthy business executives with little exposure to the often-harsh scrutiny of public life, secrecy may be less about hiding a policy agenda than about discomfort with the spotlight.

DeVos, the billionaire charter-school activist who never before held public office, puts some of her events on social media but leaves them out of her department's official communications with the news media.

People following her online might have known she had met with the Saudi education minister in October — based on a photo she posted on Flickr — but the department never issued any information about it or said what they had discussed. The state-run Saudi Press Agency was more forthcoming, disclosing that the leaders had talked about "the importance of educational cooperation" between their countries' universities.

In November, DeVos visited Gallaudet University in Washington, D.C., where she said in a later post on Instagram that she learned about education for the deaf and hard of hearing. The Education Department issued no advisories before or after the event.

DeVos' public schedule is riddled with so many omissions that U.S. News and World Report lamented in October that "civically engaged citizens" would have had no way of knowing she planned to speak at a Future Farmers of America convention in Indianapolis, attend a roundtable on students with disabilities or make a March visit to a Roman Catholic school in Orlando.

Mnuchin, the former Goldman Sachs partner turned Treasury secretary, was slow to begin releasing his weekly schedule — in contrast to former Obama Treasury Secretary Jack Lew, who put one out every day. In June, when Mnuchin talked regulations and tax reform with former Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke at the Brookings Institution, the public's first clue came when Mnuchin tweeted about it afterward.

In late December, Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta issued only an after-the-fact news release when he visited hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Some agencies, including the departments of Justice, Agriculture and Housing and Urban Development, provide partial guidance about their secretaries' schedules, either to the public or on background or off-the-record for the media. HUD, for example, usually provides reporters with an emailed heads-up about Secretary Ben Carson's official events, although it doesn't publicize all his appearances — his schedule didn't include his attendance at last month's opening of the Museum of the Bible in Washington, D.C., for instance.

Even the less-forthcoming agencies insist that they're following the law and keeping the public informed.

"Every official event that is open to the public is posted on the Secretary's public schedule," Education Department press secretary Liz Hill wrote in a response to questions. "There isn't a 'transparency issue' simply because members of the media want more of a head's up."

Even so, Hill confirmed that security is a factor as the department plans and issues information on DeVos' public schedule.

Pruitt's admirers even praise him for stiff-arming reporters' request for information: A story Dec. 15 in The Weekly Standard — which EPA's press office distributed by email hours later — lauded Pruitt's "fearless defiance of his political and media foes." The story's first paragraph notes that POLITICO and The New York Times ask EPA for Pruitt's upcoming schedule every week, and "the press office ignores the emails."

Sen. Jim Inhofe, a Republican ally from Pruitt's home state of Oklahoma, said the EPA chief has "a job to do and he doesn't want to be distracted on everything."

"He may be working on something that is the best interest in the United States that would not be doable if the other side were to find out about it," Inhofe said.

While the law doesn't compel agencies to create advance schedules for the news media, the Freedom of Information Act does require them to turn over records such as their leaders' appointment calendars after the fact. Congress has also directed agencies to automatically make available any records they anticipate would be in high demand — a category some legal experts say includes the calendars of agencies' top officials.

"People have a right to know what officials are doing day to day," said Kevin Goldberg, a lawyer focusing on First Amendment and FOIA issues at the Washington firm of Fletcher, Heald & Hildreth. He added, "There should be and there is a way to do this proactively. ... It doesn't seem to make sense that in 2017 we can't get that right."

Congress told agencies in a 2016 update to hew to a presumption of openness, but that command has been slow to take hold. Goldberg, whose clients include the American Society of News Editors and the Association of Alternative Newsmedia, said it's too soon to say whether the lag is because of typical bureaucratic inertia or ill intent from the Trump administration.

But Goldberg said the administration has sent some worrying signals. Those include the Justice Department's lag in carrying out a late-Obama-era proposal to implement a "release to one, release to all" policy for FOIA records. Under that policy, any documents an agency releases under FOIA would be automatically made available to everybody.

Margaret Townsend, a lawyer for the Center for Biological Diversity, one of the environmental groups suing EPA, argued that it's also illegal for agencies to create two sets of calendars — a bare-bones one for media and public consumption, and a more detailed set for internal use — and then refuse to provide the latter in response to FOIA requests. But EPA appears to be doing just that.

EPA has declined several requests to offer an on-the-record explanation of its refusal to release the calendars. In court documents responding to lawsuits, the agency described American Oversight's FOIA request as "overbroad" and said EPA staff had conversations about what the Environmental Defense Fund was seeking for several months before the activist group filed suit.

Moulton, of the Project on Government Oversight, called it "troubling" that agencies have forced groups to resort to litigation to obtain records that have long been recognized as subject to FOIA.

"There are simple and complex requests," he said. "This should be one of those simple requests."

Anthony Adragna, Caitlin Emma, Nick Juliano, Lauren Gardner, Kathryn Wolfe, Ben Lefebvre, Alex Guillén, Darius Dixon, Wesley Morgan, Jacqueline Klimas, Rachana Pradhan, Josh Gerstein, Ted Hesson, Lorraine Woellert, Patrick Temple-West, Doug Palmer, Adam Behsudi, Connor O'Brien, Catherine Boudreau, Helena Bottemiller Evich, Ian Kullgren, Michael Crowley, Victoria Guida, Adam Cancryn, Stephanie Beasley, P.J. Joshi and Andrew Restuccia contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

POLITICO Pro Q&A: Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette Back

By Darius Dixon | 12/29/2017 09:10 AM EDT

Dan Brouillette returned to the Energy Department in August as deputy energy secretary, the agency's chief operating officer, which ensures he has a say in just about everything at the agency, including its recently announced reorganization.

Brouillette, who previously led the DOE's congressional affairs office in President George W. Bush's administration, also worked stints with the House Energy and Commerce Committee and Ford Motor Co. before joining USAA in 2006 to lead the company's government and industry relations shop in Texas.

In an interview with POLITICO, Brouillette said the new DOE team wants to focus on nuclear waste cleanup at sites like Hanford, and he pushed back on critiques that the staff filling senior positions lacked technical expertise.

"I know there are folks who have said things like, 'Well, they don't have scientific backgrounds,'" he said. "What we do have are management backgrounds."

The following interview has been edited for length and clarity.

During his reorganization, former Secretary Ernest Moniz emphasized that many of DOE's challenges involved managing enterprises like nuclear waste cleanup or MOX. When the new reorganization was announced there was an emphasis on greater efficiency. Where does that efficiency come from?

I can't speak to the motives of Secretary Moniz or why he did what he did. I'm sure it made a lot of sense for the priorities established by the Obama administration and the priorities he would have as secretary. I'm sure his structure made a lot of sense for him.

I would almost guess ... that the structure had something to do with the people that he had in place — the skill sets that he had in place. So, for him efficiency probably meant having somebody dedicated day-in and day-out looking at things like contracting or management efficiency and performances. For us, in our administration, the priorities are different [and] the personnel are different. ... I know there are folks who have said things like, "Well, they don't have scientific backgrounds." What we do have are management backgrounds.

Look at guys like Paul Dabbar, who spent 20-plus years at JPMorgan doing business deals. Mark Menezes, the new undersecretary of energy who spend a lot of time both in the legal field and the policy field but also within a utility and at Berkshire Hathaway doing both management and investments. When you [put] people like that in place you can use that talent at a lower level to accomplish the things that you want. In that sense, decisions get made faster, they get made closer to the ground, and that presents its own efficiency.

Is that why you gave Dabbar the environmental management and legacy offices? EM has been the responsibility of three different undersecretaries under three different Energy secretaries.

Exactly.

So, a lot of the changes are personality-based?

It's a little bit two-fold. One, it's personality-based because Paul has a great business background, so in that sense he brings a lot of talent to the field. The other part of it is that Paul is an engineer who graduated from the Naval Academy [and] Columbia University, in the business school there. Importantly, he sat on the EM advisory board for 12 years. He knows that program very very well.

The reason why we moved it there really was to tie the science programs to EM. When I first came to the Hill in 1989 or 1988, the first thing I was told was the Hanford's a special case because it's very complicated and complex and very technical. That's all true. But at DOE we have the best and the brightest in terms of scientific talent, so why not utilize that talent to tackle this problem? I'm not suggesting that it hasn't been done in the past but if you tie the mission together that closely, then perhaps we'll find the solutions we need to get that waste out of there. That is the mission of the department. It's not to study it — it's to move it out of there.

On that topic, I was a little surprised there wasn't a spot in the reorganization for the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management given your support and administration's plan to pursue a license for Yucca Mountain.

You don't put it on the [organizational] chart unless you have the ability to pay for it.

The bottom line is that Yucca Mountain's a political topic that's not going to be resolved with an organizational chart. Until the Senate decides to appropriate the funds for Yucca Mountain, there isn't really much that we could do. That's just the honest truth.

We're just going to wait until the Senate appropriates the funds. If they get to a deal, then we'll appropriately create the office and move forward, as directed.

Moniz also had a strong emphasis on having the applied energy offices and the Office of Science report to the same undersecretary in order to cross-pollinate those missions. Was it better to split them up again? Or was the goal to fuse EM with Science?

Everybody focuses on the amount — the cost — that we spend on places like Hanford and some of the other cleanup sites. Some of that, to be honest, is contracting issues around that, performance issues. There are contractor management issues around that. Those things are all true. Congress knows this and it's only part of the problem.

The larger part of the problem is that the stuff that's in the tanks keeps changing every minute of every day, so we don't know exactly what it is. We have to find out what it is. We can build facilities, we can hire new contractors, we can talk about moving waste out. But until we understand exactly what we're dealing with there's no way to treat it, there's no way to get it out or really address the problem. We're just going to take a slightly different approach.

We're not going to ignore the contracting issues or the contractor problems or the safety issues. We're not putting that by the wayside. What we want to do is tackle the technical issues

now. Tackle them first and aggressively, and then let's move to the next step: getting it offsite.

Moniz had a focus on project management — things like MOX. They set up different committees to address what he called "little alligators" before they became "big alligators." Are you keeping those?

Some of them we're going to retain and they have done a good job.

[Moniz] actually setup the process by which they [re]evaluated MOX in South Carolina and they came to the conclusion that it's too big an alligator. It's gonna eat the department alive. And we agree.

Seeing that you sent many of the managerial functions back to the deputy's office, how much of the reorganization is to reflect the structure when you were previously at DOE?

I'm not interested in reliving old times or anything. For lack of a better way to say it, what does a COO do, if not manage the building? ... Why would you push that function down if not, for lack of a better term, trying to create a job for somebody to do?

I've met with [former Deputy Secretary Elizabeth Sherwood-Randall] and went to her house a number of different times getting ready for this position, and [her predecessor] Dan Poneman has been a great friend. I've known all the deputy secretaries all the way back to Henson Moore.

Secretaries push the mission but deputies traditionally run the day-to-day operations. Do enough people embrace that outside the building?

Everything goes through [the deputy's office]. That's the way it is in corporate America. That's the way it is in government as well. If you talk to other agencies, you'll find the same thing. That's a model that works very well. Again, why would want to push those functions down? You really want your deputy to be the eyes and ears inside the building and to do that you have to have your finger on the pulse of the building and you have to understand what's going on. The way you do that is to actually manage those management and staff functions — human capital, general counsel, CFO functions.

You want the deputy doing that. That's my view and I think that's the secretary's view.

Moniz's reorganization was popular with the lab directors because they enjoyed having greater access to the secretary. How much were the lab directors involved in this?

I asked them for their advice and they gave me their input. They actually put together a plan that we adopted to some degree. There were a couple things that they recommended that, candidly, just went outside the statute.

What did they offer that you liked?

The biggest thing that we agreed on was that they wanted a fuller dedication to the mission of science that was created in the 2005 Energy Policy Act. That was something we believe strongly in as well. That is one of the fundamental missions of the department so on that part, we agreed immediately. The rest of it was really structural things that they were asking us to do — it was more so operating style. What the lab directors told me was that, "We really want to know what it is you would like us to focus on — what it is you'd like us to do. But don't tell us how to do it. ... Trust us enough to do that." My natural reaction is, "Absolutely. That's why you're here and that's what you do."

There are officials from the Obama administration that see things as being undone by this administration simply because Obama did them. Did that play into the re-separating of the energy and science office?

No.

Then what's the view for the applied offices?

The applied offices are going to report to Mark Menezes, the undersecretary of energy, but we're going to focus on technology transfer. That's going to be our mission with those applied offices. A lot of that technology should be moved to the private sector.

But the Office of Technology Transitions stayed under the undersecretary for science.

Yeah, but we're going to make some additional [changes].

Do you envision further organizational changes in 2018?

Yeah. There are going to be further changes in 2018 and we anticipate further changes because the market's changing. The energy space is ... changing day by day and we're going to accommodate that.

Previous org charts itemized many of the internal DOE committees. The new one lumps them into "boards and councils."

The secretary's going to focus in on which of those he feels provide the most value to him and he hasn't yet made that decision. ... So we didn't want to spell out what they might be.

New councils?

It could be new councils. I think we're going to keep a lot of the same ones. The Secretary of Energy Advisory Board, for instance, that's going to continue. That's a very valuable board. The members will change ... but the basic concept of SEAB is going to remain would be my guess. I don't want to get out in front of the secretary.

To view online click here.

Back

Is Trump delivering 'energy dominance'? Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/27/2017 09:11 AM EDT

President Donald Trump's pledge to establish U.S. "energy dominance" has been a key pillar of his America First platform, but after a year in office, his efforts seem destined to have only a modest impact on oil and gas production while setting back some of the fastest growing energy technologies.

Trump's call for energy dominance dates back to his May 2016 campaign rally in North Dakota, and pushing for energy production growth was the subject of one of his first executive orders. That directive was designed to unshackle the industry from what Republicans had decried as the burdens placed by the Obama administration on fossil fuel companies.

"They put American energy under lock and key," Trump said of the Obama administration in a speech unveiling the National Security Strategy earlier this month. "We have unlocked America's vast energy resources."

The good news for Trump is that the country is ending 2017 with record high oil and gas production. But the bad news is that the surge in energy output that started a decade ago may be nearing a plateau, and some experts worry that Trump's policies will hinder the shift to newer technologies that are likely to play a central role in the global economy in the coming years.

That includes renewable energy and electric vehicles, which could suffer setbacks if Trump erects trade barriers to solar imports and rolls back the aggressive vehicle fuel economy rules put in place under the Obama administration that experts say are crucial to driving investments in electric vehicles.

"The highest growing energy sources in the world are emerging technologies — electric vehicles and renewables — and this administration has proposed slashing the budget for clean energy," said Jason Bordoff, founding director of Columbia University's Center on Global Energy Policy. "We need to continue to invest in tomorrow's technologies, not only the ones we're using today."

U.S. oil production has nearly doubled during the past 10 years to an estimated 9.2 million barrels per day in 2017, and natural gas output has climbed by about 5 percent over that period to 73.5 billion cubic feet per day this year, a result of the massive investments by companies to deploy hydraulic fracturing and horizontal drilling technologies to unlock the resources trapped in shale rock. And now, industry consultants Wood MacKenzie are forecasting production will flatten out at 11.5 million barrels a day by 2026.

While adding another 2 million barrels a day to U.S. production is significant, it's a far cry from what Trump claimed at a rally in Pensacola, Fla., this month, when he said, "We are pursuing American energy dominance. And by the end of this year we will be totally self-sufficient." Even with the rising oil production, the U.S. imports nearly 8 million barrels of crude per day.

Trump's big bet is that cutting regulations and opening up areas that have long been closed off for drilling will boost oil and gas production even further. But the federal government's influence mainly extends to federal lands, so there may be little effect on the industry that is mostly clustered on private property in west Texas, North Dakota, Pennsylvania and elsewhere, analysts said.

"Shale resources are on private and state-owned lands, so that's where economic resources are," said Nick Loris, The Heritage Foundation's Fellow in Energy and Environmental Policy Nick Loris. "Because we were fortunate that the shale plays were on state and privately owned lands, we are already energy dominant."

Interior Department records show that companies have pulled back on the amount of federal land they've sought for drilling since 2006, when oil prices reached a peak near $145 a barrel. After the latest drop in prices in 2014, the number of oil and gas leases issued by the Bureau of Land Management fell to just 520 in 2016, the latest year for which information is available, far below the 3,746 it approved in 2006.

The number of wells drilled on federal land peaked at 5,343 in fiscal year 2007 before steadily dwindling to 847 last year, a decline that's in line with the drop in the U.S. oil price benchmark. But it also represents a relative pittance in overall U.S. drilling activity: Exxon Mobil and other companies started 38,186 wells throughout the country in 2008, a number that only experienced a prolonged significant drop when it fell to 19,014 in 2015, according to data from S&P Platts Global. The number was 16,806 near the end of December 2017.

The Trump administration's effort to draw companies back onto federal land has so far been a bust. In December, Interior offered every acre it had available in Alaska to drilling companies. Only two companies bid — ConocoPhillips and Anadarko Petroleum — yielding a modest $1.2 million for the federal coffers according to auction results data.

And with oil prices now at little more than a third of their June 2008 peak, expensive drilling operations in the federal waters in the Gulf of Mexico also lost their luster just as the shale gas boom starting to gain traction onshore. In March 2013, companies bid $1.2 billion for 1.7 million acres just in the central Gulf region, far more demand than the August sale for the entirety of the Gulf of Mexico that drew just $121 million for 508,096 acres.

Still, energy industry lobbyists contend that opening more federal acres to drilling is keeping in the spirit of a free market. Oil and gas companies may not need the acres today, but would prefer to have them on hand in case oil demand picks up, said Chris Guith, senior vice president for policy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Global Energy Institute.

"Some areas might not garner initial interest," Guith said. "But I'd prefer that possibility to there being great interest but regulators preventing access."

Trump has also said his approvals of the Keystone XL and Dakota Access pipeline have helped U.S. move toward energy dominance. While Dakota Access has been delivering oil from North Dakota to the Midwest, Keystone XL has still not started construction, and its developer, TransCanada, is still deciding whether to proceed after regulators in Nebraska approved added new restrictions on its route through the state.

Meanwhile, the administration is pushing exports of liquefied natural gas, even sending EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt on an unusual trip to Morocco this month to pitch the fuel. That business could be promising, but so far, of the 11 LNG export projects approved under the Obama administration, only one, Cheniere's Sabine Pass plant, has finished construction and started shipping.

The Trump administration's moves clearing the way for LNG shippers to deal directly with China, may offer an opportunity for LNG shipments grow and create more demand for U.S. gas, but so far they have come up short. Even an announcement of potential deal between China's Sinopec to buy into an Alaskan LNG project has drawn some skepticism, since several U.S. companies have previously walked away from the project, whose cost is believed to be far higher than the $43 billion estimated by Sinopec and the Alaska Gasline Development Corp.

European buyers have also been reluctant to commit to long-term contracts with U.S. LNG producers, and instead seem content to buy on the open market that is well supplied.

And part of the difficulties in winning new business could be partly to blame on Trump's talk of dominating global energy markets, which has raised hackles in Europe, said Frank Verrastro, senior vice president at the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

"We always derided other countries such as Russia that used energy as a geopolitical lever," Verrastro said. "Dominance suggests there is a subordinate role, and some people chafe at that."

Trump has pointed to a bounce in coal production as a victory for his policies, since output, which languished for years as coal-fired power plants shut down, grew eight percent during the first 11 months of this year to reach 719 million tons on the back of rising exports. But the Energy Information Administration expects that domestic coal production will fall next year "because of lower exports and no growth in coal consumption."

So far, the one new coal mine to open this year, the Acosta Mine near Pittsburgh, will employ 70 people full-time to mine a type of coal used in making steel, not the more prevalent thermal coal.

While the administration is giving the next wave of renewable energy short shrift, solar, wind and other next-generation power sources are forecast to generate 10 percent of the country's electricity this year, according to the EIA. Instead of looking to renewable to decrease the country's still-sizable dependency on oil imports, Trump has often dismissed the sector's potential and proposed slashing federal research into lowering the cost of solar power projects, and has come under fire for illegally withholding grant money awarded to advance energy research projects.

Trump, a long time foe of wind power, also dismissed the technology at his recent rally in Florida. "The windmills are wonderful, but when the wind does not blow, it causes problems. 'We have no energy this week,'" Trump said.

The biggest setback for renewables could come next month, when the administration is expected to erect tariffs on imports of solar panels, a move supported by Suniva, a company majority-owned by a Chinese firm, and the German-owned SolarWorld. Advocates of the trade barrier says it will level the playing field with Chinese solar manufacturers that have received state support, and help bolster U.S. panel manufacturing. But the U.S. solar industry and even the conservative Wall Street Journal editorial board are largely opposed to moves that will drive up the cost of solar, which has become competitive with coal and natural gas in many parts of the country.

"The solar industry created one in every 51 jobs last year, and grew 17 times faster than the rest of the economy," said Solar Energy Industries Association President and Chief Executive Abigail Ross Hopper. "President Trump can put America First and play a significant role in the growth of our industry by rejecting the tariff requests of two foreign-owned companies."

To view online click here.

Back

EPA's anti-pollution weapon in the crosshairs Back

By Alex Guillén | 12/26/2017 09:10 AM EDT

After nearly five decades, the EPA has dramatically cut down on the worst pollutants fouling American skies by wielding a powerful weapon — one that its critics in industry say has outlived its usefulness.

Known as the National Ambient Air Quality Standards, the program created in 1970 under the Clean Air Act played a major role in healing the damage to the U.S. environment, reducing the smog that occluded the skies, soot that choked people's lungs, and gases that produced acid rain and haze.

Now there are signs that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, who is already rescinding the Obama EPA's landmark climate change regulations and Waters of the U.S. rule, may be easing enforcement on new pollution limits under the air quality program. That is bringing praise from industry groups, which complain that the rules nowadays yield only modest health benefits at a high cost to companies.

"It could certainly use some modernization," said Ross Eisenberg, vice president of energy and resources policy at the National Association of Manufacturers. "That low-hanging fruit is now gone. And so you have a fairly heavy-handed statute with very rigid deadlines that may not work as well as it should for modern environmental problems."

Business groups and conservatives have long chafed under the program, known in policy circles by the acronym NAAQS, arguing that the ever-tighter pollution limits required would cripple the economy. Environmentalists and public health advocates dismiss those complaints as knee-jerk resistance to rules that companies have always managed to meet.

Now the NAAQS critics have a sympathetic EPA chief in Pruitt, who has already sparked lawsuits by failing to even reveal which areas of the country are failing to meet the Obama administration's 2015 ozone standard. Pruitt's delay means areas with poor air quality can continue to avoid actions to come into compliance, at least for now. Democratic states and public health groups have sued EPA to force Pruitt to act, even as the agency reviews that underlying 2015 standard — which Pruitt sued over during his tenure as Oklahoma's attorney general.

For the six specific pollutants that are regulated under NAAQS — including ground-level ozone, particulate matter and carbon monoxide — EPA is required to establish a level safe for human health, with an "adequate margin of safety" to err on the side of caution. And the agency isn't supposed to consider the costs of meeting those safe levels when setting the standards. Once the federal standards are set, states determine their own path to reduce their emissions, which gives them flexibility to target the easiest cuts first.

But under the law, those pollution levels must be reviewed and potentially tightened every five years — lightning speed for Washington's regulatory world. If EPA fails to meet the deadlines as it regularly has under both parties, environmentalists can sue to force it to act, making that five-year review period a top target of NAAQS critics who believe they may be able to convince Congress to ease it,

NAAQS "is unworkable in the five-year period," said Howard Feldman, senior director of regulatory and scientific affairs at the American Petroleum Institute. "That has been proven to be the case in Republican and Democratic administrations."

Five years does not give states the breathing room they need, critics say, because just as they start work on reducing emissions to meet one standard, EPA could ratchet it down further.

"I often compare it to the movie 'Groundhog Day,' where basically every five years, EPA misses the deadline and then is sued, and then has to either litigate that or settle and agree to a rushed process, which can lead to mistakes or missing key details," said Eisenberg. "And then that process takes a few years, and then that's litigated, and then by the time they actually get around to implementing that standard, we're already close to having to do the next one."

As an example, critics cite the ozone standard, which was updated in 2008 and then again in 2015, even though major portions of the country were still struggling to meet the previous levels.

Both NAM and API have sued EPA over the 2015 ozone standard, arguing it was too strict, while environmentalists' lawsuits called the standard too lenient.

Pruitt has said about 40 percent of Americans live in areas that don't meet ozone pollution standards, a point he often raises when arguing that EPA should focus on cleaning up that air before issuing new regulations.

But Congress included the five-year review requirement for a reason: Agencies rarely act unless forced, according to Thomas Jorling, who as a Republican congressional aide helped write the Clean Air Act of 1970. That tight timeframe was designed to allow citizen lawsuits to prod the agency to move more quickly.

However, Jorling thinks it may be time to extend that five-year deadline.

"I can say yes, now, in retrospect, the timetables were — perhaps especially after the first go-around — a bit too tight," he said. "But again, the purpose is to compel agencies to act."

For years Republicans have pushed legislation that would lengthen the review period to 10 years, though they've never been successful.

Environmentalists argue that the five-year review generally takes seven to eight years in reality, and that a 10-year review will really translate to at least 12 to 13 years between revisions.

The American Lung Association said industry complaints about rapid review times amount to crocodile tears.

"They spend time trying to delay the implementation of the NAAQS and then they argue we shouldn't update the NAAQS because they haven't implemented the previous NAAQS," said Paul Billings, senior vice president for advocacy at American Lung Association. "Heads they win, tails we lose."

Janet McCabe, who as a top air official in the Obama administration worked on several NAAQS reviews, acknowledged that the five-year review is "challenging" for all sides, including EPA. But, she said, it serves an important role in recognizing the ever-changing science underlying these rules.

"That's one of the things that's always true about science: You never have the perfect answer," she said. "But when you're a regulator or legislator wanting to make sure we have clean, healthy air in this country, you don't wait for the perfect answer, you work with the information that you have."

Plus, McCabe argued, even if cities still struggle to meet the older standards, there's value in telling the public what level EPA considers safe so people can take action on their own, such as keeping asthmatic children from outdoor activities on high-ozone days.

Any push to alter the five-year review period in Congress would face long odds, since any bill targeting it would need to win 60 votes in the Senate, where it would encounter heavy Democratic opposition. And any effort to update the broader Clean Air Act, which has not happened in 27 years, remains pie-in-the-sky thanks to deep partisan divides over regulations for greenhouse gases.

"The actual increment of time, whether it's five years or seven years or 10 years, I think is less important than the fact that there has to be a mandate to review these, because science does not stand still," said Jorling.

Having helped create the NAAQS program nearly 50 years ago, Jorling declined to say if or when the program might eventually reach a point when the standards no longer need revision.

"There may be a time when science says the 340 million people in the United States can breathe this level of air and not suffer either premature mortality or morbidity of one sort or another," said Jorling. "I'd love to be able to say science can produce that knowledge, but it's some distance off."

The future could come down to whether scientists can ever be more precise about the granular health effects of different standards of pollution concentrations, which are often measured in parts per billion.

For some pollutants, like lead, scientists generally agree there is no safe level for all humans, although the lead standard was designed to protect vulnerable populations such as children and fetuses. Other more widely emitted pollutants like ozone are more complicated, as the standard approaches levels that occur naturally in certain parts of the U.S..

"I don't know if it's possible for science to ever to prove they've hit that magic point, because that would imply that everything that is known now is all that could be known about a topic," said Billings of ALA.

But there could come a time when review after review takes place without one of the more controversial standards being revised.

It's already happened with some — the carbon monoxide standard has been in place since 1971 and gone unchanged through three reviews, and every part of the U.S. meets that standard.

In the meantime, EPA continues with its regular NAAQS reviews.

The agency is expected to issue rules in the next few years that will maintain the current standards for nitrogen dioxide and sulfur dioxide. Deadlines to finish those reviews were set under a court order — because EPA missed the five-year deadlines.

To view online click here.

Back

Regulatory and legal obstacles cloud visions of Puerto Rico's grid rebuild Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/28/2017 09:11 AM EDT

Puerto Rico's hurricane-devastated power system opens an opportunity to upgrade its dilapidated electric grid with cutting-edge technology, but would-be visionaries face obstacles ranging from a decades-old federal law to the island's massive debt and stubborn utility.

The U.S. territory's government and federal agencies are still working to end the blackout that has kept much of the island in the dark since Hurricanes Irma and Maria struck in September. But Puerto Rico's energy regulator is developing a long-term plan to transform its grid, add renewables, and develop microgrids that would provide their own generation in the event of another disaster.

While the technology exists to create an advanced grid, regulation and legal hurdles must be overcome first. Making matters more complicated, PREPA has a long reputation among solar installers and analysts for hindering the island's shift to renewables in an effort to protect its centralized generation business model.

"As creative as we want to be on the technology side of things, we will need to be equally creative on the regulatory and financial side of things as well," said Katherine Gensler, director of government affairs for the Solar Energy Industries Association.

Hurricanes Irma and Maria, which hit Sept. 7 and 20, struck the island with such fury as to wipe out much of the distribution grid, knock out generation, and take out the critical transmission lines that link the power plants on the south side of the island with the population centers on the north. Many of the power plants survived the storms, but the storms exposed aging and decrepit power infrastructure that has proven difficult to repair without replacing. And while 65 percent of generation capacity has been restored, the Army Corps of Engineers estimates that outlying customers won't have power back until May.

Congress has approved $52 billion in disaster relief funding this year, for states and territories affected by the hurricanes as well events such as the wildfires out West; another $81 billion bill passed the House last week and is awaiting action in the Senate when lawmakers return from break.

FEMA, which oversees disaster relief efforts, says its immediate focus is to restore power to the island. Over the long term, the agency will work with the Army Corps of Engineers, Department of Energy and others "on options for permanent work, to include resilience as FEMA programs allow." In statement, FEMA pointed to DOE's work to improve the grid, "including relocating substations to less flood-prone areas, using simulations to identify better locations for wind and solar generation, integrating distributed energy resources, and hardening towers and other energy infrastructure on the island."

However, proponents of renewable energy, batteries and related technologies say some of those efforts may be hampered by bureaucratic red tape. The Stafford Act, which governs disaster spending, directs states and territories to rebuild damaged infrastructure based on how it operated before a disaster struck. That makes it difficult to use FEMA dollars to replace Puerto Rico's badly outdated electric grid with the latest technology.

It's a problem that members of Congress from both parties say they want to fix.

"It makes little sense to require, as under current law, that buildings and infrastructure be rebuilt in the ways that made them so vulnerable to Hurricanes Irma and Maria," House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) and Minority Whip Steny Hoyer (D-Md.) wrote in a November op-ed in The Washington Post. "Instead, we ought to work across the aisle to give these communities the chance to come back stronger. Making those investments now will save taxpayer dollars in the long run. Both of us are committed to advancing this issue and working to bring our colleagues on board in this effort."

The Puerto Rico Energy Commission saw an opportunity to rebuild a system better able to withstand future storms and avoid the high fuel costs that make the Energy Information Administration says costs 55 percent more than the US average. The island has some coal, gas and wind power, but most of its generation is supplied by oil-fired generating plants.

"The main issue in Puerto Rico is too little generation and too many lines to get around," said Alejandro Uriarte, CEO of Puerto Rico solar installer New Energy, which has 2,500 solar customers on the island. "You need to have smaller ecosystems, make sure that generation comes closer to the areas that are more densely populated."

The commission heard dozens of proposals. PREPA and the Puerto Rico Energy Commission joined with the New York Power Authority, ConEd, Edison International, Long Island Power Authority, the Department of Energy, the Electric Power Research Institute, two national labs, and collaborated to write a report proposing a $17 billion capital expenditure to build far stronger power poles, hardened substations, smart-grid technology and the use of microgrids to support critical infrastructure.

Another, from power company AES, proposes a mesh of seven regional microgrids, each of which could supply its own power and come back quickly in the event of another hurricane. It doesn't provide a cost estimate, but it says the operating costs of solar-plus-battery installations would be a third lower than the current oil plants, and that solar generation alone could be two-thirds cheaper than current generation. In addition, the microgrids would be designed to separate themselves from the main grid when one area goes down, providing resiliency in a major storm.

Chris Shelton, chief technology officer for AES, emphasized that all of this technology is well tested, if not on this scale.

"What we're talking about is not new," he said. "It's not R&D, it's been running for years."

Tesla CEO Elon Musk has offered his company's solar and battery technology as a solution to the island's energy woes, and Puerto Rico's governor announced that six systems had been installed as of earlier this month.

But the island needs to revamp its utility, or give it stricter oversight before any of these can come to pass. PREPA has a longstanding reputation of dragging its heels in setting up interconnections for solar, solar installers like Uriarte say. Texas-based solar company Sunnova Solar Energy is the largest solar installer on the island, says that it has struggled with PREPA's "unique recalcitrance" for years, and now, as it tries to bring solar to the islands many residents.

"The inaction and lack of cooperation on PREPA's part has made it difficult," Sunnova CEO John Berger said in a statement. "The utility has continued to obstruct our ability to connect customers' solar systems to the grid."

PREPA did not respond to a request for comment.

Puerto Rico's demolished grid has relieved some installers from the need to interconnect as battery systems become more popular. Uriarte says he's been able to work faster because he's mostly been building battery-solar hybrids that are independent from the grid. He's gone from selling 10 battery systems a year to 350 since the hurricane. All the systems are built to last decades and could easily become part of a future microgrid set up.

"The main challenge getting it done is to have the proper regulation implemented in Puerto Rico that would allow the installations to interact with the grid effectively," Uriarte told POLITICO. Microgrids need to connect their generation and storage resources over utility-owned distribution lines in order to function.

Microgrids were illegal in Puerto Rico until last year, and installers like Uriarte are waiting for PREPA and the commission to develop the necessary framework and standards to allow interconnection. Uriarte hopes the commission can finish the regulatory work by next spring.

PREPA is also loathe to give up control of any of its distribution, transmission, or generation control, because all of those assets can be used to put up bonds. But the utility, which is owned by the commonwealth government, may no longer have a choice. Congress created a federal oversight board through the PROMESA Act in 2016, and in October that board installed a former Air Force officer to oversee PREPA and the power grid's recovery.

The commonwealth's $70 billion of debt, including the $9 billion held by the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority, will make it hard to find creditors willing to lend money to rebuild.

Thanks to the storms and the creation of the oversight board, Commonwealth government has been able to be more aggressive in dealing with its creditors. FEMA has waived key cost-sharing requirements, and in September the government rejected an offer from PREPA creditors of a bridge loan and a reduction in debt.

Some critics would like to see the utility privatized and possibly bought out.

"You could wash out all of PREPA's debt and let the new private company get a clean start," said Shayle Kann, a senior adviser to GreenTech Media. "And in privatizing have it get bought by a larger company with a balance sheet that is creditworthy."

Sunnova's Berger would like to see the federal government allow use of the Investment Tax Credit as a grant program for Puerto Rico projects, similar to a program used as part of the 2009 stimulus law. As SEIA's Gensler points out, PREPA's long history of management problems and deep debts make it unattractive to lenders, which could make the grant system the best way to generate upfront capital costs.

However it gets rebuilt, the island's disaster may offer a major learning opportunity for other islands.

"This is a travesty, the worst disaster in a long time," Kann said. "But the silver lining is some innovative thinking. This problem that Puerto Rico is facing is a combination of a hurricane and something that is common to all island grids, so a lot of that stuff could apply to all other islands. I find that really exciting, despite the fact that it's coming out of a real crisis."

To view online click here.

Back

DOE grants FERC extension on resiliency proposal Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/08/2017 06:53 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry today granted another 30 days to FERC to consider a proposal to support coal-fired and nuclear power plants.

In a letter filed with FERC, Perry asserted that he had sole authority to grant the extension, and though he preferred a faster outcome, he approved the extra time.

"The better course would be for the commission to adopt the proposal within this reasonable deadline," Perry wrote. But he went on to say, "on the assumption the Commission cannot act on the proposal within the 60-day deadline, I hereby grant the request for an extension of time for the commission to deliberate and take final action on the Grid Resiliency and Pricing Rule."

Newly fledged chairman Kevin McIntyre requested the delay on Thursday, hours after being sworn in.

FERC had been expected to issue a decision on Perry's proposal by Monday.

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC has until Jan. 10 to take action on the proposal.

To view online click here.

Back

Bob Murray had early access to Rick Perry to share coal plan Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/07/2017 05:30 PM EDT

Coal magnate Bob Murray pitched Energy Secretary Rick Perry on his plan to throw an economic lifeline to coal companies less than a month before Perry set in motion plans to aid the industry, according to newly disclosed photographs that show the two meeting.

The liberal magazine In These Times obtained pictures of Murray and Perry from a March 29 meeting at Energy Department headquarters, less than a month after Perry was sworn in. Several other officials were in attendance, including Andrew Wheeler, who at the time was a lobbyist for Murray and has since been nominated as the Environmental Protection Agency's No. 2 official.

The meeting puts Murray and Perry together at a crucial moment in the timeline of the Trump administration's push to save the struggling coal industry, an effort that would benefit Murray Energy in particular while raising electricity prices for potentially millions of people. A month before the meeting, one of Murray's biggest customers, FirstEnergy, told investors it was seriously considering seeking bankruptcy protection for its merchant division, FirstEnergy Solutions, a move that would likely void its supply contracts with Murray's coal mines.

Three weeks after Murray's visit, Perry would order a grid study that later became part of the justification for a proposed rule to reward coal and nuclear power plants for providing "grid resiliency." FERC, which has jurisdiction over the proposal, must make a decision on it by Monday.

At the time of the meeting, Wheeler was already the leading candidate to become the deputy administrator for EPA. Wheeler, who represented Murray as a lobbyist for Faegre Baker Daniels, would not be officially nominated for months. Wheeler, who has acknowledged participating in meetings on Murray's coal plan at DOE and on Capitol Hill, cleared committee last week and is awaiting Senate confirmation.

Murray is an outspoken supporter of President Donald Trump and held a fundraiser for him during the 2016 campaign.

DOE did not dispute the validity of the photos.

"Industry stakeholders visit the Department of Energy on a daily basis," DOE spokeswoman Shaylyn Hynes said, when asked about the meeting. "The DOE proposal to FERC was about the future and resiliency of the nation's power supply, an issue much bigger than one industry or company."

The photographs show Perry sitting at the head of a table in the Department of Energy, with Bob Murray, CEO of Murray Energy, to his left, and Wheeler down the table from Murray.

"Enclosed is an Action Plan for achieving reliable and low cost electricity ... and to assist in the survival of our Country's coal industry, which ... power grid reliability and low cost electricity," Murray writes in a cover letter to Perry, parts of which are visible in one photo from the meeting.

Though the document has never been publicly released, DOE critics say Murray's plan appears to have inspired DOE's grid study and the proposed rule Perry sent FERC in September. Copies are visible at the seats of most of the participants, including Perry and Murray. Wheeler, who told members of the Senate Environment Committee he had only seen the memo briefly, is not holding a copy in the photos obtained by In These Times. Murray told Greenwire in November he "didn't have any involvement" in writing the rule.

Murray has acknowledged sharing the plan with Trump.

"I gave Mr. Trump what I called an action plan very early," Murray said in a recent PBS Frontline documentary on EPA. "It's about three-and-a-half pages and — of what he needed to do in his administration. He's wiped out page one."

A spokesman for Bob Murray said that during the March 29 meeting, Murray did not discuss the DOE's proposed rule, and he added that he was not involved in drafting Perry's proposal.

The meeting appears to have been successful for all. One of the photos shows Perry and Murray in a big bear hug.

To view online click here.

Back

Scaramucci: Trump doesn't deny climate change Back

By David Cohen | 12/31/2017 09:55 AM EDT

Former White House communications director Anthony Scaramucci on Sunday defended President Donald Trump's tweet last week on climate change as a common-sense statement.

"In the East, it could be the COLDEST New Year's Eve on record. Perhaps we could use a little bit of that good old Global Warming that our Country, but not other countries, was going to pay TRILLIONS OF DOLLARS to protect against," Trump wrote Thursday on Twitter. "Bundle up!"

Critics observed that the president didn't seem to understand the distinction between weather and climate — or that a few days of freezing cold were not going to prove anything about climate.

Scaramucci defended Trump's remarks, telling CNN's Dana Bash on "State of the Union" that he was not a denier of climate change, just an opponent of the Paris climate accord. Earlier this year, Trump withdrew the United States from the agreement, which is designed to combat global warming.

"I think you guys should ask him directly if he's a climate change denier or not. I think you will find you will be surprised by that answer," he said of Trump.

"He didn't want to just sign it and go along with the crowd," said Scaramucci, who said he expected the president to be proved right on the issue: "My prediction is, is that some time at the end of 2018, people will look back at him and say, wow, he had a lot of common sense by getting out of that climate accord."

Scaramucci also joked to Bash: "It is freezing here on this beautiful Sunday morning."

On other issues, Scaramucci said he believes the president is not particularly concerned with Robert Mueller's ongoing Russia investigation.

"I know that he's not worried about it," he said, adding that he thinks Trump is "frustrated about it."

Scaramucci also said: "Washington has this magnificent way of finding scandals to hit people with to distract them from their agendas. The great news about the president is: He's undistracted, he's undeterred, and I think he is going to have a phenomenal 2018."

To view online click here.

Back

'We have tapped into something': Impeachment drive builds digital army to take on Trump Back

By Carla Marinucci and David Siders | 12/27/2017 05:04 AM EDT

SAN FRANCISCO — When billionaire Democratic donor Tom Steyer launched a digital petition drive to impeach President Donald Trump two months ago, some Democratic Party leaders dismissed it as an unhelpful vanity project — and even Steyer thought he'd top out at a million signatures.

But nearly 4 million digital signatures later, the philanthropist and environmental activist's unlikely campaign has seized on an issue — impeaching Trump — that could become part of the Democratic mainstream in 2018. It's placed at his fingertips a potentially powerful tool: an email list of millions of motivated activists whom he can reach instantly for organizing and fundraising and that could become the hottest trove of data in Democratic politics since the email list that Bernie Sanders' insurgent campaign against Hillary Clinton collected in 2016.

Steyer's digital success is fueling intense curiosity about what he'll do with that tool — and whether he'll use it beyond his California base for a White House bid of his own.

"That's how you build a grass-roots operations for a presidential campaign. And if you are that guy who started this, that's certainly a leg up in organizing a 50-state strategy," said Mike Madrid, a Republican consultant in California who is advising former Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa, a Democrat, in his gubernatorial campaign. "That's what he's building, and it's probably second only to Bernie Sanders' list, and may be eclipsing it. Every election cycle has its own dynamics, and whoever is tapping into the sentiments of their own base usually has an advantage."

Despite the opposition of party leadership, Madrid said Steyer has shown "there's a huge vacuum for somebody like Tom Steyer to come in and tap into the activist base — and even beyond that — where some are willing to sign up."

Campaign experts say Steyer's petition drive is breaking new ground in digital organizing in the nontraditional political terrain of the Trump era, though it's been anchored by an traditional media onslaught — national television ads that have been running nonstop since Oct. 20. So far, 3.73 million people have signed on to Steyer's NeedToImpeach.com drive, which has brought his message into the living rooms of millions of average Americans.

An NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll released this week showed 41 percent of Americans now back impeachment hearings — higher than the percentage that would support Trump in a 2020 election. And in a recent vote, 58 House Democrats backed Rep. Al Green's call for impeachment — a dramatic shift from the two who supported impeachment at the start of Steyer's drive in October.

Steyer himself acknowledged shock at the avalanche of grass-roots support for Trump's impeachment in a recent interview, amid clear disapproval from Democratic Party leaders like Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer, who have suggested that it distracts from the party's agenda. "We have tapped into something much larger than we thought," Steyer said in a recent C-SPAN interview. He says he's upped his original goal of 1 million signatures to 5 million.

As one of country's leading political donors in 2016, and a major party activist in California on issues like climate change, Steyer has long been the focus of buzz about a possible 2018 run for governor or the U.S. Senate. But the impeachment drive has fueled speculation that he could be even eyeing a run for the White House.

Asked about his political intentions in a C-SPAN "Newsmakers" interview to air this week, Steyer gave some of his most expansive comments to date. "I haven't ruled it out, and I'm actually trying to determine what will have the most positive differential impact," Steyer said. "I'm absolutely ambitious ... to try and be part of the group of people who gets America back on a just and prosperous course."

While Steyer acknowledged that "I have to make this decision fairly soon," he added that the determining factor will be "what can I do to stand up against what I consider to be a deep threat to the safety and health of the American people."

Political insiders say that Steyer's most recent effort — which he says represents an investment of more than $20 million — represents a game-changer in how political players use digital media.

"He's not only communicating to a national audience through a massive nationwide ad buy, but he's also running an intense digital campaign," noted Dave Jacobson, a veteran Democratic consultant in California. "Tom Steyer is broadening his footprint digitally. And if 2016 taught us anything, it's that conventional norms have been flipped — and your traditional cookie-cutter campaigning doesn't apply. Digital is king."

"I think it begs the question of whether or not he's running for president in 2020," said Jacobson, who's also a regular CNN analyst. "He's set his sights on building up a national apparatus; he's capitalizing on the new norm, which is digital persuasion."

Erik Olvera, communications director for NeedtoImpeach.com, notes that the effort has "increased dramatically within a very short period of time — and we've grown the campaign into something that's huge."

"A digital army"

As a result, Steyer — once known largely to Democratic political insiders and deep-pocketed donors — has become something of a celebrity to average voters and grass-roots activists.

"He's literally walking down the street, and people are stopping him, thanking him, congratulating him" — and asking him to pose for selfies, Olvera said.

Steyer's goal has been to create "a digital army, this movement all through digital platforms," Olvera said. "He's reached out to millions of people through Facebook and Twitter — and he has made them feel part of something."

One example: Steyer's drive last Tuesday launched what's known in the digital world as a "thunderclap" — a platform that allowed him to tap millions of activists in his base and see if they wanted to participate en masse in a specific action. In this case, 37,000 NeedtoImpeach.com followers signed on, gave their credentials and then — "all at the exact same time, posted or tweeted" their impeachment message on Facebook and Twitter," said Olvera. The move appears to have reached more than 18 million online, Olvera said.

Steyer also launched a 2½-minute video on Facebook last week, which argued that Trump has already committed multiple impeachable offenses, along with a new TV ad on Christmas Day that first ran on Facebook.

Steyer, pressed on how he might use the power of his impeachment movement and his email list, told C-SPAN, "it's true that people signing up gives us communication with people. But it's not so much we're trying to use them. ... The question is: How can we use the collective voice of Americans to change the debate ... and to let that voice be heard — so that the American people's will can be followed."

"That's what that list is really for: These people's voice, together, can be an incredibly strong force for change," he argued.

But some skeptical Democrats suggest he may be overplaying the value of his movement and his email list — both to the party and to his own political aspirations.

Still relatively unknown

"I don't know what it's worth to him," said veteran Democratic strategist Garry South, a former senior adviser to former California Gov. Gray Davis, and an adviser to presidential candidates Al Gore and Joe Lieberman. "People who put their name on a petition to impeach the president are not necessarily givers to a future campaign. It won't mean all of a sudden 4 million people will send him money," he said.

And South said he would prefer to see Steyer use his money elsewhere to aid the Democratic agenda. "I'd rather he take his big money and buy up big media outlets like Sinclair Broadcasting," the conservative media giant that is snapping up dozens of TV stations nationwide, South said.

"As much as I hate Trump, I think [the impeachment drive] is off-message for Democrats," he said. "Remember, a Democratic president — Bill Clinton — was impeached by Republicans, and it boomeranged on them."

Pollster Mark DiCamillo of the Institute of Governmental Studies at the University of California Berkeley said his recent polling in December underscored the hurdles for Steyer, a figure outside traditional political circles.

In the IGS California poll in December, just 14 percent of likely voters expressed a favorable view of Steyer, versus 9 percent who had an unfavorable view — and 77 percent had no opinion, DiCamillo noted. "It's kind of an eye-opener, literally, the difficulty these people have becoming known in the state like California, where voters are only casually paying attention."

Still, Steyer has caught the attention of Trump, who name-checked him on Twitter as being "wacky" and "totally unhinged."

And that's playing well with Democratic Party activists like Larry Stone, a longtime Democratic fundraiser and a former mayor of Sunnyvale.

"Tom will be a player in the 2018 midterms. I mean, there's no question about it," said Stone, who is now Santa Clara County assessor. "Democrats are pretty optimistic right now, with significant justification, and I love Tom Steyer."

"I don't believe that it's in the Democratic Party's interest to pursue, to seriously pursue impeachment of Donald Trump," he said. "But I think it's great to talk about it every day."

Darren Samuelsohn contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Zinke defiant amid helicopter controversy — Perry grants FERC more time in grid resiliency push — Enforcement slips dramatically at EPA in first months of Trump term
Date: Monday, December 11, 2017 5:43:26 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 12/11/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén

LASHING OUT: Taking a cue from his boss, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke continues to bash Patagonia and "the DC media" amid the latest wave of headlines. Reports that Zinke spent more than $14,000 for government helicopters so he could attend events in D.C., including to go horseback riding with Vice President Mike Pence, were "total fabrications and a wild departure from reality," the Interior secretary wrote in a statement on Twitter Saturday, without providing any new facts to contradict POLITICO's initial report, which was based on Interior Department travel logs. "All of these instances were thoroughly vetted and scrutinized before being approved by the department's career ethics officers and solicitors," he said in a posted Saturday. "We will continue to use government resources efficiently." More from Pro's Ben Lefebvre here.

That came after Sen. Maria Cantwell, top Democrat on the Energy and Natural Resources called for the agency's inspector general to add the trips to its ongoing probe of Zinke's travel habits: "If the Secretary misused public funds, he should write the treasury a check for the full amount and apologize," she said in a statement.

Questions, meanwhile, have arisen after Zinke and the Trump administration repeatedly attacked Patagonia, which filed a lawsuit challenging the decision to downsize Bears Ears National Monument in Utah. Zinke, in a Friday appearance on "Fox News," bashed the company by name as "made in China" and said Patagonia "should focus on how to bring manufacturing back into this country rather than lying to the public about losing federal land." (The House Natural Resources Committee made their own jab).

That prompted Walter Shaub, former director of the U.S. Office of Government Ethics, to urge the company to explore its legal options. "I don't know if there's any legal recourse, but I hope Patagonia has a law firm research the issue," he tweeted. "The federal govt officially and publicly calling a company a liar for political reasons is a bizarre and dangerous departure from civic norms. It's also decidedly anti-free market." And he added later Saturday: "Zinke is the poster child for this lawless administration's misuse of governmental authority & resources. His thuggish interference with a business is outside the scope of his duties, raising a question as to whether a sovereign immunity defense might fail if @patagonia sues."

Speaking of monuments, the uranium company Energy Fuels Resources lobbied the Trump administration to trim Bears Ears, the Washington Post reports. Zinke and Utah Republicans repeatedly insisted that mining and drilling considerations played no role in the decision.

One more thing: The FEC fined Zinke's congressional campaign committee $3,929 for failing to properly disclose contributions it received just before the 2016 election, Ben also reports, citing commission documents.

WELCOME TO MONDAY! Hope everyone in the Washington area enjoyed the first flakes of winter on Saturday! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Safer Chemicals Healthy Families' Liz Hitchcock was first to guess that 31 states (plus D.C.) have at least one national monument. For today: Just three presidents never used their authority under the Antiquities Act to designate a national monument since the program begun. Who are they? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

SEE YOU IN JANUARY: FERC now has until Jan. 10 to take final action on DOE's grid resiliency proposal that would prop up coal and nuclear plants after Energy Secretary Rick Perry granted the commission an extra 30 days late Friday, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. In a letter, Perry said that he preferred a faster outcome but would allow the extra time requested by new FERC chairman Kevin McIntyre hours after being sworn in.

DOE spokeswoman Shaylyn Hynes: "Secretary Perry understands and respects the reasons for the Chairman's request and looks forward to swift action from the Commission to promptly address grid security."

Eric reads the tea leaves and reports the extension could indicate there's no consensus among the five commissioners on what to do. The commission is unlikely to either fully reject or adopt outright the proposal from Perry that calls for power plants that keep 90 days of inventory on site to receive full cost recovery, but could try to split the difference. Observers think FERC could call for a technical conference, or opt for a plan reportedly being considered by Commissioners Cheryl LaFleur and Rob Powelson to close the current DOE docket and open a new one that seeks input from grid managers.

Though his company told Eric they'd "defer" to Perry's judgement, coal magnate Robert Murray told The Washington Examiner he was deeply disappointed by the delay in considering Perry's plan. "We must have it. The 30-day delay is disappointing. I am concerned. It needs immediate action," he said. Remember Murray, a big Trump backer, had early access to Perry and other administration officials to push his ideas to save the struggling coal sector.

And long-time former FERC staffer (and now consultant) Alison Silverstein summed it up to The Washington Post: "The secretary's proposal seems to me to be unsupported by facts of any kind."

TROUBLING SIGNS ON ENFORCEMENT: EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's agency has been far more lenient on enforcement actions during its first nine months than either the Obama or George W. Bush administrations, according to analysis conducted by the New York Times. The 1,900 civil cases started during the first nine months of Trump era are one-third fewer than under Lisa Jackson and one-quarter fewer than George W. Bush's first months, according to the Times. Pruitt's agency has sought $50.4 million in civil penalties to date, just 39 percent of what the Obama administration sought and about 70 percent of what the Bush administration sought. And the agency hasn't forced companies to retrofit their facilities to prevent pollution as much: the $1.2 billion in injunctive relief sought under Pruitt is just 12 percent of what was sought under Obama and 48 percent under Bush.

In addition, enforcement staff must now seek permission from Washington before ordering certain air and water pollution tests, according to documents obtained by The Times. "Certain people who are polluting are doing it with impunity right now and I think it is horrible," Nicole Cantello, an EPA lawyer in Chicago, said.

EPA responds: The agency told the Times it focuses "more on bringing people back into compliance than bean counting." In a statement Sunday, EPA said "Pruitt has not directed EPA staff to decrease their enforcement efforts," and questioned the Times methodology. "EPA and states work together to find violators and bring them back into compliance, and to punish intentional polluters. As part of this effort, we are collaborating more with states and we are focusing more on outcomes. Unless the activity is criminal, we focus more on bringing people back into compliance," the agency said.

QUITE THE PREDICTION! Speaking at his rally in Florida Friday, Trump promised the U.S. would be "totally self-sufficient" on the energy front by the end of the year and suggested using profits from energy exports to "start paying off our $20 trillion in debt." The International Energy Agency has said that "by the mid-2020s, the United States [could] become the world's largest liquefied natural gas (LNG) exporter and a few years later a net exporter of oil" though still a major importer of some types.

CALIFORNIA'S 'NEW NORMAL': Devastating wildfires still ablaze in Southern California have been exacerbated by impacts from climate change, California Gov. Jerry Brown said at a press conference, according to the Los Angeles Times. "This could be something that happens every year or every few years," Brown said. "We're about to have a firefighting Christmas." During a Sunday interview on "60 Minutes," Brown bemoaned that Trump doesn't have a "fear of the wrath of God" and offered him some advice with regards to the Paris agreement: "Take a deeper look now is not the time to undo what every country in the world is committed to," POLITICO's Brent D. Griffiths reports.

SEE YOUTH IN COURT! The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals will hear arguments today over whether a lower court should be allowed to hear a novel lawsuit brought by children and young adults using a public trust doctrine argument to try to force the federal government to take drastic action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. This litigation is simply over whether the lower court can even hear this case, not the ultimate outcome of any such litigation. A federal judge in Oregon previously ruled the case could at least go to the trial phase, although many legal observers believed the suit was still a long shot. But the Trump administration asked the 9th Circuit to step in early and block the proceedings on the grounds that the judicial branch is not supposed to answer such sweeping questions about environmental policy, a job it says should be left to Congress and the executive branch. Watch a video livestream of the hearing here starting at 1 p.m. EST (10 a.m. PST).

The case could get even more attention because of one of the three judges assigned to the panel: Alex Kozinski, a Reagan appointee. The Washington Post on Friday reported that six former clerks or staffers said Kozinski "subjected them to a range of inappropriate sexual conduct or comments," including allegedly viewing pornography in his chambers. Kozinski later told the Los Angeles Times, "If this is all they are able to dredge up after 35 years, I am not too worried." Also on the panel are Chief Judge Sidney Thomas and Judge Marsha Berzon, both Clinton appointees.

21 (SUPERFUND) SHOTS: EPA on Friday released a list of 21 Superfund sites, ranging from Rhode Island to California to Oklahoma, that it's targeted for "immediate and intense action," Pro's Emily Holden reports. Those top-tier polluted properties include: the San Jacinto Superfund site in the Houston area, which was damaged by flooding during Hurricane Harvey; the West Lake Landfill in Missouri that contains radioactive waste from the Manhattan Project and is next to another site with a long-burning underground fire and the East Chicago, Ind. site Pruitt visited earlier this year. "The Administrator will receive regular updates on each of these sites," the agency said.

BARRASSO LANDS A CHALLENGER: Democratic businessman Gary Trauner, who narrowly lost a bid for Wyoming's lone House seat in 2006, announced he'd challenge incumbent Sen. John Barrasso on Friday, Wyoming Public Radio reports. "The system is rigged, D.C. is broken, and that's why people aren't getting ahead anymore," he said in his introductory video. He'll, of course, face long odds against the popular incumbent in the deep red state.

FLOOR WATCH: A trio of energy-related bills are due to hit the House floor Tuesday under suspension. One of them H.R. 2872 \(115\) would ask FERC to create procedures for expediting hydropower permitting at existing non-federal dams without hydroelectric facilities. Another H.R. 2880 \(115\) would aim to speed the approval FERC of closed loop pumped storage projects. And there's a bill H.R. 1733 \(115\) requiring the government to issue a report on the environmental and energy-related benefits of re-refining used lubricating oil.

MOVING OUT (WEST)? Two Colorado Democrats — Ed Perlmutter and Jared Polis — are backing calls from their fellow Republicans to move the headquarters of BLM out West, according to a report in Western Wire, a project of the Western Energy Alliance. "I know the perfect home for the agency: Colorado," Polis, who's running for governor, said. "We would welcome the BLM with open arms. With the agency closer to the vast public lands we all cherish and share, they would have better insight into what the lands mean to the western way of life. It makes perfect sense to have the agency nearby."

HEADED TO PUERTO RICO: The electric industry sent seven different teams to Puerto Rico over the weekend where each of them will head to a separate part of the devastated island to support power restoration efforts. Members of the American Public Power Association, the Edison Electric Institute and the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association will help the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers get the lights back on. Months after a hurricane slammed into the island, the government says less than 60 percent of electric capacity has been restored.

That comes as the New York Times reports the death toll on the island may actually be well over 1,000 rather than official count of 64.

TAKE A GLANCE! The Center for American Progress is out with a new analysis this morning warning of significant damage to wildlife like polar bears, migratory birds and caribou if ANWR is opened up as part of the Republican tax package.

What about Paris? A collection of environmental groups, including BankTrack and Rainforest Action Network, find in a new report that some $600 million has been processed by commercial banks since the Paris accord was signed that has gone to the top 120 companies planning to build new coal plants. Chinese and Japanese banks have been most involved in the deals. Link here.

SPOTTED: Senior EPA and Interior officials speaking at the Congressional Western Caucus' Winter Roundtable. EPA officials attending included senior policy advisor Mandy Gunasekara and senior advisor Albert Kelly, while the Interior officials were special assistant to the secretary Marshall Critchfield and adviser Amanda Kaster-Averill. Picture here.

MOVER, SHAKER: Christopher Smith, former assistant secretary for fossil energy at DOE during the Obama administration, has joined Cheniere as senior vice president for policy, government and public affairs.

QUICK HITS

- Interior secretary pushing controversial road project. CNN.
- Environmental groups file lawsuit to try to block pipeline. AP.
- Koch-Backed Business Group Splinters in Climate-Change Dispute. Bloomberg.
- Lawmakers, groups urge fast deployment of Asian carp defense. AP.
- Power Failure: How utilities across the U.S. changed the rules to make big bets with your money. Post and Courier.
- Kuwait oil minister: exit strategy of global cuts to be discussed before June. Reuters.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

8:00 a.m. — Axios hosts a discussion on energy policies and priorities under Trump, Newseum, Knight Studio, 3rd Floor, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW

9:30 a.m. — "Bridging the Entrepreneurial Gap: Addressing Barriers to Small Business Formation and Growth," House Small Business Agriculture, Energy, and Trade Subcommittee, Deerfield, Ill.

TUESDAY

10:00 a.m. — "Update on the Corporate Average Fuel Economy Program and Greenhouse Gas Emissions Standards for Motor Vehicles," House Energy and Commerce Environment and Digital Commerce and Consumer Protection Subcommittees, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing on energy infrastructure projects, Dirksen 366

2:00 p.m. — "Examining Consequences of America's Growing Dependence on Foreign Minerals," House Natural Resources Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

2:30 p.m. — "National Ocean Policy: Stakeholder Perspectives," Senate Commerce Oceans, Atmosphere, Fisheries, and Coast Guard Subcommittee, Russell 253

WEDNESDAY

10:00 a.m. — "Oversight of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission," Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Dirksen 406

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Committee holds markup of 16 bills, Longworth 1324

10:15 a.m. — "The Impacts and Future of North American Energy Trade," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2322

2:00 p.m. — "Advancing Solar Energy Technology: Research Trumps Deployment," House Science, Space and Technology Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2318

THURSDAY

9:30 a.m. — House Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on the Grand Staircase Escalante Enhancement Act, Longworth 1334

FRIDAY

9:00 a.m. — "The Trump Administration, Latin America and Energy: Mexico, Natural Gas and Liquid Natural Gas Exports," Inter-American Dialogue, National Press Club, 529 14th Street NW, 13th Floor

10:00 a.m. — Bipartisan Policy Center hosts discussion with former FERC Chairman Neil Chatterjee, 1225 Eye Street NW, Suite 1000

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/12/zinke-defiant-amid-helicopter-controversy-046343>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Zinke booked government helicopters to attend D.C. events Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/07/2017 06:31 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke spent more than $14,000 on government helicopters this summer to take himself and staff to and from official events near Washington, D.C., in order to accommodate his attendance at a swearing-in ceremony for his replacement in Congress and a horseback ride with Vice President Mike Pence, according to previously undisclosed official travel documents.

The travel logs, released to POLITICO via a Freedom of Information Act request, show Zinke using taxpayer-funded vehicles from the U.S. Park Police to help accommodate his political events schedule.

In a case detailed in the new documents, Zinke ordered a U.S. Park Police helicopter to take him and his chief of staff, Scott Hommel, to an emergency management exercise in Shepherdstown, W.Va., on June 21.

Zinke's staff justified the $8,000 flight by saying official business would prevent him leaving Washington before 2 p.m., too late to make the two-hour drive to the exercise, according to the documents.

The event that prevented Zinke from leaving before 2 p.m. was the swearing-in ceremony for Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-Mont.), according to Zinke's official Interior calendar. Gianforte, who won a special election for Zinke's old seat in May after assaulting a reporter, contributed along with his wife $15,800 to Zinke's two congressional campaigns.

"Secretary Zinke's last engagement in Washington D.C. is at 2 p.m.," an Interior staffer wrote as justification for using the helicopter. "Driving to [the West Virginia event] would not enable him to be on time and fully participate as scheduled."

Interior defended the trips.

"The swearing in of the Congressman is absolutely an official event, as is emergency management training," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in an email Thursday. "Shame on you for not respecting the office of a Member of Congress."

Zinke also ordered a Park Police helicopter to fly him and another Interior official to and from Yorktown, Va., on July 7 in order to be back in Washington in time for a 4 p.m. horseback ride with Pence. The trip cost about $6,250, according to the documents.

The horseback ride through Rock Creek Park also included Sen. Roy Blunt (R-Mo.) and CMS Administrator Seema Verma, according to a post on Pence's Facebook page.

While in Yorktown, Zinke completed a walking tour of the local Revolutionary War battlefield and attended a boating industry roundtable discussion, according to the documents. The day before the trip, an Interior trip planner added to the schedule a 30-minute flyover of an area where Dominion Energy is building high-voltage electric transmission lines to run across the James River.

Interior officials originally estimated that driving to Yorktown would take about three hours, although one noted that "there is a major construction project on I-64, which will slow things down."

In an email to Interior travel scheduler Tim Nigborowicz, an Interior employee justified Zinke's using the helicopter instead of less expensive method by saying "the Secretary will be able to familiarize himself with the in-flight capabilities of an aircraft he is in charge of" and that the Park Police staff on board would "provide an added measure of security to the Secretary during his travel."

Interior officials certified ahead of the flight that Zinke's use of the helicopter would not compromise law enforcement obligations.

The Park Police helicopter, Eagle One, is deployed for medevac and emergency response situations around Washington, a part of its mission Zinke praised later that month.

"U.S. Park Service helicopter pilot and crew provided a life-saving medevac flight during the attack on members of Congress during baseball practice," Zinke said in the July 25 video celebrating American Heroes Week.

The former Montana congressman and Navy SEAL is already being investigated by the Interior Department's Inspector General and the independent Office of Special Counsel for his mixing of official travel and political events. Interior earlier this year released records documenting Zinke's use of charter and military aircraft, including a $12,000 flight from Las Vegas to Montana that allowed him to give a speech for a hockey team owned by a major campaign donor.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke attacks reporting on helicopter rides Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/09/2017 10:18 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Saturday attacked POLITICO's coverage of his use of $14,000 in taxpayer-funded helicopter rides in the D.C. area — but offered no facts that contradicted the story that ran Thursday.

"Here are the #facts the DC media refuses to print," Zinke said in a statement on his official Twitter account. "Recent articles about official Interior Department helicopter usage are total fabrications and a wild departure from reality."

His statement went on to note — as POLITICO's story had said — that the trips in question had included a visit to an emergency management exercise in West Virginia and a flyover of a power line project in Virginia.

Zinke also defended a separate helicopter flight last summer over two national monuments in Nevada. POLITICO had reported in September on that flight, which Interior Department documents said cost at least $40,000.

POLITICO's reporting was based on records that the Interior Department had released under the Freedom of Information Act. Zinke's travels got more attention Friday in a follow-up story by The Associated Press that mentioned all the helicopter trips.

In his statement Saturday, Zinke wrote: "On these instances, I conducted an aerial survey of a million acres of federal monument lands, an aerial survey of power line project which was under scrutiny for possible compensatory migration corruption from the previous administration, and a national comment authority directed emergency response exercise." He added that all his trips "were thoroughly vetted and scrutinized."

Zinke's tweet came as prominent Democrats criticized his use of U.S. Park Police helicopters to fly between Washington, D.C., and the events in West Virginia and Virginia. The use of the speedy aircraft also allowed him to fit in two events in D.C. — a horseback ride through Rock Creek Park with Vice President Mike Pence, and the swearing-in ceremony of Rep. Greg Gianforte (R-Mont.), Zinke's successor in the congressional seal and a donor to Zinke's past campaigns.

Senate Environment and Resources Committee ranking member Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.) said in a tweet Friday that she had asked Interior's inspector general to add the helicopter flights to its investigation of the secretary. The IG's office is already looking into Zinke's past mixing of official business with political events, including his use of a charter flight after speaking to the Las Vegas professional hockey team owned by a major donor.

In one of the flights POLITICO wrote about this week, Interior's staff at first approved Zinke's use of a Park Police helicopter to travel to a July 7 meeting of boating industry representatives in Yorktown, Virginia. Days later, it added an overview of a proposed high-voltage transmission line site to the same trip.

In justifying the use the helicopter, Interior's staff said on June 29 that it was needed to ensure he could make it back to D.C. in time for his "official event" with Pence. The Park Service approved the request on July 1, and Interior staff added the transmission line site review to the itinerary on July 6, according to official emails. The helicopter trip cost about $6,250.

"Following his visit to Yorktown, Secretary Zinke must return to Washington D.C. to attend an official event with Vice President Mike Pence at Rock Creek Park," an Interior staffer said in a July 4 email.

Earlier, Zinke and his chief of staff, Scott Hommel, used a helicopter to fly from the capital to attend an emergency management exercise in Shepherdstown, West Virginia, on June 21. Interior staff justified the flight by saying Zinke needed to attend Gianforte's swearing-in in Washington earlier in the day. That flight cost $8,000.

"Scott confirmed that we would like to use the helicopter to go round trip," Zinke's special assistant Caroline Boulton wrote in a June 16 email to department schedulers.

Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift had defended the flights in an email POLITICO published Thursday: "The swearing in of the Congressman is absolutely an official event, as is emergency management training," she wrote. "Shame on you for not respecting the office of a Member of Congress."

According to official Interior documents, Zinke also used a Bureau of Land Management helicopter on July 30 to survey the Gold Butte and Basin and Range national monuments outside Las Vegas as part of the national monument review President Donald Trump had tasked him with. Zinke proposed reducing the size of both monuments.

To view online click here.

Back

FEC fines Zinke campaign committee Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 12/08/2017 05:50 PM EDT

The Federal Election Commission fined Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's congressional campaign committee $3,929 for failing to properly disclose contributions it received just before the 2016 election, according to commission documents released this week.

The 18 donations to Zinke for Congress came less than two weeks before Election Day and totaled $37,900, according to the FEC case file. FEC regulations calls for all donations of more than $1,000 made in the final weeks of an election cycle to be reported within 48 hours, a deadline the FEC said Zinke's campaign committee missed. The Montana Republican was reelected to the state's lone House seat last year before stepping down to join President Donald Trump's Cabinet.

Zinke for Congress Treasurer Lorna Kuney in a written response to the FEC in September attributed the mistake to a data entry error that she said was "truly just an unfortunate mistake" and asked the fine be dropped. The FEC declined her request, and Kuney paid the fine in October, according to the case file, which was made public Thursday. The document was first reported by the Center for Public Integrity's Dave Levinthal on Twitter.

The FEC last month in a separate case asked a leadership PAC established by Zinke, SEAL PAC, to explain discrepancies in its disclosure filings, including reporting $200,000 more cash on hand on Jan. 1, 2017, than it reported having a day earlier.

What's Next: SEAL PAC has until Dec. 26 to respond to the FEC's questions about discrepancies in its reports.

To view online click here.

Back

FERC's McIntyre presses for time Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/08/2017 04:26 PM EDT

New FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre is hoping to give himself and his new colleagues a month to weigh their options before making a decision that could rewire large parts of the nation's electric grid.

McIntyre asked the Department of Energy late Thursday for another 30 days for him and the four other FERC commissioners to address Energy Secretary Rick Perry's request to alter power market rules to support struggling coal and nuclear power plants in the name of bolstering grid resiliency.

FERC is unlikely to either fully reject or adopt outright the proposal from Perry that calls for power plants that keep 90 days of inventory on site to receive full cost recovery — a requirement that only coal and nuclear power plants could meet. Instead, FERC observers said the agency could buy time by calling for a technical conference, or considering a plan such as the one The Energy Daily reported was being crafted by Commissioners Cheryl LaFleur and Rob Powelson to seek input through a "Notice of Inquiry" to regional power grid operators to report back on the resilience of their power networks and what could be improved.

Former Chairman Neil Chatterjee has hoped to help generators by putting an interim measure in place to support power plants facing closure while the commission sought a permanent solution, but that plan appeared to lack the support among the other commissioners.

DOE had asked FERC to take action by Monday, but McIntyre's request for more time could indicate there's no consensus among the five commissioners on what to do.

"We said (earlier this week) that if there weren't three votes for something, the issue could sit until there were," said Christi Tezak, managing director at analytics firm ClearView Energy Partners. "It appears to us that McIntyre would like to explore something between Chatterjee's preference for an interim solution and the LaFleur-Powelson NOI angle. This is something we thought was a reasonable outcome."

DOE has not yet replied to McIntyre's letter.

Perry's proposal has drawn broad criticism as a carve out that would cost power customers billions of dollars and was designed to support the coal industry in the PJM Interconnection, and the mining company run by coal magnate Bob Murray in particular.

Powelson, a Republican appointed by President Trump, has been vocally opposed to the proposed DOE rule. The plan that he and LaFleur have crafted would reportedly close the current DOE docket and open a new one that seeks input from grid managers — an idea that could create a long delay before any action was taken.

McIntyre's request for more time could create problems for Murray Energy, which has emphasized the need for a speedy outcome: One of Murray's top customers, FirstEnergy Solutions, is considering bankruptcy, which could be the first step to closing some big coal plants. But Murray Energy said it was not concerned with a possible 30-day delay.

"We believe that the sooner this rule is implemented, the better it will be for the American people," a spokesman said. "With that said, this extension request is a matter between FERC and Secretary Perry, and we defer to their judgment."

To view online click here.

Back

FERC's McIntyre presses for time Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/08/2017 04:26 PM EDT

New FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre is hoping to give himself and his new colleagues a month to weigh their options before making a decision that could rewire large parts of the nation's electric grid.

McIntyre asked the Department of Energy late Thursday for another 30 days for him and the four other FERC commissioners to address Energy Secretary Rick Perry's request to alter power market rules to support struggling coal and nuclear power plants in the name of bolstering grid resiliency.

FERC is unlikely to either fully reject or adopt outright the proposal from Perry that calls for power plants that keep 90 days of inventory on site to receive full cost recovery — a requirement that only coal and nuclear power plants could meet. Instead, FERC observers said the agency could buy time by calling for a technical conference, or considering a plan such as the one The Energy Daily reported was being crafted by Commissioners Cheryl LaFleur and Rob Powelson to seek input through a "Notice of Inquiry" to regional power grid operators to report back on the resilience of their power networks and what could be improved.

Former Chairman Neil Chatterjee has hoped to help generators by putting an interim measure in place to support power plants facing closure while the commission sought a permanent solution, but that plan appeared to lack the support among the other commissioners.

DOE had asked FERC to take action by Monday, but McIntyre's request for more time could indicate there's no consensus among the five commissioners on what to do.

"We said (earlier this week) that if there weren't three votes for something, the issue could sit until there were," said Christi Tezak, managing director at analytics firm ClearView Energy Partners. "It appears to us that McIntyre would like to explore something between Chatterjee's preference for an interim solution and the LaFleur-Powelson NOI angle. This is something we thought was a reasonable outcome."

DOE has not yet replied to McIntyre's letter.

Perry's proposal has drawn broad criticism as a carve out that would cost power customers billions of dollars and was designed to support the coal industry in the PJM Interconnection, and the mining company run by coal magnate Bob Murray in particular.

Powelson, a Republican appointed by President Trump, has been vocally opposed to the proposed DOE rule. The plan that he and LaFleur have crafted would reportedly close the current DOE docket and open a new one that seeks input from grid managers — an idea that could create a long delay before any action was taken.

McIntyre's request for more time could create problems for Murray Energy, which has emphasized the need for a speedy outcome: One of Murray's top customers, FirstEnergy Solutions, is considering bankruptcy, which could be the first step to closing some big coal plants. But Murray Energy said it was not concerned with a possible 30-day delay.

"We believe that the sooner this rule is implemented, the better it will be for the American people," a spokesman said. "With that said, this extension request is a matter between FERC and Secretary Perry, and we defer to their judgment."

To view online click here.

Back

FERC's McIntyre presses for time Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/08/2017 04:26 PM EDT

New FERC Chairman Kevin McIntyre is hoping to give himself and his new colleagues a month to weigh their options before making a decision that could rewire large parts of the nation's electric grid.

McIntyre asked the Department of Energy late Thursday for another 30 days for him and the four other FERC commissioners to address Energy Secretary Rick Perry's request to alter power market rules to support struggling coal and nuclear power plants in the name of bolstering grid resiliency.

FERC is unlikely to either fully reject or adopt outright the proposal from Perry that calls for power plants that keep 90 days of inventory on site to receive full cost recovery — a requirement that only coal and nuclear power plants could meet. Instead, FERC observers said the agency could buy time by calling for a technical conference, or considering a plan such as the one The Energy Daily reported was being crafted by Commissioners Cheryl LaFleur and

Rob Powelson to seek input through a "Notice of Inquiry" to regional power grid operators to report back on the resilience of their power networks and what could be improved.

Former Chairman Neil Chatterjee has hoped to help generators by putting an interim measure in place to support power plants facing closure while the commission sought a permanent solution, but that plan appeared to lack the support among the other commissioners.

DOE had asked FERC to take action by Monday, but McIntyre's request for more time could indicate there's no consensus among the five commissioners on what to do.

"We said (earlier this week) that if there weren't three votes for something, the issue could sit until there were," said Christi Tezak, managing director at analytics firm ClearView Energy Partners. "It appears to us that McIntyre would like to explore something between Chatterjee's preference for an interim solution and the LaFleur-Powelson NOI angle. This is something we thought was a reasonable outcome."

DOE has not yet replied to McIntyre's letter.

Perry's proposal has drawn broad criticism as a carve out that would cost power customers billions of dollars and was designed to support the coal industry in the PJM Interconnection, and the mining company run by coal magnate Bob Murray in particular.

Powelson, a Republican appointed by President Trump, has been vocally opposed to the proposed DOE rule. The plan that he and LaFleur have crafted would reportedly close the current DOE docket and open a new one that seeks input from grid managers — an idea that could create a long delay before any action was taken.

McIntyre's request for more time could create problems for Murray Energy, which has emphasized the need for a speedy outcome: One of Murray's top customers, FirstEnergy Solutions, is considering bankruptcy, which could be the first step to closing some big coal plants. But Murray Energy said it was not concerned with a possible 30-day delay.

"We believe that the sooner this rule is implemented, the better it will be for the American people," a spokesman said. "With that said, this extension request is a matter between FERC and Secretary Perry, and we defer to their judgment."

To view online click here.

Back

Bob Murray had early access to Rick Perry to share coal plan Back

By Eric Wolff | 12/07/2017 05:30 PM EDT

Coal magnate Bob Murray pitched Energy Secretary Rick Perry on his plan to throw an economic lifeline to coal companies less than a month before Perry set in motion plans to aid the industry, according to newly disclosed photographs that show the two meeting.

The liberal magazine In These Times obtained pictures of Murray and Perry from a March 29 meeting at Energy Department headquarters, less than a month after Perry was sworn in.

Several other officials were in attendance, including Andrew Wheeler, who at the time was a lobbyist for Murray and has since been nominated as the Environmental Protection Agency's No. 2 official.

The meeting puts Murray and Perry together at a crucial moment in the timeline of the Trump administration's push to save the struggling coal industry, an effort that would benefit Murray Energy in particular while raising electricity prices for potentially millions of people. A month before the meeting, one of Murray's biggest customers, FirstEnergy, told investors it was seriously considering seeking bankruptcy protection for its merchant division, FirstEnergy Solutions, a move that would likely void its supply contracts with Murray's coal mines.

Three weeks after Murray's visit, Perry would order a grid study that later became part of the justification for a proposed rule to reward coal and nuclear power plants for providing "grid resiliency." FERC, which has jurisdiction over the proposal, must make a decision on it by Monday.

At the time of the meeting, Wheeler was already the leading candidate to become the deputy administrator for EPA. Wheeler, who represented Murray as a lobbyist for Faegre Baker Daniels, would not be officially nominated for months. Wheeler, who has acknowledged participating in meetings on Murray's coal plan at DOE and on Capitol Hill, cleared committee last week and is awaiting Senate confirmation.

Murray is an outspoken supporter of President Donald Trump and held a fundraiser for him during the 2016 campaign.

DOE did not dispute the validity of the photos.

"Industry stakeholders visit the Department of Energy on a daily basis," DOE spokeswoman Shaylyn Hynes said, when asked about the meeting. "The DOE proposal to FERC was about the future and resiliency of the nation's power supply, an issue much bigger than one industry or company."

The photographs show Perry sitting at the head of a table in the Department of Energy, with Bob Murray, CEO of Murray Energy, to his left, and Wheeler down the table from Murray.

"Enclosed is an Action Plan for achieving reliable and low cost electricity ... and to assist in the survival of our Country's coal industry, which ... power grid reliability and low cost electricity," Murray writes in a cover letter to Perry, parts of which are visible in one photo from the meeting.

Though the document has never been publicly released, DOE critics say Murray's plan appears to have inspired DOE's grid study and the proposed rule Perry sent FERC in September. Copies are visible at the seats of most of the participants, including Perry and Murray. Wheeler, who told members of the Senate Environment Committee he had only seen the memo briefly, is not holding a copy in the photos obtained by In These Times. Murray told Greenwire in November he "didn't have any involvement" in writing the rule.

Murray has acknowledged sharing the plan with Trump.

"I gave Mr. Trump what I called an action plan very early," Murray said in a recent PBS Frontline documentary on EPA. "It's about three-and-a-half pages and — of what he needed to do in his administration. He's wiped out page one."

A spokesman for Bob Murray said that during the March 29 meeting, Murray did not discuss the DOE's proposed rule, and he added that he was not involved in drafting Perry's proposal.

The meeting appears to have been successful for all. One of the photos shows Perry and Murray in a big bear hug.

To view online click here.

Back

Brown: Trump doesn't fear 'wrath of God' Back

By Brent D. Griffiths | 12/10/2017 07:00 PM EDT

California Gov. Jerry Brown slammed President Donald Trump as a man who is not afraid of "the wrath of God."

"I don't think — President Trump has a fear of the Lord, the fear of the wrath of God, which leads one to more humility," Brown said in an interview airing Sunday on "60 Minutes" on CBS. "And this is such a reckless disregard for the truth and for the existential consequences that can be unleashed."

In the past, Trump has called climate change a hoax pushed by the Chinese.

Brown, a four-term governor of the state, said California is "not waiting for the deniers" as it confronts its most destructive wildfire season on record and prepares for what may become the new normal.

An outspoken advocate on the subject, Brown was among a handful of blue-state politicians who promised to stay the course of combating climate change even after Trump withdrew the United States from the Paris climate accord, saying it was not good for the country. Brown called that notion "preposterous."

"I'd say to Mr. Trump: Take a deeper look now is not the time to undo what every country in the world is committed to," Brown said.

On this and other issues, Brown argued that his state's reputation as being a Democratic bastion that is far out of touch with the rest of America is simply incorrect. Instead, he said, California is America's future; it just arrived sooner than everyone else — with Brown specifically pointing to states like Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan and Pennsylvania where Trump won just enough votes to win the White House.

"There's more confidence here; there's less fear. People are looking to the future," Brown said. They're not scared, they're not going inward, they're not scapegoating, they're not blaming — Mexican immigrants. They're not blaming the stranger Just the opposite. it's is a place that's alive."

As for his future, Brown told "60 Minutes" that he is looking forward to retiring in 2019 and spending time on his ranch north of Sacramento.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA announces 21 Superfund sites to prioritize Back

By Emily Holden | 12/08/2017 04:13 PM EDT

EPA has named 21 Superfund sites on its priority list for cleanup.

The list follows recommendations from a task force convened this summer. Administrator Scott Pruitt had previously said he would make a top-10 list of sites that needed the most attention.

"The list is designed to spur action at sites where opportunities exist to act quickly and comprehensively," EPA said in a press release. "The Administrator will receive regular updates on each of these sites."

There are more than 1,300 of the toxic waste sites around the country, and environmental advocates have warned that prioritizing just a few may take resources away from others and allow Pruitt to provide resources in states run by his political allies.

The new list includes sites in red states but also in New England and on the West Coast. It includes the San Jacinto Superfund site in the Houston area, which was damaged by flooding during Hurricane Harvey. EPA has already ordered two companies to pay $115 million for cleanup efforts there.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Morning Energy: Zinke's drilling plan lands with a thud — East Coast grid weathering "snow bomb" well — Big day for Supreme Court on energy issues
Date: Friday, January 05, 2018 5:44:38 AM

By Anthony Adragna | 01/05/2018 05:42 AM EDT

With help from Kelsey Tamborrino, Eric Wolff, Nick Juliano and Alex Guillén

A COASTAL NON-STARTER: The Trump administration's proposal Thursday to open virtually every nook and cranny from Alaska and Florida to offshore oil and gas companies didn't get much love from lawmakers whose formerly off-limits coastlines would face potential new drilling. Florida Tea Party Republicans along with California progressive Democrats bashed the drilling plan unveiled by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and vowed to fight it. ICYMI, here's Pro's Ben Lefebvre with deets of the plan and some reactions:

It's hard to find support for Zinke's plan from a single congressional Republican whose district would face potential new drilling. Rep. Matt Gaetz, a Tea Party-aligned Floridian who's called for eliminating the EPA, bashed the proposal as bad for national security: "Not only does offshore drilling threaten the Gulf Coast with another potential catastrophe like the Deepwater Horizon oil spill of 2010, it also jeopardizes our national security," he said in a statement. South Carolina Rep. Mark Sanford, a Freedom Caucus member, said it ignored local wishes: "Whether you are for or against offshore drilling, I think we could all agree that locals should have some degree of voice on what happens in their backyard," he said in a statement. "Unfortunately, this proposal explicitly ignores local opposition."

Three Democratic West Coast governors — California's Jerry Brown, Oregon's Kate Brown and Washington's Jay Inslee — said they "won't forget history or ignore science" and "do whatever it takes to stop this reckless, short-sighted action." Florida Republican Gov. Rick Scott was first out of the gate to bash the proposal, prompting White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders to state its "goal certainly isn't to cross Gov. Scott." North Carolina Democratic Gov. Roy Cooper vowed to "pursue every option to prevent oil drilling near North Carolina's beaches, coastal communities, and fishing waters."

Of course, the plan had its defenders: Louisiana Sen. Bill Cassidy, whose home state is a hub for existing offshore drilling, said on the Senate floor he was sensitive to concerns about impacts to the tourism industry and military, but vowed energy development could co-exist with them. "I share my colleagues' interest in protecting our communities, businesses, and the environment. The reality is that these goals are not mutually exclusive, especially on the Gulf Coast," he said. And Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski praised it as a "positive step" that "launches a new discussion with local stakeholders to determine where responsible energy development should take place."

How to fight back? Various people who criticized the proposal said they'd push back against it without any details of what that might look like. But one concrete idea came from Sam Jammal, seeking the nomination to take on California Rep. Ed Royce: "The CA congressional delegation must oppose any funding deals unless Trump stops attempts to drill on our coast," he tweeted. California Attorney General Xavier Becerra also noted an important point: "It should be underscored that regulatory agencies in our State will have a say in whether any offshore drilling ultimately does occur," he said in a statement.

I thought we were friends! Interior's offshore drilling announcement even came in for criticism from some Republicans who had previously counted on support from the leadership PAC Zinke had as a Montana congressman. Florida Rep. Brian J. Mast, whose campaign received $6,000 from Zinke's SEAL PAC in the 2016 election cycle, called Thursday's announcement "extremely alarming and unacceptable." And New Jersey Rep. Frank LoBiondo, recipient of a $1,000 SEAL PAC check in the last campaign, took to Twitter to declare the idea the "ABSOLUTELY WRONG APPROACH for #SouthJersey & Atlantic Ocean." Maine Rep. Bruce Poliquin, who received $5,000 from SEAL PAC, said in a statement that he is "opposed to oil drilling off the coast of" the state, citing jobs in the marine and tourism industries and the need to protect "Maine's unique natural resources." Florida Rep. Ron DeSantis, recipient of a $10,000 SEAL PAC contribution, agrees with Gov. Rick Scott's statement, a spokeswoman for the congressman told ME. Two other Republicans from coastal districts received SEAL PAC donations last cycle — $5,000 apiece to Reps. Scott W. Taylor and Lee Zeldin — but neither weighed in Thursday. The $32,000 SEAL PAC gave to those six coastal Republicans represented more than one-fourth of its total donations to other candidates or party committees (but only about 1 percent of its overall spending, the bulk of which went to direct mail and political consultants).

Important bottom line from Ben: "Even if Interior's plan becomes a reality, it's not likely oil and gas companies would immediately ready their drill ships. Offshore drilling remains expensive and time consuming, a combination that may not make immediate sense in an era of cheap oil and ready-to-access onshore shale plays."

SO FAR, SO GRID: Grid operators are encouraged after a day of brutal winter weather that the East Coast's power grid seems to be holding its own and say it shows the effectiveness of a series of measures put in place after 2014's infamous "polar vortex," Pro's Darius Dixon reports. "After the polar vortex, the ISOs did a good job in hardening their systems coming out of that experience and how close they came to having real problems," said Steven Winberg, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for fossil energy. "They went back and did a post-mortem on it to harden their systems ... and I think that some of that work is exhibiting itself this week." Grid operators in New York, New England, and PJM said power demand on Thursday closely tracked their forecasts and peak usage fell well below their available power electricity generating capacity.

What's DOE doing? The Energy Department continues to monitor outages and fuel issues across the territories of five regional grids and help coordinate state-level responses from Maine to Virginia, Bruce Walker, DOE's top official on electricity issues, tells Darius. But Walker declined to weigh in on whether the storms add fuel to Secretary Rick Perry's push to bolster coal-fired and nuclear power plants. "This is a good demonstration as to what the value of a diverse portfolio is of fuel mixes, and what that means from a reliability and resiliency standpoint," Walker said. Remember, ME faithful, the wintry blast tests the grid less than a week before regulators at FERC decide how to address Perry's proposal.

One hiccup: Pilgrim nuclear plant — one type of facility that would benefit from Perry's proposal — went offline on Thursday afternoon after one of the two lines that connect the facility to the grid went down, Reuters reports, though the outage did not lead to immediate reports of reliability issues in the area. ISO-New England also seemed unfazed.

New York: We're good: New York's independent grid operator says it's ready and prepared for the cold weather ahead as residents crank up the heat, although it noted many downstate electric generators are switching to oil, POLITICO New York's Marie J. French reports. The New York Independent System Operator said Thursday it is confident generators have sufficient fuel supplies to meet projected peak demand on Friday and Saturday — likely to be the two coldest days of the year.

TGIF MY FRIENDS! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, but please as of now start also sending your tips, quips and other gossip to Kelsey (ktamborrino@politico.com), who will be shadowing me for a few days ahead of the official ME handoff. And please be sure to follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @KelseyTam, @Morning_Energy and @POLITICOPro. Now, trivia-wise, Cook-Joyce Inc.'s Joe Pere was the first to identify former Massachusetts Gov. Endicott Peabody as the most recent to seek a Senate seat (unsuccessfully, it turns out) in another state (New Hampshire). Today's end-of-the-week puzzler: Which son of a former president was either present or nearby when three presidential assassinations occurred?

Pro subscribers: Are you getting all the content you want? Make sure your keywords are up to date and customized via your settings page at <http://politico.pro/1iDAlk9>.

CLICK IT: Nonprofit group Resources for the Future launched an interactive tool for viewing the projected effects of DOE's proposed grid resiliency rule, including effects under various natural gas price futures. See it here.

JUSTICES TO DISCUSS ENERGY CASES TODAY: The Supreme Court meets privately today for their regular conference with several high-profile energy-related cases on its list. It's not clear whether any of these cases will pique the justices' interest, so we'll keep an eye on Monday morning's release of orders from today's conference. Here's a brief rundown of the energy cases by topic.

—EPA coal jobs study: Murray Energy is appealing the 4th Circuit ruling from last year that said EPA was not legally obligated under the Clean Air Act to produce a study specifically considering coal industry job losses caused by its regulations. The Trump administration opposes requiring EPA to produce the study Murray wants and has urged the Supreme Court not to take the case. But EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said in October that his agency will give greater consideration to coal jobs via some type of study in the future. The case is 17-478, Murray v. Pruitt.

—Climate change and endangered species: This case is a big deal for green groups after the 9th Circuit ruled that the Obama administration appropriately justified Endangered Species Act protections for an Alaskan seal based entirely on the future loss of critical sea ice habitat caused by climate change. Critics argue the law was not meant to extend to species that are not currently endangered but likely will be decades down the line. The Trump administration maintains the future threat of climate change is appropriate justification. The case is 17-118, Alaska v. Ross.

—Single-state endangered species: This challenge brought by a group of Utah property owners questions whether the Fish and Wildlife Service can prohibit the "take" of Utah prairie dogs that live only within the state and are not used in interstate commerce. It's the latest in a long history of such challenges to federal authority over intrastate animals, but several courts have previously ruled that the ESA applies to species without a commercial market. The case is 17-465, People for the Ethical Treatment of Property Owners v. FWS.

—NAAQS implementation: The 9th Circuit ruled in 2016 that EPA wrongly approved part of Arizona's particulate matter clean-up plan that counted already completed actions — such as paving dirt roads — as required "contingency measures" meant to help Maricopa County meet the standard. Arizona argues that similar approvals have happened dozens of times in recent decades, and that the 5th Circuit ruled previously in favor of that scheme. The Trump administration urged the Supreme Court not to get involved, saying the circuit split "does not create any unmanageable practical difficulties." The case is 16-1369, Arizona v. Bahr.

—Administrative law judges: The administrative law world has been buzzing about this case for a while, and while it directly challenges only the constitutionality of ALJs at the SEC, the outcome could affect ALJs used at various energy agencies as well. The case involves whether ALJs should have to go through the same rigorous presidential appointment and confirmation process as top executive and judicial branch workers. A split on the issue between the D.C. and 10th circuits could boost the chances before the high court. EPA has three ALJs, FERC has 13, Interior has nine and the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission uses 15. The lead case is 17,130, Lucia v. SEC.

Reminder: The court hears two hours of arguments on Monday in water use battles between Texas and Colorado over the Rio Grande, and Georgia and Florida over the Apalachicola River.

FISCHER NOT DIGGING CRUZ RFS PROPOSAL: Sen. Deb Fischer, one of the few hearty legislators undaunted by Thursday's deep freeze and still at the Capitol, told reporters she was "not super excited about" Sen. Ted Cruz's proposal to change the Renewable Fuel Standard. Cruz staffers passed a proposal to the White House last month that would hold down biofuel credit prices to 10 cents, and shift sales of the credits to EPA. Sen. Chuck Grassley said before the break that corn-state senators would meet to discuss the proposal, but Fischer said nothing had materialized yet.

WHAT'S ON KEVIN CRAMER'S MIND: With the retirement of Mississippi Rep. Gregg Harper, Energy and Commerce Oversight Subcommittee Chairman, yet another spot opens up for ambitious members. Senior lawmakers with expansive jurisdiction already leaving the committee include Vice Chairman Joe Barton and Communications and Technology Chairman Marsha Blackburn. Remember Cramer told ME before the holidays his ability to advance up the panel was a crucial consideration as he mulls whether to challenge incumbent Sen. Heidi Heitkamp.

NPS TO TAP FORMER OFFICIAL FOR ACTING DIRECTOR: Former National Park Service official P. Daniel Smith is expected to take over the agency as acting director, potentially as soon as next week, sources tell National Parks Traveler. Notably, DOI's Inspector General found Smith "improperly used his position" when he was special assistant to former NPS Director Fran Mainella "to apply pressure and circumvent NPS procedures" in permitting the owner of the Washington Redskins to cut down trees on a scenic easement along the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park. Read more.

WHY THEY'RE MOVING ON: POLITICO's Edward-Isaac Dove and Ben Baker have a super interesting look at why more than two dozen members of Congress have already announced their exits. Here's how House Science Chairman Lamar Smith summed it up: "It is a lot easier to enjoy your job when you're a committee chairman and a member of the majority," he said. The whole article (which features an amazing pic of Rep. Sander Levin munching on a donut) is worth your time. More here.

MORE NOMS: Trump on Thursday nominated Tim Thomas of Sen. Mitch McConnell's Kentucky staff to be federal co-chair of the Appalachian Regional Commission. Thomas currently serves as a field representative for McConnell's Bowling Green office.

NEW JERSEY ABANDONS NUCLEAR BILL (FOR NOW): Powerful New Jersey Democrats are irked that Gov.-elect Phil Murphy apparently played a role in pulling a nuclear subsidy bill from potential consideration, POLITICO New Jersey's Danielle Muoio reports. "Holding this legislation hostage at this juncture is not only shortsighted, but it is a mistake. We are talking 2,000 direct jobs and thousands of indirect jobs. We are talking about the generation of 40 percent of the state's electricity," Senate President Steve Sweeney said. A spokesman for Murphy said he wanted to ensure the legislation had provisions for clean energy investments.

NO 'TIT-FOR-TAT' ON DISASTER AID: Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer laid out his list of demands for a final deal Thursday in the ongoing budget debate, including the need for disaster aid, Pro's Budget & Appropriations Brief reports. The Democratic leader took a swipe at House Republicans who are now pushing for disaster aid after voting against similar assistance post-Hurricane Sandy. "I know that lots of Republican congressmen from the House want aid, even though many of them opposed aid when New York and New Jersey had the crisis," Schumer said on the floor. "We are not going to play tit-for-tat. But we want a fair bill."

MOVER, SHAKER: Kelly Robbins will take over as Arkansas Petroleum Council executive director. Robbins previously served as executive vice president of the Arkansas chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America.

— Michael Levi is joining TIAA, leaving his role as senior adviser to ClearView Energy Partners LLC. Levi previously was a special assistant to Obama for energy and economic policy on the National Economic Council.

QUICK HITS

- Interior revokes climate change and mitigation policies. High Country News.
- Shareholders in Brazil demand Petrobras match $3 billion U.S. settlement. Reuters.
- Zinke's World View. Outdoor Life.
- Norway oil: Environmentalists lose Arctic exploration case. BBC.

HAPPENING TODAY

crickets

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2018/01/zinkes-drilling-plan-lands-with-a-thud-065911>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

White House: Goal of oil drilling expansion 'isn't to cross Gov. Scott' Back

By Cristiano Lima | 01/04/2018 03:37 PM EDT

The Trump administration's newly unveiled plan to allow oil and gas drilling in federal waters including Florida wasn't intended to alienate Republican Gov. Rick Scott, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Thursday, though his opposition didn't appear set to derail it.

The Interior Department announced a new five-year plan Thursday, as first reported by POLITICO, that could open up waters in the Arctic, Atlantic and Pacific oceans, as well as the eastern Gulf of Mexico, to drilling. The move, which would roll back policies implemented by past administrations to protect the regions, quickly encountered pushback from Florida officials.

Scott, a supporter of President Donald Trump, criticized the measure and requested a meeting with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to request that Florida be removed from consideration for the drilling expansion.

"My top priority is to ensure that Florida's natural resources are protected," Scott said in a statement.

Sanders said at Thursday's press briefing that the relationship between the White House and the Florida governor remains strong.

"Our goal certainly isn't to cross Gov. Scott," she said. "Just because we may differ on issues from time to time doesn't mean that we can't have an incredibly good and strong relationship."

Scott is widely expected to run for Senate in Florida and challenge Sen. Bill Nelson, a Democrat who has already vowed to fight drilling in the state's coastal waters. Trump has repeatedly urged Scott to run since he became president.

During a conference call Thursday, Zinke touted the decision to expand drilling as a victory for the U.S. energy sector.

"This is the beginning of an opening up," Zinke said. "We will listen to all the communities of stakeholders. The states will have a voice."

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke funneled millions to questionable PACs Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Nick Juliano | 10/24/2017 05:04 AM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has directed millions of dollars in political contributions since 2014 to a network of Washington operatives that prominent conservatives have accused of profiting by misleading donors.

Beneficiaries of Zinke's largesse include groups linked to Washington-area political operative Scott B. Mackenzie, organizer of a Virgin Islands GOP political action committee that hosted the secretary at a St. Croix fundraiser in March. Before that, when Zinke was a Republican congressman from Montana, his political operation steered significant portions of its spending to a handful of Washington, D.C.-area consulting firms that also have had ties to Mackenzie and his associates.

Zinke has continued this relationship even as other Republicans have recoiled from dealing with Mackenzie, whose critics say he operates "scam PACs" that raise small-dollar donations from conservative voters but then spend the bulk of the money on consultants and overhead. The critics include former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who filed a suit accusing Mackenzie and other defendants of running a "national fundraising scam" after they gave his 2013 campaign for governor less than a half percent of the money they had raised in his name.

Similarly, Zinke's own leadership PAC also relied heavily on small donors while spending heavily on consultants, in a departure from how most members of Congress operate those kinds of groups.

The details about Zinke's fundraising and spending practices have not been previously reported, nor has his years-long relationship with Mackenzie's Virgin Islands Republican Party, a group that some Republicans in the Caribbean island chain have accused of misrepresenting itself to donors. POLITICO's analysis of Federal Election Commission filings, plus interviews with campaign finance lawyers and people familiar with the Virgin Islands group's fundraising, offer a deeper picture of the political activism of the retired Navy SEAL who serves in President Donald Trump's Cabinet.

None of the records indicate that Zinke violated the law or received any direct compensation from his association with Mackenzie, the Virgin Islands PAC or its consultants. But one campaign finance expert said the information shows that Zinke was not behaving like a typical politician.

"To say the least, this is highly unusual," said Karl Sandstrom, a former Democratic FEC commissioner who now works at the law firm Perkins Coie.

An Interior Department spokeswoman declined to comment on the assistance Zinke has offered to the Virgin Islands group or his use of political consultants. Mackenzie declined to be interviewed, and officials from the Virgin Islands organization — also known as VIGOP — did not respond to requests for comment.

Zinke is separately facing investigations by Interior's internal watchdog and the independent Office of Special Counsel over his habit of mixing politics and official business.

Legal limits on Zinke's partisan activities have tightened now that he's Interior secretary, and he has cut ties with his PACs since being sworn in. Still, he has kept up appearances at fundraisers and other political events — averaging more than one per month — a pace that is unusual for a Cabinet member. Those include his appearance at the March fundraiser in the Virgin Islands, which occurred during a taxpayer-funded trip less than a month after he became secretary.

Complaints among Republicans about "scam PACS" have been on the rise for years, focusing on groups that target conservative voters as a source for donations. Those complaints have repeatedly focused on Mackenzie, the founder of a number of GOP-leaning PACs that have used slogans such as "Stop Hillary Clinton" to raise money from conservatives — then appeared to do little actual politicking.

Such groups make use of what past FEC leaders have described as a loophole in campaign finance law. The commission declined to take action against one of Mackenzie's Virginia-based PACs, the Conservative StrikeForce, after former Rep. Allen West (R-Fla.) complained in 2012 that it had been "fraudulent" in raising money from his supporters while falsely implying it would aid his reelection campaign. While the PAC's actions were "troubling," the commission's attorneys wrote, they didn't violate any laws or rules that the FEC has the power to enforce.

Cuccinelli made similar criticisms in his 2014 lawsuit, which accused Mackenzie, Conservative StrikeForce and other defendants of using the bulk of the money they had raised in his name to "enrich themselves." The case was eventually settled, with Conservative StrikeForce agreeing to pay Cuccinelli's campaign $85,000 and turn over its donor lists.

Conservative commentator Erick Erickson warned campaigns as far back as 2010 that he might not endorse any Republican candidate who used one Mackenzie-linked consulting firm, then known as Base Connect and now called ForthRight Strategy. Montana Democrats accused Zinke of facilitating a "political Ponzi scheme" with his connections to Mackenzie-linked firms during his 2014 congressional campaign, though the charges apparently gained little traction.

More recently, Rep. Will Hurd (R-Texas) — who was angered last year when the Virgin Islands GOP used his photo without his permission on fundraising solicitations — said in a statement to POLITICO that the Virgin Islands group and ForthRight "are preying on seniors in a disgusting attempt to enrich themselves."

Adav Noti, a former FEC associate general counsel who now works for the nonprofit watchdog Campaign Legal Center, said in an interview that he had dealt with the Virgin Islands group and Mackenzie as an FEC official, and that in his opinion, "They are a scam PAC."

"Scott Mackenzie has a number of scam PACs," Noti said. "He was probably the first, or one of the first, with the idea of bilking people out of money through PACs. People are being defrauded, and that needs to stop."

The FEC is scheduled to decide Thursday whether to fine Mackenzie for less-serious discrepancies in campaign filings by two other PACs of which he's the treasurer, Freedom's Defense Fund and the Conservative Majority Fund.

None of the criticism has seemed to deter Zinke, who used part of a government-paid trip to the Virgin Islands in March to attend a VIGOP fundraiser, where — as POLITICO reported in early October — an invitation listed tickets costing as much as $5,000 a couple, and Zinke's schedule indicated that high-dollar donors had a chance to take photos with him. It was at least the third VIGOP event Zinke had attended there since 2015.

VIGOP, which the FEC classifies as a "non-party" PAC, directed more than a third of its spending during the 2016 election cycle to a handful of Washington-area consulting firms, including ForthRight and at least three other companies that share its address on 15th Street

Northwest, according to campaign filings and other documents. Those firms also received more than $3.2 million during the same period from Zinke's congressional campaign, leadership PAC and a super PAC he founded before running for Congress, federal campaign records show.

Between the 2014 and 2016 elections, Base Connect had renamed itself ForthRight Strategy after a former executive pleaded guilty to child pornography charges. A number of the firm's clients left, but Zinke's campaign and his newly formed leadership PAC not only stayed with the firm but also spent substantially more on it in the next election.

Zinke also publicly endorsed ForthRight's performance in his 2014 congressional race, offering a testimonial that was displayed on the firm's website until this month, when the watchdog group Campaign for Accountability filed an ethics complaint.

"Your results and personal commitment to Team Zinke were bar none!" the company quoted Zinke as saying on its website. "I greatly value the professional as well as the personal relationship we have developed over many years."

This praise came even though Zinke's campaign appears to have received less than it spent from its relationship with the firm.

ForthRight says it raised $1.9 million for Zinke's 2014 race by sending out 1.6 million pieces of mail, attracting nearly 44,000 new donors whose average contribution was $44. About $550,000 of that haul went to Zinke's campaign for "voter mail, radio ads, TV ads, get-out-the-vote activities and lawn signs," according to the firm's website. But that was less than the $608,000 that Zinke's campaign spent on postage and direct mail from Century Data Mailing Service, a firm located at the same 15th Street address as ForthRight, according to FEC records.

In the run-up to last year's election, Zinke's campaign and his leadership PAC, known as SEAL PAC, spent about $3 million combined on ForthRight Strategy, Direct Support Services and Legacy Lists — all of which operate out of the same office and list ForthRight CEO Kimberly Bellissimo among their executives. (Bellissimo did not respond to POLITICO's requests for comment.)

Special Operations for America, a super PAC that Zinke founded in 2012 before running for office, also paid firms at that address a total of about $1.8 million during the 2014 and 2016 campaign cycles.

Mackenzie is not listed on ForthRight's website or business filings but was long associated with the firm under its previous names, Base Connect and BMW Direct, both of which listed him as a staff member as far back as 2007.

Besides sharing an affinity for the same consultants as Mackenzie's VIGOP, Zinke's SEAL PAC has also followed a similar fundraising model: It raised two-thirds of its money from small donors in 2016, then steered only 4 percent of its spending to other campaigns, with almost all the rest going to operating expenses and overhead.

Typically, members of Congress use their leadership PACs to cover expenses that cannot be funded from their campaign accounts and to contribute to fellow politicians, using donations of up to $5,000 from lobbyists and other PACs. But SEAL PAC relied on donations of less than $200 for about two-thirds of the $3 million it collected during the 2016 cycle, according to a review of the donations. The group then spent more than $2.6 million on overhead and gave just $118,000 to other congressional campaign committees.

Relying heavily on small-dollar donations is one hallmark of the "scam PAC" play, said Brett Kappel, a partner at the law firm Akerman LLP who specializes in campaign finance, lobbying and government ethics.

"Unfortunately, they generally target the most vulnerable segment of the population with the least disposable income — retired people living on fixed incomes," said Kappel, who declined to discuss specific cases. "Frequently, these are elderly conservative voters who are upset with the direction of the country."

Lorraine Hutchinson, of Butler, Pennsylvania, told POLITICO that these elderly voters included her mother, who she noticed was repeatedly contributing to SEAL PAC and other organizations, though she didn't have the disposable income to spare. Hutchinson said Zinke's PAC was one of the slowest to cease soliciting money when she asked them to stop. At one point, Hutchinson resorted to posting a plea on SEAL PAC's Facebook page.

"It took a great deal of time and effort but I managed to get most of them to stop. The Seal PAC was one of the most persistent," Hutchinson told POLITICO in a Facebook message last week. "I am convinced that these groups knowingly take advantage of the vulnerable elderly and this is a widespread problem without any easy solutions."

Erickson told POLITICO in 2015 that groups that raise political donations without doing much actual politicking are "completely a drain" on the conservative movement, saying they threatened to sap the donors' enthusiasm while achieving no concrete results.

But Bellissimo, the ForthRight CEO, defended direct-mail fundraising in a 2014 post for The Daily Caller.

Donors who send checks in response to mail solicitations "are some of the most patriotic, conservative, generous, and sophisticated people on the planet. ... They are also 'movement' people," Bellissimo wrote. "They are willing to sacrifice their dollars on a principled conservative even when they know that candidate is an underdog."

Mackenzie has similarly defended his high operating costs, telling the FEC in response to West's complaint that "fundraising is expensive and getting more so every year."

Bellissimo's firm has played a crucial role in partnering with Mackenzie's Virgin Islands PAC: Several months before Mackenzie filed the VIGOP's initial paperwork with the FEC in December 2013, Virgin Islands Republican Party Chairman John Canegata signed a contract with Base Connect Vice President Timothy Webster making the firm the exclusive fundraiser for the PAC, according to a copy of the confidential document reviewed by POLITICO.

Some Republicans in the Virgin Islands objected to the use of their name in fundraising mailers urging voters to "Stop Hillary Clinton," and Canegata's involvement with Mackenzie has exacerbated divisions within the local party's governing body.

The anti-Clinton pieces, "at best, solicit donations under false pretenses," four members of the Virgin Islands Republican Territorial Committee wrote in a February 2015 internal report, a copy of which was obtained by POLITICO. The members reported that "not a single penny of the funds received through these solicitations have been used for any purpose identifiable to any effort to oppose the election of Hillary Clinton as president."

Bellissimo introduced Zinke to VIGOP in 2015, his first year in Congress, a source familiar with VIGOP's operations told POLITICO. Zinke, his wife, Lola, and Bellissimo flew to St. Thomas to attend a VIGOP event in November of that year. Photos of the VIGOP members posted on Facebook show Zinke and Bellissimo mingling at the Caribbean venue alongside Canegata and Saul Anuzis, a Michigan-based GOP operative who helped raise money for VIGOP. Neither Anuzis nor Canegata responded to requests for comment.

In February 2016, Bellissimo posted a photo of Zinke speaking at the Hay-Adams hotel across from the White House and bragged that she had "the privilege of playing staffer for Congressman Zinke this afternoon." When a friend commented on the Facebook post, saying the then-House freshman should run for president, she replied: "Maybe someday.... Will you help me campaign for him?"

Zinke returned for another VIGOP event at the Ritz-Carlton in St. Thomas less than two weeks after the 2016 election, according to social media posts. Then came his appearance at the VIGOP fundraiser this past March — this time as a member of Trump's Cabinet.

To view online click here.

Back

East Coast power system weathering 'snow bomb' Back

By Darius Dixon | 01/04/2018 06:55 PM EDT

The power system along the East Coast has so far survived a brutal winter storm pummeling the region with snow and frigid temperatures, a testament to the effectiveness of measures put in place after the harsh winter four years ago, according to grid operators.

That 2014 storm — dubbed the "polar vortex" — has been regularly cited by Energy Secretary Rick Perry as a reason to implement "grid resiliency pricing" that would support power plants that maintain 90 days of fuel on site, a requirement that could only be met by coal-fired and nuclear generators. Perry has given FERC until Jan. 10 to take action on his proposed rule.

Grid operators in New York, New England, and PJM, which spans from the Midwest to New Jersey and Virginia, largely saw power demand on Thursday closely track their forecasts, or fall below them, and peak power usage well below their available power electricity generating capacity.

"After the polar vortex, the ISOs did a good job in hardening their systems coming out of that experience and how close they came to having real problems," said Steven Winberg, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for fossil energy. "They went back and did a post-mortem on it to harden their systems ... and I think that some of that work is exhibiting itself this week."

During major weather events that threaten to disrupt the energy supply, DOE helps facilitate communication between the private sector, states and other federal agencies, like the Department of Homeland Security.

DOE has had several calls this winter with committees representing power companies, and oil and natural gas firms, to assess how the federal government can help out, said Bruce Walker, DOE's top official on electricity issues.

"But, at this point we're not continuing to have calls because they've reported [that] they don't have any unmet needs or any major concerns," he said.

The agency is monitoring outages and fuel issues across the territories of five regional grids and coordinating on a state-level between Maine and Virginia, Walker said.

In New England, which bore the brunt of the "snow bomb" storm, even the shutdown of a nuclear power plant after a power line outage Thursday afternoon didn't trigger a major supply problem.

"There are no immediate reliability issues to the local area" after the shutdown of the 688-megawatt capacity Pilgrim plant, a spokeswoman at ISO-New England told Reuters.

Still, there are some point of stress on the system.

Traditionally, transmission-constrained areas like New York City and most of New England are seeing their wholesale power prices spike as natural gas prices rise or the fuel is diverted to heating needs.

In New England, where natural gas pipeline infrastructure has long limited the flow of gas into the region, Winberg said that he's closely tracking the deliveries of fuel oil there.

In a phone interview, he cited reports of oil shortages in the Northeast "but nothing yet that constitutes an inability to get the oil." Those deliveries, which come in by ship and go to plants that typically only run during the highest-demand periods, get help in coordinating their movements by the U.S. Coast Guard if any hiccups occur in that process.

Meanwhile, one challenge PJM will be working on over the next several days is shipping cheaper power from its western regions across its vast territory to coastal areas where prices are at times more than three times as high.

"The focus will be on increased transfers of power from the western portion of PJM to the east. Higher power flows in times of high demand require careful monitoring," PJM spokesman Ray Dotter said in an email.

The cold snap has also triggered a seasonal reshuffling of the electric system's fuel mix.

In PJM, coal has seen its share of the region's generation climb by a third from a month ago, hitting about 40 percent this past week, according to the grid operator's public data. And in New England, oil has become the dominant power source when demand is high, blowing past coal, nuclear and gas — a surge that's typical in the winter months. But the region still tends to have more than 1,300 MW in surplus power available during peak times.

The timing of the storm — less than a week before regulators at FERC decide how to address Perry's demand to bolster coal-fired and nuclear power plants — has advocates for various fuel sources and renewable energy proponents touting their value to the overall electric system. But asked if the latest chill help make the case for the principles in Perry's proposal, Walker demurred.

"This is a good demonstration as to what the value of a diverse portfolio is of fuel mixes, and what that means from a reliability and resiliency standpoint," he said.

While power demand has closely tracked with daily predictions, PJM did need to boost its estimates for Thursday's peak demand from forecasts made just the day before. On Wednesday, regional grid operators didn't expect to crack 134,000 megawatts anytime in the next week — below the 2014 peak of nearly 141,900 MW. But by Thursday morning, Thursday's peak was slated to hit more than 135,000 MW.

"The load forecast is updated constantly through the day," Dotter said in the email, noting that it's typical to see fluctuations in power predictions during challenging weather events.

"Changes can be driven by changes in the weather forecast (higher or lower temperatures, for example) and changes in human behavior (people's use of electricity). One particular factor in the increase was wind chills... the increase in the wind chill factor, which increases the need for heating."

One thing DOE plans to do once the brutally cold weather passes is to look at what facilities on the grid were critical to the system.

"Once we get through this cold snap, something that we will be taking a look at is the potential retirements of generation ... and see if it creates potential induced risk the next time one of these cold snaps comes through," Winberg said.

To view online click here.

Back

POLITICO New York: NYISO: No reliability issues because of cold, downstate generators switching to oil Back

By Marie J. French | 01/04/2018 05:46 PM EDT

ALBANY — Executives at the state's independent grid operator say New York's electric system is fully prepared for the two coldest days of a prolonged cold snap, although many electric generators are switching to oil as residents across the Northeast crank up the heat and drive natural gas prices higher.

Most generators that can operate on dual fuel, which is roughly 50 percent of the state's total generating capacity, have switched to oil, according to the New York Independent System Operator. Those that have switched are primarily in the downstate region.

The grid operator is confident that generators have sufficient fuel supplies to meet projected peak demand on Friday and Saturday, which are likely to be the two coldest days of the year. NYISO implemented additional procedures to do surveys of the amount of fuels generators have available and to work with generators to ensure they have sufficient on-site storage or reliable plans to replenish their supply.

"This is something that we've enhanced significantly since the polar vortex" in 2013-2014, said Rich Dewey, executive vice president at NYISO.

Electric generators are being driven to switch to oil, which has higher emissions, because of increased natural gas prices. The generators are not at risk of running into emissions limits under their state permits as a result of that switch, according to NYISO.

With the cold weather, natural gas utilities in New York are seeing high demand from residential customers and many have told interruptible customers — usually large commercial users the utility has contracted with that have the capability to switch fuels — that they must switch to oil or propane.

Con Edison issued a switch notice for its about 600 interruptible customers in the New York City area starting Dec. 27 and expects that to continue through this weekend, spokesman Mike Clendenin said.

National Grid has asked interruptible customers to switch as of Friday, spokesman Nate Stone said.

That will "take some of the strain off our system," he said. "It helps in times like this when there's a lot of demand."

National Fuel, which serves about 500,000 customers in western New York, briefly asked customers in Erie, Niagara, Chautauqua, Cattaraugus and Allegany counties to turn down their thermostats by 5 degrees and large commercial customers to voluntarily reduce their natural gas usage. The utility experienced a deliverability issue after a problem at a transmission facility in Pennsylvania.

Spokeswoman Karen Merkel said no customers have lost service amid the cold weather but noted that field crews would face challenging conditions that they're being prepared for.

"Nearly 70 percent of the New York market demand will be met by gas that is currently in our area in storage," she said in a statement.

Advocates for more natural gas infrastructure have pointed to high natural gas prices during the cold snap as one reason the state should approve additional transmission projects. Gov. Andrew Cuomo's administration has been criticized for blocking some natural gas pipelines by the state's power generators and business groups, while environmentalists have criticized the governor for allowing other small projects to move forward.

"Supply concerns and the lack of needed infrastructure approvals are straining the system," said the New Yorkers for Affordable Energy coalition, which includes business and labor groups as well as pipeline and other gas infrastructure companies. "As the state continues its push toward a greener future, we remind our leaders that investing in natural gas development is among the best ways to ensure our environment is protected and our state's residents and businesses have the energy they need at a price they can afford."

This article first appeared on POLITICO New York on Jan. 4, 2018.

To view online click here.

Back

Rep. Harper won't seek reelection Back

By Heather Caygle | 01/04/2018 02:22 PM EDT

Rep. Gregg Harper, chairman of the House Administration Committee, won't run for reelection, he announced Thursday.

Harper, 61, has been in Congress since 2009 representing Jackson, Mississippi, and the surrounding area. In a statement, the five-term congressman said he has been thinking about when he would step down for nearly two years and made the final decision over the holiday break.

"After spending time over Christmas and New Year's with my family, we made the very difficult decision to say that 10 years will be long enough," Harper said.

"I never intended for this to be a career, and it will soon be time for another conservative citizen legislator to represent us. I will work hard over the final 12 months of my term this year, but I will not seek re-election for a sixth term."

Harper had been floated as a potential replacement for Sen. Thad Cochran (R-Miss.), amid speculation that he will soon retire. Harper didn't say what he plans to do after he leaves Capitol Hill beyond spending more time in Mississippi with his family and working "on policy issues that matter."

Harper overwhelmingly won his reelection in 2016 and the district is heavily favored toward Republicans.

Harper has led the House Administration Committee since January 2017, a panel that has been thrust into the spotlight as Congress grapples with sexual harassment scandals that have rocked the institution in recent months.

Harper's committee is the primary House panel tasked with overseeing sexual harassment and reporting policies in the lower chamber, which most lawmakers agree are in dire need of updating since they were first enacted in the mid-1990s.

The committee is expected to focus heavily in the coming months on advancing legislation that would make the reporting process more friendly to victims and less secretive.

Pennsylvania Rep. Bob Brady, the top Democrat on the House Administration Committee, had nothing but praise for Harper in a statement, calling him a "true gentleman."

"He has sought bipartisanship where it has been possible, he has managed the House in a truly professional manner and he has always focused on the people of Mississippi's Third District," Brady said. "His polite, but results focused, approach has made this institution a better place."

Harper's impending exit makes him the seventh Republican committee chairman to announce plans to retire or leave Congress early. House Transportation Chairman Bill Shuster (R-Pa.) announced his retirement earlier this week.

House Financial Services Chairman Jeb Hensarling and House Science Chairman Lamar Smith, both from Texas, and House Judiciary Chairman Bob Goodlatte from Virginia will also step down after this term.

Rep. Diane Black announced in late December she was stepping down as House Budget chair to focus on her run for governor of Tennessee. And former Rep. Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah), then chairman of the House Oversight Committee, abruptly retired last summer.

To view online click here.

Back

Two Dozen Members of Congress Can't Wait to Leave D.C. Here's Why. Back

By Edward-Isaac Dove and Ben Baker | 01/04/2018 05:04 AM EDT

A few months ago, Charlie Dent was taking a break from his usual work for Pennsylvania's 15th District—home of Hershey, and of a Crayola factory, and many of the Keystone State constituents who voted for Donald Trump—and talking to a politician from India, a country whose rough-and-tumble politics includes literal fistfights in a legislature that makes the U.S. Congress look downright tame.

"Your system of government is brilliant," the Indian lawmaker told Dent, laughing at the 24-7 circus American politics have become. "It would work far better [in India] than it works in your own country."

Dent, a moderate Republican who's become the go-to source for reporters looking for searing criticism of the GOP in the Trump era, is one of a couple dozen members of Congress who have announced their retirements last year (not counting the ones who have gone down in sexual harassment scandals), with more likely coming amid an expected Democratic wave in the 2018 midterm elections. People retire every cycle. But this year's group is a bumper crop of members wondering whether Congress is broken forever—even as they insist they love their own jobs.

The ferocity of the Gingrich Revolution, President Bill Clinton's impeachment—even the Tea Party shutdown wars of 2011 and 2013 seem like the good old days to them now. Capitol Hill is an angry, scattered mess; each party is storing up grudges to get revenge for the next time it gets the chance; and the victories are always fleeting. When pressed, the departees will confess to deep concerns that flow from Trump, the reaction to Trump, and the politics that created and elected Trump.

"I've never experienced as much anger and hatred as I did in the first few months of [2017]," says Representative John Duncan, an affable ultraconservative Republican from Knoxville, Tennessee, who is retiring after 30 years in the House.

"All the incentives are wrong now," says Arizona Senator Jeff Flake, a onetime conservative star who is retiring after nearly two decades in the House and the Senate.

Several big committee chairs are leaving, too, because they're term-limited by the GOP's own rules, and don't want to think about slinking back into the rank and file. They gush about the chance to spend more time with their grandchildren. House members in swing districts, meanwhile, talk with dread about having to defend their seats next year.

Republican Representative Frank LoBiondo of New Jersey, who came in with the Gingrich Revolution in 1994 and has been a target for House Democrats in pretty much every cycle since, decided it was worth hanging on to the chairmanship of the Aviation subcommittee, and to get on the Intelligence Committee. No longer. He's not going to miss all the time in the car driving to barbecue after barbecue all through South Jersey on weekends, but his eyes sparkle when he talks about the 20 international trips he has made in the past eight years.

"If there had been different committees, I probably would have jumped off the Capitol dome a long time ago," LoBiondo says. "I don't know how some members do it."

Years of deepening tribalism and dysfunction have taken their toll, which they gripe about while mostly blaming their political opponents, or the other chamber, or the media, though they talk up their friendships across the aisle and the long-forgotten bipartisan bills they've passed.

"It's like the machinery of government is rusty and clanking along," says Representative Lamar Smith. The Texas Republican makes a special point of blaming "the Mediocrats," a conspiracy of Democratic and media elites to make his party look evil and dysfunctional.

The future of the job, they fear, is competing for who can flip out the most on YouTube videos, punctuated by fundraising calls and reading polls that show just how much Americans hate them. And most think the Trumpian era of base-playing politics is still closer to its beginning than its end.

And no one seems to have any real sense of what to do about it. Some blame reporters for sensationalizing the problems. They plead for more individual responsibility among their colleagues to lower the temperature. Fix the primary system. Don't be so divided. The Senate should get rid of the filibuster—or the Senate should build the filibuster back up again. House leadership should land harder on members who vote against their bills—or be tougher on lawmakers who were never going to vote for the bills in the first place.

"The way you solve this problem," Dent says, "is you marginalize the members who can't get to yes on these basic matters of governance." Put more bills on the floor, Dent says, and see what passes. "What I've often found here," he said, "is they talk about the need for a majority of the majority to be there on a bill until they don't."

Bob Corker, the retiring senator from Tennessee, stresses that he is leaving for his own reasons, and despite his public fights with Trump, says he was very comfortable with his chances for reelection. He cherishes his chairmanship of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and insists the Senate was broken years before Trump. "There's going to be additional glass-breaking," he says. And until we have "a president committed to wanting strong bipartisan legislation," very little will change.

Dent uses an optimistic line I heard from many of his fellow retiring members: "The pendulum will swing back."

How? Why? No one could answer that question, beyond faith. "It ebbs and flows," says Texas Democratic Representative Gene Green. Most acknowledged it looked more like a downward spiral.

I asked Flake if he thinks all the people who are rushing to run for Congress are nuts. He laughed.

"One of the problems with the internet is it creates a sense on the part of some people that it's all just a referendum." —Bob Goodlatte (R-Va.)

"It is a lot easier to enjoy your job when you're a committee chairman and a member of the majority." —Lamar Smith (R-Texas)

"I'll miss least the people who have no discernible political principles. I'll miss most the people who do." —Jeb Hensarling (R-Texas)

"It seems that the Senate floor is rarely used for real debate, or even much speechifying, except for retirements." —Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.)

"The Congress I came to was a very bipartisan, get-along place. People knew each other and tried to work together." —Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (R-Fla.)

"The best advice I can give to any current or future member: Say what you believe after digging into the facts and consulting broadly." —Sander Levin (D-Mich.)

"Bipartisan legislation doesn't make the news because we're not fussing and feuding and fighting." —Ted Poe (R-Texas)

"What I will miss least is the current polarization and common refusal to listen to or respect others' ideas. It is possible to find common ground." —Sam Johnson (R-Texas)

"The rhetoric trickles down. It's almost as though some of my Republican colleagues are auditioning for Fox News—what they say so much parrots what you hear." —Luis Gutiérrez (D-Ill.)

"You win an election. At 8:05, the attacks start again." —Frank LoBiondo (R-N.J.)

"If I was going to stay here, I wouldn't want to stay here being defeated every day on the floor of the House." —Gene Green (D-Texas)

"I wasn't willing to give my voting card to leadership, and I wasn't making fundraising calls. ... It never did bother me that there was never going to be a portrait of me up in the Capitol." —John Duncan (R-Tenn.)

"High praise these days: I go home to the grocery store, and they say, 'Thank you for being sane.'" —Charlie Dent (R-Pa.)

To view online click here.

Back

Two Dozen Members of Congress Can't Wait to Leave D.C. Here's Why. Back

By Edward-Isaac Dove and Ben Baker | 01/04/2018 05:04 AM EDT

A few months ago, Charlie Dent was taking a break from his usual work for Pennsylvania's 15th District—home of Hershey, and of a Crayola factory, and many of the Keystone State constituents who voted for Donald Trump—and talking to a politician from India, a country whose rough-and-tumble politics includes literal fistfights in a legislature that makes the U.S. Congress look downright tame.

"Your system of government is brilliant," the Indian lawmaker told Dent, laughing at the 24-7 circus American politics have become. "It would work far better [in India] than it works in your own country."

Dent, a moderate Republican who's become the go-to source for reporters looking for searing criticism of the GOP in the Trump era, is one of a couple dozen members of Congress who have announced their retirements last year (not counting the ones who have gone down in sexual harassment scandals), with more likely coming amid an expected Democratic wave in the 2018 midterm elections. People retire every cycle. But this year's group is a bumper crop of members wondering whether Congress is broken forever—even as they insist they love their own jobs.

The ferocity of the Gingrich Revolution, President Bill Clinton's impeachment—even the Tea Party shutdown wars of 2011 and 2013 seem like the good old days to them now. Capitol Hill is an angry, scattered mess; each party is storing up grudges to get revenge for the next time it gets the chance; and the victories are always fleeting. When pressed, the departees will confess to deep concerns that flow from Trump, the reaction to Trump, and the politics that created and elected Trump.

"I've never experienced as much anger and hatred as I did in the first few months of [2017]," says Representative John Duncan, an affable ultraconservative Republican from Knoxville, Tennessee, who is retiring after 30 years in the House.

"All the incentives are wrong now," says Arizona Senator Jeff Flake, a onetime conservative star who is retiring after nearly two decades in the House and the Senate.

Several big committee chairs are leaving, too, because they're term-limited by the GOP's own rules, and don't want to think about slinking back into the rank and file. They gush about the chance to spend more time with their grandchildren. House members in swing districts, meanwhile, talk with dread about having to defend their seats next year.

Republican Representative Frank LoBiondo of New Jersey, who came in with the Gingrich Revolution in 1994 and has been a target for House Democrats in pretty much every cycle since, decided it was worth hanging on to the chairmanship of the Aviation subcommittee, and to get on the Intelligence Committee. No longer. He's not going to miss all the time in the car driving to barbecue after barbecue all through South Jersey on weekends, but his eyes sparkle when he talks about the 20 international trips he has made in the past eight years.

"If there had been different committees, I probably would have jumped off the Capitol dome a long time ago," LoBiondo says. "I don't know how some members do it."

Years of deepening tribalism and dysfunction have taken their toll, which they gripe about while mostly blaming their political opponents, or the other chamber, or the media, though they talk up their friendships across the aisle and the long-forgotten bipartisan bills they've passed.

"It's like the machinery of government is rusty and clanking along," says Representative Lamar Smith. The Texas Republican makes a special point of blaming "the Mediocrats," a conspiracy of Democratic and media elites to make his party look evil and dysfunctional.

The future of the job, they fear, is competing for who can flip out the most on YouTube videos, punctuated by fundraising calls and reading polls that show just how much Americans hate them. And most think the Trumpian era of base-playing politics is still closer to its beginning than its end.

And no one seems to have any real sense of what to do about it. Some blame reporters for sensationalizing the problems. They plead for more individual responsibility among their colleagues to lower the temperature. Fix the primary system. Don't be so divided. The Senate should get rid of the filibuster—or the Senate should build the filibuster back up again. House leadership should land harder on members who vote against their bills—or be tougher on lawmakers who were never going to vote for the bills in the first place.

"The way you solve this problem," Dent says, "is you marginalize the members who can't get to yes on these basic matters of governance." Put more bills on the floor, Dent says, and see what passes. "What I've often found here," he said, "is they talk about the need for a majority of the majority to be there on a bill until they don't."

Bob Corker, the retiring senator from Tennessee, stresses that he is leaving for his own reasons, and despite his public fights with Trump, says he was very comfortable with his chances for reelection. He cherishes his chairmanship of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and insists the Senate was broken years before Trump. "There's going to be additional glass-breaking," he says. And until we have "a president committed to wanting strong bipartisan legislation," very little will change.

Dent uses an optimistic line I heard from many of his fellow retiring members: "The pendulum will swing back."

How? Why? No one could answer that question, beyond faith. "It ebbs and flows," says Texas Democratic Representative Gene Green. Most acknowledged it looked more like a downward spiral.

I asked Flake if he thinks all the people who are rushing to run for Congress are nuts. He laughed.

"One of the problems with the internet is it creates a sense on the part of some people that it's all just a referendum." —Bob Goodlatte (R-Va.)

"It is a lot easier to enjoy your job when you're a committee chairman and a member of the majority." —Lamar Smith (R-Texas)

"I'll miss least the people who have no discernible political principles. I'll miss most the people who do." —Jeb Hensarling (R-Texas)

"It seems that the Senate floor is rarely used for real debate, or even much speechifying, except for retirements." —Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.)

"The Congress I came to was a very bipartisan, get-along place. People knew each other and tried to work together." —Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (R-Fla.)

"The best advice I can give to any current or future member: Say what you believe after digging into the facts and consulting broadly." —Sander Levin (D-Mich.)

"Bipartisan legislation doesn't make the news because we're not fussing and feuding and fighting." —Ted Poe (R-Texas)

"What I will miss least is the current polarization and common refusal to listen to or respect others' ideas. It is possible to find common ground." —Sam Johnson (R-Texas)

"The rhetoric trickles down. It's almost as though some of my Republican colleagues are auditioning for Fox News—what they say so much parrots what you hear." —Luis Gutiérrez (D-Ill.)

"You win an election. At 8:05, the attacks start again." —Frank LoBiondo (R-N.J.)

"If I was going to stay here, I wouldn't want to stay here being defeated every day on the floor of the House." —Gene Green (D-Texas)

"I wasn't willing to give my voting card to leadership, and I wasn't making fundraising calls. ... It never did bother me that there was never going to be a portrait of me up in the Capitol." —John Duncan (R-Tenn.)

"High praise these days: I go home to the grocery store, and they say, 'Thank you for being sane.'" —Charlie Dent (R-Pa.)

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: Twitter
To: Ragnar Zinke
Subject: Natasha Geiling Tweeted: EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt has spent $913,000 on private flights, 24/7 security, and that soundproof booth
Date: Thursday, September 28, 2017 8:34:54 PM

Your Highlights

Natasha Geiling
@ngeiling

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt has spent $913,000 on private flights, 24/7 security, and that soundproof booth

Here's All The Expensive Nonsense Trump's EPA Chief Is Wasting Your Taxes On

That swamp is looking mighty cushy.

huffingtonpost.com

160

1.9K

1.6K

Eliana Johnson
@elianayjohnson

Here's the bipartisan nightmare scenario for 2018: GOP picks up a few seats...with candidates like Roy Moore -

Moore's win conjures 2018 nightmare — for both parties

Republicans might pad their majority — but with troublemakers who owe Mitch McConnell nothing.

politico.com

100

220

430

Dan Diamond

 @ddiamond

SCOOP w @rachanadixit: Price's travel on charter jets, government planes has topped $1 million since May.

Price took military jets to Europe, Asia for over $500K

Accompanied by his wife, the HHS secretary journeyed to Geneva, Berlin, Beijing, Tokyo and ot... more
politico.com

 330

 3.1K

 2.5K

 Ed O'Keefe
@edatpost

Tasty scoop of news here... twitter.com/carrasquillo/s...

 13

 45

 79

 Dan Pfeiffer
@danpfeiffer

This Gary Cohn interview is an epic political and messaging disaster.

Trump adviser 'can't guarantee' taxes won't go up for middle class

Gary Cohn said today that he can't guarantee that taxes won't go up for some middle-class fam... more abcnews.go.com

 240

 2.9K

 4.6K

 Peter Baker
@peterbakernyt

Trump likes to promise that policy achievements will happen "soon" or "very soon." But 75% of the time they do not.

'Soon,' 'Very Soon,' 'Eventually': A Detailed List of Things Trump Said Would Happen

An account of presidential predictions, from Obamacare to a border wall.

nytimes.com

See more on Twitter

Settings | Help | Unsubscribe

We sent this email to @DogDayInterior Twitter, Inc. 1355 Market Street, Suite 900
San Francisco, CA 94103

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: National Thanksgiving Turkey Pardoning Ceremony
Date: Thursday, November 16, 2017 4:18:01 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
November 16, 2017

National Thanksgiving Turkey Pardoning Ceremony

On Tuesday, November 21st, President Donald J. Trump will pardon the National Thanksgiving Turkey in a ceremony in the Rose Garden. This year, the President will celebrate the 70th anniversary of the National Thanksgiving Turkey presentation, as he reflects on our Nation's rich Thanksgiving traditions and wishes American families a safe and healthy holiday.

After the pardoning, the turkeys will join last year's turkeys at Virginia Tech's "Gobblers Rest" exhibit, where students and veterinarians care for the turkeys, and the public can visit and learn about the university's teaching, research, and outreach programs in animal and poultry sciences and veterinary medicine.

Both birds were raised in Western Minnesota under the supervision of National Turkey Federation Chairman Carl Wittenburg and his wife Sharlene, along with five young women from the Douglas County 4-H chapter.

The National Turkey Federation will also bring two turkeys from Jaindl's Turkey Farm of Orefield, Pennsylvania, for the First Family to donate. The First Family will donate the turkeys to Martha's Table in Washington, D.C.

###

Unsubscribe

From: Hinson, Alex
Subject: News Alert: Senate advances Bernhardt for Deputy
Date: Thursday, July 20, 2017 5:37:59 PM

E&E News: Senate advances Bernhardt for deputy

July 20, 2017

The Senate this afternoon advanced the nomination of David Bernhardt for Interior Department deputy secretary, teeing up the final confirmation vote expected Monday.

Senators voted 56-39 to invoke cloture on the nomination. All Republicans present, six Democrats and one independent voted in favor.

Democrats Martin Heinrich of New Mexico, Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota, Joe Manchin of West Virginia, Joe Donnelly of Indiana, Brian Schatz of Hawaii and Michael Bennet of Colorado voted with Republicans, as did independent Angus King of Maine.

Senators not voting were: Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), Jerry Moran (R-Kan.), Ben Sasse (R-Neb.) and Debbie Stabenow (D-Mich.). Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), recovering from surgery and recently diagnosed with brain cancer, was absent.

Bernhardt's nomination has attracted strong support because of his extensive public policy experience in the executive and legislative branches, but also robust opposition from Democrats and green groups alarmed by his ties to oil and gas lobbyists.

The Campaign for Accountability today filed a complaint with the U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia to investigate whether Bernhardt violated the Lobbying Disclosure Act by continuing to lobby despite formally withdrawing his registration in 2016.

Emails obtained through the California Public Records Act show Bernhardt continued to advise the Westlands Water District, a California agricultural organization, after terminating his lobbying registration (Greenwire, July 18).

Bernhardt was registered as a Westlands lobbyist between June 2011 and Nov. 18, 2016, when he was a member of the Trump administration's Interior Department transition team and potential nominee. The president formally picked him in April.

Bernhardt, who had served as chairman of the natural resources department at the law firm Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck LLP, previously promised lawmakers that if confirmed, he would "not participate personally or substantially in any particular matter involving" his former clients or "specific parties in which I know the firm is a party or represents a party" for two years, unless he receives authorization to do so.

Administration aides have said they thoroughly vetted Bernhardt on ethics. They and other defenders, including Sen. Cory Gardner (R-Colo.), call him an experienced nominee.

In addition to his lobbying career, the Coloradan has worked as a Capitol Hill aide and served as an Interior official during the George W. Bush administration.

Bernhardt has taken heat over allegations of mismanagement at Interior during his tenure there, including a drug and sex scandal at the former Minerals Management Service and political interference in endangered species decisions.

'Disqualifying'

Energy and Natural Resources Committee ranking member Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.) has led the opposition to Bernhardt and spoke on the floor before today's vote.

Cantwell said that while it's true Bernhardt has "considerable" experience to do the job, the revolving-door nature of his career continues to concern her and raises a serious appearance of conflict-of-interest issues.

By putting forward Bernhardt as Interior's No. 2, President Trump is not helping to drain the swamp, "he's helping to fill it," Cantwell said.

The League of Conservation Voters also reiterated its opposition to Bernhardt today after sending a letter last month to the full Senate urging it to reject the nomination.

"Bernhardt's long list of conflicts of interest alone should be disqualifying — but given the Trump administration's incredible disregard for integrity, science and facts, it's no surprise that a top nominee would have a record of altering government science for political gain and overseeing an office plagued by scandal," said Tiernan Sittenfeld, LCV's senior vice president for government affairs.

Sittenfeld added: "We strongly urge senators to oppose Bernhardt's nomination and will continue to hold Congress and the administration accountable for putting polluter profits ahead of our clean air, clean water, public lands and families' health."

Zinke 'miserable' by lack of help

Gardner on the floor today praised Bernhardt's experience and commitment to public service, noting that other nominees considered by the Energy and Natural Resources panel have toggled between government and the private sector.

"What we see is another nominee, dedicated public servant, who gained experience in the private sector and is willing to come back to public service to give back to our great country," said Gardner, who noted that Bernhardt worked with his wife, Jaime, at Interior during the Bush administration. "Mr. Bernhardt's integrity and ability are two of his strongest qualities for his nomination."

Several stakeholders have voiced their support for Bernhardt as well, including the Colorado River District, Colorado Water Congress, Southern Ute Indian Tribe, Outdoor Recreation Industry Roundtable and Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership.

Yesterday, House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop (R-Utah) talked with reporters about the lack of confirmed appointees in place at Interior — and how it's making Secretary Ryan Zinke's life "miserable."

"There are a whole lot of problems that could be solved if Bernhardt was there now," the chairman said. "The Senate waiting as long as it has is wrong, it's simply wrong."

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior
C: 202-641-5381

From: E&E News
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: November 8 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Wednesday, November 08, 2017 1:27:17 PM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

To access please enter:

Username: (b) (6)
Password: (b) (6)

GREENWIRE — Wed., November 8, 2017

READ FULL EDITION

1. NOMINATIONS:

Farm-state senators rough up Trump's CEQ pick

President Trump's nominee to lead the White House Council on Environmental Quality faced tough questions at her Senate confirmation hearing today from farm-state Republicans upset about her past criticism of biofuels.

TOP STORIES

2. INTERIOR:

Seeking reinforcements, Zinke turns up heat on Senate

3. NATURAL RESOURCES:

Panel passes major energy development bill

4. FORESTS:

New weapon against wildfire: Cameras in the woods

CONGRESS

5. NOMINATIONS:

Committee advances NASA, NOAA, CPSC picks

6. EPA:

House Science panel may ask Pruitt to testify

7. SUPERFUND:

After FDIC stymies Kelly probe, Cummings seeks Gowdy's help

8. FLOOD INSURANCE:

Support mounts for House bill

POLITICS

9. PESTICIDES:

Former agribusiness lobbyist oversees USDA rule rollbacks

10. ADVOCACY:

Hill staffers, energy vets launch D.C. firm

11. BRISTOL BAY:

Ex-University of Alaska president tapped to promote mine

12. ENERGY POLICY:

FERC collects more comments on Perry's grid proposal

13. CAMPAIGN 2018:

Lola Zinke's candidate faces charges over hunting licenses

NATURAL RESOURCES

14. INTERIOR:

Zinke launches panel to promote international hunting

15. COAL:

Wyo. mulls bonding overhaul as Interior freezes reforms

16. WESTERN WATER:

Calif. approves $400M plan to rescue Salton Sea

17. AGRICULTURE:

Farmers must stop using strong antibiotics on animals — WHO

18. WILDLIFE:

Citizen scientists seek clues to seabird die-offs

LAW

19. COAL ASH:

2 weeks before arguments, EPA seeks to remove key issues

20. NATIONAL PARKS:

Court upholds Grand Teton elk-hunting plan

ENERGY

21. HURRICANE MARIA:

Solar industry, Clinton Foundation work to restore power

22. NUCLEAR:

Exelon plant powers down over leaky fuel rods

FEDERAL AGENCIES

23. NOAA:

4 security guards arrested on extortion charges

TRANSPORTATION

24. AUTOS:

NASA, Uber set sights on flying taxis

25. ELECTRIC VEHICLES:

Lamborghini promises self-healing supercar

AIR AND WATER

26. GREAT LAKES:

Erie algal bloom tied for 3rd worst this century — NOAA

27. OIL AND GAS:

Company tried to hide spill near school, whistleblower says

28. FLINT CRISIS:

Mayor survives recall vote

29. WATER POLLUTION:

Pet flea treatments may be polluting San Francisco Bay

STATES

30. WISCONSIN:

Bill to allow copper, gold mining heads to governor's desk

31. SOUTH CAROLINA:

Governor launches investigation of Conservation Bank

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

E&E News

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

From: Kurt Repanshek
To: Heather Swift
Subject: NRA-NPF
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 9:16:03 AM Attachments: NPT Logo Inform and educate 300.tiff

Heather,

I understand Susan LaPierre was added to the National Park Foundation Board in May by the secretary. Do you have a release on that appointment that you could send me?

Beyond that, could you outline the benefits of having the wife of the NRA president on the board? I can see where that could tap into another large sector of potential fundraisers, but isn't it also a controversial appointment in that parks are not typically associated with hunting, and the recent news about the NPS's authority in managing hunting and fishing in the parks?

Thanks,

Kurt

Kurt Repanshek
Founder and Editor
kurt@nationalparkstraveler.org
P.O. Box 980452
Park City, UT 84098

National Parks Traveler is the nation's No. 1 editorially independent website dedicated to coverage of national parks. With 1.5+ million annual visitors, Traveler has been featured in USA Today, Peter Greenberg Worldwide Radio, Los Angeles Times, San Jose Mercury News, The Charlotte Observer, aol.travel and more.

Join us on Facebook:

<https://www.facebook.com/NationalParksTraveler>

Follow us on Twitter: @parkstraveler

Track us on Instagram: national_parks_traveler

Support us on Amazon Smile

From: E&E News
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: October 5 -- E&E News PM is ready
Date: Thursday, October 05, 2017 4:26:38 PM

Read today's E&E News PM on the web

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

To access please enter:

Username: (b) (6)
Password: (b) (6)

E&E NEWS PM — Thu., October 5, 2017

READ FULL EDITION

1. SAGE GROUSE:

BLM reopens plans, cancels 10M-acre mining ban

The Interior Department continued its effort to dismantle Obama-era greater sage grouse conservation plans, announcing today it will reopen the plans to public review with the likely outcome that they will be significantly altered.

TOP STORIES

2. EPA:

Trump picks former Inhofe aide for deputy chief

3. WESTERN WATER:

Audit finds Brown's tunnel project violated state law

4. DOE:

Questions surround Perry's reported charter flight

THIS AFTERNOON'S STORIES

5. EPA:

Utility executive to lead Denver office

6. INTERIOR:

Enviros file suit seeking info for Zinke's wife

7. INTERIOR:

Bishop requests briefing on agency document leaks

8. AIR POLLUTION:

State AGs threaten lawsuit over ozone standard delay

9. EPA:

Dems call for probe of Pruitt's phone booth

10. CAMPAIGN 2018:

Blackburn enters Senate race to replace Corker

11. SCIENCE:

EPA IG to review use of citizen research

12. FEDERAL WORKFORCE:

Oversight Dems ask for hearings on downsizing

UPCOMING HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

13. CALENDAR:

Activity for October 2 - October 8, 2017

Get all of the stories in today's E&E News PM, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.eenewspm.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT E&E NEWS PM – LATE-BREAKING NEWS

E&E News PM is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. A late afternoon roundup providing coverage of all the breaking and developing policy news from Capitol Hill, around the country and around the world, E&E News PM is a must-read for the key players who need to be ahead of the next day's headlines. E&E News PM publishes daily at 4:30 p.m.

E&E News

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

From: E&E News
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: October 20 -- Greenwire is ready
Date: Friday, October 20, 2017 1:29:14 PM

Read today's Greenwire on the web

AN E&E NEWS PUBLICATION

To access please enter:

Username: (b) (6)
Password: (b) (6)

GREENWIRE — Fri., October 20, 2017

READ FULL EDITION

1. INTERIOR:

Lolita Zinke makes her mark outside the Cabinet

Meet Lolita Zinke, the woman dubbed a "real trooper" by her husband.

TOP STORIES

2. BIOFUELS:

Refiners seethe over Trump's bow to King Corn

3. WILD HORSES:

BLM advisory panel urges aggressive action to cull growing herds

4. EPA:

Agency defends enforcement as cops return from Pruitt detail

POLITICS

5. OFF TOPIC:

Ex-CEQ boss on 'highly qualified' Trump pick, climate action

6. DOE:

'I'm not going to run for public office again' — Perry

7. WATER POLICY:

Industry groups want EPA out of dredge-and-fill permitting

NATURAL RESOURCES

8. GULF OF MEXICO:

Oil spill much larger than first reported

9. OCEANS:

NOAA links climate change to shifts in food web

10. WILDLIFE:

Birds might be evolving to fit bird feeders — study

11. ENDANGERED SPECIES:

Search team snags a rare vaquita calf but has to release it

LAW

12. FOREST SERVICE:

Court upholds Idaho, Mont. wilderness plans

13. WILDFIRES:

15-year-old boy charged in Eagle Creek blaze

CLIMATE CHANGE

14. COAL:

Group takes on emissions from Colo.'s largest mine

15. ARCTIC:

Navy, Coast Guard take first step toward a new icebreaker

ENERGY

16. PEOPLE:

BP chairman to step down after 8 tumultuous years

17. NUCLEAR WASTE:

DOE will dig out tons of salt to expand N.M. dump

AIR AND WATER

18. CHEMICALS:

Plant that exploded during Harvey could face state penalty

19. SUPERFUND:

EPA's Gold King cleanup workers find lead contamination

20. WESTERN WATER:

Oroville Dam repair costs nearly double

PUBLIC HEALTH

21. SCIENCE:

Pollution is deadlier than war, world hunger — study

22. PESTICIDES:

WHO's cancer review of glyphosate left out evidence — report

23. DOE:

31 Hanford workers inhaled radioactive material

TRANSPORTATION

24. HYPERLOOP:

Musk to dig Md.-D.C. tunnel, says governor: 'So, get ready'

INTERNATIONAL

25. INDIA:

Despite festival firework ban, toxic haze blankets capital

Get all of the stories in today's Greenwire, plus an in-depth archive with thousands of articles on your issues, detailed Special Reports and much more at <https://www.greenwire.com>.

Forgot your passcodes? Call us at 202-628-6500 now and we'll set you up instantly.

To send a press release, fax 202-737-5299 or email editorial@eenews.net.

ABOUT GREENWIRE – THE LEADER IN ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT NEWS

Greenwire is written and produced by the staff of E&E News. The one-stop source for those who need to stay on top of all of today's major energy and environmental action with an average of more than 20 stories a day, Greenwire covers the complete spectrum, from electricity industry restructuring to Clean Air Act litigation to public lands management. Greenwire publishes daily at 1 p.m.

E&E News

Unsubscribe | Our Privacy Policy

E&E News

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

Phone: 202-628-6500 Fax: 202-737-5299

www.eenews.net

All content is copyrighted and may not be reproduced or retransmitted without the express consent of Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC.
Prefer plain text? Click here.

THE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR
WASHINGTON

NOV 16 2017

Ms. Mary L. Kendall
Deputy Inspector General
U.S. Department of the Interior
1849 C Street, NW
Washington, DC 20240

Deputy Inspector General Kendall:

Thank you for providing me with the November 15, 2017 Management Advisory (Advisory), regarding the Immediate Office of the Secretary (IOS) travel procedures. It is my understanding that the purpose of the Advisory is to communicate recommendations for program improvement. We are committed to implementing the best management practices throughout the Department of the Interior (Department).

I appreciate your acknowledgement that you have “received full cooperation from all employees contacted.” You will continue to receive full cooperation from Department employees, and we will accommodate your additional document production request timeframe.

Last week, you and I discussed your office’s need for additional documents as part of your office’s review. Per my direction, the requested materials were promptly provided.

When I arrived at the Department in August 2017, it was clear to me that the Secretary and I inherited an organizational and operational mess from the previous Administration. From my perspective, regarding IOS travel procedures, it appears that the exact same procedures and processes utilized by the previous Administration remain in place and continue to be dysfunctional.

For example, it is my understanding that travel vouchers for Secretary Jewell’s trips beginning on the dates set forth below have yet to be completed. Indeed, until late last week, it was apparently unclear whether all of Secretary Jewell’s vouchers had even been entered into the Department’s tracking system.

- 1) September 13, 2016 (CA-NV);
- 2) September 21, 2016 (Denver);
- 3) October 12, 2016 (ME);
- 4) October 19, 2016 (CA-AK-WA);
- 5) October 26, 2016 (AL-GA-DE);
- 6) November 10, 2016 (Philadelphia);
- 7) November 16, 2016 (Denver);
- 8) November 19, 2016 (MT-WY);

- 9) December 7, 2016 (NM);
- 10) December 13, 2016 (CA-TX-NV-WY);
- 11) January 2, 2017 (ID); and
- 12) January 10, 2017 (Chicago-NYC).

For IOS document production, the primary point of contact for your investigators should be Deputy Chief of Staff Michael Argo.

In response to your two additional documents requests, please see below:

- 1) Secretarial Travel: Per your request, the Department will work to provide available documentation for all Fiscal Year 2017 Secretarial travel (authorizations, vouchers, and reimbursements). Subsequently, as part of this effort, the Department will also work to provide available documentation for the 12 travel vouchers arising from Secretary Jewell's travel that remain incomplete.
- 2) Spousal Travel: Per your request, the Department will document and provide information for all instances when a Secretary's spouse traveled in a Government-owned vehicle, watercraft, or aircraft, and document whether payment on his/her behalf was paid in advance, determined to be reimbursable, or deemed no reimbursement required.

I appreciate your recommendations for IOS. As I evaluate them and initiate implementation, I request input from your office on specific examples, objective metrics, and measures that you are aware of that help build a process that both creates value and ensures compliance with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations.

Finally, I also request all Management Advisories regarding IOS issued by your office over the past 10 years be provided to me immediately, so that I can better identify the full scope of the systemic problems that potentially exist.

On behalf of the Department, I thank you for your office's diligence and sense of urgency in identifying ways that the Department can improve its program operations.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "David L. Bernhardt". The signature is stylized with a large initial "D" and "B".

David L. Bernhardt

From: Swift, Heather
To: Nachmany, Eli
Subject: op ed
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 2:48:41 PM
Attachments: OpEd_MadeInAmerica_Rec_V1.docx

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off “Made in America Week.” At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America’s tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford “Red Jammer” busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in a park’s parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This "Made in America" Week, let's unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off “Made in America Week.” At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America’s tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences, like riding a historic Ford “Red Jammer” bus in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park, would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can work together to build upon the outdoor experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and mobile youth fishing centers in urban areas across the country.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

More partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners on public lands also does not mean the tour bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. Some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry generates $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American.

This "Made in America" Week, let's with under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Out of town pool report #14 / POTUS arrived at Eiffel Tower for dinner
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 3:38:19 PM

From: "Bennett, Brian" <brian.bennett@latimes.com>

Date: July 13, 2017 at 9:32:32 PM GMT+2

Subject: Out of town pool report #14 / POTUS arrived at Eiffel Tower for dinner

The motorcade departed the Ambassador's residence around 9:20 pm and arrived at the Eiffel Tower around 9:28 pm. Your pooler did not see POTUS but is told he has arrived here. POTUS, FLOTUS, Macron and his wife will have dinner at the Jules Verne restaurant inside the tower, per White House.

Brian Bennett
Los Angeles Times
Cell (202)294-9860
Twitter @ByBrianBennett

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Out of town pool report 2 - Trump remarks at JBA
Date: Friday, September 15, 2017 5:14:51 PM

From: "Stokols, Eli" <eli.stokols@wsj.com>

Date: September 15, 2017 at 4:19:16 PM EDT
Subject: Out of town pool report 2 - Trump remarks at JBA

At 3:58 p.m., President Trump took the stage inside Hangar 6 at JBA with First Lady Melania Trump after spending the better part of an hour at the air show (apologies, my last note wrongly stated that he would speak prior to the tour). According to the White House schedule, he was set to take part in a "demonstration of the fleet" and then a "discussion with airmen." Your pooler was not given access to these events.

The remarks here were open press, but here is a short summary (please check quotes against WH transcript for accuracy):

Mrs. Trump spoke first briefly about her visit to the children's center and then thanked the assembled group of several hundred airmen and women. "We know that we are free because you are brave," she said. "We are grateful for your service." She then introduced her husband.

The president spoke from behind a lectern with the help of a teleprompter. A large B-2 bomber was staged behind him, above which a large American flag hung from the wall.

He thanked his wife, noting that she is "very very popular."

Then he addressed the national security threats of ISIS and the North Korean regime.

"Our heart goes out to the people of London," the president said, noting that he'd spoken earlier Friday "with a wonderful woman, British Prime Minister Theresa May." The president reaffirmed "our absolute commitment to eradicating the terrorists from our planet. Radical Islamic terrorism -- it will be eradicated," he said.

The president also spoke of North Korea's recent missile test, saying that the country had "once again shown its utter contempt for its neighbors and for the entire world community."

"After seeing our capabilities, I am more confident than ever that our options are not only effective but overwhelming."

Speaking mostly from the teleprompter, POTUS marked the 70th anniversary of the founding of the Air Force and America's "air superiority."

He also called on Congress to "end the defense sequester once and for all" and promised the USAF would maintain its dominance.

"I am always on your wing," the president concluded.

The president left the stage at 4:18 p.m. We are now motorcading back across the tarmac to Air Force One and will be wheels up shortly for New Jersey.

Eli Stokols
WHITE HOUSE REPORTER

O: 202.862.9241 | M: 303.304.7242
E: eli.stokols@wsj.com | T: @EliStokols
A: 1025 Connecticut Ave. NW, Suite 800 | Washington, D.C. 20036

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Out of town report #2
Date: Thursday, August 03, 2017 6:35:56 PM

From: "Wagner, John" <John.Wagner@washpost.com>

Date: August 3, 2017 at 6:30:38 PM EDT

Subject: Out of town report #2

A bumpy wheels down in Huntington at 6:11 p.m.

Greeters on the tarmac included

Linda McCarthy, WV State Executive Committee member

John Deptuch Navy Veteran and local GOP volunteer

His Wife Faye Deptuch

John Buckland, founder of "heroes for hire"

During the flight, Lindsay Walters gagged for about 9 minutes. No major headlines, but she addressed the West Wing renovations, decried the leaks of the transcripts of POTUS's conversations with the leaders of Mexico and Australia and referred Mueller questions to outside counsel.

Walters started off by referencing Steven Miller's portion of Thursday's briefing.

"Sorry to disappiont, but today is not going to be nearly as lively as yesterday was," she said.

After introductory remarks on economic growth and "keeping promises to American heroes," she turned to planned reonovations to the West Wing.

"Beginning Friday, all staff will be relocated to the EEOB to accomodate necessary renovations to the West Wing. These renovation plans have been approved by the previous administration following the completion of the Phase One but were never actually initatived."

HVAC system is 27 years old, but due to 24-7, 365-day usage the estimated age based on usage is 81 years

The South Portico steps on the South Lawn will be repaired. They haven't been restored in 64 years.

In addition, they will renovate the Navy mess kitchen, the West Wing lower lobby and the IT system and "generic cosmetic upgrades."

Questions

Q: Where will the president be working?

Will take off to Bedminster on Friday for a “working vacation.”

“As I mentioned, with the HVAC system being replaced, that means that the West Wing will be without air conditioning for the next two weeks, which is why the staff and the president is moving out, because I don’t think any of you would like to be in the West Wing on an August DC summer day when it’s over 100 degrees with no air conditioning.”

Q: Going to WV today. Opioid commission recommended declaring a crisis. Will he be making a recommendation?

“I don’t want to get ahead of what the president’s announcement will be tonight. This week the opioid commission did submit their interim report. As you know, this is an issue that is very important to the president, something that he discussed on the campaign trail and has continued throughout his administration to advocate for as it’s plaguing many of the states across our country.”

Q: Timeline for announcement of head of Mine Safety and health administration?

“We don’t have any personnel announcement at this time.

Q: Regulations and rise in coal worker injuries.

A: “The regulations that the president’s doing are to help create jobs. He’s not lowering any safety regulations. Safety is still at top priority. But as the president said, we need to create jobs, we need to bring jobs back to our shores.”

“Nothing he is doing is cutting back on the safety. Safety is a top priority, but our main focus is on creating and growing jobs in these communities that rely on the coal industry as a main source of income.”

Q: WaPo transcripts:

A: “I’m not going to comment on leaked you know calls. I said before, this is—it’s a national security matter when phone call transcripts are being leaked out. It prevents the president from being able to do you know what he does best, and negotiate with foreign leaders. What I can tell you regarding the border wall is that the president spoke about this on the campaign, continues to echo it now, and having a secure border is [unintelligible] to the safety of our country and that is something that he had promised his supporters and has continued to focus on is making sure that we have a secure border.

Q: New Hampshire Apology?

A: “He was talking about the opioid epidemic up there which has affected a lot of lives in New Hampshire. I can tell you that that is an important focus of his.”

Q: He referred to it as a drug infested den...

A: “Again, this is a conversation that was leaked out. I am not going to get into commenting on that conversation. I can just echo the fact that combatting the drug abuse, and substance and opioid— is important to the president.”

Q: So no apology?

A: “I am not going to comment any further.”

Q: Does POTUS intend to act on opioid commission report?

A: “Let me check back with you regarding what next steps are.”

Q: How did the transcripts get out?

A: I am not going to get into leaked conversations, but I can tell you is that it's damaging to our national security and it's something that we take very seriously." "We need to end these leaks and it's not beneficial to anyone to be having documents being leaked out."

Q: Is that being investigated then?

A: "I'll get back to you."

Q: What's the 'Big announcement'?

A: "If it did that it wouldn't be the surprise he was talking about earlier."

Q: Comment on legislation to protect Mueller?

A: "Let me look into that. I can refer you to Ty Cobb, but I will get back to you on that."

Q: Why is POTUS taking a vacation after calling on Congress to stay, criticizing Obama for vacations?

A: "As I said, the president's going to continue to work. We all need to be relocated out of the West Wing due to these renovations that should have taken place before and we're at a position where we're now in a dire need and they either need to be repaired or replaced. And it's not something that can go on while we're still occupying the West Wing. So the President will continue to work over the next two weeks."

An addition to the previous report: Also on the plane were Joe Hagin and Steven Miller

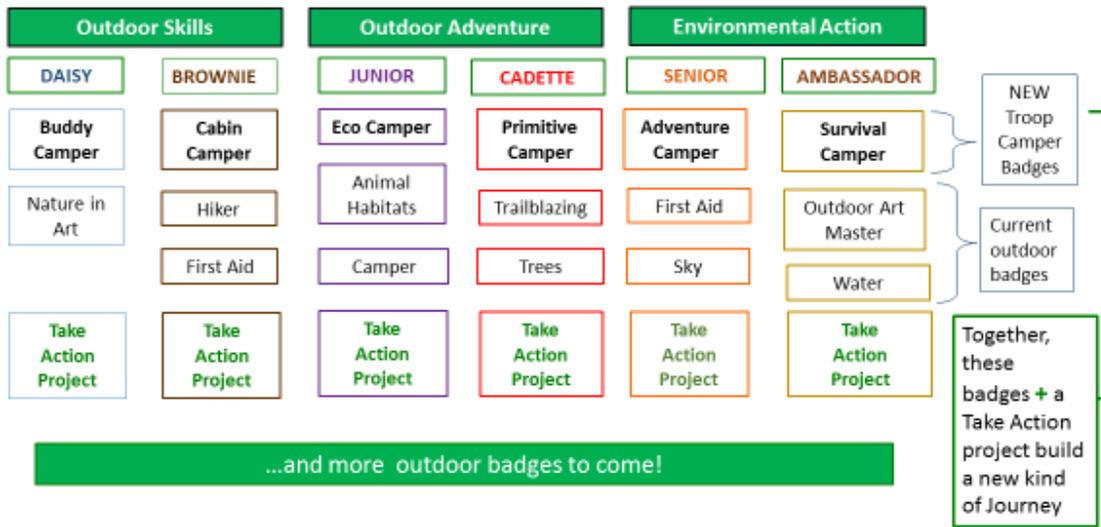

Big thanks to Zeke Miller for help with the gaggle notes and other tidbits

John Wagner
The Washington Post
Email: john.wagner@washpost.com
Mobile: 202-560-2611
Desk: 202-334-6293
Twitter: @WPJohnWagner

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

K – 12 OUTDOOR PROGRAM FRAMEWORK

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Out-of-town pool #8/tour of Les Invalides and the tomb of Napoleon
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 10:59:40 AM

From: "Bennett, Brian" <brian.bennett@latimes.com>

Date: July 13, 2017 at 4:53:03 PM GMT+2

Subject: Out-of-town pool #8/tour of Les Invalides and the tomb of Napoleon

President Trump, FLOTUS, President Macron and his wife Brigitte Macron toured Hotel National des Invalides, built by in the 1670s by King Louis XIV to care for injured and disabled war veterans.

After reviewing a line of French troops inside a grand courtyard, the two leaders and their wives walked into the large and gilded Dome Church. The couples stopped and talked for about five minutes with a tour guide and then at about 4:04 pm walked down a marble staircase to the Tomb of Napoleon.

Both couples held hands down the steps.

Napoleon was buried here in 1861, when his body was returned to France from where he had died in exile. The tomb itself is made of red quartzite and stands on a green Voges granite base.

Trump and Macron stopped to look at the tomb and appeared engaged in conversation. Your pooler could not hear or understand anything they said during the tour.

When POTUS and FLOTUS started walking again, your pooler saw Macron tap his wife on the rear end. She looked surprised and smiled.

Continuing the tour, at about 4:10 pm the two couples entered the alcove that holds the tomb of French Marshal Ferdinand Foch, commander of the allied armies in WWI.

Trump and Macron spoke and gestured to each other. Trump pointed to the tomb a few times. Macron at one point punched his hand into his fist to make a point.

The press pool was ushered out of the alcove at 4:20 pm.

The tour was given by David Guillet, director of the French army museum, according to a White House aide.

As Maggie Haberman my fellow pooler reported, the motorcade began rolling at 4:41 pm.

Brian Bennett
Los Angeles Times
Cell (202)294-9860
Twitter @ByBrianBennett

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Photos of the Foreign Trip
Date: Friday, November 17, 2017 4:46:11 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
November 17, 2017

Photos of the Foreign Trip

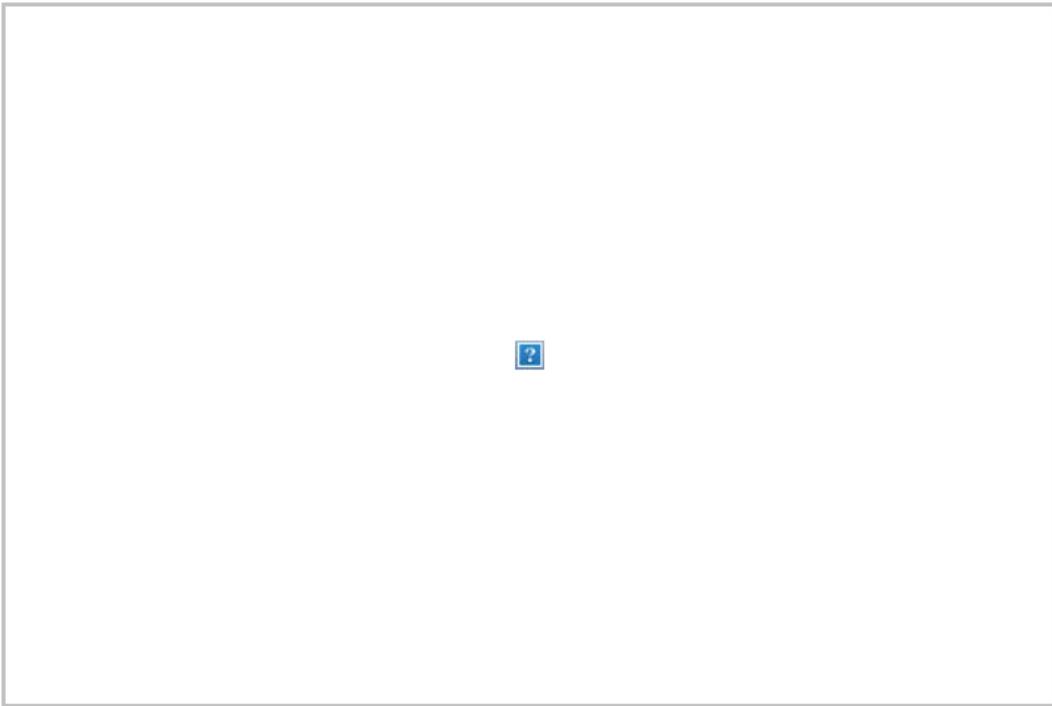

WASHINGTON, D.C.

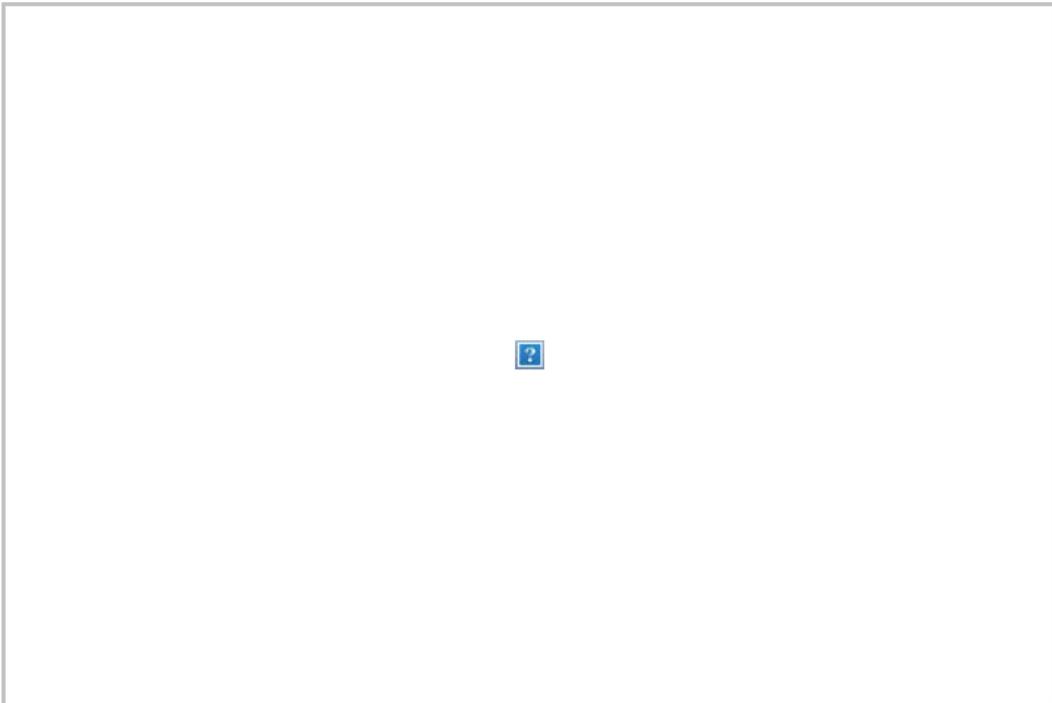

President Donald J. Trump, joined by First Lady Melania Trump, stops to speak with the White House Press Corps, Friday, November 3, 2017, prior to their departure from the South Lawn at the White House to begin their trip to Asia.

(Official White House Photo by Joyce N. Boghosian)

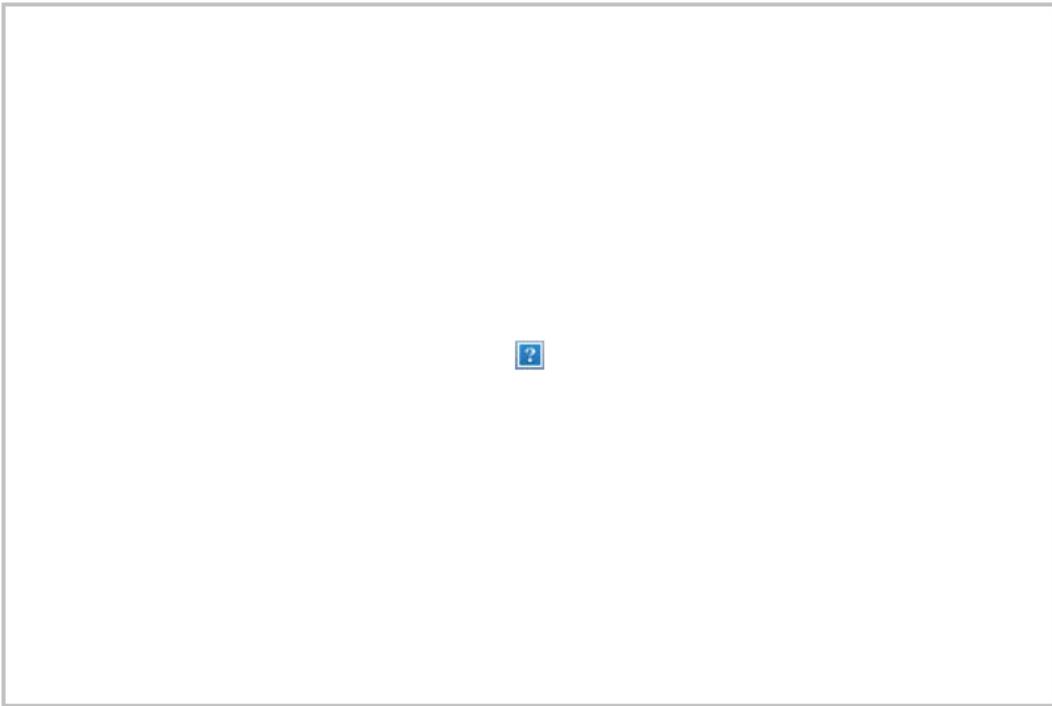

HAWAII

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump receive traditional Hawaiian leis upon their arrival to Joint Base Hickam AFB, Friday, November 3, 2017, in Honolulu, Hawaii.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

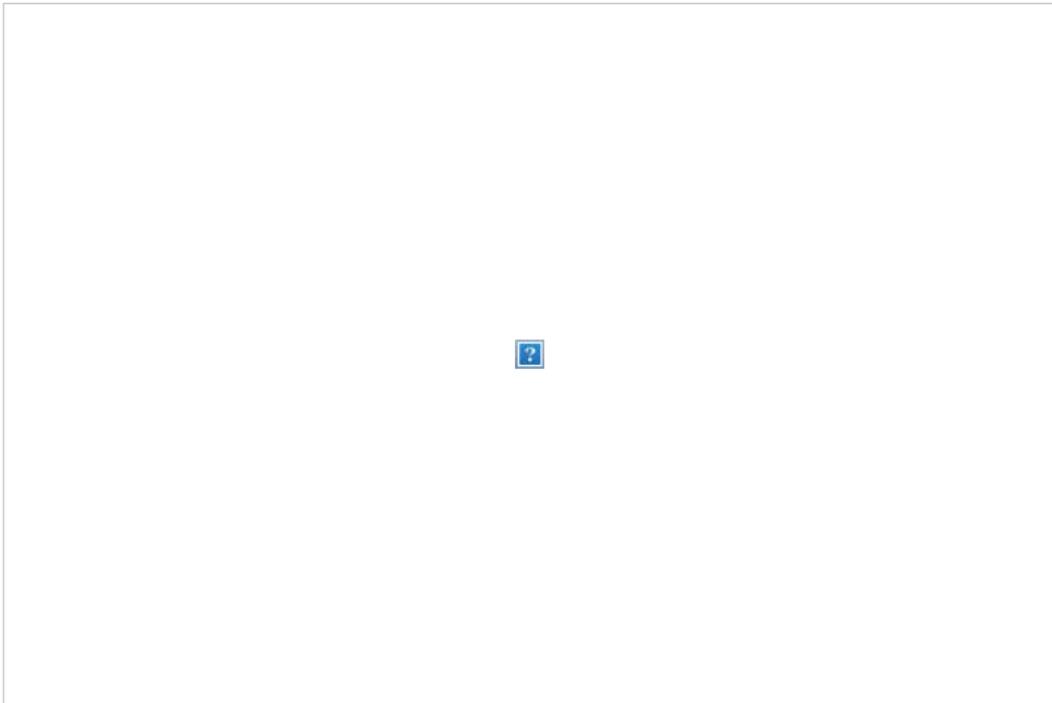

President Donald J. Trump receives a U.S. Pacific Command briefing at the United State Pacific Command Headquarters, Friday, November 3, 2017, in Aiea, Hawaii.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

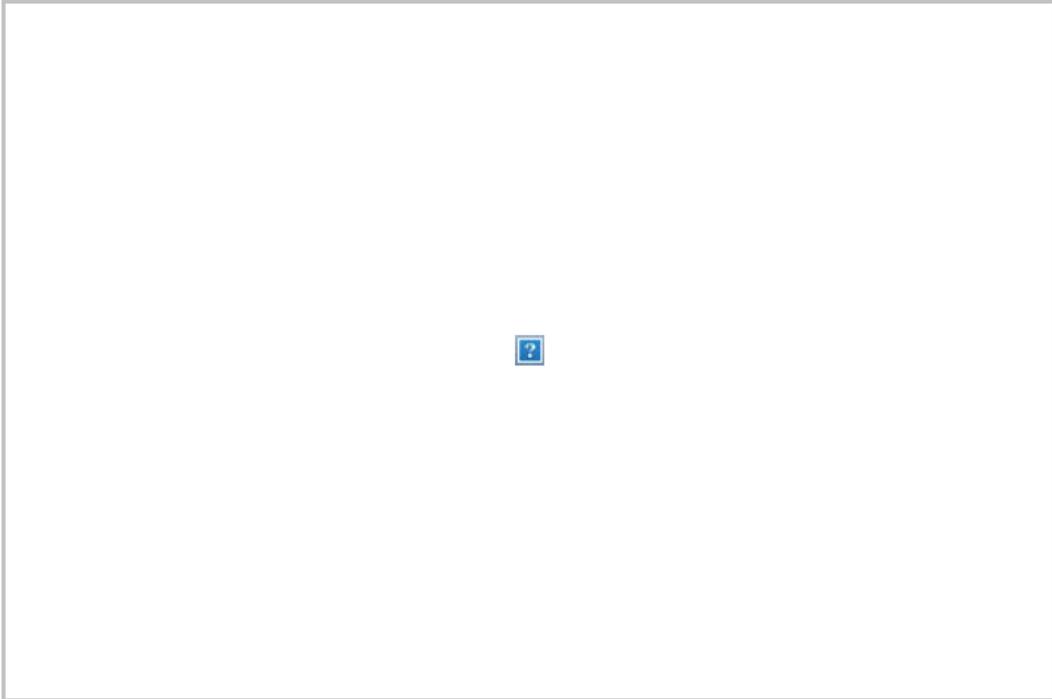

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump share a moment on the barge tour after departing the USS Arizona Memorial, Friday, November 3, 2017, in Honolulu, Hawaii.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

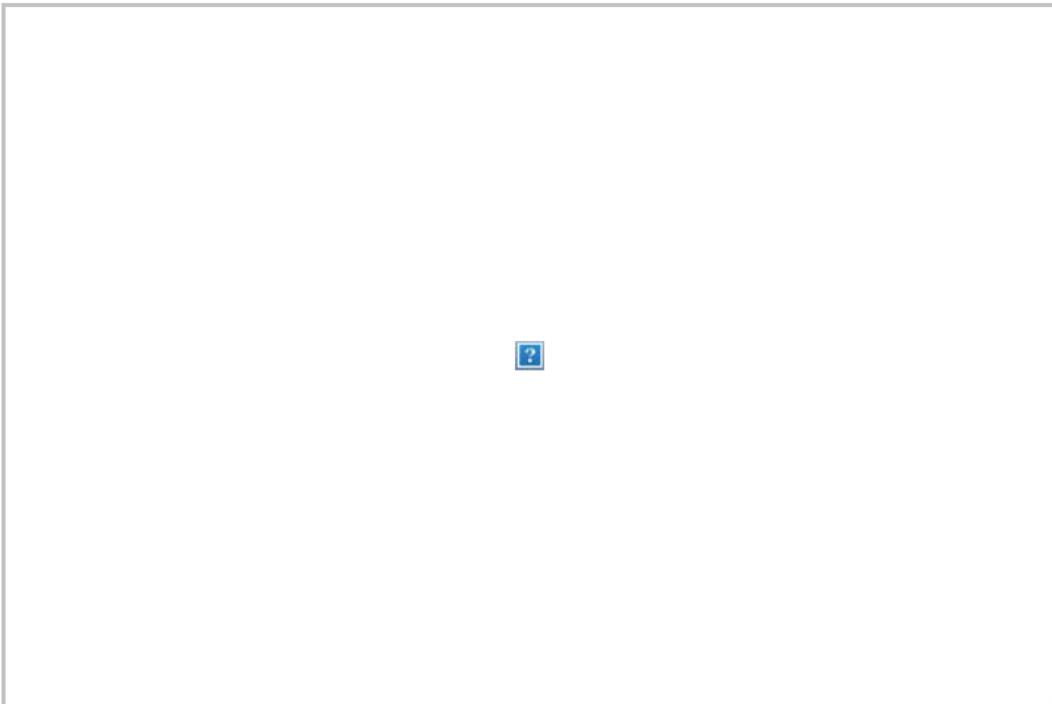

JAPAN

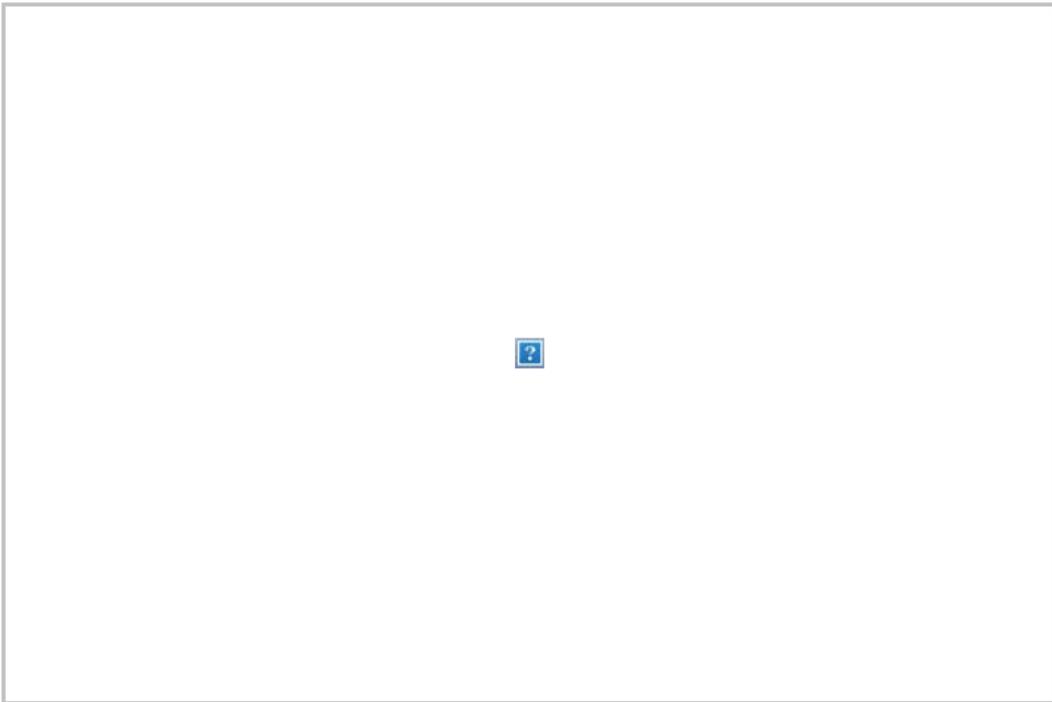

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump are welcomed by hundreds of U.S. troops after arriving at the Yokota Air Base in Tokyo, Japan, Sunday, November 5, 2017, the start of President Trump's five-nation trip to Asia.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump participate in an event with troops at Yokota Air Base, Sunday, November 5, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

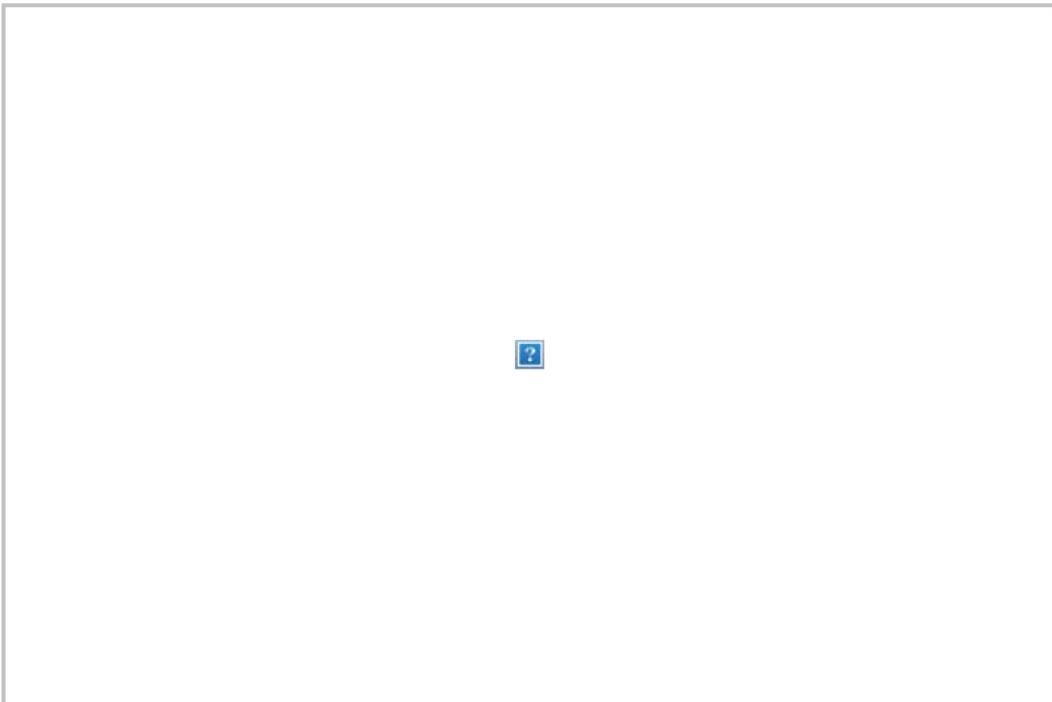

First Lady Melania Trump has tea with Mrs. Akie Abe, wife of Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, at the Mikimoto store Sunday, November 5, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

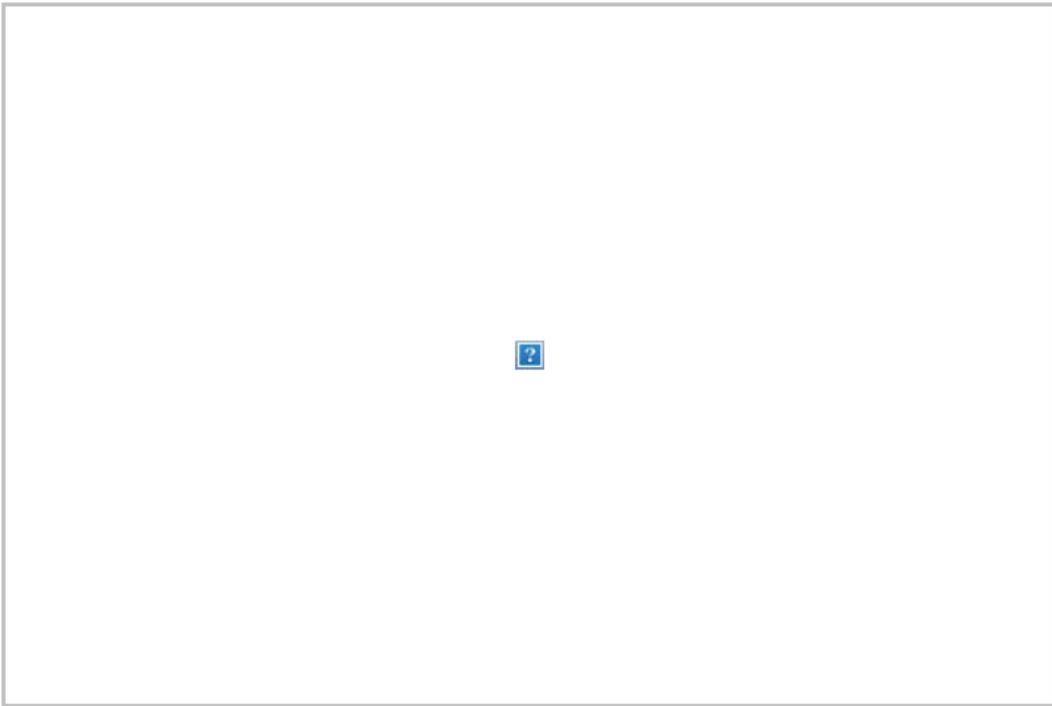

First Lady Melania Trump and Mrs. Akie Abe, wife of Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, visit the Mikimoto flagship store, Sunday, Nov. 5, 2017, in Tokyo, where they were given a tour and shown the traditional style of Ama divers, women who dive for the pearl oysters, in a Japanese tradition that is more than a thousand years old.

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

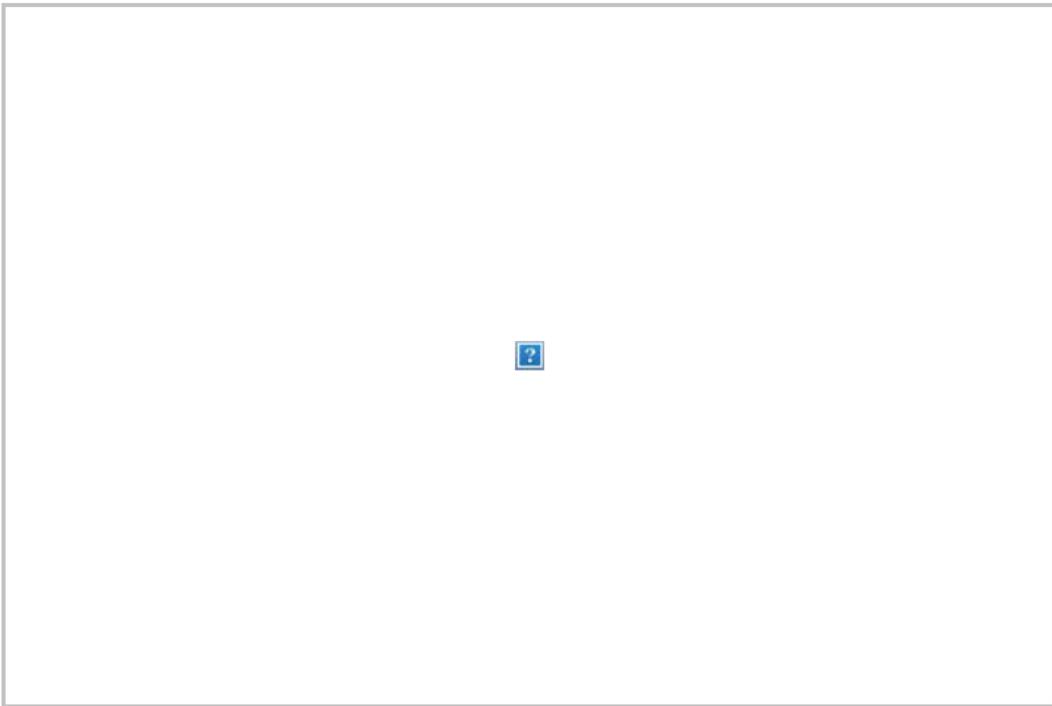

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump have dinner with Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and his wife Mrs. Akie Abe at Ginza Ukai Tei, Sunday, November 5, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan.

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

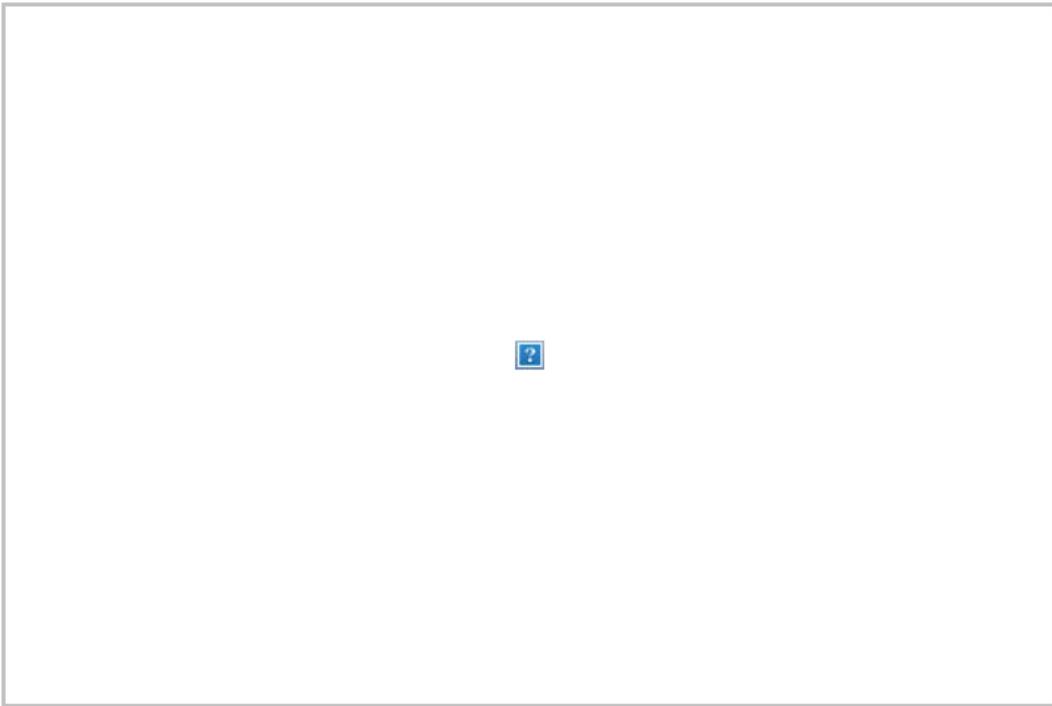

President Donald J. Trump delivers remarks to U.S. and Japanese business leaders at the U.S. Ambassador's Residence, Monday, November 6, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson attends.

(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

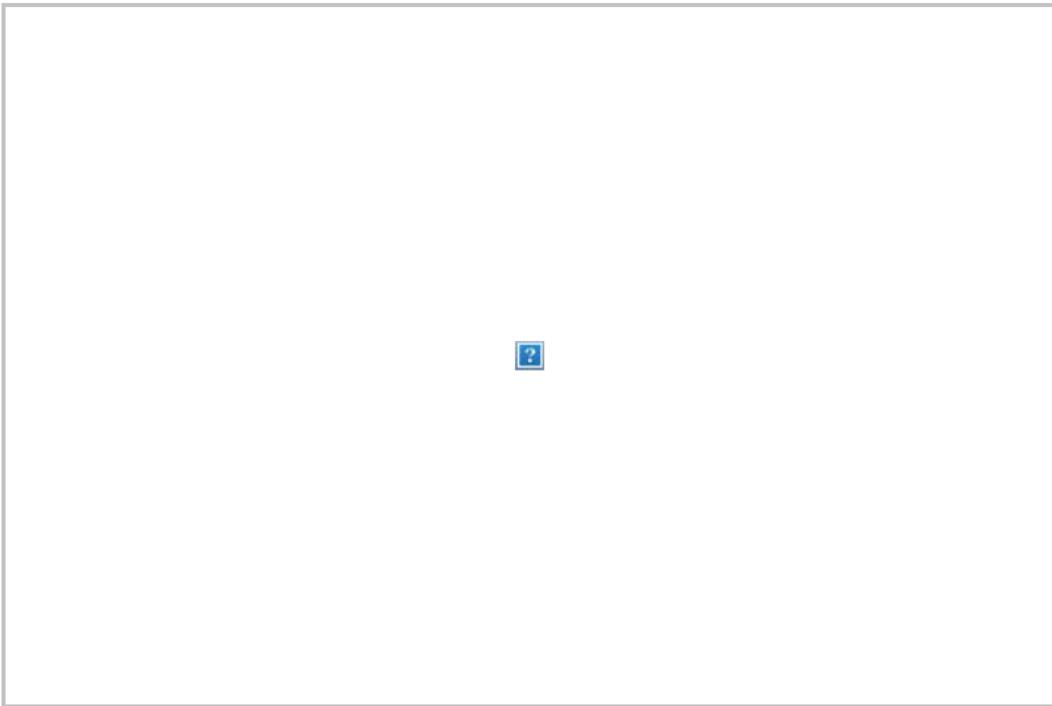

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump meet with Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko, Monday, November 6, 2017, on their arrival to the Imperial Palace in Tokyo, Japan.

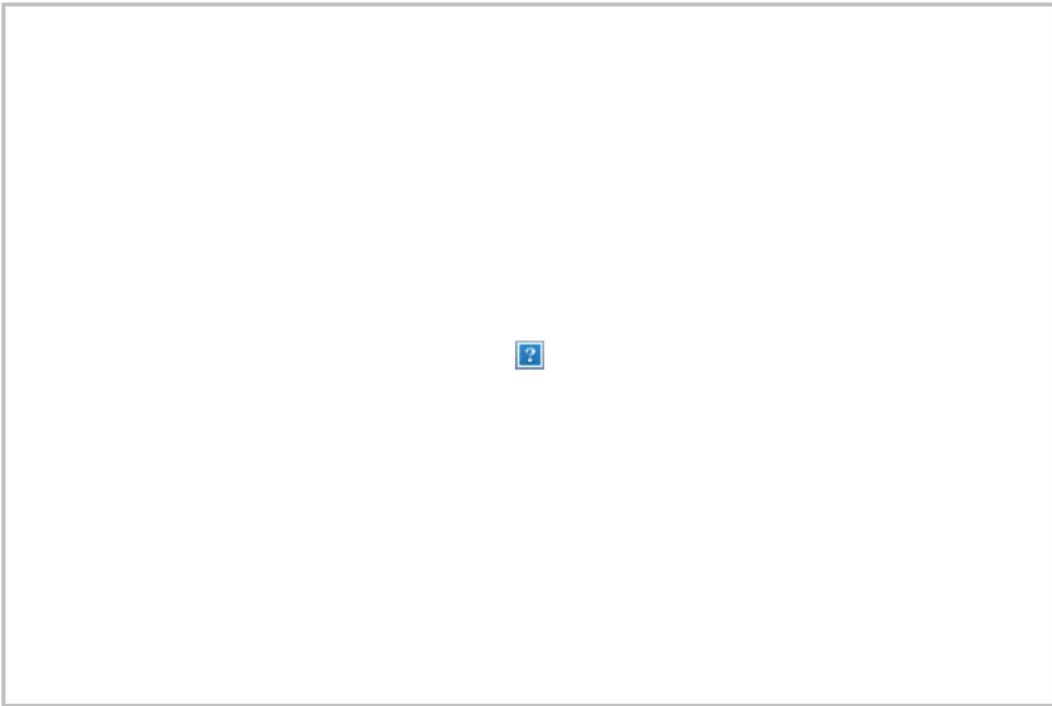

(Official White House Photo by Stephanie Chasz)

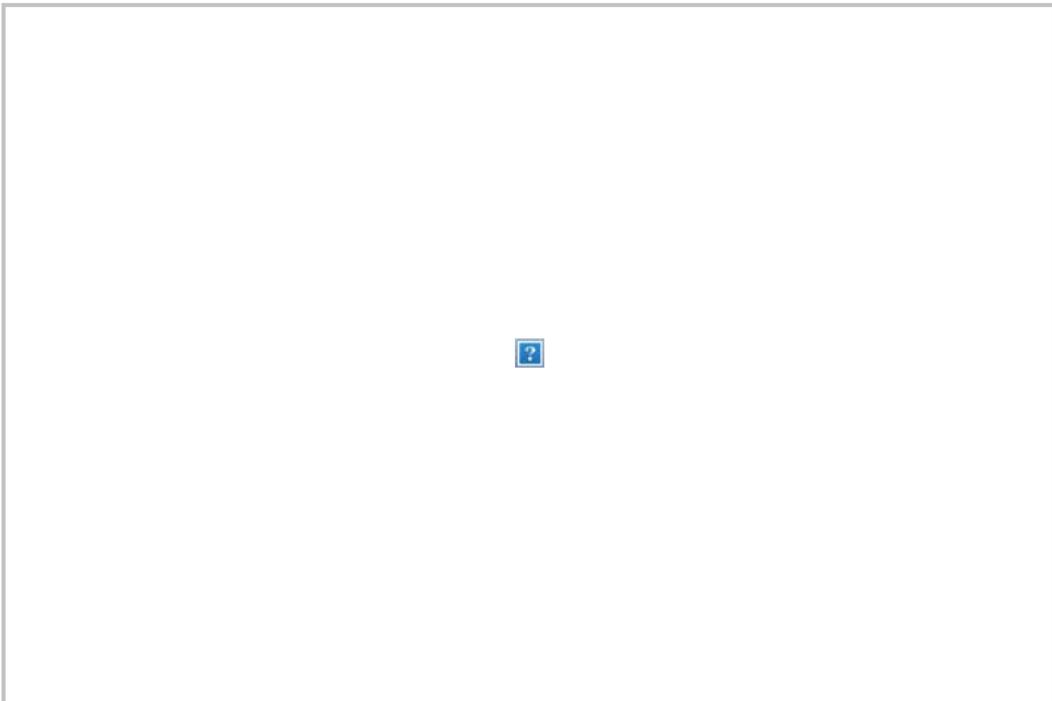

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump along with Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and his wife Mrs. Akie Abe participate in an honor guard ceremony at the Akasaka Palace, Monday, November 6, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

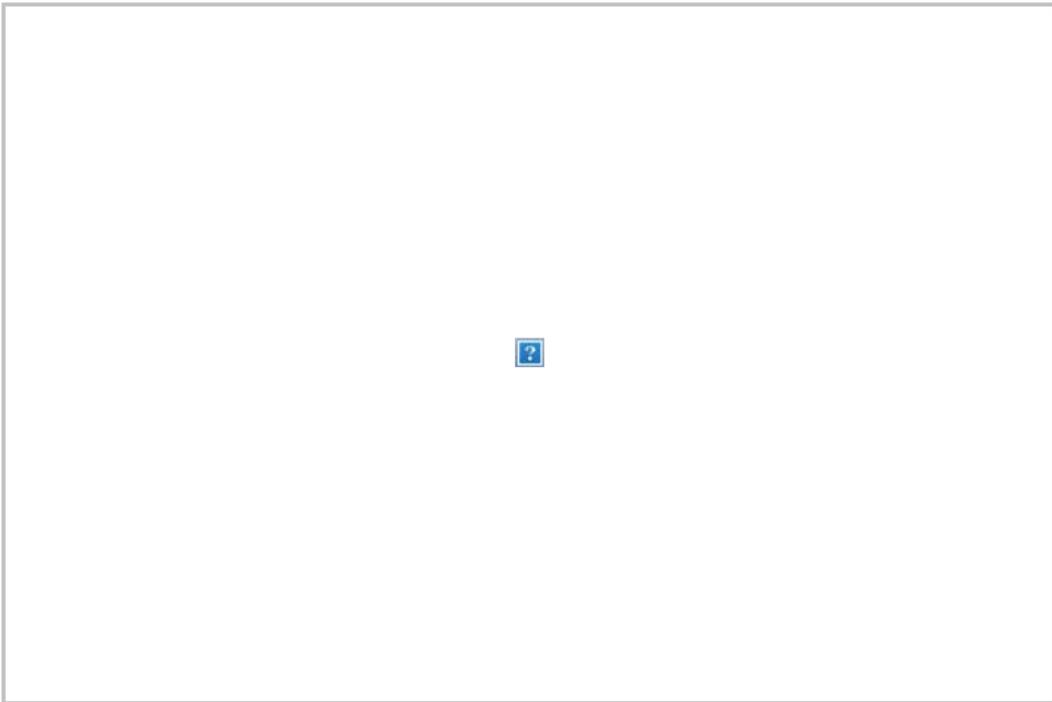

President Donald J. Trump has lunch with Prime Minister Shinzo Abe at the Akasaka Palace, Monday, November 6, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

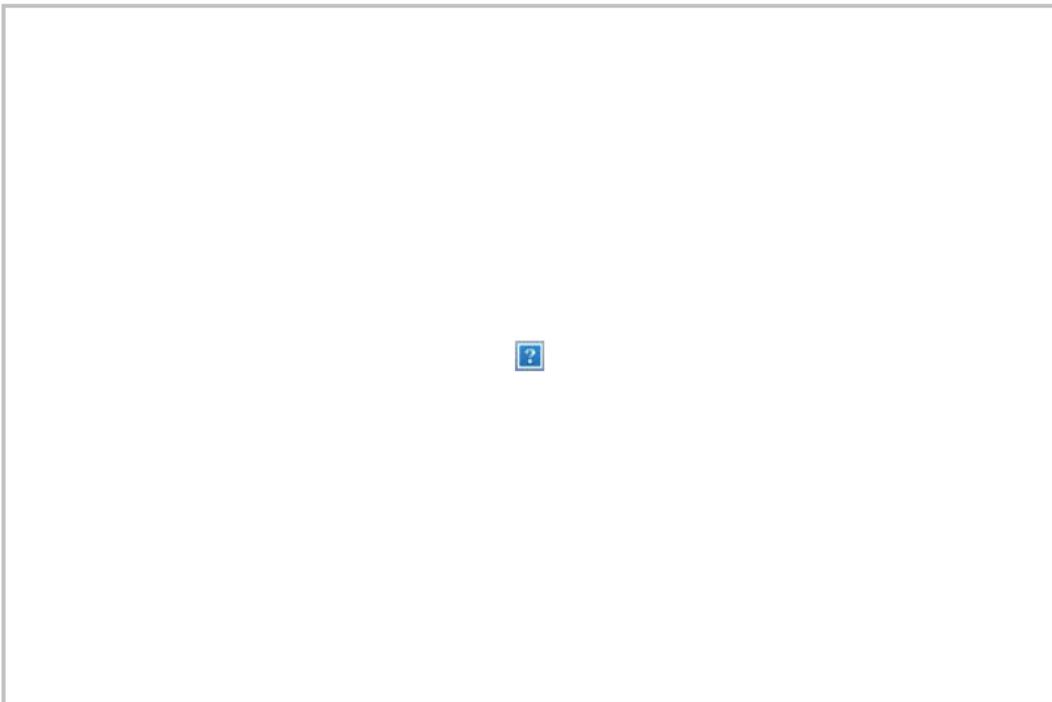

President Donald J. Trump and Prime Minister Shinzo Abe along with First Lady Melania Trump and Mrs. Akie Abe meet with family members of abducted Japanese citizens in North Korea, Monday, November 6, 2017, at the Akasaka Palace, in Tokyo, Japan.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

President Donald J. Trump and Prime Minister Shinzo Abe participate in a joint press conference at the Akasaka Palace, Monday, November 6, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan. First Lady Melania Trump attends.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

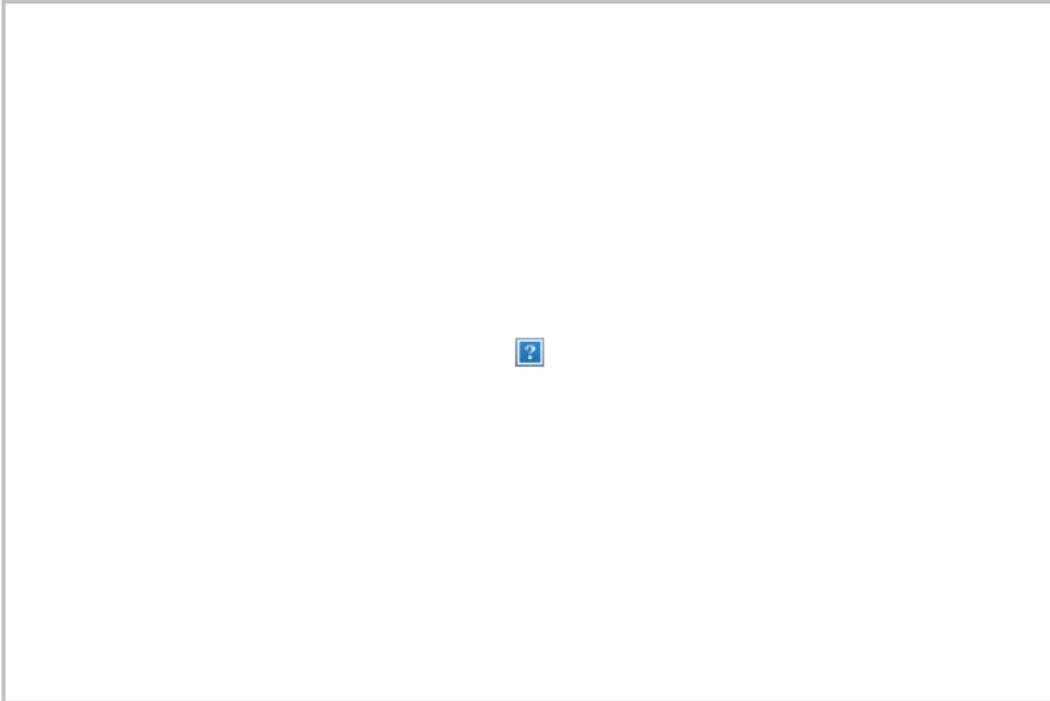

First Lady Melania Trump and Mrs. Akie Abe, wife of Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, visit Kyobashi Tsukiji Elementary School, Monday, November 6, 2017, in Tokyo, Japan.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

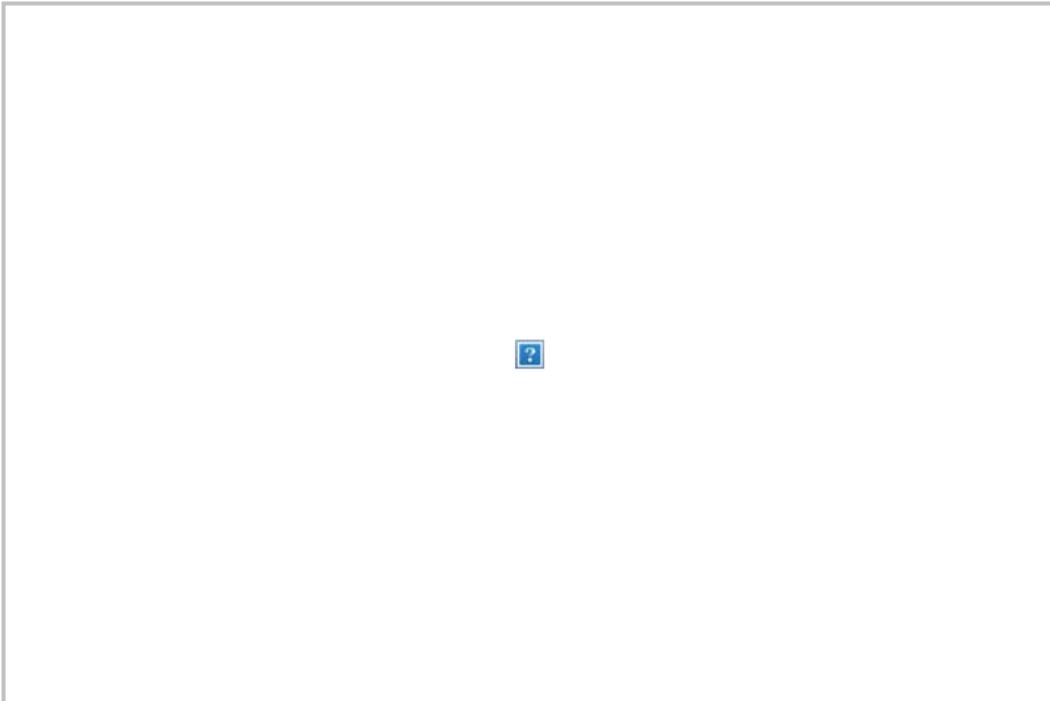

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump are greeted at their departure, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, by U.S. Ambassador William F. Hagerty and U.S. military personnel at Yokota Air Base on the outskirts of Tokyo, as they leave for their flight to Seoul, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

REPUBLIC OF KOREA

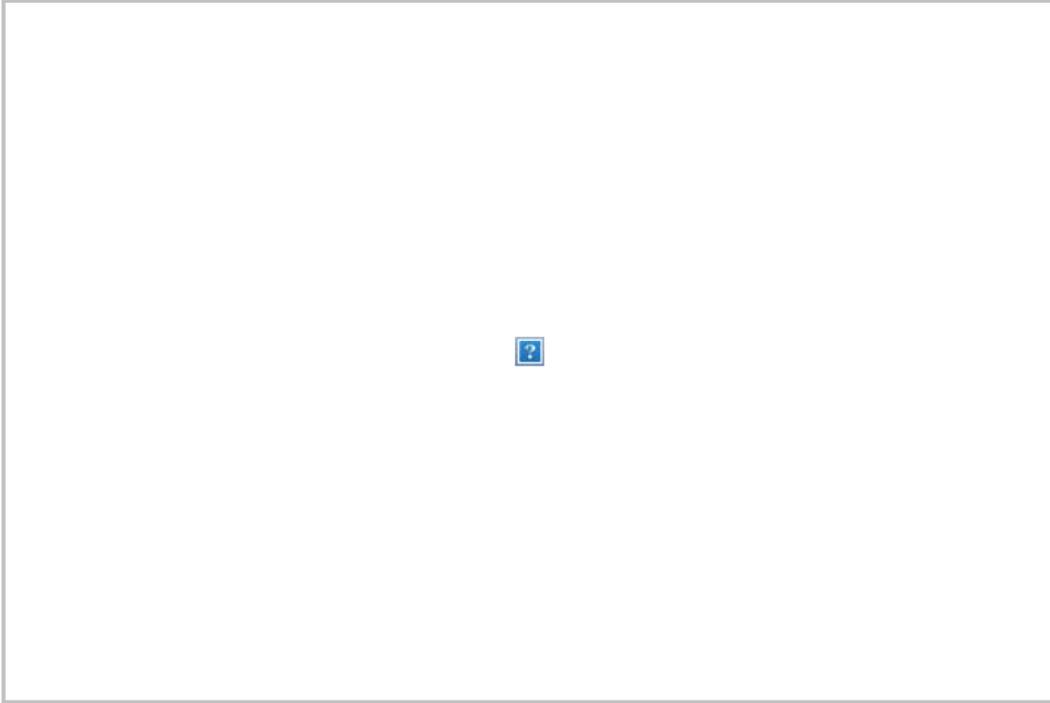

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump disembark Air Force One at Osan Air Base, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, and are greeted by Charge d'Affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Seoul, Translator, Mrs. Suzuko Knapper, Commander of the United States Forces Korea, Gen. Vincent Brooks, 1st Vice Foreign Minister, Lim Sung-Nam, Commander 51st Fighter Wing and Col. Andrew Hansen, in Pyeongtaek, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

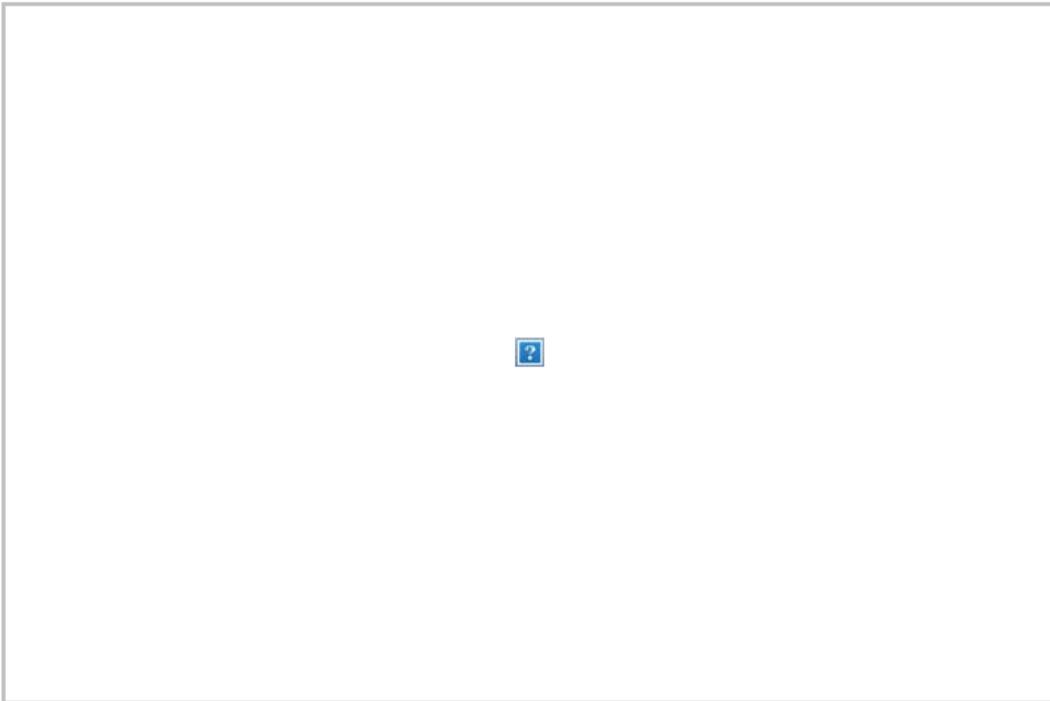

President Donald J. Trump has lunch with U.S and South Korean troop at Camp Humphreys Provider Dining Facility, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, in the Republic of Korea. President Moon Jae-in attends.

(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

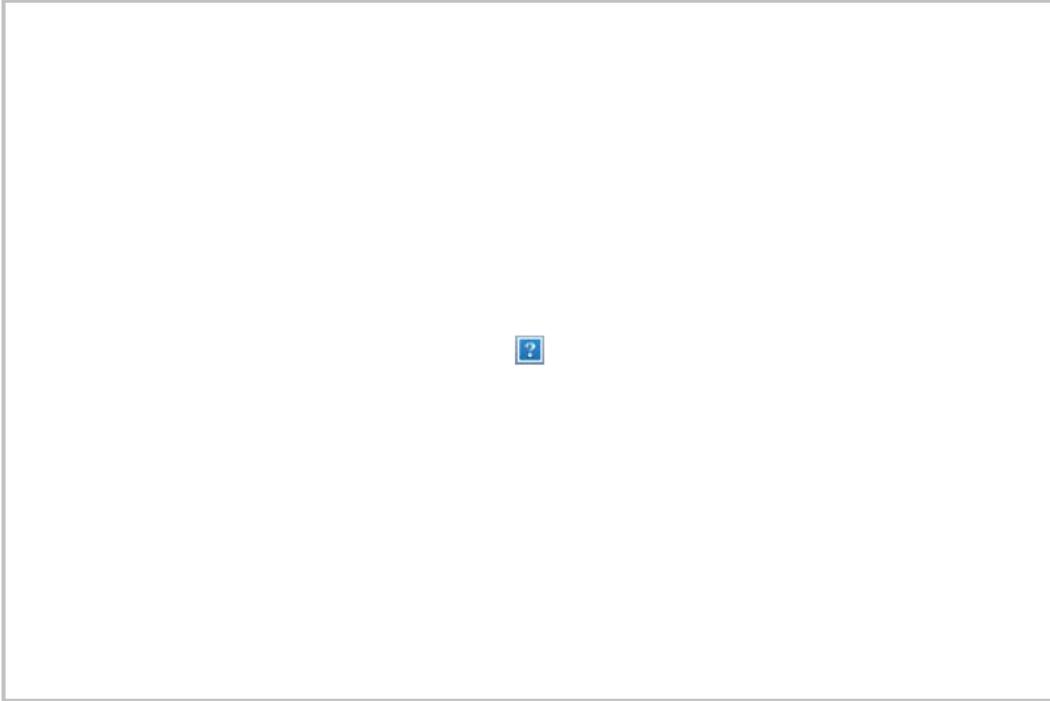

President Donald J. Trump poses for a photo with General Vincent Brooks, ROKA General Kim Byeoung-Joo (T), Lt Gen Thomas Bergeson, LTG Thomas Vandal, MajGen James Lukeman, RDML Brad Cooper, and Brig Gen Tony Bauernfeind at the 8th Army HQ Building, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, after receiving an Operational Briefing, in the Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

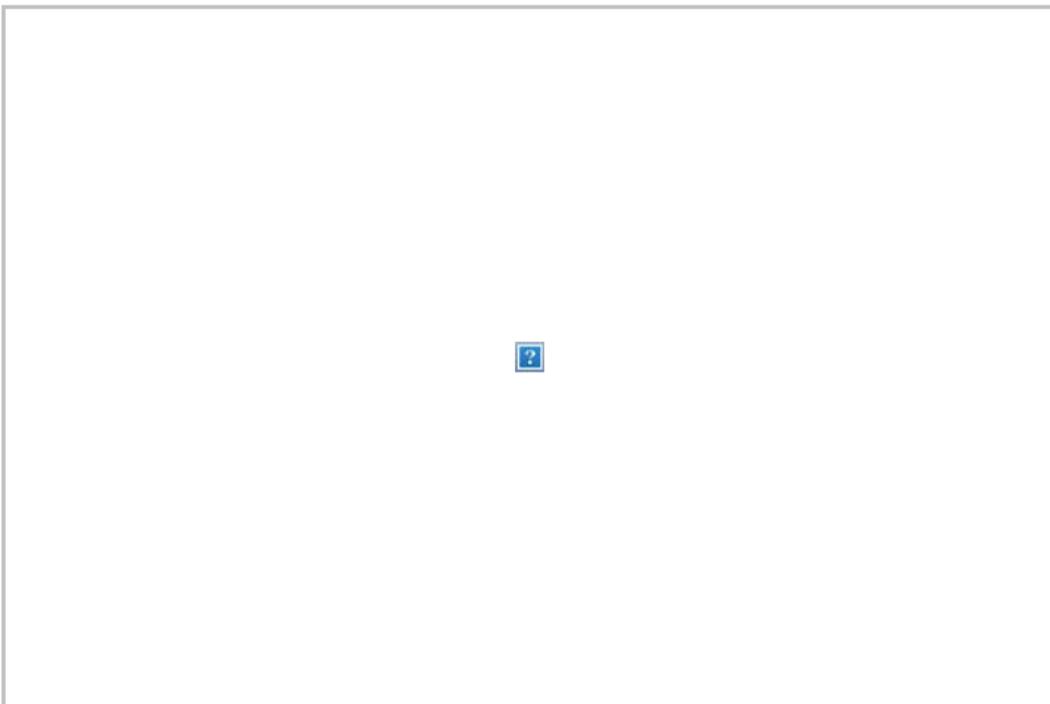

First Lady Melania Trump boards Executive Foxtrot 1 and departs Osan Air Base, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, en route to Yongsan Garrison Camp in the Republic of Korea.

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

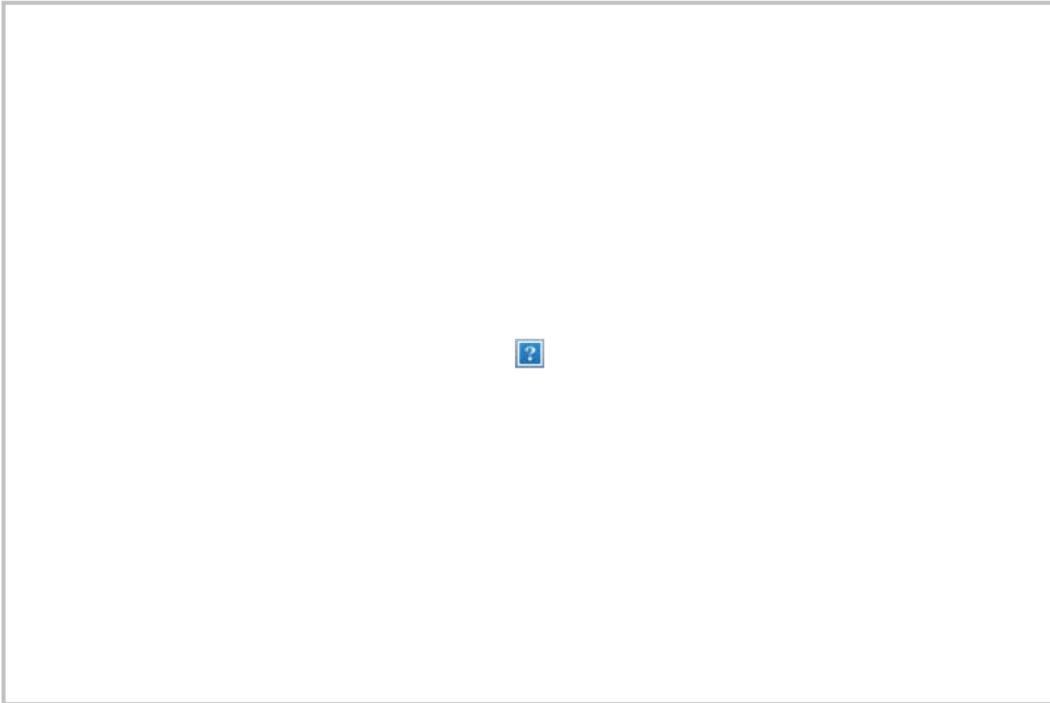

First Lady Melania Trump meets with middle school students following her address, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, at the "Girls Play 2" initiative launch at the U.S. Ambassador's residence in Seoul, Republic of Korea.

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

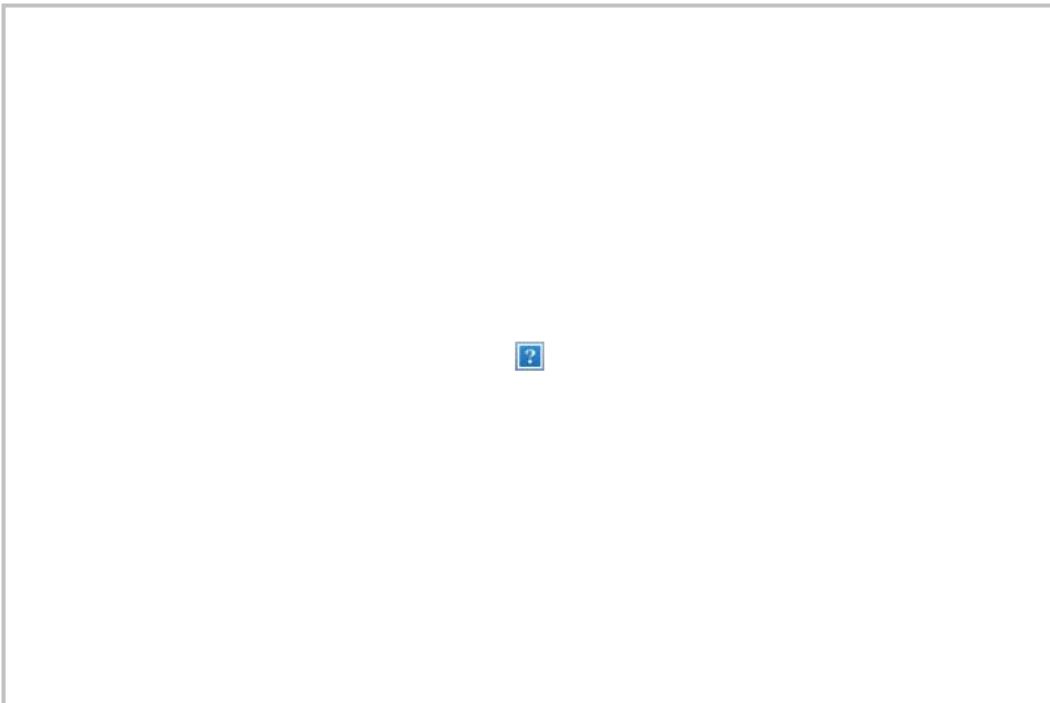

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump, President Moon Jae-in and First Lady Kim Jung-sook, at a welcoming ceremony, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, at the presidential residence, Blue House, in Seoul, Republic of Korea.

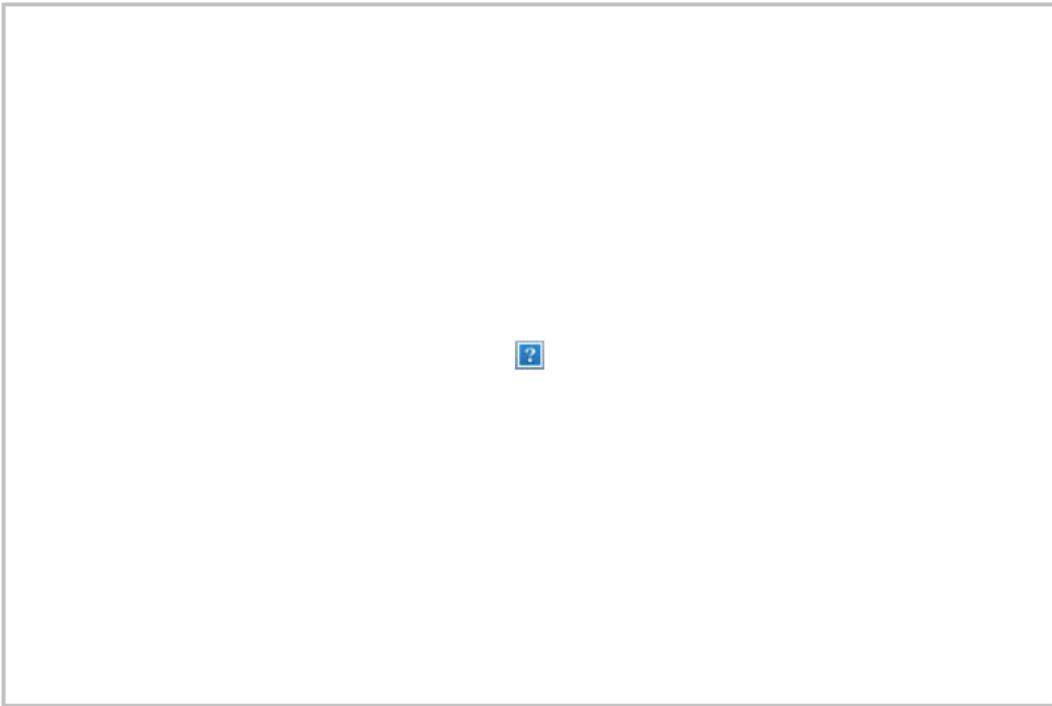

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

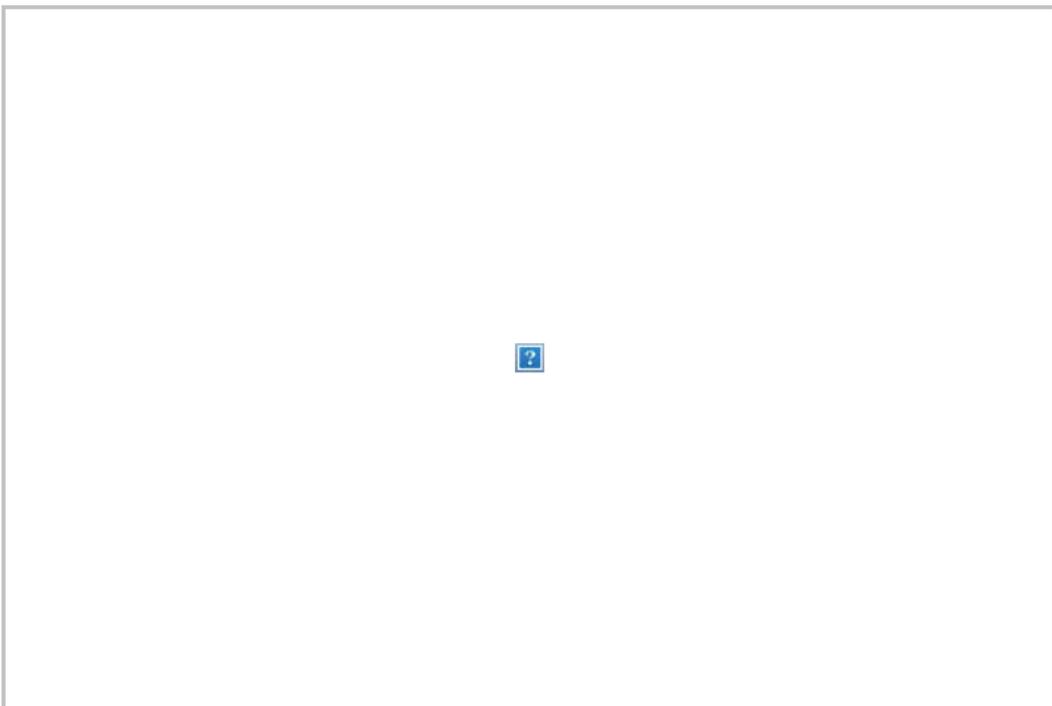

President Donald J. Trump participates in a one-on-one meeting with President Moon Jae-in at the Blue House, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, in Seoul, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

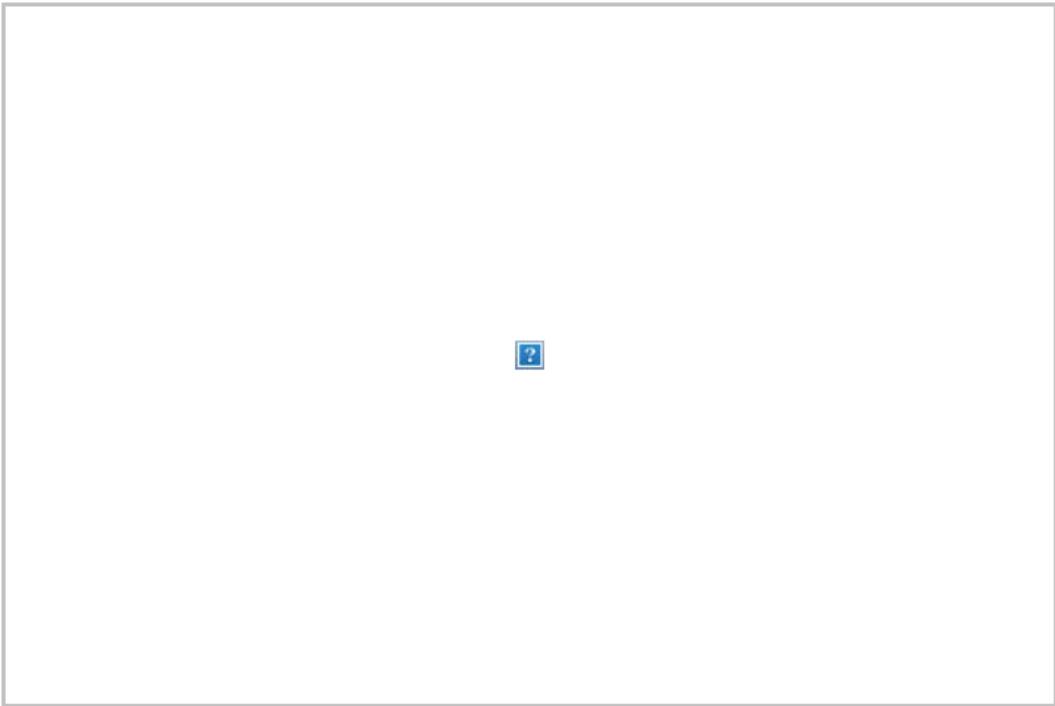

President Donald J. Trump participates in an expanded bilateral meeting at the Blue House, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, in Seoul, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

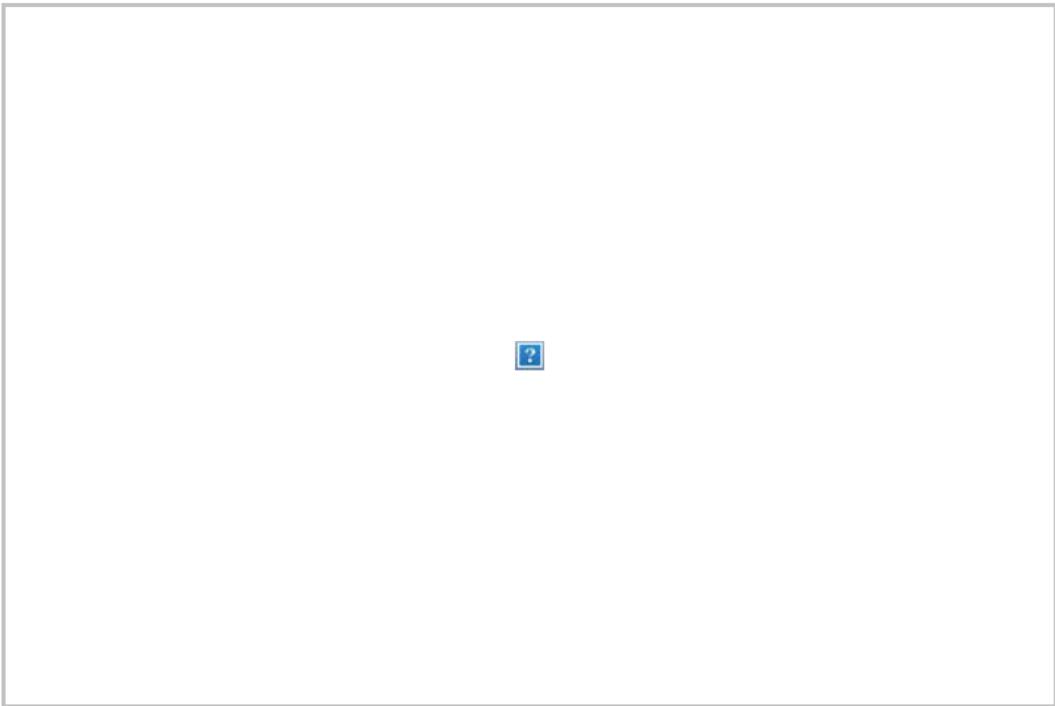

First Lady Melania Trump, joined by First Lady Kim Jung-sook, presents gifts to children, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, in the garden of the presidential residence, Blue House, in Seoul, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

First Lady Melania Trump has tea with Mrs. Kim Jung-sook, wife of President Moon Jae-in, at the Blue House, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, in Seoul, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

President Donald J. Trump, First Lady Melania Trump, President Moon Jae-in, and his wife Mrs. Kim Jung-sook pose for photos in front of the Sangchunjae after having tea, Tuesday, November 7, 2017, in Seoul, Republic of Korea.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

President Donald J. Trump addresses the South Korean National Assembly, November 8, 2017.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

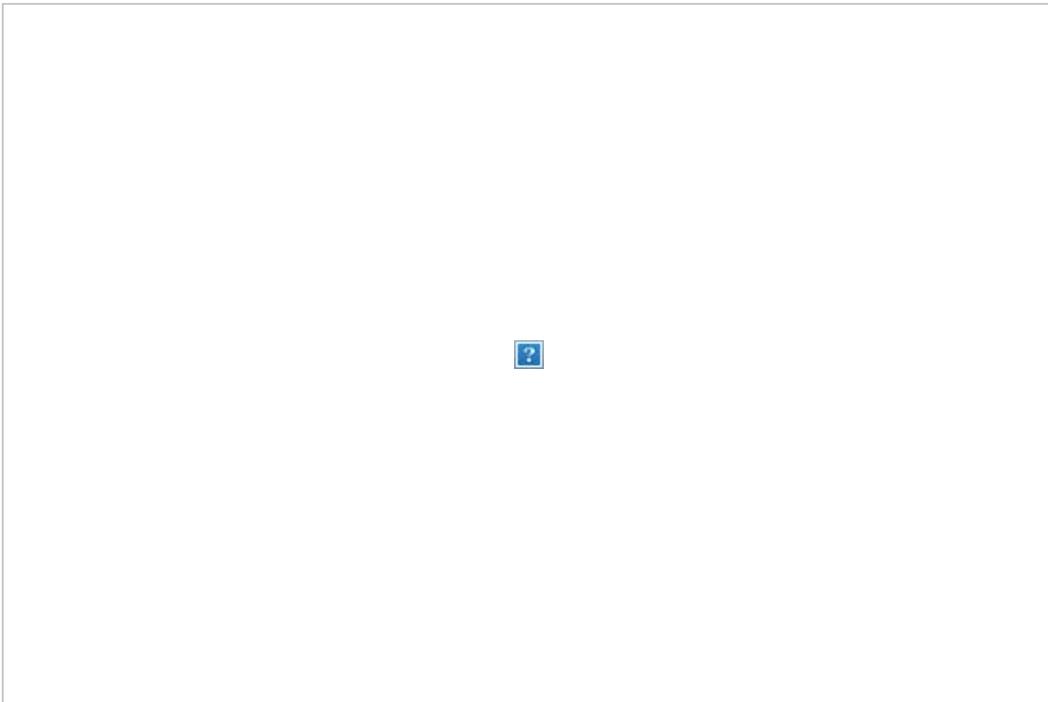

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Photos of the Week
Date: Friday, December 08, 2017 6:08:43 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

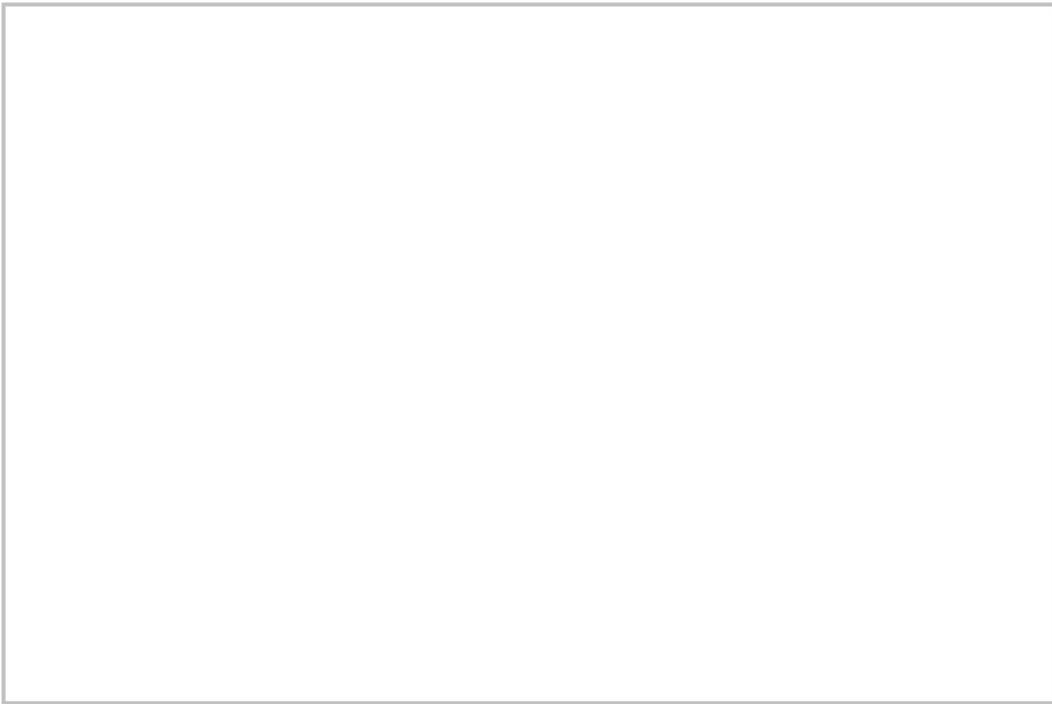

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
December 8, 2017

Photos of the Week

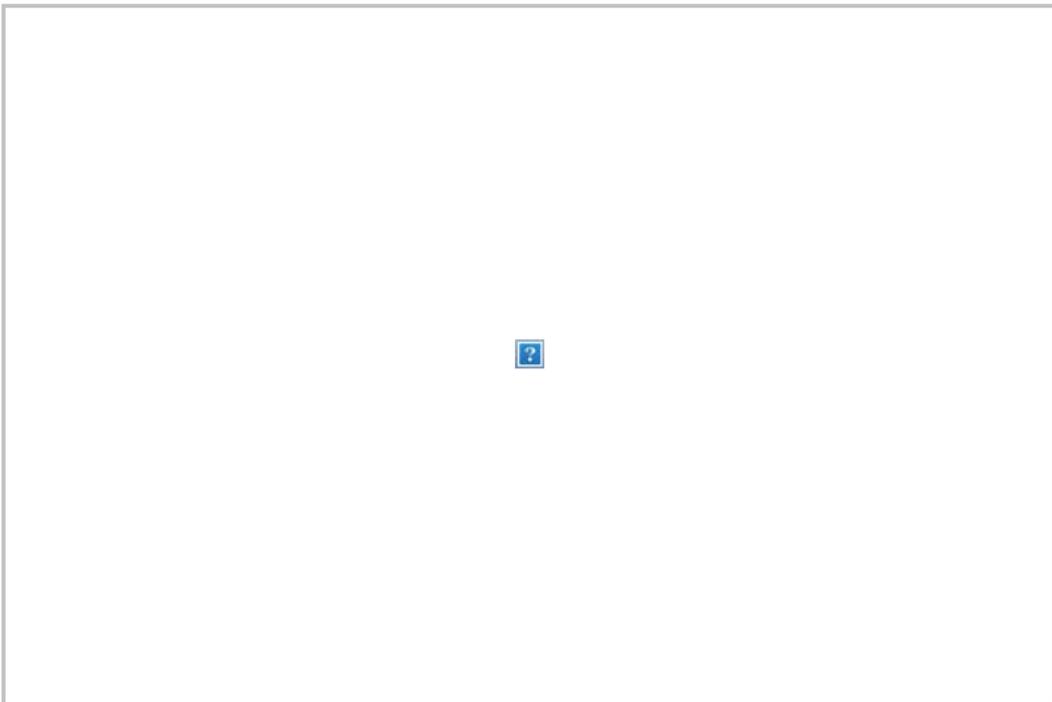

Monday, December 4, 2017

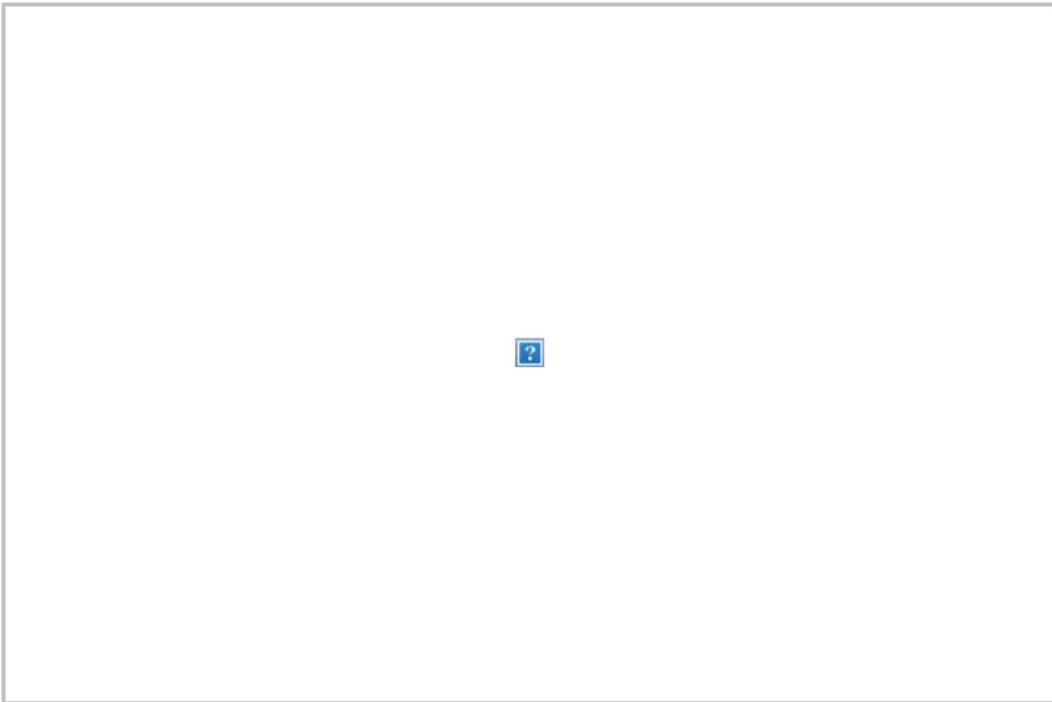

President Donald J. Trump speaks with reporters on the South Lawn, Monday, December 4, 2017, prior to boarding Marine One at the White House in Washington, D.C., en route Salt Lake City, Utah, via Joint Base Andrews, Maryland.
(Official White House Photo by Joyce N. Boghosian)

President Donald J. Trump is greeted by an enthusiastic crowd on his arrival to Salt Lake City International Airport, Monday, December 4, 2017, in Salt Lake City.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

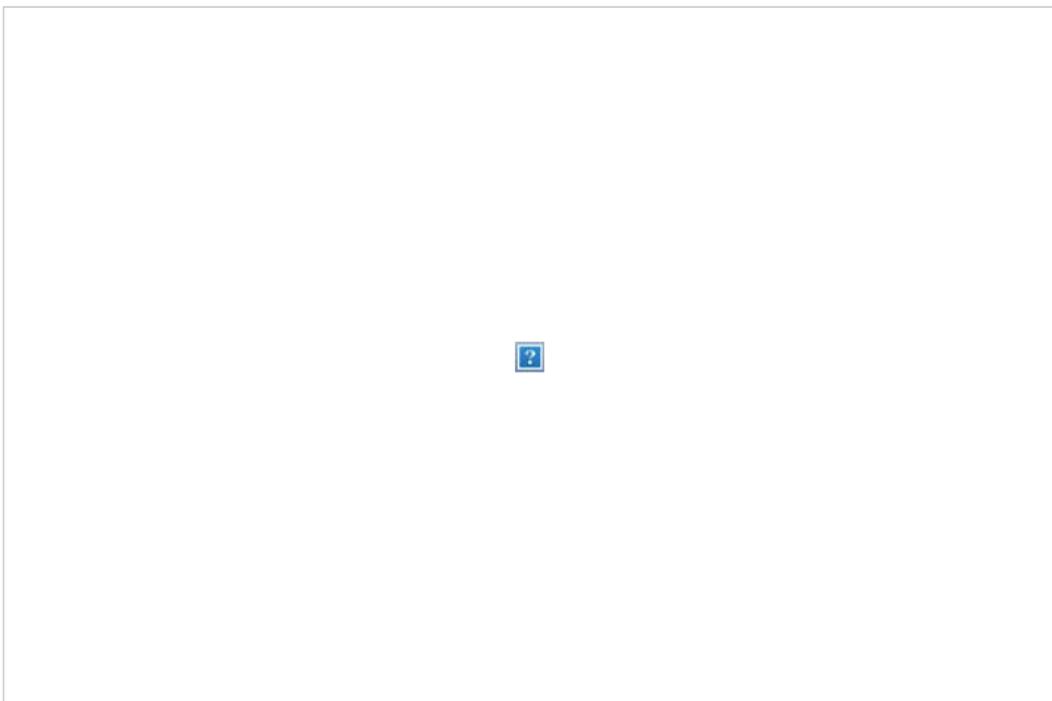

President Donald J. Trump, joined by U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch, R-UT, meets with leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Monday, December 4, 2017 Henry Eyring, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and Russel Nelson, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in Salt Lake City, UT.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

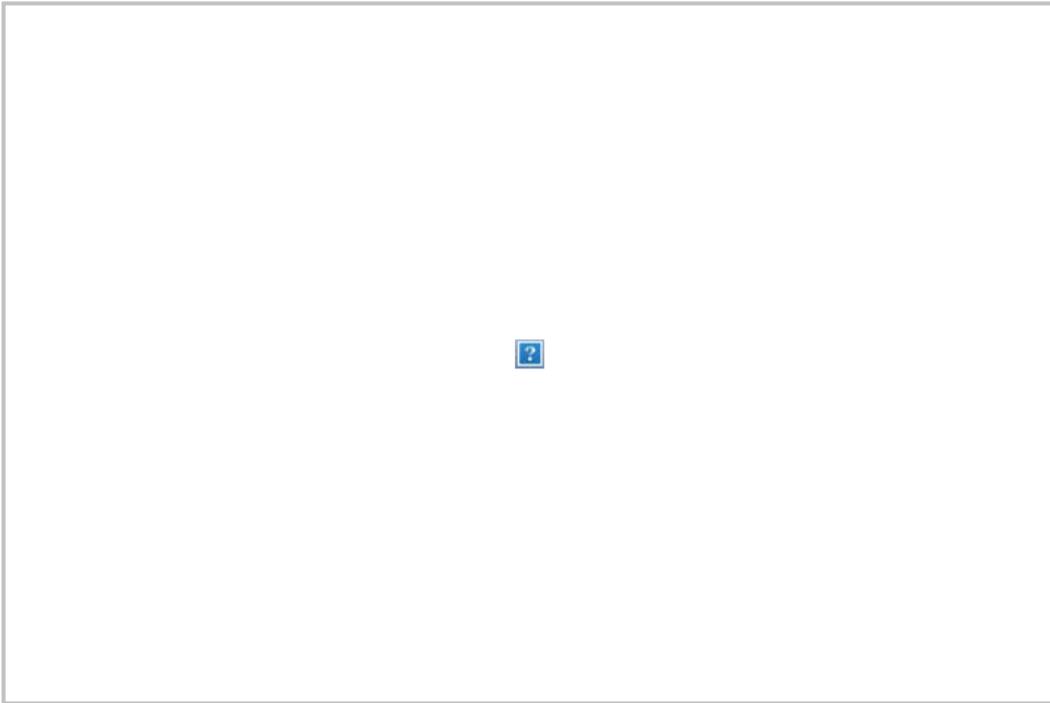

President Donald J. Trump delivers remarks at the Utah State Capitol, Monday, December 4, 2017, prior to signing a pair of Executive Orders to modify the size of Bears Ears and Grand Staircase Escalante National Monuments, at ceremonies in Salt Lake City, Utah.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

Tuesday, December 5, 2017

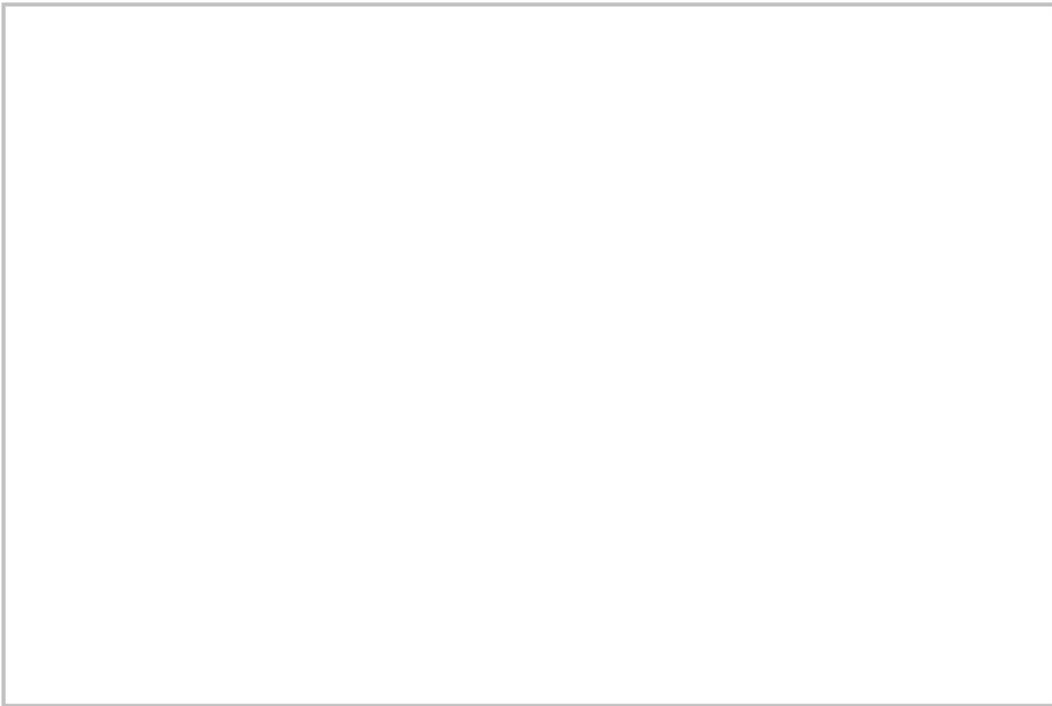

President Donald J. Trump, speaking to members of the White House press corps, is joined by Republican U.S. Senator Jeff Flake, R-AZ, center-right, and U.S. Senator Joni Ernst, center-left, also U.S. Senators Lamar Alexander, R-TN; Deb Fischer, R-NE; Cory Gardner, R-CO; and Lindsey Graham, R-SC,

at a working lunch in the Roosevelt Room at the White House, Tuesday, December 5, 2017, in Washington, D.C., discussing NAFTA and agricultural issues.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

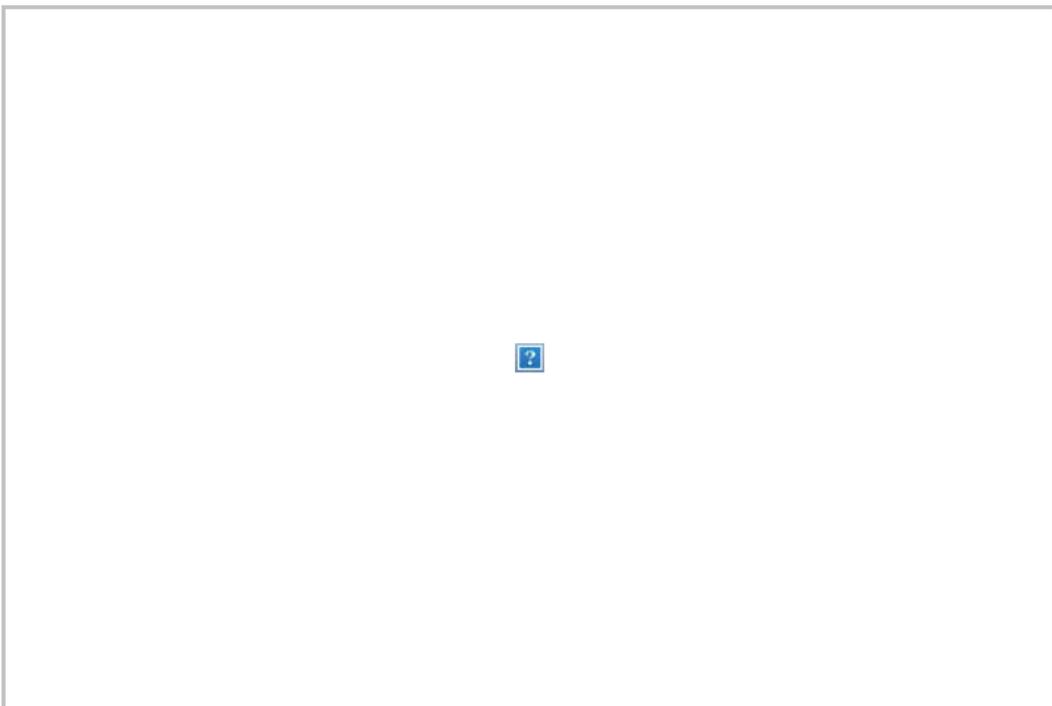

President Donald J. Trump joins in a high-five with Aaron Williams Sr. holding his son, Aaron Williams, during a tax payer family event in the Oval Office at the White House, Tuesday, December 5, 2017, in Washington, D.C., meeting with business owners and middle-class citizens on how tax reform will benefit them.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

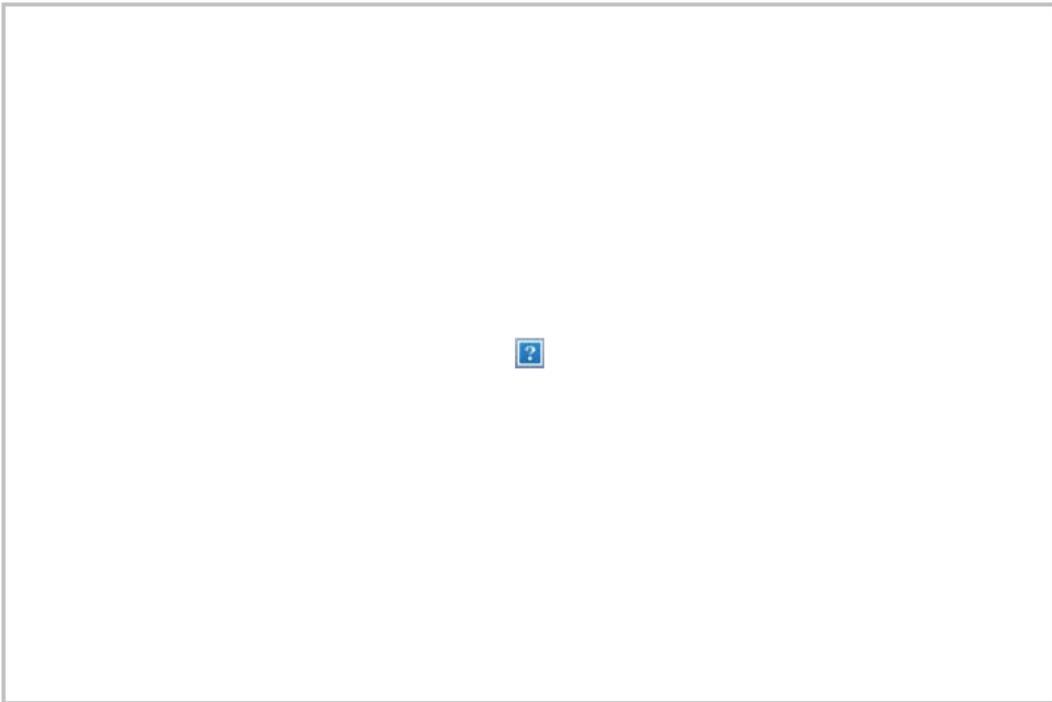

Wednesday, December 6, 2017

President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Mike Pence participate in a cabinet meeting in the Cabinet Room at the White House, Wednesday, December 6, 2017, in Washington, D.C.
(Official White House Photo by D. Myles Cullen)

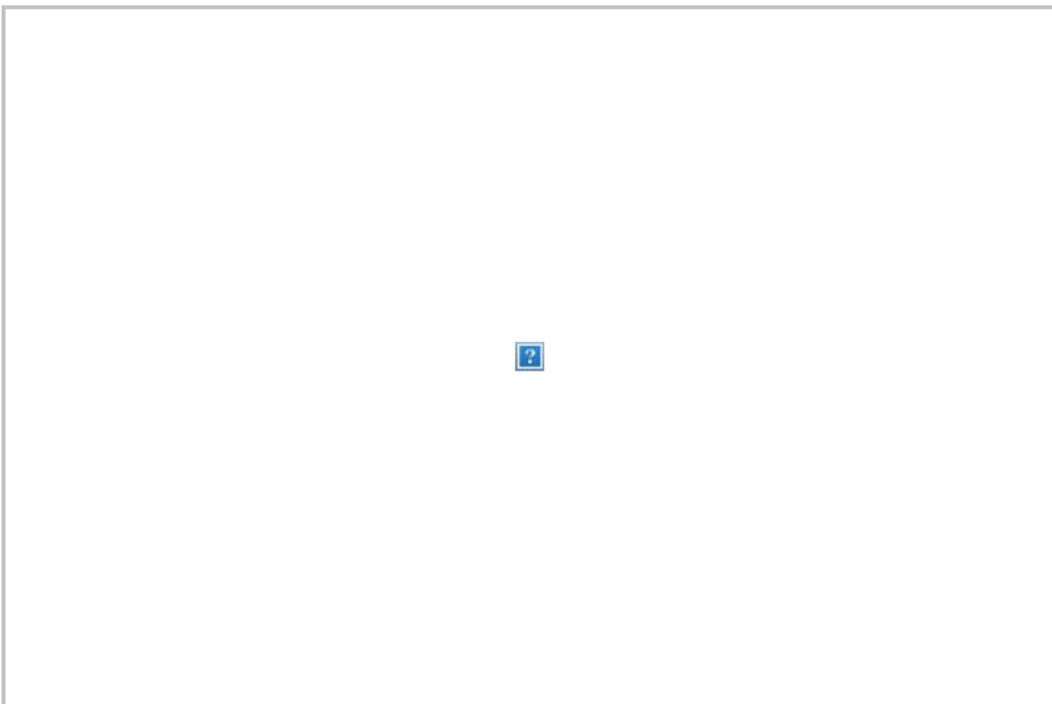

President Donald J. Trump, joined by Vice President Mike Pence, signs an Executive Order for the United States to now recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, at a ceremony in the Diplomatic Reception Room at the White House, Wednesday, December 6, 2017, in Washington, D.C. President Trump officially announced plans to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

First Lady Melania Trump and Mrs. Karen Pence are greeted by Cecilia Abbott, wife of Texas Gov. Greg Abbott, and Texas Land Commissioner George P. Bush, on their arrival to attend the Harvey Heros Meet and Greet at Corpus Christi International Airport, Wednesday, December 6, 2017, in Corpus Christi, Texas.

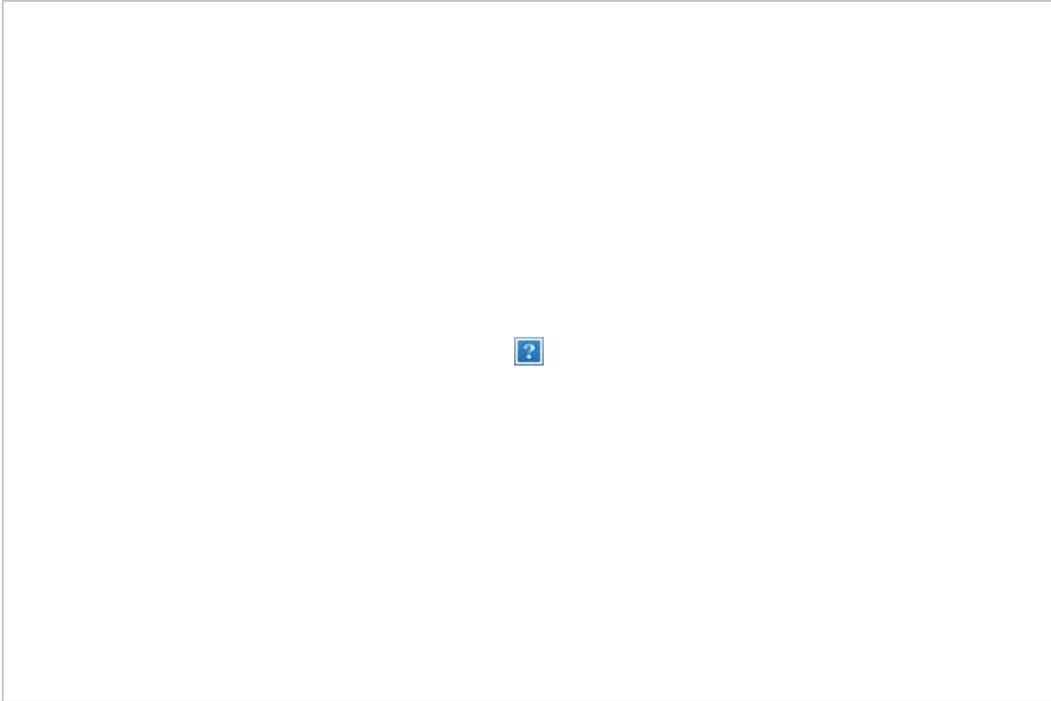

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

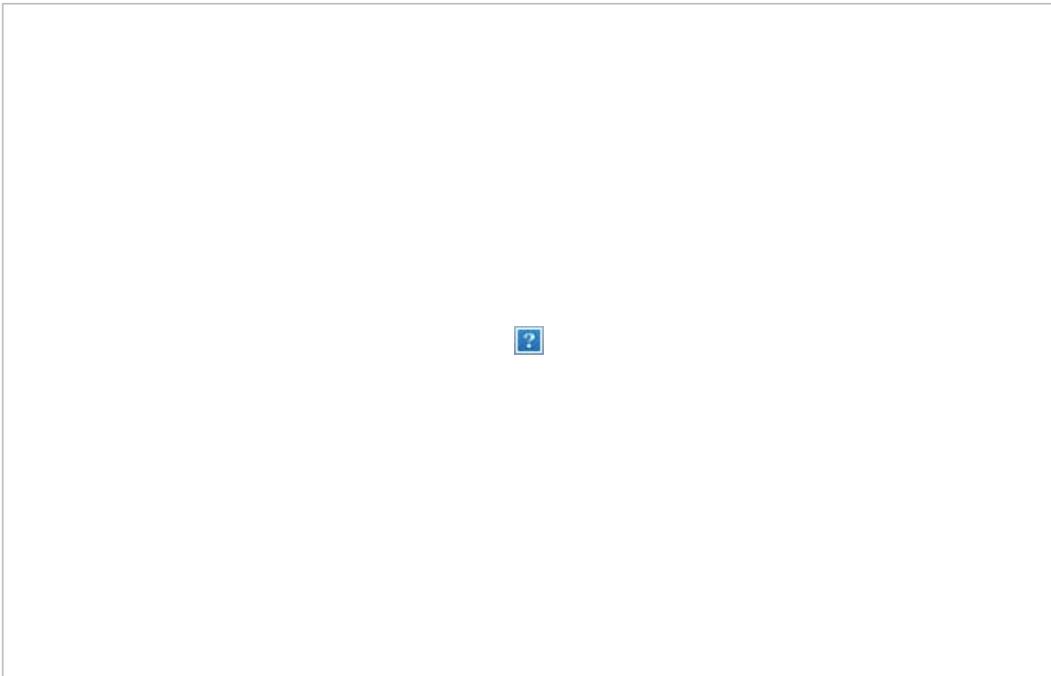

First Lady Melania Trump and Mrs. Karen Pence visit a family impacted by Hurricane Harvey, and observing the progress to rebuild their homes, Wednesday, December 6, 2017, in Rockport, Texas.

(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

Thursday, December 7, 2017

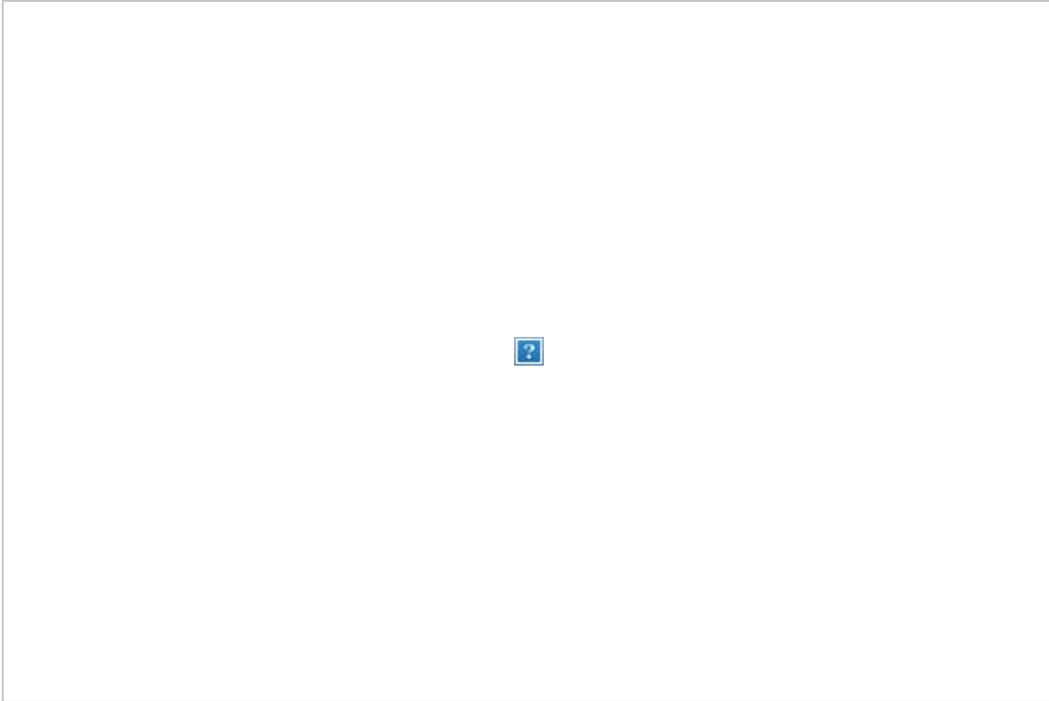

The U.S. flag flies at half-staff over the White House, Thursday December 7, 2017, in Washington, D.C., in honor of National Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day.
(Official White House Photos by Joyce N. Boghosian)

President Donald J. Trump, joined veterans of Pearl Harbor, addresses his remarks prior to signing a proclamation for National Pearl Harbor Reembrace Day in the Roosevelt Room at the White House, Thursday, December 7, 2017, in Washington, D.C.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

Friday, December 8, 2017

President Donald J. Trump looks on as Vice President Mike Pence swears-in newly confirmed U.S. Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security Kirstjen M. Nielsen, Friday, Dec. 8, 2017, in the Roosevelt Room at the White House in Washington, D.C. A cybersecurity expert, Nielsen, formerly served in the role as chief of staff and then as deputy to former DHS Secretary and now White House Chief of Staff Gen. John Kelly.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

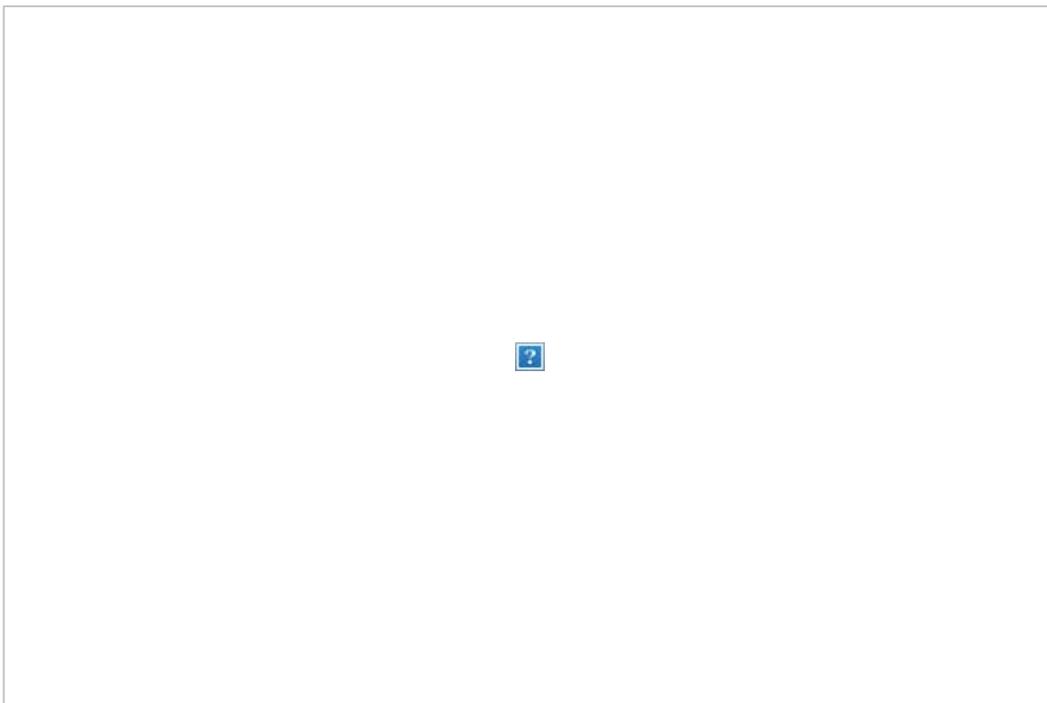

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Photos of the Week
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 5:50:07 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 6, 2017

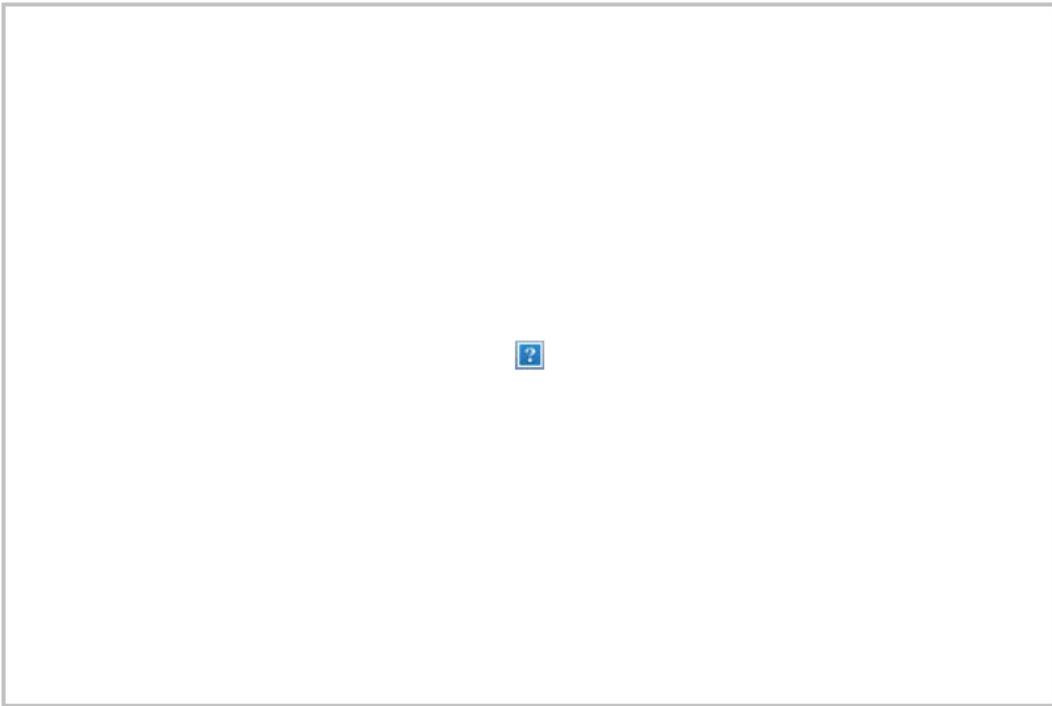

Photos of the Week

Sunday, October 1, 2017

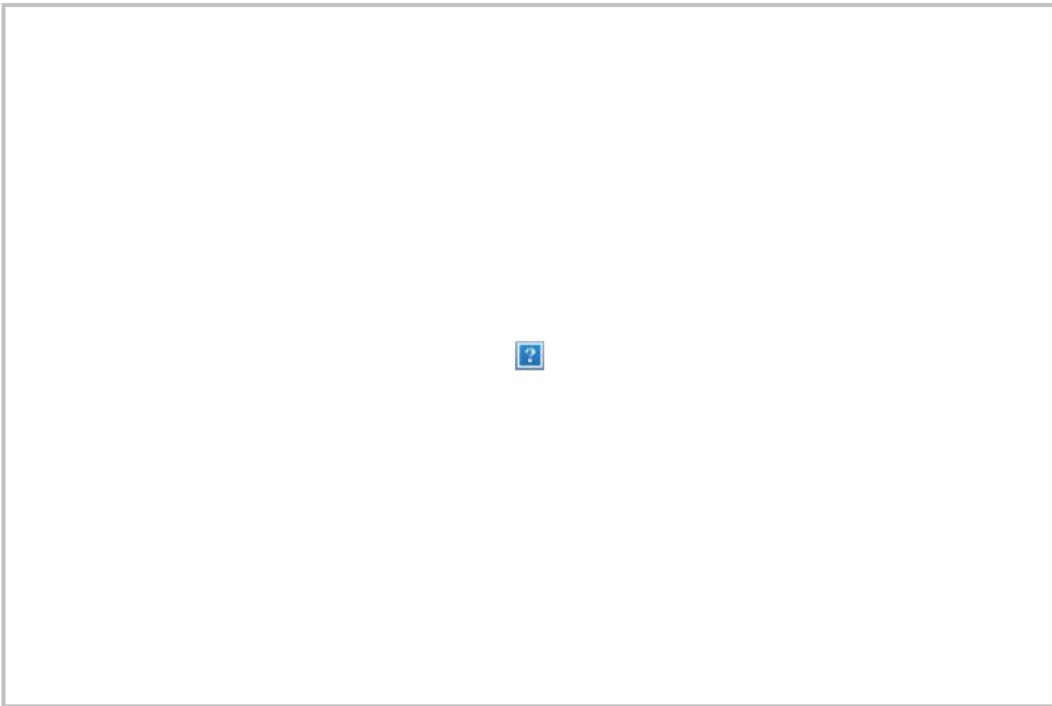

President Donald J. Trump aboard Marine One prepares to land at Liberty State Park in Jersey City, New Jersey, Sunday, October 1, 2017.
(Official White House Photo by Joyce N. Boghosian)

Monday, October 2, 2017

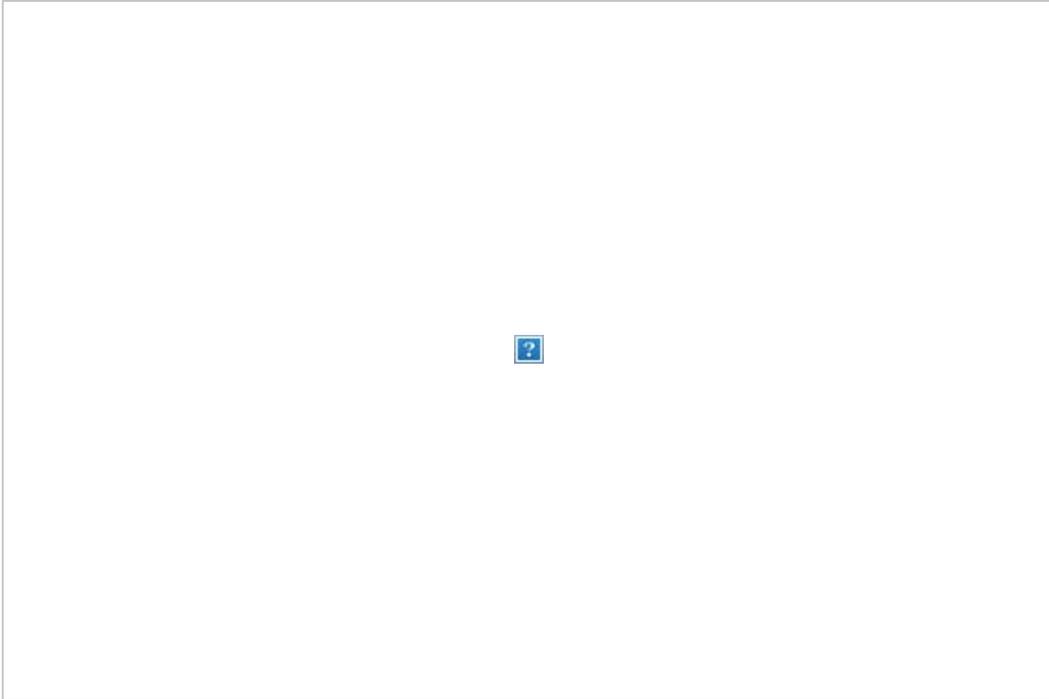

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump, joined by Vice President Mike Pence and Mrs. Karen Pence participate in a moment of silence honoring the victims of the Las Vegas Shooting, Monday, October 2, 2017, on the South Lawn of the White House, in Washington, D.C.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

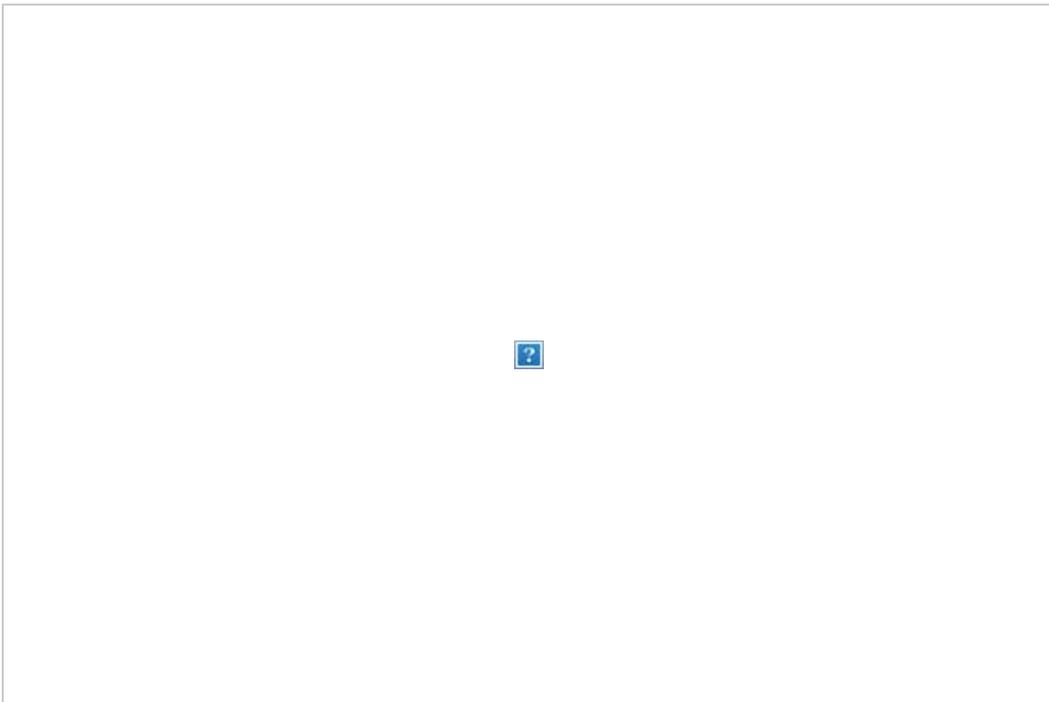

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump meet with Thailand Prime Minister, Prayut Chan-o-cha and his wife Assoc. Prof. Madam Naraporn Chan-o-cha in the Oval Office at the White House, Monday, October 2, 2017, in Washington, D.C.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

Tuesday, October 3, 2017

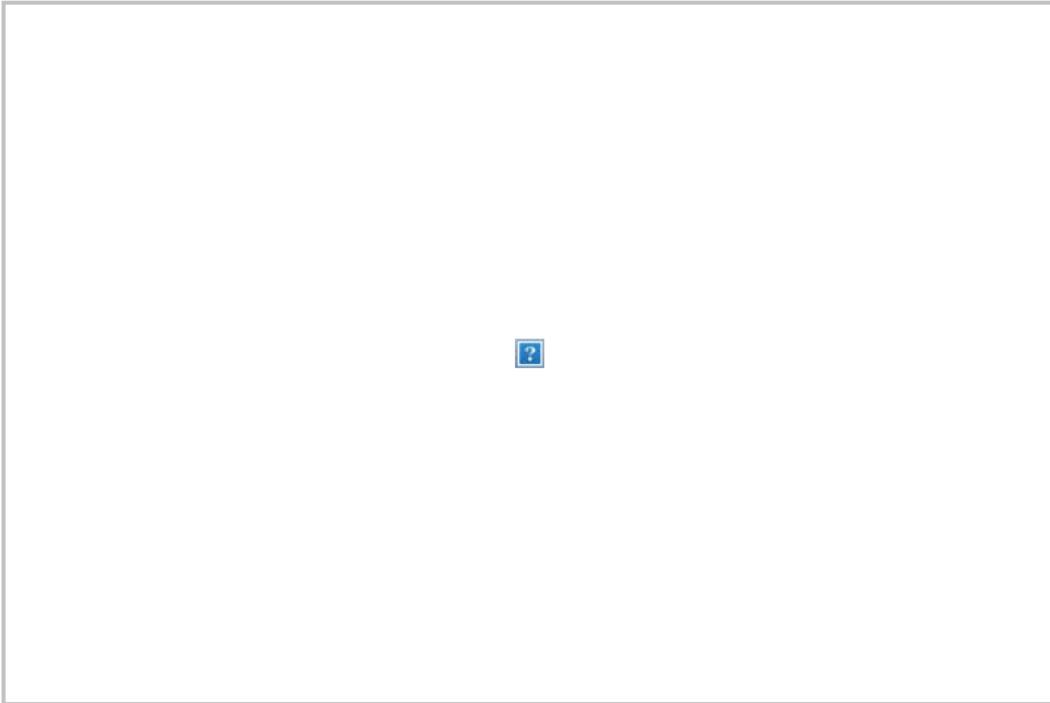

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump attend a briefing in an aircraft hangar at Muniz Air National Guard Base, joined by Ricardo Rossello, Governor of Puerto Rico, left, and his wife Beatriz Isabel Rossello, right, Tuesday, October 3, 2017, as President Trump receives an update on relief and recovery efforts for those impacted by Hurricane Maria in Puerto Rico from FEMA, Military personnel and Cabinet members.
(Official White House Photo Andrea Hanks)

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump, joined by FEMA administrator Brock Long, right, meet with individuals, Tuesday, October 3, 2017, as they tour a neighborhood in Carolina, Puerto Rico, impacted by Hurricane Maria. President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump also attended briefings on the ongoing relief and recovery efforts to provide shelter, food, clear roadways, and restore water and electric utilities to the island.

(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

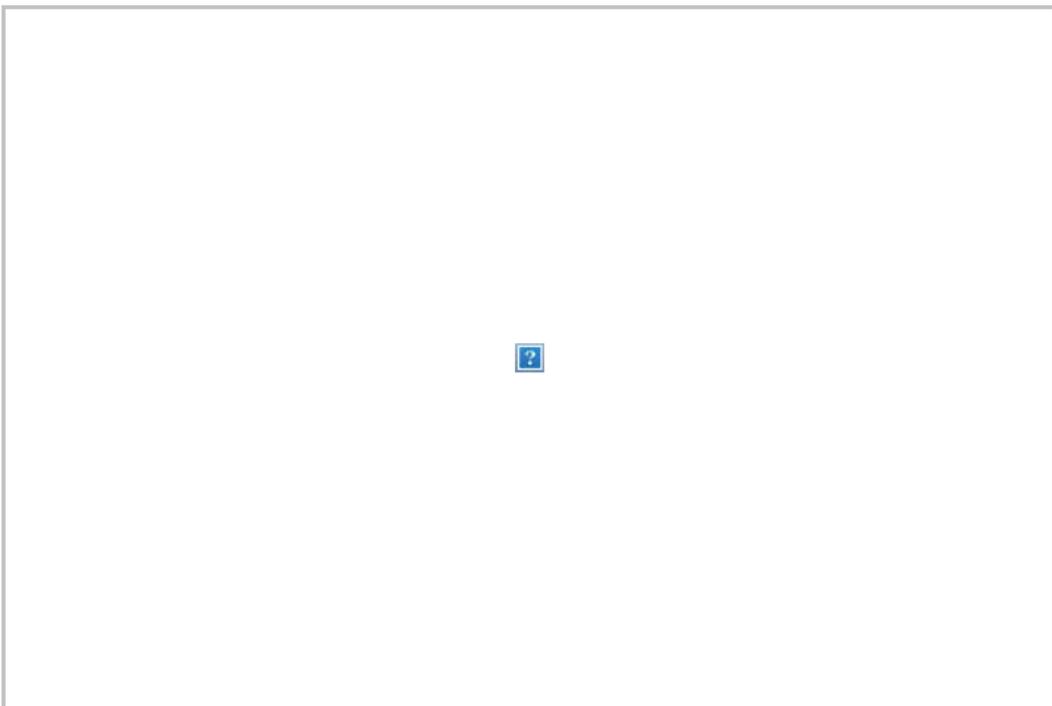

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump meet with individuals and families, Tuesday, October 3, 2017, in Carolina, Puerto Rico, who were impacted by Hurricane Maria. President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump also attended briefings on the ongoing relief and recovery efforts to provide shelter, food, clear roadways, and restore water and electric utilities to the island.

(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

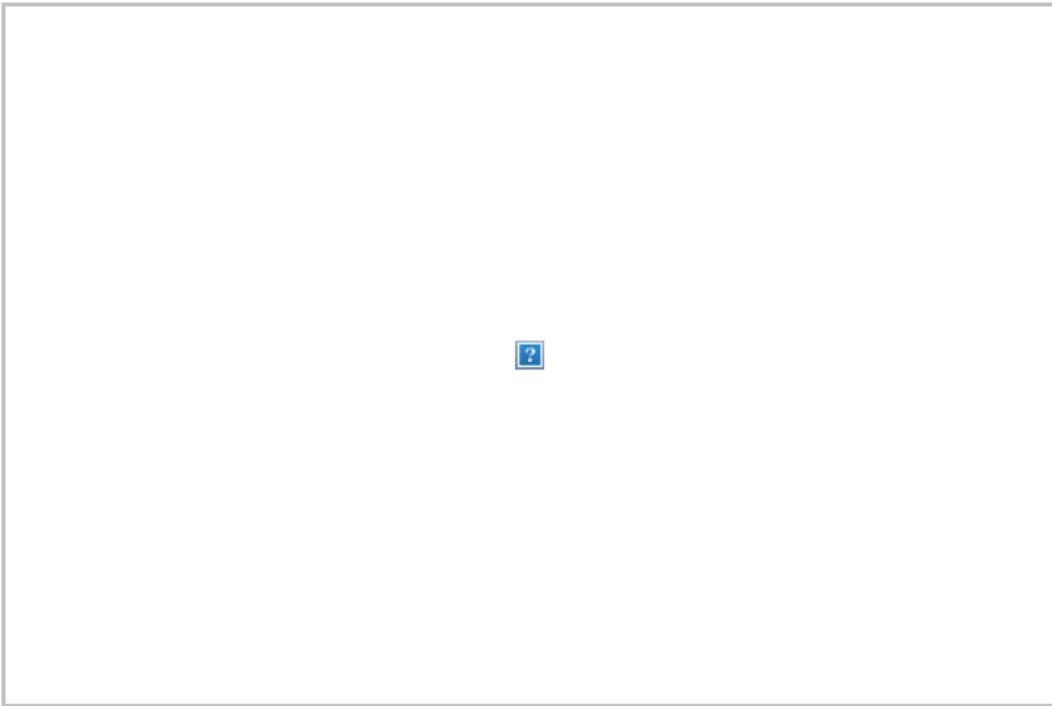

President Donald J. Trump salutes as he and First Lady Melania Trump arrive aboard the USS Kearsarge, Tuesday, October 3, 2017, off the coast of Puerto Rico.
(Official White House Photo by Andrea Hanks)

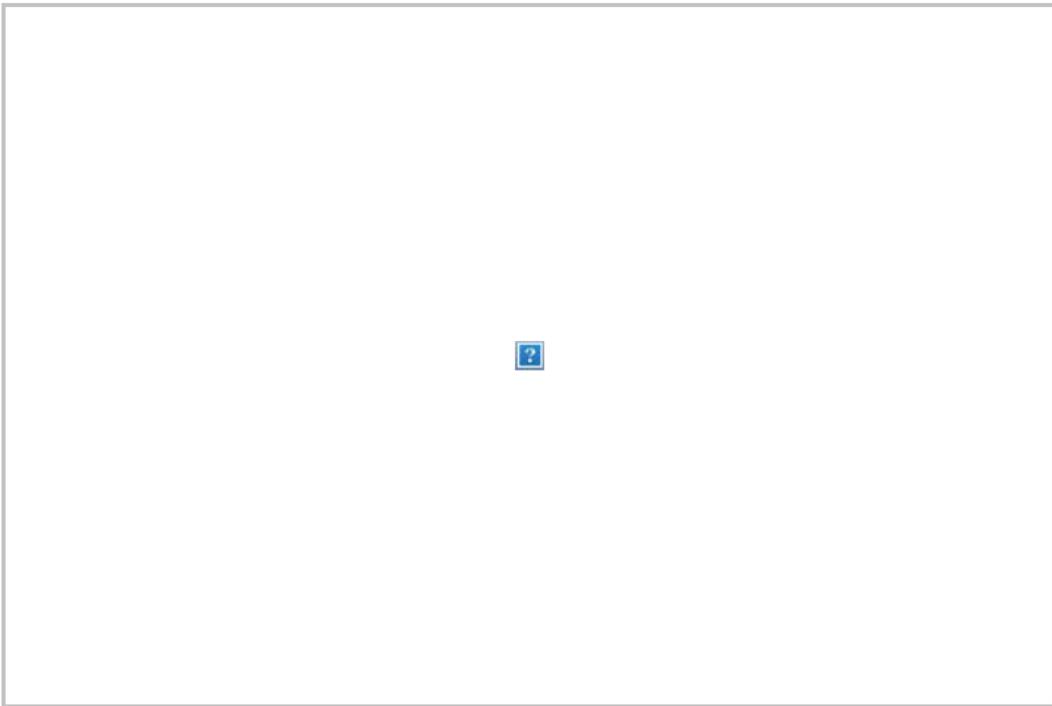

Vice President Mike Pence talks with patrons at Ajo Al's Mexican Café, Tuesday, October 3, 2017, in Phoenix Arizona, after a conversation on tax reform attended by Arizona Governor Doug Ducey.
(Official White House Photo by Joyce N. Boghosian)

Wednesday, October 4, 2017

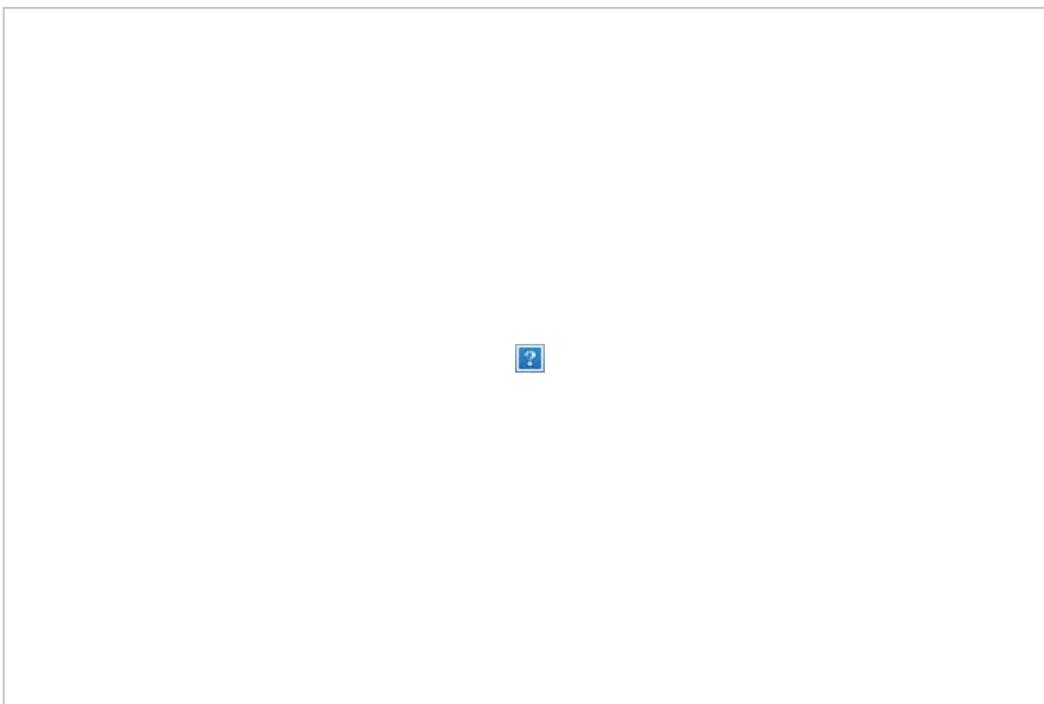

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump visit with patient Tiffany Huizar, Wednesday, October 4, 2017, at the University Medical Center of Southern Nevada, who was injured in the mass shooting, Sunday, October 1, 2017, in Las Vegas, Nevada.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

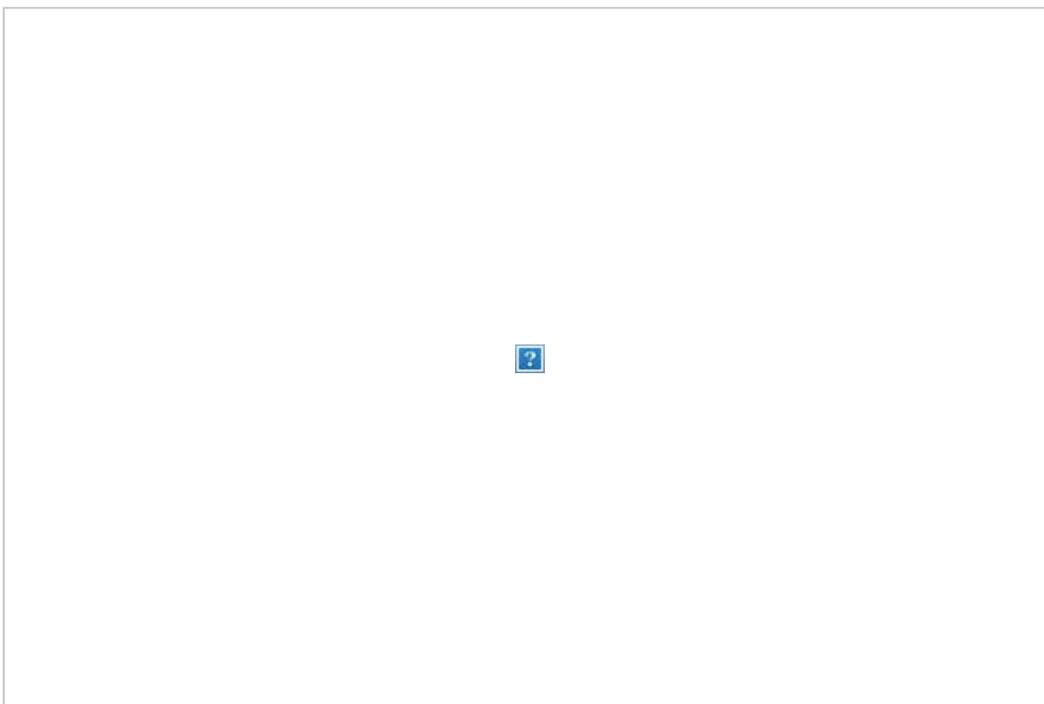

Vice President Mike Pence greets local law enforcement at the Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport, Wednesday, October 4, 2017, prior to boarding Air Force Two en route to Joint Base Andrews, in Maryland.
(Official White House Photo by Joyce N. Boghosian)

Thursday, October 5, 2017

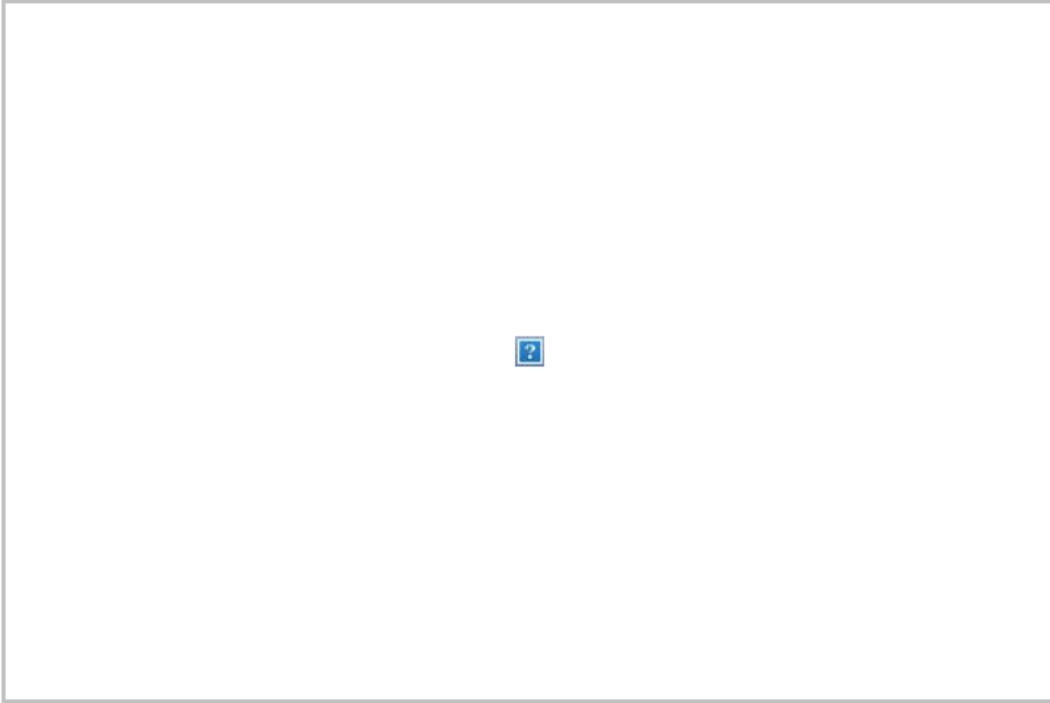

Vice President Mike Pence tours the Steven F. Udvar-Hazy Center, Thursday, October 5, 2017, in Chantilly, Virginia, prior to participating in the inaugural meeting of the National Space Council Meeting.
(Official White House Photo by D. Myles Cullen)

Friday, October 6, 2017

President Donald J. Trump and First Lady Melania Trump, joined by U.S. Secretary of Labor Alex Acosta, left, and U.S. Treasurer Jovita Carranza, celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month, Friday, October 6, 2017, in the East Room at the White House, in Washington, D.C.

(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

President Donald J. Trump signs the National Manufacturing Day Proclamation, Friday, October 6, 2017, in the Oval Office at the White House, in Washington, D.C.
(Official White House Photo by Shealah Craighead)

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report #1
Date: Monday, June 19, 2017 12:28:44 PM

From: George Condon [mailto:gcondon@nationaljournal.com]
Sent: Monday, June 19, 2017 12:13 PM
Subject: Pool Report #1

Arrival and Oval Office remarks with President of Panama

The Oval Office remarks from President Trump and Panama's President Juan Carolos Varela did not stray far from the standard expressions of welcome, gratitude and expectations for a productive discussion. The only variation came when the president voiced approval of the way the Panama Canal was constructed before its opening in 1914.

"We have many things to discuss. We're going to spend quite a bit of time today," said the president. "The Panama Canal is doing quite well." Then, looking toward his visitor who was seated in the chair to his right, the president added, "I think we did a good job building it, right?" President Varela responded, "Very good job."

President Trump then resumed: "But things are going well in Panama. The relationship has been very strong. We are developing new things to do and only getting stronger. Also our friendship with the president is very, very good. So I just want to thank you very much. It is an honor to have you at the White House."

President Varela responded: "I would like to thank President Trump and his wife for receiving us today at the White House. It is an honor for me to be here. It is long relationship between Panama and the United States and we face the same challenges in the region. So the idea for this visit is to work closely together as we face the same challenges we have in the region of Central America and Latin America... So I am happy to be here today and for four days in Washington. I am looking forward to this meeting and the meetings with the other directors of the agencies to establish, to work together very closely with the President Trump administration for the future of the region."

While the pool was in the Oval Office, President Varela's wife, journalist Lorena Castillo, was the only one seated on the couch on the side of the Panamanian president. She was wearing green. U.S. First Lady Melania Trump, wearing blue, was on the other couch.

The arrival was brief and as scheduled. The Trumps emerged from the South Diplomatic entrance at 11:34. The car bearing the visiting couple arrived and the two couples shook hands, turned and posed for pictures. After one wave to the cameras, they went inside to the Diplomatic Reception Room. Within two minutes, they emerged and walked along the Colonnade toward the Oval Office, the two presidents went first followed at some distance by the two first ladies. The two presidents waved to the pool cameras. They then paused at the steps leading down to the Rose Garden, turned and waved again at 11:37. By 11:39, they were seated and speaking to the pool.

George Condon, National Journal

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: POOL Report #3 -- More from two Oval Office sprays
Date: Friday, September 01, 2017 3:36:12 PM

From: Alexis Simendinger <asimendinger@realclearpolitics.com>

Date: September 1, 2017 at 3:01:13 PM EDT

Subject: POOL Report #3 -- More from two Oval Office sprays

Pool Report #3 — sending along some summary details from the Oval Office sprays tied to hurricane relief and response today.

Event #1: Faith-based and clergy (plus VP Pence)

You have the transcript... A group clergy and representatives of faith-based organizations, including one woman, stood in a circle around President Trump, who sat at the Resolute desk.

Attendees, per WH spokesperson:

Gary Bauer, President of American Values
Tim Clinton, President of American Association of Christian Counselors Kelvin Cobaris, Bishop of Impact Orlando
Jentezen Franklin, Senior Pastor of Free Chapel
Harry Jackson, Senior Pastor of Hope Christian Church
Robert Jeffress, Senior Pastor of First Baptist Church of Dallas
Todd Lamphere, Staff Pastor of New Destiny Christian Church
Johnnie Moore, Founder of The KAIROS Company
Tom Mullins, Senior Pastor of Christ Fellowship
Frank Page, CEO of the Executive Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention
Ralph Reed, Founder of Faith and Freedom Coalition
Jay Strack, President of Student Leadership University
Paula White, Senior Pastor of New Destiny Christian Church
Pasqual Urrabazo, Senior Pastor of International Church of Las Vegas Ramiro Pena, Senior Pastor and President of Ramiro Pena Ministries
Mario Bramnick, President of Latino Coalition for Israel

The president read from notes on a double-spaced piece of paper, which rested on top of a binder on the desk. The binder contained a proclamation for a Day of Prayer for the Victims of Hurricane Harvey and for our National Response and Recovery Efforts, designated Sunday, Sept. 3. The president signed a piece of paper. The guests applauded when the president completed his signature.

Eight of the guests, including Reed and Bauer, offered remarks at the president's invitation. One guest (Trump called him "Pastor Jeffress") led the group in prayer. At least five hands could be seen stretched out to touch the president's suit jacket on his shoulders while the group prayed with bowed heads. The president closed his eyes, bowed his head slightly and kept his two hands clasped together on top of the desk during the prayer. Pence clasped his hands in front of his light gray suit jacket and closed his eyes during the prayer, as well.

Trump, wearing a blue suit and pale blue & white checked tie and cufflinks, called the assembled group of guests "people of faith" who he commended as "respected" and "loved." The day of prayer was for everyone Sunday, but especially for those "horribly affected" by the hurricane disaster, he said.

Spotted in the Oval Office, standing behind the cameras and POOLers, were Staff Secretary Rob

Porter, Jared Kushner, Dan Scavino (recording the event with a smart phone), Sarah Sanders & Lindsay Walters, Keith Schiller, and CoS John Kelly, who came in late while tucking in his shirt under his suit jacket (he departed before all the remarks concluded).

Event #2: Disaster support representatives + First Lady and VP Pence)

Attendees, per WH spokesperson:

- Commissioner David Hudson, national commander, The Salvation Army USA
- Gail J. McGovern, president and CEO, The American Red Cross
- Kevin Ezell, president of Southern Baptist Disaster Relief

The president referred to two pages of single-spaced remarks on paper on the desk in front of him. His guests were to his right. Pence to his left. Mrs. Trump behind the seated president.

"These people have been absolutely incredible with what they've done...helping people affected by Hurricane Harvey," he said, later commending them after each spoke, adding "great job, great job."

The president said the hurricane was of "epic proportions." He said the people of Texas and Louisiana were "hit very hard." At one point, he referred to a map of Eastern/Coastal Texas, showing it to the cameras to underscore where help was deployed.

Trump called the federal, state and local coordination "pretty much unprecedented."

Trump, reading from his prepared notes, praised the organizations represented by his guests, and the many nonprofits working to help the victims of the hurricane disaster. He noted that they "represent the generosity and determination and unbreakable spirit of the American people."

The vice president, asked to speak, noted that he had visited Texas on Thursday and had witnessed the "resilience, the fortitude and the strength" of those impacted by the storm and flooding. Pence said the administration "will be seeking resources from Congress," and he referenced the website, NVOAD.org (national volunteer organizations in action).

The first lady wore a black, sleeveless dress with diagonal buttons across the bodice, cinched with a thin black belt. The president asked his wife if she wanted to say anything, and when she was finished, praised her, adding that the first lady had not known in advance that he would ask her to speak off-the-cuff.

"I want to thank all the volunteers all across the country," the first lady said. "Fantastic job." She noted that she and the president would be in Texas on Saturday. Her message to disaster victims, she added, gazing into the cameras, was, "be strong, and everything will be okay at the end."

Spotted in the Oval Office were Homeland Security Adviser Tom Bossert (thanked by Trump during his remarks) and Staff Secretary Rob Porter.

Alexis Simendinger
White House Correspondent
RealClearPolitics
202-591-0846
Asimendinger@realclearpolitics.com

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report #3 - Three Seas family photo and roundtable
Date: Thursday, July 06, 2017 5:38:54 AM

From: "Phillip, Abby" <abby.phillip@washpost.com>
Date: July 6, 2017 at 11:35:16 AM GMT+2
Subject: Pool report #3 - Three Seas family photo and roundtable

President Trump and leaders of Baltic and Central European countries entered the Counsel Room with the Royal Palace at 11:13 am local time. They stood for several minutes for the "family photo."

Trump separately greeted Polish President Duda and Croatian President Graves-Kitarovic, shaking their hands and saying a few words that were inaudible to your pooler.

Minutes before the heads of state arrived, your pooler spotted the U.S and Polish delegations entering an adjacent room where a Three Seas roundtable will be held. Among them: Ross, Kushner, Mnuchin, and NSC spokesman Michael Anton.

Your pool entered the Assembly Room within the Palace, a massive gold ornate room where a large Oval table has been set up. (Photo attached.)

Trump sat beside Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin on his right and President Duda on his left.

"This is a beautiful room, I must say. I love beautiful rooms," Trump commented.

Wilbur Ross and Jared Kushner sat behind Trump to his right.

This region has a special importance to me. As you know, my wife is from Slovenia," Trump added.

"We stand with the Three Seas nations," Trump said. "We welcome his historic opportunity to deepen our economic partnership with your region."

"Your people have been held back by the old roads, railway and pipelines..."

Trump said the US supports the creation of the Three Seas business forum.

He commented on US economy, stating that the stock market had reached historic highs. "We picked up in market value almost $4 trillion dollars" since the election, Trump said.

"Personally, I've picked up nothing. Everybody else is getting very rich. That's ok."

Trump congratulated Poland on the receipt of the first liquefied natural gas shipment from the United States.

"The United States will never use energy to coerce your nations," Trump said.

"We stand ready willing and able to help with your energy needs and other needs."

Your pool was escorted out just as the President of Croatia began to speak at 11:33 am.

We are now holding...

Sent from my iPhone.

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report #3
Date: Tuesday, December 05, 2017 11:32:32 AM

From: Kumar, Anita [mailto:akumar@mcclatchydc.com]
Sent: Tuesday, December 5, 2017 11:30 AM
Subject: Pool report #3

The White House passes along this information to the pool:

Today, the President will host four families from around the country in the Oval Office to hear how tax reform will empower them to grow their businesses and provide a better life for themselves and their children. They will be joined by Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway and United States Treasurer Jovita Carranza, who were both small business owners prior to joining the Administration.

They were chosen to ensure that the group would be a good representation of the businesses around the country that stand to benefit from tax reform. Some of the individuals were also mentioned by the President during his speeches on tax reform (highlighted in yellow).

Jessica Unruh – Representative for the Coteau Properties Co. Freedom Mine In Mercer County, North Dakota; Chairwoman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee in North Dakota legislature, and cattle rancher

Hometown: Beulah, North Dakota

Personal Story: Jessica is an environmental specialist with The Coteau Properties Company Freedom Mine in Beulah, North Dakota. The Freedom Mine is one of the largest lignite coalmines in the United States. Jessica provides a unique perspective on the impact tax reform would have on North Dakota's energy industry as she serves in a management capacity with an energy company and as head of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. Jessica understands the important role the energy sector plays in North Dakota's economy, and with some energy prices declining, believes the federal government can help provide momentum by enacting comprehensive tax reform. Jessica feels North Dakota's energy companies would be more inclined to hire and grow if the business tax rate were lowered. She also believes that preferential tax treatment of certain types of energy is unproductive and is harmful to North Dakota's largest energy companies.

Jessica is also a mother of 2, was one of the youngest members ever to serve in the North Dakota Senate, and owns a family cattle ranch. As active professionally as Jessica is, she anticipates that the type of middle class tax relief the President has called for would be a major help to her family and allow Jessica to provide her family with more.

Aaron Williams – Director of Field Marketing and Analyst Relations at Topcoder

Business Locations: Indianapolis

Hometown: Indianapolis

Personal Story: Aaron, married with two young children, is an employee of Topcoder, a creative company that crowdsources solutions to companies' IT needs. Through his business, he sees first-hand how our sky-high corporate tax rate encourages offshoring and stifles the ability for American companies to reinvest in their employees. Aaron witnesses the disabling effect of our tax code at work, and then experiences it, first-hand at home. He and his wife are blessed with the opportunity to work in an emerging technology sector, but the complex personal tax system forced upon his family a burden of thousands of additional, unexpected dollars in federal taxes. When filing his federal tax return, he craves simplicity, as do many other Americans. And ultimately, he wants to reduce his tax burden so that he may reinvest in his children, providing for them opportunities in life that he did not have.

Jason Beardsly – owner of The Underground Movement

Hometown: Columbus, Ohio

Personal Story: Jason Beardsley is a Green Beret and Special Operations Forces veteran who founded his company, 'The Underground Movement' (TUM), in 2012 after more than 20 years of distinguished military service. TUM is an apparel company that celebrates rugged individualism with unique graphic designs on custom T-shirts and other wearable pieces; all made in the United States. Jason and his employees bring a passion for American exceptionalism – honoring those men, women, and events that shaped our nation into the land of liberty.

As Jason puts it, he went from “the most interesting job in the world” to entrepreneurship. Jason: “I went from chasing terrorist to chasing cotton.”

Jason recently transitioned from a brick and mortar retail operation to an online business model to keep pace with the changing dynamics of the apparel business.

Jason insisted a reduction in the business tax rate would allow him to put more money into research and development and improve his company’s products. Jason believes superior product offerings are his key to sustained growth for his firm.

Jason believes tax reform would further enhance “the American resurgence” already underway under the Trump administration. As a business owner, Jason can sense the improved economic confidence that everyday Americans are only recently experiencing and believes that a tax cut for middle class Americans will benefit companies like his.

Brian Steorts – owner of Flags of Valor

Hometown: Alexandria, Virginia

Personal Story: Brian is a veteran of 15 and a half years. After 8 consecutive combat deployments to the Middle East, Afghanistan, and the Horn of Africa, he found himself rehabbing from a service-related injury. He needed a new way to focus his mind while he rebuilt his body.

Brian began woodworking initially as a means of therapy, but his woodworking eventually went from a hobby to an obsession. After donating several pieces he created to the families of fallen EOD soldiers, he realized there was a lot more work to do.

Brian transformed his passion into Flags of Valor, a Veteran-owned, Veteran-operated, Veteran-made company, crafting beautiful works of American art. His dream became a reality – employing veterans, raising money for veteran and first-responder charities, and providing Americans with an exceptional product.

Brian launched the company two years ago and currently has two facilities. Has over 27 employees, 18 of which are former combat veterans, the majority of which were wounded during their time in service.

Brian plans to open additional facilities soon. Brian would like to open his facilities near VA hospitals to ensure he can continue to hire veterans for full time work and also offer transitional employment while they` are staying in the hospital.

Brian believes that a cut in the business tax rate would help bring his growth plans closer to a reality. Brian prides himself on the fact that 18 veterans and their families rely on his business for their livelihood and wants to continue to grow to provide opportunities to more veterans.

--

Anita Kumar

White House Correspondent

McClatchy Newspapers

202-383-6017 (office)

202-304-9868 (cell)

akumar@mcclatchydc.com

Twitter: @anitakumar01

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: pool report #3/White House Christmas tree lighting starting
Date: Thursday, November 30, 2017 5:44:19 PM

I From: "Gillman, Todd" <tgillman@dallasnews.com>

L

Subject: pool report #3/White House Christmas tree lighting starting

Greetings from President's Park on The Ellipse, on a lovely late fall evening for the National Christmas tree lighting ceremony. Temperature in the mid-50s with little breeze.

The program will air Monday night Dec. 4 on the Hallmark Channel. (Main page of program attached.) The co-hosts were Kathie Lee Gifford and Dean Cain. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is scheduled to introduce the first couple. The stage was covered in red carpet and decorated generously with poinsettias, and boxes stacked like Christmas presents, wrapped in red and white paper – designs included waves, reindeer, and paisley – and with golden ribbon and bows. The crowd waited patiently and, fortunately, without discomfort on a mild evening.

The pool was seated in the front VIP section, facing the stage and the U.S. Navy band. Seat labels nearby were labeled for House Whip Steve Scalise, “Kushner family” and “Donald Trump Jr. family.” Don Jr. and his wife walked in, with Tiffany Trump, and Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner, with kids, a few minutes before the 5 p.m. scheduled start time.

The U.S. Navy Sea Chanters began singing Christmas carols, Carol of the Bells, then The Little Drummer Boy while awaiting the president. A lectern with presidential seal was on stage surrounded on three sides -- open facing the White House -- with protective glass.

According to the White House Historical Association, the first Christmas tree in the White House was placed in the second floor Yellow Oval Room in 1889, during the Benjamin Harrison administration. Grover Cleveland was the first to use electric lights on a family Christmas tree, in 1894. And Calvin Coolidge was the first president to preside over the National Christmas tree lighting ceremony on the Ellipse, in 1923. More here.

Warm-up show included a chat in the audience with a few Girl Scouts from Kentucky. One girl said she wanted a hover board, others said they wanted an American Girl doll. One wanted a pony.

More to come.

Todd J. Gillman
Washington Bureau Chief
Dallas Morning News
202.661.8421
202.441.6840 mobile tgillman@dallasnews.com @toddgillman

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report #4
Date: Monday, May 29, 2017 12:05:54 PM

From: Chris Johnson <cjohnson@washblade.com>
Date: May 29, 2017 at 12:02:24 PM EDT
Subject: Pool Report #4

POTUS entered the amphitheater at 11:15, joining the official party to the sound of the "Hail to the Chief" and applause.

Beginning his remarks at around 11:30, POTUS in honor of Memorial Day paid tribute to America's fallen troops, saying words cannot express "the purity of their love of the totality of their courage."

POTUS observed both the sacrifice of the fallen as well as their families.

"Special, special people," POTUS said.

Among the losses POTUS acknowledged was the loss of DHS Secretary John Kelly's son Robert in Afghanistan.

"Today, 300 million American hearts are joined together with yours," POTUS said.

Acknowledging Gold Star families in general, POTUS said "they were angels sent to us by God, and they share one title, the title of hero."

POTUS also the military service during WWII of former Sen. Bob Dole, who was present with his wife Sen. Elizabeth Dole.

POTUS told the stories of other fallen troops. One of them, Andrew Byers, died in Afghanistan protecting an Afghan soldier and U.S. troops after running through a "hail of bullets" to rescue them, POTUS said. POTUS recognized his parent David and Rose Byers in the audience.

Also noted by POTUS was a service member named Chris. POTUS recognized his wife Jane who was present. Your pooler missed Chris' last name.

"To every Gold Star family, God is with you and your loved ones are with Him," POTUS said.

"Their stories are now woven into the soul of our nation, into the Stars and Stripes of our flag and into the beating hearts of our great, great people," POTUS said.

POTUS also recognized the Unknown soldiers, saying they "fought and died in a greet and noble act."

POTUS concluded his remarks at 11:51 and was escorted back to motorcade.

The first speaker at the event was Chair of Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Joseph Dunlap, who urged attendees to "do something more" than mark the graves of fallen service members on Memorial Day and "find a method" of serving the nation.

Introducing POTUS was Defense Secretary James Mattis, who called Arlington Cemetery the place of "America's courageous dead" and told his audience to remember the fallen with acts in their memory.

--

Chris Johnson
Washington Blade

Chief Political & White House Reporter

Follow me on Twitter:

<https://twitter.com/chrisjohnson82>

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report #5
Date: Monday, May 22, 2017 6:57:13 AM

From: Annie Karni <akarni@politico.com>

Date: May 22, 2017 at 1:52:45 PM GMT+3

Subject: Pool Report #5

Sorry for the delay. We were wheels up from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, via helicopter, at 1:28 p.m. We were wheels down at 1:40 p.m., but Marine One has not yet landed.

Here is the report about the welcome ceremony:

POTUS and FLOTUS, dressed in a bright, white skirt suit, deplaned at 12:39 p.m. The moment was commemorated with a short trumpet honk.

The greeting for POTUS in Israel couldn't have been more different from the greeting in Saudi Arabia. The red carpet here at Ben Gurion Airport was flanked with IDF soldiers in uniform — many of them women wearing skirts that revealed their legs, and carrying machine guns. Some people in the audience were wearing white baseball caps that read: "Ever Stronger: President Trump in Israel 2017," and featured a picture of an American and an Israeli flag.

Netanyahu and his wife, Sara, dressed in a red dress, greeted POTUS and FLOTUS at the bottom of the stairs, along with President Rivlin and his wife.

Staffers spotted seated at the welcome ceremony: Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump (wearing an incredibly conservative, longsleeved outfit and a fascinator), Hope Hicks, Dina Powell, Jason Greenblatt, Gary Cohn, Stephen Miller, H.R. McMaster and Ambassador Dermer.

Trump made a circuit down the carpet and around the IDF soldiers and then stood at attention next to FLOTUS and the Netanyahus for the American and the Israeli national anthems.

There were welcome remarks from Rivlin, Netanyahu and Trump, in that order, all underscoring the importance of the unbreakable bond between Israel and the United States.

Some extended excerpts. Pardon the lack of punctuation and/or caps.

Rivlin: "your visit is a symbol of the unbreakable bond between Israel and America. you are the president of Israel's greatest, most important ally. you are a true friend of Israel and of the Jewish people. mr. president — the world needs a strong United States. the Middle East needs a strong United States. Israel needs a strong united states. and may i say, the united states also needs a strong israel.

"in the middle east, an area that suffers from terrorism and madness, the partnership between the united states and israel shines like a beacon of liberty and promise the bond between us is one between states but also between people. we share common values, and we share the hope for peace. the people of israel are excited by your arrival and have great expectations for this visit. we thank you for your commitment to israel's ability to face the threats of today and of tomorrow."

"mr. president, today i will have the honor to host you in jerusalem. we are honored to have you here with us as we mark 50 years of jerusalem day.... jerusalem is the beating heart of the jewish people as it has been for 3,000 years. mr. president, you come here to israel from saudi arabia. you will be at the western wall and visit the holy church and then you are going to the vatican. in just one journey you will visit the three holiest places for islam, judaism and christianity. we each have different beliefs, but more importantly the same god. we can work together toward a better future, we can continue to do so together mr. president.

"welcome to israel. god bless you, god bless the first lady, god bless america, god bless israel."

Netanyahu welcome remarks extended excerpt:

"Never before has the first foreign trip of a president of the united states included a visit to israel. thank you mr. president, thank you for this powerful expression of your friendship to israel. yesterday in Saudi Arabia you delivered a forceful speech of clarity and conviction. you called on all nations to drive out terrorists and extremists, you called for the forces of civilization to confront the forces of barbarism. for 69 years, israel has been doing precisely that. we've been on the front lines...we've fought terrorism, and we've built a modern vibrant democratic jewish state. in doing so we've protected all faiths: muslims, christians everyone.

throughout the middle east, christian communities are decimated, minorities persecuted. here in israel, we're proud to have growing and thriving christian communities. and we guarantee the rights of all.

"we've already made peace with egypt. ..israels hand is extend to all nations, including the palestinains. ... mr. president, you just flew from riyadh to tel aviv, i hope that one day an israeli prime minster will be able to fly from tel aviv to riyadh. may your first trip to our region prove to be historic..."

"donald and melania, on behalf of the government and the people of israel we welcome you to the state of israel may god bless you mr. president may god bless israel and may god bless the united states of america."

Trump remarks, extended excerpts:

"Thank you and shalom. it is wonderful to be here in israel. to president rivlin, mrs rivlin, PM netanyau, mrs netanyahu, i'm deeply grateful for your invitation and very, very honored to be with you....i have come to the sacred and ancient land to reaffirm the unbreakable bond between the United States and the state of Israel. in this land so rich in history, israel has built one of the worlds great civilizations, a strong, resilient determined and prosperous nation. it is also a nation forged in the commitment that we will never allow the horrors and atrocities of the last century to be repeated. "

He said he wants to help "build a future where the nations of the region are at peace and all of our children can grow, and grow up strong, and grow up free from terrorism and violence."

In Saudi Arabia, he said, "i have found new reasons for hope. just concluded a visit to Saudi Arabia. yesterday i met with king Salmon and with the leaders from across the muslim and arab world. in that visit, we reached historic agreements to pursue greater and greater cooperation in the fight against terrorism. ...

we have before us a rare opportunity to bring security and stability and peace to this region and to its people. defeating terrorism and creating a future of harmony, prosperity and peace."

Pool was ushered to the copters before Trump was finished with his remarks.

Annie Karni

White House Reporter

POLITICO

718-915-3177

@AnnieKarni

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report #6 - Info on Walter Reed
Date: Thursday, December 21, 2017 6:52:20 PM

From: Chris Johnson [mailto:cjohnson@washblade.com]
Sent: Thursday, December 21, 2017 6:50 PM
Subject: Pool Report #6 - Info on Walter Reed

From White House Press Secretary Sarah Sanders:

The President met with injured and ill from all branches of our Armed Forces in various stages of recovery today at Walter Reed Medical Center. Details about a few of the men and women he met with are below.

Purple Heart Recipient:

First Lieutenant Victor Prato (25) of the 127th Airborne Engineer Battalion, Fort Bragg, North Carolina was injured in November of 2017 while deployed in Afghanistan where he suffered multiple soft tissue injuries following a vehicle-borne IED blast and motor vehicle rollover. He has served in the Army for 2 years and is from Somers, New York.

USO Center (where press was present):

Sergeant John Peck and his wife Jessica

Staff Sergeant Liam Dwyer and his wife Meghan

Chief Warrant Officer Bradley Palm and his wife Keri

Petty Officer Raven Thomas

Staff Sergeant Franz Walkup

Staff Sergeant Daniel Frawley and his wife Susan along with his children Joshua and Amber

--

Chris Johnson
Washington Blade
Chief Political & White House Reporter
Follow me on Twitter:
><https://twitter.com/chrisjohnson82><

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: pool report #7 - French readout of call
Date: Tuesday, June 27, 2017 2:01:21 PM

From: John Bennett [mailto:JohnBennett@cqrollcall.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 27, 2017 1:47 PM
Subject: pool report #7 - French readout of call

Pool report #7 - June 27, 2017

Fox News Radio's Jon Decker passes along this readout of President Trump's call with French President Macron, via the Élysée Palace:

President Trump began the exchange with a congratulatory message to the President following victory in the legislative elections.

The purpose of the meeting was to prepare for the bilateral meeting of the two presidents during the G20 meeting in Hamburg on 7 and 8 July.

They also took stock of the Syrian issue and the need to work towards a common response to a chemical attack in Syria.

The two presidents spoke about the situation in the Gulf and the need to avoid any escalation in the region. Both stressed that the fight against terrorism and its financing is a common challenge for all the countries of the region.

President Macron renewed his invitation to President Trump and his wife to attend the parade on July 14th during which this year will be celebrated the 100 years of the entry of the United States into the war with the French troops during the First World War.

John T. Bennett
White House Correspondent
CQ Roll Call
johnbennett@cqrollcall.com | @BennettJohnT - Twitter

This e-mail may contain confidential material. If you are not an intended recipient, please notify the sender and delete all copies. It may also contain personal views which are not the views of CQ Roll Call or its owner, The Economist Group. We may monitor e-mail to and from our network. For company information go to <http://legal.economistgroup.com>.

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report #8
Date: Tuesday, December 05, 2017 3:02:30 PM

From: Kumar, Anita [mailto:akumar@mcclatchydc.com]
Sent: Tuesday, December 5, 2017 3:00 PM
Subject: Pool report #8

Family comments from the Oval Office event:

Brian Steorts:

He said he is part of a small veteran family who runs his own business.

"Anything that is less complex with lower rates....I can't tell you what page 391 of a 500-page document says but what I can tell you is those funds we can reinvest into our people and our company."

Steorts was the one who gave POTUS the flag that was made by combat veterans in Ashburn, Va. He was seated next to what looked to his wife and two young daughters.

Jason Beardsly:

"It means a lot to us seeing the reform. The resurgence in the economy will allow companies to onshore their business...Too many things have gone offshore....Putting the energy back in the consumer is where it belongs. Everything you do to make taxes easier for us informs and strengthens the rest of America."

Jessica Unruh:

"We don't want handouts. We just want relief. We want tax relief."

He said she was also thankful for his decrease in regulations. "Regulatory reform coupled with tax reform is exactly what we need to help make America great again."

Unruh gave POTUS the Make Coal Great Again hat.

Aaron Williams:

Williams made a reference to POTUS taking Mike Pence from Indiana. "You took one of our finest."

"This tax reform is a huge thing for our country. It's significant."

Williams had the young boy on his lap who POTUS spoke to. The boy's name is Aaron Williams, same as his dad.

Other POTUS quotes:

Regarding taxes:

"We are going to get rates way down."

Regarding trade deals:

"We have people sitting in this position that made the worst deals I have ever seen....We're going to be fixing that."

"These are great families that are doing well and now they are doing much better, maybe much better than ever before. A lot of changes have taken place over the last 10 months and we're very happy to have all of you here....This is nothing compared to what it will be over a period of years. It's happening a lot faster than anyone projected."

Bios are in pool report #3

POTUS did not answer any shouted questions.

Please check quotes against transcript.

--

Anita Kumar
White House Correspondent
McClatchy Newspapers

202-383-6017 (office)
202-304-9868 (cell)
akumar@mcclatchydc.com
Twitter: @anitakumar01

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report #9- return to the guest house
Date: Friday, July 07, 2017 6:15:54 PM

From: "Phillip, Abby" <abby.phillip@washpost.com>
Date: July 8, 2017 at 12:07:21 AM GMT+2
Subject: Pool report #9- return to the guest house

After an incredibly long night, we are rolling at 11:54 pm local time toward the guest house.

At around 11:50 pm a few minutes before we departed, the Russian delegation's motorcade passed us and left the dinner venue. The French delegation, including President Emmanuel Macron and his wife on foot, walked passed out motorcade just before that.

We arrived at the guest house not long after, at roughly 12:04 pm.

We haven't seen POTUS in many hours but he has reached his temporary home in Hamburg.

We have a travel photo lid. Goodnight, everyone.

Sent from my iPhone.

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: pool report #9
Date: Saturday, July 22, 2017 2:52:02 PM

From: "Bierman, Noah" <noah.bierman@latimes.com>
Date: July 22, 2017 at 2:48:24 PM EDT
Subject: pool report #9

Forwarding from White House:

Hi, All -

From a White House spokesman the President is having lunch with Chief of Staff Reince Priebus, Stephen Miller, and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and his wife.

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report 4
Date: Saturday, July 22, 2017 12:17:31 PM

From: "Bierman, Noah" <noah.bierman@latimes.com>
Date: July 22, 2017 at 11:41:47 AM EDT
Subject: Pool report 4

The commissioning ceremony is being streamed and open to credentialed press but here are some highlights and notes. As always please check quotes against transcript.

President Trump spoke for 17 minutes and did not make news.

Just before 11:30, he declared "I hereby place the United States Ship Gerald R. Ford in commission."

A flag was then hoisted on deck while those in attendance clapped.

"American hands and American steel constructed a 100,000 ton message to the world. American might is second to none," Trump said.

Trump called for an end to the defense sequester.

"Sequester, not good" has led to deferred maintenance, lack of investment and "shortfall in military readiness," he said.

He said he reached a deal to secure an additional $20b for defense this year and asked for additional $54 b next year.

"Now we need Congress to do its job and pass the budget" that gives stable funding to military needs.

"President Trump, I will tell you, you will get it...but I don't mind getting a little hand so call that congressman and call that senator and make sure you get it...and by the way you can also call those senators to make sure you get healthcare."

The line about calling Congress to get defense funding drew loud applause.

He called the Ford "the newest, largest, most advanced aircraft carrier in the history of the world" and praised the builders as the best. He also paid tribute to President Ford's career, including his naval service, and his wife Betty. If he could see this ship today, "president Ford would see his vision brought to life and he would see his legacy of service being carries out by each and every one of you."

About 6,500 people – many in uniform -- were crowded onto the main deck, the hangar bay, a vast space partially enclosed by high white rafters with exposed pipes and hanging lights. It was very hot and many were sweating. Another 2,500 were watching from the pier on jumbotrons, per the Navy. The roof over the speakers' platform has a large American flag. Two blue banners with yellow writing spell out "USS Gerald R. Ford Commissioning" and the ship's slogan, "Integrity at the Helm."

Announced attendees sated at a platform with red, white and blue bunting include former Def. Sec. Don Rumsfeld, former Vice President Cheney, Sens Wicker of Mississippi, Sen Peters of Michigan, Gov. McCauliffe of Virginia and Gov. Rick Snyder of Michigan. Sec. Mattis and Pres Trump drew loudest applause. Pres Trump walked on stage and waved in both directions and stood smiling and straight ahead at the military band played "Hail to the Chief" and sailors performed a 21 gun salute from the pier's entrance.

The ship's sponsor, Susan Ford Bales, daughter to the late president, was also introduced several times to applause and spoke as part of the commissioning. She gave the final command: "Man our ship and bring her to life." At that call, sailors dressed in white ran from a formation on deck inside the hangar as the band played "Anchors Away." The crowd clapped in rhythm and cheered.

The ship then sounded all its horns, including the crash, collision and fog horn (like a bay's first cry) as POTUS and other dignitaries sat on the platform.

Sorry for earlier typos as I was sending from an iphone while walking down ladders below the flight deck.

Best,

Noah Bierman

Los Angeles Times

Washington Bureau

202-824-8351

@noahbierman

Los Angeles Times • Chicago Tribune • The Baltimore Sun • Newport News Daily Press •
Hartford Courant • Allentown Morning Call • Orlando Sentinel • South Florida Sun Sentinel •
San Diego Union-Tribune • The Virginia Gazette • Carroll County Times • Annapolis Capital Gazette

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report 4
Date: Wednesday, June 14, 2017 12:01:12 PM

From: "Diaz, Kevin B" <Kevin.Diaz@chron.com>

Date: June 14, 2017 at 11:53:20 AM EDT

Subject: Pool report 4

POTUS spoke in the Diplomatic Reception Room for about 4:30 minutes, praising the quick action of the congressional security detail and Alexandria police and fire.

Announced death of assailant.

FBI leading probe.

Praised Scalise as a 'friend ' patriot ' and 'fighter'

'He will recover from this assault'

Said he, Melania and America are praying for him.

Offered help to Scalise's wife 'anything '

Called for unity:

"We may have our differences, but we do well in times like this."

"We can all agree that we are blessed to be Americans."

"Please take a moment today to cherish those you love."

More quotes to come, and likely WH transcript.

Kevin Diaz

Houston chronicle/ HEARST

202-689-5157

Sent from my iPhone

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report 5 : fuller quotes from Trump live, televised statement on shooting
Date: Wednesday, June 14, 2017 12:25:53 PM

From: "Diaz, Kevin B" <Kevin.Diaz@chron.com>

Date: June 14, 2017 at 12:14:35 PM EDT

Subject: Pool report 5 : fuller quotes from Trump live, televised statement on shooting

Here are some fuller quotes from the president's announcement a little after 12:30 pm.

"Congressman Steve Scalise, a member of House leadership, was shot and badly wounded, and is now in stable condition at the hospital, along with two very courageous Capitol Police officers.

At least two others were also wounded. Many lives would have been lost if not for the heroic actions of the two Capitol police officers who took down the gunman despite sustaining gunshot wounds, during a very, very brutal assault.

Melania and I are grateful for their heroism and praying for the swift recovery of all victims.

Congressman Scalise is a friend, and a very good friend. He's a patriot, and he's a fighter.

He will recover from this assault, and Steve, I want you to know, you have the prayers, not only of the entire city behind you, but of the entire nation, and frankly, the entire world.

America is praying for you, and America is praying for all of the victims of this terrible shooting."

Said he talked to Scalise's wife, Jennifer, and pledged "full and absolute support – anything she needs."

Expressed his admiration for the courage of the wounded officers.

"Our brave Capitol Police perform a challenging job with incredible skill, and their sacrifice makes Democracy possible."

Commended the first responders from Alexandria police and fire.

"Everyone on that field is a public servant. Our courageous police, our congressional aides, who work so tirelessly behind the scenes with enormous devotion, and our dedicated members of Congress who represent our people."

"We may have our differences, but we do well in times like these to remember that everyone who serves in our nation's capital is here because, above all, they love our country. We can all agree that we are blessed to be Americans, that our children deserve to grow up in a nation of safety and peace, and that we are strongest when we are unified and when we work together for the common good."

Kevin Diaz

Houston Chronicle/Hearst

202-689-5157

kevin.diaz@chron.com

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report 13: dinner spray
Date: Thursday, June 29, 2017 6:50:31 PM

From: Alice Ollstein [mailto:alice@talkingpointsmemo.com]

Sent: Thursday, June 29, 2017 6:40 PM

Subject: Pool report 13: dinner spray

Pool was brought in to the State Dining Room at 6:21. About two dozen guests sat around a long, lavishly set table adorned with fresh flowers.

President Trump spoke over the clatter of camera shutters, saying welcome to Moon, who sat immediately to his right, saying it was a "great honor" to have him and "your very beautiful, lovely wife."

"We very much respect you and very much respect the people of South Korea," POTUS said.

He continued: "We're going to have tremendous discussions tonight" that may go late into the evening, on topics including "North Korea and trade and other things." POTUS also congratulated Moon on his election victory, saying: "It was a great victory. A lot of people didn't expect that. I did expect it. I thought that was going to happen. So I want to congratulate you very much."

A quartet of string musicians played classical music in an adjoining room. Pool was ushered out at 6:26. As we left, your pooler observed POTUS and President Moon speaking through translators who bent over their shoulders.

Alice Miranda Ollstein
Talking Points Memo
310-741-3888
@AliceOllstein

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report 16
Date: Wednesday, June 14, 2017 10:09:39 PM

From: "Diaz, Kevin B" <Kevin.Diaz@chron.com>

Date: June 14, 2017 at 10:03:27 PM EDT

Subject: Pool Report 16

Sean Spicer gaggled with pool upon return to WH. Said Trumps met with Scalise doctors, including Ira Rabin, vice president for medical operations. They also talked to Scalise's wife Jennifer.

Spicer: "He entered the room, spoke with Scalise's family, and sat by his bedside with Mrs. Trump."

They were accompanied to the hospital by Trump's personal physician, Dr. Ronny Jackson. Jackson rode in the motorcade, but had been to the hospital to confer on Scalise earlier.

Melania offered the family a bouquet of the white flowers seen earlier by pool.

The first couple also met with Capitol Police Officer Crystal Griner and her wife. They got the second bouquet of flowers.

Spicer said the first couple also talked to other Capitol Police who were at the hospital.

Dr. Rabin was seen accompanying the Trumps to the exit when they left.

Spicer noted that Trump does not plan to attend the congressional baseball game Thursday, out of security and logistical concerns.

"While the president would like to attend the game and show his support for all of these brave public servants, he has been advised that there is not enough time to follow Secret Service protocols."

That's all for now.

Kevin Diaz
Washington Correspondent
Houston Chronicle/Hearst Newspapers
202-263-6411
Kevin.diaz@chron.com
Twitter: @DiazChron
www.facebook.com/TexasInsideTheBeltway

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report No. 4 – Foxconn announcement
Date: Wednesday, July 26, 2017 6:14:45 PM

From: Gabriella Morrongiello [mailto:gmorrongiello@nypost.com]
Sent: Wednesday, July 26, 2017 6:13 PM
Subject: Pool Report No. 4 – Foxconn announcement

President Trump entered the East Room at 5:40pm, following remarks from Foxconn chairman Terry Gou, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, House Speaker Paul Ryan, and Vice President Pence.

The president praised Gou, who joined him in announcing a $10 billion investment in Wisconsin for a manufacturing facility that will create around 13,000 new jobs. Trump called Gou “one of the great businessmen anywhere in the world.”

“I would see Terry, and I would say ‘Terry, you have to give us one of these massive places you do great work with,’” Trump said, later telling Gou “the American worker will not let you down.”

Trump turned to Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) at the beginning of his remarks to make a comment about the current effort to repeal Obamacare. “I think we’re doing OK, Ron. I’m hearing good things.”

He returned to the topic of repealing Obamacare later in his remarks, saying: “We better get that done, fellas. Please. We need that so badly.”

The president also said his administration will be “submitting an infrastructure bill in the not so very distant future [and] we’re going to be submitting a tax bill very soon.”

Trump left the East Room at 5:47pm after receiving a standing ovation and giving a shoutout to Steve Wynn, a billionaire Republican booster who was seated in the front row with his wife.

More quotes from other distinguished guests:

Gou said the U.S. does not currently have the capabilities “to produce a complete 8K system,” referring to the highest high definition (HD) television resolution.

“We are going to change that and it starts today with this investment in Wisconsin,” Gou said.

Walker said Foxconn’s investment in his state is the “single largest economic development initiative in Wisconsin’s history.”

“In fact, Terry and I came up with a new name: We call it ‘Wisconn Valley,’” Walker said in reference to the region in which the new Foxconn factory will be built.

Ryan thanked Walker for “quarterbacking” the entire effort and said the announcement proves that Trump is committed “to driving American manufacturing and bringing new jobs home.”

Additional information from a background briefing earlier:

The White House struck a deal with global electronics manufacturer Foxconn to build a state-of-the-art manufacturing facility in Wisconsin. The deal is expected to generate 3,000 new American jobs in the Badger State, a figure that could grow to as many as 13,000 over time.

“This is a culmination of many months of discussions between the White House Office of American Innovation and Foxconn, and numerous meetings here at the White house,” said a senior administration official. “One of the reasons this is such a meaningful day is it does represent a milestone in bringing back advanced manufacturing, specifically in the electronics sector, to the United States.”

The SAO said Foxconn chairman Terry Gou, who Trump personally met with, “believes in... the policies of the Trump administration – from deregulation policies that have been put into place already... to the ‘Buy American’ principles and commitment of the administration to pass major tax reform and infrastructure spending and investment.”

“Foxconn and chairman Gou believe that with this commitment, there will be an ability for America to not only compete but to be a globally dominant player in skilled and advanced manufacturing,” said the SAO, adding that this will be “the first of many [investments Foxconn] will be making in the United States.”

The White House said no new federal programs were created to incentivize the transaction. They directed all questions about the location of the manufacturing plant to the office of Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker.

--

Gabby Morrongiello
Washington Bureau Chief
New York Post

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool report No. 5 – POTUS' remarks
Date: Thursday, June 22, 2017 8:30:10 PM

From: Gabriella Morrongiello <gmorrongiello@nypost.com>

Date: June 22, 2017 at 7:57:44 PM EDT
Subject: Pool report No. 5 – POTUS' remarks

June 22, 2017

Vice President Pence and Second Lady Karen Pence took the stage at 7:26pm.

"It's Central Park on the South Lawn," Pence said, looking out at the crowd.

Pence thanked GOP leaders in the House and Senate before inviting a round of applause for "all the men and women who serve in our Congress."

"It's always about family and always about being able to leave politics outside the gate," he said of the picnic.

President Trump and the First Lady entered at 7:30pm. Trump wore a red and white tie, while Melania was dressed in a striped black & white sundress.

"This has truly become, as you know, a wonderful tradition," Trump said. "It is the very first congressional picnic that Melania and I have the pleasure of hosting."

Trump said he and his wife have "developed friendships with some really great people – mostly," drawing laughter from attendees.

Also in the crowd were House Majority Whip Steve Scalise's son and daughter.

"Steve and Jennifer's children – Harrison and Madison – are here. We just gave them a tour of the White House. We gave them the A tour. You know, sometimes we give the B, the C, the F, the D tour. But we gave them the A tour," Trump said.

Trump spent quite some time talking about the recent shooting in Virginia. He thanked special agents Crystal Griner and David Bailey of the Capitol Hill Police for their "lifesaving actions."

Trump told the crowd he had hoped to attend the Congressional baseball game last week "but the folks from Secret Service said 'maybe we better take a pass.'"

"I wanted to be there so badly you have no idea," he said.

Some more quotes from the president:

"It's our hope that the unity that was displayed that evening can maybe continue to grow and thrive between Republicans and Democrats. I think we'd all be doing a lot better and I know the country would be doing a lot better."

"Tonight let us enjoy the comfort of our loved ones and tomorrow let us continue to do the people's bidding and create the optimistic future our citizens so richly deserve."

Trump's remarks ended at 7:36pm. He exited the stage with FLOTUS and shook hands with attendees.

Pool was ushered out minutes later.

--

Gabby Morrongiello
Washington Bureau Chief
New York Post

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Pool Report No. 7a
Date: Thursday, November 23, 2017 10:44:55 AM

From: "Johnson, Jenna" <Jenna.Johnson@washpost.com>
Date: November 23, 2017 at 10:36:01 AM EST
Subject: Pool Report No. 7a

At 10:18am, President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump walked into the mess hall at the Coast Guard Station Lake Worth Inlet. The president had removed his tie and the First Lady was dressed in a button down, black pants, tennis shoes and a ball cap. The Trumps provided the food on the table.

Commanding officer Gene Gibson and his wife, Jessica, and their son, Colin, welcomed the Trumps to the mess hall and thanked them for the spread.

"It is an honor to be here," the president said.

He noted that "there is no brand that went up like the Coast Guard" during the hurricanes in Texas, the Gulf Coast and Puerto Rico. He recognized the Coast Guard for rescuing 16,000 people in Texas after Hurricane Harvey, a number that he says few know or believe.

"Incredible people, you've done an incredible job," Trump said.

The First Lady jumped in to tell the group: "Happy Thanksgiving!" She smiled and waved with both hands as she spoke.

The president offered to take questions from the Coast Guard, although no one spoke up — which the president says he loves.

"The country's doing really well," he told them.

He noted that he had just spoken with troops based overseas and said: "You folks are fighting so hard and working so hard."

Trump noted that the stock market is higher now that it has even been in their lives, which he says is good for their 401Ks.

"You have a country and that's really starting to turn," the president said.

Trump noted that until he took office, the military had faced budget cuts and was "depleted."

At 10:25am, the president started handing out sandwiches to the Coast Guard members, shaking hands with them and marveling at what "great shape" they are in.

As he sized up one particularly ripped Coast Guard member, the president asked if he would be able to beat him at an arm wrestling contest.

After about a minute, the press pool was led out of the mess hall.

Stay tuned for another pool report with full quotes.

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Monday, July 31, 2017 9:02:34 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
July 31, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Daniel M. Gade of North Dakota to be a Member of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for the remainder of a five-year term expiring July 1, 2021. Mr. Gade was born and raised in North Dakota. He graduated from the United States Military Academy (West Point) in 1997, and was wounded in action twice and decorated for valor while serving in Iraq. He served in the administration of President George W. Bush, where his portfolio included veterans, military health care, and United States disability policy. He returned to West Point in 2011 and taught various political science and leadership courses until his retirement from the Army in 2017. He holds an M.P.A. and Ph.D. in public administration and policy from the University of Georgia. He has served on various advisory committees advising the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, and was appointed to serve on the National Council on Disability by then-Speaker Boehner in 2015. He cofounded the Independence Project, a Veteran's employment and empowerment experiment.

Melissa Sue Glynn of the District of Columbia to be an Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs, Enterprise Integration. Until recently, Dr. Glynn led Alvarez and Marsal's public sector practice focused on improving the delivery of government programs, and K-12 and higher education. Previously, she was a Principal with PricewaterhouseCoopers and was responsible for the firm's work with the Department of Veterans Affairs. Initially, Dr. Glynn's career focused on the development and deployment of innovative technologies associated with collaborative decision-making. She served as Co-Director of the Center for the Management of Information at the University of Arizona concurrent with her doctoral studies. She was also a principal investigator on a cooperative grant from the National Science Foundation and several programs funded by defense research laboratories. A New Jersey native, Dr. Glynn holds a B.A. from Rutgers University and a M.A. and a Ph.D. from the University of Arizona.

John Henderson of South Dakota to be an Assistant Secretary of the Air Force, Installations, Environment, and Energy. Mr. Henderson most recently served in the Army as the Commander of the Omaha District, Army Corps of Engineers, where his responsibilities included overseeing an annual program of $1.5 billion dollars consisting of more than 2,500 projects supporting the nation's water resources infrastructure, military construction, and Federal interagency work in nine States, environmental restoration projects in 41 States, and an extensive program supporting Department of Defense petroleum and energy infrastructure worldwide for the Defense Logistics Agency. Mr. Henderson has over 23 years of active military experience as an Army engineer officer, serving two combat tours to Iraq and one combat tour to Afghanistan as an engineer battalion task force commander. Mr. Henderson possesses a master's degree in civil engineering from the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology and is a licensed Professional Engineer in the State of South Dakota. His military education includes a National Security Studies fellowship with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and graduation from the Joint Combined Warfighters Course, Army War College Fellowship Program, Command and General Staff College, Air Assault School, and Airborne School.

Ryan Douglas Nelson of Idaho to be Solicitor of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Nelson is a seasoned attorney with broad experience advising government and corporate executives in the public and private sector. Mr. Nelson has worked for all three branches of government. He served as Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Environment and Natural Resources Division of the Department of Justice, where he managed the natural resource, wildlife and appellate sections of the Division, and as Deputy General Counsel for the White House Office of Management and Budget. He also served as Special Counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee and as a law clerk for the Senate Legal Counsel. After graduating from BYU Law School with Honors, Mr. Nelson clerked for Judge Henderson on the D.C. Circuit and for Richard Mosk and Charles Brower on the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal in The Hague, the Netherlands. Mr. Nelson was an associate at Sidley Austin and is currently General Counsel for Idaho-based wellness company, Melaleuca, Inc. He has argued 13 Federal court of appeals cases on complex environmental and constitutional issues. Mr. Nelson resides in his hometown of Idaho Falls, Idaho, with his wife, Barbara Baer Nelson, and their seven children.

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 7:53:55 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
August 25, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Jeffery Martin Baran of Virginia to be a Member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for a five-year term beginning July 1, 2018. Mr. Baran currently serves as a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, a position he has held since October 2014. Prior to his tenure on the Commission, he served as Staff Director for Energy and Environment for the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Energy and Commerce. Previously, Mr. Baran served on the Committee staff as senior counsel from 2011 to 2014, and as counsel from 2009 to 2010. He served as counsel on the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Oversight and Government Reform from 2003 to 2008. From 2001 to 2003, Mr. Baran worked as a law clerk for Judge Lesley Wells of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Ohio. Mr. Baran received a B.A. and an M.A. from Ohio University and a J.D. from Harvard Law School. He lives with his wife and three children in Arlington, Virginia.

Michael T. Evanoff of Arkansas to be an Assistant Secretary of State, Diplomatic Security. Mr. Evanoff is the Vice President for Asset Protection & Security at International Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. in Arkansas, a position he has held since 2014. Previously he served as Chief Security Officer at Coca-Cola in Zug, Switzerland and Athens, Greece and as Global Director of Security at Och-Ziff Capital Management Group in New York. He served as a special agent in the Department of State Bureau of Diplomatic Security from 1985 to 2011, holding senior posts with Overseas Security Advisory Council, NATO Office of Security, Secretary of State Protection Detail, and eight U.S. Missions overseas. He was also diplomatic security liaison officer to the U.S. European Command in Stuttgart, Germany. Mr. Evanoff earned a B.S. at Eastern Kentucky University. He and his wife, Kate Milner Evanoff, have a two-year old son, Luke.

Andrei Iancu of California, to be Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property and Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office, Department of Commerce. Mr. Iancu is currently the Managing Partner of Irell & Manella LLP, where his practice focuses on intellectual property law. Mr. Iancu has advised plaintiffs and defendants across a wide variety of industries. He has appeared in front of the Patent and Trademark Office, the U.S. International Trade Commission, U.S. district courts, and the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. He has published and spoken on intellectual property issues, and taught patent law at UCLA. Mr. Iancu earned his J.D., M.S. in mechanical engineering, and B.S. in aerospace engineering, from UCLA. Prior to law school, Mr. Iancu was an engineer at Hughes Aircraft.

Adam I. Klein of the District of Columbia to be a Member and Chairman of the Privacy & Civil Liberties Oversight Board. Mr. Klein is the Robert M. Gates Senior Fellow at the Center for a New American Security, where his research centers on the intersection of national security policy and law. He previously served as a law clerk to Justice Antonin Scalia of the U.S. Supreme Court and Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. He has also worked on national security policy at the RAND Corporation, at the 9/11 Public Discourse Project (the nonprofit successor to the 9/11 Commission), and as a legislative assistant in the office of Rep. C.W. "Bill" Young. He is a graduate of Columbia Law School and Northwestern University.

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to be Representatives of the United States of America to the Seventy-second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, with the personal Rank of Ambassador while performing the duties as the Representatives of the United States of America to the Seventy-second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations:

- Congressman Christopher Smith of New Jersey - Speaker of the House Rep.
- Congresswoman Barbara Lee of California - Minority Leader of the House Rep.
- Lloyd Claycomb of Arizona
- Carlos Trujillo of Florida

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Friday, September 01, 2017 7:49:29 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
September 1, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

James Thomas Abbott of Virginia to be a Member of the Federal Labor Relations Authority for the remainder of a five-year term expiring July 1, 2020. Mr. Abbott has served as Chief Counsel to the Federal Labor Relations Authority since 2007, currently with Acting Chairman Patrick Pizzella and previously with Chairman Dale Cabaniss and Member Thomas Beck. Prior to his appointment to the Authority, Mr. Abbott served as Deputy General Counsel for the Congressional Office of Compliance, from 2004 to 2007. Earlier in his career, Mr. Abbott served as the Senior Associate District Counsel for Personnel and Ethics at the Defense Contract Management Agency; Chief Counsel at Corpus Christi Army Depot, U.S. Army Materiel Command; and Senior Labor Counsel at the HQ Depot Systems Command, U.S. Army Materiel Command. Mr. Abbott received his J.D. from Temple University Beasley School of Law in Philadelphia, and was a Magna Cum Laude graduate of Malone University.

Larry Edward Andre Jr. of Texas to be Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Djibouti. Mr. André, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1990. He is currently the United States Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania. Previously a two-time Deputy Chief of Mission with appointments to nine American missions abroad, mostly in Africa, Mr. André has held senior policy positions at the State Department in Washington. His excellent leadership skills and experience working closely with the U.S. military provide him expertise on the challenges and opportunities of the Horn-of-Africa region and deep understanding of the context of United States policy goals there. Mr. André earned a B.A. at Claremont McKenna College and an M.B.A. at American Graduate School of International Management.

Robert Behler of Pennsylvania to be Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, Department of Defense. Mr. Behler most recently served as Chief Operating Officer and Deputy Director for Carnegie Mellon University Software Engineering Institute, where he worked to advance software engineering and cybersecurity to solve national cyber challenges through focused research, development, and transition to the broader software engineering community. Previously he served as President and Chief Operation Officer of SRC, Inc. and as Senior Vice President and General Manager at MITRE Corporation and the Business Area Executive of Precision Engagement at John Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory. Mr. Behler was formerly Commanding General at the Air Force Command and Control & Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance Center as well as the Deputy Commander at Joint Headquarters North, NATO. He is a U.S. Air Force retired Major General, and the recipient of various Distinguished Service Medals. He is a graduate of the U.S. Air Force Test Pilot School, a National Security Fellow at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government, and holds an M.B.A. from Marymount University, and an M.S. in Aerospace Engineering from the University of Oklahoma.

James Bridenstine of Oklahoma to be Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Mr. Bridenstine was elected in 2012 to represent Oklahoma's First Congressional District. He serves on the House Armed Services Committee and the Science, Space and Technology Committee. Mr. Bridenstine began his Naval aviation career flying the E-2C Hawkeye off the USS Abraham Lincoln aircraft carrier. It was there that he flew combat missions in Iraq and Afghanistan.

While on active duty, he transitioned to the F-18 Hornet and flew as an “aggressor” at the Naval Strike and Air Warfare Center. After leaving active duty, Mr. Bridenstine returned to Tulsa, Oklahoma to be the Executive Director of the Tulsa Air and Space Museum & Planetarium and flew counter-drug missions in Central and South America in the Navy Reserve. He holds a triple major from Rice University and an M.B.A. from Cornell University. Mr. Bridenstine is currently a member of the 137th Special Operations Wing of the Oklahoma Air National Guard.

Thomas L. Carter of South Carolina to be the Representative of the United States on the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization with the Rank of Ambassador during his tenure of service.

Mr. Carter, a former military and commercial pilot, retired from the U.S. Air Force Reserve in 2009 with the rank of Major General after a 34-year career. He flew 12 years for USAirways and attained B737 Captain status. Mr. Carter served as Vice President for Government Relations at Elbit Systems of America, Arlington, Virginia (2009-2015) and President of Commonwealth Consulting Corporation, Arlington, Virginia (2005-2009). He was Senior Counselor to the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) for Legislative Affairs in Baghdad, Iraq (2003-2004) and served as Assistant to the Chairman for Government Affairs of the Columbia Accident Investigation Board in Washington, D.C. Mr. Carter’s earlier government service included positions as a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense and a staffer for the Senate Republican Leader, Bob Dole. He earned a B.S. from the University of Memphis and a MA from Georgetown University.

John C. Demers of Virginia to be an Assistant Attorney General, National Security Division, at the Department of Justice.

Mr. Demers is Vice President and Assistant General Counsel at The Boeing Company. He has held several senior positions at the company including in Boeing Defense, Space, and Security and as lead lawyer and head of international government affairs for Boeing International. From 2006 to 2009, Mr. Demers served on the first leadership team of the National Security Division, first as Senior Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General and then as Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Law & Policy. Before that, he served in the Office of Legal Counsel. For the past eight years, he has taught national security law as an adjunct professor at the Georgetown University Law Center. Mr. Demers worked in private practice in Boston and clerked for Associate Justice Antonin Scalia of the U.S. Supreme Court and Judge Diarmuid O’Scannlain of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. He graduated from Harvard Law School and the College of the Holy Cross.

Nina Maria Fite of Pennsylvania to be Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Angola.

Ms. Fite, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1990. She is currently Principal Officer at the U.S. Consulate General in Montreal, Canada, a position she has held since 2014. Ms. Fite is known for her leadership skills, knowledge of Angola, and strong record promoting United States trade and foreign direct investment, including as a negotiator in the office of the U.S. Trade Representative. She has served at seven United States Missions overseas and in senior leadership positions at the Department of State. Ms. Fite earned an M.S. at the National Defense University, an M.B.A. at Thunderbird School of Global Management and a B.Arch. at Carnegie-Mellon University. She speaks Portuguese, French, Spanish, and Hungarian.

Daniel Lewis Foote of New York to be Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Zambia.

Mr. Foote, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1998. He is currently a Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs at the Department of State. A two-time Deputy Chief of Mission overseas, Mr. Foote has held diverse senior foreign policy positions at home and abroad and is known for his leadership acumen, judgment, and management of several of the United States Government’s largest overseas programs in some of the world’s most challenging, high-threat environments. Mr. Foote earned a B.A. from Columbia University. He speaks Spanish.

Timothy Gallaudet of California to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere.

Dr. Gallaudet is a Rear Admiral in the U.S. Navy whose most recent assignment was Oceanographer of the Navy and Commander of the Navy Meteorology and Oceanography Command. During his 32 years of service, Dr. Gallaudet has had experience in weather and ocean forecasting, hydrographic surveying, developing policy and plans to counter illegal, unregulated, and unreported fishing, and assessing the national security impacts of climate change. Dr. Gallaudet has led teams of Navy Sailors and civilians performing such diverse functions as overseeing aircraft carrier combat operations, planning and conducting humanitarian assistance and disaster response efforts, assisting Navy SEAL Teams during high visibility counter-terrorism operations, and developing the Navy's annual $52 billion information technology, cyber security, and intelligence budget. Dr. Gallaudet holds a bachelor's degree from the U.S. Naval Academy and master's and doctoral degrees from Scripps Institution of Oceanography, all in oceanography.

Mark L. Greenblatt of Maryland to be Inspector General for the Export-Import Bank. Mr. Greenblatt has been serving as the Assistant Inspector General for Investigations at the Department of Commerce since 2016. He was previously Director of Special Investigations and then the Deputy Assistant Inspector General for Compliance and Ethics at the Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General (OIG) from 2014 to 2016. Prior to serving in the Commerce OIG, Mr. Greenblatt was an investigative counsel at the Department of Justice OIG. Prior to joining DOJ, Mr. Greenblatt was Minority Staff Director and Chief Counsel for the U.S. Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. Earlier in his career, Mr. Greenblatt served as a law clerk to U.S. District Court Judge Anita Brody and then worked as a litigator in New York City. Mr. Greenblatt received his law degree from Columbia University, where he was a Harlan Fiske Stone Scholar, and received an A.B., with distinction, from Duke University.

Richard Grenell of California to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Federal Republic of Germany. Mr. Grenell, a foreign policy writer and commentator, founded the international consulting firm Capitol Media Partners in 2010. For nearly two decades, he has served as the primary communications adviser for public officials at the local, state, Federal, and international levels, as well as for a Fortune 200 ranked company. Mr. Grenell is the longest serving United States spokesman at the United Nations (2001-2008) having served four United States Ambassadors. He earned a B.A. from Evangel University and an MPA from Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Gregory Ibach of Nebraska to be Under Secretary of Agriculture for Marketing and Regulatory Programs. Mr. Ibach earned his B.S. in Agriculture from the University of Nebraska with majors in Animal Science and Agricultural Economics. Mr. Ibach has been a visionary leader for Nebraska's agriculture effectively supervising Departmental staff and programs, with the ability to analyze issues, develop strategies, and create solutions for domestic and global initiatives. Mr. Ibach has oversight of Nebraska's plant and animal health regulatory functions. He has been actively involved in foreign and domestic marketing and development activities. Mr. Ibach has been inducted into the Nebraska Hall of Agricultural Achievement and honored with the Service to Agriculture Recognition from the University of Nebraska- Lincoln, College of Agriculture Science and Natural Resources, among other honors. Mr. Ibach is the immediate past President of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture. Mr. Ibach and his wife, Teresa, have three grown children and live on their farm and ranch in Sumner, Nebraska.

Robert Jackson of New York to be a Member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the remainder of a 5-year term expiring June 5, 2019. Mr. Jackson is a Professor at Columbia Law School and Director of its Program on Corporate Law and Policy. Mr. Jackson's academic work focuses on corporate governance and the use of advanced data science techniques to improve transparency in securities markets. His career has spanned the public and private sectors. Mr. Jackson served as a senior advisor at the Department of the Treasury during the financial crisis, assisting Kenneth Feinberg in his work as Special Master for TARP Executive Compensation, and previously worked as a lawyer in private practice. Mr. Jackson holds two bachelor's degrees from the University of Pennsylvania, an M.B.A. in Finance from the Wharton School of Business, a master's degree from Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, and a law degree from Harvard Law School. Born in the Bronx, New York, Mr. Jackson currently lives in New York City.

Kenneth I. Juster of New York to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of India. Mr. Juster most recently served as the Deputy Assistant to the President for International Economic Affairs and Deputy Director of the National Economic Council.

Mr. Juster has previously served as Under Secretary of Commerce from 2001-2005, Counselor (acting) of the State Department from 1992-1993, and deputy and senior adviser to the Deputy Secretary of State from 1989-1992. In the private sector, he has been a partner at the investment firm Warburg Pincus LLC, Executive Vice President at Salesforce.com, and senior partner at the law firm Arnold & Porter. He has also served as Chairman of Harvard University's Weatherhead Center for International Affairs, and as Vice Chairman of The Asia Foundation. Mr. Juster holds an A.B. in Government (Phi Beta Kappa) from Harvard College, an M.P.P. from the Harvard Kennedy School, and a J.D. from the Harvard Law School.

Colleen Kiko of North Dakota to be a Member of the Federal Labor Relations Authority, for a term of five years beginning July 30, 2017 and, upon confirmation, designated chair. Ms. Kiko was born and raised in North Dakota. She currently serves as a Judge of the Employees' Compensation Appeals Board in the Department of Labor. Ms. Kiko has a long history with the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA). She worked in its predecessor agency and, when the FLRA opened its doors on January 1, 1979, Ms. Kiko began work in the Washington Regional Office investigating unfair labor practices. She ultimately moved into positions within the headquarters of the FLRA. In 2005, she returned to serve as General Counsel of the FLRA. Ms. Kiko has served in the Justice Department in various capacities, as an associate counsel to the House Judiciary Committee, and in the private practice of law. She holds a J.D. from Antonin Scalia Law School and a B.S. degree from North Dakota State University. Ms. Kiko lives in Virginia with her husband, Phil. They have four children and four grandchildren.

W. Robert Kohorst of California to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Croatia. Mr. Kohorst, President and founder of Everest Properties in Pasadena, California, is a prominent American businessman with expertise in law, real estate and finance. His company is a large commercial enterprise that purchases and operates apartment, self-storage and retail properties throughout the United States. Mr. Kohorst has contributed to public service organizations and educational institutions as director and chairman of the Young Presidents' Organization (San Gabriel Valley Chapter), Regent of Loyola Marymount University, Trustee of La Salle High School in Pasadena, and President of the San Gabriel Valley Council, Boy Scouts of America in Los Angeles. He earned a J.D. from the University of Michigan Law School and a B.S. from the University of Dayton.

Matthew Z. Leopold of Florida to be an Assistant Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, General Counsel. Mr. Leopold is a lawyer in Tallahassee, Florida with the law firm of Carlton Fields. He is the former General Counsel of the Florida Department of Environment Protection and a former attorney at the U.S. Department of Justice, Environment and Natural Resources Division. He has 10 years of combined Federal and State government experience. Mr. Leopold's practice focuses exclusively on environment law, policy, and litigation. He has represented the State and Federal governments on complex environmental litigation, including Florida v. Georgia, an original action in the United States Supreme Court, and United States v. BP Exploration and Production, Inc., to address the 2010 Deepwater Horizon oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico. He also represented Florida in the long-running Everglades case, and worked with policy makers to help move comprehensive restoration forward. Mr. Leopold previously served as an environmental policy advisor in the Washington, D.C. office of Governor Jeb Bush.

Tom Marino of Pennsylvania to be Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy. Mr. Marino was born and raised in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, where his father worked two jobs as a firefighter and janitor. He followed his father's example and went to work on the floor of a manufacturing facility after high school. He advanced into management and, at age 30, decided to pursue a college education. With the support of his family, friends, and the community, Mr. Marino graduated magna cum laude from Lycoming College and earned his law degree from Dickinson School of Law – all within five years. He practiced law before being elected Lycoming County District Attorney in 1991. In 2002, President George W. Bush appointed him to serve as the United States Attorney for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. He returned to private practice until 2010 when he was elected to represent Pennsylvania's 10th District in Congress. Mr. Marino and his wife Edie have two children.

Cheryl L. Mason of Virginia to be Chairman of the Board of Veterans Appeals for a term of six years. Ms. Mason is currently the Interim Principal Deputy Vice Chairman at the Board of Veterans Appeals.

She previously served as Deputy Vice Chairman, Chief Veterans Law Judge, Veterans Law Judge, and Counsel at the Board of Veterans Appeals. Ms. Mason's government experience also includes serving as an attorney with the Federal Labor Relations Authority and as a Department of the Air Force civilian at HQ United States Air Forces in Europe at Ramstein Air Base, Germany. Ms. Mason also served as a contract attorney investigator for Department of Justice Civil Rights Division specializing in the American with Disabilities Act, a military services paralegal coordinator for Europe, and an instructor at Central Texas College, Kapaun Air Station, Germany. Ms. Mason began her legal career in private practice in Omaha, Nebraska. While attending college, Ms. Mason served an LBJ Intern for Congressman Bob McEwen (R-OH) of Ohio. Ms. Mason is married to Lieutenant Colonel, USAF (retired) Brett S. Mason and is the daughter of a World War II Navy Veteran. Ms. Mason received her B.A. with Distinction in Political Science and Psychology from Ohio Northern University and her J.D. from Creighton University School of Law. Ms. Mason resides in Virginia with her family.

Admiral Edward Masso to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Estonia. Mr. Masso is a highly decorated Naval Officer who is the founder and president of Flagship Connection, a consulting company focused on business development, strategic planning, and operations analysis in the areas of missile defense, cyber security, and data analytics. During his distinguished 32-year career in the U.S. Navy, he held nine command assignments, including Commander, Navy Personnel Command/Deputy Chief of Naval Personnel. He has served in NATO and the United States European Command. Mr. Masso is a Senior Fellow at the Potomac Institute for Policy Studies in Cyber Security. He graduated from the University of Mississippi in 1977.

Katherine Brunett McGuire of Virginia to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor, Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs. Ms. McGuire currently serves as Chief of Staff to Congressman Randy Hultgren of Illinois. She previously served as Staff Director of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee under the Chairmanship of Senator Mike Enzi. Prior to her role on the Committee, she served as Legislative Director to Senator Enzi and also Staff Director on the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs' Subcommittee on Securities and Investment. She earlier served in senior posts in the Senate with Assistant Republican Leader Alan K. Simpson and Senator Richard Lugar. Her private sector experience includes leading BSA The Software Alliance's global public policy and government relations division as Vice President, concentrating on promoting innovation and intellectual property protection. Ms. McGuire earned a B.S. and M.S. in Agricultural Economics from the University of Wyoming. She resides with her husband and two children in Virginia.

Edward T. McMullen, Jr. of South Carolina to be to Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the Swiss Confederation, and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Principality of Liechtenstein. Mr. McMullen has served in public policy, political, and business positions for 31 years. Currently, he is President of McMullen Public Affairs with offices in Mt. Pleasant, South Carolina and Washington, D.C. The firm is a full service advertising and corporate public affairs company that implements advertising, alliance development, corporate communications, predictive data analytics, and strategic consulting solutions for challenging business and public policy environments. Clients have included several fortune 100 companies. Mr. McMullen has been appointed by South Carolina state leaders to serve on key statewide boards and commissions. He earned a B.A. from Hampden Sydney College in Hampden Sydney, Virginia.

Jonathan F. Mitchell of Washington to be Chairman of the Administrative Conference of the United States for a term of 5 years. Mr. Mitchell most recently served as a Visiting Professor of Law at Stanford Law School. From 2010-2015, Mr. Mitchell served as the Solicitor General of Texas, where he argued three cases before the United States Supreme Court, argued dozens of cases in other courts, and authored more than one hundred briefs. Mr. Mitchell has also served on the faculties of the University of Texas School of Law, the George Mason University School of Law, and the University of Chicago Law School. Before entering the legal academy, Mr. Mitchell served as a law clerk to Justice Antonin Scalia of the United States Supreme Court and to Judge J. Michael Luttig of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Mr. Mitchell earned his B.A., summa cum laude, from Wheaton College and his J.D., with high honors, from the University of Chicago Law School, where he was inducted into the Order of the Coif and served as an articles editor of the University of Chicago Law Review.

Thomas B. Modly of Maryland to be Under Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Modly is currently a Managing Director in PricewaterhouseCoopers' Global Government and Public Services sector and is the firm's Global Government Defense Network Leader, where he is responsible for coordinating the development and implementation of solutions for government defense clients worldwide. Prior to this, Mr. Modly served as the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Financial Management and as the first Executive Director of the Defense Business Board. He also has extensive private sector expertise as a corporate development and mergers and acquisition specialist. Mr. Modly is a graduate with distinction from the U.S. Naval Academy, holds a Master's Degree in Government from Georgetown University, and an M.B.A. with honors from Harvard Business School. He served on active duty in the U.S. Navy as a helicopter pilot.

Emily Webster Murphy of Missouri to be Administrator of General Services. Currently, Ms. Murphy is Senior Advisor to the Administrator at the U.S. General Services Administration (GSA). Previously, Ms. Murphy served as Counsel at the House Armed Services Committee, specializing acquisition policy and reform. A procurement policy expert, Ms. Murphy's career includes appointments at the U.S. Small Business Administration and at the GSA, where she served as its first Chief Acquisition Officer. Additionally, she served under three Chairmen of the House Small Business Committee. Her private sector experience includes five years in executive positions at a technology startup company engaged in Federal contracting and three years as a government contracts attorney with two top D.C. law firms. She has been recognized by Women Impacting Public Policy and the Small Business Technology Council, among others. A Missouri native, Ms. Murphy is a 1995 graduate of Smith College and a 2001 graduate of the University of Virginia School of Law.

Jennifer Gillian Newstead of New York to be Legal Adviser at the Department of State. Ms. Newstead is a partner in the law firm of Davis, Polk & Wardwell LLP, where she has a global practice representing clients in cross-border regulatory, enforcement and litigation matters. Ms. Newstead previously served in several senior government positions, including as General Counsel of the Office of Management and Budget, Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General at the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Policy, and Associate Counsel to the President. Ms. Newstead previously served as an Adjunct Professor of Law at Georgetown University Law Center in Washington, D.C and earlier in her career clerked for Justice Breyer of the U.S. Supreme Court and for Judge Silberman of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. She is a 1994 graduate of Yale Law School, and a 1991 graduate magna cum laude of Harvard University.

William Northey of Iowa to be Under Secretary of Agriculture for Farm and Foreign Agricultural Services. Mr. Northey is a 4th generation farmer from Spirit Lake, Iowa and is currently serving his 3rd term as Iowa Secretary of Agriculture. Under Mr. Northey's leadership, the Iowa Department of Agriculture and Land Stewardship has promoted science and new technologies to better care for our air, soil, and water and focused on telling the story of agriculture. Mr. Northey is a past-president of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture and serves as co-chair of the Gulf of Mexico Hypoxia Task Force. Mr. Northey served as President of the National Corn Growers Association from 1995 to 1996. He served on the Iowa U.S. Department of Agriculture Farm Service Agency State Committee and as a Dickinson County Soil and Water Conservation District Commissioner. Mr. Northey graduated from Iowa State University with a degree in Agricultural Business and received a M.B.A. from Southwest Minnesota State University. Mr. Northey and his wife Cindy have 3 grown daughters and 5 grandchildren.

Frederick Nutt of Virginia to be Controller of the Office of Federal Financial Management, Office of Management and Budget. Mr. Nutt is currently Senior Advisor at the Office of Management and Budget. Mr. Nutt previously worked as Senior Advisor to the Vice President for Management at the Overseas Private Investment Corporation where he was responsible for managing financial resources supporting information technology, acquisition, facilities, and security operations. Previously, Mr. Nutt was at the then newly authorized Millennium Challenge Corporation, working to start up the management operations, including financial and management information systems. Prior to this, Mr. Nutt was Senior Advisor to the Chief Financial Officer at the Environmental Protection Agency where he worked on implementing the President's Management Agenda, and the migration of select financial management systems to federal shared service providers. He also worked on budget and appropriations legislation in the U.S. House of Representatives, while serving in the Office of the Speaker. Mr. Nutt is from Reedville, Virginia and is a graduate of Virginia Tech.

Jeff Tien Han Pon of Virginia to be Director of the Office of Personnel Management. Dr. Pon most recently served as the Chief Human Resources and Strategy Officer for the non-profit professional membership organization, the Society for Human Resource Management as well as the Chief Operating Officer for Futures Inc., an organization dedicated to helping transitioning military explore careers, find jobs, and transition to civilian jobs. Dr. Pon previously served as a Principal at Booz Allen Hamilton, Inc. in the consulting service areas of Human Resources, IT, and Change Management and as the U.S. Department of Energy's Chief Human Capital Officer. He also was the Deputy Director of eGovernment at the U. S. Office of Personnel Management where he and his teams brought about HR Shared Service Centers, Payroll Modernization, and the stand-up of USAJobs. Dr. Pon is a graduate of the University of Southern California, and holds a Ph. D. and Masters of Science degree from the California School of Professional Psychology. He is the recipient of the Grace Hopper Award, Fed 100, and multiple secretarial Distinguished Service Awards.

Randy Reeves of Mississippi, to be Under Secretary of Veterans Affairs for Memorial Affairs. Mr. Reeves currently serves as Executive Director of the Mississippi Veterans Affairs Board and serves as President of the National Association of State Directors of Veterans Affairs. He is a retired Commander and Surface Warfare Officer in the United States Navy. Prior to being commissioned in the Navy, he served as an enlisted airman in the United States Air Force. Mr. Reeves received his Bachelor's degree in Management from Peru State College (Nebraska) and a Master's degree in Health Sciences. He also completed the Senior Executive Program at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

David Dale Reimer of Ohio to be Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Mauritius and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Seychelles. Mr. Reimer, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1991. He is currently the Director of the Office of West African Affairs in the Bureau of African Affairs at the Department of State, a position he has held since 2015. A former Deputy Chief of Mission and Office Director, Mr. Reimer is known for his extensive knowledge of Africa and outstanding leadership skills, particularly in high-threat environments. He earned an M.P.I.A. from the University of Pittsburgh and a B.A. from Goshen College. He speaks French, Italian and German.

David Ross of Wisconsin to be an Assistant Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Water. Mr. Ross currently serves as the Director of the Environmental Protection Unit for the Wisconsin Department of Justice. He previously served as a senior assistant attorney general in the Wyoming Attorney General's Office, where he represented the Wyoming Department of Environmental Quality on water quality matters. Mr. Ross also represented the State of Wyoming on the Assumable Waters Subcommittee of the National Advisory Council for Environmental Policy and Technology. Prior to entering public service, Mr. Ross practiced environmental law in Washington DC and worked as an environmental consultant in California. Mr. Ross attended the University of Wisconsin-Madison for undergraduate studies, and grew up in Appleton, Wisconsin. He earned his law degree and a Master of Studies in Environmental Law from Vermont Law School. While in law school, Mr. Ross served as Editor-in-Chief of the Vermont Law Review.

Christopher R. Sharpley of Virginia to be Inspector General for the Central Intelligence Agency. Mr. Sharpley has been serving as the Acting Inspector General at the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) Office of Inspector General (OIG) since 2015. He was previously the Deputy Inspector General at the CIA from 2012 to 2015. Prior to serving in the CIA OIG, Mr. Sharpley was Deputy IG for Investigations at the Federal Housing Finance Authority and Deputy Special IG for Investigations as the Special Inspector General for the Troubled Asset Relief Program (SIGTARP). Prior to these roles, Mr. Sharpley was the Deputy IG for Investigations and Inspections at the Department of Energy and a Director of Security Operations in the U.S. Air Force. Mr. Sharpley received an M.A. from the Naval Postgraduate School and a B.A. from American University.

Cheryl Marie Stanton of South Carolina to be Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor. Ms. Stanton currently serves as the Executive Director for the South Carolina Department of Employment and Workforce, a position to which she was appointed in 2013 by then-Governor Nikki R. Haley. Prior to that role, Ms. Stanton worked as a labor and employment attorney in both the public and private sectors. In the public sector, she served as Associate White House Counsel for President George W. Bush. In that role, Stanton was the administration's principal liaison to the U.S. Department of Labor, National Labor Relations Board and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Ms. Stanton also served as a law clerk to the Honorable Samuel A. Alito, Jr., U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. She received her J.D. from the Law School at the University of Chicago and her B.A. from Williams College. In 2016, then-Governor Nikki R. Haley awarded Ms. Stanton the Order of the Palmetto, the highest civilian honor in the State of South Carolina.

Suzanne Israel Tufts of New York to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Administration. Ms. Tufts is a consultant and attorney with extensive experience in turnaround management and operations in the public and not-for-profit sectors. Ms. Tufts is the founder of her own consulting firm, which focuses on providing services for tax-exempt organizations and emerging companies. She is a nationally recognized expert in the field of inner city social programming in the areas of microenterprise, education and women's issues and has been responsible for programs in housing authorities in New York. Ms. Tufts previously worked as President and CEO of the American Woman's Economic Development Corporation, the nation's first women's entrepreneurship training center. Under her leadership, AWED created emergency small business crisis services within 72 hours of the 9/11 attacks, work for which she was recognized by President George W. Bush and then-Secretary of Labor Elaine Chao. Ms. Tufts graduated summa cum laude with an A.B. in Bio-Medical Ethics from Princeton University in 1977, and graduated from the University of Virginia Law School where she was awarded a Dillard Fellowship. Ms. Tufts lives in Forest Hills, Queens with her husband Bob.

Stephen Alexander Vaden of Tennessee to be General Counsel, Department of Agriculture. Mr. Vaden is a native of Union City, Tennessee. Mr. Vaden received his B.A. in American History from Vanderbilt University and his law degree from Yale Law School. Following graduation, Mr. Vaden completed two clerkships, first with The Honorable Julia Smith Gibbons of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit and then with The Honorable Samuel H. Mays, Jr., of the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Tennessee. Mr. Vaden has practiced law at the Washington, D.C. firms of Patton Boggs and Jones Day. At both firms, Mr. Vaden's practice focused on litigation, particularly at the appellate level, along with election law and administrative law. When not in Washington, Mr. Vaden continues to make his home in Union City where he lives with his brother Samuel Vaden and mother Wanda Stephens Vaden. His late father John Marshall Vaden was a farmer for most of his 97 years.

Bruce J. Walker of New York to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy, Electricity, Delivery and Energy Reliability. Mr. Walker is the founder of Modern Energy Insights, Inc., which specializes in evaluating risk for utilities' critical electric infrastructure. He has more than 25 years of electric utility experience, previously working at National Grid as the Vice President of Asset Strategy and Policy. Earlier, he worked for Consolidated Edison of New York, where he last held the position of Director of Corporate Emergency Management and served on the Biological Chemical Weapons Response Team. He has served as a member of DOE's Electricity Advisory Committee, DOE's Advisory Committee for the Mega-Watt scale integration lab, and was a member of GridWise Alliance, Inc. He is the co-founder of the Global Smart Grid Federation. Mr. Walker is the Deputy County Executive for the County of Putnam and is the Acting Energy Sector Chief for the Hudson Valley Infragard. He received his law degree from Pace University and holds a Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering from Manhattan College.

Margaret Weichert of Georgia to be Deputy Director for Management, Office of Management and Budget. Ms. Weichert is currently Senior Advisor at the Office of Management and Budget. Ms. Weichert is a seasoned business executive who has served as a Principal at Ernst & Young, LLP since 2013. In her 25 year professional career, Ms. Weichert has also held executive leadership positions at Market Platform Dynamics, First Data Corporation, Bank of America, and Andersen Consulting focused on strategy, innovation, and business process improvement in banking and payments technology. An innovator and entrepreneur, Ms. Weichert also co-founded an Internet company, Achex, Inc., and sold that company to First Data in 2001. As a result of her innovative work in payment technology, Ms. Weichert has been named as an inventor on 14 successful U.S. patents. An avid supporter of technology innovation in Georgia, Ms. Weichert has served since 2010 on the Technology Association of Georgia (TAG)'s Fintech Steering Committee. She holds a B.S. of Foreign Service (Magna Cum Laude) from Georgetown University, a post-graduate diploma in Economics with distinction from the University of Sussex (UK) and a Masters of Business Administration from the University of California at Berkeley. Ms. Weichert also is certified as a Green Belt in Six Sigma, Design for Six Sigma.

Eric P. Whitaker of Illinois to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Niger. Mr. Whitaker, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1990. He is currently the Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for East Africa and the Sudans in the Bureau of African Affairs at the Department of State. A two-time Deputy Chief of Mission overseas and a senior official at the Department of State at home and abroad, his diplomatic career has been diverse, and included consular, economic, commercial, political, and refugee assignments. He has served at U.S. embassies in ten African countries and was a Peace Corps Volunteer in the Philippines. Mr. Whitaker earned an M.P.P. from Princeton University, an M.P.A from the University of Pittsburgh, and an M.S. and B.S. from the University of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana. He speaks Spanish, Portuguese, French, Visayan, and Korean.

Steven E. Winberg of Pennsylvania to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy, Fossil Energy. Mr. Winberg has extensive corporate management experience and strong leadership credentials in fossil energy. He is a recognized expert in fossil energy R&D, advanced clean coal technology, and natural gas production and use. As Vice President for R&D for CONSOL Energy, Inc., and more recently as a Senior Program Manager with the Battelle Memorial Institute, he has demonstrated leadership on energy policy issues including addressing emissions legislation/regulation and electricity/natural gas deregulation. Mr. Winberg was the board chair for the FutureGen Industrial Alliance, a coalition of power producers, coal producers and equipment manufacturers, established to pursue a public/private partnership to build the world's first near-zero emissions coal-fueled power plant. Mr. Winberg holds two patents related to NOx emissions reduction using coal and natural gas. He has a bachelor's degree in nuclear science from SUNY Maritime College and an M.B.A. from the University of Pittsburgh.

Dean L. Winslow of Delaware to be an Assistant Secretary of Defense, Health Affairs. Dr. Winslow most recently served as Professor and Vice Chair of Medicine at Stanford University. Previously, he served as Chair of the Department of Medicine and Chief of the Division of AIDS Medicine at the Santa Clara Valley Medical Center. Prior to joining Stanford he worked for 15 years in pharma and biotech industry where he helped develop several antiretroviral drugs and the first pharmacogenomics diagnostic device approved by the FDA. Dr. Winslow is a retired United States Air Force Colonel with several distinguished military decorations for his service. After 9/11 he deployed twice to Afghanistan and four times to Iraq as a flight surgeon supporting combat operations in OPERATION Enduring Freedom and OPERATION Iraqi Freedom. Dr. Winslow is a graduate of Pennsylvania State University, Jefferson Medical College, the United States Air Force School of Aerospace Medicine, and Air War College. He is board certified in Internal Medicine and Infectious Diseases.

David G. Zatezalo of West Virginia to be the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Mine Safety and Health. Prior to his retirement as Chairman of Rhino Resources GP, LLC in late 2014, he had served as President and CEO, and was previously Chief Operating Officer of Rhino as well as President of Hopedale Mining, LLC. Mr. Zatezalo began his mining career in 1974 with Consolidation Coal Company as a UMWA Laborer, became a foreman and subsequently General Superintendent for Southern Ohio Coal Company and General Manager of AEP's Windsor Coal Company. He later rose to be Vice-President of Operations of AEP's Appalachian Mining Operations. Mr. Zatezalo also worked in Australia for Broken Hill Proprietary, Ltd as a General Mine Manager. Mr. Zatezalo is a Mining Engineering graduate from West Virginia University where he received the 1977 West Virginia University Student Foundation Merit Award. He became a Professional Engineer and received an award for high grade on the mining exam in 1981. He also completed the Masters of Business Administration program at Ohio University in 1994.

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Tuesday, September 12, 2017 11:26:10 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
September 12, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Christopher Caldwell of Arkansas to be Federal Co-Chairman of the Delta Regional Authority. Mr. Caldwell currently serves as the Director of Special Projects for Senator John Boozman (R-AR). Mr. Caldwell was the Campaign Manager for Senator Boozman's 2016 re-election campaign, as well as the Political Director for Boozman's 2010 Senate campaign. He has also served on several other campaigns, including Governor Mike Huckabee's 2007 presidential bid and Senator Tim Hutchinson's 2002 Senate campaign. Beyond his political and government service, Mr. Caldwell has held various roles in the private sector and is an active volunteer in his community. He graduated with a B.A. in Communications from the J. William Fulbright School at the University of Arkansas. Mr. Caldwell resides in Little Rock with his wife Ashley and their two children.

Walter Copan of Colorado to be Under Secretary of Commerce for Standards and Technology. Dr. Copan is President and CEO of IP Engineering Group Corporation and Board member of Rocky Mountain Innovation Partners, supporting Federal labs, academic institutions, and entrepreneurial businesses. He was Managing Director – Technology Commercialization and Partnerships at Brookhaven National Laboratory, and Technology Transfer at the National Renewable Energy Laboratory. Among his entrepreneurial ventures was Clean Diesel Technologies, Inc. (CDTi) which he led as CTO and Executive VP onto NASDAQ. During his 28 years with Lubrizol Corporation, he held top leadership positions including research, development, and business unit management. Dr. Copan earned dual undergraduate degrees, and a Ph.D. in physical chemistry from Case Western Reserve University. He has served as board member and advisor to many organizations, including the Federal Laboratory Consortium.

Brian D. Montgomery of Texas to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Federal Housing Commissioner. Mr. Montgomery is currently Vice Chairman of The Collingwood Group, an advisory firm focused on business consulting, risk management, and compliance within the financial services industry. Previously he served as Assistant Secretary of Housing/Federal Housing Commissioner. He also served as Acting Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development in January 2009. Earlier he served as Deputy Assistant to the President, and from 2003-2005, he directed the Office of Cabinet Affairs, serving as a liaison between President Bush and his Cabinet, and all Federal agencies in the Executive Branch. Under his leadership as FHA Commissioner, FHA successfully spearheaded legislative efforts to preserve the Nation's affordable rental housing stock by maintaining the long-term physical and financial integrity of properties, while reducing rental assistance costs and the cost of FHA insurance claims. FHA provided access to affordable financing to preserve, refinance, or develop more than 300,000 rental units, a portion through risk-sharing agreements with State and local housing finance agencies. He assisted in HUD's recovery and rebuilding efforts along the Gulf Coast and New Orleans following Hurricane Katrina, and chaired HUD headquarters' Hurricane Recovery and Response Center. Mr. Montgomery holds a B.A. in Political Science from the University of Houston.

George Bryan Slater of Virginia to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor, Administration and Management. Mr. Slater is currently serving as the Assistant Secretary for Administration at the U.S.

Department of Transportation. Previous to his current appointment, Mr. Slater served as the Director of Operations and Facilities for Freedom Partners Shared Services. Throughout his career, Mr. Slater has held many leadership positions within Federal and State governments, including serving at the Department of Labor for five years. Mr. Slater received a bachelor's degree from the University of Richmond.

Glen R. Smith of Iowa to be a Member of the Farm Credit Administration Board for the remainder of a term expiring May 21, 2022. In 1982, Mr. Smith is president and co-owner of Smith Land Service, a company he founded in 1982. The company specializes in farm management, land appraisal and farmland brokerage services, working in about 30 Iowa counties. Mr. Smith also owns and serves as president of Smith Generation Farms, Inc., a family farm operation that encompasses about 2000 acres of primarily corn and soybeans in western Iowa. He is a native of Atlantic, Iowa where he was raised on a diversified crop and livestock farm. His "hands-on" farm experience started at a very early age when his father was involved in a disabling farm accident. He graduated from Iowa State University in 1979 with a B.S. in Agricultural Business and accepted a position with Doane Agricultural Services as State Manager of their real estate division. Glen and his wife, Fauzan, have four grown children and three grandchildren.

James E. Trainor III of Texas to be a Commissioner of the Federal Election Commission for the remainder of a 6-year term expiring April 30, 2021. Mr. Trainor is currently a partner at Akerman, LLP, and has more than 10 years of private practice experience involving election law, campaign finance, and ethics representation for government officers, interest groups, corporations, and others (two presidential campaigns). He recently served as a Special Assistant to the Secretary of Defense in the Office of General Counsel. Mr. Trainor's prior government service includes positions as General Counsel to the Texas Secretary of State (also an appointed member to the Standards Advisory Board, Elections Assistance Commission) and Counsel to the Texas House Committee on Regulated Industries and various other state legislative roles. Mr. Trainor was born and raised in Texas. He graduated from Texas A&M University (Corps of Cadets member) in 1997 and earned his law degree from Texas A&M University School of Law in 2002. Mr. Trainor currently resides in Driftwood, Texas, with his wife Lucy and their six children.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Tuesday, October 03, 2017 6:49:09 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 3, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

R.D. James of Missouri to be an Assistant Secretary of the Army, Civil Works. Mr. James has most recently served as a civilian member and engineer on the Mississippi River Commission, originally appointed in 1981 by President Ronald Reagan, where he provided water resources engineering direction and policy advice to several Administrations, Congress, and the Army for a drainage basin that covers roughly 41 percent of the United States. He is a self-employed farmer and manager of cotton gins and grain elevators in New Madrid, Missouri. Over the past 35 years, Mr. James has developed a wealth of knowledge about our nation's critical infrastructure. He previously served as president of the Southern Cotton Ginners Association, he served on the board of directors and executive committee of the Southern Cotton Ginners Association, the Cotton Producers of Missouri, the Board of Directors of U.S. Bank of Sikeston, and the board of directors of Osceola Products. Mr. James is the recipient of the prestigious Bronze de Fleury medal for his significant contributions to Army engineering, the Sikeston Area Chamber of Commerce Agri-Business Award, and was formerly named the New Madrid County Outstanding Conservation Farmer. Mr. James received his degree in civil engineering from the University of Kentucky.

Kimberly A. Reed of West Virginia to be First Vice President of the Export-Import Bank of the United States for a term expiring January 20, 2021. Ms. Reed most recently was president of the International Food Information Council Foundation, a non-profit collaborating with governments, the food and agricultural supply chain, and health professionals on issues surrounding the feeding of the global population. She previously served as senior advisor to U.S. Treasury Secretaries John Snow and Henry Paulson, and led the U.S. Treasury Department's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund, where she awarded nearly $4 billion in tax credits, loans, and grants to financial institutions and economic development groups for investing in economically distressed communities. She also was counsel to three Congressional committees in the U.S. House of Representatives: Ways and Means, Government Reform and Oversight, and Education and the Workforce, and vice president for financial markets policy relations at Lehman Brothers. Ms. Reed is recognized as one of the "100 Women Leaders in STEM" (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math) and serves on several boards. She is the first woman chair of the Republican National Lawyers Association. She holds a B.S. in biology and government from West Virginia Wesleyan College and J.D. from West Virginia University College of Law.

David J. Ryder of New Jersey to be Director of the United States Mint. Mr. Ryder served as manager and managing director of currency for Honeywell Authentication Technologies. Previously, Mr. Ryder served as CEO of Secure Products Corporation, which was acquired by Honeywell in 2007. In 1991, Mr. Ryder was nominated by President George H.W. Bush and confirmed by the U.S. Senate to serve as Director of the U.S. Mint. His prior government service also included Deputy Treasurer of the United States, Assistant to the Vice President and Deputy Chief of Staff to Vice President Daniel Quayle. Mr. Ryder was born in Billings, Montana and raised in Boise, Idaho. A graduate of Boise State University, Mr. Ryder is married with two children.

Leon "Lynn" A. Westmoreland of Georgia to be a Member of the Amtrak Board of Directors for a term of five years. Congressman Lynn A. Westmoreland served in the U.S. House of Representatives for 12 years after serving 12 years in the Georgia House of Representatives. During his time in Congress, he served on the subcommittee on railroads, pipelines, and hazardous materials of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee for six years. Congressman Westmoreland also served on the Financial Services Committee and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. Congressman Westmoreland started his own construction business in 1982 and did residential and light commercial construction until his election to Congress in 2004. He currently serves as principal of Westmoreland Strategies LLC, which provides strategic advice to a variety of clients. He and his wife of 48 years, Joan, have three children and seven, soon to be eight, grandchildren.

Mitchell Zais of South Carolina to be Deputy Secretary of Education. Most recently, Mr. Zais served as South Carolina's elected State Superintendent of Education. During his term in office, the department's budget was reduced while on-time high school graduation rates increased every year to an all-time high. The number of public charter schools increased 78 percent, the number of public charter school students increased 155 percent, and the number of students taking online courses grew 130 percent. Prior to that, he served 10 years as president of Newberry College in South Carolina. The College was recognized for the first time by U.S. News as one of "America's Best Colleges." He served 31 years as an infantry soldier in the U.S. Army. He retired as a Brigadier General. Mr. Zais holds a B.S. in engineering from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, an M.A. degree in military history, plus M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in organizational behavior and social psychology from the University of Washington. He served as South Carolina Commissioner of Higher Education and is a recipient of the Order of the Palmetto, the states' highest civilian award.

The following individuals to be Members of the Board of Directors of the Export Import Bank:

- Claudia Slacik of New York, for the remainder of a 4-year term expiring January 20, 2019, and an additional 4-year term expiring January 20, 2023.
- Judith Delzoppo Pryor of Ohio, for the remainder of a 4-year term expiring January 20, 2021.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Wednesday, October 04, 2017 2:53:56 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 4, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump yesterday announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

R.D. James of Missouri to be an Assistant Secretary of the Army, Civil Works. Mr. James has most recently served as a civilian member and engineer on the Mississippi River Commission, originally appointed in 1981 by President Ronald Reagan, where he provided water resources engineering direction and policy advice to several Administrations, Congress, and the Army for a drainage basin that covers roughly 41 percent of the United States. He is a self-employed farmer and manager of cotton gins and grain elevators in New Madrid, Missouri. Over the past 35 years, Mr. James has developed a wealth of knowledge about our nation's critical infrastructure. He previously served as president of the Southern Cotton Ginners Association, he served on the board of directors and executive committee of the Southern Cotton Ginners Association, the Cotton Producers of Missouri, the Board of Directors of U.S. Bank of Sikeston, and the board of directors of Osceola Products. Mr. James is the recipient of the prestigious Bronze de Fleury medal for his significant contributions to Army engineering, the Sikeston Area Chamber of Commerce Agri-Business Award, and was formerly named the New Madrid County Outstanding Conservation Farmer. Mr. James received his degree in civil engineering from the University of Kentucky.

Kimberly A. Reed of West Virginia to be First Vice President of the Export-Import Bank of the United States for a term expiring January 20, 2021. Ms. Reed most recently was president of the International Food Information Council Foundation, a non-profit collaborating with governments, the food and agricultural supply chain, and health professionals on issues surrounding the feeding of the global population. She previously served as senior advisor to U.S. Treasury Secretaries John Snow and Henry Paulson, and led the U.S. Treasury Department's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund, where she awarded nearly $4 billion in tax credits, loans, and grants to financial institutions and economic development groups for investing in economically distressed communities. She also was counsel to three Congressional committees in the U.S. House of Representatives: Ways and Means, Government Reform and Oversight, and Education and the Workforce, and vice president for financial markets policy relations at Lehman Brothers. Ms. Reed is recognized as one of the "100 Women Leaders in STEM" (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math) and serves on several boards. She is the first woman chair of the Republican National Lawyers Association. She holds a B.S. in biology and government from West Virginia Wesleyan College and J.D. from West Virginia University College of Law.

David J. Ryder of New Jersey to be Director of the United States Mint. (UPDATED) If confirmed, David J. Ryder of New Jersey will serve as Director of the United States Mint. David J. Ryder served as Global Business Development Manager and Managing Director of Currency for Honeywell Authentication Technologies. Previously, Ryder served as CEO of Secure Products Corporation, which was acquired by Honeywell in 2007. In 1991, Ryder was nominated by President George H.W. Bush to serve as Director of the U.S. Mint and served from September 1992 to November 1993. His prior government service also included Deputy Treasurer of the United States, Assistant to the Vice President and Deputy Chief of Staff to Vice President Daniel Quayle. Ryder was born in Billings, Montana and raised in Boise, Idaho, Ryder attended Boise State University and is married with two children.

Leon “Lynn” A. Westmoreland of Georgia to be a Member of the Amtrak Board of Directors for a term of five years. Congressman Lynn A. Westmoreland served in the U.S. House of Representatives for 12 years after serving 12 years in the Georgia House of Representatives. During his time in Congress, he served on the subcommittee on railroads, pipelines, and hazardous materials of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee for six years. Congressman Westmoreland also served on the Financial Services Committee and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. Congressman Westmoreland started his own construction business in 1982 and did residential and light commercial construction until his election to Congress in 2004. He currently serves as principal of Westmoreland Strategies LLC, which provides strategic advice to a variety of clients. He and his wife of 48 years, Joan, have three children and seven, soon to be eight, grandchildren.

Mitchell Zais of South Carolina to be Deputy Secretary of Education. Most recently, Mr. Zais served as South Carolina's elected State Superintendent of Education. During his term in office, the department's budget was reduced while on-time high school graduation rates increased every year to an all-time high. The number of public charter schools increased 78 percent, the number of public charter school students increased 155 percent, and the number of students taking online courses grew 130 percent. Prior to that, he served 10 years as president of Newberry College in South Carolina. The College was recognized for the first time by U.S. News as one of "America's Best Colleges." He served 31 years as an infantry soldier in the U.S. Army. He retired as a Brigadier General. Mr. Zais holds a B.S. in engineering from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, an M.A. degree in military history, plus M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in organizational behavior and social psychology from the University of Washington. He served as South Carolina Commissioner of Higher Education and is a recipient of the Order of the Palmetto, the states' highest civilian award.

The following individuals to be Members of the Board of Directors of the Export Import Bank:

- Claudia Slacik of New York, for the remainder of a 4-year term expiring January 20, 2019, and an additional 4-year term expiring January 20, 2023.
- Judith Delzoppo Pryor of Ohio, for the remainder of a 4-year term expiring January 20, 2021.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Robert Weaver to the Department of Health and Human Services
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 6:46:49 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 6, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Robert Weaver to the Department of Health and Human Services

If confirmed, Robert M. Weaver of Oklahoma will serve as Director of the Indian Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services, for a term of four years. Mr. Weaver is an enrolled member of the Quapaw Tribe of Oklahoma. He serves as the consultative representative to U.S. Government Relations for his tribe in the area of healthcare. Mr. Weaver brings nearly two decades of experience in hospital, mental health administration, and entrepreneurship. He is the founder and owner of four companies that provide healthcare consulting services to tribal governments, their enterprises, and their members. He works at the tribal, State, and Federal levels to improve access and affordability to quality healthcare for American Indians and Alaska Natives through improving employee benefit plans and creating tribal member wellness plans. The National Indian Health Board awarded Mr. Weaver the Regional/Area Impact Award in 2012. One of his companies, RWI Benefits LLC was named the 2017 American Indian Business of the Year from the National Center for American Indian Enterprise Development. He and his wife currently reside in northeast Oklahoma with their four children.

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Monday, December 11, 2017 8:58:30 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
December 11, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Frank T. Brogan of Pennsylvania to be the Assistant Secretary of Education for Elementary and Secondary Education. Mr. Brogan most recently served as chancellor of Pennsylvania's public universities. He began his career as a fifth grade teacher in Martin County, Florida and later served as a dean of students, assistant principal, principal, and superintendent before being elected Florida's Commissioner of Education in 1994. Mr. Brogan continued his advocacy for public education when elected Lieutenant Governor of Florida in 1998 and 2002. After five years in that role, he was named president of Florida Atlantic University – a position he held until 2009, when he was selected to serve as chancellor of Florida's public universities. A native of Ohio, Mr. Brogan was the first member of his family to attend college – earning a bachelor's degree in education magna cum laude from the University of Cincinnati and a master's degree in education from Florida Atlantic University. He and his wife, Courtney, have a 12-year-old son, Colby John.

Lisa Gordon-Hagerty of Virginia to be Under Secretary for Nuclear Security, Department of Energy. Ms. Gordon-Hagerty is president of Tier Tech International, Inc., a national security consulting company. She also serves as president of LEG Inc., providing strategic advice and counsel in domestic and national security issues. Ms. Gordon-Hagerty was previously executive vice president and chief operating officer of USEC, Inc. She was a member of the White House National Security Council staff for more than five years, serving as the Director for Combating Terrorism. Ms. Gordon-Hagerty previously served as the U.S. Department of Energy's Director of the Office of Emergency Response, and as Acting Director of the Office of Nuclear Weapons Surety. Before that, she was a professional staff member for the U.S. House of Representatives, Committee on Energy and Commerce. She began her professional career as a health physicist at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. Ms. Gordon-Hagerty earned a Master of Public Health degree in health physics and a Bachelor of Science degree, both from the University of Michigan.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts
Date: Wednesday, July 26, 2017 7:25:31 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
July 26, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Samuel Dale Brownback of Kansas to be Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom, Department of State. Mr. Brownback has been Governor of Kansas since 2011. Previously, he served as a U.S. Senator (1996-2011) and a U.S. Representative in the House of Representatives (1995-1996) from Kansas. While a member of the Senate, he worked actively on the issue of religious freedom in multiple countries and was a key sponsor of the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998. He also served as Kansas Secretary of Agriculture (1986-1993) and was a White House Fellow in the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative (1990-1991). Mr. Brownback was a private attorney in Kansas and taught agricultural law at Kansas State University. He co-authored two books on the subject. He earned a B.S. from Kansas State University and a J.D. from the University of Kansas. He and his wife Mary have five children.

Daniel J. Kritenbrink of Virginia to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. Mr. Kritenbrink, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1994. He is currently the Senior Advisor for North Korea Policy at the Department of State. A former Deputy Chief of Mission in Beijing, China, Mr. Kritenbrink has held senior leadership positions at the Department of State and served as a Senior Director at the National Security Council. He has two decades of experience overseas and in Washington working on Asian affairs as a policy maker, analyst, and practitioner. Mr. Kritenbrink earned a M.A. from the University of Virginia and a B.A. from the University of Nebraska-Kearney. He speaks Chinese and Japanese.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Key Additions to his Administration
Date: Wednesday, October 11, 2017 8:10:28 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 11, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Barry Myers to the Department of Commerce

If confirmed, Barry Myers of Pennsylvania will serve as Under Secretary for Oceans and Atmosphere, Department of Commerce. Mr. Myers has served as CEO of AccuWeather since 2007, and since then the company has experienced its highest grossing years, and its largest global web and mobile audience growth. He is one of the world's leading authorities on the use of weather information. He has given remarks at the World Meteorological Organization, World Federation of Scientists, American Meteorological Society (AMS), and many other organizations. For two decades, he served as a member of the nationally recognized Smeal College of Business. Mr. Myers is from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He graduated from the Smeal College of Business at Penn State and received a J.D. from Boston University Law School. He and his wife Holly have five children.

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Appoint John Rood to the Department of Defense

John C. Rood of Arizona will serve as Under Secretary of Defense for Policy. Mr. Rood most recently served as the Senior Vice President for Lockheed Martin International, where his responsibilities included developing and executing strategies to grow Lockheed Martin's international business, managing marketing and government relations activities, and overseeing offset and industrial cooperation activities. Mr. Rood's previous industry experience was at the Raytheon Company where he served as Vice President of U.S. Business Development. Mr. Rood served for more than 20 years in Federal Government positions, including Acting Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security, and Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation. He also served at the National Security Council as Special Assistant to the President and Senior Director of Counterproliferation and Director of Proliferation Strategy for Counterproliferation in Homeland Defense. Mr. Rood served at the Defense Department as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Forces Policy, and at the Central Intelligence Agency as an analyst following missile programs in foreign countries. In addition, Mr. Rood has also served as senior policy advisor to U.S. Senator Jon Kyl of Arizona.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Key Additions to his Administration
Date: Thursday, October 26, 2017 9:01:34 AM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 26, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

William Beach of Kansas to be Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, for a term of 4 years. Mr. Beach is the Vice President for Policy Research at the Mercatus Center at George Mason University. Mr. Beach previously served as the Chief Economist for the Senate Budget Committee, Republican Staff. Prior to that position, he was the Lazof Family Fellow in Economics at the Heritage Foundation and director of the Center for Data Analysis. Prior to joining Heritage in 1995, Mr. Beach served as a senior economist in the corporate headquarters of Sprint United, Inc., and, from 1991 to 1995, as the president of the Institute for Humane Studies at George Mason University. A graduate of Washburn University in Topeka, Kansas, Mr. Beach also holds a master's degree in history and economics from the University of Missouri-Columbia and a Ph.D. in Economics from Buckingham University in Great Britain.

Irving Dennis of Ohio to be Chief Financial Officer, Department of Housing and Urban Development. Mr. Dennis recently retired as a Global Client Service Partner with Ernst & Young, LLP where he served as the coordinating assurance partner on several large multinational public companies in various industries. He has an in-depth understanding of business and financial risk and extensive experience advising audit committees and C-suite executives on global corporate governance, financial, and internal control matters. His experience includes finance transformations, enterprise risk management and corporate governance. In addition, Mr. Dennis has held several leadership roles within EY including a Regional Audit Methodology Leader and a member of a Regional Assurance Leadership Team. Mr. Dennis earned a B.S. Degree in business administration-accounting from Montclair State University and is a Certified Public Accountant. He serves on several not-for-profit boards and has been a member of various accounting-related organizations. Mr. Dennis lives in New Albany, Ohio, with his wife and two children.

Steven Gardner of Kentucky to be Director of the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement. Mr. Gardner is President and CEO of ECSI, LLC, a consulting firm where he has focused on natural resources, mining, reclamation, energy, environmental, and health and safety issues. In 2011, he was inducted into the College of Engineering Hall of Distinction. As a licensed professional engineer, Mr. Gardner has worked on projects throughout the United States and internationally. He was the 2015 President of the Society for Mining, Metallurgy and Exploration (SME). He has served on the UK Mining Engineering Foundation, Kentucky Geological Survey, Biosystems & Agricultural Engineering Advisory Boards, and was a member of the Kentucky Board of Licensure for Professional Engineers and Surveyors. Mr. Gardner has an M.S. in Mining Engineering with a Graduate Certification in Environmental Systems and a B.S. in Agricultural Engineering from the University of Kentucky.

Kenneth L. Marcus of Virginia to be the Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights, Department of Education. Mr. Marcus is currently President and General Counsel of the Louis D. Brandeis Center for Human Rights Under Law. He previously served as Staff Director of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights and was delegated the authority of Assistant Secretary of Education for Civil Rights under President George W. Bush. He also previously served as the Lillie and Nathan Ackerman Chair in Equality and Justice in America at the City University of New York's Baruch College School of Public Affairs. Mr. Marcus is a graduate of the University of California at Berkeley School of Law and Williams College.

M. Lee McClenny of Washington to be Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Paraguay. Mr. McClenny, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, began his public service with the U.S. Information Agency in 1986. He is currently the Chargé d'Affaires e.p. of the U.S. Embassy in Caracas, Venezuela. He has previously served overseas in Kuala Lumpur, Montreal, Manila, London, Brussels, Guatemala City, Belgrade and Ottawa, as well as in leadership positions at the Department of State and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Mr. McClenny is a recipient of the Presidential Meritorious Service Award, and numerous performance awards from the Department of State and U.S. Information Agency. He received a B.A. from the University of Washington, and speaks Spanish, French, and some Serbo-Croatian and Russian.

Carlos Trujillo of Florida to be the Permanent Representative of the United States to the Organization of American States with the rank of Ambassador. Mr. Trujillo has been the Florida State Representative for the 105th District in the Florida House of Representatives, Tallahassee, Florida since 2010. An attorney, he simultaneously has been the Founding Partner of Trujillo, Vargas, Gonzalez and Hevia LLP since 2011 and President of Carlos Trujillo, PA, since 2007. Previously, he served as a Florida Assistant State Attorney at the Miami Dade County State Attorney's Office in Miami from 2007 to 2011. He also has been a Board Member of the Public Health Trust of Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami. Mr. Trujillo earned a B.S. from Spring Hill College in Mobile, Alabama and a J.D. from Florida State College of Law in Tallahassee. He speaks fluent Spanish.

Peter Hendrick Vrooman of New York to be Ambassador Extraordinary & Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Rwanda. Mr. Vrooman, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1991. He most recently served as Chargé d'Affaires from 2016 to 2017 and Deputy Chief of Mission from 2014 to 2016 at the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Mr. Vrooman has held senior positions with the Department of State at home and at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, as well as overseas. He has served at seven embassies in Africa, the Near East and South Asia. Mr. Vrooman possesses a deep knowledge of East African issues, expertise in UN peacekeeping, strong management and public diplomacy credentials, and economic/commercial advocacy experience. He earned a M.S from the National Defense University's Industrial College of the Armed Forces, and a B.A. from Harvard College. He speaks French and Arabic.

The following individuals to be Members of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service:

- Calvin R. Tucker of Pennsylvania, for the remainder of a term expiring December 8, 2023.
- Robert M. Duncan of Kentucky, for the remainder of a seven-year term expiring December 8, 2018, and an additional term expiring December 8, 2025.
- David Williams of Illinois, for the remainder of a seven-year term expiring December 8, 2019.

—

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Appoint Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to appoint the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Eddie Joe Williams of Arkansas will serve as the Federal Representative to the Southern States Energy Board.

John Zangardi of Pennsylvania will serve as be Chief Information Officer, Department of Homeland Security. Dr. Zangardi has extensive experience in information technology and security. Most recently, Dr. Zangardi served as the Acting Chief Information Officer at the Department of Defense. He previously served as the Principal Deputy Department of Defense Chief Information Officer. His career also includes experience in acquisition, policy, legislative affairs, resourcing, and operations. Dr. Zangardi is a retired Naval Flight Officer and served in a variety of command and staff assignments. Since his retirement from the Navy, he has held several senior executive positions at the Department of the Navy, including as the Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Command, Control, Communications, Computers, Intelligence, Information Operations, and Space and as the Department of Navy Chief Information Officer. Dr. Zangardi holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Scranton, master's degree from the Naval Postgraduate School, and Doctor of Philosophy degree from George Mason University.

The following individuals will serve as Members of the Advisory Committee on the Arts of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts:

- Pamella DeVos of Michigan.
- Frederick Davis Jubitz of Oregon.
- Michael S. Lorber of New York.
- Anne N. Reyes of Florida.
- Stephanie Spencer of California.
- Frank Giordano of New Jersey.
- Vance Thompson of South Dakota.
- Geoffrey K. Verhoff of Virginia.

—

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Designate David Kautter to the Internal Revenue Service

David Kautter of Virginia to be the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This designation will become effective on November 13, 2017. Mr. Kautter was confirmed on August 3, 2017, to be the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Tax Policy.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Key Additions to his Administration
Date: Thursday, January 04, 2018 7:02:29 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
January 4, 2018

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

Sean Cairncross of Minnesota, to be Chief Executive Officer of the Millennium Challenge

Corporation. Mr. Cairncross currently serves as a Deputy Assistant to the President and Senior Advisor to the Chief of Staff. Before joining the White House, Mr. Cairncross served as the Chief Operating Officer of the Republican National Committee for the 2016 election cycle. Before that, Mr. Cairncross was a partner at a Washington, D.C.-area law firm, and served as general counsel to a policy analytics firm. He has also served as the Deputy Executive Director and General Counsel to the National Republican Senatorial Committee for the 2010 and 2012 cycles, and as Chief Counsel to the RNC for the 2008 cycle. Before that, Mr. Cairncross worked as an associate at a large Washington, D.C. law firm. Mr. Cairncross holds a J.D. from NYU School of Law, an M.Phil in international relations from Cambridge University, and a B.A., summa cum laude, from American University. Originally from Minnesota, he currently lives in Washington, D.C., with his wife and two children.

Tim Thomas of Kentucky, to be the Federal Co-Chair of the Appalachian Regional Commission. Mr. Thomas currently serves on the State staff of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell as a field representative based in the Senator's Bowling Green office. A native Kentuckian, Mr. Thomas previously served in the administration of former Kentucky governor, Ernie Fletcher, in the Kentucky Environmental Cabinet as a special assistant to the Secretary handling matters including legislative initiatives for the agency. While at the cabinet, Mr. Thomas also served as Federal facilities coordinator, overseeing environmental regulation of Federal sites, including Department of Energy and United States Army installations. Mr. Thomas' last position in State government was as executive director of the Kentucky Infrastructure Authority, an agency tasked with helping finance the expansion of water and wastewater services throughout the State. After leaving State government, Mr. Thomas was employed by Swift & Staley, Inc., a government infrastructure support services contractor based in western Kentucky. He is a graduate of Murray State University and the University of Louisville School of Law.

Kevin Edward Moley of Virginia, to be an Assistant Secretary of State (International Organizational Affairs). Mr. Moley, a prominent businessman, Federal Government official and former Ambassador, was a private investor in Scottsdale, Arizona, and Williamsburg, Virginia, from 2006-present and 1998-2001. From 2001-2006 he was Representative of the United States to the Office of the United Nations and Other International Organizations in Geneva, Switzerland, with the rank of Ambassador. Previously, he was a senior executive in the health care industry and served the Federal Government as Deputy Secretary, Department of Health and Human Services (1992-1993), Assistant Secretary for Management and Budget, Department of Health and Human Services (1989-1992), and in senior positions in the Health Care Financing Administration (1984-1988). He played key leadership roles in the Reagan-Bush, Bush-Quayle, and Bush-Cheney Presidential campaigns. From 1965-1971, Mr. Moley served honorably in the Marine Corps as a Sgt. (E-5), receiving a Purple Heart and a Navy Commendation Medal w/Combat V (Valor). He has served as Chairman of the Board of Project Concern International, a San Diego based NGO (2007-2015), and on Federal Government commissions, such as Vice Chairman of the President's Council on Management Improvement (1989-1991).

Andrew Gellert of New Jersey, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Chile. Mr. Gellert, President of Gellert Global Group in Elizabeth, New Jersey, is a prominent American businessman. He leads an enterprise consisting of many North American food importing companies, including Atalanta Corporation, the largest privately held food importer in the United States. He has served as Chairman of the Association of Food Industries (AFI), which is part of a coalition of food importing associations pursuing the mutual trade interests of overseas suppliers and United States importers before the FDA, and within the food legislation arena. In addition, he is a member of the Young Presidents Organization and a Board member of the Elizabeth Development Corporation. Mr. Gellert earned a B.S. from Cornell University.

Leandro Rizzuto of Florida, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Barbados, and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary America to St. Kitts and Nevis and to Saint Lucia. Mr. Rizzuto, a prominent businessman, is past Chairman of the Professional Beauty Association (PBA). He has been Director of North American Beauty Events since 2005, the producer of Cosmoprof NA – America’s largest B2B Beauty Show – creator and publisher of “Style Source Magazine.” For over 30 years, he helped build his family’s business, Conair, into one of the largest private companies in the United States, with offices in Asia, Europe, Australia, and Latin America. At Conair, he was Senior Vice President for Professional Global Business Units and had increased sales from $25 million to $300 million and was credited with over 25 United States patents. Mr. Rizzuto attended Arizona State University, where he majored in marketing.

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Appoint Personnel to Key Administration Posts

James Lynn Woodworth of Arkansas, to be Commissioner of Education Statistics, Department of Education, for the remainder of a six year term expiring June 21, 2021. Mr. Woodworth joined the Center for Research on Educational Outcomes (CREDO) at Stanford University’s Hoover Institute in 2012. Prior to his time at CREDO, he performed research, program evaluations, and administered performance pay programs at the Office for Education Policy as part of his duties as a Distinguished Doctoral Fellow in the Department of Education Reform at the University of Arkansas. Before his time at the University of Arkansas, Mr. Woodworth spent 11 years as a public school teacher in Arkansas. He earned a B.A., Magna Cum Laude, in music education and a M.Ed. in educational leadership from Arkansas Tech University in Russellville, Arkansas, and earned his PhD. in education policy at the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville. Mr. Woodworth is a veteran of Marine Corps.

Michelle Giuda of New York, to be an Assistant Secretary of State (Public Affairs). Ms. Giuda has been the Senior Vice President of Global Corporate Communications at Weber Shandwick in New York, New York, since 2014. She oversees global communications strategy across 81 countries at Weber Shandwick, a global public relations firms with offices in major media, business, and government capitals around the world. During her tenure, Weber Shandwick became the most awarded public relations firm at the 2016 Cannes Lion Festival of Creativity, the first firm to be named PRWeek’s Global Agency of the Year for three consecutive years, and the only PR agency on Advertising Age’s A-List in 2014 and 2015. Ms. Giuda was named one of the Outstanding 50 Asian Americans in Business by the Asian American Business Development Center in 2016. Previously, she served as Deputy National Press Secretary to Speaker Newt Gingrich and Communications Director for GOPAC in Washington, D.C. Ms. Giuda graduated, cum laude, with a B.A. from the University of California Los Angeles, where she won an NCAA Championship and captained the UCLA Women’s Gymnastics Team; and she earned an M.P.S. from George Washington University.

###

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump Announces Key Additions to his Administration
Date: Friday, September 29, 2017 7:27:43 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
September 29, 2017

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Nominate Personnel to Key Administration Posts

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key positions in his Administration:

Ernest W. DuBester of Virginia to be a Member of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA) for the remainder of a five year term expiring on July 1, 2019. Mr. DuBester has served as a Member of the FLRA since August 2009. He was also FLRA Chairman from January to November 2013. With over 40 years of experience in labor-management relations, he began his career at the National Labor Relations Board as counsel to former Chairman and Member John Fanning. He was also a union attorney with the firm of Highsaw & Mahoney, and legislative counsel to the AFL-CIO. From 1993-2001, he was Chairman and Member at the National Mediation Board. From 2001-2005, Mr. DuBester was the Professor and Director of the Dispute Resolution Program at the Antonin Scalia Law School. Mr. DuBester received his A.B. from Boston College, his J.D. from Catholic University, where he served as Recent Developments Editor of the Law Review, and his Masters of Law in Labor Law from Georgetown University Law Center. He is married to Karen Marie Kremer.

Neil Jacobs of North Carolina to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Environmental Observation and Prediction. Dr. Jacobs is the Chief Atmospheric Scientist at Panasonic Avionics Corporation, where he directs the research and development of both the aviation weather observing program, as well as the numerical forecast models. He is the Chair of the American Meteorological Society's Forecast Improvement Group, and also serves on the World Meteorological Organization's aircraft-based observing systems expert team. Prior to joining Panasonic (AirDat) in 2005, Dr. Jacobs worked on various analyses and modeling projects including NASA's Earth Systems Science Program, GOES satellite program, and the Department of Energy's Ocean Margins Program. He has dual B.S. degrees in mathematics and physics from the University of South Carolina, and a M.S. in air-sea interaction and Ph.D. in numerical modeling from North Carolina State University. He resides in Durham, NC, with his wife Dr. Jennifer Modliszewski and sons Nicolaus and Theodore.

Timothy Kelly of Michigan to be Assistant Secretary for Career, Technical, and Adult Education, Department of Education. Mr. Kelly is currently a State representative from the 94th district in Saginaw County, Michigan. Mr. Kelly, serving in his third and final term in the Michigan House of Representatives, is the chair of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on School Aid, which oversees K-12 spending, and also chairs the House Education Reform policy committee. Prior to his election as a State representative, Mr. Kelly served one term as an elected county commissioner in Saginaw County. He also served in former Michigan Governor John Engler's administration as the governor's education policy advisor, and as a special advisor to the director of the Michigan Department of Career Development. Mr. Kelly also served in the administration of Governor Evan Bayh in Indiana as the executive director of the Indiana Human Resources Investment Council, the executive director of the Indiana Council on Vocational Education, and as a development specialist for the Indiana Department of Commerce. Before working in the public sector, Mr. Kelly worked in various subsidiaries and States for Bituminous Materials Co., Inc., his family's emulsified asphalt business. Mr. Kelly is a graduate of the University of Denver. Among many awards and recognitions for his work in the legislature, he is the 2016 recipient of the Michigan College Access Network's Compass Award, and was the MIRS 2013 Freshman Legislator of the Year.

David Christian Tryon of Ohio to be the Chief Counsel for Advocacy, Small Business Administration. Mr. Tryon, a litigation partner with the law firm of Porter Wright Morris and Arthur, has been practicing law for over 31 years. He is a graduate of the University of Michigan Law School and has a business degree from Brigham Young University. He was born and raised in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Tryon has served as the President of the Brecksville/Broadview Heights School Board and is currently an Executive Board Member for the Boy Scouts of America, Lake Erie Council, a member of the Ohio Advisory Committee for the United States Commission on Civil Rights and President of the Cleveland Lawyers Chapter for the Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy. He is also a lay clergyman in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In addition to representing both large and small corporate matters in court, Mr. Tryon has handled public interest matters on a pro bono basis.

—

President Donald J. Trump Announces Intent to Appoint Paul Packer to the Commission for the Preservation of America’s Heritage Abroad

President Donald J. Trump today announced his intent to appoint Paul Packer of New York to be a Member of the Commission for the Preservation of America’s Heritage Abroad for the remainder of a 3-year term expiring February 27, 2019 and upon appointment designate chair.

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump to Award the Medal of Honor
Date: Wednesday, September 20, 2017 4:02:24 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
September 20, 2017

President Donald J. Trump to Award the Medal of Honor

WASHINGTON, DC – On October 23, 2017, President Donald J. Trump will award the Medal of Honor to United States Army Captain Gary M. Rose (retired) for conspicuous gallantry during the Vietnam War.

Captain Rose will receive the Medal of Honor for voluntarily risking his life on multiple occasions during combat operations, while serving as a medic with the 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne). From September 11 through September 14, 1970, while his unit was engaged with a much larger force deep in enemy-controlled territory, then-Sergeant Rose repeatedly ran into the line of enemy fire to provide critical medical aid to his comrades, using his own body on one occasion to shield a wounded American from harm.

On the final day of the mission, although wounded himself, Sergeant Rose voluntarily exposed himself to enemy fire while moving wounded personnel to the extraction point, loading them into helicopters, and helping to repel an enemy assault on the American position. As he boarded the final extraction helicopter, intense enemy fire hit the helicopter, causing it to crash shortly after takeoff. Again, ignoring his own injuries, Sergeant Rose pulled the helicopter crew and members of his unit from the burning wreckage and provided medical aid until another extraction helicopter arrived.

Rose enlisted in the Army after attending San Fernando State College. He attended Officer Candidate School in 1973 and earned a bachelor's degree in general education and military science from Cameron University in 1977. He retired from the Army in 1987. After retiring, Captain Rose earned a master's degree in communication from the University of Oklahoma and later worked as a technical consultant in the defense and automobile industries, developing user and maintenance manuals and training programs and materials.

Today, Captain Rose lives in Huntsville, Alabama, with his wife Margaret, and is involved in a number of charitable organizations. He is a lifetime member of the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, the Knights of Columbus, the Military Officers Association of America, the Military Order of the Purple Heart, the Special Forces Association, the Special Operations Association, and the Vietnam Veterans Association. He and Margaret have two daughters, Sarah and Claire, and one son, Michael.

THE MEDAL OF HONOR:

The Medal of Honor is awarded by the President, in the name of Congress, to members of the Armed Forces who distinguish themselves conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of life above and beyond the call of duty while:

- engaged in an action against an enemy of the United States;
- engaged in military operations involving conflict with an opposing foreign force; or
- serving with friendly foreign forces engaged in an armed conflict against an opposing armed force in which the United States is not a belligerent party.

The meritorious conduct must involve great personal bravery or self-sacrifice so conspicuous as to clearly distinguish the individual above his or her comrades and must have involved risk of life. There must be incontestable proof of the performance of the meritorious conduct, and each recommendation for the award must be considered on the standard of extraordinary merit.

PRESS CREDENTIALING: The award ceremony will take place at the White House. Additional information about media credentials will be released at a later date.

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: President Donald J. Trump's Weekly Address
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 4:32:10 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
October 6, 2017

President Donald J. Trump's Weekly Address

The President's Weekly Address is now available to watch on Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, and WH.gov.

Transcript:

My fellow Americans,

On Wednesday, I traveled to Las Vegas to visit with the victims of the horrific shooting, speak with their families, and thank the brave citizens, first responders and medical personnel who saved so many lives.

We struggle to grasp the evil that occurred on Sunday evening when a murderer shot into a crowd of more than 20,000 people. Men, women, and children were gathered to enjoy a concert. They never imagined it would become the worst day of their lives.

But in the wake of such shock and horror, it was a matter of seconds before the goodness of the human spirit broke through. When the shooting began, a mother laid on top of her daughter to shield her from gunfire. A husband died to protect his beloved wife. Strangers rescued strangers, police officers and first responders rushed into danger.

When the worst of humanity strikes, the best of humanity responds.

The men and women who risked their lives to save their fellow citizens give proof to the words of this Scripture: "The light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it." Americans defied death and hatred with love and courage.

This week our nation remembers all the wonderful people we have lost and all of the grace they brought into our lives and our communities. Among the fallen were young students full of limitless potential, law enforcement personnel, a nurse, teachers dedicated to our children's future, and many others. They were mothers, fathers, sisters, and brothers. They were husbands and wives, and sons and daughters. They will be dearly missed, and they will never be forgotten.

To all those who lost a loved one, we cannot imagine your pain, or erase your sorrow. Our hearts grieve for you. We stand with you now, and every day after. And we pray that God may carry you through the anguish and sorrow.

We can never fill the void of those who perished, but we pledge to honor them by living as they would have wished – with lives full of purpose, with hearts full of love, and with hope for a better tomorrow.

May God comfort the broken-hearted. And may God bless the United States of America. Thank you.

###

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Press Briefing by Press Secretary Sarah Sanders and Chief of Staff General John Kelly
Date: Thursday, October 19, 2017 5:02:52 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

October 19, 2017 For Immediate Release

PRESS BRIEFING
BY PRESS SECRETARY SARAH SANDERS
AND CHIEF OF STAFF GENERAL JOHN KELLY

James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

3:01 P.M. EDT

MS. SANDERS: Catch you off guard when we're on time. Good afternoon.

As you all saw, earlier today the President met with the Governor of Puerto Rico this morning to discuss the ongoing hurricane recovery efforts. The administration is working tirelessly to help our fellow citizens recover and rebuild, and we will stand with them throughout this process.

It's been a while since I've had the opportunity to share a letter to the President from the podium, and I have one today that I think you'll all enjoy.

This one is from Mackenzie of Dalton, Georgia. Mackenzie is seven years old and is in the second grade. And she wrote:

"Dear President Trump, I'm writing to tell you how much I appreciate all you're doing. I think you're an awesome President. In fact, I voted for you in my school election. My mom is bringing me to D.C. on spring break this year, and I'm very excited. I've never been there before, and I can't wait to see everything.

I am most excited to see the White House. My mom said we have to write someone to ask to come in, and I hope we can. I know you're a busy man, but if you could meet me, or at least see your office, it would make my day. And I would love to shake your hand.

You're our leader, a hero, and a great man, and I can't wait to see you and help make America great again. Sincerely, Mackenzie, you're biggest fan.

P.S. If you would like, I can bring something to eat when I come. I've always heard food brings people together."

Well, Mackenzie, I had the opportunity to share your letter with the President earlier today, and he said he would love for you to come and visit us here at the White House during spring break. I'll give you a tour personally, and if the President is here, he'd love to meet you as well.

Finally, you're very right about food bringing people together, and so the press staff would like to invite you to have lunch here in the Navy Mess downstairs in the West Wing. We look very much forward to your visit and hope that you'll be in touch so that we can make sure that that happens.

On a more serious note, we've had a lot of questions come in, and I certainly addressed quite a few of them yesterday, and thought today it might be more appropriate to have the Chief of Staff address some of those questions specific to outreach to Gold Star families. He'll address questions on that topic, and if you have other questions throughout the day, the press staff will be here and happy to answer those after the briefing later this afternoon.

Thanks, guys.

GENERAL KELLY: Well, thanks a lot. And it is a more serious note, so I just wanted to perhaps make more of a statement than an -- give more of an explanation in what amounts to be a traditional press interaction.

Most Americans don't know what happens when we lose one of soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines, our Coast Guardsmen in combat. So let me tell you what happens:

Their buddies wrap them up in whatever passes as a shroud, puts them on a helicopter as a routine, and sends them home. Their first stop along the way is when they're packed in ice, typically at the airhead. And then they're flown to, usually, Europe where they're then packed in ice again and flown to Dover Air Force Base, where Dover takes care of the remains, embalms them, meticulously dresses them in their uniform with the medals that they've earned, the emblems of their service, and then puts them on another airplane linked up with a casualty officer escort that takes them home.

A very, very good movie to watch, if you haven't ever seen it, is "Taking Chance," where this is done in a movie -- HBO setting. Chance Phelps was killed under my command right next to me, and it's worth seeing that if you've never seen it.

So that's the process. While that's happening, a casualty officer typically goes to the home very early in the morning and waits for the first lights to come on. And then he knocks on the door; typically a mom and dad will answer, a wife. And if there is a wife, this is happening in two different places; if the parents are divorced, three different places. And the casualty officer proceeds to break the heart of a family member and stays with that family until -- well, for a long, long time, even after the internment. So that's what happens.

Who are these young men and women? They are the best 1 percent this country produces. Most of you, as Americans, don't know them. Many of you don't know anyone who knows any one of them. But they are the very best this country produces, and they volunteer to protect our country when there's nothing in our country anymore that seems to suggest that selfless service to the nation is not only appropriate, but required. But that's all right.

Who writes letters to the families? Typically, the company commander -- in my case, as a Marine -- the company commander, battalion commander, regimental commander, division commander, Secretary of Defense, typically the service chief, commandant of the Marine Corps, and the President typically writes a letter.

Typically, the only phone calls a family receives are the most important phone calls they could imagine, and that is from their buddies. In my case, hours after my son was killed, his friends were calling us from Afghanistan, telling us what a great guy he was. Those are the only phone calls that really mattered.

And yeah, the letters count, to a degree, but there's not much that really can take the edge off what a family member is going through.

So some Presidents have elected to call. All Presidents, I believe, have elected to send letters. If you elect to call a family like this, it is about the most difficult thing you could imagine. There's no perfect way to make that phone call.

When I took this job and talked to President Trump about how to do it, my first recommendation was he not do it because it's not the phone call that parents, family members are looking forward to. It's nice to do, in my opinion, in any event.

He asked me about previous Presidents, and I said, I can tell you that President Obama, who was my Commander-in-Chief when I was on active duty, did not call my family. That was not a criticism. That was just to simply say, I don't believe President Obama called. That's not a negative thing. I don't believe President Bush called in all cases. I don't believe any President, particularly when the casualty rates are very, very high -- that Presidents call. But I believe they all write.

So when I gave that explanation to our President three days ago, he elected to make phone calls in the cases of four young men who we lost in Niger at the earlier part of this month. But then he said, how do you make these calls? If you're not in the family, if you've never worn the uniform, if you've never been in combat, you can't even imagine how to make that call. I think he very bravely does make those calls.

The call in question that he made yesterday -- or day before yesterday now -- were to four family members, the four fallen. And remember, there's a next-of-kin designated by the individual. If he's married, that's typically the spouse. If he's not married, that's typically the parents unless the parents are divorced, and then he selects one of them. If he didn't get along with his parents, he'll select a sibling. But the point is, the phone call is made to the next-of-kin only if the next-of-kin agrees to take the phone call. Sometimes they don't.

So a pre-call is made: The President of the United States or the commandant of the Marine Corps, or someone would like to call, will you accept the call? And typically, they all accept the call.

So he called four people the other day and expressed his condolences in the best way that he could. And he said to me, what do I say? I said to him, sir, there's nothing you can do to lighten the burden on these families.

Well, let me tell you what I told him. Let me tell you what my best friend, Joe Dunford, told me -- because he was my casualty officer. He said, Kel, he was doing exactly what he wanted to do when he was killed. He knew what he was getting into by joining that 1 percent. He knew what the possibilities were because we're at war. And when he died, in the four cases we're talking about, Niger, and my son's case in Afghanistan -- when he died, he was surrounded by the best men on this Earth: his friends.

That's what the President tried to say to four families the other day. I was stunned when I came to work yesterday morning, and broken-hearted at what I saw a member of Congress doing. A member of Congress who listened in on a phone call from the President of the United States to a young wife, and in his way tried to express that opinion -- that he's a brave man, a fallen hero, he knew what he was getting himself into because he enlisted. There's no reason to enlist; he enlisted. And he was where he wanted to be, exactly where he wanted to be, with exactly the people he wanted to be with when his life was taken.

That was the message. That was the message that was transmitted.

It stuns me that a member of Congress would have listened in on that conversation. Absolutely stuns me. And I thought at least that was sacred. You know, when I was a kid growing up, a lot of things were sacred in our country. Women were sacred, looked upon with great honor. That's obviously not the case anymore as we see from recent cases. Life -- the dignity of life -- is sacred. That's gone. Religion, that seems to be gone as well.

Gold Star families, I think that left in the convention over the summer. But I just thought -- the selfless devotion that brings a man or woman to die on the battlefield, I just thought that that might be sacred.

And when I listened to this woman and what she was saying, and what she was doing on TV, the only thing I could do to collect my thoughts was to go and walk among the finest men and women on this Earth. And you can always find them because they're in Arlington National Cemetery. I went over there for an hour-and-a-half, walked among the stones, some of whom I put there because they were doing what I told them to do when they were killed.

I'll end with this: In October -- April, rather, of 2015, I was still on active duty, and I went to the dedication of the new FBI field office in Miami. And it was dedicated to two men who were killed in a firefight in Miami against drug traffickers in 1986 -- a guy by the name of Grogan and Duke. Grogan almost retired, 53 years old; Duke, I think less than a year on the job. Anyways, they got in a gunfight and they were killed. Three other FBI agents were there, were wounded, and now retired. So we go down -- Jim Comey gave an absolutely brilliant memorial speech to those fallen men and to all of the men and women of the FBI who serve our country so well, and law enforcement so well.

There were family members there. Some of the children that were there were three or four years old when their dads were killed on that street in Miami-Dade. Three of the men that survived the fight were there, and gave a rendition of how brave those men were and how they gave their lives.

And a congresswoman stood up, and in the long tradition of empty barrels making the most noise, stood up there and all of that and talked about how she was instrumental in getting the funding for that building, and how she took care of her constituents because she got the money, and she just called up President Obama, and on that phone call he gave the money -- the $20 million -- to build the building. And she sat down, and we were stunned. Stunned that she had done it. Even for someone that is that empty a barrel, we were stunned.

But, you know, none of us went to the press and criticized. None of us stood up and were appalled. We just said, okay, fine.

So I still hope, as you write your stories, and I appeal to America, that let's not let this maybe last thing that's held sacred in our society -- a young man, young woman going out and giving his or her life for our country -- let's try to somehow keep that sacred. But it eroded a great deal yesterday by the selfish behavior of a member of Congress.

So I'm willing to take a question or two on this topic. Let me ask you this: Is anyone here a Gold Star parent or sibling? Does anyone here know a Gold Star parent or sibling?

Okay, you get the question.

Q Well, thank you, General Kelly. First of all, we have a great deal of respect -- Semper Fi -- for everything that you've ever done. But if we could take this a bit further. Why were they in Niger? We were told they weren't in armored vehicles and there was no air cover. So what are the specifics about this particular incident? And why were we there? And why are we there?

GENERAL KELLY: Well, I would start by saying there is an investigation. Let me back up and say, the fact of the matter is, young men and women that wear our uniform are deployed around the world and there are tens of thousands, near the DMZ in North Korea [sic], in Okinawa, waiting to go -- in South Korea -- in Okinawa, ready to go. All over the United States, training, ready to go. They're all over Latin America. Down there, they do mostly drug and addiction, working with our partners -- our great partners -- the Colombians, the Central Americans, the Mexicans.

You know, there's thousands. My own son, right now, back in the fight for his fifth tour against ISIS. There's thousands of them in Europe acting as a deterrent. And they're throughout Africa. And they're doing the nation's work there, and not making a lot of money, by the way, doing it. They love what they do.

So why were they there? They're there working with partners, local -- all across Africa -- in this case, Niger -- working with partners, teaching them how to be better soldiers; teaching them how to respect human rights; teaching them how to fight ISIS so that we don't have to send our soldiers and Marines there in their thousands. That's what they were doing there.

Now, there is an investigation. There's always an -- unless it's a very, very conventional death in a conventional war, there's always an investigation. Of course, that operation is conducted by AFRICOM that, of course, works directly for the Secretary of Defense.

There is a -- and I talked to Jim Mattis this morning. I think he made statements this afternoon. There's an investigation ongoing. An investigation doesn't mean anything was wrong. An investigation doesn't mean people's heads are going to roll. The fact is they need to find out what happened and why it happened.

But at the end of the day, ladies and gentlemen, you have to understand that these young people -- sometimes old guys -- put on the uniform, go to where we send them to protect our country. Sometimes they go in large numbers to invade Iraq and invade Afghanistan. Sometimes they're working in small units, working with our partners in Africa, Asia, Latin America, helping them be better.

But at the end of the day, they're helping those partners be better at fighting ISIS in North Africa to protect our country so that we don't have to send large numbers of troops.

Any other -- someone who knows a Gold Star fallen person.

John?

Q General, thank you for being here today and thank you for your service and for your family's sacrifice. There has been some talk about the timetable of the release of the statement about the -- I think at that point it was three soldiers who were killed in Niger. Can you walk us through the timetable of the release of that information? And what part did the fact that a beacon was pinging during that time have to do with the release of the statement? And were you concerned that divulging information early might jeopardize the soldiers' attempt to be (inaudible)?

GENERAL KELLY: First of all, that's a -- you know, we are at the highest level of the U.S. government. The people that will answer those questions will be the people at the other end of the military pyramid.

I'm sure the Special Forces group is conducting it. I know they're conducting an investigation. That investigation, of course, under the auspices of AFRICOM, ultimately will go to the Pentagon. I've read the same stories you have. I actually know a lot more than I'm letting on, but I'm not going to tell you.

There is an investigation being done. But as I say, the men and women of our country that are serving all around the world -- I mean, what the hell is my son doing back in the fight? He's back in the fight because -- working with Iraqi soldiers who are infinitely better than they were a few years ago to take ISIS on directly so that we don't have to do it. Small numbers of Marines where he is working alongside those guys. That's why they're out there, whether it's Niger, Iraq, or whatever. We don't want to send tens of thousands of American soldiers and Marines, in particular, to go fight.

I'll take one more, but it's got to be from someone who knows -- all right.

Q General, when you talk about Niger, sir, what does your intelligence tell you about the Russian connection with them? And the stories that are coming out now, they're --

GENERAL KELLY: I have no knowledge of any Russian connection, but I was not, in my position, to know that. That's a question for NORTHCOM or for -- not NORTHCOM -- for AFRICOM or DOD.

Thanks very much, everybody.

As I walk off the stage, understand there's tens of thousands of American kids, mostly, doing their nation's bidding all around the world. They don't have to be in uniform. You know, when I was a kid, every man in my life was a veteran -- World War II, Korea, and there was the draft. These young people today, they don't do it for any other reason than their selfless -- sense of selfless devotion to this great nation.

We don't look down upon those of you who that haven't served. In fact, in a way we're a little bit sorry because you'll have never have experienced the wonderful joy you get in your heart when you do the kinds of things our service men and women do -- not for any other reason than they love this country. So just think of that.

And I do appreciate your time. Take care.

END

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Press Briefing by Press Secretary Sarah Sanders, 10/2/2017, #18
Date: Monday, October 02, 2017 4:09:02 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

October 2, 2017

PRESS BRIEFING
BY PRESS SECRETARY SARAH SANDERS

James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

2:10 P.M. EDT

MS. SANDERS: Good afternoon. Our thoughts and prayers today are with the victims and survivors in Las Vegas, and with the people of Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands where massive storm recovery efforts are ongoing.

The President will be flying to Puerto Rico tomorrow to view the devastation, and he will assure the people there that we are with them 100 percent today and for the long haul. Puerto Ricans have shown incredible resilience, and we are fully committed to helping them rebuild their lives.

Last night, thousands of our fellow citizens endured what the President has rightly called an "act of pure evil" in Las Vegas. The President has ordered our flags to half-staff. And to further honor those lost in the attack, we will hold a moment of silence on the South Lawn this afternoon at 2:45 p.m. Eastern Time.

The President will visit Las Vegas on Wednesday to grieve with the friends and family of the victims, to offer his support to those recovering from their wounds, and to thank the courageous first responders.

In the coming days, this attack will directly impact communities all over our country whose residents were visiting the entertainment capital of the world to attend a concert. One man, 29-year-old Sonny Melton, had traveled from Tennessee to Las Vegas for the concert with his wife, Heather. When the bullets began raining down from above, Sonny shielded her from danger, selflessly giving up his life to save hers. They had been married for just over a year.

Others risked their own lives to save people that they had never met. Mike McGarry of Philadelphia laid on top of students at the concert to protect them from the gunfire. "They're 20, I'm 53," he said, "and I've lived a good life."

Lindsay Padgett and her fiancé, Mike Jay, fled for cover during the attack, and immediately returned to the scene with their pick-up truck to help transport the wounded to nearby hospitals.

Gail Davis, who was attending the concert with her husband, said she owes her life to a brave police officer who instinctively served as a human shield, protecting her from harm.

Sadly, multiple police officers, both on duty and off duty, were among those killed or injured. But what these people did for each other says far more about who we are as Americans than the cowardly acts of a killer ever could.

The Gospel of John reminds us that there is no greater love than to lay down one's life for a friend. The memory of those who displayed the ultimate expression of love in the midst of an unimaginable act of hate will never fade. Their examples will serve as an eternal reminder that the American spirit cannot and will not ever be broken. In the days ahead, we will grieve as a nation, we will honor the memory of those lost as a nation, and we will come together, united as one nation, under God, and indivisible.

And with that, I'll take your questions. Major.

Q Can you tell us a little bit about how the President first learned about it, and your engagement with him -- his own personal reaction to the events of today? And he also said in the Oval he might spend more than a day in Las Vegas. Was he referring to a couple of days there?

MS. SANDERS: We're still finalizing the details of the travel that will take place. We know for sure that he'll be there on Wednesday. And beyond that, we'll keep you guys posted as those arrangements are finalized.

In terms of activity this morning, the President was briefed early this morning by General Kelly, and has been updated regularly and constantly throughout the day, and will continue to as new information is provided by law enforcement officials.

Q Have you had a chance to talk to him about his own -- how he dealt with this?

MS. SANDERS: I've seen him today, and I think he, like most of America, is saddened. And certainly, his heart and compassion goes out to those that were affected.

Jeff.

Q Sarah, many times when these horrible massacres occur, it leads to questions about gun control. Has this particular massacre made the President think anything more about pursuing tighter gun laws, such as background checks, to prevent massacres like this from happening again?

MS. SANDERS: Look, this is an unspeakable tragedy. Today is a day for consoling the survivors and mourning those we lost. Our thoughts and prayers are certainly with all of those individuals. There's a time and place for a political debate, but now is the time to unite as a country. There is currently an open and ongoing law enforcement investigation. A motive is yet to be determined, and it would be premature for us to discuss policy when we don't fully know all the facts or what took place last night.

Jeff.

Q To follow on that, Sarah, though, do you believe that -- or does the President believe that this is a moment -- that this is a time when this should not be a political discussion, it should be a policy discussion? Does he believe that he could bring something new to the gun debate that has been, I guess, locked in typical politics for so many years?

MS. SANDERS: I think today is more, again, like I said, a day of reflection, a day of mourning, a day of gratefulness for those that were saved. And I think that there will be, certainly, time for that policy discussion to take place, but that's not the place that we're in at this moment. But certainly, I think that there's a time for that to happen.

Q If I could follow -- before he was elected President, some 15 or 16 years ago, he did have a different view on guns than he had during the campaign. Does he believe that this is something that he could lead a bipartisan effort on at some point? At what point would that be appropriate?

MS. SANDERS: I think that's something that we can talk about in the coming days and see what that looks like moving forward. I think one of the things that we don't want to do is try to create laws that won't stop these types of things from happening.

I think if you look to Chicago, where you had over 4,000 victims of gun-related crimes last year, they have the strictest gun laws in the country. That certainly hasn't helped there, so I think we have to -- when that time comes for those conversations to take place, then I think we need to look at things that may actually have that real impact.

Matthew.

Q Thanks, Sarah. On Puerto Rico, can you tell us a little bit about the President's aims for his visit tomorrow? And do you expect any tension, given some of his comments over the weekend?

MS. SANDERS: We have several stops that we'll put out later this afternoon in terms of the specifics of that trip. We are going to be spending a significant time there in Puerto Rico, meeting both with first responders as well as the storm survivors. And we'll, again, put out the details of that exact schedule later today.

Q And from some of his comments over the weekend, like that folks down there wanted everything done for them, do you expect that to come up in any of his conversations?

MS. SANDERS: I expect the focus to be on the recovery efforts, which we're fully committed to. The top priority for the federal government is certainly to protect the lives and the safety of those in affected areas, and provide life-sustaining services as we work together to rebuild their lives. That's going to be the focus, not just in the conversations tomorrow, but certainly the focus that we've had since this began.

Cecilia.

Q Can I just pick up on that? Who exactly wants everything done for them, when he said "they"?

MS. SANDERS: I haven't talked to him specifically about a defined of who "they" might be. Again, the federal government is doing everything within our powers and capabilities to first focus on the life-sustaining and lifesaving measures, as well as on the rebuilding process. We've got over 12,000 federal staff on the ground. Sixty-four hospitals out of 67 are partially or fully operational; 14 are now back on the electrical grid. Forty-five percent of customers in Puerto Rico have access to drinking water. Eight commercial airports are operational. Sixty-five percent of gas stations are open. All of these things are things that we're continuing to push, continuing to move forward, and will be part of that effort.

Q And then just back on today's tragedy really quickly, if I may. Does the President believe that what happened amounts to an act of domestic terrorism?

MS. SANDERS: Again, we're still in a fact-finding mission. This is an ongoing investigation and it would be premature to weigh in on something like that before we have any more facts. And we'll leave that to local law enforcement to work with, [and] also the federal law enforcement to make those determinations.

John.

Q Over the weekend -- this was pointed out -- the President was very sharply critical of Carmen Yulín Cruz, who is the Mayor of San Juan. Other than her comments on Friday morning, in which she criticized Elaine Duke for saying this was a "good news" story, in terms of DHS getting supplies out to areas that were needed, what was she doing that prompted such criticism from the President?

MS. SANDERS: Look, right now our focus is to bring the mayor into the coordination efforts. This administration, as well as other members on the ground, have reached out to her. We hope that she will join with us in those efforts and be a part of things. She's been invited to participate in the events tomorrow, as well. And we hope that those conversations will happen and we can all work together to move forward.

Ashley.

Q Has Tom Price reimbursed the government yet for his seat on those flights? And if not, is there a specific deadline when you and the President expect him to do so by?

MS. SANDERS: I'm not sure on the timeframe for that or whether or not it's already taken place. But we'll certainly keep you posted on that.

Jordan.

Q Thank you, Sarah. Given what the President said about Secretary of State Tillerson's outreach to North Korea over the weekend, does the President still have confidence in him as Secretary of State?

MS. SANDERS: He does, yes.

Q And has he spoken to him since those -- since he sent out those tweets?

MS. SANDERS: I believe so. I'll have to verify.

John.

Q Thanks a lot, Sarah. It's a very sad day in this country, as you mentioned at the top. And as the President said in his remarks, he said that when he goes out to Las Vegas, he's going to meet with first responders and, in addition to that, families of the victims that were impacted by this. What's the message to each of those groups when he goes out there?

MS. SANDERS: Look, I think it's very simple to say that his goal is simply to be there to show the support of people from around the country, and to stand united in not only this act of evil but against all acts of evil. And I think that was clear in the President's remarks today and something, certainly, that you'll see from his visit on Wednesday.

Jessica.

Q Sarah, thank you. Following up on the tweets about the DPRK over the weekend, the President tweeted, "Save your energy Rex, we'll do what has to be done!" So is it the stated position of the White House that you're trying to get back to talks? Or have you given up?

MS. SANDERS: No, this is -- we've been clear that now is not the time to talk. The only conversations that have taken place, or that would, would be on bringing back Americans who have been detained. Like with Otto, those were the type of conversations that this administration was willing to have. Beyond that, there will be no conversations with North Korea at this time.

Q The Secretary of State talked about those three --

MS. SANDERS: There are three Americans still detained in North Korea.

Q -- (inaudible) lines of communication with Pyongyang. That's what you're primarily using it for? You're not using it to try to get major --

MS. SANDERS: That would be the only reason for us to have conversations with them at this time.

Hallie.

Q Sarah, can I follow on that? I also want to ask about today. But does the President believe diplomacy then is not worth pursuing in North Korea?

MS. SANDERS: There's a difference between talking and putting diplomatic pressure. We still strongly support putting diplomatic pressure on North Korea, which we're continuing to do. But now is not the time simply to have conversations with North Korea.

We've encouraged all of our allies and partners to do more, and we're going to continue to keep all options on the table when it comes to that.

Q And on the activities of today as well, you've talked about how now is not the time to get into a gun control debate or to talk about policy. After the Orlando shooting, the President that day was out on Twitter talking about policy. He was talking about this travel ban. So when, for example, Senator Chris Murphy says, "It's time for Congress to get off its ass and do something," does the President agree?

MS. SANDERS: I actually agree with him that Congress should get up and do something. I'm not sure that it's specific to that, but I think Congress has had several months of doing very little and we'd like to see some actual legislation come through.

Q So related to gun control, what would the President like to see Congress do -- is the question I want to get at.

MS. SANDERS: Again, we haven't had the moment to have a deep dive on the policy part of that. We've been focused on the fact that we had a severe tragedy in our country. And this is a day of mourning, a time of bringing our country together, and that's been the focus of the administration this morning.

Q Can you explain where that's different from Orlando, though, Sarah -- when at that day he was talking about the travel ban, saying he didn't want congratulations, essentially? Why is this --

MS. SANDERS: I think there's a difference between being a candidate and being the President.

Q Thanks, Sarah. I do want to ask -- because before last night's massacre, the bill was advancing through the House; Republicans cleared it through the House Committee on Natural Resources that would, among other things, make it easier for people to buy silencers. Hillary Clinton tweeted about it this morning. She said that, "Imagine the deaths in Las Vegas if the shooter had a silencer, which the NRA wants to make easier to get." Does the White House have a position on this particular legislation?

MS. SANDERS: Again, I haven't spoken with the President about that specific issue, but I don't think that that is something that would have changed. Again, I think before we start trying to talk about the preventions of what took place last night, we need to know more facts. And right now we're simply not at that point.

It's very easy for Mrs. Clinton to criticize and to come out, but I think we need to remember the only person with blood on their hands is that of the shooter. And this isn't a time for us to go after individuals or organizations. I think that we can have those policy conversations, but today is not that day.

Q Sarah, are there any policy prescriptions that the President considers to be out of bounds on the policy debate that will happen in the next few weeks? Could you articulate a little bit what his position on gun control is?

MS. SANDERS: The President has been clear that he's a strong supporter of the Second Amendment, and I don't have anything further at this point.

I'll take one more question. Fred.

Q Thanks, Sarah. Yes, a couple of questions. One, ahead of the trip to Puerto Rico tomorrow, I wanted to ask about -- there's a bill in the Congress, the McCain-Lee Act, which would give a permanent exemption to Puerto Rico from the Jones Act. Would the administration consider either a permanent repeal of the Jones Act or at least an exemption permanent for Puerto Rico?

MS. SANDERS: I don't think that's something that's necessary at this time. If we deemed that it was, we could have that discussion then. But certainly something that we don't feel like is necessary today, so I wouldn't imagine that would be something needed.

Q Also, on the nomination of Amy Coney Barrett, there's have been some attacks among senators, some in the media, on her religious beliefs. Does the White House have some concerns about that?

MS. SANDERS: We certainly support religious freedom and would ask that Congress also support that as well.

As you all know, we've got a moment of silence taking place on the South Lawn here momentarily. And so, with that, I'll close.

And just again, I think we ask collectively that everyone across the country keep the people both in Las Vegas and in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands in our prayers.

Thanks.

END

2:25 P.M.

EDT

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Press Briefing by Press Secretary Sarah Sanders
Date: Wednesday, October 18, 2017 4:30:02 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

October 18, 2017 For Immediate Release

PRESS BRIEFING
BY PRESS SECRETARY SARAH SANDERS
James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

2:49 P.M. EDT

MS. SANDERS: Good Afternoon. I know it's been a few days since I've been up here. I'm sure that you have all missed me as much as I've missed you.

As many of you will recall, one of President Trump's core campaign promises was to defeat ISIS. With the stunning fall of Mosul in June, and now with ISIS nearly eradicated from Raqqa, it is clear that ISIS's so-called caliphate is crumbling across Iraq and Syria.

This eminent victory by the global coalition and our brave servicemembers comes at a high cost, particularly to the Syrian Democratic Forces who suffered many casualties as they fought to liberate their own country from the oppression of ISIS.

Instead of caring for the urgent humanitarian needs of Raqqa's residents, ISIS utilized the money it stockpiled to finance terrorist attacks across the world, including against many Muslims.

As coalition and our partner forces closed in around them, ISIS used civilians as human shields and killed those who attempted to flee. ISIS's barbaric acts have left many scars across the region, and we remain committed to supporting stabilization efforts and local security forces in liberated areas through a political transition in Syria.

Unfortunately, the Syrian regime and its supporters hinder the efforts to liberate Raqqa. Instead of focusing on fighting ISIS, the pro-regime forces attacked our partners and attempted to block them from liberating the Syrian people from the brutality of ISIS.

While we know ISIS and its destructive ideology will remain a threat, the liberation of Raqqa will mark the beginning of a new phase in the Syrian conflict. As we and our partners take away the ability of ISIS to plot and carry out attacks from territory they control, we will continue to seek the de-escalation of violence in other battlefields across Syria.

Looking ahead to tomorrow, we will be welcoming Governor Rosselló of Puerto Rico to the White House to talk about the ongoing recovery and rebuilding efforts. We will continue working hand-in-hand with local leaders in all areas of our country that have been impacted by several natural disasters in recent months. And as President Trump has repeatedly said, we stand with our fellow citizens; we're here to help and get them back on their feet.

And with that, I will take your questions. Quiet.

John.

Q Sarah, the President stated earlier today that he would not allow insurance companies to pad their pockets with money from the federal government. The White House has some concerns about the Alexander-Murray bill. Can you articulate what those concerns are?

MS. SANDERS: Look, we've said all along that we want something that doesn't just bail out the insurance companies, but actually provides relief for all Americans, and this bill doesn't address that fact. So we want to make sure that that's taken care of. We think that this is the step -- a good step in the right direction. This President certainly supports Republicans and Democrats coming to work together. But it's not a full approach, and we need something to go a little bit further to get onboard.

Q Can you articulate specifically what the White House is concerned about and -- something about outreach dollars and making sure that the money doesn't go to insurance companies?

MS. SANDERS: Some of the things that the President has stated before: He wants to lower premiums, he wants to provide greater flexibility, he wants to drive competition, he likes the idea of block grants to states. Those are a lot of the ideas that he'd like to see in a healthcare plan.

Q Thanks, Sarah. Let's go to the President's tweet this morning, if we can. What proof does President Trump have when he says Congresswoman Wilson is not telling the truth? Are there recordings of his phone call with Myeshia Johnson?

MS. SANDERS: No, but there were several people in the room from the administration that were on the call, including the Chief of Staff, General John Kelly.

Q The President also said that he has called every family of someone who has died. Is that true? There are reports that --

MS. SANDERS: The President has made contact with all of the families that have been presented to him through the White House Military Office.

Q There have been families that have since come forward to the Associated Press -- the names are in these reports -- who say they've not actually heard from this White House in any capacity.

MS. SANDERS: All of the individuals that the President has been presented with through the proper protocol have been contacted through that process.

Jeff.

Q Sarah, just to follow up on the healthcare question. Is it correct, then, to say that President Trump does not support this deal in its current form?

MS. SANDERS: Correct. I think he stated that pretty clearly today.

Q And then just as a follow-up on another issue. He had a conversation today with Governor Reynolds of Iowa. Can you tell us a little bit about what they discussed? And then, did he make any assurances about the renewable fuel standard during that discussion?

MS. SANDERS: They didn't make any assurances on that specific issue. It was discussed, and they're going to continue to look at that process. But no definitive decision was made on RFS on today's call, but it was discussed.

Justin.

Q Today, Secretary Mnuchin was talking about the tax framework, and he said it was "very hard not to give tax cuts to the wealthy" as part of a framework that cuts rates across the board. It seems like an acknowledgement of the realities -- math and sort of the independent analysis -- of the President's tax plan. But as recently as a month ago, the President said that this plan would not benefit the wealthy.

MS. SANDERS: That's not the focus of the tax plan. That focus, as we've said, time and time again -- the focus and the priority of the framework that the White House has laid out is to benefit the middle class, and that's what the priority is.

Q But you would agree with Secretary Mnuchin, then, that --

MS. SANDERS: That there may be some people that receive tax cuts that are also in the wealthy bracket? Yes. But the fact is, the priority again remains that middle-class Americans are the ones that are most impacted, and that's where the priority and the focus lies.

Q Sarah, what is the criteria that the White House Military Office uses for presenting names of families to the President after there's been casualties in combat?

MS. SANDERS: So there's a process that is a standard protocol. Once a person is killed in action, the first steps -- the process begins with a DOD Casualty Assistance Officer making next-of-kin notifications. After that, they create a package that's sent to the White House Military Office. That package is then reconfirmed. All of the details and the contents of the package have to be confirmed by the White House Military Office. Once that process is completed, the President or other members of the administration can engage in contact.

Q Just to follow up on that: So are you saying that if the President hasn't contacted the family members of every servicemember who's been a casualty since he came to office, it's because of the protocols of that office?

MS. SANDERS: That's my understanding. If there's a specific case, I'd have to look into it. But as a whole, and generally speaking, that's my understanding.

Q And just to follow up on this week: Why did the President wait 12 days to speak publicly about the Green Berets in Niger?

MS. SANDERS: As I just said -- I walked you through that process. So the DOD package that was sent to the White House arrived on Thursday of last week. The White House Military Office confirmed the contents of that package on Monday. And the letters that had been drafted over the weekend, they were sent once that confirmation was completed, and calls were scheduled on Monday to be made on Tuesday.

Major.

Q But I wasn't just asking about the families. I was asking about why he didn't make public remarks.

Q So, separate from this controversy about contact, is the President satisfied he has learned everything he wants to know about the situation itself in Niger? Pentagon sources have described it as what was interpreted to be initially as a low-risk mission. The ambush was a big surprise. There was no air cover; 30 minutes for French air cover to arrive. Questions about the speed of the evacuation and having, perhaps, that something to do with whether or not these military personnel survived or not. Is the President satisfied -- he knows everything he needs to know about this particular raid, rules of engagement, and everything about it?

MS. SANDERS: I believe they're still looking into the details of that, but I don't think that the President can ever be satisfied when there's loss of life from men and women in the uniform.

Q Is there anything he wants to know more about this that he's learned so far?

MS. SANDERS: I can't get into the specifics in terms of --

Q Because some of these issues have been raised with him by the families he's contacted.

MS. SANDERS: Right. I can't get into the specifics of the details of the raid at this point. But again, I don't think you can ever use the word "satisfied" with the process when there's a loss of life for someone in the military.

Q Sarah, and on tax reform, because Secretary Mnuchin said yesterday --

MS. SANDERS: I'll come back. Deborah.

Q I have a Las Vegas question. Is the administration looking at having the ATF ban bump stocks? Or does the President think that Congress should do it?

MS. SANDERS: We're certainly still looking into, and having a review done, of that process. And when there's an official policy position, I'll make that announcement.

John.

Q Thank you, Sarah. Two questions. When the Alexander-Murray bill came up at the scrum in the Rose Garden on Monday, there were questions about whether it would contain federal funding for abortions. And these concerns have been raised by several pro-life lawmakers on Capitol Hill. Will the President rule out signing any kind of measure that includes funding for abortion?

MS. SANDERS: The President stated that he would like to see a healthcare bill that does not include funding for abortion.

Q Will he rule out signing one that does?

MS. SANDERS: I believe that that is probably something that would be a priority for him. But in terms of negotiating what that healthcare package would look like, I'm not going to do that from the podium today.

Q My second question --

MS. SANDERS: I'm going to try to take one question today to get to everybody.

Jon Decker.

Q Thank you, Sarah. A question about the NFL. Roger Goodell, the commissioner of the NFL, earlier today said that all players should stand during the playing of the national anthem. Earlier this week, there was no change in policy as it relates to the NFL mandating that all players in the NFL stand for the national anthem. Does the President believe that he's winning this argument, or has won this argument, as it relates to what he said about whether players should stand for the playing of the national anthem?

MS. SANDERS: I think it's certainly a step in the right direction. As we've said many times before, the President supports standing for the national anthem, saluting the flag, and honoring those men and women in uniform that fight to protect it.

Q Sarah, does the President feel as a matter of principle that it is not adequate to simply send a letter of condolence to the family of a slain servicemember as President Bush and President Obama typically did? And does he feel that it was not adequate for President Obama to have sent a letter to General Kelly but not call General Kelly on the death of his son?

MS. SANDERS: I don't think that there's anything that any President can do. There's never going to be enough that a President can do for the families of those that are killed in action. The point the President was making is that there's a different process. Sometimes they call. Sometimes they write letters. Sometimes they engage directly. The comments were certainly, I think, taken very far out of context by the media. And if there's any frustration, I think that's where it should be focused.

Blake.

Q Let me ask you about something Steve Mnuchin had said, since you guys talk about the stock market a lot and the President does, as well. He said, and I quote here: "There's no question in my mind that if we don't get it done" -- meaning tax reform -- "that you're going to see a reversal of significant amount of these gains." Essentially saying if tax reform doesn't happen, there could be a major correction on the corner of Wall and Broad. How concerned is the President at this point of that possibility?

MS. SANDERS: We're confident that we're going to get tax cuts done, and so that's what we're focused on. And we're going to continue pushing forward until we get there.

Q And on the healthcare bill, if you don't mind, what changed --

MS. SANDERS: I'm sorry. I'm just going to take one question today.

Q The President tweeted about the California wildfire situation. Does he have any plans at this point to visit California and to survey the damage in person? And if he doesn't, does that speak to a lack of interest in helping the state recover from the wildfires?

MS. SANDERS: Not at all. Again, the administration has been very engaged throughout this process. We're going to continue to be there. We're continuing to talk with state and local officials on the ground and work with those individuals to make sure that whatever aid is needed, that we can help provide that process.

Q Is he going to go to the state, though?

MS. SANDERS: There's not a trip planned at this time, but it certainly hasn't been ruled out either.

Phillip.

Q Thank you, Sarah. Can you please clarify the President's position on Kurdistan, especially -- on Iraqi Kurdistan -- especially given the takeover of Kirkuk? And does the President see Kurdistan as an ally in general?

MS. SANDERS: As we've said before, that position hasn't changed. I know I've talked about it a couple times. We urge all sides to avoid escalating this further. We oppose the violence from any party, and we'd like for them to be focused on helping continue in the fights against ISIS and Iran. And that's where we'd like to see their energy focused.

Q Does that mean that they're keeping the status quo?

MS. SANDERS: Sorry, I'm going to keep to one question.

Q Thanks, Sarah. It's been more than two months since the President said that he would declare the opioid epidemic a national public emergency. On Monday, he said he'd get it done next week, but that to get to that step a lot of work had to be done, and called it time-consuming work. Can you explain why it's taking so long, and detail some of what this time-consuming work is and what players are involved in this process?

MS. SANDERS: There's a very in-depth legal process that goes with declaring a national emergency. We'll make further announcements on that next week, but there have been multiple people -- it's an interagency process. A lot of different stakeholders have been involved, and we'll have further announcements on that next week like the President said.

Q Can you talk about that? Is there --

MS. SANDERS: Sorry, I'm going to stick to the one question.

Q Just following on the tax reform meeting today, can you just sort of talk about the strategy from the White House going forward on this? I know that Marc Short had told us before that Democrats were a must-have on this bill or on tax reform. Is that still where things are?

MS. SANDERS: I think it's pretty simple: The strategy is to get enough votes to pass tax cuts.

Q Okay, but can you just elaborate a little bit on the Democratic -- getting Democrats onboard?

MS. SANDERS: Look, we'd love to see them get onboard. We don't why any Democrat would want to be against providing tax relief and tax cuts, specifically to middle-class America. I don't know why anybody wouldn't want to get onboard with that.

Hunter.

Q Thank you, Sarah. It's been almost a month since Hurricane Maria hit Puerto Rico. Almost 80 percent of the island is without power, and about a million Americans -- a third of the population there -- still don't have reliable drinking water. Does the administration consider the current state of affairs in Puerto Rico acceptable? And when it comes to Puerto Rico, does the buck stop with President Trump?

MS. SANDERS: Look, we're continuing to do everything that we can to help the people of Puerto Rico. It's one of the reasons that the governor will be here at the White House tomorrow, to continue those conversations, to talk about how best the federal government can help aid state and local governments, and help in the rebuilding and recovery efforts.

Eamon.

Q Thank you, Sarah. On the Fed Chair search, the President once said that he considers himself to be a low-interest-rate guy. Does he still consider himself to be a low-interest-rate guy? And will that have any bearing on who he selects to run the Fed?

MS. SANDERS: As the President said yesterday, he's interviewed a number of very qualified individuals and he'll make that announcement in the coming days, and we can deliberate all of the details of that once that happens.

Q Days not weeks?

MS. SANDERS: I'm sorry?

Q Days not weeks?

MS. SANDERS: Days do add up to weeks, so -- (laughter) --

Q Are you signaling anything there, Sarah? That's all I'm trying to get at.

Q Can I clarify -- back on the phone call real quick. What exactly is the President denying? Is he denying that he ever spoke these words to the widow, "that he must have known what he signed up for"? Or is he just saying that she took it the wrong way and it was taken out of context, his words?

MS. SANDERS: The President's call, as accounted by multiple people in the room, believe that the President was completely respectful, very sympathetic, and expressed the condolences of himself and the rest of the country, and thanked the family for their service, commended them for having an American hero in their family. And I don't know how you could take that any other way.

Q So it was context. It wasn't that he didn't say those words. It was that the context -- he felt that she put it in the wrong context. Is that it?

MS. SANDERS: I'm not going to get into the back-and-forth. I think that the sentiment of the President was very clear. He took the time to make a call to express his condolences to thank the family for this individual's service. And I think it, frankly, is a disgrace of the media to try to portray an act of kindness like that and that gesture, and to try to make it into something that it isn't.

Peter.

Q Sarah, did the President speak to his Chief of Staff, General John Kelly, before invoking his son's death in what has become a political argument?

MS. SANDERS: I know he's spoken to General Kelly multiple times yesterday and today.

Q On this very topic? In other words, did General Kelly know he would be raising the issue of his son's memory when talking about the outreach?

MS. SANDERS: I'm not sure if he knew of that specific comment, but they had certainly spoken about it, and he's aware. And they've spoken several times since then.

Q So can you describe how General Kelly feels about it? Is he comfortable with the way his son's memory has been --

MS. SANDERS: I think that General Kelly is disgusted by the way that this has been politicized and that the focus has become on the process and not the fact that American lives were lost. I think he's disgusted and frustrated by that. If he has any anger, it's towards that.

Fred.

Q The House, a few weeks back, passed the ban on (inaudible) abortions. (Inaudible) has said that the President would sign this legislation. Is the White House putting pressure on the Senate to pass the Lindsey Graham bill that would ban the 20-week --

MS. SANDERS: I'm sorry, what was the last part of the question?

Q Is the White House putting pressure on the Senate to pass the Lindsey Graham 20-week ban?

MS. SANDERS: I know that there have been conversations about that, and the administration supports that policy. But beyond that, I don't know if there have been further conversations or pressure applied, but certainly support that effort.

April.

Q Sarah, Congresswoman Wilson -- I talked to her a couple of hours ago, and she says that this is the President's Benghazi. She says that Jackson was -- and his Green Berets were -- in Niger trying to find out information and doing a mission about Boko Haram. And she said that his transmitter was still emitting for two days -- emitting a signal when he was located. And she says that makes no sense why he wasn't located.

What say you about that? And also, what do you say about her comment that he did not know, and the wife, the widow, said that the President did not know his name? He kept saying, "Your guy, your guy."

MS. SANDERS: Just because the President said "your guy," I don't think that means that he doesn't know his name. As the President stated, the hardest job he has is making calls like that. I think it is appalling what the congresswoman has done and the way that she's politicized this issue, and the way that she is trying to make this about something that it isn't.

This was a President who loves our country very much, who has the greatest level of respect for men and women in the uniform, and wanted to call and offer condolences to the family. And I think to try to create something from that that the congresswoman is doing is, frankly, appalling and disgusting.

Q What do you say about what she said about Boko Haram in Niger? What do you say about what she said about the mission and then comparing it to Benghazi?

MS. SANDERS: As I said to Major before, I'm not going to get into the details of that action at this point.

Q Was she right? Was she right?

MS. SANDERS: As I said before, I'm not going to get into the details of that action at this time. And when we have further information, I'll be happy to discuss it with you.

Hallie.

Q Thank you. I just want to -- setting aside the congresswoman, setting aside the discussion about the politicization of this, the woman who raised Sergeant Johnson spoke to the Washington Post and said she felt like her son had been disrespected. And again, I'm not asking you about what Congresswoman Wilson had to say. I'm not asking you about any of that.

But given that somebody who -- as you rightly note, making these phone calls is probably one of the hardest things a Commander-in-Chief has to do. Given that, is the President at all reconsidering the way that he communicates with these families? Has General Kelly counseled him on, perhaps, how he might want to choose or change his words in the future?

MS. SANDERS: General Kelly was present for the call and thought it was completely appropriate. He thought the call was respectful, and he thought that the President did the best job he could under those circumstances to offer condolences on behalf of the country.

Philip.

Q Thank you, Sarah. On NAFTA, Canadian and the Mexican negotiators have rejected the U.S. proposals -- proposals that were described as unconventional and troubling. Is NAFTA dead?

MS. SANDERS: Not yet. But as the President said, it's a bad deal and he wants to make sure that we have a deal that benefits American workers. That's what this administration is focused on. We're going to continue to push forward, and if we can't get there then we'll let you know what the changes are.

Francesca.

Q Thank you, Sarah. In a tweet this morning, President Trump said that former FBI Director James Comey had lied, leaked, and totally protected Hillary Clinton. He also asked, "Where is the Justice Department on this?" What exactly does the President want the Justice Department to do? Is he calling for a prosecution of James Comey? What's he asking for here?

MS. SANDERS: Look, the White House hasn't and won't offer a legal opinion on Comey's conduct. But, in fact, to the contrary, the White House has actually deferred, as it should, any and all legal questions regarding Director Comey to the Department of Justice. That's the appropriate venue for those things to be dealt with.

Q So what's he asking the Department of Justice to do, though, in his tweet this morning? That's what I'm asking.

MS. SANDERS: We refer any legal action to the Department of Justice. Anything on that front would be handled by them.

Sara.

Q Sarah, normally when the President is upset about something, we hear from him pretty quickly about it, whether it's an issue with a senator, whether it's an issue with the NFL. So why did it take nearly two weeks for him to say something about this ISIS ambush -- not to reach out to the families, necessarily, but even to offer public condolences or to explain to the American public what happened and how the deadliest combat mission involving American troops went so wrong?

MS. SANDERS: As I said before, there is a protocol for that. But there's also -- we did make public remarks from the administration. I know I did, in short order after that happened, from the podium, at the direction of the President. And I speak on his behalf. And I did that on behalf of the President and the administration.

Q Sarah, you've brought up politicizing a couple of times, in relation to Congresswoman Wilson. But did the President politicize General Kelly's son's death by bringing it up as a defense for his claims about what past Presidents did or did not do with fallen soldiers?

MS. SANDERS: He was responding to a question and stating a fact.

Q Just to clarify your earlier answer, you're not denying that in some point in the conversation the President used the words, "it's what he signed up for"?

MS. SANDERS: I spoke specifically to the sentiment that was offered by the President. I didn't get into the details of a personal call because I don't find that to be that appropriate.

Trey.

Q Thank you, Sarah. You opened up at the top discussing the liberation of Raqqa. So my question for you is: How does the President envision future U.S. involvement in both Syria and Iraq, post-ISIS?

MS. SANDERS: We want to continue to work with our coalition forces to completely destroy and defeat ISIS. Right now, that's the priority and that's the focus, and that's what we're going to continue to be focused on at this time.

Thank you, guys, so much for today. And we'll see you tomorrow.

END

3:13 P.M. EDT

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Press Gaggle by Deputy Press Secretary Lindsay Walters en route Fort Myers, FL
Date: Thursday, September 14, 2017 8:50:32 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

14, 2017 For Immediate Release September

PRESS GAGGLE
BY DEPUTY PRESS SECRETARY LINDSAY WALTERS AND DEPUTY HOMELAND SECURITY ADVISOR JOHN DALY

Aboard Air Force One
En Route Fort Myers, Florida

10:10 A.M. EDT

MS. WALTERS: Good morning, everyone. I'd like to quickly run through what the President will be doing on the ground in Florida when we arrive before I take your questions here.

When we land in Fort Myers, the President will be greeted by FEMA Administrator Brock Long, Governor Rick Scott and his wife, Ann, Senator Marco Rubio, and Attorney General Pam Bondi.

The President will then receive a briefing on Hurricane Irma relief efforts by FEMA, the U.S. Coast Guard, the U.S. National Guard, and local first responders and volunteers.

He will then lift to Naples where he, along with the Vice President, Secretary Perry, Acting Secretary Duke, Administrator Long, Senator Rubio, Representative Diaz-Balart, will visit a neighborhood that was devastated by the hurricane and meet with storm survivors.

After that, he will return to Fort Myers and depart for Washington, D.C. And with that, I will take your questions.

Q So is there a deal or is there not a deal on DACA? Who's right here?

MS. WALTERS: The President made that pretty clear this morning that there is no deal. There was a constructive conversation last night with the Democratic minority leaders, but there was no deal made.

Q Isn't this issue of "agreement" or "deal" semantics? Do you see a difference between "agreement" and "deal" if those words are used?

MS. WALTERS: What I can tell you is that a deal was not reached. There was a conversation on the legislative priorities for the fall, which include tax reform, infrastructure, and DACA. But by no means was any deal ever reached last night.

Q So was an agreement reached?

MS. WALTERS: There was, as I said, a constructive conversation to move forward. In terms of DACA, which is important to the minority leaders, this is something that Congress needs to work on. They need to continue to have constructive conversations amongst themselves to figure out what they're going to do to enable real and responsible immigration reform, and bring that to the President's desk before the six-month window expires.

The President has made it clear that he's willing to reach across the aisle and work with Democrats and Republicans alike. He wants to have bipartisan support. You saw that through the different various meetings and dinner this week. And he'll continue to do that. But this notion that a deal was made -- to have the minority leaders say that -- you've seen them have to go back and re-amend their statement from last night -- just shows that it's silly. There was no deal met, and they know that.

Q How do you respond to the criticism -- there's a lot of criticism coming that he's offering amnesty. You're seeing on Breitbart they're calling him "Amnesty Don." How does he respond to those critiques from the right?

MS. WALTERS: The President has been clear in the past that there will be no amnesty. The Trump administration will not be discussing amnesty. What the Trump administration will discuss is a responsible path forward in immigration reform. That could include legal citizenship over a period of time. But absolutely by no means will this White House discuss amnesty, and the President has made it clear how he feels about no amnesty.

But again, this is Congress. Congress needs to put together what they're going to do before the six-month window runs out and bring it to the President. And this falls back on Congress. The President has encouraged the Republicans and Democrats to come together to have real immigration reform that is legal and substantial.

Q How do you define amnesty?

MS. WALTERS: I'm not going to sit here and litigate what the definition of amnesty is. What I will tell you is the President has made it clear that he does not support amnesty. I think I was clear when I said that --

Q You weren't clear. You said that he could support a path forward to citizenship. That is the definition of amnesty to many, many Republicans, especially in the House.

MS. WALTERS: Again, I'm not going sit here and litigate what the definition of amnesty is, what I will tell you is right now Congress needs to focus on getting real immigration reform to move forward so that there is a legal path forward instead of right now. DACA was illegal. The President took the responsible action, and now this is in the hands of Congress to put something on the President's desk.

Q Did the President agree not to push for border wall funding as part of a DACA deal?

MS. WALTERS: The President made it very clear that we will need to have massive border security. You heard him say this again this morning. That was made clear in the meeting last night that there will be massive border security included in any agreement that is eventually met.

Q What does that include, Lindsay? If not a wall, what does massive border security include?

MS. WALTERS: The President has been clear that there will be a wall. A wall is part of massive border security, but we need to ensure that we are having -- as he ran before that there will be border security. We need to secure our borders and protect the American people. The wall is very much still in play, and the President has been clear that we need to have massive border security. You heard him say that this morning; you heard the Democrats walk back their statement.

Q So why remove -- why separate the wall and DACA in the negotiations? A lot of people would say that taking the wall out really takes away a leverage point for him in terms of getting something from Democrats.

MS. WALTERS: We haven't said yet where the wall funding is being tied to, what vehicle. It's too premature at this point to say where that funding vehicle will be tied in. Right now the President is focused on massive border security, as well as getting a wall.

But what we need to -- the Democrats are pushing DACA. They need to look at their colleagues in the Congress and work with them to put something in front of the President that's responsible immigration reform.

Q What is this -- what is this massive border security that the President is looking for immediately?

MS. WALTERS: There are several ways you can have massive border security. I will let DHS speak more to that, but I can tell you that massive -- securing our borders is very important to this President. We will still have a wall. He has not backed down from that wall or a structure being on the southern border. And we'll continue to keep you abreast as developments --

Q Several Democrats in the meeting yesterday at the White House, the bipartisan meeting, came out in the White House driveway and said on the record that the President was very clear that the border wall would not need to be tied to the DACA bill, that they would be separate. And they made clear they would not tie those two together, and the President reiterated that he agreed. Is that true?

MS. WALTERS: What I said to you earlier is it's too premature to say what vehicle the funding for the wall will be tied to at this time.

Q But the President made clear in the meeting, according to all these Democrats, not -- even before the Pelosi and Schumer meeting -- that it may be too early to tell where the border wall money would be, but it would in a separate bill from DACA. Are they wrong?

MS. WALTERS: The President has made clear that we need to have massive border security in whatever deal is made regarding DACA, and that's what we will move forward on.

Q One more on the wall. Nancy Pelosi said in her statement that both sides agreed that the White House and Democratic leaders would work out a border security package. Is that your understanding that it's going to be the Democrats and the White House putting together the border security package and basically cutting out Republicans from the process?

MS. WALTERS: Republicans will not be cut out from this process. The President said this morning that the Republican leaders are all aware. This is a process that will work through both Republicans and Democrats. The President wants this to be a bipartisan effort, and that's what we will focus on -- it being a bipartisan effort with both the Democrats and the Republicans.

Q Then why weren't Ryan and McConnell in the meeting last night to talk about DACA?

MS. WALTERS: The President is leader of the Republican Party. He was having dinner with the minority leaders on the Democratic side. He speaks frequently to the other Republican leaders, and that doesn't -- I wouldn't look into who was and who wasn't. This is not a tit-for-tat on who attended the dinner last night.

Q How do you respond to Representative Steve King who said that the Trump base is blown up, destroyed, irreparable, and disillusioned beyond repair and no promise is credible?

MS. WALTERS: I can't speak -- I'll let Representative King speak for himself. What I can tell you is that the President has made it clear what his priorities are this fall. We need to get tax reform. We need to have real and responsible -- sensible immigration reform.

And that's what he's focused on. He's focused on reaching across the aisle and working with both parties, both Republicans and Democrats, to get real solutions for the American people. The American people elected him to do this for our country, and that's what he's doing. He's working across the aisle and looking to cut deals with both parties in the benefit of the American people.

Q Can I ask about taxes? What did the President mean yesterday when he said taxes for the wealthy may have to go higher?

MS. WALTERS: We're still in the early forms of tax reform. We've made it clear there are four principles in tax reform: We need to make it easier, make it fair, win again, and bring it home.

The President, as well as his senior principals, are continuing to meet with leaders on the Hill to discuss tax reform. This is a high priority. We need to be able to bring jobs back to the American shores and have a tax reform plan that works for the middle-class, working Americans.

With that, because we're about to land, I want to introduce --

Q The plans that we've seen so far from the White House would lower the rate for individuals. Is the President talking about raising rates for some income levels with his comments about the wealthy?

MS. WALTERS: The President said his comments yesterday, he was clear in what he said about tax reform for the wealthy. What I can tell you is right now we're going through a process of determining what is the most reasonable tax reform for the American -- that will benefit the American people; that will grow the economy; put more money back in the pockets of everyday citizens and bring jobs back.

Q He won't rule out raising rates on the wealthy?

MS. WALTERS: I'm not going to commit to anything at this time. I do need to introduce John Daly, who is going to give an update on the hurricane as we're about to land here and what the recovery-relief efforts are.

Q Can I just clear up one thing you said earlier? Just I'm just trying to make sure I understand. You said at one point the words "path the citizenship" and indicated that this White House, this President will be open to some sort of path to citizenship. You weren't specific about for who or how many people. But is that true that this President would consider a path to citizenship for some undocumented immigrants?

MS. WALTERS: You're parsing what I said. What I said is that the President does not support amnesty. This White House will -- the administration will not discuss amnesty, but that it's in the hands of Congress to come up with a real and responsible immigration reform and a path forward. And when you pushed on the amnesty and the definition of amnesty, what I was saying to you is that in a real and responsible path forward there are many different options. One, for example -- not committing to but as an example -- could be a program that over a set period of time through a certain -- through a program and a process that you could eventually.

But again, this is in Congress. They need to come back. The White House is not leading --

Q You could eventually have a path to citizenship --

MS. WALTERS: You are parsing my words. The White House is not leading this effort. We need Congress to work together to come to the President to say what their immigration policy is moving forward, and we'll review it then. I'm not going into any further details.

MR. DALY: Hi, I'm John Daly. I'm the Deputy Homeland Security Advisor.

Since we're going to be landing here shortly, I want to give you a little bit more detail about today's trip with respect to the President's meeting with local officials, emergency responders, and survivors from Hurricane Irma.

As you know, our commitment right now is still on the life-sustaining activities and recovery operations. There are still some search-and-rescue efforts underway as well, particularly in areas of Florida that might see some flooding and the rivers that still have not crested.

The immediate threats from Irma with respect to heavy rains and flooding may have surpassed or passed us already, but there are still some concerns that we need to be thinking about with respect to the survivors that were left in the wake of the storm.

The President has made clear his commitment that the entire federal government is here to support the Governor of Florida, as well the Governors of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands as they execute their recovery efforts.

With respect to our priorities over the next couple of days, power is a significant issue, particularly in power restoration in Florida. The last three days have been an excellent response by the electricity subsector to get power back turned on.

On September 11th, at the peak of the power loss, there were about 7.8 million customers that did not have power. That number is down to 3.6 million in less than three days. So great effort by everybody involved to get power restored. That's an important step towards the recovery efforts.

In addition to power, there's a lot of discussions about fuel. The Acting Secretary of Homeland Security Duke extended the Jones Act waiver, which allows for fuel to be brought into the state of Florida more readily.

On Tuesday, 12 million gallons were actually delivered to the port of Tampa, 18 million gallons to Port Everglades, and those fuels will be actually trucked into key areas within the state that are currently short of fuel.

As far as Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands, please keep in mind that they are still in the recovery mode as well. Ninety-two percent of the power in Puerto Rico has been restored. Governor Rossellò and Governor Mapp meet with FEMA Administrator Brock Long yesterday during his visits down to the islands, and Governor Rossellò is at the White House today meeting with officials, including Mr. Tom Bossert, the Homeland Security Advisor, to work through some recovery plans for the next few weeks.

I'll stop there with any questions that you like.

Q Is there any value in the President going to the Virgin Islands?

MR. DALY: Yeah I won't speak to the Virgin Islands opportunity. I think there's a -- the key thing today is for the President to meet and focus on the survivors here in Florida and meet with the emergency officials, the state officials, and the first responders and volunteers who have done amazing work to actually help our fellow citizens. That will be the focus today. We'll look at the Virgin Islands later and make that determination at that time.

Q We've heard in the Virgin Islands, that they're not going to have the sustained attention. Can you assure that the people there -- that the United States government is totally committed to helping with their recovery?

MR. DALY: Absolutely, the President has been very clear that he is committed to expecting all the members of the Cabinet to provide all resources necessary to support all of the locations that have been impacted, including the territories. For example, Department of Defense has been -- and the State Department actively involved in getting resources down to the Caribbean, not only for the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, but also other foreign nations down there that need assistance.

DOD has marshaled unprecedented levels of resources to provide that support, including evacuating people from the islands that needed it for medical reasons. So yes, the President is committed to providing the support to the Virgin Islands -- to the recovery efforts.

Q What specifically will the President see in the areas he's going to today?

MR. DALY: So the first stop will actually be meeting with the state officials, local officials, the people who are really getting the job done, including the Governor and his team, and the first responders and the volunteers. After that, we'll make a trip down to Naples where the President will spend some time meeting with survivors -- a neighborhood that was directly impacted by the storm.

Unfortunately, as we throw numbers around, we have to remember that every person that's impacted is just that, they're impacted. And it's important to them to see the President's support, to see the Cabinet's support, to see the federal government's support.

We have over 40,000 federal employees deployed to support Irma -- victims right now in the state of Florida. Over 7 million meals have been deployed, commodities have been deployed. And the President will have the opportunity to meet with some of those survivors and hear some of their personal stories.

Q The President proposed cuts to FEMA's grant programs. Do you think he's reconsidering that in the wake of what he's seeing in Texas and now here?

MR. DALY: The good thing is that FEMA is in a good position right now to provide all the level of support that's needed for the request, not only from the governors of the impacted areas for Irma, but also the Governors of Texas and Louisiana.

Q Do you favor more money, though, and keep that money -- increase the budget?

MR. DALY: (Inaudible) why I want to focus on the visit today, and the visit today is about the survivors and making sure that the folks are getting what they need in order to be able to get back on their feet. The President's message is going to be very clear today that the President of the United States, his entire federal workforce, all of his Cabinet are here to support the Governor, the state and local officials in order to be able to ensure that we recover appropriately and restore normalcy back to post-Irma.

Q (Inaudible) for the rest of it, when people will be able to get down to the Lower Keys?

MR. DALY: So, the actual inspections were done on the actual roadways of the Keys, I'll leave it to the state and local officials to make a determination on that.

The bottom line is that, remember, there are still threats to individual safety. So the message that we need to give the American people, particularly the Floridians that are returning to their homes, is that they need to listen to their state and local officials, the local officials in particular, on when it's safe to return. It may look like there may not be threats, but in actuality with downed power lines, with standing water, there are still threats to people's safety. It's imperative people listen to the messages of their state and local officials.

MS. WALTERS: Thank you, guys.

END

10:27 A.M. EDT

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Press Gaggle by Principal Deputy Press Secretary Sarah Sanders and OMB Director Mick Mulvaney, 7/20/2017
Date: Thursday, July 20, 2017 5:15:21 PM

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

July 20, 2017

PRESS BRIEFING
BY PRINCIPAL DEPUTY PRESS SECRETARY SARAH SANDERS AND OMB DIRECTOR MICK MULVANEY

James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

2:27 P.M. EDT

MR. SANDERS: Good afternoon. Before we get into the briefing today, I wanted to reiterate the President's statement from last night and say that the thoughts and prayers of the entire administration are with Senator John McCain, his wife Cindy, and their entire family.

As the President said, throughout his life, a distinguished career in public service, Senator McCain has always been a fighter, and we know that he will bring that unflappable spirit to his latest challenge.

This morning, the Office of Management and Budget released the first unified agenda update of the Trump administration, which shows that we are blowing away our initial one in and two out goal for regulatory reform.

And with that, I'd like to bring out Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mick Mulvaney, to talk more about the administration's war on waste, and how it's helping our economy grow.

Also, as a few of you may know, tomorrow is the Director's birthday. While I don't want to insult him by getting into too many specifics, I can tell you that the CBO estimates that this will be his 75th birthday. But actually -- (laughter) -- took a couple of you a little longer to pick up on that. But actually, it's just the last day he can answer questions as a man in his forties. So please do a favor and speak really loudly so you can make sure that he can hear you.

And with that, Director Mulvaney.

MR. MULVANEY: Thank you. That's absolutely lovely. Thank you.

Q Before you begin, Director, the visual aids, is it still off-camera given that you guys have this? I just had to ask.

MS. SANDERS: Yes.

MR. MULVANEY: Good. I'm glad we got that out of the way. Yes, happy birthday to me. This is a great way to spend my birthday. We actually started a Twitter account this morning for the sole purpose of getting into a Twitter war with my good friend, Congressman Gowdy, who tweeted out this morning that he thought I had turned 50 a long time ago. I tweeted back that he had two deep, dark secrets; one of which was that he's a lot older than I am -- which is true -- and also that he needs help counting to 50 -- which is also true.

I'm going to talk a little bit about MAGAnomics, talk a little bit about what used to be called the unified agenda, which is a terrible name. And we'll talk about that in a second, and then take your questions.

Thirty-five years ago, the situation the country was in had some similarities to where we were as we ended the Obama administration. Things were kind of rough. I was in the homebuilding business. My dad was; I was only 13 at the time. And I remember what it was like. We had stagflation, we had malaise, we had all these challenges that the country faced economically.

And in response to that, Ronald Reagan came out with Reaganomics -- a term, by the way, that I'm not even sure he created. I think his opposition used that as a derogatory term to begin with, but it came to be associated with his presidency.

And I think if we look back on it, we know what its basic, fundamental tenets were. It was a monetary policy to fix inflation, tax cuts, spending restraints, and a little bit of regulatory relief.

Fast-forward to where we are today, here we are. It's been more than 10 years since our last year of a really healthy American economy, which we define as greater than 3 percent -- or 3 percent growth. And we think it's time for the next iteration of that, the next plan. And that is what we've put together as MAGAnomics. It's supposed to be this unifying theme of just about everything that we do.

You all have seen me up here before, when we walk through the budget. You say, "Mulvaney, why are you doing this? Why are you doing that?" And I talked about the importance of getting back to 3 percent growth.

I talked about the historical importance of that, the historical achievability of that -- about how if you're 30 years old in this country, you've never had a job during your adult lifetime, in a healthy American economy, and you think that 1.9 or 2.1 or 2.5 percent growth is typical, and it doesn't have to be. It's not.

I remember in the mid-1990s, when I had my first real job -- if I had been fired, it wouldn't have been that big a deal because I knew I could go find something else, because you could do that in a healthy economy. I actually ended up quitting my job so that I could start my own business, because you know you can do that in a healthy economy.

It's been a long time since we've been there. And our fear is that if we don't get back there quickly, there will be people who never know what 3 percent means. There will be people who have forgotten what 3 percent can be like. And I don't think it should come as a surprise that there are some people who don't want you to remember what 3 percent growth would be like, because it would be a tremendous sort of damnation of what happened in the previous administration.

So, what is MAGAnomics? It is tax reform. It is, what we're calling the "regulatory accountability project" -- regulatory accountability project. It's longer, but it's at least a little bit more descriptive than "unified agenda." Took me about six months here to figure out what the unified agenda was. And they told me, and I said, what is it really? And they said, well, it's a way to bring to some accountability to regulations. I said, great, it's now the regulatory accountability project.

Energy dominance is part of this. Welfare reform is part of this. Infrastructure is part of this. Our trade policies is part of this. Even the spending restraint that we tried to introduce in the budget is part of this. All of those things are designed towards one common end, and that is 3 percent sustained economic growth in this country again. We've done it before. In fact, we've always done it. The last 10 years was the first time we have not been able to do it, I think, ever. We can do it again. We absolutely fully believe that.

And I want to talk a little bit today about one piece of that, which is our deregulatory agenda. The regulatory accountability project -- used to be called the unified agenda -- released -- last night? Today?

MR. CZWARTACKI: This morning.

MR. MULVANEY: This morning. When the President came into office, he gave me some pretty specific instructions over the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs -- what we call OIRA -- O-I-R-A -- part of OMB. In fact, I still think OMB should be called OMBRA -- the Office of Management and Budget and Regulatory Affairs. That's how important it is to us. That's the priority that the President has set for it over at OMB. He said, look, get over there and tell everybody at all the agencies that we're on a two-for-one policy on new regs.

You cannot put out a new reg until you get two old regs off the books. That was our two-for-one policy. He also said -- and no new burden. No new financial burden. If you come out with a new reg that raises the burdens on the private sector by a dollar, you got to go find me a reg you get rid of to reduce that burden by a dollar. So, zero net impact on the regulatory financial burden in this country.

This is our first chance today to sort of get a temperature check on how we are doing on that. So the goal is two-for-one. When it comes to major actions -- we're at 16 to 1. Sixteen major deregulatory actions in the first six months of this administration. There's one new one. Is anybody going to guess what it is? Does somebody know? No dentists here? You know what it is? Yes. The dental amalgam rule. Apparently we're now regulating something to do with the stuff we put in our teeth when we get --

Q Mercury and waste water.

MR. MULVANEY: There you go. All right? So that's the only significant new reg we put out in the first six months. We've gotten rid of 16. Twelve of those are CRAs you're probably familiar with, and four of them have gone through the agency process and so forth.

But it doesn't -- it's not just those big ones, okay? The number that I use -- 860 regulatory actions removed or withdrawn -- 860.

By the way, I asked for a list of them, and I got news for you: None of them are very sexy. None of them are very glamorous. None of them really rise to the level of getting national attention. But think about that -- 860 of them. I describe it as that -- sort of that slow accretion, that slow cancer that can come from regulatory burdens that we put on our people.

Ryan Zinke, over at the Department of Interior, has already made some changes on how they streamline the paperwork for outdoorsmen and outdoorswomen -- people who want to go out in our national parks. That's really small. We know that. It's not going to change the world. But when you do that 860 times in the first six months, it can have a benefit. Plus, if you're a citizen and you're not out there and it's now easier for you to use the national parks, to use our public lands, that's got to have a positive impact on you. We think that it does.

By the way, of the 860, and this is one that I think -- I don't think anybody knows about this because I didn't know about it until about 24 hours ago. The Obama administration had a secret list of regs. Back in 2011, they were doing their unified agenda. They had a bunch of things that they wanted to regulate. And what we're hearing is that they just didn't want to tell you about it. They thought it would be bad for their reelection prospects in 2012, so they created a secret list of regs that were not disclosed to you folks, and we are disclosing it.

And by the way, when we threatened to disclose it, a lot of the agencies came up with those 860 things that we got rid of. So there will be no more of that, by the way. There will be none of that in this administration. We will not have a secret list. We will not have a hidden list of regulations that we're thinking about doing but we're not going to tell you about. That's going to end effective immediately. In fact, it has already ended. We're not going to do that anymore.

By the way, where's my stack? So I'd love a little graphics. This is the last week of the Obama administration -- the regs put out by the Obama administration in their last week in office. This is ours from our first week in office. I can't lift both of those together, can I? I don't think I can.

In the last six months here, the Obama administration put on over $6 billion in new regulatory burden. The last six months, just over $6 billion. We had zero. In the first five months in their administration back in 2009, they had over $3 billion of new regs. We cleared the decks of $22 million of regs. So we actually went the other way.

So I cannot express to you enough how much things have changed when it comes to the regulatory burden, the attitudes towards regulations in this country, and you're just going to see more of that for the next eight years.

So I think that's everything I wanted to cover. Is it? I forget. So if I got any questions -- yes, sir. Right there.

Q Thank you, Director. You talked about regulations in terms of the cost to business. Is there any other metric that you think is appropriate for measuring the effectiveness or necessity of regulations, such as whether they improve people's -- improve quality of life, improve safety in products, improve any sort of thing? Because it seems like all you talk about is how much this costs business. So is there any other metric that you look at?

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: Yeah, in fact, we're required by law to do exactly that. We're required by law to do cost-benefit analyses before we put on new regs or take off old regs. It's what we're supposed to do. Our attitude has been, and our philosophy has been that the previous administration fudged the numbers, that they either overstated the benefits to people or understated the costs. And we're going to look at it in a much more pragmatic perspective.

Q I mean, the reason I ask is because, you know, you just talked about the previous administration overstating the benefits. Are there benefits? I mean, talk about the regulations --

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: Were you healthy and safe before this came out? Yes, you were. And you'll be healthy and safe with this gone.

Q I don't know what's in those, Director. What I'm asking you is -- and you just said it; you talked about benefits to people. Is there any other measure? Because all you do is talk about the cost. And you talked about what your first week in office -- you know, what the benefit to the ones that you held up for you all's first week?

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: I think I answered that question. Yes, we are going through a cost-benefit analysis. We are obligated by law to do that and we continue to do that.

Yes, ma'am.

Q Can you tell us more about the secret list from the Obama administration? (Laughter.) What it was and what was in it?

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: I don't know. John, have we got details on that? You want to push that?

MR. CZWARTACKI: They called it a "pending list."

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: They called it the "pending list" or something like that -- previously undisclosed. We can get you a list of the examples that came off of it.

Q So it wasn't available anywhere? It was completely secret?

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: 2011 -- I think they did a unified agenda in the spring of 2011?

MR. CZWARTACKI: Yeah, in the fall, they did 2011. But the '12 spring agenda, they didn't do.

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: They didn't do it.

MR. CZWARTACKI: And instead, they put things they wanted to advance -- they kind of parked them on something they called the "pending agenda" and they kind of just went with that. And so when the fall full agenda came out, conveniently after the election, it was missing some things. So it was a trigger to a lot of academics who said, something's not right here, because there was this secret list being held back that was filled with all this.

DIRECTOR MULVANEY: Fast forward to when we started this process and we started asking the agencies to send us their ideas about de-reg. Listen, it's been a challenge. Start to think about the last time that the federal government has engaged in a full board deregulatory type of action and attitude. There's a lot of folks who work for the federal government who have never been asked to do this.

In fact, one of the anecdotes we've got is that -- I can't remember which agency it was -- but there was actually -- there was no box they could check on whether or not an action was deregulatory or regulatory. There was no column for deregulation. We're asking the federal government to use muscles it hasn't used in a long time, and it's hard to do.

But I will tell you this, when we first started looking at this a couple months back, and we noticed there wasn't -- we had done a pretty good job at all the agencies of slowing new stuff, but we hadn't done a very good job of clearing the decks of the old stuff -- the stuff that was already in the pipeline -- getting rid of it until we found this secret list and threatened to go ahead and expose it. And then they said, well, you know what, maybe we'll get rid of those. And that's how we ended up with our 860 here --

Q Can you assure us -- on one side of the ledger, then, you have secret lists from the Obama administration of potential new regulations. Can you assure us that there are no secret lists and will be no secret lists in this administration of regulations you want to do away with? Is all that public?

MR. MULVANEY: Yes.

Q You have no secret lists anywhere?

MR. MULVANEY: I like questions like that. That's an easy one.

Q When you went back up on the Hill -- last time you were on the Hill -- some of your critics had said that 3 percent --

MR. MULVANEY: I have critics on the Hill? Really?

Q Yeah, can you believe it? (Laughter.) They were saying that you had -- that it's a pie-in-the-sky to believe that we can reach 3 percent. What is your response to those critics who say that you'll never reach 3 percent?

MR. MULVANEY: It's outrageously pessimistic. You guys have heard my answer on that before.

Q Specifically.

MR. MULVANEY: Specifically is this -- is that, yeah, you can get there again. They say, oh well, there's not enough people here anymore, all right. We're a graying population. There's almost 7 million people right now in between -- and I hate to get too technical -- U3 and U6. U3 is the general broad measure of unemployment. U6 are the folks who are working part-time or temporarily against the -- they want to work full-time but they can't find it. Almost 7 million people in that gap between U3 and U6 who could move into the full-time workforce tomorrow if they had the opportunity to do that. They want to do that, we just haven't given them the chance to do that. There's a big part of your workforce base -- move to productivity, okay. We also need productivity to be higher than it has been in the past couple years.

Look at our tax plan. That's why the whole thing has worked together. That first answer, by the way, was welfare reform. How do you get people from U6 to U3? Economic opportunity plus welfare reform. Now we look at tax reform and its impact on productivity. We have to have the capital investment necessary to boost productivity, and we have to get that -- we can get that -- through our tax reform. It's why we focus so heavily on corporate tax reform. We need those businesses to invest in capital in order to increase their employees' productivity because that's how we get to 3 percent GDP.

Q Just a quick follow up, though. Isn't -- just real quick. Your critics say that what that will do is help further destroy the tax base and the middle class. How do you address that?

MR. MULVANEY: The tax base is -- I wish they had asked me that -- how is the tax base eroded by having people go back to work? That's absurd. So no, we are going to broaden the tax base by making sure there's more folks working.

Yes, ma'am.

Q Two part question. First, in terms of the 3 percent growth, can you give us your latest target for when you think that might be possible?

And then as the second part of that, you talked about tax reform. Without overhauling Obamacare, if you don't get those tax cuts repealing the Obama-era tax cuts that you're looking toward, can you actually achieve comprehensive tax reform or do you then go to a series of tax cuts? What's your latest thinking in terms of what's --

MR. MULVANEY: Okay, let me see if I can get this right. The first question is, what's our sort of schedule, our plan, or how do we get to --

Q When you can achieve 3 percent --

MR. MULVANEY: I don't think we've adjusted the -- we put out the midseason report or the midyear report, something like that, a couple weeks ago. That's where you may have seen we changed sort of our -- we've measured actual receipts in the deficit and so forth. The deficit was a little bit higher than we expected. So we sort of go back in and say, well when we introduce our budget this is what we thought the world would look like. Here's what it looks like today. That would have been an opportunity for us to change our economic projections from the budget. We didn't do that. I think our projection for this year is still 2.3 percent and then 2.5 percent and then 2.7 percent or something like that. So the goal is to be at that 3 percent plateau in about three or four years.

To your second question about the Obamacare taxes and so forth, let me answer it this way and see if I've answered your question. Yeah, I think we're a little disappointed. The most recent proposed version of the Senate healthcare bill left some of those taxes in place, but I agree with many of my Republican colleagues on the Hill who say well, yeah, but you get another bite of that apple on tax reform. Is that your question?

Q Do you think you can do comprehensive tax reform if you don't repeal and replace Obamacare? Or do you then have to go to a series of tax cuts?

MR. MULVANEY: I think it becomes easier to do comprehensive tax reform after healthcare for political reasons, for reasons of momentum and so forth, but I don't --

Q The math --

MR. MULVANEY: Well, the math comes back to the issue of the deficit, so let's talk about that for a second. What is OMB's thoughts on this, right? You know that I've worked with Paul Ryan for many, many years. I believe that we should be willing to take on short-term increases on deficits if it's what it takes to get an increase in our long-term sustained growth.

By the way, that's one of the big fiscal hawks in town saying that. Okay? That I'm okay with larger deficits in the short run if the tradeoff is 3 percent growth, and if we need more aggressive tax reform in order to get to 3 percent, then I'm more than willing to argue that despite the fact that it may increase the deficit.

By the way, where did I learn this message about how important growth is in order to save the country long-term? Does anybody know? From Paul Ryan. So I can tell you, I think I've studied with some of the best, and I think I can make the case to him that while I appreciate and understand his position on deficit neutrality, when it comes to the tax reform, I think that growth needs to be paramount in that and that we're willing to take on short-term deficit increases.

We got one question here, and then I have to give it back to Sarah. Yes, sir.

Q Okay. Two-parter, one on the regulation and one on tax reform. On tax reform, there's a current-law baseline in the House budget that assumes that current tax cuts are going to expire, which means you'll have to pay for them. Is that going to make it hard -- will that make tax reform harder?

MR. MULVANEY: I'm sorry, there are no -- the current tax cuts that are proposed? Because there are no current tax cuts. Are you talking about like when the Bush tax cuts were going to expire a couple of years ago?

Q Right.

MR. MULVANEY: Those are all taken care of. I don't think -- if there are tax cuts on the books right now that expire in the future, I'm sorry, I'm not aware of those. Maybe I don't understand your question.

Q Fair enough. Let me ask you one about the regulation then. Bigger picture here, does this make it cheaper to run your regulatory agencies, and will you have a cut following '18 or '19?

MR. MULVANEY: Well, you saw some of our proposals in our budget and our budget blueprint about some of the reductions we made, for example at the EPA. And yes we do foresee a fundamental difference in the way that agency functions, and we think they should be able to function in the future with a much smaller workforce. That's a reasonable conclusion from the proposals that we made in the budget, but I don't think it's fair to say we're doing this in order to make it cheaper to run the government. What we're doing is making it easier to run a country. That's what's driving the regulatory reform.

Listen, I'd love to do this again, but I promised Sarah the last 10 minutes. Thanks very much, and thank you for not making a big deal about the fact that I'm getting old.

MS. SANDERS: We'll let you leave those there so you don't throw your back out carrying those out of here. Thank you, Director Mulvaney.

As the Director pointed out, today also marks six months since President Trump took office. On top of the historic results of our efforts to streamline regulation led by Director Mulvaney, the President has also made significant progress toward the rest of his top policy priorities.

In part due to the deregulation, our economy is booming again, and Americans are going back to work in construction sites, mines, and factories across the country. And those workers can rest easy knowing that they have a staunch defender in the White House, as the President shows time and again that he is putting America first in trade negotiations, pursuing reciprocal agreements with our trading partners so that everyone benefits.

He's prioritized the enforcement of immigration laws to protect all Americans and ensure that our system treats everyone fairly. He's opened up American energy after years of political opposition, putting us on track for energy dominance. Secretary Shulkin and his team at the VA are making sure our veterans get the care they deserve after the sacrifices they've made for our country by holding failing employees accountable.

And in these first six months, President Trump has put America first in world affairs and national security, delivering historic speeches calling on our allies to come together in the fight against radical Islamic terrorism and calling out our enemies for the destructive behavior the previous administration neglected to address.

As you can see, President Trump has taken serious action on everything from energy to defense to immigration, even as he faces historic obstruction from Senate Democrats, who are pulling every trick in the book to prevent him from putting his team in place.

This week, we've seen even more evidence of Senate Democrats' pattern of holding up this administration's qualified nominees in unprecedented fashion. Here are some startling facts. To date, Senate Democrats have filibustered 34 of the 54 nominees that have eventually been confirmed. By contrast, in President Obama's entire term, his nominees faced four filibusters in total.

This President's Cabinet nominees faced more Senate filibusters than all other Presidents combined. And as we've mentioned they've filibustered nominees that enjoyed unanimous support, including a judge that President Obama had previously nominated, and who was eventually confirmed by a vote of 100-0.

They've filibustered key national security positions, like Patrick Shanahan to be the number two at the Department of Defense, who enjoyed bipartisan support and eventually received over 80 votes.

And recent reports show that their refusal to hold votes on the President's nominees for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which approves potential new pipelines, is preventing an estimated $14 billion in pipeline projects. These are projects like the Atlantic Coast Pipeline, which will create 17,000 new jobs and $2.7 billion in economic activity in Virginia and North Carolina, just through construction, while generating $377 million in annual energy cost savings.

There are thousands more jobs like these that won't happen, and the Democratic senators of states like Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, and Pennsylvania are standing by as party leadership puts politics over what's best for their constituents.

To be clear, they're slow-walking because they can't justify blocking these nominees who are both qualified and non-controversial, but this is part of a deliberate strategy to obstruct this President's agenda and resist the will of the American people.

Consider this fact: At this pace, it would take an astounding 11 years to confirm all of this President's qualified nominees and finally have these important leadership positions fully staffed -- 11 years, clearly well after the President's two terms.

We call on Senator Schumer and Senate Democrats to stop this reckless partisanship, which is undermining national security, undermining our judiciary, undermining health care, job creation, energy production, and our basic functions of government, and swiftly approve this President's qualified nominees.

And with that, I will take your questions.

Q Sarah, thank you for the question. Does the President have confidence in his Attorney General? Does he want the Attorney General to stay in this post?

MS. SANDERS: The President said -- as the President said yesterday, he was disappointed in the Attorney General Session's decision to recuse himself. But clearly he has confidence in him, or he would not be the Attorney General.

Q Sarah, can I follow up on that one? You said the President has confidence in the Attorney General. Does the President believe that the Attorney General serves the President or the Constitution?

MS. SANDERS: I believe that the President -- I think that's kind of a both. Obviously, the Attorney General's job is to follow and uphold the Constitution. But also, every member of the Cabinet and the administration serves at the pleasure of the President.

Q Would the President prefer the Attorney General resign?

MS. SANDERS: I believe I've answered that question.

Q It's a little bit of a slightly different nuance, so that's why I'm asking it. You say he has confidence in him. Does that mean he does not want him to resign?

MS. SANDERS: I think you know this President well enough to know that if he wanted small business to take an action, he would make that quite clear.

Q But clearly there's a difference of opinion here because the President thinks what the Attorney General did was improper, yet the Attorney General, in recusing himself last spring, believes that he was taking the appropriate action, given the potential conflict of interest in him leading the Russia investigation. So how do you explain that split? And what --

MS. SANDERS: As I said, the President is disappointed in the decision and I think he's spoken about his feelings on this quite clearly.

Matthew.

Q Thanks, Sarah. A question about healthcare. The President has repeatedly said that 21-year-olds can pay $12 a year for health insurance under the Republican plan. He said it again yesterday to the New York Times. What does he mean by that? Is the White House aware of a health insurance plan that charges only $12 per year? And if not, why does the President keep making that claim?

MS. SANDERS: I'll have to check on the specifics.

Q Can you get back to me on that --

MS. SANDERS: Sure.

Q -- because the CBO estimates that it would be about $1,100 dollars a year, even for the lowest income 21-year-olds.

MS. SANDERS: Okay, I'll check on that.

Q The President said that if Robert Mueller were to look at his finances or the family finances, it would constitute a red line. How is that not a threat to the special counsel?

MS. SANDERS: I think that the President -- the point he's trying to make is that the clear purpose of the Russia investigation is to review Russia's meddling in the election, and that that should be the focus of the investigation. Nothing beyond that.

Q That should not be viewed as a threat, as a warning to what the special counsel should or should not be looking at as it relates to the President's and his family's finances?

MS. SANDERS: The President is making it clear that the special counsel should not move outside the scope of the investigation.

Q Let me try to come at this one different way.

MS. SANDERS: I have a feeling we might do this for a little while.

Q Why does the President have confidence in his Attorney General? Maybe you can explain it that way.

MS. SANDERS: I believe that the Attorney General has made significant progress in terms of things like MS13. They've taken great action on that front -- certainly on the front of immigration. He spoke today about some of the cybersecurity measures that they're taking, and I think those are great examples of successes that they've had at the Department of Justice.

Q It was reported last month that there was this rift between the President and the Attorney General and it ended up that the Attorney General had offered his resignation. Did that happen? How did that process play out? And why did the President at that time decide not to accept the resignation?

MS. SANDERS: I'm not aware of that taking place so I can't speak to that.

Q One more question. From his sickbed, Senator McCain today issued a statement that questioned why, six months into the administration, there still is not an Afghanistan strategy. He said they're still waiting. Why is there still not an Afghanistan strategy, and when can we expect it?

MS. SANDERS: I believe that the President has empowered Secretary Mattis to make decisions on that front, and I would refer you to the Department of Defense for those specific questions.

Kristen.

Q Sarah, thanks. I want to go back to the President's comments about Robert Mueller. He was asked if Mr. Mueller does, in fact, look into his finances as part of his special counsel, would he consider firing him. The President said, I can't answer that question because I don't think it's going to happen.

Does that mean that firing the special counsel is something that's on the table for this President?

MS. SANDERS: I've answered this question several times before. Although the President has the authority to do so, he doesn't intend to do so.

Q And, Sarah, if the President is not concerned about this probe, why does it matter? Why does he care if Robert Mueller looks into his finances?

MS. SANDERS: I think it's clear that the President is frustrated by the continued witch hunt of the Russia investigation, and he'd love for this to come to a full conclusion so that everyone can focus fully on the thing that he was elected to do. And that's what he'd like to be focused on.

Q And just one more about Senator John McCain. The President, like so many others, sent out letters of prayers last night to the Senator. Has he had any time to reflect on some of his past comments about Senator McCain? Does he regret saying he likes people who weren't captured?

MS. SANDERS: I'm not sure about that. I do know that he certainly hopes that the Senator makes a full and speedy recovery. I don't have anything beyond that.

Q Sarah, it's been over a month since the President promised a press conference on discussing the administration's ISIS strategy. The Daily Beast had an article about this ISIS strategy document, and so can we expect this press conference to take place soon? And if the strategy is completed, then what's the delay about having this so far?

MS. SANDERS: We'll certainly make sure that there's an announcement if there's a press conference and that you are all invited.

Roberta.

Q Sarah, can you tell us a little bit more about the President's meeting today at the Pentagon? What was discussed? What was sort of the main focus there?

MS. SANDERS: Sure. Obviously, it's important for the President to have continued conversations and dialogue. The President met with members -- key members of his Cabinet and national security team, including the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, primarily to discuss challenges and opportunities.

They discussed how to integrate U.S. actions around the world to promote American prosperity, enhance American security, and extend American influence.

Q So was it a certain part of the world? Or all parts of the world?

MS. SANDERS: It was a broad discussion.

Q Did North Korea come up?

MS. SANDERS: I cannot get into the specifics of the detailed conversation.

Q Sarah, a finer point on Mueller: The President said if he does investigate his or the family's finances, that's crossing a red line. There's a report today that Mueller is investigating a broad range of the family's financial transactions. If that report is true, then he has crossed the red line. Does that mean he fires him?

MS. SANDERS: Again, as I said earlier, the President has no intention to do so at this time.

Q Even if he crosses the red line? So the red line doesn't mean anything?

MS. SANDERS: That's not what I said. I don't believe everything I read in the paper. We'll have to see as we get more details on that.

Q But he said that. It's on audio. He said, that's crossing a red line. That's not something you read in the paper. You can listen to the audio.

MS. SANDERS: I'm talking about the investigation looking into the finances.

Q But if it's true --

MS. SANDERS: The President has been clear many times before that he has no financial dealings whatsoever with Russia. The point the President is making is that the investigation should stay within the confines of meddling -- Russia meddling in the election and nothing beyond that.

Q And if it doesn't, he fires him.

MS. SANDERS: I'm not going to get into that.

Q Why does the President expect loyalty from his aides, from members of his Cabinet when he's constantly criticizing them and undercutting them and contradicting them in -- particularly in media outlets that he constantly tries to discredit?

MS. SANDERS: I don't believe that the President is undermining them. I think he was being very candid about feelings that he had. But as I said, he has confidence in his ability.

April.

Q Sarah, how does the process play out when the President is very candid about what he thinks about his Attorney General, about what he thinks about Mueller? How does this process play out?

MS. SANDERS: I'm sorry -- what?

Q The investigation -- the investigation, the whole process of relationships between Sessions and the President; the process of this investigation by Mueller. How does this play out with the President being very upset over the process and openly criticizing everyone and people in fear?

MS. SANDERS: I think it's pretty clear how the process will turn out from our side is that this will be proven to be the witch hunt that it is, and that nothing further will happen.

Trey.

Q I have two more questions.

MS. SANDERS: Two more?

Q Yes, two more. There's a belief that these conversations with the New York Times, with -- whatever reporters are pieces of intimidation to go to Mueller, to go to Sessions. What do you say to that?

MS. SANDERS: I think that's ridiculous.

Third question.

Q And then lastly, Baltimore. Does the President regret what he said about Baltimore? He threw Rosenstein under the bus for the wrong city. He's not from Baltimore, he's from Philadelphia. And there are people in Baltimore saying there are a lot of Republicans there even though the city is led by a Democratic mayor.

MS. SANDERS: I think he's making a general statement.

Trey.

Q But it was wrong. The statement was wrong.

MS. SANDERS: He's spent a lot of time and has worked pretty extensively in Baltimore.

Q Has President Trump spoken with the Attorney General in the past 24 hours?

MS. SANDERS: No, not that I'm aware of.

Q And a follow-up, does he regret appointing Jeff Sessions to be his Attorney General?

MS. SANDERS: I don't believe so. I think if he did, then he probably wouldn't be in that position.

Q And a quick one on Afghanistan policy: Following his meeting this morning at the Pentagon, is the President any closer to unveiling a policy towards Afghanistan? And should the American people expect that we will be sending more troops to the region?

MS. SANDERS: As I said earlier, the President has empowered Secretary Mattis in that front, and I would direct you to the Department of Defense.

Q Sarah, can we just reconcile what you just said? You said the President does not regret appointing Jeff Sessions, yet he said in that interview with the New York Times that he does regret it because had he known what he was going to do before he appointed him, he would have said, sorry, Jeff, I'm going to get someone else.

MS. SANDERS: I think --

Q So I just wondering, how do you come to those two thoughts?

MS. SANDERS: Sorry. I may have misunderstood what Trey was asking. My understanding --

Q He asked, does the President regret appointing Jeff Sessions -

MS. SANDERS: I'm sorry. I thought you'd asked if he regretted not taking action to remove Jeff Sessions.

Q So does he regret appointing Jeff Sessions?

MS. SANDERS: The President has spoken very clearly on this in the interview yesterday. And as he said, he was disappointed that the Attorney General made the decision to recuse himself and certainly that he didn't tell him that before taking the job.

Q But he also said had he told him that he wouldn't have appointed him. So does he regret now in retrospect appointing Jeff Sessions?

MS. SANDERS: I haven't asked him specifically.

Q When asked about Mueller today a couple of times you've used conditional language that he doesn't intend to -- it's at this time. How can his independence be guaranteed if you're saying in conditional tense that he's not going to try to have him removed?

MS. SANDERS: Look, I can't predict everything that could possibly take place in the future and what Mueller could potentially do that might create an outrageous reason not to take action, so I'm not going to talk about hypotheticals. I can talk about where we are today, and that's the position of the President.

Q Sarah, you've been asked multiple times today about the war in Afghanistan. Both times you referred us to the Defense Department. But President Trump is still the Commander-in-Chief. Does he take full responsibility for whatever happens on the conflict in Afghanistan?

MS. SANDERS: I would think so. But again, he has empowered Secretary Mattis in terms -- I've been asked specifically about troop levels and decisions on specific instances, and in that regard, I would refer you to the Department of Defense.

John.

Q Thank you, Sarah. You spoke earlier about -- apparently about confidence in General Sessions staying there. Does the President have the same confidence and lack of regret in name Ron Brownstein [sic] deputy attorney general? Mr. Brownstein being --

MS. SANDERS: Rosenstein, Rosenstein. I don't know who that guy is, but -- (laughter). So I'm not going to speak about him. But Rod Rosenstein, as I stated, if the President didn't have confidence, he wouldn't be in that position.

Guys, I hate to cut us short today, but the President has -- hold on, I'm not finished. The President has an announcement that he'll be making here shortly --

Q Here at the podium?

MS. SANDERS: No. (Laughter.) Here at the White House, and so I'm going to cut it short today. Thanks, guys.

END

3:06 P.M. EDT

Unsubscribe

From: Julian, Gregory
Subject: Press release: Former Louisiana State Official Scott A. Angelle Named as Director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement
Date: Monday, May 22, 2017 10:03:27 AM
Attachments: Angelle Bio - May 2017.pdf
Angelle annc release - BSEE masthead 5-18-2017 \(1\).docx

THE BUREAU OF SAFETY AND ENVIRONMENTAL ENFORCEMENT

Office of Public Affairs

Date: May 22, 2017
Contact: Gregory Julian (202) 208-3985

Former Louisiana State Official Scott A. Angelle Named as Director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Former Louisiana state official Scott A. Angelle will head-up the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement. As part of the Department of the Interior, BSEE fosters safe and responsible energy production on the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf through regulatory oversight of oil and gas operations. Angelle, who most recently served as Vice Chairman of the Louisiana Public Service Commission, will assume his new position May 23.

“Scott Angelle brings a wealth of experience to BSEE, having spent many years working for the safe and efficient energy production of both Louisiana’s and our country’s offshore resources,” Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke said. “As we set our path towards energy dominance, I am confident that Scott has the expertise, vision, and the leadership necessary to effectively enhance our program, and to promote the safe and environmentally responsible exploration, development, and production of our country’s offshore oil and gas resources.”

Angelle, who will serve as the fourth director in BSEE’s history, has held numerous positions in Louisiana State and Parish governments, including Interim Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources, and St. Martin Parish President. In the aftermath of the BP oil spill, Angelle served at the request of then Louisiana Governor Bobby Jindal as liaison to the federal government, and negotiated an early end of the previous administration’s drilling moratorium.

“I welcome the opportunity to serve President Trump and Secretary Zinke, and work with BSEE staff to meet the critical goal of energy dominance for our country,” said Angelle. “It is an exciting and challenging time for BSEE; I look forward to leading our efforts to empower the offshore oil and gas industry while ensuring safe and environmentally responsible operations.”

Angelle served for eight years as Louisiana’s Secretary of the Department of Natural Resources. Under his leadership, the state’s coastal permitting system was reformed, providing for efficient permitting while increasing drilling rig counts in Louisiana by more than 150 percent during his tenure. Angelle has also served as Chairman of the Louisiana State Mineral Board, and as a member of the Louisiana State University Board of Supervisors, Southern States Energy Board, and the Louisiana Coastal Port Advisory Authority.

Angelle is a native of Breaux Bridge, Louisiana, and a cum laude graduate of the University of Louisiana at Lafayette with a Bachelor of Science degree in Petroleum Land Management. He and his wife Dianne are the proud parents of five children and four grandchildren.

Established in 2011, BSEE fosters secure and reliable energy production through a program of efficient permitting, appropriate regulations, compliance monitoring and enforcement, inspections, technical assessments, and incident investigations. The position of BSEE Director is not Senate-confirmed.

More information on BSEE can be found at: <http://www.bsee.gov>

###

-- BSEE --

--

Greg Julian

Press Secretary

Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement

O: 202-208-6184

M: 202-412-8375

Gregory.Julian@bsee.gov

<http://www.bsee.gov/> | <https://www.linkedin.com/company/bureau-of-safety-and-environmental-enforcement> | <https://twitter.com/BSEEGov> | https://www.facebook.com/

BSEEGov/

Home

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Print pool 3: POTUS to make statement
Date: Wednesday, June 14, 2017 11:09:07 AM

From: "Diaz, Kevin B" <Kevin.Diaz@chron.com>

Date: June 14, 2017 at 11:02:57 AM EDT
Subject: Print pool 3: POTUS to make statement

At 11:30am the President will make a statement from the Diplomatic Room in the White House. Coverage will be pool only.

Pool gather time is 11:15am. In lower press.

For background: The President and Vice President were both notified of the situation in Alexandria this morning. The President has spoken to the Speaker of the House, the Senate Majority Leader, the wife of Rep. Steve Scalise, the Chief of Staff to Rep. Steve Scalise, and the Chief of the Capitol Police. The Vice President has spoken with the Speaker of the House, House Majority Leader, Rep Joe Barton, Senator Jeff Flake and Francis Brooke, a member of the Vice President's staff and a coach on the GOP baseball team who was present.

Kevin Diaz
HEARST/ Houston Chronicle
202-689-5157

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Print Travel Pool #3
Date: Wednesday, June 07, 2017 1:30:36 PM

From: Steven Miller <smiller@washingtontimes.com>

Date: June 7, 2017 at 12:53:48 PM EDT

Subject: Print Travel Pool #3

The White House provided this background on “Victims of Affordable Care Act/Obamacare”:

The members of two families, one from Troy, Ohio and another from Louisville, Kentucky, will be available to speak to media after President departs from tarmac in Cincinnati.

Meeting the the President:

Mrs. Raya Whalen, co-owner of PlayCare, LLC in Troy, OH

Mr. Dan Withrow, president of DSS Distribution Group Inc. in Louisville, KY

Mrs. Raya Mafazy Whalen and her husband, Michael, are owners of PlayCare, an Ohio-based small business that specializes in the design, sale, installation, and maintenance of commercial playground equipment. PlayCare employe 15 Ohioans; given its size and health policy exemptions, some might underestimate the disastrous impact of Obamacare; the Whalens story proves otherwise.

Prior to Obamacare’s enactment, the Whalens’ company offered affordable health care options to its employees the Whalens purchased healthcare through heir own company as well. However, following Obamacare’s enactment, the company’s plan was considered unacceptable by the government due to over burdensome regulations. They and their employees were forced to purchase health insurance through the Affordable Care Act exchanges.

They were far from affordable and did not fulfill the promise that “if you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor.”

Not for the Whalens. When Raya discovered she and her husband were expecting their first child, she visited with her extended family’s OB-GYN, who informed her that she could not accept her insurance which was devastating to Raya as their doctor had delivered her 9 nieces and nephews.

For Raya to stay with that doctor, she would have had to pay $50 thousand out of pocket with she could not do. She was force dot find another doctor.

Under Obamacare, the cost of monthly healthcare for Raya and her family skyrocketed from roughly $170 to $800 a month, almost the cost of a mortgage, and her deductible is nearly $15 thousand.

Recently, Raya’s 7 month old child needed to be hospitalized and the child, fortunately, is well. The cost of the hospitalization for the child left Raya and her husband with a $5000 cost. It is as if Raya did not [have] health insurance at all when it does not cover medical needs.

Raya founded the Young Republican Women of Cincinnati.

Raya will be accompanied by her husband Michael Whalen and their 7-month old baby Colette.

Mr. Dan Withrow, president of DSS Distribution Group Inc., in Louisville, KY

Dan Withrow is the owner of DSS Distribution Group Inc, an 11 employee small business in Louisville, KY that distributes pallets, packaging materials and automated equipment. Prior to Obamacare's enactment, Dan's company provided multiple options to his employees through a group plan, given the competitive market place, his employees were satisfied with the options they had.

Following the enactment of the Affordable Care Act, the healthcare options began to increase in cost, some as much as 150%.

As a result, in order to provide his employees benefits and be able to retain them, Dan and his company assumed a greater financial burden of their employees' healthcare, diverting his profits away from hiring more employees and growing his business.

Dan is hopeful that Obamacare is repealed and replaced so that he can once again provide his employees with a lower cost for health care and be able to hire more employees and expand his business.

Dan will be accompanied by his wife Mindy Withrow, and their children Hallie age 15, and triplets Ella, Nicholas and Christian age 12.

--

S.A. Miller
White House Correspondent
The Washington Times
Cell: 443-621-4008
Email: smiller@WashingtonTimes.com
Twitter: @samillertimes

The information contained in this electronic transmission is intended for the exclusive use of the individuals to whom it is addressed and may contain information that is privileged and confidential, the disclosure of which is prohibited by law. If the reader of this transmission is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. In addition, any unauthorized copying, disclosure or distribution of the material in this e-mail and any attachments is strictly forbidden.

Unsubscribe

From: White House Press Office
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Print Travel Pool #5
Date: Wednesday, June 07, 2017 2:23:11 PM

From: Steven Miller <smiller@washingtontimes.com>

Date: June 7, 2017 at 1:42:30 PM EDT

Subject: Print Travel Pool #5

After meeting with victims of Obamacare on Air Force One, the president made remarks on the tarmac in Cincinnati. Behind the president stood the two families he met with: Raya Whalen, her husband Michael Whalen and their 7-month old baby Colette; and Dan Winthro, his wife Windy Withrow, and their children Hallie age 15, and triplets Ella, Nicholas and Christian age 12.

Air Force One was in the background.

"They've had their lives completely upended by the disaster known as Obamacare," said the president.

"The president said the two families were "giving voice to the millions and millions and millions of Americans who are going through turmoil."

"Raya and Dan are just two of the victims of the health care catastrophe caused by congressional Democrats," said the president.

The president said that Capitol Hill Democrats now would not help pass Republican health care legislation if it was the best plan in history.

"We have not help, only obstruction from Democrats," said the president.

"We will be doing something great. We are in the process of doing it," said the president. "We're working very hard to fix this big problem."

--

S.A. Miller
White House Correspondent
The Washington Times
Cell: 443-621-4008
Email: smiller@WashingtonTimes.com
Twitter: @samillertimes

The information contained in this electronic transmission is intended for the exclusive use of the individuals to whom it is addressed and may contain information that is privileged and confidential, the disclosure of which is prohibited by law. If the reader of this transmission is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. In addition, any unauthorized copying, disclosure or distribution of the material in this e-mail and any attachments is strictly forbidden.

Unsubscribe

From: Carole Wright
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Pyramid Lake's Tribal Newspaper
Date: Wednesday, January 03, 2018 8:38:39 PM
Attachments: Fourth Quarter.pdf
ATT00001.htm

Good evening Heather,

Attached is the last issue for this year for the Pyramid Lake Tribe.

And you are right, it is opinionated rather than straight news copy. I started working with the Nevada State Journal probably before you were born and my teachers were the reporters and editors on staff. It was their encouragement to “slant” my articles in favor of my Indian people because we had very few chances of letting our views be known. And basically that is what Indian press attempts to do—let our Indian voices talk to our Indian people. Non-Indians have their own media.

Thanks for your critique. I always appreciate knowing what other folks think.

Carole Wright

From: Swift, Heather
To: Daniel Jorjani
Subject: question: language re Mrs. Zinke
Date: Monday, May 22, 2017 6:14:05 PM

Dan - Meg told me you had some specific legal language regarding the spouse of the secretary sitting in meetings. Can you share that with me please?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Honorable Secretary Zinke

1. Please tell us about your hunting background and how you got started.
2. How old were you when you went on your first hunt; who took you and what did you hunt?
3. What kind of firearms did you have early on?
4. What kind did you buy when you were old enough to acquire your first firearm on your own?
5. What's your favorite hunt?
6. How often do you get to hunt now when you're back home in season?
7. Is there a particular species, or a specific place, you've wanted to hunt but haven't had a chance to yet? Perhaps, for example, duck hunting in Arkansas, pheasant hunting in South Dakota or hog hunting in Georgia.
8. What firearms do you own now?
9. Do your wife and children hunt if we may ask?
10. Favorite hunting memory?
11. Largest animal taken? Most exotic?
12. Do you anticipate any weekend excursions from DC this fall during hunting seasons?
13. What weapons did you use while a SEAL? How did they perform for you?
14. Did you have favorite weapon during your service in the Navy?
15. Your first day of work as Secretary...How did it feel to ride up to the headquarters of the Department of Interior on a horse?
16. Please tell us the ways that hunting supports conservation.

Thank you, Secretary Zinke, for your service to the United States of America. And all hunters appreciate your support of hunting in America.

From: Nachmany, Eli
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Quotes
Date: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 10:24:24 AM

Hey Heather,

I have a few quotes from Todd Willens. Please let me know which we should add in, and who we should bump.

"It is an honor and privilege to be appointed as Interior's Assistant Deputy Secretary," Willens said. "I thank Secretary Zinke for his confidence in my abilities to serve the Department and the Administration. I look forward to getting to work contributing to the implementation of the President's priorities for the Department and our Agencies, making America great again."

"Todd's dedication to New Mexico and the West made him a most effective manager of people and policies," Congressman Pearce said. "More than anything though, my wife Cynthia and I consider him a close friend. He has run my congressional operations for nearly seven years and been my top adviser on numerous items, delivering countless successes on my behalf. I congratulate Todd and the Administration on his appointment to this important position."

"The Tehama Colusa Canal Authority couldn't be more pleased with the selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary at the Department of the Interior," Jeff Sutton, General Manager of the Tehama Colusa Canal Authority, said. "A native of Northern California, Todd has a great deal of experience in Western water issues and, as a sportsman-conservationist, he has a long track record of delivering mutually beneficial policy outcomes for the benefit of fish, wildlife and water users throughout the Western United States. We look forward to working with Todd in his new capacity."

"The Boone and Crockett Club proudly supports Todd Willens' appointment," said Paul Phillips, co-chair of the Club's Policy Committee. "Mr. Willens is a conservationist who hunts. He has this personal passion and understands the ecological and economic benefits that follow for the public. His experience in the complexities of policy at the Department of the Interior will serve the country and conservation community all very well."

"The Civil War Trust strongly supports the appointment of Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior," James Lighthizer, President of the Civil War Trust, said. "In his previous service on Capitol Hill and in the Department of the Interior, Todd has been a champion of our national parks and historic battlefield sites. We are excited about the opportunity to partner with him to preserve America's battlefield parks as places of remembrance as well as heritage tourism destinations."

From: Swift, Heather
To: Hinson, Alex
Cc: Russell Newell; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Comms
Date: Friday, October 27, 2017 5:05:16 PM

in the reuters response only include the statement.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Oct 27, 2017 at 4:25 PM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR

WASHINGTON

10/27/2017

DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

TO: White House Cabinet Affairs Communications

FROM: Department of the Interior Communications Team

SUBJECT: Communications Update

Press Inquiries:

- Small inquiries and logistical inquiries.
- E&E News: (Maxine Joselow) --REQUEST—As I'm the regulations reporter for E&E News. I'm in charge of helping with our Q&A section, and I was wondering if you'd be able to set up a short phone interview with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's wife Lola Zinke for a Q&A. I understand Ms. Zinke is very busy, so the conversation could be as short as 15 minutes, and it could occur anytime in the next month or so. I'm just hoping to ask her about leading Sen. John Tester's campaign, traveling with her husband, and other matters related to her daily life and activities.--RESPONSE--

The Department does not facilitate Mrs. Zinke's schedule.

- Reuters: (Susan Heavey)—REQUEST-- Does the Interior Dept or the secretary have any comment on this (FEMA statement on Whitefish Energy contact)? Also, can you tell us what is on the agenda for the secretary's meeting with the president later today? —RESPONSE— Today, U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke issued the following statement in response to false reports alleging any ties to Whitefish Energy, a company which was contracted by PREPA and the Puerto Rican government. "I had absolutely nothing to do with Whitefish Energy receiving a contract in Puerto Rico. Any attempts by the dishonest media or political operatives to tie me to awarding or influencing any contract involving Whitefish are completely baseless. Only in elitist Washington, D.C., would being from a small town be considered a crime. "Neither myself nor anyone in my office has advocated for this company in anyway. After the initial contract was awarded, I was contacted by the company, on which I took no action. All records, which are being made available to appropriate officials, will prove no involvement. "I welcome any and all investigations into these allegations, and encourage the Interior Department's Inspector General to investigate this matter fully."

Top Stories

- Washington Post: Trump says he will shrink Bears Ears National Monument, a sacred tribal site in Utah
- Los Angeles Times: Trump plans to shrink two national monuments in Utah, senator says
- THE HILL: White House: Zinke told Trump he had 'no role' in Puerto Rico contract
- Washington Examiner: Ryan Zinke tells Trump he had no involvement in \$300 million Whitefish contract for Puerto Rico power grid

Top Issues and Accomplishments

- Interior continues to support all Hurricane Harvey, Hurricane Irma, Hurricane Maria, and Hurricane Nate efforts. All bureaus are executing their emergency plans and assisting in Hurricane relief.
- Today, Secretary Zinke met with POTUS.
- Next week, Secretary Zinke is out on personal leave.

###

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Swift, Heather
To: Hinson, Alex
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Comms
Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 4:01:02 PM

good

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 24, 2017 at 3:56 PM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR

WASHINGTON

10/24/2017

DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

TO: White House Cabinet Affairs Communications

FROM: Department of the Interior Communications Team

SUBJECT: Communications Update

Press Inquiries:

- Small inquiries and logistical inquiries.
- *Multiple Inquires (NBC-Gabe Gutierrez, NYT- Deborah Acosta, Reuters- Emily Flitter)—REQUEST-- Would someone from Secretary Zinke's office call me to discuss Whitefish Energy. Here are my questions: 1) Did Sec. Zinke play any role in securing the contract for Whitefish Energy to work in Puerto Rico? 2) Does Sec. Zinke know the company's chief executive, Andy Techmanski? 3) The Washington Post reported that one of Sec. Zinke's sons once worked a summer job at one of the company's construction sites. Is that correct? Also, confirming this statement provided to the Post: "The Secretary always politely listens when citizens and the small business community approach him with concerns and ideas. Neither the Secretary nor anyone in his office have taken any meetings or action on behalf of this company."—RESPONSE-- On background, Neither the Secretary nor anyone in his office have taken any meetings or action on behalf of this company. The Zinkes and the Techmanskis know each other because they both live in a small town (population 6,000) where everyone knows everyone and his son joined a friend who worked a summer job at one of their construction sites.

- CNN: (Rene Marsh)—REQUEST 1-- CNN is looking for information/clarity on Secretary Zinke and his familiarity with Andrew Techmanski, the CEO of Whitefish Energy. Have the two worked together before? In what capacity? How Does the Secretary know Techmanski? Has Techmanski or any of his business partners worked with Zinke on any projects either as Secretary or when Zinke was a member of congress? Did Zinke recommend Whitefish Energy for the contract to help restore Puerto Rico? Did Zinke have any influence or involvement either directly or indirectly with Whitefish securing the contract in Puerto Rico? Has this company or any of its leadership, including the CEO, had any political connections to Zinke or his wife during their political careers. Donations directly or indirectly? What was/is the Secretary's involvement in the overall recovery process for Puerto Rico?
—RESPONSE 1-- On background, Neither the Secretary nor anyone in his office have taken any meetings or action on behalf of this company. The Zinkes and the Techmanskis know each other because they both live in a small town (population 6,000) where everyone knows everyone and his son joined a friend who worked a summer job at one of their construction sites. REQUEST 2— Did the Secretary work with or communicate with Techmanskis in the aftermath of the hurricane? Were they in communication after the hurricane discussing any aspect of the recovery effort or anything else?—RESPONSE 2-- Background: No. The gentleman sent an email but there was not action taken on it (no reply, forward, discussion, etc). Not for a statement, just for your context - The secretary's phone number and email address have been published multiple times over the years so he gets a lot of emails/cold calls/letters.—REQUEST 3-- One additional question beyond the content of the email sent from Techmanski to Zinke. I understand in 2016, then-Congressman Rep. Zinke's office reached out to local officials in Montana about a Whitefish Energy project. Can you the Secretary provide you with insight on why he intervened? What sort of assistance did Zinke's office provide to Whitefish?—RESPONSE 3-- On background: That is not accurate. No intervention was taken by Zinke or his office. I'm understand a local field representative in the Congressional office was contacted by an employee of the business, the field rep listened politely took no action and referred him to the Senators' offices.
- E&E News: (Pamela King)—REQUEST-- I was wondering if Interior has any initial thoughts to share on the HOARD Act introduced today by Rep. Lowenthal: https://www.eenews.net/assets/2017/10/24/document_gw_03.pdf. The bill would require annual reports to Congress on APD data.—RESPONSE-- The Department has not taken an official position on the bill at this time. FYI - So far this year the BLM has decreased their processing time for APDs by an average of 46 days.
- E&E News: (Kellie Lunney)—REQUEST-- Politico ran this item today. Is this accurate? Will the secretary be on the Hill today to meet with members of the Natural Resources Cmte? Why the secrecy? ZINKE'S SUPER SECRET HILL HUDDLE - Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will meet this afternoon with House Natural Resources Committee members in a room typically reserved for issues involving a high-security clearance. Zinke will meet separately with committee Democrats and Republicans. Copies of invitations obtained by Huddle say he will be "raising a confidential matter" and only members and staff with top-secret level clearance may attend. Democratic Rep. Ruben Gallego told Huddle there's "nothing normal" about meeting with Zinke in such secure spot given his department has very little oversight over clandestine issues and said it's likely a way to limit participation since very few staffers on the panel have a security clearance.—RESPONSE-- I'm not at liberty to discuss conversations that may or may not be held in a secure location.

Top Stories

- New York Post: No-name firm with Zinke ties lands \$300M Puerto Rico power contract
- Politico: Zinke funneled millions to questionable PACs
- Missoulian: Whitefish firm's \$300 million repair contract in Puerto Rico raises questions
- Washington Examiner: Trump administration plans 'largest oil and gas lease sale in US history'

Top Issues and Accomplishments

- Interior continues to support all Hurricane Harvey, Hurricane Irma, Hurricane Maria, and Hurricane Nate efforts. All bureaus are executing their emergency plans and assisting in Hurricane relief.
- Today, Interior announced oil and gas lease sale #250. This is set to be the largest acreage sale in the history of the Gulf of Mexico. The press release can be seen HERE.
- Today, Secretary Zinke hosted two hour-long meetings with the House Natural Resources Committee Rs and Ds.
- Tonight, Secretary Zinke is joining conservative reporters for an off the record dinner.
- This week, Interior will release the Energy Burdens Report.
- This week, Interior will announce an oil and gas lease sale in Alaska at the National Petroleum Reserve.
- Thursday, Interior will host an event with VSOs to improve coordination with and services for veterans. The event will be open press.
- Friday, the Secretary will meet with POTUS.

###

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Newell, Russell
To: Hinson, Alex
Cc: Swift, Heather; Laura Rigas; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 10:38:29 AM

good, thank you Alex

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:36 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

*With edits from Russ

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

- DOI Statement: "Entrance fees have long been an important source of revenue used to improve the visitor experience and recreation opportunities in national parks. In fact entrance fees to parks predate the establishment of the National Park Service in 1916. For example, Mount Rainier National Park started charging an entrance fee in 1908. Factoring in inflation, the $5 entrance fee the park charged in 1914 would be the equivalent of a $123 entrance fee today. The proposed peak-season entrance fees at 17 parks were determined by analyzing historical NPS entrance fee and visitation data along with entrance fees at other park systems and family attractions. The proposed seasonal pricing structure is intended to balance the need to generate badly needed revenue for improvements to the aging national park infrastructure like roads, bridges, campgrounds, waterlines, and bathrooms while still providing good value to our visitors and maintaining existing prices or free entrance in the vast majority of national park sites. Only 118 of our 417 national park sites charge entrance fees -- the other 299 national parks do not charge an entrance fee. This proposal is just one potential tool in the toolbox. We are looking at a variety of options specifically intended to address the national park maintenance backlog and to improve the visitor experience at parks."

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.
- 80% of funds raised, from the fee increase, will go directly back to the specific park at which the permit was bought. The remaining 20% will be dispersed to parks that did not incur a fee increase.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year’s budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O’Lakes, lauded the announcement.”

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:33 AM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
this too:

"Entrance fees have long been an important source of revenue used to improve the visitor experience and recreation opportunities in national parks. In fact entrance fees to parks predate the establishment of the National Park Service in 1916. For example, Mount Rainier National Park started charging an entrance fee in 1908. Factoring in inflation, the $5 entrance fee the park charged in 1914 would be the equivalent of a $123 entrance fee today.

The proposed peak-season entrance fees at 17 parks were determined by analyzing historical NPS entrance fee and visitation data along with entrance fees at other park systems and family attractions. The proposed seasonal pricing structure is intended to balance the need to generate badly needed revenue for improvements to the aging national park infrastructure like roads, bridges, campgrounds, waterlines, and bathrooms while still providing good value to our visitors and maintaining existing prices or free entrance in the vast majority of national park sites. Only 118 of our 417 national park sites charge entrance fees -- the other 299 national parks do not charge an entrance fee.

This proposal is just one potential tool in the toolbox. We are looking at a variety of options specifically intended to address the national park maintenance backlog and to improve the visitor experience at parks."

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:28 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

"President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017."

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry’s voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites’ future.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional \$50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year’s budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O’Lakes, lauded the announcement.”

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

By Comparison: A per-person ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:24 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review. According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all."

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

"Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Swift, Heather
To: Hinson, Alex
Cc: Russell Newell; Laura Rigas; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 10:27:14 AM

By Comparison: A per-person ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:24 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review. According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all."

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

"Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Newell, Russell
To: Hinson, Alex
Cc: Swift, Heather; Laura Rigas; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 10:34:06 AM

this too:

"Entrance fees have long been an important source of revenue used to improve the visitor experience and recreation opportunities in national parks. In fact entrance fees to parks predate the establishment of the National Park Service in 1916. For example, Mount Rainier National Park started charging an entrance fee in 1908. Factoring in inflation, the $5 entrance fee the park charged in 1914 would be the equivalent of a $123 entrance fee today.

The proposed peak-season entrance fees at 17 parks were determined by analyzing historical NPS entrance fee and visitation data along with entrance fees at other park systems and family attractions. The proposed seasonal pricing structure is intended to balance the need to generate badly needed revenue for improvements to the aging national park infrastructure like roads, bridges, campgrounds, waterlines, and bathrooms while still providing good value to our visitors and maintaining existing prices or free entrance in the vast majority of national park sites. Only 118 of our 417 national park sites charge entrance fees -- the other 299 national parks do not charge an entrance fee.

This proposal is just one potential tool in the toolbox. We are looking at a variety of options specifically intended to address the national park maintenance backlog and to improve the visitor experience at parks."

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:28 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

"President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017."

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry’s voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites’ future.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year’s budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O’Lakes, lauded the announcement.”

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

By Comparison: A per-person ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

-

Heather Swift

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:24 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review. According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional \$50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Swift, Heather
To: Hinson, Alex
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 10:30:12 AM

gtg

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:28 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.

- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional \$50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement.”

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

By Comparison: A per-person ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:24 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017."

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

"U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review. According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season."

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

"Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke's family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke's campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump's Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits."

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico's power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI's San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory's efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island's power customers have had electricity restored."

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

"Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all."

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional \$50 million for Lake O dike

"Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary

Department of the Interior

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Hinson, Alex
To: Newell, Russell
Cc: Swift, Heather; Laura Rigas; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 10:37:05 AM

*With edits from Russ

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

- DOI Statement: "Entrance fees have long been an important source of revenue used to improve the visitor experience and recreation opportunities in national parks. In fact entrance fees to parks predate the establishment of the National Park Service in 1916. For example, Mount Rainier National Park started charging an entrance fee in 1908. Factoring in inflation, the $5 entrance fee the park charged in 1914 would be the equivalent of a $123 entrance fee today. The proposed peak-season entrance fees at 17 parks were determined by analyzing historical NPS entrance fee and visitation data along with entrance fees at other park systems and family attractions. The proposed seasonal pricing structure is intended to balance the need to generate badly needed revenue for improvements to the aging national park infrastructure like roads, bridges, campgrounds, waterlines, and bathrooms while still providing good value to our visitors and maintaining existing prices or free entrance in the vast majority of national park sites. Only 118 of our 417 national park sites charge entrance fees -- the other 299 national parks do not charge an entrance fee. This proposal is just one potential tool in the toolbox. We are looking at a variety of options specifically intended to address the national park maintenance backlog and to improve the visitor experience at parks."

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.
- 80% of funds raised, from the fee increase, will go directly back to the specific park at which the permit was bought. The remaining 20% will be dispersed to parks that did not incur a fee increase.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

"Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke's family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke's campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump's Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits."

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year’s budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O’Lakes, lauded the announcement.”

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:33 AM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
this too:

"Entrance fees have long been an important source of revenue used to improve the visitor experience and recreation opportunities in national parks. In fact entrance fees to parks predate the establishment of the National Park Service in 1916. For example, Mount Rainier National Park started charging an entrance fee in 1908. Factoring in inflation, the $5 entrance fee the park charged in 1914 would be the equivalent of a $123 entrance fee today.

The proposed peak-season entrance fees at 17 parks were determined by analyzing historical NPS entrance fee and visitation data along with entrance fees at other park systems and family attractions. The proposed seasonal pricing structure is intended to balance the need to generate badly needed revenue for improvements to the aging national park infrastructure like roads, bridges, campgrounds, waterlines, and bathrooms while still providing good value to our visitors and maintaining existing prices or free entrance in the vast majority of national park sites. Only 118 of our 417 national park sites charge entrance fees -- the other 299 national parks do not charge an entrance fee.

This proposal is just one potential tool in the toolbox. We are looking at a variety of options specifically intended to address the national park maintenance backlog and to improve the visitor experience at parks."

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:28 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

"President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017."

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

"U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season."

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.

- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement.”

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
By Comparison: A per-person ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:24 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017."

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

"U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review. According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season."

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

"Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke's family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke's campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump's Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits."

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico's power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI's San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory's efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island's power customers have had electricity restored."

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

"Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all."

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

"Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Nachmany, Eli
To: Hinson, Alex
Cc: Newell, Russell; Laura Rigas; Heather Swift
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Friday, November 03, 2017 10:55:54 AM

I'm good on the EITI talkers

--

Sincerely,
Eli Nachmany
Writer, U.S. Department of the Interior
Office of Communications

On Fri, Nov 3, 2017 at 10:54 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

E&E News: Interior official compares \$70 entry fee to cost of a movie

“Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt today defended a plan to charge $70 for a peak-season entry fee at 17 of the busiest national parks next year, saying it's roughly the same cost as taking his family to a 3-D movie. "It costs me about $68 and 90 cents for the two kids and my wife and I to go see a movie," Bernhardt said on NPR's 1A, a daily program and podcast produced by NPR member station WAMU. Bernhardt said park fees have not kept pace with inflation. And he said that higher fees would not keep most low-income Americans from visiting the parks, adding that a bigger problem for them is the cost of transportation and lodging associated with traveling to the parks.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

THE HILL: Senators spar over proposal to drill in Alaska wildlife refuge

“Lawmakers on Thursday fought over the possibility of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), the opening act of a legislative push to allow oil production in the Alaskan Arctic. Republicans from Alaska and on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee cast drilling in the refuge as an operation that can be done safely and one that would help the economies in both the state and the nation. But Democrats vowed to fight drilling there, saying the area is too ecologically important to allow industrial production.”

TALKING POINTS

- The Alaska 1002 area is a 1.5 million acre coastal plain in Alaska specifically set aside because of its natural resource potential. This set-aside was done by President Jimmy Carter. To develop energy there, however, Congress must give an authorization.

- The Department of the Interior wants two lease sales in the Alaska 1002 area over the next 10 years. Lease sales are estimated to generate $3.5 billion in bonus bids; with a 51-49 split between the U.S. Treasury and the State of Alaska, the Treasury would bring in $1.8 billion projected.
- Development in the Alaska 1002 area would follow all appropriate environmental laws and procedures.
 - Energy production occurs in the Kenai Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, as well as the NPRA (National Petroleum Reserve Alaska). The latter is also located on Alaska's North Slope on the coastal plain.
- Secretary Zinke visited the North Slope last spring with Chairman Murkowski and a bipartisan Senate delegation; there, he signed a Secretarial Order requiring the U.S. Geological Survey to update resource assessments for the Alaska 1002 area.
 - This effort is in line with President Trump's Executive Order 13783 on American energy independence.
- A 2009 report by the U.S. Geological Survey estimates that there are 10.35 billion barrels of oil available within the Alaska 1002 area, with 80-90% of that being economically recoverable at $43/barrel.

Bloomberg: U.S. to Exit Global Anti-Corruption Effort Aimed at Oil Cash

“The Trump administration said it will exit a global anti-corruption effort that compels oil, gas and mining companies to disclose the payments they give governments worldwide. The decision, announced in a letter Thursday to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, may undercut the effort that aims to give citizens and watchdogs in poor but mineral-rich nations details on how much their government leaders get in taxes, royalties and lease payments. With that information, they can ensure the money is spent on roads and schools, not squirreled away in foreign bank accounts.”

TALKING POINTS

- Transparency and good governance in extractive sectors in developing nations is a worthy goal, and remains an aspect of the United States' foreign policy objectives. At the same time, President Donald Trump's America-First agenda prioritizes American national security and American energy dominance. Going forward, our participation as a supporting member of EITI will continue as proof of our commitment to the advancement of democracy and freedom around the world, but it will also be judged on how it benefits our citizens.
- The notion of our U.S. government compelling American companies to publish their books, a component of full EITI implementation, runs counter to the pillars of the free market system that built our nation – this is a serious violation of American business' informational privacy. We must be vigilant in the defense of privacy and economic freedom for our own citizens and institutions first. In this spirit, the steps required to become an implementing member of EITI run counter to American law. In light of this impossible hurdle, our nation will not implement the initiative, but we will continue to support its goals in other nations around the world.

- The United States has led the global initiative in providing revenue related data and information in an interactive, open-source data portal and by regularly engaging with other implementing countries to share our best practices.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Oregon Public Broadcasting: The Teddy Roosevelt Legacy At Ryan Zinke's Interior Department

“The Department of the Interior is outlining steps aimed at increasing energy production on federal lands. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says boosting production of resources like oil and gas creates jobs and enhances the nation’s energy security. It’s another pro-industry headline for a secretary touting himself as not only an avid outdoorsman, but a follower of the conservation ideals of the 26th President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. If the manager of most of our federal lands is going find inspiration from someone, it would be hard to find a more appropriate muse.”

U.S. News and World Report: Groups Sue for Details on Trump Plan for National Monuments

“Environmentalists sued the administration of President Donald Trump on Thursday seeking to pry loose details of plans to shrink national monuments and marine areas and open protected areas to commercial fishing, energy extraction, logging and other industries. The lawsuit alleges the White House Council on Environmental Quality and the Interior Department illegally ignored Freedom of Information Act requests for documents related to the issue. Trump has said intends to shrink two monuments in Utah — Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante.”

###

On Fri, Nov 3, 2017 at 10:50 AM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
do we need to add some context or our points on EITI to the Bloomberg article?

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Fri, Nov 3, 2017 at 10:13 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: U.S. to Exit Global Anti-Corruption Effort Aimed at Oil Cash

“The Trump administration said it will exit a global anti-corruption effort that compels oil, gas and mining companies to disclose the payments they give governments worldwide. The decision, announced in a letter Thursday to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, may undercut the effort that aims to give citizens and watchdogs in poor but mineral-rich nations details on how much their government leaders get in taxes, royalties and lease payments. With that information, they can ensure the money is spent on roads and schools, not squirreled away in foreign bank accounts.”

E&E News: Interior official compares \$70 entry fee to cost of a movie

“Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt today defended a plan to charge $70 for a peak-season entry fee at 17 of the busiest national parks next year, saying it's roughly the same cost as taking his family to a 3-D movie. "It costs me about $68 and 90 cents for the two kids and my wife and I to go see a movie," Bernhardt said on NPR's 1A, a daily program and podcast produced by NPR member station WAMU. Bernhardt said park fees have not kept pace with inflation. And he said that higher fees would not keep most low-income Americans from visiting the parks, adding that a bigger problem for them is the cost of transportation and lodging associated with traveling to the parks.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

THE HILL: Senators spar over proposal to drill in Alaska wildlife refuge

“Lawmakers on Thursday fought over the possibility of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), the opening act of a legislative push to allow oil production in the Alaskan Arctic. Republicans from Alaska and on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee cast drilling in the refuge as an operation that can be done safely and one that would help the economies in both the state and the nation. But Democrats vowed to fight drilling there, saying the area is too ecologically important to allow industrial production.”

- The Alaska 1002 area is a 1.5 million acre coastal plain in Alaska specifically set aside because of its natural resource potential. This set-aside was done by President Jimmy Carter. To develop energy there, however, Congress must give an authorization.
- The Department of the Interior wants two lease sales in the Alaska 1002 area over the next 10 years. Lease sales are estimated to generate $3.5

billion in bonus bids; with a 51-49 split between the U.S. Treasury and the State of Alaska, the Treasury would bring in $1.8 billion projected.

- Development in the Alaska 1002 area would follow all appropriate environmental laws and procedures.
 - Energy production occurs in the Kenai Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, as well as the NPRA (National Petroleum Reserve Alaska). The latter is also located on Alaska's North Slope on the coastal plain.
- Secretary Zinke visited the North Slope last spring with Chairman Murkowski and a bipartisan Senate delegation; there, he signed a Secretarial Order requiring the U.S. Geological Survey to update resource assessments for the Alaska 1002 area.
 - This effort is in line with President Trump's Executive Order 13783 on American energy independence.
- A 2009 report by the U.S. Geological Survey estimates that there are 10.35 billion barrels of oil available within the Alaska 1002 area, with 80-90% of that being economically recoverable at $43/barrel.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Oregon Public Broadcasting: The Teddy Roosevelt Legacy At Ryan Zinke's Interior Department

"The Department of the Interior is outlining steps aimed at increasing energy production on federal lands. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says boosting production of resources like oil and gas creates jobs and enhances the nation's energy security. It's another pro-industry headline for a secretary touting himself as not only an avid outdoorsman, but a follower of the conservation ideals of the 26th President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. If the manager of most of our federal lands is going find inspiration from someone, it would be hard to find a more appropriate muse."

U.S. News and World Report: Groups Sue for Details on Trump Plan for National Monuments

"Environmentalists sued the administration of President Donald Trump on Thursday seeking to pry loose details of plans to shrink national monuments and marine areas and open protected areas to commercial fishing, energy extraction, logging and other industries. The lawsuit alleges the White House Council on Environmental Quality and the Interior Department illegally ignored Freedom of Information Act requests for documents related to the issue. Trump has said intends to shrink two monuments in Utah — Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante."

###

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Newell, Russell
To: Hinson, Alex
Cc: Laura Rigas; Heather Swift; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Friday, November 03, 2017 10:50:14 AM

do we need to add some context or our points on EITI to the Bloomberg article?

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Fri, Nov 3, 2017 at 10:13 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: U.S. to Exit Global Anti-Corruption Effort Aimed at Oil Cash

“The Trump administration said it will exit a global anti-corruption effort that compels oil, gas and mining companies to disclose the payments they give governments worldwide. The decision, announced in a letter Thursday to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, may undercut the effort that aims to give citizens and watchdogs in poor but mineral-rich nations details on how much their government leaders get in taxes, royalties and lease payments. With that information, they can ensure the money is spent on roads and schools, not squirreled away in foreign bank accounts.”

E&E News: Interior official compares \$70 entry fee to cost of a movie

“Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt today defended a plan to charge $70 for a peak-season entry fee at 17 of the busiest national parks next year, saying it's roughly the same cost as taking his family to a 3-D movie. "It costs me about $68 and 90 cents for the two kids and my wife and I to go see a movie," Bernhardt said on NPR's 1A, a daily program and podcast produced by NPR member station WAMU. Bernhardt said park fees have not kept pace with inflation. And he said that higher fees would not keep most low-income Americans from visiting the parks, adding that a bigger problem for them is the cost of transportation and lodging associated with traveling to the parks.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

THE HILL: Senators spar over proposal to drill in Alaska wildlife refuge

“Lawmakers on Thursday fought over the possibility of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), the opening act of a legislative push to allow oil production in the Alaskan Arctic. Republicans from Alaska and on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee cast drilling in the refuge as an operation that can be done safely and one that would help the economies in both the state and the nation. But Democrats vowed to fight drilling there, saying the area is too ecologically important to allow industrial production.”

- The Alaska 1002 area is a 1.5 million acre coastal plain in Alaska specifically set aside because of its natural resource potential. This set-aside was done by President Jimmy Carter. To develop energy there, however, Congress must give an authorization.
- The Department of the Interior wants two lease sales in the Alaska 1002 area over the next 10 years. Lease sales are estimated to generate $3.5 billion in bonus bids; with a 51-49 split between the U.S. Treasury and the State of Alaska, the Treasury would bring in $1.8 billion projected.
- Development in the Alaska 1002 area would follow all appropriate environmental laws and procedures.
 - Energy production occurs in the Kenai Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, as well as the NPRA (National Petroleum Reserve Alaska). The latter is also located on Alaska’s North Slope on the coastal plain.
- Secretary Zinke visited the North Slope last spring with Chairman Murkowski and a bipartisan Senate delegation; there, he signed a Secretarial Order requiring the U.S. Geological Survey to update resource assessments for the Alaska 1002 area.
 - This effort is in line with President Trump’s Executive Order 13783 on American energy independence.
- A 2009 report by the U.S. Geological Survey estimates that there are 10.35 billion barrels of oil available within the Alaska 1002 area, with 80-90% of that being economically recoverable at $43/barrel.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Oregon Public Broadcasting: The Teddy Roosevelt Legacy At Ryan Zinke’s Interior Department

“The Department of the Interior is outlining steps aimed at increasing energy production on federal lands. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says boosting production of resources like oil and gas creates jobs and enhances the nation’s energy security. It’s another pro-industry headline for a secretary touting himself as not only an avid outdoorsman, but a follower of the conservation ideals of the 26th President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. If the manager of most of our federal lands is going to find inspiration from someone, it would be hard to find a more appropriate muse.”

U.S. News and World Report: Groups Sue for Details on Trump Plan for National

Monuments

“Environmentalists sued the administration of President Donald Trump on Thursday seeking to pry loose details of plans to shrink national monuments and marine areas and open protected areas to commercial fishing, energy extraction, logging and other industries. The lawsuit alleges the White House Council on Environmental Quality and the Interior Department illegally ignored Freedom of Information Act requests for documents related to the issue. Trump has said intends to shrink two monuments in Utah — Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante.”

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Hinson, Alex
To: Newell, Russell
Cc: Laura Rigas; Heather Swift; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Friday, November 03, 2017 10:54:59 AM

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

E&E News: Interior official compares \$70 entry fee to cost of a movie

“Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt today defended a plan to charge $70 for a peak-season entry fee at 17 of the busiest national parks next year, saying it's roughly the same cost as taking his family to a 3-D movie. "It costs me about $68 and 90 cents for the two kids and my wife and I to go see a movie," Bernhardt said on NPR's IA, a daily program and podcast produced by NPR member station WAMU. Bernhardt said park fees have not kept pace with inflation. And he said that higher fees would not keep most low-income Americans from visiting the parks, adding that a bigger problem for them is the cost of transportation and lodging associated with traveling to the parks.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

THE HILL: Senators spar over proposal to drill in Alaska wildlife refuge

“Lawmakers on Thursday fought over the possibility of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), the opening act of a legislative push to allow oil production in the Alaskan Arctic. Republicans from Alaska and on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee cast drilling in the refuge as an operation that can be done safely and one that would help the economies in both the state and the nation. But Democrats vowed to fight drilling there, saying the area is too ecologically important to allow industrial production.”

TALKING POINTS

- The Alaska 1002 area is a 1.5 million acre coastal plain in Alaska specifically set aside because of its natural resource potential. This set-aside was done by President Jimmy Carter. To develop energy there, however, Congress must give an authorization.
- The Department of the Interior wants two lease sales in the Alaska 1002 area over the next 10 years. Lease sales are estimated to generate $3.5 billion in bonus bids; with a 51-49 split between the U.S. Treasury and the State of Alaska, the Treasury would bring in $1.8 billion projected.
- Development in the Alaska 1002 area would follow all appropriate environmental laws and procedures.
 - Energy production occurs in the Kenai Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, as well as the NPRA (National Petroleum Reserve Alaska). The latter is also located on Alaska's North Slope on the coastal plain.

- Secretary Zinke visited the North Slope last spring with Chairman Murkowski and a bipartisan Senate delegation; there, he signed a Secretarial Order requiring the U.S. Geological Survey to update resource assessments for the Alaska 1002 area.
 - This effort is in line with President Trump's Executive Order 13783 on American energy independence.
- A 2009 report by the U.S. Geological Survey estimates that there are 10.35 billion barrels of oil available within the Alaska 1002 area, with 80-90% of that being economically recoverable at $43/barrel.

Bloomberg: U.S. to Exit Global Anti-Corruption Effort Aimed at Oil Cash

“The Trump administration said it will exit a global anti-corruption effort that compels oil, gas and mining companies to disclose the payments they give governments worldwide. The decision, announced in a letter Thursday to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, may undercut the effort that aims to give citizens and watchdogs in poor but mineral-rich nations details on how much their government leaders get in taxes, royalties and lease payments. With that information, they can ensure the money is spent on roads and schools, not squirreled away in foreign bank accounts.”

TALKING POINTS

- Transparency and good governance in extractive sectors in developing nations is a worthy goal, and remains an aspect of the United States' foreign policy objectives. At the same time, President Donald Trump's America-First agenda prioritizes American national security and American energy dominance. Going forward, our participation as a supporting member of EITI will continue as proof of our commitment to the advancement of democracy and freedom around the world, but it will also be judged on how it benefits our citizens.
- The notion of our U.S. government compelling American companies to publish their books, a component of full EITI implementation, runs counter to the pillars of the free market system that built our nation – this is a serious violation of American business' informational privacy. We must be vigilant in the defense of privacy and economic freedom for our own citizens and institutions first. In this spirit, the steps required to become an implementing member of EITI run counter to American law. In light of this impossible hurdle, our nation will not implement the initiative, but we will continue to support its goals in other nations around the world.
- The United States has led the global initiative in providing revenue related data and information in an interactive, open-source data portal and by regularly engaging with other implementing countries to share our best practices.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Oregon Public Broadcasting: The Teddy Roosevelt Legacy At Ryan Zinke's Interior Department

“The Department of the Interior is outlining steps aimed at increasing energy production on federal lands. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says boosting production of resources like oil and gas creates jobs and enhances the nation’s energy security. It’s another pro-industry headline for a secretary touting himself as not only an avid outdoorsman, but a follower of the conservation ideals of the 26th President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. If the manager of most of our federal lands is going find inspiration from someone, it would be hard to find a more appropriate muse.”

U.S. News and World Report: Groups Sue for Details on Trump Plan for National Monuments

“Environmentalists sued the administration of President Donald Trump on Thursday seeking to pry loose details of plans to shrink national monuments and marine areas and open protected areas to commercial fishing, energy extraction, logging and other industries. The lawsuit alleges the White House Council on Environmental Quality and the Interior Department illegally ignored Freedom of Information Act requests for documents related to the issue. Trump has said intends to shrink two monuments in Utah — Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante.”

###

On Fri, Nov 3, 2017 at 10:50 AM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
do we need to add some context or our points on EITI to the Bloomberg article?

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Fri, Nov 3, 2017 at 10:13 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: U.S. to Exit Global Anti-Corruption Effort Aimed at Oil Cash

“The Trump administration said it will exit a global anti-corruption effort that compels oil, gas and mining companies to disclose the payments they give governments worldwide. The decision, announced in a letter Thursday to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, may undercut the effort that aims to give citizens and watchdogs in poor but mineral-rich nations details on how much their government leaders get in taxes, royalties and lease payments. With that information, they can ensure the money is spent on roads and schools, not squirreled away in foreign bank accounts.”

E&E News: Interior official compares $70 entry fee to cost of a movie

“Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt today defended a plan to charge $70 for a peak-season entry fee at 17 of the busiest national parks next year, saying it's roughly the same cost as taking his family to a 3-D movie. "It costs me about $68 and 90 cents for the two kids and my wife and I to go see a movie," Bernhardt said on NPR's 1A, a daily program and podcast produced by NPR member station WAMU. Bernhardt said park fees have not kept pace with inflation. And he said that higher fees would not keep most low-income Americans from visiting the parks, adding that a bigger problem for them is the cost of transportation and lodging associated with traveling to the parks.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

THE HILL: Senators spar over proposal to drill in Alaska wildlife refuge

“Lawmakers on Thursday fought over the possibility of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), the opening act of a legislative push to allow oil production in the Alaskan Arctic. Republicans from Alaska and on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee cast drilling in the refuge as an operation that can be done safely and one that would help the economies in both the state and the nation. But Democrats vowed to fight drilling there, saying the area is too ecologically important to allow industrial production.”

- The Alaska 1002 area is a 1.5 million acre coastal plain in Alaska specifically set aside because of its natural resource potential. This set-aside was done by President Jimmy Carter. To develop energy there, however, Congress must give an authorization.
- The Department of the Interior wants two lease sales in the Alaska 1002 area over the next 10 years. Lease sales are estimated to generate $3.5 billion in bonus bids; with a 51-49 split between the U.S. Treasury and the State of Alaska, the Treasury would bring in $1.8 billion projected.
- Development in the Alaska 1002 area would follow all appropriate environmental laws and procedures.
 - Energy production occurs in the Kenai Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, as well as the NPRA (National Petroleum Reserve Alaska). The latter is also located on Alaska’s North Slope on the coastal plain.
- Secretary Zinke visited the North Slope last spring with Chairman Murkowski and a bipartisan Senate delegation; there, he signed a Secretarial Order requiring the U.S. Geological Survey to update resource assessments for the Alaska 1002 area.

- This effort is in line with President Trump’s Executive Order 13783 on American energy independence.
- A 2009 report by the U.S. Geological Survey estimates that there are 10.35 billion barrels of oil available within the Alaska 1002 area, with 80-90% of that being economically recoverable at $43/barrel.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Oregon Public Broadcasting: The Teddy Roosevelt Legacy At Ryan Zinke’s Interior Department

“The Department of the Interior is outlining steps aimed at increasing energy production on federal lands. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says boosting production of resources like oil and gas creates jobs and enhances the nation’s energy security. It’s another pro-industry headline for a secretary touting himself as not only an avid outdoorsman, but a follower of the conservation ideals of the 26th President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. If the manager of most of our federal lands is going find inspiration from someone, it would be hard to find a more appropriate muse.”

U.S. News and World Report: Groups Sue for Details on Trump Plan for National Monuments

“Environmentalists sued the administration of President Donald Trump on Thursday seeking to pry loose details of plans to shrink national monuments and marine areas and open protected areas to commercial fishing, energy extraction, logging and other industries. The lawsuit alleges the White House Council on Environmental Quality and the Interior Department illegally ignored Freedom of Information Act requests for documents related to the issue. Trump has said intends to shrink two monuments in Utah — Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante.”

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Hinson, Alex
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Russell Newell; Laura Rigas; Eli Nachmany
Subject: Re: *DRAFT DOI Daily Report
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 10:28:50 AM

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

“President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017.”

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.

According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry's voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites' future.
- By Comparison: A ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory’s efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island’s power customers have had electricity restored.”

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

“Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional \$50 million for Lake O dike

“Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

By Comparison: A per-person ticket at Walt Disney World is $119 per person, peak season. A family of four will pay $476 for one day. Yellowstone, Yosemite or the other premier national parks propose to raise the fee to $70 per car for a 7-day permit - $10 a day, $2.50 a person for a family of four.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 31, 2017 at 10:24 AM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

NEWS TO SHARE:

Bloomberg: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins on Halloween Eve

"President Donald Trump dressed up as himself, complete with his trademark red tie, for his first Halloween in the White House. Trump and first lady Melania Trump greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve. Children from more than 20 schools in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia attended the festivities on the South Lawn, along with military families and members of unspecified community organizations. Spooky music played over loudspeakers. Machines cranked out fog. Pumpkins carved with the likenesses of past presidents decorated the south entrance of the White House. Black spiders hung from webs spun between the portico's columns. A sign over an awning proclaimed "Halloween at the White House 2017."

CORRECTING THE RECORD:

Augusta Free Press \(VA\): Kaine, colleagues urge Trump to rescind proposed

national park fee increase

“U.S. Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) joined Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA) and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review. According to the proposal, Shenandoah National Park visitor fees would increase dramatically from $25 to $70 per vehicle during peak season.”

TALKING POINTS

- Secretary Zinke has spoken at length about addressing the deferred maintenance problem at our National Parks, and this will require a new approach.
- Our parks face an $11 billion maintenance backlog and need serious improvements to infrastructure if they are to accommodate visitors.
- The higher fees would go directly into funding these infrastructure improvements; in lieu of indiscriminately imposing a tax on the American people, the fee increase represents a free market solution that relies on the citizenry’s voluntary use of the parks to fund the sites’ future.

OTHER TOP STORIES:

Politico: Watchdog urges probe of whether Zinke campaign benefited friend, family

“Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional campaign committee bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount, a watchdog group said in a Federal Election Commission complaint that alleges an illegal scheme to convert political donations into personal cash. The June RV sale is one of several transactions the Campaign Legal Center says may have provided illegal benefits to Zinke’s family or friends. The group also cites hotel stays in the Virgin Islands and New York that Zinke’s campaign paid for after the Montana Republican was tapped to join then-President-elect Donald Trump’s Cabinet, as well as catering expenses the campaign incurred after Zinke was confirmed. CLC also says in the complaint that Zinke may have relied on a joint fundraising committee to allow donors to give money to his campaign above federal contribution limits.”

Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract

“The Federal Bureau of Investigation is investigating a decision by Puerto Rico’s power authority to award a $300 million contract to a tiny Montana energy firm to rebuild electrical infrastructure damaged in Hurricane Maria, according to people familiar with the matter. Agents from the FBI’s San Juan field office are looking into circumstances surrounding the deal that the public power monopoly known as Prepa signed with Whitefish Energy Holdings LLC, according to the people familiar with the matter. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló canceled the contract Sunday, saying it had become a distraction from the U.S. territory's efforts to restore the devastated grid. Only 30% of the island's power customers have had electricity restored."

Bloomberg: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely to Be Bust for GOP Budget

"Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment. Data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million -- from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calve and polar bears roam. Oil companies may be scared away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain. Even if they aren't, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all."

Palm Beach Post: Gov. Scott proposes additional $50 million for Lake O dike

"Gov. Rick Scott is proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee. The announcement this morning comes as the lake once again tops 17 feet above sea level, a depth that causes concerns about the integrity of the aging structure. Scott said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year's budget to kick-start repairs. Florida Senate President Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and House Speaker Richard Corcoran, R-Land O'Lakes, lauded the announcement."

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Heather Swift
To: Hinson, Alex
Subject: Re: News Alert Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke vows to end culture of harassment and intimidation in Park Service
Date: Friday, October 13, 2017 7:53:43 PM

Outlet?

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 13, 2017, at 12:52 PM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke vows to end culture of harassment and intimidation in Park Service

Louis Sahagun

October 13, 2017

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Friday announced a plan to combat sexual harassment, bullying and intimidation of employees within America's national parks system and to hold managers accountable if inappropriate behavior is ignored.

The plan aims to change an embedded culture that Zinke said has allowed senior officials to downplay or stonewall complaints from mostly female workers of being physically threatened, propositioned for sex and inappropriately touched.

"Under my leadership we're going to hold people accountable," Zinke announced during a visit to the National Park Service's Grand Canyon headquarters. "We're also fixing the problem of victims being afraid of retaliation or inaction by codifying the right of victims to report abuse to any manager at any location across the service, and by bringing on an independent investigative partner."

Zinke's announcement comes as the entertainment industry and other businesses are roiled by resignations of high-profile figures in harassment scandals, such as movie titan Harvey Weinstein and Uber Technologies Chief Executive Officer Travis Kalanick, who allegedly fostered a "men's club" work environment that tolerated abuse and exploitation of women.

The announcement follows a series of investigations and congressional hearings into allegations of hostile work environments and sordid incidents that a year ago led to the resignations of several senior Park Service officials, including the superintendents of Yosemite and Grand Canyon.

Zinke's plan will strengthen the agency's ability to investigate and address harassment complaints by adding 14 employees to its labor relations and ethics staffs. It will also expand training to support harassment prevention efforts.

The results of a recent survey of about half of all Park Service employees underlined the problem: The agency has failed to shield its employees from work environments that, in some cases, included routine groping.

The survey found that about 10% of those surveyed reported experiencing sexual harassment in the last 12 months. About 38% of employees reported experiencing some form of harassment over the same time period.

Stories of Park Service employees being preyed upon by men in positions of authority, agency critics say, have circulated for years within the agency that likes to project a lofty image of itself as caretaker of America's natural treasures.

Until recently, critics say, most harassment cases were handled internally, with managers sweeping the allegations under the rug, or handing down minimal penalties.

"This is the fourth declaration of zero tolerance of sexual harassment we've heard from the Interior Department in the past three years alone," Jeff Ruch, executive director of the advocacy group Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility. "The problem is that people at the highest levels never wind up facing consequences. Instead, they tend to kick troublemakers upstairs, or offer them the option of resignation."

For example, Ruch's group cites a female staffer's complaints of unwanted hugs, lingering handshakes and inappropriate comments from Jorge Acevedo, superintendent of De Soto National Memorial in Florida. The complaints prompted an Interior Office of Inspector General investigation.

Acevedo, whom the woman also accused of lying prone on her desk while she tried to work, was transferred in April to a new position as manager of a complex of small parks in Alabama at his previous salary. He also received a $1,000 performance bonus, according to an Interior Office of Inspector General report the advocacy group obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.

"If, as the Park Service claims there is zero tolerance, then why aren't these firing offenses?" Ruch said.

The harassment allegations erupted last year, after the disclosure of an inspector general's investigation prompted by a 2014 letter to then Interior Secretary Sally Jewell from 13 current and former female employees. The women alleged that their complaints — of being threatened and inappropriately touched and photographed by boatmen in charge of educational floats along the Colorado River — had not been addressed.

Congressional hearings led to the removal of David Uberuaga, superintendent of Grand Canyon National Park, and Myrna Palfrey, superintendent of Canaveral National Seashore in Florida, for their failure to appropriately handle such accusations.

The hearings also prompted Don Neubacher to retire in 2016 as superintendent of Yosemite National Park, where employees had complained of a systematic failure to investigate and address allegations of harassment at the California landmark renowned for its majestic waterfalls, granite ridges and serene valleys.

A few weeks later, his wife, Patty Neubacher, deputy regional manager for the Park Service's Pacific West Region, which covers 56 national parks in six states, stepped down amid allegations that she used her position to protect her husband during the harassment scandal.

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Nachmany, Eli
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: News Alert Trump wished country 'Merry Christmas' instead of 'Happy Holidays' at tree lighting, making good on campaign promise
Date: Friday, December 01, 2017 9:27:59 AM

locking down the Canadian vote!

--

Sincerely,
Eli Nachmany
Writer, U.S. Department of the Interior
Office of Communications

On Fri, Dec 1, 2017 at 9:23 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
if only it was an american paper :-P

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Dec 1, 2017 at 9:21 AM, Nachmany, Eli <eli_nachmany@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
The Toronto Star: Trump wished country 'Merry Christmas' instead of 'Happy Holidays' at tree lighting, making good on campaign promise
Jill Colvin
December 1, 2017

WASHINGTON—Ring in the holidays for the first time from Washington, U.S. President Donald Trump lit the National Christmas Tree Thursday evening, wishing the country “a Merry Christmas” — as he vowed to do during his campaign.

Taking part in the annual ritual, Trump counted down from 10 before his wife, Melania, pushed a button to set the tree aglow with golden lights and silver stars.

“Today’s a day that I’ve been looking very much forward to all year long,” said Trump. “And now, as the president of the United States, it’s my tremendous honour to finally wish America and the world a very merry Christmas.”

During his campaign, Trump had promised that, when he was elected, people would be saying “Merry Christmas again,” a reference to what he characterized as the country’s obsession with political correctness. In Trump’s view, the move toward the use of the more inclusive “happy holidays” phrase minimized the Christian celebration.

Trump was introduced by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who called Trump “a man who loves our parks, loves our military, and loves our country. The man who brought ‘Merry Christmas’ back to our nation’s capital — and you did, sir.”

Speaking from behind a bullet-proof glass enclosure, Trump also bragged about the mild weather, which hovered in the mid-50s, and compared himself to President Ulysses S. Grant, who signed legislation making Christmas a federal holiday.

“I sort of feel we’re doing that again,” he said to an audience that included many of his family members.

The program, which will air Monday on the Hallmark Channel, was hosted by Kathie Lee Gifford and actor Dean Cain and featured performances by the Beach Boys, Jack Wagner, Wynonna Judd, Craig Campbell and others. It was a less high-profile lineup than last year, when the performers included Kelly Clarkson, Garth Brooks and Trisha Yearwood, Marc Anthony, Yolanda Adams, The Lumineers, James Taylor and Chance the Rapper.

This year marks the 95th annual National Christmas Tree Lighting. The tradition began in 1923 with President Calvin Coolidge and takes place in President’s Park, just south of the White House.

--

Sincerely,
Eli Nachmany
Writer, U.S. Department of the Interior
Office of Communications

From: Davis, Natalie
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: 4th Invites
Date: Monday, June 19, 2017 4:20:31 PM

He approved and I just sent out email.

On Mon, Jun 19, 2017 at 2:51 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
This is just for Zinke's consideration: Bill Kenyon (he would remember Bill as Fred Davis' partner) and his wife and 13 year old son. Email address is (b) (6)

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jun 19, 2017 at 2:48 PM, Davis, Natalie <natalie_davis@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Hi Heather,

Can you send me the names and emails of the people that need to be invited?

Thanks!

--

Natalie Davis, Special Assistant
Immediate Office of the Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
202.208.4928

--

Natalie Davis, Special Assistant
Immediate Office of the Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
202.208.4928

From: Swift, Heather
To: Adams, Nathan
Cc: Laura Rigas; Bergling, Timothy; Russell Newell; Alex Hinson; Nachmany, Eli; Larry Gillick; Rebecca Matulka
Subject: Re: 2018 Holiday Video
Date: Tuesday, December 19, 2017 3:19:07 PM

GOOD HERE

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Dec 19, 2017 at 2:43 PM, Adams, Nathan <nathan_adams@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Something like...

To the entire Interior family, Merry Christmas, Happy Hanukkah and Happy Holidays.
However you celebrate the season, I hope you spend it with those nearest to your heart.

Happy New Year,
Secretary Zinke, Lolita and Ragnar

On Tue, Dec 19, 2017 at 2:28 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I'd like it to be. Can someone pls write a quick intro? Thx.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Dec 19, 2017, at 2:25 PM, Adams, Nathan <nathan_adams@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Will this be sent to all employees from the Secretary's address like the Thanksgiving video? Is anyone writing the text for the message?

Thanks,
Nate

On Tue, Dec 19, 2017 at 2:16 PM, Bergling, Timothy <timothy_bergling@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

EDIT: Re-crops frame slightly higher

<http://youtu.be/UdFNdArvQE8>

Suggest we send this out Wednesday am before noon to catch the "going out of town" crowd

tb

--
Nate Adams
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
202-208-2060

--
Nate Adams
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
202-208-2060

From: Eilperin, Juliet
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: RE: a question related to Secretary Zinke's Channel Islands trip
Date: Monday, December 11, 2017 12:25:29 PM

Also, I had one other minor question related to this, which I wanted to clarify: it has been reported that Beatrice Walder is the Secretary's aunt, but my understanding is that she's Mrs. Zinke's aunt. Can you just confirm that my understanding is correct?
Thanks, Juliet

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, December 11, 2017 9:07 AM
To: Eilperin, Juliet <Juliet.Eilperin@washpost.com>
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: a question related to Secretary Zinke's Channel Islands trip

What do you mean by this -> especially since in one of the emails, the NPS superintendent seems to indicate that he had heard about Zinke's plans to address the conservative group, and may have extended the invitation to visit after learning about this commitment.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Dec 11, 2017 at 9:05 AM, Eilperin, Juliet <Juliet.Eilperin@washpost.com> wrote:

Dear Press Team,

An advocacy group has shared some documents from a FOIA request that concern the Secretary's April 17-18 trip to the Channel Island. The documents show that the federal government incurred extra government expense of more than $2,000 because the boat normally sails from Ventura Harbor. The reason for the change in harbor appears to be due to the fact that the Secretary chose to address the Young America's Foundation town hall in Santa Barbara.

I plan to post an item of this today (most likely, in the late morning), but I wanted to check in with you all first, especially since in one of the emails, the NPS superintendent seems to indicate that he had heard about Zinke's plans to address the conservative group, and may have extended the invitation to visit after learning about this commitment. So I would like a little more clarity on that.

Thanks so much. I am reachable all of the usual ways, below.
Juliet

Juliet Eilperin
Senior National Affairs Correspondent

Washington Post

Juliet.eilperin@washpost.com

(O) 202-334-7774

(C) 202-302-3663

@eilperin

From: Swift, Heather
To: Anzelmo-Sarles, Jenny
Cc: Shelby Galvin
Subject: Re: access and blankets
Date: Friday, November 24, 2017 2:33:52 PM

You're amazing! Thank you sooooo much! Mom and dad will be very happy (and warm).

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Nov 24, 2017 at 1:55 PM, Anzelmo-Sarles, Jenny <jenny_anzelmo-sarles@nps.gov> wrote:

Heather,
Adding my colleague Shelby to this note. She can come swing by your office Tuesday or Wednesday to pick up blankets. We will hold them in our on-site office. What room number are you?

We'll also be able to assist with a golf cart escort for the guest we discussed. Please let me know what time he'll arrive. Please have him go to the press check-in tent (its green with an arrowhead on it) across from C st on 17th. After he goes through security we'll be able to escort him and his wife around to their seats.

Thanks,
Jenny

Jenny Anzelmo-Sarles
Spokesperson
National Park Service
National Capital Region

Office: (202) 619-7177
Cell: (307) 690-2355

The National Park Service cares for special places saved by the American people so that all may experience our heritage.

EXPERIENCE YOUR AMERICA ®

From: Swift, Heather
To: Loeb, Stephanie
Cc: Russell Newell
Subject: Re: Announce the Secretary's participation?
Date: Wednesday, September 06, 2017 1:53:27 PM

Hi Stephanie, yes, you can announce the Secretary's participation. Can you please send me a draft?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Sep 6, 2017 at 12:43 PM, Loeb, Stephanie <stephanie_loeb@nps.gov> wrote:

Thank you, Caroline, I'll get you those details as soon as I can.

Heather, any update on the announcement?

Stephanie Loeb
Regional Visual Information Specialist
Office of External Affairs
National Park Service - Northeast Region
Office: 215-597-4942 | Cell: 215-268-2614

I am a proud graduate of the GOAL Leadership Academy. Ask me about the program!

On Wed, Sep 6, 2017 at 10:28 AM, Boulton, Caroline <caroline_boulton@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Stephanie,

Bumping for comms to respond regarding the release.

On the other issues: the Secretary's wife (Mrs. Lolita Zinke) will be attending. We do not have lunch plans so provisioning lunch would be great! Just let us know the usual ethics information so that we can submit it (cost, who paid for it).

Best,
Caroline

On Tue, Sep 5, 2017 at 11:35 AM, Loeb, Stephanie <stephanie_loeb@nps.gov> wrote:

Good morning, Heather:

Following up on this request and also wanted to check in on a couple other issues for the 10th.

Will the Secretary have any family attending so that we can reserve seating?

What are the Secretary's plans for lunch? Our team can provision lunch for him, we just need to know.

Thank you,
Stephanie

Stephanie Loeb
Regional Visual Information Specialist
Office of External Affairs
National Park Service - Northeast Region
Office: 215-597-4942 | Cell: 215-268-2614

I am a proud graduate of the GOAL Leadership Academy. Ask me about the program!

On Thu, Aug 31, 2017 at 12:53 PM, Loeb, Stephanie <stephanie_loeb@nps.gov> wrote:
Thank you for the introduction, Steve.

Greetings team. I understand the hold on announcing the Secretary's participation. In years past the NPS and DOI issued a joint media advisory announcing the Secretary as keynote along with other speakers, and media RSVP information.

Is this something we can work together on this year? When would be an optimal time to distribute?

Thank you,
Stephanie

Stephanie Loeb
Regional Visual Information Specialist
Office of External Affairs
National Park Service - Northeast Region
Office: 215-597-4942 | Cell: 215-268-2614

I am a proud graduate of the GOAL Leadership Academy. Ask me about the program!

On Thu, Aug 31, 2017 at 12:23 PM, Russell Newell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Great - will do! Thanks Steve.

Sent from my iPhone

On Aug 31, 2017, at 12:22 PM, Clark, Stephen <stephen_m_clark@nps.gov> wrote:

Thank you Heather...

Incidentally, if you, Russell and Caroline can work directly with Stephanie Loeb (copied above) who is serving as our Chief Public Information Officer for the event, I would appreciate it. Please cc me and Adam if you would so we can track things here at the park level.

Thanks again,

Steve

Stephen M. Clark, Superintendent
National Park Service / Western Pennsylvania Parks
c/o Flight 93 National Memorial
P.O. Box 911
Shanksville, PA 15560
814-893-6531 (office)
267-252-1909 (cell)

On Thu, Aug 31, 2017 at 9:23 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Checking with the security team

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, Aug 31, 2017 at 9:19 AM, Boulton, Caroline <caroline_boulton@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Steve,

We usually wait to announce his attendance at events for security purposes, but I defer to the comms office. Russell and Heather are cc'ed here for input!

Best,
Caroline

On Thu, Aug 31, 2017 at 7:14 AM, Stephen Clark <stephen_m_clark@nps.gov> wrote:

Good morning Caroline,
I wanted to check in and make sure it was ok with your office for us to announce that the secretary will be in attendance on

September 10
at this time...
Thank you.
Steve

Stephen M. Clark, Superintendent
National Park Service / Western Pennsylvania Parks
c/o Flight 93 National Memorial
P.O. Box 911
Shanksville, PA 15560
814-893-6322 (office)
267-252-1909 (cell)

--

Caroline Boulton
Department of the Interior
Scheduling & Advance
Caroline_Boulton@ios.doi.gov | Scheduling@ios.doi.gov

--

Caroline Boulton
Department of the Interior
Scheduling & Advance
Caroline_Boulton@ios.doi.gov | Scheduling@ios.doi.gov

From: Michael Doyle
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: appointment
Date: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 11:49:11 AM

Great, I really appreciate your quick turnaround! Helps me with my new bosses!

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 11:46 AM
To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>
Subject: Re: appointment

Either me or a DOI spokesperson is fine.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 11:44 AM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

Thanks!
To whom should I attribute this?

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 11:42 AM
To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>
Subject: Re: appointment

Oh my word. I'm sorry for all those formatting problems. Our email runs on gmail and I try to strip out the formatting in the body of the email to fix those spacing problems.

Quote --- > Todd Willens is an exceptionally-qualified natural resources professional, and we are lucky and excited to have him return to a leadership position within the Interior. His western roots and decades of experience working with sportsmen, Tribal and local governments, and the Congressional delegations will be an incredible asset to the Department and the American people moving forward.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 11:35 AM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

Awesome, thanks!

Yes, I definitely would welcome quote

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 11:33 AM

To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>

Subject: Re: appointment

below is the DRAFT press release we are issuing later today. Just waiting on the secretary's quote but don't want to hold you up. If you want a quote from the Department I'm happy to provide.

Secretary Ryan Zinke Appoints Veteran Interior Official

Todd Willens as

Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior

Tribal Leaders, Congressional Official, Others

Praise Selection

(WASHINGTON) U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced the appointment of former Interior Department official and former chief of

C

S

taff to Rep. Steve Pearce (NM) Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior. In this role, Willens will work closely with yet-to-be-confirmed Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt.

Willens brings with him more than 20 years of public policy and governmental affairs experience, with proven successes on behalf of prior Administrations, Members of Congress, national associations, and the private sector. He possesses a deep knowledge and understanding of the Department's many complex policies, ranging from land to energy, wildlife, and water management.

Insert quote from Secretary

"It is an honor and privilege to be appointed as Interior's Assistant Deputy Secretary," Willens said. "I thank Secretary Zinke for his confidence in my abilities to serve the Department and the Administration. I look forward to getting to work contributing to the implementation of the President's priorities for the Department and our Agencies, making America great again."

Willens served as Chief of Staff to Congressman Steve Pearce (R-NM) from 2010 to 2017. During his tenure as Chief of Staff, Willens provided strategic advice and operational oversight to meet the needs of the constituents of the 2nd Congressional District of New Mexico. He worked closely with various stakeholders in this capacity, including local government officials, Congress, and the previous Administration to ramp up operations at defense bases, prevent job-killing regulatory action, and increase federal accountability significantly for the people of New Mexico.

"Todd's dedication to New Mexico and the West made him a most effective manager of people and policies," Congressman Pearce said. "More than anything though, my wife Cynthia and I consider him a close friend. He has run my congressional operations for nearly seven years and been my top adviser on numerous items, delivering countless successes on my behalf. I congratulate Todd and the Administration on his appointment to this important position."

"The selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary deepens the bench at Interior," Jackie Johnson Pata, Executive Director of the National Congress of American Indians, said. "In his prior work as Chief of Staff for Congressman Stevan Pearce, Todd handled a wide range of Native issues. In that role, he earned the great respect of many in Indian Country.

As the Administration and Tribal Nations partner to advance economic development and self-sufficiency for Native communities, Todd's expertise and experience will be a valuable asset."

"I have worked with Todd for several years. He has an exceptional understanding of western issues in general, and Native issues in particular," Chairman Paul Torres of the All Pueblo Council of Governors said. "Todd is exactly the kind of leadership that can advance Interior's trust responsibility to tribes, while supporting tribal sovereignty and self-determination. This is an exceptional selection by the Administration."

"The Tehama Colusa Canal Authority couldn't be more pleased with the selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary at the Department of the Interior," Jeff Sutton, General Manager of the Tehama Colusa Canal Authority, said. "A native of Northern California, Todd has a great deal of experience in Western water issues and, as a sportsman-conservationist, he has a long track record of delivering mutually beneficial policy outcomes for the benefit of fish, wildlife and water users throughout the Western United States. We look forward to workin g with Todd in his new capacity.”

“The Civil War Trust strongly supports the appointment of Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior,” James Lighthizer, President of the Civil War Trust, said. “In his previous service on Capitol Hill and in the Department of the Interior, Todd has been a champion of our national parks and historic battlefield sites. We are excited about the opportunity to partner with him to preserve America's battlefield parks as places of remembrance as well as heritage tourism destinations.”

“The Boone and Crockett Club proudly supports Todd Willens’ appointment,” said Paul Phillips, co-chair of the Boone and Crockett Club’s Policy Committee. “Mr. Willens is a conservationist who hunts. He has this personal passion and understands the ecological and economic benefits that follow for the public. His experience in the complexities of policy at the Department of the Interior will serve the country and conservation community all very well.”

Prior to working on Capitol Hill, Willens served as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks at the Department of the Interior from 2006 to 2008. While at the Department, he worked on the National Parks Centennial, and the historic recovery of the Bald Eagle. In addition, Willens also served as Senior Policy Advisor for United States House of Representatives Committee on Natural Resources from 2003 to 2006. In this capacity, he worked closely with the Chairman to develop key legislation, including the 2005 Endangered Species Act Reauthorization and the 2005 Energy Bill.

A California native, Willens is a 1994 graduate of the University of California, Los Angeles. He currently lives in Washington, D.C. with his wife and four children.

###

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 11:02 AM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

Thanks.

Honestly, I've been told we need something in the earlier Greenwire, since the Herald has already posted something.

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 10:57 AM

To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>

Subject: Re: appointment

roger dodger. I'll try to get it to you by then. If not can you hold for PM edition?

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 10:53 AM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

FYI, just checked with editor, writing for today's Greenwire, so deadline of 11:45...

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 10:49 AM

To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>

Cc: Rigas, Laura <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>

Subject: Re: appointment

Hey Mike - If you can wait a few, we will have a press release shortly I'm happy to give you the lead on. Are you writing for Daily or PM?

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 10:42 AM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

Good morning:

I am trying to confirm a report that a Todd Willens has been nominated as an assistant secretary. Do you have anything on that?

Mike

Michael Doyle

Reporter

mdoyle@eenews.net

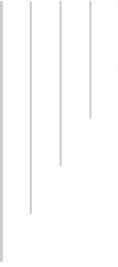

202-446-0467 x467

@MichaelDoyle10

E&E NEWS

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

www.eenews.net | @EENewsUpdates

Energywire, Climatewire, Greenwire, E&E Daily, E&E News PM, E&ETV

From: Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: article
Date: Friday, December 01, 2017 9:44:58 AM

I would say reporters who have inquired. These are on my list so far. I don't know how many we'll be able to add, but just wanted to check with you as well.

Jim Carlton - WSJ (San Francisco)
Jim.carlton@wsj.com

Rebecca Worby - High Country News
Beccaw@hcn.org

Keith Schneider - LA Times (Utah correspondent)
Keith.schneider@latimes.com

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Friday, December 1, 2017 9:42 AM
To: Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Subject: Re: article

do you want a list of UT reporters or national?

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Dec 1, 2017 at 9:40 AM, Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:

Thanks Heather! Do you have a list of reporters who want to attend the events in Utah? I'm putting together a list for Carolina, who handles our regional media.

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Friday, December 1, 2017 9:25 AM
To: Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO (b) (6) >; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO (b) (6) >; Dorr, Kaelan K. EOP/WHO (b) (6) >
Subject: article

Here's a really tremendous article from last night. Great for social.

The Toronto Star: Trump wished country 'Merry Christmas' instead of 'Happy Holidays' at tree lighting, making good on campaign promise

Jill Colvin
December 1, 2017

WASHINGTON—Ring in the holidays for the first time from Washington, U.S. President Donald Trump lit the National Christmas Tree Thursday evening, wishing the country “a Merry Christmas” — as he vowed to do during his campaign.

Taking part in the annual ritual, Trump counted down from 10 before his wife, Melania, pushed a button to set the tree aglow with golden lights and silver stars.

“Today’s a day that I’ve been looking very much forward to all year long,” said Trump. “And now, as the president of the United States, it’s my tremendous honour to finally wish America and the world a very merry Christmas.”

During his campaign, Trump had promised that, when he was elected, people would be saying “Merry Christmas again,” a reference to what he characterized as the country’s obsession with political correctness. In Trump’s view, the move toward the use of the more inclusive “happy holidays” phrase minimized the Christian celebration.

Trump was introduced by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who called Trump “a man who loves our parks, loves our military, and loves our country. The man who brought ‘Merry Christmas’ back to our nation’s capital — and you did, sir.”

Speaking from behind a bullet-proof glass enclosure, Trump also bragged about the mild weather, which hovered in the mid-50s, and compared himself to President Ulysses S. Grant, who signed legislation making Christmas a federal holiday.

“I sort of feel we’re doing that again,” he said to an audience that included many of his family members.

The program, which will air Monday on the Hallmark Channel, was hosted by Kathie Lee Gifford and actor Dean Cain and featured performances by the Beach Boys, Jack Wagner, Wynonna Judd, Craig Campbell and others. It was a less high-profile lineup than last year, when the performers included Kelly Clarkson, Garth Brooks and Trisha Yearwood, Marc Anthony, Yolanda Adams, The Lumineers, James Taylor and Chance the Rapper.

This year marks the 95th annual National Christmas Tree Lighting. The tradition began in 1923 with President Calvin Coolidge and takes place in President’s Park, just south of the White House.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Bill Boyle
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: Bears Ears visit
Date: Wednesday, December 06, 2017 5:16:41 PM
Attachments: SJR2017-12-06-0-001.pdf
SJR2017-12-06-0-002.pdf
SJR2017-12-06-0-003.pdf
SJR2017-12-06-0-004.pdf
SJR2017-12-06-0-006.pdf
SJR2017-12-06-0-008.pdf
SJR2017-12-06-0-009.pdf

Heather,

These are the pages that included coverage of the monument.

Bill

On Dec 6, 2017, at 1:54 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Wow. I'm so glad you were able to join the pool. Would you mind sending me a digital copy of the paper when you have it handy?

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Dec 6, 2017, at 3:39 PM, Bill Boyle <sjreditor@frontier.com> wrote:

Heather,

Wow! Thank you for your assistance with the President's visit to Salt Lake City on Monday. It was an amazing day for me and my readers!

One of the stories covered by the local NBC affiliate was my participation in the press pool.

If you click on the "Show 7 more videos" button in the attachment and then the "Southern Utah photographer..." button, it tells a little bit about my day!

<https://www.ksl.com/?sid=46210587&nid=148&title=trump-public-lands-will-once-again-be-for-public-use>

Bill Boyle
San Juan Record

On Dec 1, 2017, at 2:04 PM, Heather Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Perfect! I wanted to make up for the hiccup we had last time. Glad it will work out.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Dec 1, 2017, at 3:49 PM, Bill Boyle
<sjreditor@frontier.com> wrote:

Heather,

Yes, I talked to Carolina Hurley.
Everything is worked out. Thanks so much for your help.

Bill

On Dec 1, 2017, at 1:10 PM,
Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Bill, did a young woman from the White House press office contact you?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov 1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Dec 1, 2017 at 11:37
AM, Bill Boyle
<sjreditor@frontier.com>
wrote:

Thanks for the note Heather.

I plan to be in attendance at the event on Monday. I hope that I can secure press access. Michael Richardson at the BLM tells me that DOI is the coordinating team. Please let me know what I need to do to cover this event I will be traveling back to San Juan County after the event and have Tuesday as the production deadline. It would be very helpful to have maps, press release, etc. as soon as is feasible.

If needed, I can be reached on my cell phone at (b) (6)

Thanks,
Bill

On Dec 1, 2017,
at 7:53 AM,
Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi Bill - Heather Swift here from Secretary Zinke's office. You and I met back in May when the Secretary was in town. I'm wondering if you plan to drive up to SLC on Monday for the announcement with POTUS.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the

Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doigov

On Tue, May 9,
2017 at 5:33 PM,
Bill Boyle
<sjreditor@frontier.com> wrote:

Thank you

On May 7,
2017, at 11:00
PM, Heather
Swift wrote:

> Hi there.
Unfortunately,
we do not have a press pool,
each reporter is > responsible for their own travel to the trail head. The Secretary will > deliver his daily press briefing at 2:30 at the trail head and then > embark on the hike. News media will be permitted to follow the troupe > from a distance to snap photos but the Q/A will be done in the > beginning at the trail head.
Could you

please tell me
your name?

>

> Thanks,

> Heather

>

> Sent from my iPhone

>

>> On May 7,
2017, at 10:04

PM, Editor

<sjreditor@fro ntier.com>

wrote:

>>

>> I am the editor of the San Juan
Record in Monticello
Utah and I am very interested in covering
secretary
Zinkie while he is here. I would like to accompany the group to house of fire ruin, if possible. Of course, I can travel in a press pool but I know the area very well and can meet the group

there, if that works. Please let me know if you need any additional information I can be reached
at 435-459-1929 or at this email address

>>

>> Sent from my iPhone

>>

From: Swift, Heather
To: Daly, Matthew
Cc: Rigas, Laura; Interior Press
Subject: Re: Bernhardt
Date: Friday, July 21, 2017 4:19:57 PM
Attachments: 3F2C747C-3960-4BED-8D36-C01BFD1ECB56.png
DOI Deputy Secretary Nominee David Bernhardt Support Letter Package.pdf

Hey there, Matthew - it's too late in the date on a summer Friday for you to be working. Go home! :)

Statement for your question --> The Interior is excited to have David Bernhardt, a highly-qualified, veteran official, return to the Department to help advance Secretary Zinke and President Trump's America First policy priorities. Strongly-worded press releases issued by special interest groups alleging any wrongdoing are patently false and are desperate attempts to stop the progress that is being made at the Department on behalf of the American people.

Please see the Secretary's statement when David Bernhardt was announced. The Secretary stands by his word. <https://www.doi.gov/pressreleases/secretary-zinke-applauds-nomination-david-bernhardt-deputy-secretary-interior>

Background --> Please see the attached doc with countless statements in support of Bernhardt's nomination from individuals and organizations who actually worked with him during his time at Interior.

Lastly, see below the press release from U.S. Senator Daines and the Western Caucus which demonstrates broad support for Bernhardt.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

July 13, 2017

Senate Western Caucus Urges Confirmation of Bernhardt for Deputy Secretary of the Interior

U.S. SENATE — Today, the Senate Western Caucus, led by Chairman Steve Daines (R-MT), urged the confirmation of Department of the Interior veteran David Bernhardt for Deputy Secretary of the U.S. Department of the Interior (DOI).

Bernhardt, a Westerner from Rifle, Colorado, brings years of personal experience as an avid hunter and fisherman as well as professional experience having served under former DOI Secretaries Gale Norton and Dirk Kempthorne in multiple positions.

Bernhardt was announced as President Donald J. Trump's choice for Deputy Secretary on April 28 and was subsequently approved by the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on June 6. Less than a month away from the August recess, the Senate has confirmed only 23 percent of President Trump's 216 nominations. By the first August recess during President Obama's first term, the Senate had confirmed 69 percent of his 454 nominations.

U.S. Senator Steve Daines (R-MT): “David Bernhardt will be a partner to Montanans and to Secretary Ryan Zinke – which makes for the best kind of Deputy Secretary of the Interior. David will work to improve access to public lands, restore American energy dominance and empower Montanans ability to best serve their families and communities. We need to confirm David Bernhardt so he can get to work on behalf of Montanans and the West.”

U.S. Senator Cory Gardner (R-CO): “As a native Coloradan from Rifle, David Bernhardt has a deep understanding of Western land issues, and his expertise and experience will serve the Department well. Unfortunately, a partisan minority in the Senate continues to block Mr. Bernhardt’s nomination, and I hope that the confirmation process has not become a broken process that disincentives qualified people, like Mr. Bernhardt, who are held in high professional regard, from becoming public servants.”

U.S. Senator Jeff Flake (R-AZ): “David Bernhardt has the deep water background we need to continue efforts to protect our Colorado River supplies” said Senator Jeff Flake, the Chairman of the Water and Power Subcommittee of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. “We need this experienced nominee confirmed without delay.”

U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-UT): “I applaud the nomination of Dave Bernhardt for Deputy Secretary of the Department of Interior. President Trump and Secretary Zinke have already made great progress in restoring trust between Westerners and the federal government, but significant work remains, especially in Utah where reduced access to our public land has hurt our rural economies. As a former Interior Solicitor, Dave has the legal and political background necessary to confront some of the most difficult challenges ahead, such as expanding responsible development of our natural resources, protecting and promoting multiple-use, and expanding opportunities for recreational access. I am confident that Dave’s breadth of experience makes him uniquely qualified for this position, and I look forward to working with him.”

U.S. Senator Mike Lee (R-UT): “I can think of no one who is more qualified to be deputy secretary of the Interior than David Bernhardt. He has a long track record of distinguished service in the department and he understands the importance of efficient and collaborative federal land and resource management. David’s extensive knowledge, experience, and leadership will go a long way in advancing Secretary Zinke’s goal of restoring the American people’s trust in the Interior Department. I urge my colleagues to support David’s nomination and confirm him as soon as possible.”

U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski (R-AK): “Dave Bernhardt is an excellent choice to help set strategic direction and run the Department of the Interior on a day-to-day basis. He grew up in the West, has extensive knowledge of issues that are important to Alaskans, and will be a great asset to Secretary Zinke and his team. We reported his nomination from the Energy and Natural Resources Committee with bipartisan support more than a month ago, so I urge my colleagues to support the swift confirmation of this well-qualified nominee.”

U.S. Senator John McCain (R-AZ): “David Bernhardt’s experience working on water policy and Native American issues makes him uniquely suited to serve as the Deputy Secretary of the Interior Department Administration. I am confident David will serve the state of Arizona and the nation with distinction, and I encourage my colleagues to vote in favor of his nomination.”

Bernhardt also has wide support from across the country:

- National Congress of American Indians
- Ducks Unlimited
- Boone and Crockett Club
- Southern Ute Indian Tribe
- NRA
- Delta Waterfowl
- Archery Trade Association
- Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies
- Camp Fire Club of America
- Congressional Sportsmen's Foundation
- Conservation Force
- Dallas Safari Club
- Houston Safari Club
- Masters of Foxhounds Association & Foundation
- Mule Deer Foundation

- National Shooting Sports Foundation
- National Wild Turkey Federation
- Orion - The Hunter's Institute
- Pheasants Forever
- Professional Outfitters and Guides of America
- Quail Forever
- Quality Deer Management Association
- Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation
- Safari Club International
- Shikar-Safari Club
- Sportsmen's Alliance
- Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership
- Wild Sheep Foundation
- Wildlife Forever
- Wildlife Management Institute
- Wildlife Mississippi
- American Recreation Coalition
- Boat U.S.
- International Snowmobile Manufacturers Association
- Marine Retailers Association of America
- Motorcycle Industry Council
- National Association of RV Parks and Campgrounds (ARVC)
- National Marine Manufacturers Association
- National Parks Hospitality Association
- Recreation Vehicle Dealers Association
- Recreation Vehicle Industry Association
- Recreational Off-Highway Vehicle Association
- Specialty Equipment Market Association
- Specialty Vehicle Institute of America
- Colorado River Water Conservation District
- Colorado Water Congress
- Family Farm Alliance
- Oneida Indian Nation
- Penobscot Nation
- Public Lands Council
- National Cattlemen's Beef Association
- Quapaw Tribe Of Oklahoma
- Seneca Nation of Indians
- Gila River Indian Community

Former United States Senator Jon Kyl (R-AZ): “Having worked with David Bernhardt for many years on a variety of Department of the Interior matters, in particular on Indian water settlements, I know he’ll be a great addition to the team.”

David Allen President/CEO Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation: “The Senate has not yet acted on several important positions that remain unfilled at the Interior Department. Among them is the nomination of David Bernhardt to be Deputy Secretary. This is a critical position that not only ensures the Department’s programs are run effectively, but also succeeds the Secretary in certain situations. Bernhardt is a Coloradan, a hunter and angler, and former high-ranking officer at Interior who understands the issues important to sportsmen and women. We encourage the Senate to act on his nomination without delay.”

Dale Hall, Chief Executive Officer, Ducks Unlimited: “I have known and worked with David for more than 10 years and could not be more pleased with his nomination for Deputy Secretary of the Interior. For David Bernhardt, integrity is doing the right thing even when the easiest decision would be to continue with the status quo. I believe David is a man with personal and professional integrity that is beyond reproach and has always advocated for the proper application of science and implementation of the law, especially when it comes to species conservation. I believe David will continue to advocate for sound and balanced resource management and advocate for the use of best available science.”

Whit Fosburgh, Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership President and CEO: “The Department of Interior, the chief steward of our national public lands, requires a Deputy Secretary who understands how the department functions and understands the complexities associated with balancing the resource needs of our country, both now, and most importantly, for future generations of Americans. David Bernhardt will provide much needed departmental experience to the Interior leadership team at a time when important natural resource decisions with wide impact are being considered.”

Jeffrey Vorberger, Vice President, Policy & Government Affairs of NOIA:

“NOIA strongly encourages the Senate to confirm David Bernhardt as the Deputy Secretary of the Interior sooner rather than later. Strong, experienced leadership at all levels of the Department are necessary as America strives to become energy dominant. David has a proven record, is beyond qualified and his extensive experience serving the Department of Interior under the George W. Bush administration will make him a vital asset to Secretary Zinke. Further delay on his confirmation is a lost opportunity.”

Peter Hayes, Associate General Manager & Chief Public Affairs Executive, Salt River Project: “David Bernhardt has for many years exhibited strong leadership on federal land, water, and natural resources policies, having previously served the public as a senior official at the Department of the Interior. SRP urges quick confirmation in the Senate for Mr. Bernhardt and looks forward to continuing its long-standing collaborative partnership with the Department under Secretary Zinke and Mr. Bernhardt's leadership.”

Russell Begaye, President of the Navajo Nation: “Mr. Bernhardt brings years of experience working on Indian country's most pressing issues. I look forward to working with him and the rest of the Department of the Interior leadership team to bring the Bureau of Indian Affairs into the 21st century.”

Stephen Roe Lewis, Governor, Gila River Indian Community, AZ: “Based on our experience in negotiating and working on complex issues with Mr. Bernhardt, we support his position as Deputy Secretary of the Department of the Interior. We believe he has an understanding of tribal sovereignty and the United States' trust responsibility to tribal nations, including the Gila River Indian Community.”

White Mountain Apache Tribal Council, AZ: “David Bernhardt is respected by the White Mountain Apache Tribe and enjoys widespread respect in Indian Country as being fair and well versed in Native American issues and the historic time-honored government to government and trust relationship between Indian Nations and the United States.”

The position of Deputy Secretary of the Department of the Interior is the Chief Operating Officer of the Department and Bernhardt's nomination is subject to confirmation by the United States Senate.

Bernhardt also previously served as the United States Commissioner to the International Boundary Commission, U.S. and Canada. He earned his bachelor's degree from the University of Northern Colorado and graduated with honors from George Washington University National Law Center. He recently served on the Board of Game and Inland Fisheries for the Commonwealth of Virginia, where he resides in Arlington with his wife Gena and their two children. As Deputy Secretary, Bernhardt will make Interior a better neighbor, ensure American energy dominance to create jobs and return Endangered Species Act to its original intent.

###

Contact: Marcie Kinzel, Katie Waldman

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Jul 21, 2017 at 3:52 PM, Daly, Matthew <MDaly@ap.org> wrote:

Does Sec. Zinke have a comment on Bernhardt nomination?
I am doing a preview for Monday ahead of Senate vote.
Dems are challenging his work as a lobbyist for Calif water group.
Thanks.

Matthew

Matthew Daly
Congressional Reporter
The Associated Press
202-641-9481 direct
202-365-2993 cell
Follow me on Twitter: @MatthewDalyWDC

The information contained in this communication is intended for the use of the designated recipients named above. If the reader of this communication is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that you have received this communication in error, and that any review, dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify The Associated Press immediately by telephone at +1-212-621-1500 and delete this email. Thank you.

From: Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO
To: Heather Swift
Cc: Dorr, Kaelan K. EOP/WHO; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO; Fetalvo, Ninio J. EOP/WHO; Strom, Natalie M. EOP/WHO; Laura Rigas; russell_newell@ios.doi.gov; Kennedy, Adam R. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: Billings Gazette: Zinke's veteran daughter excoriates Trump in response to transgender military ban
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 4:22:05 PM

Please let us know how you are handling inquiries.

Brad Rateike
White House Communications
(b) (6)

On Aug 26, 2017, at 2:20 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

What would you like guidance on?

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 26, 2017, at 12:15 PM, Dorr, Kaelan K. EOP/WHO
<(b) (6)> wrote:

Team Interior

Any guidance on the below?

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Comms Alert <CommsAlert@gop.com>
Date: August 26, 2017 at 12:13:48 PM EDT
To: undisclosed-recipients;;
Subject: Billings Gazette: Zinke's veteran daughter excoriates Trump in response to transgender military ban

Zinke's veteran daughter excoriates Trump in response to transgender military ban
Billings Gazette
Jayme Fraser
August 25, 2017
>><http://billingsgazette.com/news/state-and-regional/zinke-s-veteran-daughter-excoriates-trump-in-response-to->

transgender/article_0fb2413e-92fe-5db6-9be8-e4c17f0b9055.html?utm_medium=social&utm_source=twitter&utm_campaign=user-share

The daughter of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, like her father a Navy veteran, appears, in the rawest of terms, to have excoriated President Donald Trump in a social media post after the announcement that transgender soldiers would be banned from the military.

"This man is a disgrace. I've tried to keep politics out of my social media feed as much as possible, but this is inexcusable," read a July 26 public Instagram post from what appears to be the account of Jennifer Detlefsen, the Navy diver daughter Zinke frequently mentioned in his successful 2016 re-election campaign for the U.S. House. Shortly after the election, Trump chose Zinke to lead the U.S. Department of the Interior.

"This veteran says sit down and shut the (expletive) up, you know-nothing, never-served piece of (expletive)." She also used a hashtag, #itmfa, that is an acronym for "impeach the (expletive) already."

<image003.jpg>

The comments began circulating among national advocates for LGBTQ rights and one of them shared a screenshot of the Instagram post with the Missoulian on Friday, the day Trump signed the order making the transgender ban official.

Interior Press Secretary Heather Swift declined to make Zinke available for an interview or to provide an immediate statement Friday night.

"This is not a matter related to the Department of the Interior so I cannot offer you a statement," Swift wrote in response to a reporter's request.

She later added, "Family members are not elected officials and deserve privacy and respect."

The Instagram account links to a professional page with a resume that matches the name and biographical details of Zinke's daughter. It also includes a Jan. 6, 2015, photo taken from the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives, the day

her father was sworn in for his first term as a congressman from Montana.

The post on that account includes a screenshot of an NPR story describing tweets by the president that “the United States Government will not accept or allow ... Transgender individuals to serve in any capacity in the U.S. Military.” Trump first announced plans for the ban on July 26, the same day of the Instagram post.

Trump's Friday order formalized that Twitter announcement and provided the first details of his plan.

In it, he directs the military not to recruit transgender people, to stop paying for medical treatment regimens of transgender people already serving in the military, and to evaluate existing transgender soldiers and their impact on the military for “effectiveness and lethality, unitary cohesion, budgetary constraints, applicable law, and all factors that may be relevant.”

Although some details remain unclear and Trump has indicated he is giving top defense officials some leeway to implement his plan, the move could effectively reverse a 2016 order by former president Barack Obama to allow transgender individuals to serve openly.

Zinke, a retired Navy SEAL, has not spoken publicly about his opinion of the ban. Nor has his wife, Lolita Zinke. She was a member of Trump campaign outreach efforts for Hispanics and women, and later joined the president's Veterans Administration transition team.

Detlefsen served in the Navy as a Deep Sea Diving Medical Technician and later as a High Risk Instructor of an explosive ordnance disposal training unit. She had worked at Special Operations for America, a military-focused super political action committee founded by Zinke, doing digital consulting and social media work, according to filings with the Federal Elections Commission.

Detlefsen now is a Virginia-based glass artist “bound by themes of masculine/feminine dichotomy, double standards, motherhood, and literature's impact on gender roles.”

She could not immediately be reached for comment Friday night. A phone rang without answer and had a voicemail box that was full. Messages sent to two private email accounts also were not immediately returned.

From: Laura Rigas
To: Heather Swift
Cc: (b) (6)
Subject: Re: Billings Gazette: Zinke's veteran daughter excoriates Trump in response to transgender military ban
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 5:23:05 PM

Thx.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Aug 26, 2017, at 11:37 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura - I briefly connected with Kaelan.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 26, 2017, at 4:09 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thx. Not sure we can offer any more.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Aug 26, 2017, at 9:20 PM, Heather Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

What would you like guidance on?

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 26, 2017, at 12:15 PM, Dorr, Kaelan K.
EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:

Team Interior

Any guidance on the below?

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Comms Alert
<CommsAlert@gop.com>
Date: August 26, 2017 at
12:13:48 PM EDT
To: undisclosed-recipients:;
Subject: Billings Gazette: Zinke's veteran daughter excoriates Trump in response to transgender military ban

Zinke's veteran daughter excoriates Trump in response to transgender military ban

Billings Gazette

Jayne Fraser

August 25, 2017

>http://billingsgazette.com/news/state-and-regional/zinke-s-veteran-daughter-excoriates-trump-in-response-to-

transgender/article_0fb2413e-92fe-5db6-9be8-e4c17f0b9055.html?

utm_medium=social&utm_source=twitter&utm_campaign=user-share<

The daughter of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, like her father a Navy veteran, appears, in the rawest of terms, to have excoriated President Donald Trump in a social media post after the announcement that transgender soldiers would be banned from the military.

"This man is a disgrace. I've tried to keep politics out of my social media feed as much as possible, but this is inexcusable," read a July 26 public Instagram post from what appears to be the account of Jennifer Detlefsen, the Navy diver daughter Zinke frequently mentioned in his successful 2016 re-election campaign for the U.S. House. Shortly after the election, Trump chose Zinke to lead the U.S. Department of the Interior.

"This veteran says sit down and shut the (expletive) up, you know-nothing, never-served piece of (expletive)." She also used a hashtag, #itmfa, that is an acronym for "impeach the (expletive) already."

<image003.jpg>

The comments began circulating among national advocates for LGBTQ rights and one of them shared a screenshot of the Instagram post with the Missoulian on Friday, the day Trump signed the order making the transgender ban official.

Interior Press Secretary Heather Swift declined to make Zinke available for an interview or to provide an immediate statement Friday night.

"This is not a matter related to the Department of the Interior so I cannot offer you a statement," Swift wrote in response to a reporter's request.

She later added, "Family members are not elected officials and deserve privacy and respect."

The Instagram account links to a professional page with a resume that matches the name and biographical details of Zinke's daughter. It also includes a Jan. 6, 2015, photo taken from the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives, the day her father was sworn in for his first term as a congressman from Montana.

The post on that account includes a screenshot of an NPR story describing tweets by the president that "the United States Government will not accept or allow ... Transgender individuals to serve in any capacity in the U.S. Military." Trump first announced plans for the ban on July 26, the same day of the Instagram post.

Trump's Friday order formalized that Twitter announcement and provided the first details of his plan.

In it, he directs the military not to recruit transgender people, to stop paying for medical treatment regimens of transgender people already serving in the military, and to evaluate existing transgender soldiers and their impact on the military for "effectiveness and lethality, unitary cohesion, budgetary constraints, applicable law, and all factors that may be relevant."

Although some details remain unclear and Trump has indicated he is giving top defense officials some leeway to implement his plan, the move could effectively reverse a 2016 order by former president Barack Obama to allow transgender individuals to serve openly.

Zinke, a retired Navy SEAL, has not spoken publicly about his opinion of the ban. Nor has his wife, Lolita Zinke. She was a member of Trump campaign outreach efforts for Hispanics and women, and later joined the president's Veterans Administration transition team.

Detlefsen served in the Navy as a Deep Sea Diving Medical Technician and later as a High Risk Instructor of an explosive ordnance disposal training unit. She had worked at Special Operations for America, a military-focused super political action committee founded by Zinke, doing digital consulting and social media work, according to filings with the Federal Elections Commission.

Detlefsen now is a Virginia-based glass artist "bound by themes of masculine/feminine dichotomy, double standards, motherhood, and literature's impact on gender roles."

She could not immediately be reached for comment Friday night. A phone rang without answer and had a voicemail box that was full. Messages sent to two private email accounts also were not immediately returned.

From: Swift, Heather
To: Johnson, Christie
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2017 12:30:49 PM

Hey Christie, I wanted to thank you for your help last week. Your conversation with Rene's editor really shaped the story and I think influenced her decision to run the story on the Jewell/Salazar travel.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Oct 6, 2017 at 3:48 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 3:42 PM, Johnson, Christie <Christie.Johnson@turner.com> wrote:

Spoke to the team. Best bet on this one is to answer Rene's questions directly and/or send her any statement you want her to include if she runs the story. So you're aware-I have raised your concerns with her boss.
Call if you need anything else

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313
Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Johnson, Christie
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017 2:23:26 PM
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?

Will do. Call around 230

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313

Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017 1:58:30 PM
To: Johnson, Christie
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?

Hey Christie, I called the phone number but it's not reaching you. Can you give me a ring (b) (6)

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 9:38 AM, Johnson, Christie <Christie.Johnson@turner.com> wrote:

If not I'll be around at noon and we can talk

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313
Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Johnson, Christie
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017 9:35:59 AM
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?

No chance you can talk now right?

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313
Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017 9:31:58 AM
To: Johnson, Christie
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?

Ok. I'm about to go out of cell service until noon. Rene Marsh is working on a story though if you could possibly put it on hold until we talk that would be appreciated. I don't know when she plans to run but Mrs. Zinke got a VM.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 9:23 AM, Johnson, Christie
<Christie.Johnson@turner.com> wrote:

We're wrapped

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313
Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017 8:12:40 AM
To: Johnson, Christie
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?

Ok

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 7:59 AM, Johnson, Christie
<Christie.Johnson@turner.com> wrote:

Just got a note our Morning Meeting is at 8:30 this morning. It should be done around 9:10ish. If you can catch me before or after that, that would be ideal.

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313
Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Heather Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017 7:53:30 AM
To: Johnson, Christie
Subject: Re: Can we talk later?

Great. I'll give you a ring in about 45 minutes.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 7:47 AM, Johnson, Christie <Christie.Johnson@turner.com> wrote:

Here when you're ready (b) (6)

[REDACTED]

Christie (Bear) Johnson
CNN
Senior Producer
C: 646-763-2313
Christie.Johnson@turner.com
www.cnn.com

From: Heather Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 6, 2017
7:44:03 AM
To: Johnson, Christie
Subject: Can we talk later?

Hey there Christie. Can we talk later this afternoon? One of your colleagues is about to embarrass themselves by running a really nasty and factually incorrect story about Mrs. Zinke.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Heather Swift
To: Timothy Cama
Subject: Re: Can you please correct this
Date: Thursday, September 28, 2017 10:07:52 PM

As with previous Interior secretaries, the Secretary traveled on charter flights when there were no commercial options available. All travel is pre-approved by the ethics office (statement from them below) before booking, and the charter flights went through an additional level of due diligence.

The politico piece did not accurately describe the Montana portion of the trip. The Secretary's itinerary began with meetings at 8:30 AM then included a keynote speech to the Western Governor's Association (which is led by Montana's Democratic governor), a press conference, a working lunch with governors, and other engagements.

"The Scheduling Office meets regularly with the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law to ensure that all travel is thoroughly reviewed and approved in advance and that it is fully compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations.

Consistent with this process, the trip was reviewed and approved in advance by both the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law. In short, the trip - including the Secretary's address to the hockey developmental squad - was completely compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations." --Joint Statement from Melinda Loftin (Department of the Interior Designated Agency Ethics Official and Director of the Departmental Ethics Office) and Edward Keable (Deputy Solicitor - General Law). Both are career members of the Senior Executive Service.

Three Charter Flights

3/31

Trip: USVI Centennial Transfer Day Ceremony (The 100 year anniversary of the Danish government turning over the Virgin Islands to the United States. DOI has jurisdiction over territories) Also attending the ceremonies were the Danish Prime Minister and Governor Mapp as well as several other high ranking government officials.

Flight Plan: St Croix --> St Thomas --> St Croix

Reason: No commercial flight were available for the itinerary of official government events.

Payment: the Secretary and staff tickets were paid out of the DOI budget.

5/17

Trip: CODEL to Norway and Greenland with additional stops in Alaska
Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee organized the Arctic CODEL. The Committee organized and utilized a charter in northern Alaska.

Flight Plan: Deadhorse, AK --> Alpine, AK --> Fairbanks

Reason: Commercial flights were not an option

Payment: the Secretary and the staff tickets were paid out of the DOI budget.

6/26

Las Vegas to Kalispell, MT for the Western Governors Association annual meeting. The Secretary had events and speaking engagements in the evening in Nevada and in the morning in Montana.

Flight Plan: Las Vegas --> Kalispell

Reason: No commercial flight available to get the Secretary and necessary staff to the morning Montana events on time. The Secretary's speech ended at 7:45PM and he had a meeting at 8:30 the following morning. The charter landed at 1:30AM. The secretary had multiple events at the Western Governors Association

Payment: the Secretary and staff tickets were paid out of the DOI budget

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 28, 2017, at 10:06 PM, Timothy Cama <tcama@thehill.com> wrote:

Ok cool. I'll pass it along and make sure Julia sees it. Thanks.

On Sep 28, 2017 at 10:03 PM, <Heather Swift> wrote:

A flight "to the Caribbean" is incorrect. He took a commercial flight to the USVI and then once there took a round trip flight between two islands in the US territory.

"to attend an event with the Danish government" is incomplete and incorrect through omission. The Secretary attended several events with both the Governor of the USVI and the Danish Prime Minister... as well as many other government officials.

"In addition to using charter flights, Zinke used a military plane to travel to Norway with his wife" incorrect. This was a CODEL arranged by SENR. Mrs Zinke met the CODEL, including congressional spouses, in Norway. She joined the rest of the trip with other spouses at personal cost.

"Swift said she could not to confirm to Politico whether Zinke would reimburse the government for the cost of his travel." It was official government travel for official business. There was no personal time what so ever.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 28, 2017, at 9:44 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I realize your colleague simply wrote about another article but this is really a hack job. Didn't even bother to email.

<http://thehill.com/homenews/administration/353026-zinke-used-private-military-planes-for-travel-report>

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Eilperin, Juliet
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: Channel Islands
Date: Monday, December 11, 2017 5:22:51 PM

Dear Heather,

Thanks for this. The story has already been turned around for print, but let me see if we can get some of this in there, and I will update the story online.

Best,
Juliet

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, December 11, 2017 5:07 PM
To: Eilperin, Juliet <Juliet.Eilperin@washpost.com>
Subject: Channel Islands

The Western Values Project is a classic dark money group which is run by current and former Democratic Party members and campaign staff.

The Secretary's visit to Channel

Islands National Park was part of a multi-day visit to multiple Department of the Interior assets across the state from Sacramento all the way south to the Channel Islands. The Secretary had always planned to meet with the team at Channel Islands National Park, and the office of scheduling reached out to the superintendent's office as soon as it was clear when he could go.

Concerning the cost of boat, no costs were incurred due to Mrs. Zinke's presence. The Zinke's personally paid via check for her and her aunt's boat fare.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Heather Swift
To: Wackowski, Stephen
Subject: Re: Christmas social media opportunity
Date: Saturday, December 23, 2017 7:44:03 PM

Get me some pix! Santa hats are always appreciated :) see USVI team on Z twitter

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Dec 23, 2017, at 6:07 PM, Wackowski, Stephen <stephen_wackowski@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

See Below, great positive social media opportunity here. (b) (5)

[REDACTED]

Steve Wackowski
Senior Adviser for Alaskan Affairs
Department of the Interior
4230 University Drive, Suite 300
Anchorage, AK 99508
907-271-5485

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Fesmire, Mark <mark.fesmire@bsee.gov>
Date: Sat, Dec 23, 2017 at 5:08 PM
Subject: BSEE Arctic Inspector's Christmas plans.
To: Scott Angelle <scott.angelle@bsee.gov>, Stephen Wackowski <Steve_wackowski@ios.doi.gov>, Kevin Pendergast <kevin.pendergast@bsee.gov>

Director:

I flew back from Seattle last night on the same plane as Steve Wackowski. (b) (5)

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. Steve stated that that was something you might want to know.

(b) (5)

There are no "show stoppers" so far and our guys are anticipating being able to come back on the day after Christmas.

The two personnel are Mike Jordan (chief and only inspector) and John McCall (engineer), both Air Force veterans. Mike's children are older (high school and College) and John has no children, but his wife is one heck of a good holiday cook.

They have a cell phone with good coverage (b) (6) but may be on the rig and not able to hear or carry the phone.

Merry Christmas.

Mark E. Fesmire, PE JD

Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement (BSEE)

Alaska Regional Director

Cell 907-830-4810

Anchorage Office 907-334-5300 (5303 Direct)

Camarillo Office 805-384-6300 (6310 Direct)

From: Russell Newell
To: Scott Angelle
Cc: Heather Swift; Joe Balash; Laura Rigas; Wackowski, Stephen; Wynn, Todd
Subject: Re: Christmas social media opportunity
Date: Sunday, December 24, 2017 7:39:03 PM

Awesome! Thanks and merry Christmas all!

On Sun, Dec 24, 2017 at 4:29 PM Scott Angelle <scott.angelle@bsee.gov> wrote:
Just FYI I personally spoke to the 2 BSEE employees at this facility earlier today . They were appreciative that someone from Washington knew they existed and aware of their holiday efforts. I thanked them on behalf of secretary zinke and wished them a merry Christmas !

Sent from my iPhone

On Dec 23, 2017, at 9:17 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Merry Christmas!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Dec 23, 2017, at 7:43 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Strong.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Dec 23, 2017, at 6:07 PM, Wackowski, Stephen <stephen_wackowski@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

See Below, great positive social media opportunity here. (b) (5)

(b) (5)

Steve Wackowski
Senior Adviser for Alaskan Affairs
Department of the Interior
4230 University Drive, Suite 300
Anchorage, AK 99508
907-271-5485

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Fesmire, Mark <mark.fesmire@bsee.gov>
Date: Sat, Dec 23, 2017 at 5:08 PM
Subject: BSEE Arctic Inspector's Christmas plans.
To: Scott Angelle <scott.angelle@bsee.gov>, Stephen Wackowski <Steve_wackowski@ios.doi.gov>, Kevin Pendergast <kevin.pendergast@bsee.gov>

Director:

I flew back from Seattle last night on the same plane as Steve Wackowski. (b) (5)

(b) (5)
Steve stated that that was something you might want to know.

(b) (5)

(b) (5)
There are no "show stoppers" so far and our guys are anticipating being able to come back on the day after Christmas.

The two personnel are Mike Jordan (chief and only inspector) and John McCall (engineer), both Air Force veterans. Mike's children are older (high school and College) and John has no children, but his wife is one heck of a good holiday cook.

They have a cell phone with good coverage (b) (6) but may be on the rig and not able to hear or carry the phone.

Merry Christmas.

Mark E. Fesmire, PE JD
Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement
(BSEE)
Alaska Regional Director
Cell 907-830-4810
Anchorage Office 907-334-5300 (5303 Direct) Camarillo Office 805-384-6300 (6310 Direct)

--

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

From: Scott Angelle
To: Wackowski, Stephen
Cc: Wynn, Todd; Laura Rigas; Russell Newell; Heather Swift
Subject: Re: Christmas social media opportunity
Date: Saturday, December 23, 2017 6:12:14 PM

24 / 7 / 365. Energy dominance lives here !

Sent from my iPhone

On Dec 23, 2017, at 5:07 PM, Wackowski, Stephen <stephen_wackowski@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

See Below, great positive social media opportunity here. (b) (5)

[REDACTED]

Steve Wackowski
Senior Adviser for Alaskan Affairs
Department of the Interior
4230 University Drive, Suite 300
Anchorage, AK 99508
907-271-5485

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Fesmire, Mark <mark.fesmire@bsee.gov>
Date: Sat, Dec 23, 2017 at 5:08 PM
Subject: BSEE Arctic Inspector's Christmas plans.
To: Scott Angelle <scott.angelle@bsee.gov>, Stephen Wackowski <stephen_wackowski@ios.doi.gov>, Kevin Pendergast <kevin.pendergast@bsee.gov>

Director:

I flew back from Seattle last night on the same plane as Steve Wackowski. (b) (5)

[REDACTED]

Steve stated that that was something you might want to know.

(b) (5) [REDACTED]

. There are no "show

stoppers" so far and our guys are anticipating being able to come back on the day after Christmas.

The two personnel are Mike Jordan (chief and only inspector) and John McCall (engineer), both Air Force veterans. Mike's children are older (high school and College) and John has no children, but his wife is one heck of a good holiday cook.

They have a cell phone with good coverage (b) (6), but may be on the rig and not able to hear or carry the phone.

Merry Christmas.

Mark E. Fesmire, PE JD

Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement (BSEE)

Alaska Regional Director

Cell 907-830-4810

Anchorage Office 907-334-5300 (5303 Direct)

Camarillo Office 805-384-6300 (6310 Direct)

From: Nathaniel Herz
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: Christmas stories
Date: Sunday, December 24, 2017 4:46:00 PM

Thanks! I'll check in w/ Steve and see if this is a good fit.

On Sun, Dec 24, 2017 at 12:31 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey Nat, I do! We have a couple BSEE guys working through Christmas to get Eni permitted to spud their well ASAP. This is an exploratory well into the Federal OCS in the Beaufort Sea, which if proven, could raise millions in revenue. Eni could be ready to go as early as Tuesday with the guys working through Christmas. Wouldn't that be a nice Christmas present!?!?

The two personnel are Mike Jordan (chief and only inspector) and John McCall (engineer), both Air Force veterans (bless them). Mike's children are older (high school and College) and John has no children, but we hear his wife is one heck of a cook.

Steve can fill in more details and put you in touch if you're interested. I can get you a Sec quote too.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Dec 24, 2017, at 4:12 PM, Nathaniel Herz <nherz@adn.com> wrote:

Hey Heather, Steve, you guys know of anything interesting DOI employees are doing on Christmas? Looking for story ideas for the next couple days.

--

Nathaniel Herz

Reporter

nherz@adn.com | 907-793-0312

Anchorage Daily News | adn.com
300 W. 31st Ave.
Anchorage, AK 99503

--

Nathaniel Herz

Reporter

nherz@adn.com | 907-793-0312

Anchorage Daily News | adn.com
300 W. 31st Ave.
Anchorage, AK 99503

From: "Marsh, Rene" via Interior Press
To: Heather Swift; Marsh, Rene
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov; russell_newell@ios.doi.gov; Levitt, Ross; Wallace, Gregory
Subject: Re: CNN
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 5:53:31 PM

Thanks Heather.

While this answers some questions it does not answer all of the questions below. I do understand that it is now Friday and almost 6p so we likely wont get all of them answered now. That said we'd like to get the rest of the questions highlighted in yellow below answered.

But more immediately how much did Mrs. Zinke reimburse the government for the trip and when?

Thank you,

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Date: Friday, October 6, 2017 at 5:23 PM
To: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>
Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, "russell_newell@ios.doi.gov" <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>
Subject: Re: CNN

“The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources.”
- Heather Swift, DOI spokesman

"The Scheduling Office meets regularly with the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law to ensure that all travel is thoroughly reviewed and approved in advance and that it is fully compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations. Consistent with this process, the trip was reviewed and approved in advance by both the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law. In short, the trip - including the Secretary's address to the hockey developmental squad - was completely compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations." --Joint Statement from Melinda Loftin (Department of the Interior Designated Agency Ethics Official and Director of the Departmental Ethics Office) and Edward Keable (Deputy Solicitor - General Law). Both are career members of the Senior Executive Service.

ON BACKGROUND

Regarding the ownership of the plane: The Secretary's office is unaware of ownership of any vendor services including government selected vendors for air transport. Some media report the plane is owned by a Mr. Neilson. The Secretary has never met or spoken to Mr Neilson. The charter plane company is a vendor of the federal government. It was selected by career officials a thousand miles away in Boise or Atlanta after cost analysis. Furthermore, that company had years of federal contracts before the Secretary was even sworn into office. The vendor has been used for years by previous administrations.

It is false to say commercial flights are available between LAS and FCA that the Secretary could have taken. There were exactly 0 commercial flights leaving after 8PM that would have gotten the Secretary to FCA in time. The Secretary's itinerary began with meetings at 8:30 AM then included a keynote speech to the Western Governors Association, a (bi-partisan event that was led by Montana's Democratic governor), a press conference, a working lunch with governors, and other engagements.

Mrs. Zinke was not on the Nevada trip.

Mrs. Zinke was one of many spouses invited on the bipartisan CODEL organized by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which is standard for those trips. Mrs. Zinke's fare was covered personally.

Justification for Mrs. Zinke to have a desk there at Interior? --
No such desk/office/furniture exists.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 5:18 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press <interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather,

We have repeatedly asked the press office for answers to the below questions and for 4 days now we have been told you are working on it and today we've received no response at all. We are asking questions that the public has every right to know as these are their tax dollars and for Interior not answer any of the below questions is really hard to understand. Is the DOI issuing a no comment on all of the below questions?

Thank you,

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Date: Friday, October 6, 2017 at 1:46 PM

To: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, "russell_newell@ios.doi.gov" <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

Heather,

Circling back again. It's been a few days now.
Reupping the questions CNN has.

What was the purpose of his speech to the Vegas Golden Knights Hockey team in June? Who invited Zinke to give the speech to the team? Who owned the plane that Zinke flew on from Vegas to Montana? Who else was on board the plane from Vegas to Montana? Zinke's schedule shows on 4/28 he traveled from DC to Atlanta. How did he travel? Commercial? Government plane? Private? On June 22 how did Zinke travel to his meeting in West Virginia? Did he use a Park Police Chopper? What is the cost estimate for use of the chopper? On July 7 why did the Secretary travel using a USPP helicopter? What was the cost associated with the use of the helicopter? Can you tell us about the flight on July 20th. Was that a commercial flight? If so please share the flight details?

CNN is looking for justification for why Zinke's wife accompanied him on the following trips : Las Vegas, Greenland and Alaska?

When on these trips does Mrs. Zinke participate in official meetings with the Secretary?

Justification for Mrs. Zinke to have a desk there at Interior?

Did Mrs. Zinke reimburse the government for these flights? When? How much was reimbursed?

Thank you

Rene Marsh
CNN

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 5, 2017, at 9:24 AM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Working on it. The person who handles the Secretary's travel is currently out of the office so it's taking a little longer than usual. Apologies for the delay.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 5, 2017, at 9:11 AM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press <interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather good morning,

Circling back on this request again this morning. Hoping to get something from you today.

Thank you,
Rene Marsh

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 4, 2017, at 1:02 PM, Marsh, Rene <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com> wrote:

Good afternoon Heather,

Do you have a sense of timing for when we can expect a response to the below inquiry ?

Thank you
Rene Marsh
CNN

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 3, 2017, at 7:08 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Rene. Checking into this for you.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 3, 2017, at 4:32 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi Heather,

CNN has additional questions on the Secretary's travel.

What was the purpose of his speech to the Vegas Golden Knights Hockey team in June?

Who invited Zinke to give the speech to the team?

Who owned the plane that Zinke flew on from Vegas to Montana?

Who else was on board the plane from Vegas to Montana?

Zinke's schedule shows on 4/28 he traveled from DC to Atlanta. How did he travel? Commercial?

Government plane?
Private?

On June 22 how did Zinke travel to his meeting in West Virginia? Did he use a Park Police Chopper?

What is the cost estimate for use of the chopper?

On July 7 why did the Secretary travel using a USPP helicopter? What was the cost associated with the use of the helicopter?

Can you tell us about the flight on July 20th. Was that a commercial flight? If so please share the flight details?

Thank you,
— René Marsh

CNN
Correspondent

Twitter:

@Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift, Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Friday,
September 29, 2017 at
2:49 PM

To: "Marsh, Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:
"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt, Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

The $12k is for Nevada.
The $3k is for the flights between the islands.

Also, for your reference, Secretary Jewell also took a number of charter aircraft, including but not limited to the following:

- 1/14/16 $9,800
roundtrip
between Albuquerque,
NM -->
Farmington,
NM
- 5/3/16 $13,605
Helena, MT -->
Browning, MT (this is about a three hour drive)
Bronwing, MT --
> Palm Springs
- 8/24/16
$20,383
Bakersfield, CA
--> Kalispell,
MT -->
Livingston, MT
- There were also at least two military aircraft flights
on 9/5/13
between Honolulu and the Marshall Islands, and 5/13/14 DC to
St. Louis.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Sep 29, 2017 at 2:43 PM, 'Marsh, Rene'
via Interior Press

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Hi there,

I am getting a bit
confused .
Can you send the breakdown of flights and costs so I am clear on what cost what?

I see $ 3,150 --- that's the flight from where to where The $12375- that's round trip between st.
croix and st. Thomas

We are on deadline .
also looking to confirm the charter company used. I see youre quoted as confirming that but if reports as you point out have been inaccurate I need to get it confirmed with you myself.

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:

@Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Friday,
September 29, 2017

at 2:18 PM

To: "Marsh, Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:
"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt, Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

3/31/17 USVI flights
were - $3,150

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Sep 29, 2017
at 1:36 PM, Heather
Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

The flight between two islands in the US VI. Yes that cost is correct. We have not yet been billed on the military air asset to the wildfire.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 29, 2017,
at 1:21 PM,

'Marsh, Rene' via
Interior Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

You
are quoted
as saying one of the flights
costs
12,375.

Which costs
are you waiting
on?
Can
you provide
the costs
you already have?

Thank
you,
—

René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:

Heather
Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 1:16
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Miranda
Green

Heather
Swift
Press
Secretary
Department
of the Interior

On Sep 29, 2017,
at 1:14
PM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

We
are looking for
the cost
of
the flights?

I don't see that below.

B =y
the way who did
you provide this info
to earlier
?

—
René
Marsh

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:
Heather
Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:
Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 1:12
PM

To:
"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:
"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace

<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

The
below information
was supplied
to your colleague
earlier.

On
the record

As
is consistent with
the travel
of previous
Interior
secretaries,
the Secretary traveled
on charter
flights

when there
were
no
commercial options
available.

All
travel
is pre-approved
by
the ethics
office
and
the travel lawyers
in
the Division
of General
Law (statement from them below)
before booking,

and
the charter
flights went through an additional level
of due diligence.

Taxpayers absolutely have a right
to know how much official government
travel
costs.
It's common sense.

At
the Department
we make those documents
available
to
the public.
Using
tax dollars wisely
and ethically
is a big responsibility
and
is
at
the heart
of good
government.
Unfortunately
there

are some times when Interior
has
to utilize charter services
because we often travel
to areas
that don't have a lot
of flight
options.

Standard operating procedure
is that

the Secretary
and staff fly
on
a
commercial,
government,
coach
fare whenever possible.

"The Scheduling
Office
meets regularly
with
the Departmental Ethics
Office
and
the Division
of General
Law
to ensure

that all travel
is thoroughly reviewed
and approved
in advance
and that it
is fully compliant
with
all applicable laws,
rules,
and regulations.
Consistent
with this process,
the trip
was reviewed
and approved
in advance

by both
the Departmental Ethics
Office
and
the Division
of General
Law.

In short,
the
trip

**-
including
the Secretary's address
to
the hockey developmental squad

**-
was completely compliant
with
all applicable

laws,
rules,
and regulations." -

-

Joint Statement
from Melinda
Loftin
(Department
of
the Interior
Designated Agency
Ethics
Official
and Director
of
the Departmental Ethics
Office)
and Edward Keable
(Deputy Solicitor

-

General
Law). Both

are career members
of
the Senior
Executive Service.

On background

Regarding
the ownership
of
the plane:
the Secretary
has never met or spoken
to Mr Neilson
and that
the charter

plane company
is a vendor
of
the federal
government.
It
was selected
by career officials
a thousand miles away
in Boise
or Atlanta
after cost analysis.
Furthermore,
that company
had years
of federal contracts

before
the Secretary
was even sworn into office.

The WP piece
was false through omission
where it said
commercial flights
are available between LAS
and FCA.
In fact
there
are exactly 0 commercial flights leaving after 8PM

that would have got
the Secretary
to FCA
in time
for
an 8:30AMmeeting.

The WP
was wrong when said
there
were multiple political events,
there
were not.
He

attended single political event
for Senator
Daines
in Big Sky
when he
was already scheduled
to be
in
the area
and it
was no
cost
to
the Department.

The WP piece
is false

through omission
on
the Yellowstone aspect
by making
it sound like
the itinerary
was light.
In fact,
the itinerary
in Yellowstone
was robust.
Yellowstone
has a serious sexual harassment situation?
The Secretary traveled
there

to meet
with
the superintendent
and
the staff about
it.

The
park
is also
in hot negotiations
with tribes
on a number
of fronts
that needed
the secretary's
time.

All
of these things

were also part
of
the secretary's
trip
in addition
to meeting
the employees
he oversees.

On
the point
of
the UNITED STATES
Virgin
Islands.
Again
another lie through omission
and leading readers
to believe

he
is
at a foreign "Caribbean"
islands rather than an American territory
that is overseen
by
the Department.
That itinerary included several hours
of official government
events
and ceremonies
as well
as meeting

with American military veterans
from
the territory
and a visit
to a National Park
that is under
the jurisdiction
of
the Department.

Lastly-
The
politico piece did not accurately describe
the Montana

portion
of
the trip.
The Secretary's itinerary began
with meetings
at 8:30
AM then included
a keynote speech
to the Western
Governor's Association (which is led by Montana's Democratic governor),
a
press conference,
a working lunch

with
governors,
and other engagements.

Three
Charter
Flights

3/31

Trip:
USVI
Centennial
Transfer
Day Ceremony
(The 100 year anniversary
of
the Danish
government turning over the Virgin

Islands
to the United States.
DOI
has jurisdiction
over territories) Also attending
the ceremonies
were
the Danish
Prime Minister
and Governor
Mapp
as well
as several other high ranking
government officials.
Flight
Plan:
St
Croix

-
-
>
St
Thomas

-
-
>
St
Croix

Reason:
No
commercial flight
were available
for
the itinerary
of official government
events.

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff tickets
were paid

out
of
the DOI
budget.

5/17

Trip: CODEL
to Norway
and Greenland
with additional stops
in Alaska

Senate
Energy
and Natural Resources Committee organized
the Arctic
CODEL.
The Committee

organized
and utilized a charter
in northern
Alaska.
Flight
Plan:
Deadhorse,
AK

-

-

>

Alpine,
AK

-

-

>

Fairbanks

Reason:
Commercial
flights
were not an option

Payment:
the Secretary
and

the staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget.

6/26

Las Vegas
to Kalispell,
MT
for
the Western
Governors
Association annual meeting.

The Secretary
had events
and speaking engagements

in
the evening
in Nevada
and
in
the morning
in Montana.

Flight
Plan: Las Vegas
-
-
>
Kalispell

Reason:
No
commercial flight
available
to get the Secretary
and necessary
staff

to
the morning
Montana
events
on time.
The Secretary's speech ended at 7:45PM and
he
had
a meeting at 8:30 the following
morning.
The
charter landed at 1:30AM.
The
secretary
had multiple events
at
the Western
Governors
Association

Payment:
the Secretary

and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget

Heather
Swift
Press
Secretary
Department
of
the Interior

On Sep 29, 2017,
at 1:09
PM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Good afternoon
Heather,

CNN
is circling
back
on this request.

Thank
you,
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:
"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Date:
Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 11:16
AM

To:
"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>,

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Good Morning
Heather,

CNN
is looking
to confirm
the costs
of all
of
the charters
you outlined below.
We
are also looking
to confirm

the name
of
the charter company
that provided
the flights
for
the Secretary's official travel.

Besides
these charter
flights
you noted below
has
the Secretary
also used military/government
planes?
If
so can you outline dates,
times,
places,
justification?

Many
thanks,
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:

@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:

202-

777-

7249

From:

"Marsh,

Rene"

<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Date:

Thursday,

September

28,

2017

at 3:14

PM

To:

"Swift,

Heather"

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>,

"Marsh,

Rene"

<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,

"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"

<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Thank
you
Heather

—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Thursday,
September

28, 2017
at 2:13
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

I don't have
that information immediately
available.
Will put a request
in.

-
Heather
Swift
Department
of

the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 2:09
PM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thank
you
Heather.

What type
of aircraft
were these private planes?
What
was
the cost
for these trips
that came out
of
the DOI
budget?

Thank
you
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:
"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:
Thursday,
September 28, 2017
at 2:05
PM

To:
"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:
"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"

<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Rene

-
also want
to add
on
the Alaska
portion that was part
of
the CODEL arranged
by Senate
ENR.

-
Heather
Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 12:17

PM,
Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

-
Heather
Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 11:56
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thanks
Heather.

What type
of planes
were these charter
flights?
Can
you please check

and confirm?
We
are also looking
to get a better understanding about why
commercial flights
were listed
as not
an option
for
the 5/17
trip?

There
was no
commercial flight
available
for
the route/schedule.
Getting around
in
the Arctic Circle
is not like catching
a flight
out

of Washington,
D.C.

For
the 6/26
trip
what were
the times
of his commitment?

What
time
were
the events scheduled
for
in Nevada?

What
time
was
the speaking engagement scheduled
for
the next morning
in Montana?

The event ended around 8:00PM
in NV.
He arrived
in

MT around
2:00AM
and
the Secretary
had meetings
with governors
and public lands advocates
the following morning beginning
at 8:45AM.
The Western
Governors
Association
-
led by
a Democratic
governor
-
invited
the Secretary
to speak.

Is
it safe
to assume
the secretary flew commercial
from Washington
D.C.
to places

like Vegas,
Alaska
and
St.
Croix
before boarding
the private flights
in those places?

Yes
-
the Secretary flew
to Nevada
and
the USVI
on
a commercial,
coach,
government
fare.
He got
to Alaska
by way
of
the CODEL which was arranged
by
the Senate.
He left Alaska

on
a commercial,
coach,
government
fare.

Thank
you,
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:
"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:
Thursday,
September 28, 2017
at 11:31
AM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

I sent this
to Hannah
Lang.

Three
Charter
Flights

3/31

Trip:
USVI
Centennial
Transfer
Day Ceremony
(The 100 year anniversary
of
the Danish
government

turning over the Virgin Islands
to the United States.
DOI
has jurisdiction
over territories)

Also attending
the ceremonies
were
the Danish
Prime Minister
and Governor
Mapp.

Flight
Plan:
St
Croix

-

-

>

St
Thomas

-

-

>

St
Croix

Reason:
No
commercial flight
were available

Payment:
the

Secretary
and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget.

5/17

Trip: CODEL
to Norway
and Greenland
with additional stops
in Alaska

Senate
Energy
and Natural Resources Committee organized
the Arctic
CODEL.
The Committee organized
and utilized
a charter.

Flight
Plan:
Deadhorse,
AK

-

-

>

Alpine,
AK

-

-

>

Fairbanks

Reason:
Commercial
flights
were not an option

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget.

6/26

Las Vegas
to Kalispell,
MT
for
the Western
Governors
Association annual meeting.

The Secretary
had two

speaking engagements,
in
the evening
in Nevada
and
in
the morning
in Montana.

Flight
Plan: Las Vegas
-
-
>
Kalispell

Reason:
No
commercial flight
available
to get the Secretary
and necessary
staff
to the event
on time.

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the

DOI
budget

The Secretary took a military jet once
with U.S.
Secretary
of Agriculture
Sonny
Purdue
after he
was invited
by USDA
to attend
a briefing
at a wildfire
camp
in Montana.
The fire
was one
of
the most highpriority
in
the country
and
a firefighter
had died battling

the blaze earlier
in
the summer.
(The two departments co-manage wildfire fighting efforts
for
the federal government.
)

The Secretary
also travels
military jet when he travels
with POTUS
or VPOTUS.

There
have been three such trips
to Cincinnati,
West
Virginia,
and Atlanta.

-
Heather

Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 11:20
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Morning
Heather,

I checked
in
with my colleagues
and they say they never received
a response
on this topic
from Interior.
Could
you please provide?

We
are looking
to find out
has
the Secretary chartered private planes
for his travels while
in
office?
Government/military planes during his time
in
office?
How
many times?

Was
commercial considered
as
the first option?

Justification
for flying
private?

Thank
you,

Rene
Marsh

CNN

On 9/22/17, 12:53
PM,
"Heather
Swift"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

We do
it here too.

Heather
Swift

Press
Secretary

Department
of
the Interior

>
On Sep
22, 2017,
at 11:44
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

>

>
Apologies.
That's annoying
on our part.
Sorry
we are doubling up.
Will check
with them
and circle
back if
there
are any outstanding questions.

>

>

—

René
Marsh

>

CNN

>

Correspondent

>

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

>

Office: 202-777-7249

>

>

>

On 9/22/17, 12:43
PM,
"Heather
Swift"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

>

>

Rene
can you please coordinate
with your colleagues?
I've received

>

this inquiry
from several people
at CNN.

>

>

Heather
Swift

>

Press
Secretary

>

Department
of
the Interior

>

>

>>

On Sep
22, 2017,
at 11:35
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

>>

>>

Hello,

>>

>>

CNN
is looking

to get information
on Zinke's
travel
information.
When
he travels
by plane does
he always fly
commercial?
Private
?

>>

>>
Thank
you,

>>
Rene
Marsh

>>
CNN

>>

>>
Sent
from my iPhone

>

>

From: Russell Newell
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: CNN
Date: Saturday, October 07, 2017 2:23:58 PM

She sounds like one

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 7, 2017, at 7:34 AM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Rene is a fucking idiot.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 8:31 PM, Russell Newell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I was about to send this to Rene but I'll send to you instead and maybe it will make me feel better. Just had to get it off my chest. The double standard is nauseating.

Rene - I'm curious whether you ever asked these types of questions to Jewell or Salazar - about how they traveled and whether they took charters or spoke at political events or had spouses participate in any events with them. I don't recall the same level of concern about how they spent the taxpayer's dollars or the public's right to know about their travel. Have you ever bothered to learn about their travel to try to provide some context or do you care?

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 6, 2017, at 5:18 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press <interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather,

We have repeatedly asked the press office for answers to the below questions and for 4 days now we have been told you are working on it and today we've received no response at all. We are asking questions that the public has every right to know as these are their tax dollars and for Interior not answer any of the below questions is really hard to understand. Is the DOI issuing a no comment on all of the below questions?

Thank you,
— René Marsh
CNN
Correspondent
Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN
Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Date: Friday, October 6, 2017 at 1:46 PM

To: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, "russell_newell@ios.doi.gov" <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

Heather,

Circling back again. It's been a few days now.
Reupping the questions CNN has.

What was
the purpose of his speech to the Vegas
Golden
Knights
Hockey team in June?
Who invited Zinke to give the speech to the team?
Who owned the plane that Zinke flew on from Vegas to Montana?
Who else was on board the plane from Vegas to Montana?
Zinke's
schedule shows on 4/28 he traveled from DC to Atlanta.
How did
he travel?
Commercial?
Government
plane?
Private?
On June 22
how did

Zinke travel to his meeting in West
Virginia?
Did he use a Park
Police
Chopper?
What is the cost estimate for use of the chopper?
On July 7
why did
the Secretary
travel using a USPP helicopter?
What was the cost associated with the use of the helicopter?
Can you tell us about the flight on July 20th.
Was that a
commercial flight? If so please
share the flight details?

CNN is looking for justification for why Zinke's wife accompanied him on the following trips : Las Vegas, Greenland and Alaska?

When on these trips does Mrs. Zinke participate in official meetings with the Secretary?

Justification for Mrs. Zinke to have a desk there at Interior?

Did Mrs. Zinke reimburse the government for these flights? When? How much was reimbursed?

Thank you
Rene Marsh
CNN

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 5, 2017, at 9:24 AM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Working on it. The person who handles the Secretary's travel is currently out of the office so it's taking a little longer than usual. Apologies for the delay.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 5, 2017, at 9:11 AM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press <interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather good morning,

Circling back on this request again this morning.
Hoping to get something from you today.

Thank you,
Rene Marsh

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 4, 2017, at 1:02 PM, Marsh, Rene <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com> wrote:

Good afternoon Heather,

Do you have a sense of timing for when we can expect a response to the below inquiry ?

Thank you
Rene Marsh
CNN

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 3, 2017, at 7:08 PM,
Heather Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi Rene. Checking into this for you.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the
Interior

On Oct 3, 2017, at 4:32 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via

Interior Press

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Hi Heather,

CNN has additional questions on the Secretary's travel.

What was the purpose of his speech to the Vegas Golden Knights Hockey team in June?

Who invited Zinke to give the speech to the team?

Who owned the plane that Zinke flew on from Vegas to Montana?

Who else was on board the plane from Vegas to Montana?

Zinke's schedule shows on 4/28 he traveled from DC to Atlanta.

How did he travel?

Commercial?
Government plane?
Private?

On June 22
how did Zinke travel to his meeting in West
Virginia?
Did he use a Park Police
Chopper?
What is the cost estimate for use of the chopper?
On July 7
why did the Secretary travel using a USPP helicopter?
What was the cost associated with the use of the helicopter?
Can you tell us about the flight on July 20th.
Was that a
commercial flight? If so please
share the flight details?

Thank you,
— René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN
Office:
202- 777-7249

From:

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Friday,
September
29, 2017 at
2:49 PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re: CNN

The $12k is for Nevada.
The $3k is for the flights between
the
islands.

Also, for your reference,
Secretary
Jewell
also took a number of charter
aircraft,
including but not limited to

the following:

- 1/14/16
$9,800
roundtrip
between Albuquerque, NM
-->
Farmington,
NM
- 5/3/16
$13,605
Helena,
MT -
->
Browning,
MT
(this is about a three hour drive)
Browning,
MT -
->
Palm Springs
- 8/24/16
$20,383
Bakersfield,
CA -
->
Kalispell,
MT -
->
Livingston,
MT
- There
were also
at least two military aircraft
flights
on 9/5/13 between Honolulu

and
the Marshall Islands,
and 5/13/14
DC
to
St.
Louis.

-

Heather
Swift
Department
of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri,
Sep 29,
2017 at
2:43 PM,
'Marsh,
Rene' via
Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi there,

I am getting a bit confused

.
Can you send the breakdown of flights and costs
so I am clear on what cost
what?

I see $ 3,150 --- that's the flight

from where to where
The $12375-that's round trip between
st. croix
and st.
Thomas

We are on deadline
. also looking
to confirm
the charter company used. I see youre quoted
as confirming that but if reports
as you point out have been inaccurate
I need to get it confirmed with you myself.

— René
Marsh
CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:

@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:

202- 777-7249

From:

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 2:18
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

3/31/17
USVI
flights
were - $3,150

-

Heather
Swift
Department
of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri,
Sep 29,
2017 at 1:36
PM,
Heather
Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

The
flight between two islands in the US
VI.
Yes
that cost is correct.
We
have not yet been billed on the military air asset to the wildfire.

Heather
Swift
Press
Secretary
Department
of the Interior

On Sep 29, 2017,
at 1:21
PM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

You

are quoted
as saying one
of
the flights
costs
12,375.
Which costs
are you waiting
on?
Can
you provide
the costs
you already
have?

Thank
you,
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:
Heather
Swift
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 1:16
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Miranda
Green

Heather
Swift
Press
Secretary
Department
of
the Interior

On Sep 29, 2017,
at 1:14
PM,
'Marsh,

Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

We
are looking
for
the cost
of
the flights?

I don't see that below.

B =y
the way who did
you provide this info
to earlier
?

—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:

Heather
Swift

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 1:12
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"

<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,

"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"

<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,

"Levitt,
Ross"

<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,

Gregory
Wallace

<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

The
below
information
was supplied
to your colleague
earlier.

On
the record

As
is consistent
with
the travel
of previous
Interior
secretaries,
the Secretary traveled
on charter
flights
when there
were
no
commercial options
available.
All
travel
is pre-approved
by
the ethics
office

and
the travel lawyers
in
the Division
of General
Law (statement from them
below)
before booking,
and
the charter
flights went through
an additional level
of due diligence.

Taxpayers absolutely have a right

to know how much official government
travel
costs.
It's common sense.
At
the Department
we make those documents
available
to
the public.
Using tax dollars wisely
and ethically
is a big responsibility
and
is
at

the heart
of good
government.
Unfortunately
there
are some times when Interior
has
to utilize charter services because
we often travel
to areas
that don't have a lot
of flight
options.

Standard operating procedure

is that
the Secretary
and staff fly
on
a
commercial,
government,
coach fare whenever possible.

"The Scheduling
Office
meets regularly
with
the Departmental Ethics
Office
and
the Division
of General
Law
to ensure that

all travel
is thoroughly reviewed
and approved
in advance
and that it
is fully compliant
with
all applicable
laws,
rules,
and regulations.

Consistent
with this process,
the trip
was reviewed
and approved
in advance
by both
the Departmental

Ethics
Office
and
the Division
of General
Law.

In short,
the
trip

**-
including
the Secretary's address
to
the hockey
developmental squad

**-
was completely compliant
with
all applicable
laws,
rules,
and regulations." -

**-
Joint Statement
from Melinda

Loftin
(Department
of
the Interior
Designated Agency
Ethics
Official
and Director
of
the Departmental Ethics
Office)
and Edward Keable
(Deputy Solicitor
-
General
Law). Both
are career members
of
the Senior
Executive Service.

On background

Regarding

the ownership
of
the plane:
the Secretary
has never met or spoken
to Mr Neilson
and that
the charter
plane company
is a vendor
of
the federal government.
It
was selected
by career officials
a thousand miles away

in Boise
or Atlanta
after cost analysis.
Furthermore,
that company
had years
of federal contracts
before
the Secretary
was even sworn into office.

The WP piece
was false through omission where it said
commercial flights
are available between LAS

and FCA.
In fact
there
are exactly 0 commercial flights leaving after 8PM
that would have got
the Secretary
to FCA
in time
for
an 8:30AMmeeting.

The WP
was wrong when said
there
were multiple political events,

there
were not.
He attended single political event
for Senator
Daines
in Big Sky
when he
was already scheduled
to be
in
the area
and it
was no
cost
to
the Department.

The WP

piece
is false through omission
on
the Yellowstone aspect
by making
it sound like
the itinerary
was light.
In fact,
the itinerary
in Yellowstone
was robust.
Yellowstone
has a serious sexual harassment
situation?
The Secretary traveled
there
to meet

with
the superintendent
and
the staff
about
it.

The
park
is also
in hot negotiations
with tribes
on a number
of fronts
that needed
the secretary's
time.

All
of these things
were also part of
the secretary's

trip
in addition
to meeting
the employees
he oversees.

On
the point
of
the UNITED STATES
Virgin
Islands.
Again another lie through omission
and leading readers
to believe
he
is
at a foreign "Caribbean"
islands rather than

an American territory
that is overseen
by
the Department.
That itinerary included
several hours
of official government
events
and ceremonies
as well
as meeting
with American military veterans
from
the territory
and a visit
to a National Park

that is under
the jurisdiction
of
the Department.

Lastly-
The
politico piece did not accurately describe
the Montana
portion
of
the trip.
The Secretary's itinerary began
with meetings
at 8:30
AM then included
a keynote speech

to
the Western
Governor's Association (which is led by Montana's Democratic governor),
a
press conference,
a working lunch
with
governors,
and other engagements.

Three
Charter
Flights

3/31

Trip:
USVI
Centennial
Transfer
Day Ceremony

(The 100 year anniversary
of
the Danish
government
turning over the Virgin Islands
to the United States.
DOI
has jurisdiction
over territories) Also attending
the ceremonies
were
the Danish
Prime Minister
and Governor
Mapp
as well
as several other high ranking government officials.

Flight

Plan:

St

Croix

-

-

>

St

Thomas

-

-

>

St

Croix

Reason:

No

commercial

flight

were available

for

the itinerary

of

official

government

events.

Payment:

the

Secretary

and

staff

tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget.

5/17

Trip: CODEL
to Norway
and Greenland
with additional stops
in Alaska

Senate
Energy
and Natural Resources Committee organized
the Arctic
CODEL.
The Committee
organized

and utilized a charter
in northern
Alaska.
Flight
Plan:
Deadhorse,
AK

-

-

>

Alpine,
AK

-

-

>

Fairbanks

Reason:
Commercial
flights
were not an option

Payment:
the Secretary
and
the staff
tickets
were paid
out

of
the DOI
budget.

6/26

Las Vegas
to Kalispell,
MT
for
the Western
Governors
Association annual meeting.

The Secretary
had events
and speaking engagements
in
the evening
in Nevada
and
in
the morning
in

Montana.

Flight
Plan: Las Vegas

-

-

>

Kalispell

Reason:

No
commercial flight
available

to get

the

Secretary

and necessary

staff

to

the morning

Montana

events

on

time.

The

Secretary's

speech

ended at 7:45PM and

he

had

a meeting at 8:30 the following

morning.
The
charter
landed at 1:30AM.
The
secretary
had multiple events
at
the Western
Governors
Association

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget

Heather
Swift
Press
Secretary
Department
of
the Interior

On Sep

29, 2017,
at 1:09
PM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Good afternoon
Heather,

CNN
is circling
back
on this request.

Thank
you,
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:
"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Date:

Friday,
September 29, 2017
at 11:16
AM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>,
"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Good Morning
Heather,

CNN
is looking
to confirm
the costs
of all
of
the charters

you outlined below.
We
are also looking
to confirm
the name
of
the charter company
that provided
the flights
for
the Secretary's official travel.

Besides
these charter
flights
you noted below
has
the Secretary
also used military/government
planes?
If
so can you outline dates,
times,
places,
justification?

Many
thanks,
—

René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Date:

Thursday,
September 28, 2017
at 3:14
PM

To:

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>,
"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,

Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Thank
you
Heather

—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Thursday,
September 28, 2017
at 2:13
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

I don't have
that information immediately
available.
Will put
a request
in.

-

Heather
Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 2:09
PM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior

Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thank
you
Heather.

What type
of aircraft
were these private planes?
What
was
the cost
for these trips
that came out
of
the DOI
budget?

Thank
you
—
René
Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:
202-777-7249

From:

"Swift,
Heather"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Thursday,
September 28, 2017
at 2:05
PM

To:

"Marsh,
Rene"
<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,
"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"
<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,
"Levitt,
Ross"
<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,
Gregory
Wallace
<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

Rene

-

also want
to add
on
the Alaska
portion that was part
of
the CODEL
arranged
by Senate

ENR.

-
Heather
Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 12:17
PM,
Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

-
Heather
Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017
at 11:56
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thanks
Heather.

What type
of planes
were these charter
flights?

Can
you please check
and confirm?

We
are also looking
to get

a better understanding about why

commercial flights
were listed
as

not an option
for
the 5/17
trip?

There
was no
commercial flight
available
for
the route/schedule.
Getting around
in
the Arctic Circle

is not like catching
a flight
out
of Washington,
D.C.

For
the 6/26
trip
what were
the times
of his commitment?

What
time
were
the events scheduled
for
in Nevada?
What
time
was
the speaking engagement scheduled
for
the next morning
in Montana?

The event ended around 8:00PM
in NV.
He arrived
in

MT around
2:00AM
and
the Secretary
had meetings
with governors
and public lands advocates
the following morning beginning
at 8:45AM.
The Western
Governors
Association
-
led by
a Democratic
governor
-
invited
the Secretary
to speak.

Is
it safe
to assume
the secretary flew commercial
from Washington
D.C.
to places
like Vegas,
Alaska
and
St.
Croix

before boarding
the private flights
in those places?

Yes

-
the Secretary flew
to Nevada
and
the USVI
on
a commercial,
coach,
government
fare.

He got
to Alaska
by way
of
the CODEL which was arranged
by
the Senate.

He left Alaska
on
a commercial,
coach,
government
fare.

Thank
you,
—
René

Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter:

@Rene_MarshCNN

Office:

202-

777-

7249

From:

"Swift,

Heather"

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date:

Thursday,

September

28,

2017

at 11:31

AM

To:

"Marsh,

Rene"

<Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc:

"interior_press@ios.doi.gov"

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>,

"russell_newell@ios.doi.gov"

<russell_newell@ios.doi.gov>,

"Levitt,

Ross"

<Ross.Levitt@turner.com>,

Gregory

Wallace

<gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject:

Re:
CNN

I sent this
to Hannah
Lang.

Three
Charter
Flights

3/31

Trip:
USVI
Centennial
Transfer
Day Ceremony
(The 100 year anniversary
of
the Danish
government
turning over the Virgin Islands
to the United States.
DOI
has jurisdiction
over territories)

Also attending
the ceremonies
were
the Danish
Prime Minister
and

Governor
Mapp.

Flight
Plan:
St
Croix

-

-

>

St
Thomas

-

-

>

St
Croix

Reason:
No
commercial flight
were available

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget.

5/17

Trip: CODEL
to Norway
and Greenland
with additional stops
in Alaska

Senate
Energy
and Natural Resources Committee organized

the Arctic
CODEL.
The Committee organized
and utilized
a charter.

Flight
Plan:
Deadhorse,
AK

-

-

>

Alpine,
AK

-

-

>

Fairbanks

Reason:
Commercial
flights
were not an option

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff
tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget.

6/26

Las Vegas
to Kali spell,

MT
for
the Western
Governors
Association annual meeting.

The Secretary
had two speaking engagements,
in
the evening
in Nevada
and
in
the morning
in Montana.

Flight
Plan: Las Vegas
-
-
>
Kalispell

Reason:
No
commercial flight
available
to get the Secretary
and necessary
staff
to the event
on time.

Payment:
the Secretary
and staff

tickets
were paid
out
of
the DOI
budget

The Secretary took a military jet once
with U.S.
Secretary
of Agriculture
Sonny
Purdue
after he
was invited
by USDA
to attend
a briefing
at a wildfire
camp
in Montana.
The fire
was one
of
the most highpriority
in
the country
and
a firefighter
had died battling

the blaze earlier
in
the summer.
(The two departments co-manage wildfire fighting efforts
for
the federal government.
)

The Secretary
also travels military jet when he travels
with POTUS
or VPOTUS.
There
have been three such trips
to Cincinnati,
West Virginia,
and Atlanta.

-
Heather
Swift
Department
of
the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov

1

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu,
Sep
28, 2017

at 11:20
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'

via Interior
Press

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Morning
Heather,

I checked
in
with my colleagues
and they say they never received
a response
on this topic
from Interior.
Could
you please provide?

We
are looking
to find out
has
the Secretary chartered private planes

for his travels while
in
office?
Government/military planes during his time
in
office?
How
many times?

Was
commercial considered
as
the first option?

Justification
for flying
private?

Thank
you,

Rene
Marsh

CNN

On 9/22/17, 12:53
PM,
"Heather
Swift"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

We
do

it here
too.

Heather
Swift

Press
Secretary

Department
of
the Interior

>
On Sep
22, 2017,
at 11:44
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

>

>
Apologies.
That's annoying
on our part.
Sorry
we are doubling up.
Will check
with them
and circle
back if
there
are any outstanding questions.

>

>
—
René
Marsh

>
CNN

>
Correspondent

>

Twitter:
@Rene_MarshCNN

>

Office:
202-777-7249

>

>

>

On 9/22/17, 12:43
PM,
"Heather
Swift"
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

>

>

Rene
can

you please coordinate
with your colleagues?
I've received

>

this inquiry
from several people
at CNN.

>

>

Heather
Swift

>

Press
Secretary

>

Department
of
the Interior

>

>

>>

On Sep
22, 2017,
at 11:35
AM,
'Marsh,
Rene'
via Interior
Press

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

>>

>>

Hello,

>>

>>

CNN
is looking
to get information

on Zinke's
travel
information.
When
he travels
by plane
does
he always fly
commercial?
Private
?

>>

>>
Thank
you,

>>
Rene
Marsh

>>
CNN

>>

>>

Sent
from my iPhone

>

>

From: "Marsh, Rene" via Interior Press
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov; Paul Ross; Levitt, Ross; Wallace, Gregory
Subject: Re: CNN
Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 2:46:16 PM

One additional question beyond the content of the email sent from Techmanski to Zinke. I understand in 2016, then-Congressman Rep. Zinke's office reached out to local officials in Montana about a Whitefish Energy project. Can you the Secretary provide you with insight on why he intervened? What sort of assistance did Zinke's office provide to Whitefish?

Thank you,

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 at 1:37 PM
To: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>
Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>
Subject: Re: CNN

yep

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 24, 2017 at 1:36 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press <interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hoping for transparency on the content of that email as I am sure the Secretary can confirm.

Thank you,

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 at 1:33 PM

To: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

Will get back to you if i find out if there was a request or not.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 24, 2017 at 1:30 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press <interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

What was the request?

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 at 1:27 PM

To: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

there was no action taken on it.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 24, 2017 at 1:25 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thank you. What was the gentleman (I assume you mean Mr. Techmanskis?) requesting in the email that you mention?

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 at 1:21 PM

To: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

background: No. The gentleman sent an email but there was not action taken on it (no reply, forward, discussion, etc).

Not for a statement, just for your context - The secretary's phone number and email address have been published multiple times over the years so he gets a lot of emails/cold calls/letters.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 24, 2017 at 1:07 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press
<interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks Heather.

Did the Secretary work with or communicate with Techmanskis in the aftermath of the hurricane? Were they in communication after the hurricane discussing any aspect of the recovery effort or anything else?

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 at 12:20 PM

To: "Marsh, Rene" <Rene.Marsh@cnn.com>

Cc: "interior_press@ios.doi.gov" <interior_press@ios.doi.gov>, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>, "Levitt, Ross" <Ross.Levitt@turner.com>, Gregory Wallace <gregory.wallace@turner.com>

Subject: Re: CNN

On background

Neither the Secretary nor anyone in his office have taken any meetings or action on behalf of this company and played no role in anything to do with any contracts.

The Zinkes and the Techmanskis know each other because they both live in a small town (population 6,000) where everyone knows everyone and his son joined a friend who worked a summer job at one of their construction sites.

Interior has jurisdiction of the territories and insular areas however does not oversee Puerto Rico. DOI employees in Puerto Rico are continuing with response and recovery operations. There efforts focuses on accounting for employees at impacted parks and refuges, organizing for the work ahead, and bringing in additional staff resources that will conduct damage assessments, coordinate debris removal, and provide access to park areas. DOI employees also coordinate closely with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), in support of Federal response Emergency Support Functions.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Oct 24, 2017 at 12:16 PM, 'Marsh, Rene' via Interior Press

<interior_press@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Good afternoon Heather,

CNN is looking for information/clarity on Secretary Zinke and his familiarity with Andrew Techmanski, the CEO of Whitefish Energy.

Have the two worked together before? In what capacity?

How Does the Secretary know Techmanski?

Has Techmanski or any of his business partners worked with Zinke on any projects either as Secretary or when Zinke was a member of congress?

Did Zinke recommend Whitefish Energy for the contract to help restore Puerto Rico?

Did Zinke have any influence or involvement either directly or indirectly with Whitefish securing the contract in Puerto Rico?

Has this company or any of its leadership, including the CEO, had any political connections to Zinke or his wife during their political careers. Donations directly or indirectly?

What was/is the Secretary's involvement in the overall recovery process for Puerto Rico?

We are working on deadline.

Thank you,

— René Marsh

CNN

Correspondent

Twitter: @Rene_MarshCNN

Office: 202- 777-7249

From: Jorjani, Daniel
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Connecting appointees
Date: Tuesday, November 21, 2017 11:27:18 AM

Happy to reach out to her and grab a cup of coffee.

Daniel H. Jorjani
U.S. Department of the Interior
Acting Solicitor & Principal Deputy Solicitor
Main Interior Building, Suite 6356
☎ 202-219-3861 (Voice)
☎ 202-706-9018 (Cell)
daniel.jorjani@sol.doi.gov

This electronic message contains information generated by the US Department of the Interior solely for the intended recipients. Any unauthorized interception of this message or the use or disclosure of the information it contains may violate the law and subject the violator to civil or criminal penalties. If you believe you have received this message in error, please notify the sender and delete the email immediately.

On Tue, Nov 21, 2017 at 11:07 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Dan - just for consideration, one of our friends at EPA , John Konkus, has asked me if there are any solicitors at Interior who would be willing to have a cup of coffee with his wife , Mary Thomas <Mary.Thomas2@usdoj.gov>.

She is an attorney with DOJ with a background in land use. (see details below) John said she's looking for some networking and professional relationships , particularly those in land use law since that's where her experience and interest is.

Mary has been in practice since 2005. She was the FL Department of Community Affairs Assistant General Counsel for land use, growth management and administrative law. From there she became Governor Rick Scott's land use and environmental attorney for the majority of his first term and was his negotiator during the BP oil spill settlement. Governor Scott then selected her to be an agency general counsel. She also has an LL.M. in real property development from the University of Miami School of Law.

Please don't feel like you have to fit this in as a favor to me. I don't know Mary, I have worked with her husband and found him to always be helpful to us.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Heather Swift
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Tami Heilemann; timothy_bergling@ios.doi.gov; thomas_baptiste@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: Content for AK Video
Date: Thursday, June 01, 2017 12:07:57 PM

Perfecto

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 1, 2017, at 12:05 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

>

> Hi from the air--

> I defer to Heather and Tim to wordsmith these blurbs for the video,

> but below please find his schedule with some notes from each > meeting/event that I think would be worthy of inclusion. Use as > needed. They are in chron order.

> Thanks!

> L

>

> Byers Lake/Rolling Thunder

> I was not there but understand that the Secretary joined Sen.

> Murkowski and GOV Walker at a moving Memorial Day ceremony (where he > offered remarks). The day also included a motorcycle ride with fellow > vets. Tami, anything else to add? How many attendees?

>

> Stopped by the Denali National Park and Preserve Visitor's center > where he was greeted by Superintendent Don Striker and other NPS > regional leadership. Got his passport stamped.

>

> Enjoyed meeting the dog sled pups, which are now almost full grown.

> Then had a BBQ with Park leadership and their spouses where they > enjoyed some local game.

>

> Went on a few mile hike in Denali with the Superintendent and his wife > and other NPS leadership. We could also add that it's Denali 's 100th > anniversary this year (just celebrated in Feb). We saw a Moose on the > way out of the park.

>

> When in Anchorage, he met with Alaska Native Veterans, mostly Vietnam > vets in Sen. Sullivan's office. They presented him with a beautiful > choker necklace made locally.

>

> Toured the DOI Regional Office of Aviation services and learned about > how they service the planes for all DOI bureaus in the region. I'm > sure you could google some quick facts if you want to add color.

> Enjoyed a lunch BBQ with local aviation staff as well as regional > leadership from all bureaus in Alaska.

>

> Was then briefed by BOEM and BLM regional leadership about energy > development in Alaska.

>

> Enjoyed spending time speaking at an "all hands" meeting for all AK

> DOI staff where he laid out his vision for the department. The large > convention room was packed, standing room only. Had an extensive > question and answer period with the Secretary. He really appreciated > their engagement and feedback.

>
> Then he had a very positive and productive meeting with a dozen or so > Native Alaskan leaders and the leadership of the Alaska Federation of > Natives, hosted by Senator Murkowski and joined by Rep. Don Young and > Sen. Dan Sullivan. They then had a media availability afterward > talking about how the Secretary is making sure that Alaskans and > Native Alaskans have a voice and collaboration with locals and > consultation with Tribes and Native Alaskans will be cornerstones of > the Trump administration.
>
> Secretary then met with the North Slope Borough Mayor Harry Brower, > Jr. they had a productive conversation where the mayor talked about > the importance of energy development and sustainable hunting for their > people.
>
> Secretary offered keynote remarks at the Alaska Oil and Gas > Association Annual Conference and signed the Secretarial order (you > can pull language from the press release).
>
> To round out his visit, he went to the Arctic Valley Nike Site Summit > by helo and enjoyed a nice hike. I wasn't on that part of the trip.
>
> Hope this is helpful.
> Thanks,
> L
>
>
> Laura Keehner Rigas
> Communications Director
> U.S. Department of the Interior
> (202) 897-7022 cell
> @Interior

From: Rees, Gareth
To: Newell, Russell
Cc: Swift, Heather; Bullock, Wesley; Todd Willens; Lori Mashburn; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: Dep Sec Swearing-In Doc
Date: Monday, July 31, 2017 4:35:50 PM
Attachments: Dep_Sec_Bernhardt_Swearing_In.docx

See attached

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 4:33 PM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Luke - can you send me the attached please?

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 4:30 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Thanks. Looping in Russ as he is running point on DB's communications. FYI - I'm out of the office with the Congressional Sportsmens Foundation tomorrow. Will be in around 2:00.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 3:59 PM, Bullock, Wesley <wesley_bullock@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

All,

Please take a look at the attached document. Note, that the oath of office script will be on a card for the Secretary to use. Please let me know if I need to make any additions or edits.

Thanks,

Luke

--

Wesley L. Bullock

Office of the Secretary

(202) 208-4894 Office

(202) 897-7225 Mobile

--

Gareth C. Rees

Office to the Deputy Secretary

U.S. Department of the Interior

Tel: 202-208-6291

Fax: 202-208-1873

Cell: 202-957-8299

From: Bullock, Wesley
To: Swift, Heather; Russell Newell
Cc: Rees, Gareth; Todd Willens; Lori Mashburn
Subject: Re: Dep Sec Swearing-In Doc
Date: Monday, July 31, 2017 4:50:52 PM
Attachments: Dep_Sec_Bernhardt_Swearing_In.docx

Attached updated.

Thanks,

WLB

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 4:48 PM, Bullock, Wesley <wesley_bullock@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I can get pix. Angela is removed. Todd and Jim are added.

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 4:46 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Will need a member of staff to snap a couple pix on their iphone for Z and DB twitter accounts.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 4:45 PM, Rees, Gareth <gareth_rees@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
We should also remove Angela Kelsey, she no longer is at DOI

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 4:37 PM, Rees, Gareth <gareth_rees@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
We should probably add Todd and Jim to the guest list

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 3:59 PM, Bullock, Wesley <wesley_bullock@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
All,

Please take a look at the attached document. Note, that the oath of office script will be on a card for the Secretary to use. Please let me know if I need to make any additions or edits.

Thanks,

Luke

--

Wesley L. Bullock

Office of the Secretary

(202) 208-4894 Office

(202) 897-7225 Mobile

--

Gareth C. Rees
Office to the Deputy Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
Tel: 202-208-6291
Fax: 202-208-1873
Cell: 202-957-8299

--

Gareth C. Rees
Office to the Deputy Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
Tel: 202-208-6291
Fax: 202-208-1873
Cell: 202-957-8299

--

Wesley L. Bullock

Office of the Secretary

(202) 208-4894 Office

(202) 897-7225 Mobile

--

Wesley L. Bullock

Office of the Secretary

(202) 208-4894 Office

(202) 897-7225 Mobile

From: Timothy Williams
To: Chambers, Micah
Cc: Swift, Heather; Roddy, Russell; Laura Rigas; Caroline Boulton; Downey Magallanes; Steven Smith
Subject: Re: Details for Antietam
Date: Monday, July 03, 2017 3:20:54 PM

The Governor will be unable to attend the event.

Tim Williams

Timothy Williams
External and Intergovernmental Affairs
Department of the Interior
Cell: (202) 706-4982

On Jul 3, 2017, at 9:17 AM, Chambers, Micah <micah_chambers@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Did we get any sort of confirmation/readout on the Governor?

On Mon, Jul 3, 2017 at 8:45 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Rusty. What we are thinking is having press van leave DOI around 8:00-8:30. Press would do an abbreviated tour and the press conference.

Do you think it would be possible to have some sort of B-Roll and photography opportunities for press to get Z at the battlefield and where the POTUS donation will be spent?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Sat, Jul 1, 2017 at 11:52 PM, Roddy, Russell <russell_rodny@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey...not sure if anyone replied...but, this is what we have SO FAR (will be out there on Monday to do walk thru with them at 1:00 pm...and will finalize all details then). Note: not sure if you are planning to go or who else is planning to go and how but wanted to give you a head's up that Mrs. Zinke will be going with the Secretary so you can plan briefing, etc. ahead of time accordingly:

8:00-9:30am EDT: Depart Residence en route Sharpsburg, MD
Location:

Antietam National Battlefield
5831 Dunker Church Road
Sharpsburg, MD 21782

9:30-9:45am EDT: Arrive Antietam National Battlefield // Proceed to Passenger Van

Location: Visitor Center

Antietam National Battlefield

Greeted By:

Jim Lighthizer, Civil War Trust President

Will Shafroth, National Park Foundation President

John Nau, Civil War Trust and National Park Foundation Board Member and guest

Susan Trail, Antietam NB Superintendent

Keith Snider, Antietam NB Chief of Interpretation

Paul Coussan or Jim Campi, Civil War Trust

9:45-11:30am EDT: Driving Tour of Antietam National Battlefield

To See:

The Cornfield

Bloody Lane

Lower Bridge

11:30-12:15pm EDT: Civil War Grant Announcement & Media Availability

Location: Maryland Monument

Participants:

RKZ

Susan Trail, Superintendent, Antietam National Battlefield

Jim Lighthizer, President, Civil War Trust

John Nau, Chairman emeritus, Civil War Trust

Will Shafroth, National Park Foundation President

12:15-12:30pm EDT: Meet & Greet with DOI Employees

Location: Maryland Monument

12:30-1:30pm EDT: Lunch

Location: Mumma Barn

1:30-3:00pm EDT: Depart Sharpsburg, MD en route DOI

On Fri, Jun 30, 2017 at 11:58 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi guys --

Can you pls send the address for the event and the general sketch of the timing so we can send to our respective constituencies?

Thanks!

My best,

L

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

--

Micah Chambers
Acting Director
Office of Congressional & Legislative Affairs
Office of the Secretary of the Interior

From: Domenech, Douglas
To: Heather Swift
Cc: David Bernhardt; Scott Hommel; Micah Chambers
Subject: Re: Did you see?
Date: Wednesday, September 13, 2017 2:42:57 PM

ha

Doug Domenech
Senior Advisor
US Department of the Interior

NOTE: Every email I send or receive is subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act.

On Wed, Sep 13, 2017 at 2:23 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Yep. From the person who has spent the past three decades trying to rewrite history.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 13, 2017, at 2:11 PM, Domenech, Douglas <douglas_domenech@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke also makes a cameo: Clinton recounts an awkward encounter at the inauguration when she said she was surprised Zinke came over to greet her because in 2014 he had called her the "Antichrist." "Maybe he'd forgotten, because he didn't come equipped with any garlic or wooden stakes, or whatever one uses to ward off the Antichrist. But I hadn't forgotten," Clinton writes, adding that she absolutely reminded Zinke of his remark. "He was taken aback and mumbled something about not having meant it. One thing I've learned over the years is how easy it is for some people to say horrible things about me when I'm not around, but how hard it is for them to look me in the eye and say it to my face." (Zinke's wife, Lola, disputed the story.)

Doug Domenech
Senior Advisor
US Department of the Interior

NOTE: Every email I send or receive is subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act.

From: Vincent Devito
To: Laura Rigas; Swift, Heather; Russell Newell; Micah Chambers
Subject: Re: DOI comments to FERC: Grid Reliability and Resilience Pricing # RM18-1-000
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 10:55:57 PM
Attachments: ATT00001.htm
policy-international-affairs

Hi: Please post to one of our pages. Maybe this is best - a policy page:

From: Hinson, Alex
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: DOI Daily Comms
Date: Friday, October 27, 2017 5:34:27 PM

Ah! Thanks a ton for letting me know! I'm headed (b) (6) but thanks again for the heads up.

On Fri, Oct 27, 2017 at 5:30 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
A bunch of us are at The Exchange

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 27, 2017, at 5:21 PM, Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

INTERIOR

WASHINGTON

10/27/2017

DAILY COMMUNICATIONS REPORT

TO: White House Cabinet Affairs Communications

FROM: Department of the Interior Communications Team

SUBJECT: Communications Update

Press Inquiries:

- Small inquiries and logistical inquiries.
- E&E News: (Maxine Joselow) --REQUEST—As I'm the regulations reporter for E&E News. I'm in charge of helping with our Q&A section, and I was wondering if you'd be able to set up a short phone interview with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's wife Lola Zinke for a Q&A. I understand Ms. Zinke is very busy, so the conversation could be as short as 15 minutes, and it could occur anytime in the next month or so. I'm just hoping to ask her about leading Sen. John Tester's campaign, traveling with her husband, and other matters related to her daily life and activities.--RESPONSE-- The Department does not facilitate Mrs. Zinke's schedule.
- Reuters: (Susan Heavey)—REQUEST-- Does the Interior Dept or the secretary have any comment on this (FEMA statement on Whitefish Energy contact)? Also, can you tell us what is on the agenda for the secretary's meeting with the president later today?—RESPONSE— "I had absolutely nothing to do with Whitefish Energy receiving a contract in Puerto Rico. Any attempts by the dishonest media or political operatives to tie me to awarding or influencing any contract involving Whitefish are completely baseless. Only in elitist Washington, D.C., would being from a small town be considered a crime. “Neither myself nor anyone in my office has advocated for this company in anyway. After the initial contract was awarded, I was contacted by the company, on which I took no action. All records, which are being made available to appropriate officials, will prove no involvement. “I welcome any and all investigations into these allegations, and encourage the Interior Department’s Inspector General to investigate this matter fully.”

Top Stories

- Washington Post: Trump says he will shrink Bears Ears National Monument, a sacred tribal site in Utah
- Los Angeles Times: Trump plans to shrink two national monuments in Utah, senator says
- THE HILL: White House: Zinke told Trump he had 'no role' in Puerto Rico contract
- Washington Examiner: Ryan Zinke tells Trump he had no involvement in \$300 million Whitefish contract for Puerto Rico power grid

Top Issues and Accomplishments

- Interior continues to support all Hurricane Harvey, Hurricane Irma, Hurricane Maria, and Hurricane Nate efforts. All bureaus are executing their emergency plans and assisting in Hurricane relief.
- Today, Secretary Zinke met with POTUS.
- Next week, Secretary Zinke is out on personal leave.

###

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

<WH Daily comms update 10-27.docx>

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Swift, Heather
To: Konkus, John
Subject: Re: Downstairs
Date: Thursday, November 30, 2017 12:57:10 PM

He's such a good egg.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, Nov 30, 2017 at 12:45 PM, Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov> wrote:

Mary is meeting with Dan at 1pm...FYI. Thank you Heather!

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, November 21, 2017 11:45 AM
To: Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov>
Subject: Re: Downstairs

Our solicitor, Dan Jorjani, emailed her.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Nov 21, 2017 at 11:05 AM, Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov> wrote:

'Thomas, Mary (OJP)' <Mary.Thomas2@usdoj.gov>

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Tuesday, November 21, 2017 10:39 AM
To: Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov>
Subject: Re: Downstairs

What's her email?

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Nov 21, 2017 at 10:36 AM, Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov> wrote:

Thank you Heather!

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Tuesday, November 21, 2017 10:34 AM

To: Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov>

Subject: Re: Downstairs

Great - I'll get some folks emails for you.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Nov 21, 2017 at 10:32 AM, Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov> wrote:

She's been in practice since 2005. She was the FL Department of Community Affairs Assistant General Counsel for land use, growth management and administrative law. From there she became Governor Rick Scott's land use and environmental attorney for the majority of his first term and was his negotiator during the BP oil spill settlement. Governor Scott then selected her to be an agency general counsel. She also has an LL.M. in real property development from the University of Miami School of Law.

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Tuesday, November 21, 2017 10:24 AM

To: Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov>

Subject: Re: Downstairs

Always a busy day when you're fighting for America!

We for sure have a few folks here she should talk with. May I ask how long she has been in practice and what her experience with land use is?

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Nov 21, 2017 at 10:21 AM, Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov> wrote:

Heather: I see they're keeping you busy over there :) On a friendly note, I'm looking for an Interior political whom my wife can meet with in a networking capacity. Maybe you? Maybe someone you know? My wife (Mary Thomas) is a political appointee at DOJ. Her practice area is land use. She was offered the deputy water job here at EPA but decided to go to DOJ instead. However, her long term interest remains land use. Is there anyone in your agency you would recommend she meet with, just for coffee?

Thank you!

John

-----Original Message-----

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Monday, March 27, 2017 12:49 PM

To: Konkus, John <konkus.john@epa.gov>; Freire, JP <Freire.JP@epa.gov>

Subject: Downstairs

Sent from my iPhone

From: Maxine Joselow
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: RE: E&E News inquiry regarding Lola Zinke
Date: Friday, October 27, 2017 1:35:03 PM

OK, thanks for the response.

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Friday, October 27, 2017 1:27 PM
To: Maxine Joselow <mjoselow@eenews.net>
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: E&E News inquiry regarding Lola Zinke

The Department does not facilitate Mrs. Zinke's schedule.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Oct 27, 2017 at 10:42 AM, Maxine Joselow <mjoselow@eenews.net> wrote:

Hello,

I'm the regulations reporter for E&E News. I'm in charge of helping with our Q&A section, and I was wondering if you'd be able to set up a short phone interview with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's wife Lola Zinke for a Q&A.

I understand Ms. Zinke is very busy, so the conversation could be as short as 15 minutes, and it could occur anytime in the next month or so. I'm just hoping to ask her about leading Sen. John Tester's campaign, traveling with her husband, and other matters related to her daily life and activities.

Thanks very much for your consideration. Looking forward to hearing back.

Best,
Maxine

--

Maxine Joselow
E&E News reporter
202-737-4369
@maxinejoselow

E&E NEWS

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

www.eenews.net | @EENewsUpdates

Energywire, Climatewire, Greenwire, E&E Daily, E&E News PM

From: Heather Swift
To: Paul Bedard
Subject: Re: Facebook likes, really?
Date: Monday, October 30, 2017 8:47:51 AM

Oh good lord.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 30, 2017, at 6:24 AM, Paul Bedard <pbedard@washingtonexaminer.com> wrote:

The Post is "reporting" that it reported on the wife's likes? And that's an indictment? Oh boy...

--

Paul Bedard
The Washington Examiner
1152 15th St. NW
Suite 200
Washington, DC 20005
202-459-4901
pbedard@washingtonexaminer.com
<http://www.washingtonexaminer.com/politics/washington-secrets>

From: Benjamin Wolfgang
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Following up on Bernhardt
Date: Friday, July 21, 2017 4:41:17 PM

Great, thank you! Have a great weekend, Heather.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jul 21, 2017, at 4:17 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Ben - The Interior is excited to have David Bernhardt, a highly-qualified, veteran official, return to the Department to help advance Secretary Zinke and President Trump's America First policy priorities. Strongly-worded press releases issued by special interest groups alleging any wrongdoing are patently false and are desperate attempts to stop the progress that is being made at the Department on behalf of the American people.

Please see the Secretary's statement when David Bernhardt was announced. The Secretary stands by his word. <https://www.doi.gov/pressreleases/secretary-zinke-applauds-nomination-david-bernhardt-deputy-secretary-interior>

Background

Please see the attached doc with countless statements in support of Bernhardt's nomination from individuals and organizations who actually worked with him during his time at Interior.

Lastly, see below the press release from U.S. Senator Daines and the Western Caucus which demonstrates broad support for Bernhardt.

<3F2C747C-3960-4BED-8D36-C01BFD1ECB56.png>

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

July 13, 2017

Senate Western Caucus Urges Confirmation of Bernhardt for Deputy Secretary of the Interior

U.S. SENATE — Today, the Senate Western Caucus, led by Chairman Steve Daines (R-MT), urged the confirmation of Department of the Interior veteran David Bernhardt for Deputy Secretary of the U.S. Department of the Interior (DOI).

Bernhardt, a Westerner from Rifle, Colorado, brings years of personal experience as an avid hunter and fisherman as well as professional experience having served under former DOI Secretaries Gale Norton and Dirk Kempthorne in multiple positions.

Bernhardt was announced as President Donald J. Trump's choice for Deputy Secretary on April 28 and was subsequently approved by the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on June 6. Less than a month away from the August recess, the Senate has confirmed only 23 percent of President Trump's 216 nominations. By the first August recess during President Obama's first term, the Senate had confirmed 69 percent of his 454 nominations.

U.S. Senator Steve Daines (R-MT): "David Bernhardt will be a partner to Montanans and to Secretary Ryan Zinke – which makes for the best kind of Deputy Secretary of the Interior. David will work to improve access to public lands, restore American energy dominance and empower Montanans ability to best serve their families and communities. We need to confirm David Bernhardt so he can get to work on behalf of Montanans and the West."

U.S. Senator Cory Gardner (R-CO): "As a native Coloradan from Rifle, David Bernhardt has a deep understanding of Western land issues, and his expertise and experience will serve the Department well. Unfortunately, a partisan minority in the Senate continues to block Mr. Bernhardt's nomination, and I hope that the confirmation process has not become a broken process that disincentives qualified people, like Mr. Bernhardt, who are held in high professional regard, from becoming public servants."

U.S. Senator Jeff Flake (R-AZ): "David Bernhardt has the deep water background we need to continue efforts to protect our Colorado River supplies" said Senator Jeff Flake, the Chairman of the Water and Power Subcommittee of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. "We need this experienced nominee confirmed without delay."

U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-UT): "I applaud the nomination of Dave Bernhardt for Deputy Secretary of the Department of Interior. President Trump and Secretary Zinke have already made great progress in restoring trust between Westerners and the federal government, but significant work remains, especially in Utah where reduced access to our public land has hurt our rural economies. As a former Interior Solicitor, Dave has the legal and political background necessary to confront some of the most difficult challenges ahead, such as expanding responsible development of our natural resources, protecting and promoting multiple-use, and expanding opportunities for recreational access. I am confident that Dave's breadth of experience makes him uniquely qualified for this position, and I look forward to working with him."

U.S. Senator Mike Lee (R-UT): "I can think of no one who is more qualified to be deputy secretary of the Interior than David Bernhardt. He has a long track record of distinguished service in the department and he understands the importance of efficient and collaborative federal land and resource management. David's extensive knowledge, experience, and leadership will go a long way in advancing Secretary Zinke's goal of restoring the American people's trust in the Interior Department. I urge my colleagues to support David's nomination and confirm him as soon as possible."

U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski (R-AK): "Dave Bernhardt is an excellent choice to help set strategic direction and run the Department of the Interior on a day-to-day basis. He grew up in the West, has extensive knowledge of issues that are important to Alaskans, and will be a great asset to Secretary Zinke and his team. We reported his nomination from the Energy and Natural Resources Committee with bipartisan support more than a month ago, so I urge my colleagues to support the swift confirmation of this well-qualified nominee."

U.S. Senator John McCain (R-AZ): “David Bernhardt’s experience working on water policy and Native American issues makes him uniquely suited to serve as the Deputy Secretary of the Interior Department Administration. I am confident David will serve the state of Arizona and the nation with distinction, and I encourage my colleagues to vote in favor of his nomination.”

Bernhardt also has wide support from across the country:

- National Congress of American Indians
- Ducks Unlimited
- Boone and Crockett Club
- Southern Ute Indian Tribe
- NRA
- Delta Waterfowl
- Archery Trade Association
- Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies
- Camp Fire Club of America
- Congressional Sportsmen's Foundation
- Conservation Force
- Dallas Safari Club
- Houston Safari Club
- Masters of Foxhounds Association & Foundation
- Mule Deer Foundation
- National Shooting Sports Foundation
- National Wild Turkey Federation
- Orion - The Hunter's Institute
- Pheasants Forever
- Professional Outfitters and Guides of America
- Quail Forever
- Quality Deer Management Association
- Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation
- Safari Club International
- Shikar-Safari Club
- Sportsmen's Alliance
- Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership
- Wild Sheep Foundation
- Wildlife Forever
- Wildlife Management Institute
- Wildlife Mississippi
- American Recreation Coalition
- Boat U.S.
- International Snowmobile Manufacturers Association
- Marine Retailers Association of America
- Motorcycle Industry Council
- National Association of RV Parks and Campgrounds (ARVC)
- National Marine Manufacturers Association
- National Parks Hospitality Association
- Recreation Vehicle Dealers Association
- Recreation Vehicle Industry Association
- Recreational Off-Highway Vehicle Association
- Specialty Equipment Market Association
- Specialty Vehicle Institute of America
- Colorado River Water Conservation District
- Colorado Water Congress

- Family Farm Alliance
- Oneida Indian Nation
- Penobscot Nation
- Public Lands Council
- National Cattlemen's Beef Association
- Quapaw Tribe Of Oklahoma
- Seneca Nation of Indians
- Gila River Indian Community

Former United States Senator Jon Kyl (R-AZ): “Having worked with David Bernhardt for many years on a variety of Department of the Interior matters, in particular on Indian water settlements, I know he’ll be a great addition to the team.”

David Allen President/CEO Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation: “The Senate has not yet acted on several important positions that remain unfilled at the Interior Department. Among them is the nomination of David Bernhardt to be Deputy Secretary. This is a critical position that not only ensures the Department’s programs are run effectively, but also succeeds the Secretary in certain situations. Bernhardt is a Coloradan, a hunter and angler, and former high-ranking officer at Interior who understands the issues important to sportsmen and women. We encourage the Senate to act on his nomination without delay.”

Dale Hall, Chief Executive Officer, Ducks Unlimited: “I have known and worked with David for more than 10 years and could not be more pleased with his nomination for Deputy Secretary of the Interior. For David Bernhardt, integrity is doing the right thing even when the easiest decision would be to continue with the status quo. I believe David is a man with personal and professional integrity that is beyond reproach and has always advocated for the proper application of science and implementation of the law, especially when it comes to species conservation. I believe David will continue to advocate for sound and balanced resource management and advocate for the use of best available science.”

Whit Fosburgh, Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership President and CEO: “The Department of Interior, the chief steward of our national public lands, requires a Deputy Secretary who understands how the department functions and understands the complexities associated with balancing the resource needs of our country, both now, and most importantly, for future generations of Americans. David Bernhardt will provide much needed departmental experience to the Interior leadership team at a time when important natural resource decisions with wide impact are being considered.”

Jeffrey Vorberger, Vice President, Policy & Government Affairs of NOIA:

“NOIA strongly encourages the Senate to confirm David Bernhardt as the Deputy Secretary of the Interior sooner rather than later. Strong, experienced leadership at all levels of the Department are necessary as America strives to become energy dominant. David has a proven record, is beyond qualified and his extensive experience serving the Department of Interior under the George W. Bush administration will make him a vital asset to Secretary Zinke. Further delay on his confirmation is a lost opportunity.”

Peter Hayes, Associate General Manager & Chief Public Affairs Executive, Salt River Project: “David Bernhardt has for many years exhibited strong leadership on federal land, water, and natural resources policies, having previously served the public as a senior official at the Department of the Interior. SRP urges quick confirmation in the Senate for Mr. Bernhardt and looks forward to continuing its long-standing collaborative partnership with the Department under Secretary Zinke and Mr. Bernhardt's leadership.”

Russell Begaye, President of the Navajo Nation: “Mr. Bernhardt brings years of experience working on Indian country's most pressing issues. I look forward to working with him and the rest of the Department of the Interior leadership team to bring the Bureau of Indian Affairs into the 21st century.”

Stephen Roe Lewis, Governor, Gila River Indian Community, AZ: “Based on our experience in negotiating and working on complex issues with Mr. Bernhardt, we support his position as Deputy Secretary of the Department of the Interior. We believe he has an understanding of tribal sovereignty and the United States’ trust responsibility to tribal nations, including the Gila River Indian Community.”

White Mountain Apache Tribal Council, AZ: “David Bernhardt is respected by the White Mountain Apache Tribe and enjoys widespread respect in Indian Country as being fair and well versed in Native American issues and the historic time-honored government to government and trust relationship between Indian Nations and the United States.”

The position of Deputy Secretary of the Department of the Interior is the Chief Operating Officer of the Department and Bernhardt's nomination is subject to confirmation by the United States Senate.

Bernhardt also previously served as the United States Commissioner to the International Boundary Commission, U.S. and Canada. He earned his bachelor’s degree from the University of Northern Colorado and graduated with honors from George Washington University National Law Center. He recently served on the Board of Game and Inland Fisheries for the Commonwealth of Virginia, where he resides in Arlington with his wife Gena and their two children. As Deputy Secretary, Bernhardt will make Interior a better neighbor, ensure American energy dominance to create jobs and return Endangered Species Act to its original intent.

###

Contact: Marcie Kinzel, Katie Waldman

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Jul 21, 2017 at 2:50 PM, Benjamin Wolfgang

<bwolfgang@washingtontimes.com> wrote:

Hey Heather, just following up on David Bernhardt. Headed to a meeting this afternoon so I wanted to check in one more time.

Criticism is rolling in. I got this from the Northwest Guides and Anglers Association today:

"Before they vote on David Bernhardt's nomination, I hope Senators remember Bernhardt helped suppress scientific data during his time at Interior in the George W. Bush Administration. His lack of respect for the role of science in decision-making on issues affecting sportsmen and wildlife habitat raises major red flags for me. Senators should be equally concerned, and should vote against David Bernhardt."

And, as I mentioned earlier, this from Center for Biological Diversity, citing the complaint about his lobbying for Westlands Water District while on the transition team.

"These disturbing revelations should slam the brakes on this confirmation," said Noah Greenwald, the Center's endangered species director. "Bernhardt's close ties to the very industries he'd be charged with regulating at Interior are bad enough. But now that it appears he may have violated federal lobbying law, this appointment should be a sunk ship."

Writing a story to run in Monday's paper, ahead of the Senate vote. Does Interior have responses to these specific charges, or any other comment? Thanks!

Best,

Ben

--

Ben Wolfgang
Energy & Environment Reporter
The Washington Times
bwolfgang@washingtontimes.com
cell: 717-571-1913

The information contained in this electronic transmission is intended for the exclusive use of the individuals to whom it is addressed and may contain information that is privileged and confidential, the disclosure of which is prohibited by law. If the reader of this transmission is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. In addition, any unauthorized copying, disclosure or distribution of the material in this e-mail and any attachments is strictly forbidden.

<DOI Deputy Secretary Nominee David Bernhardt Support Letter Package.pdf>

The information contained in this electronic transmission is intended for the exclusive use of the individuals to whom it is addressed and may contain information that is privileged and confidential, the disclosure of which is prohibited by law. If the reader of this transmission is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. In addition, any unauthorized copying, disclosure or distribution of the material in this e-mail and any attachments is strictly forbidden.

From: Swift, Heather
To: Diaz, Ileana
Cc: (b) (6); Alex Hinson
Subject: Re: following up Secretary Zinke
Date: Tuesday, July 18, 2017 9:13:48 AM

Will you have the news van with you?

Below is the run of show for the day. I've highlighted what is open press. If you can't get there by 10:45 I would say that's no problem at all. The meat and potatoes of the event is the outdoor portion that begins at noon.

Below the run of show, for your reference only at this point, I've included the template press release that will be filled in with quotes from our partners.

Local Angle: So if you wanted to localize the story, there are a number of vendors and private partners who operate in National Parks in the Capital region. The swan boats on the tidal basin and the canoe and kayaks on the Potomac are both easy examples. There will also be some reps from the NPS and local vendors who you could talk with.

Made In America Week Event

Outside Preparation

7am – DC Metro Police shuts down C Street

8am – Vehicles start to arrive on C Street

8am – 9:30am – Vehicles and outdoor equipment begins to stage

10am – Participants for Roundtable meeting begin to arrive

10:45am – Round table meeting

Round Table Meeting

10:45AM Thomas Dammrich, President, National Marine Manufacturers Association (MC) delivers opening remarks and introduces RKZ

10:48AM RKZ delivers remarks and facilitates roundtable introductions

Note: Media escorted to C street event after completion of introductions

11:00AM Outdoor Recreational Industry PowerPoint presentation

11:35AM Frank Hugelmeyer, President, Recreation Vehicle Industry Association presents propositions for public/private projects

11:40AM Q & A Session with RKZ & roundtable participants

12:00PM Conclusion of meeting

Outside Portion of Event

12:05pm – 12:25pm Tour of Made in America outdoor recreational equipment

12:25pm – 12:30pm Photo Op with RKZ & Roundtable participants

12:30pm – 1:00pm RKZ Press Gaggle and B-Roll with Made in America outdoor recreational equipment

1:00pm – 1:15pm Depart DOI with media en route Theodore Roosevelt Island

1:15pm – 1:25pm Arrive Theodore Roosevelt Island & proceed with media to TR Statue

Met by: Alex Romero, Superintendent, George Washington Memorial Parkway and Cheryl Breese, NPS Ranger

1:25pm – 1:40pm RKZ participates in small press gaggle at TR statue

1:40pm – 1:50pm Depart TR statue en route vehicle

1:50pm – 2:05pm Depart Theodore Roosevelt Island en route DOI

2:05pm Arrive DOI

Secretary Zinke Announces Made in America Recreation Advisory Committee

Hosts events to promote public-private partnerships on public lands

WASHINGTON - Today, at an event with Members of Congress and representatives from America's outdoor recreation industry, U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke announced a new advisory committee that will focus on expanding public-private partnerships on America's public lands. The Secretary hosted a roundtable meeting which focused on leveraging public-private partnerships in order to improve visitor experiences on public lands and waters and to help reduce the Department's maintenance backlog. Public-private partnerships are already extensively used across the National Park Service and other agencies for services ranging from campgrounds and restaurant management to providing kayak and RV rentals.

"One of my top priorities is to expand recreational access to public lands and waters. Today I'm excited to announce that for the first time the Department of the Interior will host a recreation advisory committee that is dedicated to looking at public-private partnerships across all public lands with the goal of expanding access to and improving the infrastructure on public lands," said Secretary Zinke. "We already have thousands of private partners who operate on federal lands, whether it's the iconic Jammers in Glacier National Park, the historic El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or the kayaks that you can rent on the Potomac River, American workers are at the heart of helping American families experience our great outdoors."

QUOTE PARTNER

QUOTE CONGRESS

Roundtable participants gave specific examples about how public-private partnerships can make the outdoor recreation experience even better, and how the economy can be impacted by the tens of thousands of American manufacturing jobs these products support. Members of the outdoor industry presented a variety of proposals to the Interior, including:

- EXAMPLE
- EXAMPLE
- EXAMPLE

Outdoor recreation is vital to the economic and physical well-being of America and its citizens. According to industry analysis, the outdoor recreation industry generates $887 billion in direct spending and supports 7.6 million jobs across all 50 states.

"Not everyone can access the backcountry and sleep in a hammock tethered to a rock wall. We need to encourage families and folks of all interest levels to enjoy our parks and other outdoor areas and make our land accessible to them," said Zinke. "We have absolutely incredible partners who proudly make Made in America outdoor products that can be leveraged to help address the maintenance backlog on things like boat ramps, RV hookups, campgrounds, and cafeterias as long as the government is a willing partner."

QUOTE PARTNER

QUOTE CONGRESS

###

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Jul 18, 2017 at 8:48 AM, Diaz, Ileana <jdiaz@wusa9.com> wrote:
Sounds good.

My shift starts today at 10:30am so trying to figure out logistics.

Any idea when you will be wrapping up the C street event and headed into the RVs? I want to make sure we give ourselves enough time to park and coordinate.

Thanks,
Ileana (213)500-0391 cell

From: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Sent: Monday, July 17, 2017 11:31:22 PM
To: Diaz, Ileana
Cc: (b) (6) Alex Hinson
Subject: Re: following up Secretary Zinke

External Email – Be Suspicious of Attachments, Links and Requests for Login Information

That's great! The Secretary is hosting an outdoor recreation focused round table followed by an outdoor event at the C street entrance of DOI with outdoor recreation companies and vendors that operate on public lands. Then your ride along would begin after the event at C Street. The Secretary and a couple others would drive in that RV from DOI to TR Island and back. I can explain more tomorrow. Also CCing my colleague Alex

Sent from my iPhone

On Jul 17, 2017, at 9:34 PM, Diaz, Ileana <jdiaz@wusa9.com> wrote:

Heather,

Nice to meet you over email. My husband, Joel Waldman from Fox News, passed along your email and the information below.

If the offer for a ride-along is still available for tomorrow please let me know what time and where to meet you. I would love this opportunity to meet and speak with Secretary Zinke in the RV.

Thanks,

Ileana Diaz

WUSA-9 News

idi@wusa9.com

(213) 500-0391 cell

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Waldman, Joel <joel.waldman@foxnews.com>

Date: Monday, July 17, 2017

Subject: Fwd: following up

To: Ileana "Bugsy" Diaz <(b) (6)>

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Date: July 17, 2017 at 6:04:35 PM EDT

To: "Waldman, Joel" <joel.waldman@foxnews.com>

Subject: Re: following up

Yes, we'd love to have her! She can do a ride-along with the Secretary in the RV to Roosevelt Island if she'd like

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 17, 2017 at 5:53 PM, Waldman, Joel <joel.waldman@foxnews.com> wrote:

Thanks so much – I did see it.

We're down a photographer, so I don't think it's going to happen.

My wife is a freelance anchor/reporter at WUSA ---- is it okay if I pass along to her? Her name is Ileana Diaz.

Thanks

Joel

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Monday, July 17, 2017 5:12 PM

Subject: following up

Hey just wanted to make sure you saw the advisory for the Secretary's Made in America event tomorrow. Great events that impact local communities. Let me know if you need more details.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

----- Forwarded message -----

From: U.S. Department of the Interior <interior_news@updates.interior.gov>

Date: Mon, Jul 17, 2017 at 12:51 PM

Subject: Made in America: Secretary Zinke & Members of Congress host event to highlight America's Outdoor Recreation

To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov

Date: July 17, 2017

Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Made in America: Secretary Zinke & Members of Congress host event to highlight America's Outdoor Recreation

WASHINGTON - On Tuesday, July 18, 2017, U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke, Members of Congress, and senior members of the outdoor recreation industry will meet at the U.S.

Department of the Interior, for a discussion about using public-private partnerships to improve visitor experiences on public lands and waters and help reduce the Department's maintenance backlog. The event will also include a showcase of great American products that make the great outdoors fun.

Following the meeting, Secretary Zinke will lead the group outside to a showcase of American-made outdoor recreation equipment including boats, RVs, off-road vehicles and more. Exhibitors will have information about the tens of thousands of American manufacturing jobs these products support.

WHEN: July 18, 2017
Recreation Leadership Meeting: 10:45am - 11:05am
Made in America Outdoor Recreation Media Event: 12:15pm - 1:00pm

WHERE: Department of the Interior, 1849 C Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20240

WHO: Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke
Members of Congress
Senior outdoor recreation industry members
Department officials

MEDIA: Media are invited to hear opening comments at the roundtable by Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke and senior members of the outdoor recreation industry in the Secretary's Conference Room beginning at 10:45am.

There will be press availability and opportunities for b-roll and photos at the Made in America Outdoor Recreation event with the Secretary, industry officials and Members of Congress following the meeting at 12:15pm on C Street outside of the Department. A number of Made in America recreation products will be on display, as well as informative posters highlighting the industry's economic contribution.

RSVP: Members of the media must RSVP to Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov no later than 4:00PM EST on Monday July 17.

Outdoor recreation is vital to the economic and healthful well-being of America. The industry generates $88.7 billion in direct spending and supports 7.6 million jobs across all 50 states. Secretary Zinke, members of the Outdoor Recreation Industry Roundtable, key national park concessioners and other senior administration officials will discuss how improving infrastructure, encouraging innovation, and developing new and enhanced public-private partnerships will give the American people more opportunities to enjoy healthy, active fun on their public lands and waters, while helping outdoor recreation continue to grow as a powerful and positive force in America.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior 1849 C Street, N.W.
Washington DC 20240 202-208-3100

||

This message and its attachments may contain legally privileged or confidential information. It is intended solely for the named addressee. If you are not the addressee indicated in this message (or responsible for delivery of the message to the addressee), you may not copy or deliver this message or its attachments to anyone. Rather, you should permanently delete this message and its attachments and kindly notify the sender by reply e-mail. Any content of this message and its attachments that does not relate to the official business of Fox News or Fox Business must not be taken to have been sent or endorsed by either of them. No representation is made that this email or its attachments are without defect.

From: Heather Swift
To: Waldman_Joel
Subject: Re: following up
Date: Monday, July 17, 2017 11:26:56 PM

No sweat. Thanks for sharing with the Misses!

Sent from my iPhone

On Jul 17, 2017, at 8:39 PM, Waldman, Joel <joel.waldman@foxnews.com> wrote:

My wife is sending to her desk now. She Will try to coordinate in AM. Fox News told me they may just send a Photog to get broll. Wish I could help more!

Sent from my iPhone

On Jul 17, 2017, at 5:12 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey just wanted to make sure you saw the advisory for the Secretary's Made in America event tomorrow. Great events that impact local communities. Let me know if you need more details.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

----- Forwarded message -----

From: U.S. Department of the Interior <interior_news@updates.interior.gov>
Date: Mon, Jul 17, 2017 at 12:51 PM
Subject: Made in America: Secretary Zinke & Members of Congress host event to highlight America's Outdoor Recreation
To: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov

Date: July 17, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Made in America: Secretary Zinke & Members of Congress host event to highlight America's Outdoor Recreation

WASHINGTON - On Tuesday, July 18, 2017, U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke, Members of Congress, and senior members of the outdoor recreation industry will meet at the U.S. Department of the Interior, for a discussion about using public-private partnerships to improve visitor experiences on public lands and waters and help reduce the Department's maintenance backlog. The event will also include a showcase of great American products that make the great outdoors fun.

Following the meeting, Secretary Zinke will lead the group outside to a showcase of American-made outdoor recreation equipment including boats, RVs, off-road vehicles and more. Exhibitors will have information about the tens of thousands of American manufacturing jobs these products support.

WHEN: July 18, 2017
Recreation Leadership Meeting: 10:45am - 11:05am
Made in America Outdoor Recreation Media Event: 12:15pm - 1:00pm

WHERE: Department of the Interior, 1849 C Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20240

WHO: Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke
Members of Congress
Senior outdoor recreation industry members
Department officials

MEDIA: Media are invited to hear opening comments at the roundtable by Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke and senior members of the outdoor recreation industry in the Secretary's Conference Room beginning at 10:45am.

There will be press availability and opportunities for b-roll and photos at the Made in America Outdoor Recreation event with the Secretary, industry officials and Members of Congress following the meeting at 12:15pm on C Street outside of the Department. A number of Made in America recreation products will be on display, as well as informative posters highlighting the industry's economic contribution.

RSVP: Members of the media must RSVP to Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov no later than 4:00PM EST on Monday July 17.

Outdoor recreation is vital to the economic and healthful well-being of America. The industry generates $887 billion in direct spending and supports 7.6 million jobs across all 50 states. Secretary Zinke, members of the Outdoor Recreation Industry Roundtable, key national park concessioners and other senior administration officials will discuss how improving infrastructure, encouraging innovation, and developing new and enhanced public-private partnerships will give the American people more opportunities to enjoy healthy, active fun on their public lands and waters, while helping outdoor recreation continue to grow as a powerful and positive force in America.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

This email was sent to heather_swift@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior 1849 C Street, N.W.
Washington DC 20240 202-208-3100

This message and its attachments may contain legally privileged or confidential information. It is intended solely for the named addressee. If you are not the addressee indicated in this message (or responsible for delivery of the message to the addressee), you may not copy or deliver this message or its attachments to anyone. Rather, you should permanently delete this message and its attachments and kindly notify the sender by reply e-mail. Any content of this message and its attachments that does not relate to the official business of Fox News or Fox Business must not be taken to have been sent or endorsed by either of them. No representation is made that this email or its attachments are without defect.

From: Laura Rigas
To: Newell, Russell
Cc: Ross, Paul; Swift, Heather; Rebecca Matulka
Subject: Re: FOR AWARENESS: Kevin Tillman named superintendent of Gila Cliff Dwellings National Monument
Date: Monday, November 06, 2017 8:02:12 AM

Thx.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Nov 6, 2017, at 8:00 AM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

checking with Todd

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Mon, Nov 6, 2017 at 7:28 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Laura/Russell-

Apologies as NPS sent this to me last week and I somehow let it get buried in my inbox. They'd like this to go out at the local level tomorrow if possible. The superintendent is scheduled to start Nov. 12. No concerns here.

-Paul

Kevin Tillman named superintendent of Gila Cliff Dwellings National Monument

DENVER — Kevin Tillman, chief ranger of Bighorn Canyon National Recreation Area in Montana and Wyoming, has been named superintendent of Gila Cliff Dwellings National Monument in southern New Mexico. Tillman, a 27-year veteran of the National Park Service (NPS), served as acting superintendent at Gila Cliff Dwellings from February to June of this year. He will assume his new post the week of Nov. 12.

“Kevin’s years of experience in a variety of Park Service locations across the country will serve him well in managing one of America’s very first national monuments,” said Kate Hammond, acting director of the NPS’s Intermountain Region, which includes New Mexico. “We value Kevin’s management insight as he supports the Gila Cliff Dwellings staff and partners in caring for the monument and its archeological wonders of the Mogollon culture.”

“I am honored to be returning to Gila Cliff Dwellings to work as superintendent again with our monument staff,” Tillman said. “I look forward to continued cooperation with the U.S. Forest Service and our other partners, including Silver City, Mimbres, Bayard and the other local communities of the area, as well as Western New Mexico University.”

Tillman, who grew up in the Denver area, began his NPS career in 1991 as a seasonal law enforcement ranger at Yosemite National Park. After a second season at Grand Canyon National Park, he took his first permanent assignment as a law enforcement ranger in 1993 at Fort Laramie National Historic Site in Wyoming. He later served at Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area, Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument, Joshua Tree National Park and Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area. In 2011, Tillman transferred to Bighorn Canyon as chief ranger. Tillman also served as acting deputy chief ranger of Yellowstone National Park in 2014 and acting deputy chief of operations in 2012 for the Park Service’s Law Enforcement Security & Emergency Services branch in Washington, DC.

Tillman is a 2015 graduate of the GOAL Academy, the NPS’s leadership and management training program. He holds a bachelor’s degree from Northland College.

Tillman will move to New Mexico with his wife, Christiann, and son, Cole. They also have two grown sons, Clayton and Adam.

-- www.nps.gov --

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

From: Swift, Heather
To: Willens, Todd
Cc: Laura Rigas; Lori Mashburn; Nachmany, Eli
Subject: Re: FOR FINAL REVIEW: Press Release Todd
Date: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 11:51:35 AM

good call. Thanks.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 11:48 AM, Willens, Todd <todd_willens@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I am good on the facts. Do we want to capitalize all the uses of "west" in the Sec's quote? I defer to you all on that. Otherwise, good from me.

Todd Willens
Assistant Deputy Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
1849 C Street, NW -- MIB Room 6116
Washington, DC 20240
office: 202-208-6291
cell: 202-706-9041

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 11:32 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Below is the press release for Todd we'd like to send out this afternoon.
Please send me edits by 1:00 PM.

EE is on deadline and is writing about Todd's appointment for NOON publication. I shared the release below, minus Sec quote because it hasn't been approved yet.

Secretary Ryan Zinke Appoints Veteran Interior Official Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior

Tribal Leaders, Congressional Officials, Others Praise Selection

(WASHINGTON) U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced the appointment of former Interior Department official and former Chief of Staff to Rep. Steve Pearce (NM) Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior. In this role, Willens will work closely with yet-to-be-confirmed Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt. Willens brings with him more than 20 years of public policy and governmental affairs experience, with proven successes on behalf of prior Administrations, Members of Congress, national associations, and the private sector. He possesses a deep knowledge and understanding of the Department's many complex policies, ranging from land to energy, wildlife, and water management.

In addition to being a westerner, Todd brings a strong combination of public and private sector experience to the Interior Department," Secretary Ryan Zinke said. "Most of Interior's holdings and responsibilities are in the west, and Todd's intimate understanding of the West, from growing up in rural California to his previous time at Interior to his tenure with Congressman Pearce, will be a major asset to the people we serve. I look forward to Todd helping us advance Interior's mission and the work of the Administration on behalf of local communities."

"It is an honor and privilege to be appointed as Interior's Assistant Deputy Secretary," Willens said. "I thank Secretary Zinke for his confidence in my abilities to serve the Department and the Administration. I look forward to getting to work contributing to the implementation of the President's priorities for the Department and our Agencies, making America great again."

Willens served as Chief of Staff to Congressman Steve Pearce (R-NM) from 2010 to 2017. During his tenure as Chief of Staff, Willens provided strategic advice and operational oversight to meet the needs of the constituents of the 2nd Congressional District of New Mexico. He worked closely with various stakeholders in this capacity, including local government officials, Congress, and the previous Administration to ramp up operations at defense bases, prevent job-killing regulatory action, and increase federal accountability significantly for the people of New Mexico.

"Todd's dedication to New Mexico and the West made him a most effective manager of people and policies," Congressman Pearce said. "More than anything though, my wife Cynthia and I consider him a close friend. He has run my congressional operations for nearly seven years and been my top adviser on numerous items, delivering countless successes on my behalf. I congratulate Todd and the Administration on his appointment to this important position."

"The selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary deepens the bench at Interior," Jackie Johnson Pata, Executive Director of the National Congress of American Indians, said. "In his prior work as Chief of Staff for Congressman Stevan Pearce, Todd handled a wide range of Native issues. In that role, he earned the great respect of many in Indian Country. As the Administration and Tribal Nations partner to advance economic development and self-sufficiency for Native communities, Todd's expertise and experience will be a valuable asset."

"I have worked with Todd for several years. He has an exceptional understanding of western issues in general, and Native issues in particular," Chairman Paul

Torres of the All Pueblo Council of Governors said. “Todd is exactly the kind of leadership that can advance Interior’s trust responsibility to tribes, while supporting tribal sovereignty and self-determination. This is an exceptional selection by the Administration.”

“The Tehama Colusa Canal Authority couldn’t be more pleased with the selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary at the Department of the Interior,” Jeff Sutton, General Manager of the Tehama Colusa Canal Authority, said. “A native of Northern California, Todd has a great deal of experience in Western water issues and, as a sportsman-conservationist, he has a long track record of delivering mutually beneficial policy outcomes for the benefit of fish, wildlife and water users throughout the Western United States. We look forward to working with Todd in his new capacity.”

“The Civil War Trust strongly supports the appointment of Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior,” James Lighthizer, President of the Civil War Trust, said. “In his previous service on Capitol Hill and in the Department of the Interior, Todd has been a champion of our national parks and historic battlefield sites. We are excited about the opportunity to partner with him to preserve America’s battlefield parks as places of remembrance as well as heritage tourism destinations.”

“The Boone and Crockett Club proudly supports Todd Willens’ appointment,” said Paul Phillips, co-chair of the Boone and Crockett Club’s Policy Committee. “Mr. Willens is a conservationist who hunts. He has this personal passion and understands the ecological and economic benefits that follow for the public. His experience in the complexities of policy at the Department of the Interior will serve the country and conservation community all very well.”

Prior to working on Capitol Hill, Willens served as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks at the Department of the Interior from 2006 to 2008. While at the Department, he worked on the National Parks Centennial, and the historic recovery of the Bald Eagle. In addition, Willens also served as Senior Policy Advisor for United States House of Representatives Committee on Natural Resources from 2003 to 2006. In this capacity, he worked closely with the Chairman to develop key legislation, including the 2005 Endangered Species Act Reauthorization and the 2005 Energy Bill. A California native, Willens is a 1994 graduate of the University of California, Los Angeles. He currently lives in Washington, D.C. with his wife and four children.

###

From: Laura Rigas
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Vincent Devito
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW - REMARKS FOR AOGA
Date: Tuesday, May 30, 2017 6:31:29 PM

Thanks, Heather. Vincent, can you please review these asap tonight? Wanted to have you and Kate clear these before we share them more widely tomorrow (and of course go over them with the boss). Kate's edits are included.

My best,
L

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 30, 2017, at 2:19 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thank you, XXXXXX, for that introduction.

I love Alaska. My wife Lola and I actually both have ties. Her dad worked up here while she was growing up and I did quite a bit of training while I was in the military.

And, as I say to my friend Senator Murkowski, Montana and Alaska aren't all that different...both states have a robust outdoor culture and a frontier outlook and we're both blessed with abundant energy resources.

Speaking of, some of you may know that my path to Interior Secretary was a little different than most. I hadn't spent much time in Washington, D.C., or served as a career politician. Instead, I served in the military, just like 10 percent of all Alaskans. Your state and mine have highest percentage of veterans. We should be proud of that.

So during my Navy years, in addition to getting up to Alaska to train, I also spent a lot of time in the Middle East on oil platforms. Though it was a little different than what you all did. I was mostly keeping bad guys off of them.

I'm pleased to be with the thousands of forward-looking and hard-working men and women of the Alaska energy industry.

In my view, energy is important for three reasons.

First, it's better for the environment that the U.S. produces energy. Thanks to advancements in technology, we can responsibly develop our energy resources and return the land to equal or better quality than it was before.

I've spent a lot of time overseas, and I can tell you with 100 percent certainty it is better to develop our energy here under reasonable regulations, than have it produced overseas under little or no regulations.

Second, energy production is an absolute boon to the economy, supporting more than 9 million jobs and supplying affordable power for manufacturing, home heating, and transportation needs. And I can tell you, it's going to take a whole lot of energy to rebuild America's aging infrastructure.

And lastly, achieving American energy independence will strengthen our national security by reducing our reliance on foreign oil and allowing us to assist our allies with their energy needs.

As a military commander, I saw how the power of the American economy and American energy defeated our adversaries around the world. The world is safer when American is strong.

I am an unabashed supporter of Teddy Roosevelt whose views about America's holdings are best inscribed on the Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park – “for the benefit and enjoyment of the people.”

Contrary to what some believe, being a good steward of our land and resources does not mean locking it up and banning public access. Teddy Roosevelt himself said that, "Conservation means development as much as it does protection."

Yet during the previous administration, nearly 94 percent of the Outer Continental Shelf was off limits for responsible development. And about half of the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska was out too.

As of March 1, 2017, only 16 million acres in the OCS (out of a total 1.7 billion acres) are under lease for oil and gas development. Of the little area that is open to development, more than 97 percent of the leases are in the Gulf of Mexico.

Offshore leasing revenues have been the second highest source of revenue to the Treasury behind personal income taxes paid. In 2008 the U.S. Treasury collected nearly $18 billion in federal OCS leasing revenues.

Yet by contrast, last year in 2016, leasing revenues collected fell to only $2.8 billion.

That's a drop of more than $15 billion that would otherwise partially go toward funding important conservation programs like the Land and Water Conservation Fund, Infrastructure, and our parks.

That's in part why President Trump and I got to work to rewrite the Five-Year Plan and get more people back to work on rigs, platforms, and other onshore oil and gas jobs.

I recognize that not all areas are appropriate for energy development, but many places provide the perfect opportunity to balance energy and conservation priorities. Thanks to new developments in science and technology, it is possible to responsibly develop American energy resources while being good stewards of the environment.

There is no debate that the federal government should regulate energy production within its borders and that the taxpayer should get fair value for the resources extracted. But when regulation becomes a punitive tool of political advocacy rather than public interest, there needs to be a change of course.

President Trump's America First Offshore Energy Executive Order began that course correction. That order directed me to conduct a review of the current five year offshore development plan for the Outer Continental Shelf, streamline permitting for seismic research and reconsider a host regulations hampering development.

The President and I are committed to energy dominance and his executive order was a decisive step in common sense energy policy for the benefit of the American people.

I then took immediate action to implement the President's offshore energy policy by signing two Secretarial Orders.

Those orders are meant

- to enhance opportunities for energy exploration, leasing, and development on the Outer Continental Shelf;
- establish regulatory certainty for OCS activities; and
- promote conservation stewardship, by providing jobs, energy security, and revenue for the American people.

The first order directed the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management to immediately initiate development of a new "Five Year Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program," with full consideration given to leasing the OCS offshore Alaska, the mid- and south-Atlantic, and the Gulf of Mexico. It also directs expedited consideration of appealed, new, or resubmitted seismic permitting applications for the Atlantic and the review or rescission of other regulations outlined in the President's executive order.

Just a couple weeks ago, I appointed Scott Angelle the new Director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement and he will work with our energy team to promote safety, protect the environment and conserve resources through the regulatory oversight and enforcement of energy industry operations on the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf.

He joined the bureau after more than 30 years of reforming agencies and organizations in both the public and private sectors of Louisiana. His career is characterized by a strong desire to achieve results that lead to greater success.

Today, I am announcing additional steps in our common sense energy policy for the benefit of the American people.

Today, I am signing a third Secretarial Order that will jump-start Alaskan energy production in the National Petroleum Reserve – Alaska and update resource assessments for the "1002 area" of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The order calls for the development of a revised

Integrated Activity Plan for the National Petroleum Reserve that strikes an appropriate statutory balance for promoting development while protecting surface resources.

It also calls for an evaluation, under the existing Integrated Activity Plan, of ways to efficiently and effectively maximize the tracts offered for sale during the next National Petroleum Reserve lease sale.

The order also directs the Assistant Secretaries of Land and Minerals Management and Water and Science to submit a joint plan to the Counselor to the Secretary for Energy Policy for updating assessments of undiscovered, technically recoverable oil and natural gas resources on Alaska's North Slope, focusing on Federal lands that include the National Petroleum Reserve and the Section 1002 Area of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

This joint plan shall include consideration of new geological and geophysical data, as well as the potential for reprocessing existing geological and geophysical data.

I'm a geologist. Science is a wonderful thing – it helps us understand what is going on deep below the surface of the earth. We need to use science to update our understanding off the 1002 area of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as Congress considers important legislation to responsibly develop there one day. This order takes the important first step in a smart and measured approach to energy development in ANWR.

Regarding the National Petroleum Reserve, this land was set up with the sole intention of oil and gas production and serves a critical role in both our energy and national security. However, years of policy politics put roughly half of the National Petroleum Reserve off-limits.

Using this land for its original intent will create good paying jobs and revenue for our Northern-most city and strengthen our energy and national security.

Working with the Alaska Native community, Interior will identify areas in the National Petroleum Reserve where responsible energy development makes the most sense and devise a plan to extract resources.

We will do it in a way that respects both the environment and traditional uses of the land and maintains subsistence hunting and fishing access.

Let me close by saying that for all the needed changes we are making to the previous administration's energy policies, one thing does not change -- and that is our commitment to safety and our environment.

That remains our priority.

Nothing in the Secretarial Order I am signing today would reduce, eliminate, or modify any environmental or regulatory requirements for energy development.

We have thousands of talented and dedicated employees working on our frontlines who are focused on the safe and responsible development of our nation's energy resources.

We are going to keep it that way and we will hold companies accountable. Good stewardship of our lands and waters and maintaining U.S. energy dominance are not mutually exclusive.

Thanks very much for the opportunity to be here today. I'll now sign this order with you.

###

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 30, 2017 at 6:16 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

I told Vincent to look at the remarks after Kate did. We are at the all staff meeting now. Do you want to accept all edits and send to me and Vincent or another way? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 30, 2017, at 2:15 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Awesome. Thanks!

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 30, 2017 at 6:09 PM, MacGregor, Katharine <katharine_macgregor@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Alright my edits are attached. I want to flag this sentence - because I think it (b) (5)

Does that make sense? I made a suggested edit to help provide an idea how to fix.

-Kate

On Tue, May 30, 2017 at 4:49 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Attached, remarks for Z tomorrow.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--
Kate MacGregor 1849 C ST NW
Room 6625
Washington DC 20240

202-208-3671 (Direct)

<Remarks_AOGA_aslmok.docx>

From: Mashburn, Lori
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: For Review = press release
Date: Tuesday, May 30, 2017 4:29:08 PM

I made some edits in red. Also, does Sen. Murkowski prefer to be called a "Chairman"? If so, all cool. Just wanted to be sure it was intentional. This is really good. Thank you for pulling this together.

Secretary Zinke Names Steve Wackowski as Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs

(ANCHORAGE) Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced that Steve Wackowski will serve as his Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs based out of Anchorage. Zinke made the announcement in Anchorage as part of his current tour of Alaska.

"A lifelong Alaskan and Air Force Major, Steve is perfectly qualified to advise me on Alaskan issues," said Secretary Zinke. "Like 10 percent of Alaskans, Steve served in the military, and he then continued his service as a civilian working for elected officials. His broad range of experience will prove to be invaluable as the Department focuses on future energy opportunities in Alaska, the welfare of Alaska Natives, and the vast expanses of lands and waters under Interior's management."

"It's an incredible honor to be asked to serve on Secretary Zinke's staff. I look forward to working with our state, local, and First Alaskan partners to help unlock Alaska's potential," said Wackowski.

Wackowski grew up in Anchorage and spent his summers working in Ninilchik for his family's halibut and salmon sport-fishing business. After graduating from Bartlett High School in Anchorage, he played division I-AA football at Saint Mary's College, where he earned a degree in Computer Science and a commission in the Air Force Reserve from UC-Berkeley's Air Force ROTC program .

He is currently a Major in the Reserve and drills at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson at the 611th Air Operations Center. He has served on several active duty tours throughout his reserve career including contingency deployments to Afghanistan, Haiti, and Iraq.

After his last active duty tour Steve moved home to Alaska to work as the remote sensing operations manager for Fairweather Science, LLC in Anchorage. Steve's work detecting and mapping maternal polar bear dens for oil and gas companies on Alaska's North Slope was nationally recognized and helped earn him the Alaska Journal of Commerce's "Top 40 under 40" Award in 2015.

His public policy background includes serving as a Professional Staff member on the US Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee and as the late Senator Ted Stevens' last serving Press Secretary. He most recently managed U.S. Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski's reelection campaign.

Steve is an avid hunter and fisherman who says he continually gets out-fished by his wife Lindsay. They enjoy spending time in the Alaska outdoors with their two-year-old son, Lucas, and their red fox Lab, Cali.

Lori K. Mashburn
White House Liaison
Department of the Interior
202.208.1694

On Tue, May 30, 2017 at 4:18 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Lori - any changes?

Secretary Zinke Names Steve Wackowski as Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs

(ANCHORAGE) Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced that Steve Wackowski will serve as his Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs based out of Anchorage. Zinke made the announcement in Anchorage as part of his current tour of Alaska.

“A lifelong Alaskan and Air Force Major, Steve is perfectly qualified to advise me on Alaskan issues,” said Secretary Zinke. “Like 10 percent of Alaskans, Steve served in the military, and he then continued his service as a civilian working for elected officials. His broad range of experience will prove to be invaluable as the Department focuses on future energy opportunities in Alaska, the welfare of Alaska Natives, and the vast expanses of lands and waters under Interior’s management.”

"It's an incredible honor to be asked to serve on Secretary Zinke's staff. I look forward to working with our state, local, and First Alaskan partners to help unlock Alaska's potential," said Wackowski.

Wachowski grew up in Anchorage and spent his summers working in Ninilchik for his family’s halibut and salmon sport-fishing business. After graduating from Bartlett High School in Anchorage, he played division I-AA football at Saint Mary’s College, where he earned a degree in Computer Science and a commission in the Air Force Reserve from UC-Berkeley’s Air Force ROTC program .

He is currently a Major in the Reserve and drills at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson at the 611th Air Operations Center. He has served on several active duty tours throughout his reserve career including contingency deployments to Afghanistan, Haiti, and Iraq.

After his last active duty tour Steve moved home to Alaska to work as the remote sensing operations manager for Fairweather Science, LLC in Anchorage. Steve’s work detecting and mapping maternal polar bear dens for oil and gas companies on Alaska’s North Slope was nationally recognized and helped earn him the Alaska Journal of Commerce’s “Top 40 under 40” Award in 2015.

His public policy background includes serving as a Professional Staff member on the US Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee and as the late Senator Ted Stevens’ last serving Press Secretary. He most recently managed U.S. Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski’s reelection campaign.

Steve is avid hunter and fisherman who says he continually gets out-fished by his wife Lindsay. They enjoy spending time in the Alaska outdoors with their two-year-old son, Lucas, and their red fox lab, Cali.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Swift, Heather
To: Nachmany, Eli
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Cully statement
Date: Tuesday, July 11, 2017 12:50:36 PM

Idk... I think he's about to be qualified.

Thanks. Once MC and AT sign off, need to cut this down to 2 pages of bullets.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 12:48 PM, Nachmany, Eli <eli_nachmany@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Quick note: third-to-last graf, "gaining" has an extra "g" and "imminently" should be "eminently"

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 12:41 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Micah/Aaron - can you please review the remarks for Cully's hearing?

Chairman McCain, Ranking Member Reed, and members of the Committee: it is an honor to be here today to tell you about an American patriot, a mentor, and a good friend, Captain Cully Stimson.

Captain Stimson is President Donald Trump's nominee for General Counsel of the United States Navy. I can think of no one more qualified for this job.

As a retired Navy SEAL Commander, I know just how important it is for the Navy to have the most-qualified individuals in positions of leadership, and the man I am introducing today fits the bill.

Captain Stimson and I served together in the Navy; he brings over two decades of experience as a lawyer, having first served in the Navy's Judge Advocate General's Corps, also known as the JAG Corps, in the 1990s.

In addition to our time together in the Navy, I also had the pleasure of working with him and Congressman DeStefano on a bill to ensure victims of sexual assault in the military receive the legal services they deserve.

To tell Captain Stimson's story is to tell of his lifetime of commitment to both his community and his country. He has been a leader from very early on, serving as Captain of the Men's Varsity Soccer Team at Kenyon College.

He went on to graduate from The George Mason University School of Law, and he joined the Navy as a young lawyer in 1992. For five years, he was on active duty, serving in both San Diego, California and London, England.

Captain Stimson was called back to active duty in 2001, to support the Joint Special Operations Task Force JAG for SEAL Group Two.

In President George W. Bush's administration, Captain Stimson was a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Detainee Affairs, providing advice and counsel to Secretaries of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates about the Pentagon's detention operations.

Since leaving public service, he has been with the Heritage Foundation as a Senior Legal Fellow and Manager of their National Security Law Program.

Captain Stimson has served our nation for over two decades in the Navy, more recently serving as Deputy Chief Judge of the Navy-Marine Corps Trial Judiciary and an adjunct law professor and instructor at the Naval Justice School in a reserve capacity.

A bulleted list of Captain Stimson's professional achievements, however, does not paint the full picture of how this man has demonstrated himself to be the kind of high-character human being fit for service.

From teaching high school to coaching and mentoring hundreds, if not thousands, of young Americans, Captain Stimson has devoted countless hours to cultivating the next generation. He is Chairman of the Board of the U.S. Soccer Foundation, the charitable arm of U.S. Soccer, which offers assistance to more than 35,000 underserved and minority children.

A devoted family man, Captain Stimson has been married since 1995. He and his lovely wife adopted four orphans.

Captain Stimson is the epitome of a military officer, representing honor, integrity and service. He has always been the first one willing to help others, whether that has meant writing dozens of letters of recommendations for colleges, graduate schools, judicial clerkships, and jobs, or quietly paying the tuition of two of his mentees who could not afford to take the Law School Admission Test. He also founded the Bryon J. Horn Memorial Scholarship Fund, in honor of a fallen fraternity brother.

Captain Stimson is the type of public servant who is comfortable working across party lines. When President Obama's Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson was General Counsel of the Department of Defense, he and Stimson worked together on a number of tough issues aimed to keep our great nation safe.

This bipartisan partnership eventually led to Captain

Stimson extending, and Johnson accepting, an invitation to speak to the Heritage Foundation.

In that speech, Secretary Johnson spoke about his job, and one line from his remarks stands out in particular. “The office of General Counsel of the Defense Department,” he said. “Particularly in the post-9/11 world, is in the middle of many difficult, front page issues.”

In his job as General Counsel of the Navy, Captain Stimson will confront a host of these difficult issues as well. I would not be here today if I did not have full confidence in his ability to tackle them.

Captain Stimson’s partnership with Secretary Johnson was not an isolated event, either; he also developed partnerships with Stephen Preston, who served as General Counsel of both the Department of Defense and the CIA under President Obama. Preston recently spoke on a panel that Captain Stimson hosted at Heritage.

In my friend and brother-in-arms Captain Stimson, the Navy is gaining an imminently qualified attorney, an honorable military officer, and an individual with vast experience, and fidelity to the law and our country.

He has a long career of exemplary service in law and defense, and is an excellent fit for the position to which he was nominated.

I have no doubt he will be a wonderful General Counsel of the Navy.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Thiele, Aaron
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Chambers, Micah; Nachmany, Eli
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Cully statement
Date: Tuesday, July 11, 2017 1:31:40 PM

I didn't see anything. It looks good.

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 1:18 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Oh dear -- I'm told he is introducing Cully.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 1:16 PM, Chambers, Micah <micah_chambers@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Is RZ introducing him at hearing or just a submitted statement of support?

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 12:41 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Micah/Aaron - can you please review the remarks for Cully's hearing?

Chairman McCain, Ranking Member Reed, and members of the Committee: it is an honor to be here today to tell you about an American patriot, a mentor, and a good friend, Captain Cully Stimson.

Captain Stimson is President Donald Trump's nominee for General Counsel of the United States Navy. I can think of no one more qualified for this job.

As a retired Navy SEAL Commander, I know just how important it is for the Navy to have the most-qualified individuals in positions of leadership, and the man I am introducing today fits the bill.

Captain Stimson and I served together in the Navy; he brings over two decades of experience as a lawyer, having first served in the Navy's Judge Advocate General's Corps, also known as the JAG Corps, in the 1990s.

In addition to our time together in the Navy, I also had the pleasure of working with him and Congressman DeStefano on a bill to ensure victims of sexual assault in the military receive the legal services they deserve.

To tell Captain Stimson's story is to tell of his lifetime of commitment to both his community and his country. He has been a leader from very early on, serving as Captain of the Men's Varsity Soccer Team at Kenyon College.

He went on to graduate from The George Mason University School of Law, and he joined the Navy as a young lawyer in 1992. For five years, he was on active duty, serving in both San Diego, California and London, England.

Captain Stimson was called back to active duty in 2001, to support the Joint Special Operations Task Force JAG for SEAL Group Two.

In President George W. Bush's administration, Captain Stimson was a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Detainee Affairs, providing advice and counsel to Secretaries of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates about the Pentagon's detention operations.

Since leaving public service, he has been with the Heritage Foundation as a Senior Legal Fellow and Manager of their National Security Law Program.

Captain Stimson has served our nation for over two decades in the Navy, more recently serving as Deputy Chief Judge of the Navy-Marine Corps Trial Judiciary and an adjunct law professor and instructor at the Naval Justice School in a reserve capacity.

A bulleted list of Captain Stimson's professional achievements, however, does not paint the full picture of how this man has demonstrated himself to be the kind of high-character human being fit for service.

From teaching high school to coaching and mentoring hundreds, if not thousands, of young Americans, Captain Stimson has devoted countless hours to cultivating the next generation. He is Chairman of the Board of the U.S. Soccer Foundation, the charitable arm of U.S. Soccer, which offers assistance to more than 35,000 underserved and minority children.

A devoted family man, Captain Stimson has been married since 1995. He and his lovely wife adopted four orphans.

Captain Stimson is the epitome of a military officer, representing honor, integrity and service. He has always been the first one willing to help others, whether that has meant writing dozens of letters of recommendations for colleges, graduate schools, judicial clerkships, and jobs, or quietly paying the tuition of two of his mentees who could not afford to take the Law School Admission Test. He also founded the Bryon J. Horn Memorial Scholarship Fund, in honor of a fallen fraternity brother.

Captain Stimson is the type of public servant who is comfortable working across party lines. When President Obama's Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson was General Counsel of the Department of Defense, he and Stimson worked together on a number of tough issues aimed to keep our great nation safe.

This bipartisan partnership eventually led to Captain Stimson extending, and Johnson accepting, an invitation to speak to the Heritage Foundation.

In that speech, Secretary Johnson spoke about his job, and one line from his remarks stands out in particular. “The office of General Counsel of the Defense Department,” he said. “Particularly in the post-9/11 world, is in the middle of many difficult, front page issues.”

In his job as General Counsel of the Navy, Captain Stimson will confront a host of these difficult issues as well. I would not be here today if I did not have full confidence in his ability to tackle them.

Captain Stimson’s partnership with Secretary Johnson was not an isolated event, either; he also developed partnerships with Stephen Preston, who served as General Counsel of both the Department of Defense and the CIA under President Obama. Preston recently spoke on a panel that Captain Stimson hosted at Heritage.

In my friend and brother-in-arms Captain Stimson, the Navy is gaining an imminently qualified attorney, an honorable military officer, and an individual with vast experience, and fidelity to the law and our country.

He has a long career of exemplary service in law and defense, and is an excellent fit for the position to which he was nominated.

I have no doubt he will be a wonderful General Counsel of the Navy.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--

Micah Chambers
Acting Director
Office of Congressional & Legislative Affairs
Office of the Secretary of the Interior

From: Swift, Heather
To: Chambers, Micah
Cc: Aaron Thiele; Nachmany, Eli
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Cully statement
Date: Tuesday, July 11, 2017 1:20:37 PM

Oh dear -- I'm told he is introducing Cully.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 1:16 PM, Chambers, Micah <micah_chambers@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Is RZ introducing him at hearing or just a submitted statement of support?

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 12:41 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Micah/Aaron - can you please review the remarks for Cully's hearing?

Chairman McCain, Ranking Member Reed, and members of the Committee: it is an honor to be here today to tell you about an American patriot, a mentor, and a good friend, Captain Cully Stimson.

Captain Stimson is President Donald Trump's nominee for General Counsel of the United States Navy. I can think of no one more qualified for this job.

As a retired Navy SEAL Commander, I know just how important it is for the Navy to have the most-qualified individuals in positions of leadership, and the man I am introducing today fits the bill.

Captain Stimson and I served together in the Navy; he brings over two decades of experience as a lawyer, having first served in the Navy's Judge Advocate General's Corps, also known as the JAG Corps, in the 1990s.

In addition to our time together in the Navy, I also had the pleasure of working with him and Congressman DeStefano on a bill to ensure victims of sexual assault in the military receive the legal services they deserve.

To tell Captain Stimson's story is to tell of his lifetime of commitment to both his community and his country. He has been a leader from very early on, serving as Captain of the Men's Varsity Soccer Team at Kenyon College.

He went on to graduate from The George Mason University School of Law, and he joined the Navy as a young lawyer in 1992. For five years, he was on active duty, serving in both San Diego, California and London, England.

Captain Stimson was called back to active duty in 2001, to support the Joint Special Operations Task Force JAG for SEAL Group Two.

In President George W. Bush's administration, Captain Stimson was a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Detainee Affairs, providing advice and counsel to Secretaries of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates about the Pentagon's detention operations.

Since leaving public service, he has been with the Heritage Foundation as a Senior Legal Fellow and Manager of their National Security Law Program.

Captain Stimson has served our nation for over two decades in the Navy, more recently serving as Deputy Chief Judge of the Navy-Marine Corps Trial Judiciary and an adjunct law professor and instructor at the Naval Justice School in a reserve capacity.

A bulleted list of Captain Stimson's professional achievements, however, does not paint the full picture of how this man has demonstrated himself to be the kind of high-character human being fit for service.

From teaching high school to coaching and mentoring hundreds, if not thousands, of young Americans, Captain Stimson has devoted countless hours to cultivating the next generation. He is Chairman of the Board of the U.S. Soccer Foundation, the charitable arm of U.S. Soccer, which offers assistance to more than 35,000 underserved and minority children.

A devoted family man, Captain Stimson has been married since 1995. He and his lovely wife adopted four orphans.

Captain Stimson is the epitome of a military officer, representing honor, integrity and service. He has always been the first one willing to help others, whether that has meant writing dozens of letters of recommendations for colleges, graduate schools, judicial clerkships, and jobs, or quietly paying the tuition of two of his mentees who could not afford to take the Law School Admission Test. He also founded the Bryon J. Horn Memorial Scholarship Fund, in honor of a fallen fraternity brother.

Captain Stimson is the type of public servant who is comfortable working across party lines. When President Obama's Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson was General Counsel of the Department of Defense, he and Stimson worked together on a number of tough issues aimed to keep our great nation safe.

This bipartisan partnership eventually led to Captain Stimson extending, and Johnson accepting, an invitation to speak to the Heritage Foundation.

In that speech, Secretary Johnson spoke about his job, and one line from his remarks stands out in particular. “The office of General Counsel of the Defense Department,” he said. “Particularly in the post-9/11 world, is in the middle of many difficult, front page issues.”

In his job as General Counsel of the Navy, Captain Stimson will confront a host of these difficult issues as well. I would not be here today if I did not have full confidence in his ability to tackle them.

Captain Stimson’s partnership with Secretary Johnson was not an isolated event, either; he also developed partnerships with Stephen Preston, who served as General Counsel of both the Department of Defense and the CIA under President Obama. Preston recently spoke on a panel that Captain Stimson hosted at Heritage.

In my friend and brother-in-arms Captain Stimson, the Navy is gaining an imminently qualified attorney, an honorable military officer, and an individual with vast experience, and fidelity to the law and our country.

He has a long career of exemplary service in law and defense, and is an excellent fit for the position to which he was nominated.

I have no doubt he will be a wonderful General Counsel of the Navy.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--

Micah Chambers

Acting Director

Office of Congressional & Legislative Affairs

Office of the Secretary of the Interior

From: Chambers, Micah
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Aaron Thiele; Nachmany, Eli
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Cully statement
Date: Tuesday, July 11, 2017 1:17:05 PM

Is RZ introducing him at hearing or just a submitted statement of support?

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 12:41 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Micah/Aaron - can you please review the remarks for Cully's hearing?

Chairman McCain, Ranking Member Reed, and members of the Committee: it is an honor to be here today to tell you about an American patriot, a mentor, and a good friend, Captain Cully Stimson.

Captain Stimson is President Donald Trump's nominee for General Counsel of the United States Navy. I can think of no one more qualified for this job.

As a retired Navy SEAL Commander, I know just how important it is for the Navy to have the most-qualified individuals in positions of leadership, and the man I am introducing today fits the bill.

Captain Stimson and I served together in the Navy; he brings over two decades of experience as a lawyer, having first served in the Navy's Judge Advocate General's Corps, also known as the JAG Corps, in the 1990s.

In addition to our time together in the Navy, I also had the pleasure of working with him and Congressman DeStefano on a bill to ensure victims of sexual assault in the military receive the legal services they deserve.

To tell Captain Stimson's story is to tell of his lifetime of commitment to both his community and his country. He has been a leader from very early on, serving as Captain of the Men's Varsity Soccer Team at Kenyon College.

He went on to graduate from The George Mason University School of Law, and he joined the Navy as a young lawyer in 1992. For five years, he was on active duty, serving in both San Diego, California and London, England.

Captain Stimson was called back to active duty in 2001, to support the Joint Special Operations Task Force JAG for SEAL Group Two.

In President George W. Bush's administration, Captain Stimson was a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Detainee Affairs, providing advice and counsel to Secretaries of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and Robert

Gates about the Pentagon's detention operations.

Since leaving public service, he has been with the Heritage Foundation as a Senior Legal Fellow and Manager of their National Security Law Program.

Captain Stimson has served our nation for over two decades in the Navy, more recently serving as Deputy Chief Judge of the Navy-Marine Corps Trial Judiciary and an adjunct law professor and instructor at the Naval Justice School in a reserve capacity.

A bulleted list of Captain Stimson's professional achievements, however, does not paint the full picture of how this man has demonstrated himself to be the kind of high-character human being fit for service.

From teaching high school to coaching and mentoring hundreds, if not thousands, of young Americans, Captain Stimson has devoted countless hours to cultivating the next generation. He is Chairman of the Board of the U.S. Soccer Foundation, the charitable arm of U.S. Soccer, which offers assistance to more than 35,000 underserved and minority children.

A devoted family man, Captain Stimson has been married since 1995. He and his lovely wife adopted four orphans.

Captain Stimson is the epitome of a military officer, representing honor, integrity and service. He has always been the first one willing to help others, whether that has meant writing dozens of letters of recommendations for colleges, graduate schools, judicial clerkships, and jobs, or quietly paying the tuition of two of his mentees who could not afford to take the Law School Admission Test. He also founded the Bryon J. Horn Memorial Scholarship Fund, in honor of a fallen fraternity brother.

Captain Stimson is the type of public servant who is comfortable working across party lines. When President Obama's Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson was General Counsel of the Department of Defense, he and Stimson worked together on a number of tough issues aimed to keep our great nation safe.

This bipartisan partnership eventually led to Captain Stimson extending, and Johnson accepting, an invitation to speak to the Heritage Foundation.

In that speech, Secretary Johnson spoke about his job, and one line from his remarks stands out in particular. "The office of General Counsel of the Defense Department,” he said. “Particularly in the post-9/11 world, is in the middle of many difficult, front page issues.”

In his job as General Counsel of the Navy, Captain Stimson will confront a host of these difficult issues as well. I would not be here today if I did not have full confidence in his ability to tackle them.

Captain Stimson’s partnership with Secretary Johnson was not an isolated event, either; he also developed partnerships with Stephen Preston, who served as General Counsel of both the Department of Defense and the CIA under President Obama. Preston recently spoke on a panel that Captain Stimson hosted at Heritage.

In my friend and brother-in-arms Captain Stimson, the Navy is gaining an imminently qualified attorney, an honorable military officer, and an individual with vast experience, and fidelity to the law and our country.

He has a long career of exemplary service in law and defense, and is an excellent fit for the position to which he was nominated.

I have no doubt he will be a wonderful General Counsel of the Navy.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--

Micah Chambers

Acting Director

Office of Congressional & Legislative Affairs

Office of the Secretary of the Interior

From: Nachmany, Eli
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Cully statement
Date: Tuesday, July 11, 2017 12:48:53 PM

Quick note: third-to-last graf, "gaining" has an extra "g" and "imminently" should be "eminently"

On Tue, Jul 11, 2017 at 12:41 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Micah/Aaron - can you please review the remarks for Cully's hearing?

Chairman McCain, Ranking Member Reed, and members of the Committee: it is an honor to be here today to tell you about an American patriot, a mentor, and a good friend, Captain Cully Stimson.

Captain Stimson is President Donald Trump's nominee for General Counsel of the United States Navy. I can think of no one more qualified for this job.

As a retired Navy SEAL Commander, I know just how important it is for the Navy to have the most-qualified individuals in positions of leadership, and the man I am introducing today fits the bill.

Captain Stimson and I served together in the Navy; he brings over two decades of experience as a lawyer, having first served in the Navy's Judge Advocate General's Corps, also known as the JAG Corps, in the 1990s.

In addition to our time together in the Navy, I also had the pleasure of working with him and Congressman DeStefano on a bill to ensure victims of sexual assault in the military receive the legal services they deserve.

To tell Captain Stimson's story is to tell of his lifetime of commitment to both his community and his country. He has been a leader from very early on, serving as Captain of the Men's Varsity Soccer Team at Kenyon College.

He went on to graduate from The George Mason University School of Law, and he joined the Navy as a young lawyer in 1992. For five years, he was on active duty, serving in both San Diego, California and London, England.

Captain Stimson was called back to active duty in 2001, to support the Joint Special Operations Task Force JAG for SEAL Group Two.

In President George W. Bush's administration, Captain Stimson was a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Detainee Affairs, providing advice and counsel to Secretaries of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates about the Pentagon's detention operations.

Since leaving public service, he has been with the Heritage Foundation as a Senior Legal Fellow and Manager of their National Security Law Program.

Captain Stimson has served our nation for over two decades in the Navy, more recently serving as Deputy Chief Judge of the Navy-Marine Corps Trial Judiciary and an adjunct law professor and instructor at the Naval Justice School in a reserve capacity.

A bulleted list of Captain Stimson's professional achievements, however, does not paint the full picture of how this man has demonstrated himself to be the kind of high-character human being fit for service.

From teaching high school to coaching and mentoring hundreds, if not thousands, of young Americans, Captain Stimson has devoted countless hours to cultivating the next generation. He is Chairman of the Board of the U.S. Soccer Foundation, the charitable arm of U.S. Soccer, which offers assistance to more than 35,000 underserved and minority children.

A devoted family man, Captain Stimson has been married since 1995. He and his lovely wife adopted four orphans.

Captain Stimson is the epitome of a military officer, representing honor, integrity and service. He has always been the first one willing to help others, whether that has meant writing dozens of letters of recommendations for colleges, graduate schools, judicial clerkships, and jobs, or quietly paying the tuition of two of his mentees who could not afford to take the Law School Admission Test. He also founded the Bryon J. Horn Memorial Scholarship Fund, in honor of a fallen fraternity brother.

Captain Stimson is the type of public servant who is comfortable working across party lines. When President Obama's Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson was General Counsel of the Department of Defense, he and Stimson worked together on a number of tough issues aimed to keep our great nation safe.

This bipartisan partnership eventually led to Captain Stimson extending, and Johnson accepting, an invitation to speak to the Heritage Foundation.

In that speech, Secretary Johnson spoke about his job, and one line from his remarks stands out in particular. "The office of General Counsel of the Defense Department," he said. "Particularly in the post-9/11 world, is in the middle of many difficult, front page issues.”

In his job as General Counsel of the Navy, Captain Stimson will confront a host of these difficult issues as well. I would not be here today if I did not have full confidence in his ability to tackle them.

Captain Stimson’s partnership with Secretary Johnson was not an isolated event, either; he also developed partnerships with Stephen Preston, who served as General Counsel of both the Department of Defense and the CIA under President Obama. Preston recently spoke on a panel that Captain Stimson hosted at Heritage.

In my friend and brother-in-arms Captain Stimson, the Navy is gainging an imminently qualified attorney, an honorable military officer, and an individual with vast experience, and fidelity to the law and our country.

He has a long career of exemplary service in law and defense, and is an excellent fit for the position to which he was nominated.

I have no doubt he will be a wonderful General Counsel of the Navy.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Russell Newell
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Adams, Nathan; Rebecca Matulka; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Hispanic Heritage Month photo gallery
Date: Wednesday, September 06, 2017 4:15:12 PM

I think so

Sent from my iPhone

On Sep 6, 2017, at 4:06 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Do we have somebody who can translate this into espanol?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Sep 6, 2017 at 3:58 PM, Adams, Nathan <nathan_adams@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

All,

Hispanic Heritage Month begins September 15 and we developed a photo gallery to highlight Interior-managed sites dedicated to preserving Hispanic American history. It's very similar to what we've done in the past for Black History Month and Women's History Month.

Please let us know if you have any red flags. We'd like to post this next Thursday morning.

Thanks!

PHOTO GALLERY - NOT A BLOG

Discover Hispanic heritage at these historic sites

Hispanic Heritage Month starts on September 15. Interior and its bureaus preserve and interpret historic sites across the country. For American citizens whose ancestors came from Spain, Mexico, the Caribbean and Central and South America, these places connect them to our nation's shared history. From early explorers to modern day leaders, Hispanic Americans have impacted America's culture and played an important role in society.

Celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month by visiting one of the historic sites near

YOU.

El Camino Real de Tierra Adentro National Historic Trail

In the 17th century, Spanish explorers made military expeditions into the future states of Texas, Louisiana and New Mexico. Building on Native American trading paths, the Spanish created “royal roads,” called camino reals. Competing against British and French colonial expansion, they established military forts, trading posts and missions for the religious and social conversion of American Indians. These settlements and cultural exchange laid the foundation for art, architecture, language, music, food and traditions that define the region today. Visit El Camino Real de los Tejas National Historic Trail and San Antonio Mission National Historical Park in Texas and El Camino Real de Tierra Adentro National Historic Trail in New Mexico to experience this rich history.

Assateague Island National Seashore

Not far offshore of Assateague Island National Seashore in Virginia, two Spanish shipwrecks rest under the ocean waters. Testaments to the dangers of colonial era shipping, artifacts from the La Galga and the Juno shipwrecks are on display in the visitor center. According to popular legend, which Marguerite Henry famously retold in her classic children’s book Misty of Chincoteague, Assateague’s Chincoteague ponies are descendants of Spanish horses that came ashore after escaping the La Galga or another shipwreck.

César E. Chávez National Monument

César E. Chávez National Monument in California preserves the office and burial place of one of the most important Latino leaders during the 20th century in the United States. César E. Chávez led farm workers and supporters in the establishment of the country’s first permanent agricultural union -- the United Farm Workers of America. His leadership brought sustained international attention to the plight of farm workers, and secured them higher wages and safer working conditions. This had a major impact on labor rights and the recognition of Hispanic Americans to the economy and culture.

Fort Frederica National Monument

The British colony of Georgia was founded in part to act as a buffer zone between South Carolina and the Spanish territory of Florida. Fort Frederica was built on St. Simon’s Island as a military installation, but it also became a lively commercial center. Under founder James Oglethorpe, the settlement furthered a social agenda that advocated for penal reform and the abolition of slavery. It is best remembered as the site of the 1742 Battle of Bloody Marsh between the British and Spanish, which ensured English dominion over Georgia and limited Spanish influence to Florida. Today, Fort Frederica National Monument preserves the fort's remains and helps tell the story of the cultures that shaped the area's early history.

Wrangell-St. Elias National Park and Preserve

Alaska might be the last place in America people think of when it comes to Spanish influence, but a series of Spanish expeditions along the West Coast in the 1700s left their mark on the Last Frontier. As part of a five-year scientific voyage, Alessandro Malaspina's expedition took botanical and mineralogical findings, updated maps, searched for new trade routes and made contact with the Tlingit Alaskan Natives. While the Spanish eventually lost all claim to Alaska and the Pacific Northwest, the Spanish legacy is still evident in places like the Malaspina Glacier in Wrangell-St. Elias National Park.

Sangre de Cristo National Heritage Area

After the United States annexed Mexico's northern territories in 1848, many of the new American citizens moved north and east. One of these Hispanic Americans was Teofilo Trujillo, who settled with his wife in Colorado's San Luis Valley west of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains in 1865. The Trujillo homesteads are now a National Historic Landmark and part of the Sangre de Cristo National Heritage Area. The two ranches, where the Trujillo family had struggles and success, help reveal the settlement history and influences of Hispanic culture in the Southwest.

Freedom Tower in Miami

Originally built as a newspaper headquarters, the Freedom Tower in Miami, Florida, is considered the "Ellis Island of the South" for its role as the Cuban Assistance Center from 1962 to 1974. A National Historic Landmark, the Freedom Tower is the single most important physical manifestation of this period of Cold War era politics and the Cuban exodus experience. The 17-story building, based on the design of a Spanish cathedral tower, served as a symbol of hope and freedom, and the firm belief that democracy should be available to all who fight against tyranny. The Cubans who passed through its halls became a vital part of the South Florida community.

Santa Fe National Historic Trail

In 1821, Mexico gained its independence from Spain's 200 years of control and unlocked a great gateway to the West -- the Santa Fe Trail. From 1821 until 1880, trade between Mexico and the United States flourished and western migration expanded. People shared their products and culture along the trail at places like Bent's Old Fort National Historic Site in Colorado and Pecos National Historical Park in New Mexico. Today, living historians recreate the sights, sounds and smells of the past with guided tours, demonstrations and special events.

National Mall and Department of the Interior Building

Just off the National Mall in Washington, D.C., Virginia Avenue runs directly in front of the Department of the Interior headquarters. Along this street stand five statues that honor Hispanic liberators José Gervasio Artigas, Simón Bolívar, José de San Martín, Bernardo de Gálvez and Benito Juárez. These statues were gifts from Argentina, Mexico, Spain, Uruguay and Venezuela to the United States as a gesture of mutual commitment to freedom and democracy. The shared history of revolution against colonial powers binds together the nations of the Americas.

Salinas Pueblo Missions National Monument

Spanish culture remains prevalent throughout the Southwest. You can see it in the architecture, accents, food, music and religion. It's been almost 400 years since Fray Francisco Fonte arrived in New Mexico and began establishing missions to convert native Pueblo people to Christianity. Franciscan Friars met stiff resistance and when drought, epidemics and natural disasters began to decimate the population of the Salinas Valley, the Pueblo peoples felt they had insulted the spirits and returned to their old beliefs. This story comes alive at the extensive ruins preserved at Salinas Pueblo Missions National Monument.

San Juan National Historic Site

This Spanish system of fortifications in San Juan, Puerto Rico is the oldest European construction in U.S. territory and one of the oldest in the New World. Expanded many times over 150 years, the walls eventually protected the entire city of San Juan against repeated attacks from the British and Dutch. Designated a World Heritage Site, San Juan National Historic Site preserves these massive fortifications and offers programs on the Spanish and Latino history of the island forts. These remarkable buildings are an important part of Puerto Rico's history and provide a stunning backdrop to the vibrant culture of San Juan.

Valle de Oro National Wildlife Refuge

Valle de Oro National Wildlife Refuge is a natural oasis in the urban landscape of Albuquerque, New Mexico. Urban refuges like Valle de Oro offer unique environmental education and recreation opportunities in highly populated areas while promoting the mission of the refuge system to protect wildlife and their habitats. The refuge works closely with the neighboring Hispanic community to improve residents' well-being and access to green space and inspire the next generation of public land stewards.

From: Ross, Paul
To: Laura Rigas; Swift, Heather
Cc: Rebecca Matulka; Alex Hinson
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: National Park Service announces leadership changes at Mammoth Cave National Park
Date: Friday, June 23, 2017 11:35:37 AM

Laura-

Below is another NPS Superintendent announcement in addition to the previous one on the e-mail chain. I've been told ASFWP's office has signed off. NPS would like to distribute as soon as possible. These announcements will be made at the local level. Thanks.

-Paul

Steven Sims Chosen as Superintendent of Valley Forge National Historical Park, Hopewell Furnace National Historic Site

PHILADELPHIA - National Park Service (NPS)—National Park Service (NPS) Acting Northeast Regional Director Cynthia MacLeod has named Steven Sims as the new superintendent of Valley Forge National Historical Park and Hopewell Furnace National Historic Site in Pennsylvania. Currently serving as Northeast Region's Chief of Facility Management, Sims will begin his new assignment in late June. He replaces Kate Hammond, who was named Intermountain Region Deputy Regional Director last October after serving as superintendent since March of 2012. Mark Alexander, the division chief of line item construction and transportation, will step into Sims' former position as acting chief of facility management in the interim.

"Steve brings a broad set of skills that will be very beneficial to both the park units. He is skilled at bringing partners together to work towards a common goal and values the importance of community engagement," said MacLeod. "His background as a West Point graduate and military officer will provide the leadership needed to define and carry out the mission of the parks."

"I am honored to have been selected to serve as the superintendent of Valley Forge National Historical Park and Hopewell Furnace National Historic Site," said Sims. "As a former Army Officer, I feel a deep responsibility for the privilege of caring for the hallowed grounds of Valley Forge where, unarguably, the spirit of the American soldier was born. Hopewell Furnace National Historic Site is also a relatively unknown gem that provides a fantastic look at a 19th Century iron plantation industrial culture. I look forward to this opportunity to serve these parks and our neighbors in this new role."

During his 20-year federal career, Sims has served as the Facility Manager for Independence National Historical Park and was the Civil Engineer and Facility Manager for the National Mall and Memorial Parks in Washington DC from 2007 until 2011. Prior to working for the National Park Service he served as a consultant engineer for Alpha Corporation and an Army Engineer Officer. He is a registered professional engineer, a certified facility manager and a project management professional. He holds a bachelor's degree in Civil Engineering from the United States Military Academy, a master's degree in Engineering Management from the University of Missouri and a master's in Business Administration from Norwich University.

Sims is originally from Tehachapi, CA. He is married and has two teenage children. His hobbies include hiking, fly fishing, beekeeping and riding motorcycles.

—www.nps.gov—

About the National Park Service: More than 20,000 National Park Service employees care for America's 417 national parks and work with communities across the nation to help preserve local history and create close-to-home recreational opportunities. Visit us at www.nps.gov, on Facebook www.facebook.com/nationalparkservice, Twitter www.twitter.com/natlparkservice, and YouTube www.youtube.com/nationalparkservice.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, Jun 21, 2017 at 11:02 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura/Heather-

NPS Southeast Region is looking to put out this release regarding a new deputy regional director as well as a new superintendent for Mammoth Cave National Park. I've been told this cleared ASFWP. No specific target date, just as soon as we can clear. Release looks fine to me. Thanks.

-Paul

National Park Service announces leadership changes at Mammoth Cave National Park

ATLANTA — Today, National Park Service (NPS) Southeast Regional Director Stan Austin announced the selection of Mammoth Cave National Park Superintendent Sarah Craighead as deputy regional director, based in Atlanta. With this selection, Austin has also tapped Southeast Regional Chief of Staff Barclay Trimble as Mammoth Cave's next superintendent. Both appointments are effective July 23.

"Sarah and Barclay have distinguished themselves as exceptional leaders within the National Park Service," Austin said. "Sarah has a remarkable ability to tackle tough issues with clear vision, while fostering a strong sense of connection and purpose. I have relied on Barclay extensively for his business acumen and invaluable contributions to regional strategy and operations. I am confident both will continue serving the National Park Service and the American people well in their new roles."

Sarah Craighead, Deputy Regional Director, Southeast Region

Sarah Craighead, who began her NPS career as a cave guide and campground ranger at Mammoth Cave in 1978, has led the central-Kentucky park as superintendent since 2012. Park visitation increased by 10 percent during her 5-year tenure. She fortified partnerships with tourism constituents, volunteers, user groups, and the Friends of Mammoth Cave. Craighead opened the park's renovated visitor center and Big Hollow mountain-bike trail, and supported the removal of 100-year-old Lock & Dam 6 from Green River, returning many miles of surface and cave rivers to natural flow. As the Kentucky NPS coordinator, Craighead led her fellow superintendents to bring widespread recognition to the state's five NPS sites during the agency's Centennial year. Craighead also initiated night-sky programming and the park will complete its International Dark Sky nomination this year.

Prior to joining Mammoth Cave, Craighead spent three years as superintendent of California's Death Valley National Park, the largest national park in the continental U.S. and the lowest place in North America at 282 feet below sea level. She also served as superintendent of Saguaro National Park in Arizona and Washita Battlefield National Historic Site in Oklahoma. In her 38-year career, Craighead has also worked at Acadia National Park, Carlsbad Caverns National Park, Grand Canyon National Park, Manassas National Battlefield Park, Independence National Historical Park, and Mesa Verde National Park. While at Mammoth Cave, Craighead completed temporary assignments to the NPS Southeast Regional Office as acting deputy regional director and also as a special assistant to the regional director.

"Whatever I have been able to accomplish at Mammoth Cave was possible because of the park staff's dedication to excellence in all they do," said Craighead. "I am particularly pleased with the progress we made in providing concessions services for visitors and that several strategic plans are underway, which will guide Mammoth Cave for years to come. I am honored to begin my new assignment with the Southeast Regional Office, bringing the same enthusiasm and commitment to bear for the region's 70 national park units."

Craighead is a native of Cave City, Ky. She is married to Rick Shireman, a National Park Service retiree.

Barclay Trimble, Superintendent, Mammoth Cave National Park

Barclay Trimble has served as the NPS deputy regional director in Atlanta since 2014, assuming the added duties of regional chief of staff last year. He manages 30 superintendents at national parks in Florida, Kentucky, North Carolina, Puerto Rico, South Carolina, Tennessee and the U.S. Virgin Islands. He also oversees regional planning and compliance, land resources, ranger activities, and commercial services.

Prior to joining the NPS Southeast Regional Office, Trimble served as cluster superintendent of Cape Hatteras National Seashore, Wright Brothers National Memorial and Fort Raleigh National Historic Site in North Carolina; deputy superintendent and acting superintendent at Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona; recreation fee manager for the NPS Intermountain Region in Colorado; acting chief for the Business Management Office at Glen Canyon National Recreation Area in Utah/Arizona and chief of finance for the NPS Concessions Program Center in Colorado. In addition to these tenured assignments, Trimble has also provided administrative and management support during temporary assignments at, both, Denali National Park and Preserve in Alaska and the National Transportation Safety Board in Washington, DC.

“Mammoth Cave National Park boasts amazing resources with equally impressive employees, volunteers and community partners,” Trimble said. “I look forward to joining the park this summer and immersing myself in the majesty of Mammoth Cave.”

A Texas native, Trimble graduated from the University of Texas at San Antonio with a degree in Business Administration. In his spare time, Trimble takes every opportunity to enjoy the parks and outdoors with his two children and wife, Lana.

#

Mammoth Cave National Park is two parks in one. Below the surface, it preserves the extensive Mammoth Cave system and above ground, scenic river valleys and the extreme hills and hollows typical of a karst landscape. Mammoth Cave is the longest cave in the world, with more than 405 miles explored and mapped.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

From: Matulka, Rebecca
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Ross, Paul; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 11:34:23 AM

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department’s popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Swift, Heather
To: Matulka, Rebecca
Cc: Ross, Paul; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 11:36:47 AM

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke.
"Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking

the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural

- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Matulka, Rebecca
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Ross, Paul; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 11:56:40 AM

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Laura Rigas
To: Ross, Paul
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 4:16:03 PM

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.

Who is doing the interview with CBS?

Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience”
2016 Photo Contest Winners

*Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement
on*

Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior’s popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Paul Ross
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 4:40:44 PM

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today?
Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke.
"Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.'"

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul

<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on

Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest

year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Laura Rigas
To: Paul Ross
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 4:51:24 PM

Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy. Who is doing the interview with CBS? Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces
“Share the Experience”
2016 Photo Contest
Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram

account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America's national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

"These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.'"

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

"I like photographing the frogs because they're artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I've been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me," said McIntyre. "Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected."

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and

Landscapes

- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Ross, Paul
To: Matulka, Rebecca
Cc: Swift, Heather; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 12:44:23 PM

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.

Who is doing the interview with CBS?

Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on

Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S.

Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Matulka, Rebecca
To: Ross, Paul; Swift, Heather
Cc: Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 11:04:35 AM

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on

Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America's national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

"These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.'"

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

"I like photographing the frogs because they're artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I've been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me," said McIntyre. "Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected."

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by

Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Ross, Paul
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 12:08:02 PM

Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 12:07 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I defer to you guys on the CBS mention. I'm good with the rest. Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:59 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

An exclusive. I believe we mentioned them last year to let people know where these would be announced. But I am fine removing and just driving folks to our Instagram.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 7:52 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.
Do we need to mention CBS? Are they a partner or just an exclusive?

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:38 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners
Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department’s popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross,
Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park
Foundation. “This contest
motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured
places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts.
Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202)
507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka,
Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov

1

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017
at 11:34 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks, and
completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't

interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy. Who is doing the interview with CBS? Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2,
2017 at 11:04
AM, Matulka,
Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May
1, 2017 at 8:13
AM, Ross, Paul
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share
The Experience
contest. I believe Rebecca
already mentioned
this to you.
Release is scheduled for
Thursday.
But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday
under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and
Park
Foundation
will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today
on a photo gallery as well as CBS
This Morning

for announcing the winners.
But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you
for awareness.
The annual contest,
which we partner with the National
Park
Foundation
and other federal land
management agencies on,
highlights
amateur photographers
and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America
The Beautiful
Federal Land
Pass.

Thank you!

Interior

Announces “Share
the Experience”
2016
Photo
Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers
Compete
for
Photo
Placement
on*

*Public Lands
and Waters
Pass*

WASHINGTON
– The U.S.
Department
of the Interior
today, along with the National
Park Foundation
and other participating federal recreation land agencies,
announced
the winners
of the 2016

“Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior’s popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos

encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500

photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife

Refuge
during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs
because they’re artistic – little reptiles
and amphibians
are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now –
patterns,
designs, and their behavior all fascinate
me,” said
McIntyre.
“Public lands are very important to me,
especially places like Big Bend
National Park,
Aransas
National
Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre
Island
National Seashore.

These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The

Narrows at Zion
National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by
$5,000 and
$3,000 for second and third place.
Winners
also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron
and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and
Federal Recreational
Lands Pass.
Prizes are awarded for fan favorites
and the following six category
winners:

.
Adventure

and Outdoor Recreation

.

Historical
and Cultural

.

Scenic,
Seasons,
and Landscapes

.

Family,
Friends,
and Fun

.

Wildlife

.

Night
Skies

The 2017
Share the Experience
photo contest, sponsored
by the National
Park
Foundations
in partnership
with the National Park Service,
the Bureau
of Land Management,
the Bureau
of Reclamation,
the U.S.

Army Corps
of Engineers,
the U.S.
Fish and Wildlife Service,
the U.S.
Forest Service, and Recreation.gov,
is now accepting entries
through December
31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular
Twitter, Instagram
and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official
photo contest of America's
national parks and
federal recreational
lands,
showcasing
the more than 500 million acres
of federal

lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and

share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes,
vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public
Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-
4633 | Cell: (202)
507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy
Director of Digital
Interior
Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

<DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth quote.docx>

From: Laura Rigas
To: Ross, Paul
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 12:07:35 PM

I defer to you guys on the CBS mention. I'm good with the rest. Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:59 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

An exclusive. I believe we mentioned them last year to let people know where these would be announced. But I am fine removing and just driving folks to our Instagram.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 7:52 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.
Do we need to mention CBS? Are they a partner or just an exclusive?

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:38 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department’s popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America’s national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America’s national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today?
Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell

@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

I'm good with just a
mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka,
Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks, and
completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment.
They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017

at 11:26 AM, Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote
below.

"These incredible
photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke.
"Expanding access for hunting, fishing,
motorized recreation,
hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov

1

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2,
2017 at 11:04 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1,
2017 at 8:13 AM,
Ross, Paul
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful

Federal Land
Pass.

Thank you!

Interior
Announces “Share
the Experience”
2016
Photo
Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers
Compete
for
Photo
Placement
on*

*Public Lands
and Waters
Pass*

WASHINGTON
– The U.S.
Department of the Interior
today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America's national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands

pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S.

Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke.

“From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’” were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

More than 16,500 photos

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like

photographing the frogs
because they're artistic
– little reptiles
and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I've been studying them for 60 years now –
patterns,
designs, and their behavior
all fascinate
me," said
McIntyre.

"Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas
National
Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island
National Seashore.
These places
and the habitat need to be protected."

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa,
for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary

Waters Canoe
Area
Wilderness, part of Superior
National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows
at Zion National Park
in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image
is $10,000,
followed by
$5,000 and
$3,000 for second and third place.
Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by

Celestron and Osprey
Packs, hotel packages
courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and
Federal Recreational
Lands Pass.
Prizes are awarded for fan favorites
and the following six category
winners:

- .
Adventure
and Outdoor Recreation
- .
Historical
and Cultural
- .
Scenic,
Seasons,
and Landscapes
- .
Family,
Friends,
and Fun
- .
Wildlife
- .
Night
Skies

The 2017
Share the Experience
photo contest,
sponsored by the National
Park
Foundations in partnership
with
the National Park Service,
the Bureau of Land Management,
the Bureau of Reclamation,
the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,
the U.S.
Forest Service, and Recreation.gov,
is now accepting entries
through December 31.
All entries have the chance to be featured on
the Interior Department's
popular
Twitter,
Instagram and Facebook
accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support

America's national parks
and community-based programs.
#FindYourPark
invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes,
vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs
Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-
4633 | Cell: (202)
507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director
of Digital
Interior
Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

<DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth
quote.docx>

From: Ross, Paul
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Laura Rigas; Matulka, Rebecca
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 12:13:07 PM

Yeah. I was going to remove it. Thanks all for the review!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 12:12 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
i prefer to drive to insta

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 12:07 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I defer to you guys on the CBS mention. I'm good with the rest. Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:59 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

An exclusive. I believe we mentioned them last year to let people know where these would be announced. But I am fine removing and just driving folks to our Instagram.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 7:52 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.
Do we need to mention CBS? Are they a partner or just an exclusive?

Laura Keehner Rigas

Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:38 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife

Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts.
Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell:
(202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka,
Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017
at 11:36 AM, Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov

1

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2,
2017 at 11:34 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks, and
completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though
if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2,
2017 at 11:26
AM, Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks for your patience.
Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the
secretary's quote below.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2,
2017 at 11:04
AM, Matulka,
Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon,
May 1, 2017
at 8:13 AM,
Ross, Paul

<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you.

Release is scheduled
for Thursday.
But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday
under embargo.
All of the other land management agencies
and Park Foundation
will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today
on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning
for announcing
the
winners.
But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo
to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness.

The annual contest,
which we partner with
the National
Park Foundation
and other federal land management agencies
on,
highlights
amateur photographers
and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on
the America
The Beautiful
Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior
Announces “Share
the Experience”
2016
Photo
Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers
Compete
for
Photo
Placement
on*

*Public Lands
and Waters
Pass*

WASHINGTON

– The U.S.
Department
of the Interior
today, along with the National
Park Foundation
and other participating federal recreation land agencies,
announced
the winners of
the 2016
“Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning
and Interior's popular

Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America's national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly

what public lands mean to the American people,”
said U.S.
Secretary
of the Interior
Ryan
Zinke.
“From riders kicking-up dirt at the White
Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking
the Narrows of Zion
National Park to the beautiful landscape
of the Oregon
Islands
National Wildlife Refuge or
an amazing sunset behind
Lake Mead and
the Hoover Dam; they showcase

that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner
Craig
McIntyre
of Rockport,
Texas,
and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas
National Wildlife Refuge
during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs
because they’re artistic – little reptiles
and amphibians
are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns,
designs,

and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog

in Boundary
Waters
Canoe
Area Wilderness, part of Superior
National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went
to Christopher
Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo
he snapped of his son experiencing
The Narrows at Zion
National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed
by $5,000
and $3,000 for second and third place.

Winners
also receive outdoor gear provided
by Celestron
and Osprey
Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and
Federal Recreational
Lands
Pass.
Prizes are awarded for fan favorites
and the following six category
winners:

- Adventure
and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical
and Cultural

.

Scenic,
Seasons,
and Landscapes

.

Family,
Friends,
and Fun

.

Wildlife

.

Night
Skies

The 2017
Share the Experience
photo contest,
sponsored
by the National
Park
Foundations
in partnership
with the National Park Service,
the Bureau
of Land Management,
the Bureau
of Reclamation,
the U.S.
Army Corps of Engineers,
the U.S.
Fish and Wildlife

Service,
the U.S.
Forest Service,
and Recreation.gov,
is now accepting entries
through December
31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular
Twitter, Instagram
and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official
photo contest of America's
national parks and
federal recreational
lands,
showcasing
the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing

entries from all across the United States.
For a full listing of prizing and rules, or to submit a
photo,
please
visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience
is a great example
of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark
—a public awareness
and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect
with,
celebrate,
and support
America's
national parks and community-based programs.
#FindYourPark

invites people to discover and share their own unique connections
to our nation's natural landscapes,
vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R.
Ross
Senior Public Affairs
Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S.
Department of the Interior
Office: (202)
501-4633 | Cell:
(202) 507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy
Director of Digital
Interior
Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka

Deputy Director
of Digital
Interior
Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

<DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth
quote.docx>

From: Swift, Heather
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Ross, Paul; Matulka, Rebecca
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 12:12:21 PM

i prefer to drive to insta

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 12:07 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
I defer to you guys on the CBS mention. I'm good with the rest. Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:59 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

An exclusive. I believe we mentioned them last year to let people know where these would be announced. But I am fine removing and just driving folks to our Instagram.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 7:52 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.
Do we need to mention CBS? Are they a partner or just an exclusive?

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:38 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners
Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department’s popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook

accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release
with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross,
Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park
Foundation. “This contest
motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured
places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts.

Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202)
507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka,
Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift,
Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

I'm good with just a
mention :) Unless of course you want to do
it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov

I

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017
at 11:34 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks, and
completely understand about being busy the past

few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy. Who is doing the interview with CBS? Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
I
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2,
2017 at 11:04
AM, Matulka,
Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a

Secretary quote
if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May
1, 2017 at 8:13
AM, Ross, Paul
<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review
regarding the annual Share
The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca
already mentioned
this to you.
Release is scheduled for
Thursday.
But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday
under embargo. All of the other land
management agencies and
Park
Foundation
will be putting out
their own version of the release. The plan is to work with

USA Today
on a photo gallery as well as CBS
This Morning
for announcing the winners.
But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo
to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you
for awareness.
The annual contest,
which we partner with the National
Park
Foundation
and other federal land management agencies on,
highlights
amateur photographers
and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then
featured on the America
The Beautiful
Federal Land
Pass.

Thank you!

Interior
Announces “Share
the Experience”
2016
Photo
Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers
Compete
for
Photo
Placement
on*

*Public Lands
and Waters
Pass*

WASHINGTON
– The U.S.
Department
of the Interior
today, along with the National
Park Foundation
and other participating
federal
recreation

land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior’s popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful

federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands
mean to the American people,”
said U.S.
Secretary of the Interior
Ryan Zinke.
“From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System
in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion
National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon
Islands
National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife

make weekly visits to Aransas
National Wildlife Refuge
during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs
because they’re artistic – little reptiles
and amphibians
are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now –
patterns,
designs, and their behavior all fascinate
me,” said
McIntyre.
“Public lands are very important to me,
especially places like Big Bend
National Park,
Aransas
National
Wildlife

Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

.
Adventure
and Outdoor Recreation

.
Historical
and Cultural

.
Scenic,
Seasons,
and Landscapes

.
Family,
Friends,
and Fun

.
Wildlife

.
Night
Skies

The 2017
Share the Experience
photo contest,
sponsored
by the National
Park
Foundations
in partnership
with the National Park Service,
the Bureau
of Land Management,

the Bureau
of Reclamation,
the U.S.
Army Corps
of Engineers,
the U.S.
Fish and Wildlife Service,
the U.S.
Forest Service, and Recreation.gov,
is now accepting entries
through December
31. All entries have the chance to be featured on
the Interior Department's popular
Twitter, Instagram
and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official
photo contest of America's
national parks and
federal recreational
lands,
showcasing

the more than 500 million acres
of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizing and rules, or to submit a
photo,
please visit
www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience
is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark
—a public awareness
and education movement
to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect
with,
celebrate,
and support
America's
national parks and community-based programs.

#FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections
to our nation's natural landscapes,
vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public
Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-
4633 | Cell: (202)
507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy
Director of Digital
Interior
Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

<DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth
quote.docx>

From: Ross, Paul
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 7:59:41 AM

An exclusive. I believe we mentioned them last year to let people know where these would be announced. But I am fine removing and just driving folks to our Instagram.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 7:52 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.

Do we need to mention CBS? Are they a partner or just an exclusive?

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:38 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016
Photo Contest Winners
Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands

Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural

Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes

- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM,
Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :)
Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov 1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks for your patience.
Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul

<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior
Announces
“Share the Experience”
2016 Photo
Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers
Compete for Photo Placement
on Public Lands and Waters Pass*

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior’s popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America's national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

"These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke.

"From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.'"

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202)
507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

<DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth quote.docx>

From: Laura Rigas
To: Ross, Paul
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 7:53:04 AM

Thanks, Paul.

Do we need to mention CBS? Are they a partner or just an exclusive?

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 7:38 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016
Photo Contest Winners
Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior’s popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners. Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas
<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts.
Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM,
Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov 1

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM,
Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest).

Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM,
Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience.

Yesterday was busy.

Who is doing the interview with CBS?

Edits to the secretary's quote
below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov 1

Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04

AM, Matulka, Rebecca

<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13

AM, Ross, Paul

<paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>

wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior
Announces
“Share the Experience”
2016 Photo
Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers
Compete for Photo Placement on Public Lands and*

Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor

Recreation

- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America’s national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation’s natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--
Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department

| 202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

<DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth quote.docx>

From: Ross, Paul
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Matulka, Rebecca; Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 7:39:03 AM
Attachments: DOI Share The Experience Release FINAL vNPF Shafroth quote.docx

Laura-

Below and attached please find the final version of the Share The Experience release to include a quote from the National Park Foundation President. Thanks.

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department’s popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America’s national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America’s national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation’s natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Thanks, Paul.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 4:40 PM, Paul Ross <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

The release will go out from us on Thursday. I'll send a version with the quote as soon as I can. For now, Rebecca will give CBS This Morning the version without the Parks Foundation quote. They are only using it for informational purposes for the segment that will highlight the images and the winners.
Thanks.

-Paul

Sent from my iPhone

On May 2, 2017, at 4:15 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you pls send the updated release with the draft quote in it? Is it for today? Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 2, 2017, at 12:44 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

National Park Foundation has asked if we could also include this quote from their president, Will Shafroth in the release:

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Seeing as how they are an important partner to NPS/DOI, I don't see a reason not to. Let me know your thoughts. Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:56 AM, Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Once was enough :)

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm good with just a mention :) Unless of course you want to do it haha

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:34 AM, Matulka, Rebecca
<rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, and completely understand about being busy the past few days.

CBS isn't interviewing anyone for this segment. They usually show all the photo winners and talk about the contest (the photo appearing on the public lands pass and the call to action to enter this year's contest). Happy to suggest someone though if you have ideas!

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:26 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.

Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces
“Share the Experience”
2016 Photo Contest
Winners

*Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement
on*

Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S.

Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America’s national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Swift, Heather
To: Matulka, Rebecca
Cc: Ross, Paul; Laura Rigas
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Tuesday, May 02, 2017 11:26:08 AM

Thanks for your patience. Yesterday was busy.
Who is doing the interview with CBS?
Edits to the secretary's quote below.

"These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation," said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. "Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for 'the benefit and enjoyment of the people.' Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it."

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 2, 2017 at 11:04 AM, Matulka, Rebecca <rebecca_matulka@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Heather,

CBS has agreed to cover this on air, online and on social media, and they'll need the materials tonight. It'd be great to send our release at the same time as the photos and captions. We can always send without a Secretary quote if you need more time to review.

Thanks!

On Mon, May 1, 2017 at 8:13 AM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Heather-

Below is a release for your review regarding the annual Share The Experience contest. I believe Rebecca already mentioned this to you. Release is scheduled for Thursday. But we will want to give to some reporters on Wednesday under embargo. All of the other land management agencies and Park Foundation will be putting out their own version of the release. The plan is to work with USA Today on a photo gallery as well as CBS This Morning for announcing the winners. But if there is any other media you'd like to offer an embargo to, let us know.

Laura-

I've cc'd you for awareness. The annual contest, which we partner with the National Park Foundation and other federal land management agencies on, highlights amateur photographers and their work showcasing our public lands. The winning photo is then featured on the America The Beautiful Federal Land Pass.

Thank you!

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners

Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account, while launching the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual America the Beautiful federal lands pass.

“These photos encapsulate exactly what public lands mean to the American people,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico or a young boy hiking the Narrows of Zion National Park to the beautiful landscape of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge or an amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam; they showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I've been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundations in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of

prizing and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark—a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America’s national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

--

Rebecca Matulka
Deputy Director of Digital
Interior Department
202.208.5337

From: Ross, Paul
To: Rigas, Laura
Cc: Russell Newell; Swift, Heather; Rebecca Matulka
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore Announced
Date: Friday, October 20, 2017 3:45:47 PM

Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Fri, Oct 20, 2017 at 3:43 PM, Rigas, Laura <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks, Paul. I will alert the front office. Please have them proceed unless you hear from me.

My best,
L

*Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior*

On Thu, Oct 19, 2017 at 2:32 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

All-

Below is a release announcing the new superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore. The region would like to announce on Monday so that the Southeast Region may begin the approval and recruitment process for a new SER Chief Ranger being vacated by the new superintendent. The SER position is critical given the disasters and issues in the Southeast.

The hiring has been approved through the DOI process.

Release looks good. No concerns from me.

-Paul

Midwest Regional Office News Release

Superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore Announced

Omaha — David Horne has been selected as the next Superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore in Michigan. Horne is a 23-year veteran of the National Park Service and currently the Chief Ranger for the Southeast Region of the National Park Service. He will begin his new assignment in January 2018.

“We are very pleased to welcome Dave as the new Superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore,” stated Regional Director Cam Sholly. “He has a proven track record of successfully managing complex operations, building strong teams, and collaborating closely with communities and partners.”

A graduate of Humboldt State University in northern California with a bachelor’s degree in biology, Horne spent four years in the U.S. Coast Guard, stationed primarily in Kodiak, Alaska. His career with the National Park Service began in Glen Canyon National Recreation Area in natural resource management. He then joined the ranks of Visitor and Resource Protection working at Sequoia & Kings Canyon, Big Bend, Yosemite, and Pinnacles National Parks as well as Lake Mead National Recreation Area and in the Intermountain Regional Office.

“I am honored to be selected as the Superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore and for the opportunity to work with the park’s talented staff,” Horne said. “My family and I are also very much looking forward to moving to the Upper Peninsula.”

Horne and his wife, Carol, have three young sons who are very active in scouting. He and his sons completed a week-long 50-mile canoe trip with the scouts this past summer, and they expect to continue this passion in their new home.

Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore, located in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, was established in 1966. It is a water-based park consisting of 73,236 acres offering the opportunity to explore miles of pristine beaches, hike over 100 miles of trails, and experience the serenity of the northern hardwood forest.

www.nps.gov

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

From: Swift, Heather
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: Fox and Friends
Date: Monday, July 17, 2017 4:58:56 PM
Attachments: WAVES Template Submission HS.xlsx

Attached. And just a reminder my (b) (6) but the doc doesn't recognize it.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 17, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:

Think you need to fill out that spreadsheet. Do you have it?

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, July 17, 2017 4:47 PM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Subject: Re: Fox and Friends

Yes - 8:15 from Pebble. Does the regular link work for WAVES? <https://events.whitehouse.gov/form?rid=BQ9RPV3WY8>

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 17, 2017 at 4:45 PM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:

Is the Secretary confirmed tomorrow?

From: Swift, Heather
To: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO
Cc: russell_newell@ios.doi.gov; laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: From Interior
Date: Monday, October 02, 2017 10:52:56 AM sure. thanks.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Oct 2, 2017 at 10:34 AM, Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <<\(b\) \(5\)> (5))> wrote:

<\(b\) \(5\)> (5))
[Redacted]

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, October 2, 2017 10:05 AM
To: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <\(b\) \(5\)> (5)); russell_newell@ios.doi.gov; laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov
Subject: From Interior

Raj - As it's a bit more reaching than the standard travel inquiry I wanted to double check what you all wanted us to do with it. There's A LOT of wrong information in here, such as the claim that there were political events in California, Nevada, others. I have the answers for all of these questions, just for your reference.

- OVERALL questions
- How many flights has Sec. Zinke taken on government or charter jets? Can you please provide the aircraft manifest, type of plane, destinations, dates of use, purpose, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips?
- On what trips did Sec. Zinke's wife Lola and/or other members of Sec. Zinke's family join?
- The calendar says that spouses attended a cultural briefing with local reindeer herders on May 26 in Norway. Was Lola Zinke one of the spouses?
- Did Sec. Zinke take steps to limit the costs of his travel? If so, what were they?

- Virgin Islands
 - What was the official purpose of the U.S. Virgin Islands trip during Zinke's first month as Interior secretary?
 - What was the cost of the trip?
 - Did Sec. Zinke's wife Lola attend?
 - While some flights appear to be commercial, others are not shown, including multiple flights on March 31. Can you please provide the manifest, type of plane, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips?

- Big Sky event
 - Sec. Zinke was in Big Sky in March 17-19, the same time Sen. Daines hosted a "weekend in the Montana mountains" benefiting the Daines Big Sky Committee. He attended multiple Daines receptions and stayed the night at Daines' home. A fundraiser flyer says requested contributions were $3,000 for PACs, $1,500 for personal.
 - What was the policy purpose of this trip?
 - Was this a political trip?
 - Who paid for Zinke's travel to the political events?

- Atlanta
 - What was the purpose of Sec. Zinke's trip to the NRA Institute for Legislative Action event in Atlanta on April 28? Was this a political event? What was the cost of flying on Air Force One, and did the DOI reimburse any other agencies for the seats of Sec. Zinke, Lola Zinke or his staff?

- April 12-20
 - During the trip, Sec. Zinke spoke at the Reagan Center in Santa Barbara and campaigned for Greg Gianforte. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - On April 15 and 16, Sec. Zinke was in Santa Barabra, including a meeting with former Congressman Bob Lagomarsino. What was the meeting about? Did these home trips entail personal or official use? The items don't say that it was "personal travel" or "paid for personally" - was it?
 - On April 17, Sec. Zinke went to the Reagan Ranch Center and met the vice president of the Young America's Foundation. What was the official policy purpose of this trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?

- May 5-13: Montana, Utah, California, Montana
 - What was the official policy purpose of Sec. Zinke's trip on May 5-13?
 - During the trip, Sec. Zinke gave keynote remarks to the RNC Spring Meeting Dinner and attended a rally for Greg Gianforte. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - On May 8 and May 9, Sec. Zinke traveled in a B200 Turboprop 8-passenger plane, the calendar states. Can you please provide the manifest, cost of the trip, owner of the jet and source of payment for the trips?
 - Sec. Zinke spent that weekend at home in Kalispell, Montana. He then flew to Dulles and home on Monday. Federal regulations say employees' official travel should by no means include personal use. Did these home trips entail personal use?

- May 25-June 2: Norway, Greenland, Alaska, Idaho
 - What was the official purpose of this trip?
 - Sec. Zinke attended a reception for Rep. Don Young at Sullivan's Steakhouse. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - Sec. Zinke flew from Boise to L.A. on June 2. The June 3 and 4 dates say "Personal travel // Paid for personally" in Santa Barbara. What did Sec. Zinke pay for? How much did he pay? At what rate did he pay for the travel personally? What aircraft did he fly on? What was the total cost to government?

- June 25-28: Nevada, Montana
 - On June 25, Sec. Zinke attended the Rule of Law Defense Fund Reception & Dinner, where he sat at a dinner table with leaders of the casino industry, the NRA, the Chamber of Commerce and Koch Industries. What was the policy purpose of Sec. Zinke's attendance? Was this a political event?
 - On June 26, Sec. Zinke flew from Las Vegas to Kalispell on a private plane tied to a Republican donor. Can you please provide the aircraft manifest, purpose, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips? It appears Sec. Zinke spent the night afterward at his home in Whitefish; is that correct, and wouldn't that convey personal use?

- July 20-22: Colorado
 - On July 20, Sec. Zinke gave remarks in Denver at the American Legislative Exchange Council. He also attended a Colorado Republican Committee roundtable and gave remarks at the Western Conservative Summit.
 - What was the official policy purpose of these trips? Were these trips political or personal? What were Sec. Zinke's remarks at these trips. What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Swift, Heather
To: Eilperin, Juliet
Cc: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: FW: a question about the FOIA the Western Values Project received on Lola Zinke's travel
Date: Monday, November 20, 2017 4:43:54 PM

The Western Values Project is a partisan hatchet group run by democratic campaign staffers.

DOI did not pay for the meal with the Governor and his wife. The Secretary personally paid the State of Alaska for Mrs. Zinke's meal. And, DOI incurred no expenses due to Mrs. Zinke's presence.

The Department provided the extensive list of documents once they were compiled.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Nov 20, 2017 at 4:29 PM, Eilperin, Juliet <Juliet.Eilperin@washpost.com> wrote:

Dear All,

The story has posted <http://wapo.st/2Ah9i5f> and is running in print tomorrow. I would welcome a comment from someone if that's doable. Thanks.

Juliet

From: Eilperin, Juliet
Sent: Monday, November 20, 2017 11:49 AM
To: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: a question about the FOIA the Western Values Project received on Lola Zinke's travel

Dear Press Team,

We are doing a post on the result of the FOIA that the Western Values Project obtained, in which they filed a lawsuit to receive a response. Here are a couple of things I was hoping to get answered:

1. Do you have a comment as to why Lola Zinke weighed in on the guest list for a town hall hosted by the conservative Young America's Foundation with the Secretary, and why she joined a dinner with Alaska Gov. Walker when it meant staff would have to redo her travel itinerary?

2. Why did department only provide the documents after facing a lawsuit?

Thanks so much, and I am best reached via email or cell today.

Juliet Eilperin

Juliet Eilperin

Senior National Affairs Correspondent

Washington Post

Juliet.eilperin@washpost.com

(O) 202-334-7774

(C) 202-302-3663

@eilperin

From: Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Laura Rigas
Subject: RE: FW: Flagging - Zinke a bit out over his skis in a GQ interview
Date: Monday, July 31, 2017 2:53:55 PM

Thank you! Sorry I overlooked this...

Brad

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, July 31, 2017 2:51 PM
To: Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Cc: Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: Re: FW: Flagging - Zinke a bit out over his skis in a GQ interview

Brad, here's the statement.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 1:44 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

The Secretary spent a number of hours with the reporter over a several month span, where they talked about everything from his love of public lands, admiration of the President and his cabinet, and the Administration's shared vision to Make America Great Again. The reporter selectively used quotes out of context to write a story that fit her pre-conceived narrative. Secretary Zinke looks forward to continuing to carry out the President's agenda and fulfill Interior's mission to protect and manage our nation's natural resources and cultural heritage.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Jul 31, 2017 at 8:20 AM, Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:

See below. I'm at my desk until 8:45 a.m. Let's discuss.

Brad Rateike
The White House
Assistant Director of Cabinet Communications

(b) (6)
Desk: (b) (6)
Mobile: (b) (6)

From: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO
Sent: Monday, July 31, 2017 8:19 AM
To: Kennedy, Adam R. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Cc: Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO (b) (6)>
Subject: FW: Flagging - Zinke a bit out over his skis in a GQ interview

Adam, work with Brad. We need some guidance/answers here in case asked.

From: Hemming, Andrew J. EOP/WHO
Sent: Monday, July 31, 2017 7:36 AM
To: Boza-Holman, Sofia M. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Cheung, Steven EOP/WHO (b) (6)>; Ditto, Jessica E.
EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Dorr, Kaelan K. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Ferre, Helen A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Fetalvo, Ninio J. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Grisham, Stephanie A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Hulse, Elliott Y. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Hurley, Carolina L. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Kennedy, Adam R. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Montesi, Janet M. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Parkinson, Andrew Z. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Ross, Tyler E. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Sadler, Kelly J. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Sanders, Sarah H. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Shoemaker, Clay M. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Short, Michael C. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Sims, Cliff D. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Strom, Natalie M. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)>; Walters, Lindsay E. EOP/WHO
<(b) (6)>
Subject: Flagging - Zinke a bit out over his skis in a GQ interview

A Zinke interview just popped in GQ and he has a couple of eyebrow-raising quotes in there about Trump.

KEY SECTIONS:

Zinke Calls His Job Interview With Trump Disorganized:

Rumors buzzed that he'd been shortlisted for the job atop the Interior Department, but when Zinke and his wife, Lola, passed through the gilded doors of Trump Tower, he actually had no clue what position he was interviewing for—Priebus had never said definitively. And by the end of a rambling conversation with the president-elect, Zinke still wasn't entirely sure.

"The conversation went a hundred seconds. It went from women in combat to Syria policy to the Chinese to energy independence, a little about public lands, a little about hunting access," Zinke tells me. "Most of the conversation was not really Interior, per se." At one point, Trump proposed the Veterans Affairs post, to which Zinke quipped, "I don't think you hate me that much."

He was flying back to Montana when Mike Pence called him. "The vice president says, 'Well, congratulations!'" Zinke recalls, sharing the moment he was asked to join the Trump Cabinet, "and I asked him, 'What job?'"

Zinke Says The Trump Administration Has Had “A Lot Of Distractions And Chatter”:

Thirty minutes into our ride, after snaking through another throng of tourists, we approach the Washington Monument—that stone memorial to the original military man turned president—and Zinke takes stock of these still-early days of the Trump administration. "The president is the best boss I've ever had," Zinke tells me, "but there's a lot of distractions and chatter." He tugs on his reins to pause for a moment and consider the structure, the city's tallest by edict. "You're just always looking for ways to stay above that."

Zinke Complains About How Hard It Is To Bring People Onboard And Notes Government Is Different Than Business:

For all that camera-ready affection for the boss, members of the Trump cabinet, Zinke included, admit to being frustrated with the White House, which they say has left them chronically short-staffed. According to the Partnership for Public Service, the White House has yet to nominate staffers for 357 out of 570 key agency positions. So far, only 50 nominees have been confirmed. (By this time in their first terms, President Obama had gotten 203 confirmed; George W. Bush, 203.)

...

Zinke, four months into the job, has been able to fill only two key positions that require White House approval, out of 15 vacancies. He notes that he's submitted the names of "awfully good, just super people," but that the past few months have been a waiting game. "Operating a business sometimes is a little different from operating in the Oval Office," Zinke says. "[In business], it's just 'All right, you're hired.' But I think the White House is running into the swamp...there's a bureaucracy there that's very difficult to determine." (Zinke may have himself to thank for recent inaction, though. The day after his unseemly call to Murkowski, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which the Alaska senator chairs, announced that hearings for a slate of Zinke's nominees would be delayed.)

Zinke Said The WH Is “Getting Its Legs Under It” And Says They Were “Getting In Other People’s Business A Bit Too Much”:

Zinke insists that he and his team have gotten along just fine with their designated White House minder, but John Kelly, who served until last week as the secretary of homeland security, was a bit more candid when we spoke. "I don't need a lot of supervision," he told me. "Obviously the White House is getting its legs under it, but early on it was a bit of a pain. They were getting in other people's business a little bit too much." (Kelly's tune will presumably change: On Friday he was named White House chief of staff.)

<http://www.gq.com/story/ryan-zinke-secretary-of-interior-profile>

From: Swift, Heather
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: FW: ZINKE QUESTION FOR TMRW
Date: Wednesday, June 28, 2017 2:28:18 PM
Attachments: WAVES Template Submission HS.xlsx

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jun 28, 2017 at 2:18 PM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6) > wrote:

Please fill out the attached

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, June 28, 2017 2:15 PM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Cc: Hurley, Carolina L. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Subject: Re: FW: ZINKE QUESTION FOR TMRW

I'll be there

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jun 28, 2017 at 2:13 PM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6) > wrote:

Hi Heather – who is coming with the secretary tomorrow? We'll wave you all in.

From: Larocco, Lori Ann (NBCUniversal) [mailto:LoriAnn.Larocco@nbcuni.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 28, 2017 2:10 PM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
Subject: ZINKE QUESTION FOR TMRW

Heather Swift from interior wanted to know if a WH comms officer needs to “WAVE” her in. Can you please let me know? I told her I would ask

Lori Ann

Lori Ann LaRocco

Sr. Talent Producer

Author, “Opportunity Knocking”, “Dynasties of the Sea”, “Thriving in the New Economy”

Phone: 201-735-3044 | Cell: 201-618-1566 |  @loriannlarocco

First in Business Worldwide

900 Sylvan Avenue | Englewood Cliffs, NJ 07632

CNBC is the recognized world leader in business news and provides real-time financial market coverage and business information to more than 800 million homes worldwide, including more than 100 million households in the United States and Canada. Through its vast portfolio of digital products, CNBC delivers real-time financial market news and information across a variety of platforms including CNBC.com, CNBCPro & CNBC mobile products.

CNBC is also available nationwide on Sirius XM channel 112.

From: Laura Rigas
To: Swift_Heather
Subject: Re: FYI: Secretary Zinke Names Steve Wackowski as Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs: TEST
Date: Tuesday, May 30, 2017 4:53:30 PM

Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 30, 2017, at 12:51 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

She signed off on it separately.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 30, 2017 at 4:51 PM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Adding Lori.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 30, 2017, at 12:49 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

FYI -- This is going out momentarily.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

----- Forwarded message -----

From: U.S. Department of the Interior <interior_news@updates.interior.gov>
Date: Tue, May 30, 2017 at 4:46 PM
Subject: Secretary Zinke Names Steve Wackowski as Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs: TEST
To: nathan_adams@ios.doi.gov, heather_swift@ios.doi.gov

news release

Date: May 30, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Secretary Zinke Names Steve Wackowski as Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs

ANCHORAGE - U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced that Steve Wackowski will serve as his Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs based out of Anchorage. Zinke made the announcement in Anchorage as part of his current tour of Alaska.

"A lifelong Alaskan and Air Force Major, Steve is perfectly qualified to advise me on Alaskan issues," said Secretary Zinke. "Like 10 percent of Alaskans, Steve served in the military, and he then continued his service as a civilian working for elected officials. His broad range of experience will prove to be invaluable as the Department focuses on future energy opportunities in Alaska, the welfare of Alaska Natives, and the vast expanses of lands and waters under Interior's management."

"It's an incredible honor to be asked to serve on Secretary Zinke's staff. I look forward to working with our state, local, and First Alaskan partners to help unlock Alaska's potential," said Wackowski.

Wackowski grew up in Anchorage and spent his summers working in Ninilchik for his family's halibut and salmon sport-fishing business. After graduating from Bartlett High School in Anchorage, he played division I-AA football at Saint Mary's College, where he earned a degree in Computer Science and a commission in the Air Force Reserve from UC-Berkeley's Air Force ROTC program.

He is currently a Major in the Reserve and drills at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson at the 611th Air Operations Center. He has served on several active duty tours throughout his reserve career including contingency deployments to Afghanistan, Haiti, and Iraq.

After his last active duty tour, Steve moved home to Alaska to work as the remote sensing operations manager for Fairweather Science, LLC in Anchorage. Steve's work detecting and mapping maternal polar bear dens for oil and gas companies on Alaska's North Slope was nationally recognized and helped earn him the Alaska Journal of Commerce's "Top 40 under 40" Award in 2015.

His public policy background includes serving as a Professional Staff member on the U.S. Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee and as the late Senator Ted Stevens' last serving Press Secretary. He most recently managed U.S. Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski's reelection campaign.

Steve is an avid hunter and fisherman who says he continually gets out-fished by his wife Lindsay. They enjoy spending time in the Alaska outdoors with their two-year-old son, Lucas, and their red fox lab, Cali.

Steve Wackowski stands in a boat holding the antlers of a moose.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

This email was sent to Email Address by: U.S. Department of the Interior 1849 C Street, N.W. Washington DC 20240 202-208-3100

From: Laura Rigas
To: Domenech, Douglas
Cc: heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: FYI: Share The Experience Winners Release
Date: Wednesday, May 03, 2017 10:20:42 AM

Thx!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On May 3, 2017, at 10:05 AM, Domenech, Douglas <douglas_domenech@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I do not see any issues. People should know the prizes are not from tax dollars and it says that.

Doug Domenech
Senior Advisor
US Department of the Interior

On Wed, May 3, 2017 at 7:45 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi all --
FYI, this is going out today. Please let us know by 10am if you have any issues. Also, there's a quote from the NPF President. Any concerns with that?
Thanks,
L

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

Interior Announces “Share the Experience” 2016 Photo Contest Winners
Citizen Photographers Compete for Photo Placement on

National Public Lands and Waters Pass

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Department of the Interior today, along with the National Park Foundation and other participating federal recreation land agencies, announced the winners of the 2016 “Share the Experience” photography contest on CBS This Morning and Interior's popular Instagram account and launched the 2017 contest.

This annual contest invites amateur photographers to submit their favorite views, moments, and adventures from America’s national parks and public lands. The winning picture, captured by Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas, will be featured on the annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

“These incredible photos represent some of America's best recreation, wilderness and wildlife, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to share them with the nation,” said U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “Expanding access for hunting, fishing, motorized recreation, hiking and more is a cornerstone of my agenda for America's public lands. From riders kicking-up dirt at the White Ridge Trail System in New Mexico to the amazing sunset behind Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam, the photos showcase that these places are truly for ‘the benefit and enjoyment of the people.’ Hopefully they inspire some young people to get outside and enjoy it.”

More than 16,500 photos were submitted with more than 710,000 photo views over the course of the contest, which ran from April 28, 2016, through Dec. 31, 2016. The contest saw a 50 percent increase in new users and almost a 10 percent increase in overall photo submissions from the previous contest year.

“Photos have the power to inspire curiosity about our national parks and public lands,” said Will Shafroth, president of the National Park Foundation. “This contest motivates people to get out, find their park, and enjoy these treasured places.”

Dabbling in wildlife photography since the early 1970s, grand prize winner Craig McIntyre of Rockport, Texas and his wife make weekly visits to Aransas National Wildlife Refuge during the summer months.

“I like photographing the frogs because they’re artistic – little reptiles and amphibians are gorgeous to me. I’ve been studying them for 60 years now – patterns, designs, and their behavior all fascinate me,” said McIntyre. “Public lands are very important to me, especially places like Big Bend National Park, Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, and South Padre Island National Seashore. These places and the habitat need to be protected.”

Second place went to Gary Hamer of Robins, Iowa, for the serene shot of his friends paddling off on a morning adventure surrounded by calm water and rising fog in Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, part of Superior National Forest, in northeastern Minnesota.

Third place went to Christopher Regala of Mililani, Hawaii, for the photo he snapped of his son experiencing The Narrows at Zion National Park in Utah.

The grand prize for the winning image is $10,000, followed by $5,000 and $3,000 for second and third place. Winners also receive outdoor gear provided by Celestron and Osprey Packs, hotel packages courtesy of Historic Hotels of America® and an annual National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass. Prizes are awarded for fan favorites and the following six category winners:

- Adventure and Outdoor Recreation
- Historical and Cultural
- Scenic, Seasons, and Landscapes
- Family, Friends, and Fun
- Wildlife
- Night Skies

The 2017 Share the Experience photo contest, sponsored by the National Park Foundation in partnership with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Recreation.gov, is now accepting entries through December 31. All entries have the chance to be featured on the Interior Department's popular Twitter, Instagram and Facebook accounts.

Share the Experience is the official photo contest of America's national parks and federal recreational lands, showcasing the more than 500 million acres of federal lands and drawing entries from all across the United States. For a full listing of prizes and rules, or to submit a photo, please visit www.sharetheexperience.org.

Share the Experience is a great example of the countless ways there are to #FindYourPark/#EncuentraTuParque — a public awareness and education movement to inspire people from all backgrounds to connect with, celebrate, and support America's national parks and community-based programs. #FindYourPark invites people to discover and share their own unique connections to our nation's natural landscapes, vibrant culture, and rich history.

###

From: Magallanes, Downey
To: Virginia Johnson
Cc: Douglas Domenech; Scott Hommel; Laura Rigas; Swift, Heather; Caroline Boulton; Timothy Williams; Aurelia Skipwith
Subject: Re: Girl Scouts of the USA's invitation to Secretary Zinke
Date: Saturday, June 03, 2017 4:31:12 PM

Not sure if anyone has responded already but from the proposal this sounds like a great event. Looks like only July 15 or 29 would work. We can put this in the scheduling queue.

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 11:09 PM, Virginia Johnson <virginia_johnson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm forwarding the invitation below from the Girl Scouts of the USA. Alice and I previously worked together at the American Red Cross.

Please see their proposal below and let me know how we might best proceed. This sounds like a very positive opportunity for the Secretary. It promotes partnership of Girl Scouts in the NPS with a focus on stewardship and infrastructure projects, is close to D.C. and focuses on girls from troops who are daughters of Marines at Quantico and the National Capital Region.

Many thanks,
Virginia

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Hockenbury, Alice" <AHockenbury@girlscouts.org>
Date: May 31, 2017 at 9:11:52 AM EDT
To: "Johnson, Virginia" <virginia_johnson@ios.doi.gov>
Cc: "Ryan, Denise" <DRyan@girlscouts.org>
Subject: Girl Scouts of the USA's invitation to Secretary Zinke

Virginia,

Thank you for taking the time yesterday to discuss our invitation to Secretary Zinke to celebrate the on-going partnership between Girl Scouts of the USA with the Department of the Interior. As we discussed, this invitation is extended to Secretary and Mrs. Zinke to join the Girl Scouts of the USA at an event at the National Park Service's Prince William Forest Park in Triangle, Virginia this summer with approximately 100 local girls from the Girl Scout Council of the Nation's Capital with a specific outreach to Girl Scouts in military families at Marine Corps Base Quantico just five miles to the East. We welcome Secretary Zinke at the event for as long as he is available to attend and understand it may only be for the opening program. Attached you will find a proposed overview of the event.

At the event we would like to promote the Girl Scout Ranger Program where girls can earn a patch for 10 hours of service in a National Park. Attached you will find an overview of the Girl Scout Ranger Program. We would like to also highlight a new series of Girl Scout outdoor badges – many of which can be earned at national parks Attached you will find an overview of the new Girl Scout Outdoor Badges. After the opening program, the girls will take part in a service project at Prince William Forest Park to assist in deferred or annual maintenance at the park and learn to be stewards of our nation's resources.

We propose holding the event on a Saturday to allow the girls and supporting adults and families to participate outside of the normal work day. However, if the Secretary's schedule can't accommodate a Saturday, we are flexible to work with your team to find a mutually acceptable date. We request one month lead-time to organize the event and suggest the following dates: July 15, July 29 or August 5. We would also like to invite senior women serving at the Department of the Interior and the National Park Service to attend the event as they will be excellent role models and an inspiration to the girls.

Please do not hesitate to contact me or Denise Ryan at drayn@girlscouts.org or 202 478-9827 if you have any questions.

Thank you for consideration of our invitation.

Best,

Alice

--

Downey Magallanes
Acting Deputy Chief of Staff

Senior Advisor and Counselor
downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov
202-501-0654 (desk)
202-706-9199 (cell)

From: Swift, Heather
To: Rigas, Laura
Cc: Alex Hinson
Subject: Re: GOING SOON: Secretary Ryan Zinke Appoints Veteran Interior Official Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior: TEST
Date: Wednesday, July 12, 2017 2:51:51 PM

weird! I fixed that before sending. Alex, you'll have to strip the formatting in another program and copy paste it back in.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 2:49 PM, Rigas, Laura <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
There's something funny with the spacing, too...

*Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior*

On Wed, Jul 12, 2017 at 2:41 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote: GOING SOON

news release

Date: July 12, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Secretary Ryan Zinke Appoints Veteran Interior Official Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior

Tribal Leaders, Congressional Officials, Others Praise Selection

WASHINGTON – U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced the appointment of former Interior Department official and former Chief of Staff to Rep. Steve Pearce (NM) Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior. In this role, Willens will work closely with yet-to-be-confirmed Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt. Willens brings with him more than 20 years of public policy and governmental affairs experience, with proven successes on behalf of prior Administrations, Members of Congress, national associations, and the private sector. He possesses a deep knowledge and understanding of the Department’s many complex policies, ranging from land to energy, wildlife, and water management.

In addition to being a westerner, Todd brings a strong combination of public and private sector experience to the Interior Department,” Secretary Ryan Zinke said. “Most of Interior's holdings and responsibilities are in the West, and Todd’s intimate understanding of the West, from growing up in rural California to his previous time at Interior to his tenure with Congressman Pearce, will be a major asset to the people we serve. I look forward to Todd helping us advance Interior’s mission and the work of the Administration on behalf of local communities.”

“It is an honor and privilege to be appointed as Interior's Assistant Deputy Secretary,” Willens said. “I thank Secretary Zinke for his confidence in my abilities to serve the Department and the Administration. I look forward to getting to work contributing to the implementation of the President's priorities for the Department and our Agencies, making America great again.”

Willens served as Chief of Staff to Congressman Steve Pearce (R-NM) from 2010 to 2017. During his tenure as Chief of Staff, Willens provided strategic advice and operational oversight to meet the needs of the constituents of the 2nd Congressional District of New Mexico. He worked closely with various stakeholders in this capacity, including local government officials, Congress, and the previous Administration to ramp up operations at defense bases, prevent job-killing regulatory action, and increase federal accountability significantly for the people of New Mexico.

“Todd's dedication to New Mexico and the West made him a most effective manager of people and policies,” Congressman Pearce said. “More than anything though, my wife Cynthia and I consider him a close friend. He has run my congressional operations for nearly seven years and been my top adviser on numerous items, delivering countless successes on my behalf. I congratulate Todd and the Administration on his appointment to this important position.”

“The selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary deepens the bench at Interior,” Jackie Johnson Pata, Executive Director of the National Congress of American Indians, said. “In his prior work as Chief of Staff for Congressman Stevan Pearce, Todd handled a wide range of Native issues. In that role, he earned the great respect of many in Indian Country. As the Administration and Tribal Nations partner to advance economic development and self-sufficiency for Native communities, Todd’s expertise and experience will be a valuable asset.”

“I have worked with Todd for several years. He has an exceptional understanding of western issues in general, and Native issues in particular,” Chairman Paul Torres of the

All Pueblo Council of Governors said. “Todd is exactly the kind of leadership that can advance Interior’s trust responsibility to tribes, while supporting tribal sovereignty and self-determination. This is an exceptional selection by the Administration.”

“The Tehama Colusa Canal Authority couldn’t be more pleased with the selection of Todd Willens to serve as Assistant Deputy Secretary at the Department of the Interior,” Jeff Sutton, General Manager of the Tehama Colusa Canal Authority, said. “A native of Northern California, Todd has a great deal of experience in Western water issues and, as a sportsman-conservationist, he has a long track record of delivering mutually beneficial policy outcomes for the benefit of fish, wildlife and water users throughout the Western United States. We look forward to working with Todd in his new capacity.”

"The Civil War Trust strongly supports the appointment of Todd Willens as Assistant Deputy Secretary of the Interior," James Lighthizer, President of the Civil War Trust, said. "In his previous service on Capitol Hill and in the Department of the Interior, Todd has been a champion of our national parks and historic battlefield sites. We are excited about the opportunity to partner with him to preserve America's battlefield parks as places of remembrance as well as heritage tourism destinations."

“The Boone and Crockett Club proudly supports Todd Willens’ appointment,” said Paul Phillips, co-chair of the Boone and Crockett Club’s Policy Committee. “Mr. Willens is a conservationist who hunts. He has this personal passion and understands the ecological and economic benefits that follow for the public. His experience in the complexities of policy at the Department of the Interior will serve the country and conservation community all very well.”

Prior to working on Capitol Hill, Willens served as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks at the Department of the Interior from 2006 to 2008. While at the Department, he worked on the National Parks Centennial, and the historic recovery of the Bald Eagle. In addition, Willens also served as Senior Policy Advisor for United States House of Representatives Committee on Natural Resources from 2003 to 2006. In this capacity, he worked closely with the Chairman to develop key legislation, including the 2005 Endangered Species Act Reauthorization and the 2005 Energy Bill. A California native, Willens is a 1994 graduate of the University of California, Los Angeles. He currently lives in Washington, D.C. with his wife and four children.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

This email was sent to Email Address by: U.S. Department of the Interior - 1849 C Street, N.W. - Washington DC 20240 - 202-208-3100

From: Swift, Heather
To: Barnum, Jeremy
Subject: Re: HARD ASAP deadline -- Can you look at this?
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 3:18:48 PM
Attachments: New Picture \(1\).bmp

TY!

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 3:14 PM, Barnum, Jeremy <jeremy_barnum@nps.gov> wrote:
I'm going to this over to a subject matter expert really quick on legal/$$ stuff.

A couple of quick things that came to my mind at first blush:

"America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands."

I know a lot of my colleagues would say this is made possible through federal protection and congressional appropriations for roads, trails, etc. but I know that's not the tenor of the piece.

"Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers."

Per our philanthropic policies we do have have some donor recognition that includes vehicles wrapped with decorative material based on park based designs. You may see a vehicle with a short, unobtrusive credit line but only when the donation relates to the vehicle. You will not see vehicles emblazoned with advertising slogans.

Jeremy K. Barnum
Public Affairs Officer
National Park Service
Office: (202) 513-7262
Mobile: (202) 617-7973

FIND YOUR
PARK
Facebook Twitter
Instagram YouTube

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 2:55 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Jeremy - I'm sorry for the quick ASAP project but do you see any issues with this? Fact checking and are there any sensitivities I should be aware of with any of the examples I used?

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off “Made in America Week.” At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America’s tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford “Red Jammer” busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in a park’s parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This "Made in America" Week, let's unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Heather Swift
To: Barnum, Jeremy
Subject: Re: HARD ASAP deadline -- Can you look at this?
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 4:15:11 PM
Attachments: New Picture \(1\).bmp

Awesome! Thanks for this feedback. Very nuanced. It's the same op ed just taken in a different direction

Sent from my iPhone

On Jul 13, 2017, at 4:12 PM, Barnum, Jeremy <jeremy_barnum@nps.gov> wrote:

Ok, ran this by a colleague. Please see a few additional comments below.

Just to clarify -- this will be separate from the op-ed that Eli is working at for which we're providing some input?

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off "Made in America Week." At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands. See previous comment in my first email.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford "Red Jammer" busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska's Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships. These are all concession contracts and not partnerships in the National Park Service. Could we say "would not be possible without private businesses (or concessionaires)"?

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I've already heard is for a food truck in a park's parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

Again, these would be concession contracts, not partnerships. Food trucks are particularly problematic in parks as they invariably create trash and sanitation issues that attract wildlife and pests to the detriment of wildlife.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

We'd love to see wi-fi, but also real time data regarding campground and hotel availability and other related trip-planning functions that private industry could provide.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships (and generous philanthropy.)

See previous comment in earlier email about vehicle wraps. I'd also note, the public are very sensitive to any naming rights to national parks being given away, endorsements, and advertising.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This "Made in America" Week, let's unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

Jeremy K. Barnum
Public Affairs Officer
National Park Service
Office: (202) 513-7262
Mobile: (202) 617-7973

FIND YOUR
PARK
Facebook Twitter
Instagram YouTube

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 3:14 PM, Barnum, Jeremy <jeremy_barnum@nps.gov> wrote:

I'm going to this over to a subject matter expert really quick on legal/$$ stuff.

A couple of quick things that came to my mind at first blush:

"America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands."

I know a lot of my colleagues would say this is made possible through federal protection and congressional appropriations for roads, trails, etc. but I know that's not the tenor of the piece.

"Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers."

Per our philanthropic policies we do have have some donor recognition that includes vehicles wrapped with decorative material based on park based designs. You may see a vehicle with a short, unobtrusive credit line but only when the donation relates to the vehicle. You will not see vehicles emblazoned with advertising slogans.

Jeremy K. Barnum
Public Affairs Officer
National Park Service
Office: (202) 513-7262
Mobile: (202) 617-7973

FIND YOUR
PARK
Facebook Twitter
Instagram YouTube

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 2:55 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Jeremy - I'm sorry for the quick ASAP project but do you see any issues with this? Fact checking and are there any sensitivities I should be aware of with any of the examples I used?

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off “Made in America Week.” At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America’s tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford “Red Jammer” busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in a park’s parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This "Made in America" Week, let's unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Barnum, Jeremy
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: HARD ASAP deadline -- Can you look at this?
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 4:12:57 PM
Attachments: New Picture \(1\).bmp

Ok, ran this by a colleague. Please see a few additional comments below.

Just to clarify -- this will be separate from the op-ed that Eli is working at for which we're providing some input?

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off “Made in America Week.” At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America’s tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands. See previous comment in my first email.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford “Red Jammer” busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

These are all concession contracts and not partnerships in the National Park Service. Could we say "would not be possible without private businesses (or concessionaires)"?

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in a park’s parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

Again, these would be concession contracts, not partnerships. Food trucks are particularly problematic in parks as they invariably create trash and sanitation issues that attract wildlife and pests to the detriment of wildlife.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain. We'd love to see wi-fi, but also real time data regarding campground and hotel availability and other related trip-planning functions that private industry could provide.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships (and generous philanthropy). See previous comment in earlier email about vehicle wraps. I'd also note, the public are very sensitive to any naming rights to national parks being given away, endorsements, and advertising.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This “Made in America” Week, let’s unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

Jeremy K. Barnum
Public Affairs Officer
National Park Service
Office: (202) 513-7262
Mobile: (202) 617-7973

FIND YOUR
PARK
Facebook Twitter
Instagram YouTube

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 3:14 PM, Barnum, Jeremy <jeremy_barnum@nps.gov> wrote:
I'm going to this over to a subject matter expert really quick on legal/$$ stuff.

A couple of quick things that came to my mind at first blush:

"America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands."

I know a lot of my colleagues would say this is made possible through federal protection and congressional appropriations for roads, trails, etc. but I know that's not the tenor of the piece.

"Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers."

Per our philanthropic policies we do have have some donor recognition that includes vehicles wrapped with decorative material based on park based designs. You may see a vehicle with a short, unobtrusive credit line but only when the donation relates to the vehicle. You will not see vehicles emblazoned with advertising slogans.

Jeremy K. Barnum
Public Affairs Officer
National Park Service
Office: (202) 513-7262
Mobile: (202) 617-7973

FIND YOUR
PARK
Facebook Twitter
Instagram YouTube

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 2:55 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Jeremy - I'm sorry for the quick ASAP project but do you see any issues with this? Fact checking and are there any sensitivities I should be aware of with any of the examples I used?

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off “Made in America Week.” At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America’s tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford “Red Jammer” busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in a park’s parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This "Made in America" Week, let's unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Barnum, Jeremy
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: HARD ASAP deadline -- Can you look at this?
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2017 3:14:52 PM
Attachments: New Picture \(1\).bmp

I'm going to this over to a subject matter expert really quick on legal/$$ stuff.

A couple of quick things that came to my mind at first blush:

"America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands."

I know a lot of my colleagues would say this is made possible through federal protection and congressional appropriations for roads, trails, etc. but I know that's not the tenor of the piece.

"Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers."

Per our philanthropic policies we do have have some donor recognition that includes vehicles wrapped with decorative material based on park based designs. You may see a vehicle with a short, unobtrusive credit line but only when the donation relates to the vehicle. You will not see vehicles emblazoned with advertising slogans.

Jeremy K. Barnum
Public Affairs Officer
National Park Service
Office: (202) 513-7262
Mobile: (202) 617-7973

FIND YOUR
PARK
Facebook Twitter
Instagram YouTube

On Thu, Jul 13, 2017 at 2:55 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Jeremy - I'm sorry for the quick ASAP project but do you see any issues with this? Fact checking and are there any sensitivities I should be aware of with any of the examples I used?

Made in America: Promoting the All-American Outdoor Experience

This week, President Trump kicked off "Made in America Week." At the Department of the Interior, we are taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands, which is made possible, in large part, thanks to private foundations, American businesses, and the thousands of public-private-partnerships across our public lands.

We already have thousands of partners across the country who fund and assist with visitor services, infrastructure, and even land acquisition.

Boston Harbor National Recreation Area is a unique example of a public-private-public partnership where federal, state, and private organizations work together to manage the land, provide boats between islands, restore historic lighthouses and forts, provide educational tours, and carry out janitorial and maintenance tasks. All of this could not be possible without the joint effort.

Private partners also help maintain our buildings and aging infrastructure.

For example, earlier this year, President Trump donated his first quarter salary of about $78,000 to the National Park Service to restore historic battlefields. Private foundations like the Civil War Trust, National Park Foundation, and Save Historic Antietam all chipped in, and with matching donations we were able to fund a $263,000 project to restore a historic structure and nearly mile-long fence at the historic Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland.

Some of our most-iconic, all-American outdoor experiences like riding the historic Ford “Red Jammer” busses in Glacier National Park, staying overnight in the El Tovar lodge at the Grand Canyon, or whale watching in Alaska’s Glacier Bay National Park would not be possible without public-private partnerships.

To highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders and land managers to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can partner together to build upon the All-American Outdoor Experience on public lands. Some ideas I’ve already heard is for a food truck in a park’s parking lot, energy-efficient cabins in a national monument, and bringing mobile youth fishing centers to urban areas across the country.

The Department is focused on identifying and expanding the best existing services and bringing in new services to parks and recreation areas.

For example, Wi-Fi, internal transportation, campgrounds, boat ramps, concessions, and even restrooms are not available on many public lands. Also, once somebody gets to a recreation area, services like boat, ATV and fishing pole rentals are often unavailable. This would be like going on a ski vacation and not being able to rent skis or have access to a lift up the mountain.

This leaves many families without practical and affordable options for camping, hiking, and recreating. Having three kids and two granddaughters myself, I can't imagine going on a family vacation without some of these basic services.

Now, expanding public-private-partnerships does not mean privatizing our parks as some have wrongly suggested. I am opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and under my watch our public lands will remain public.

Having partners in parks also does not mean the shuttle bus will look like a race car covered in corporate stickers. In fact, some of our most iconic features are only possible thanks to partnerships.

Expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver greater services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management. Partners are also able to deliver many services to the American people at a lower cost than the government can.

With the right amount of ingenuity and originality, we can foster the All-American Outdoor Experience through our work at Interior. The Roosevelt Arch at Yellowstone National Park reads, "For the enjoyment of the people." Enjoying recreation on public lands is at the core of our shared American heritage.

The All-American Outdoor Experience is part of who we are as Americans, but it's also a big economic driver for communities across the country. As a whole, the outdoor recreation industry supports $887 billion in consumer spending and supports 7.6 million American jobs, according to industry analysts. In addition, the revenue the industry produces is a major boost to our economy.

Made in America is about products as much as it is about our shared heritage and values. It is about making memories by taking a kid fishing for the first time, or in my case, taking my wife hiking early in our relationship.

There's a reason 330 million people from across the country and the world visit our parks every year, and millions more flock to public lands coast to coast: It's because these spaces are uniquely American and are the result of a century of public-private partnerships.

This "Made in America" Week, let's unite under a common pride in our country, standing behind American businesses and engaging in American outdoor traditions that have stood the test of time.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Heather Swift
To: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO
Cc: Laura Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: Heads Up - Mrs. Zinke
Date: Tuesday, October 03, 2017 8:33:32 PM

FYI. Awaiting a call back from AP.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

> On Oct 3, 2017, at 8:12 PM, Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:
>
> Heather call me ASAP (b) (6)
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
> Sent: Monday, October 2, 2017 7:11 PM
> To: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
> Cc: Laura Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
> Subject: Re: Heads Up - Mrs. Zinke
>
> I'm on in flight until about 9:30 but available after: (b) (6).
>
> Sent from my iPad
>
>> On Oct 2, 2017, at 6:30 PM, Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)> wrote:
>>
>> Heather what's best #? I'll call in a little
>>
>> -----Original Message-----
>> From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
>> Sent: Monday, October 2, 2017 6:28 PM
>> To: Laura Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
>> Subject: Heads Up - Mrs. Zinke
>>
>> Heads up. Expecting articles about Mrs. Z travel (at personal expense) >> to hit WP, Politico and Mic tonight. I'm wheels up until 9:00PM.
>>
>> Heather Swift
>> Press Secretary
>> Department of the Interior

From: Heather Swift
To: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO
Cc: Laura Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: Heads Up - Mrs. Zinke
Date: Tuesday, October 03, 2017 10:41:08 PM

He said he would clarify that the statement was made last week.

Sent from my iPad

> On Oct 3, 2017, at 8:12 PM, Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO (b) (6) > wrote:
>
> Heather call me ASAP (b) (6)
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
> Sent: Monday, October 2, 2017 7:11 PM
> To: Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO (b) (6) >
> Cc: Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
> Subject: Re: Heads Up - Mrs. Zinke

> I'm on in flight until about 9:30 but available after: (b) (6)

> Sent from my iPad

>> On Oct 2, 2017, at 6:30 PM, Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO (b) (6) > wrote:
>>
>> Heather what's best #? I'll call in a little
>>
>> -----Original Message-----
>> From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
>> Sent: Monday, October 2, 2017 6:28 PM
>> To: Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Shah, Raj S. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Love, Kelly A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>; Rateike, Bradley A. EOP/WHO <(b) (6)>
>> Subject: Heads Up - Mrs. Zinke
>>
>> Heads up. Expecting articles about Mrs. Z travel (at personal expense) >> to hit WP, Politico and Mic tonight. I'm wheels up until 9:00PM.
>>
>> Heather Swift
>> Press Secretary
>> Department of the Interior

From: Argo, Michael
To: Swift, Heather; Wesley Bullock
Cc: Michael Argo
Subject: Re: Hello and welcome!
Date: Friday, November 10, 2017 3:12:38 PM
Attachments: 1 Michael Argo BIO VETSDAY 11 NOV 2017.docx

I CLEANED this up a little:

Michael Argo – Deputy Chief of Staff to the Secretary

Michael Argo is a former U.S. Navy SEAL Captain who served for three decades which included combat during Operation Just Cause in Panama and service in Operation Enduring Freedom in Iraq. He served as Commander and Commanding Officer for four separate commands, worked three Joint commands and toured on numerous operational deployments around the world. CAPT Argo played college football at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; he holds a B.A. in Education and an M.S in Geography. [AM*1] More recently, CAPT [AM*2] Argo served as a strategist and planner at the Office of Naval Intelligence in Washington, DC with the KENNEDY Irregular Warfare Center and worked briefly [AM*3] at the Department of Homeland Security in the Domestic Nuclear Detection Office.

INTRODUCTION OF CAPT Michael P. Argo: U.S. NAVY SEAL CAPTAIN RETIRED

CAPTAIN (retired) Michael P. Argo served as a U. S. NAVY SEAL for three decades. He served as the first Commodore of the SEAL's Naval Special Warfare Group Eleven (NSWG-11) in San Diego California, as an Action Officer at the NAVY SEAL Headquarters, Naval Special Warfare Command in Coronado California, and as the Commanding Officer for three separate Navy [AM*4] Operational Support Centers (NOSCs); CO of NOSC Los Angeles, CO of NOSC Denver and CO of NOSC Hartford.

OPERATIONALLY, CAPTAIN Argo served as the EXECUTIVE OFFICER and OPERATIONS OFFICER of SEAL TEAM TWO, [AM*5] where he fought in Combat Operations [AM*6] during Operation JUST CAUSE in PANAMA [AM*7] and was awarded the Combat Action Ribbon[AM*8]. He also served a period in Fallujah [AM*9] Iraq during Operation Iraqi Freedom. Throughout his career he has toured [AM*10] on numerous deployments in Europe, Africa, South America, the Caribbean, Korea, South West Asia and Central Asia.

Additionally, CAPT Argo served as both a Pilot and Navigator [AM*11] of a NAVY SEAL Mini-submarine, known as a SEAL Delivery Vehicle (SDV), where he conducted numerous s launch and recovery operations off a Nuclear Submarine.

EARLIER[AM*12] in his Career:

-CAPTAIN (Ret) Argo graduated, as a collegiate athlete, [AM*13] from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill

-He received his NAVY commissioned [AM*14] from Navy ROTC.

-His first tour was onboard a Navy Destroyer, the USS John King (DDG-3), where he served as First Lieutenant, Legal Officer and Electrical Officer.

-He graduated from Basic Underwater Demolition/SEAL School Class training with Class 134

-He deployed to Haiti during Operation UPHOLD DEMOCRACY as the Joint Special Operations Task Force (JSOTF) Operations Officer

-He did a tour at Special Boat Unit Twenty (SBU-20) in Little Creek VA.

CAPT Argo's most profound accomplishments have been graduating from BUDs, establishing Naval Special Warfare Group Eleven, standing up SEAL Teams SEVENTEEN and EIGHTEEN, and convincing his beautiful wife Margot to marry him and share their lives with four daughters!

Today, CAPT Argo serves as the Deputy Chief of Staff for the Department of Interior under TEAMMATE Secretary Ryan Zinke, CAPT Argo is an active Board[AM*15] member of the SEAL FAMILY FOUNDATION and Member of the UDT/SEAL Association.

SHORT SUMMARY SHORT

CAPT (Ret) Michael Argo has served as the Commander and Commanding Officer for four separate commands, worked in three Joint Commands (Theater Special Operation Command –TSOC's) and has toured on numerous deployments in Europe, Africa, South America, the Caribbean, Korea, South West Asia and Central Asia. He deployed to Haiti during Operation UPHOLD DEMOCRACY as the Joint Special Operations Task Force (JSOTF) Operations Officer. CAPT Argo severed at SEAL TEAM TWO, SEAL DELIVERY TEAM TWO (SDV), SPECIAL BOAT TEAM [AM*16] TWENTY as Executive Officer, Operations Office, Training Officer and Platoon Commander, respectively-. He served as a Pilot and Navigator [AM*17] for a SEAL min-sub; Delivery Vehicle (SDV) at SDV TEAM TWO and conducted numerous s launch and recovery operations off a Nuclear Submarine.

His Command Tours include: Commander of Naval Special Warfare Group Eleven (NSWG-11), Commanding Officer of Navy Operation Support Center Los Angeles (NOSC-LA), Navy and Marine Corps Center, Denver and Navy and Marine Corps Center, Hartford.

CAPT (Ret) Argo had a successful Naval career and has severed in Operations Enduring Freedom and Iraqi Freedom (OEF/OIF). He served in Desert Shield and Desert Storm and fought in Operation “Just Cause” in Panama with SEAL TEAM TWO where he was awarded the Combat Action Ribbon.

CAPT (Ret) Argo has a Bachelor of Arts in Education from the University of North Carolina Chapel Hill, and a Masters of Geography from Central Connecticut State University in Hartford Connecticut.

CAPT Argo is married to the former Margaret Lee Davis of Raleigh North Carolina, Who graduated from Salem College in NC and teaches Special Education for Fairfax Count Public School.

CAPTAIN and Margo Argo have four beautiful daughters who have graduated from University of Californian Berkeley, UC San Diego, UC Santa Barbara and One still in school at Sonoma State University just north of San Francisco CA.

And the same Navy SEAL Slogan hold true with these four girls. “The only easy day was yesterday.”

Today, CAPT Argo serves as the Deputy Chief of Staff for the Department of Interior under TEAMMATE Secretary Ryan Zinke, CAPT Argo is an active Board[AM*18] member of the SEAL FAMILY FOUNDATION and Member of the UDT/SEAL Association.

On Wed, Nov 8, 2017 at 6:14 PM, Argo, Michael <michael_argo@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks,

Let me know if that is too long...you can cut it down, i attach my old bio so you know more of my old background.

Mike Argo

On Wed, Nov 8, 2017 at 5:55 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Many thanks! Nice to see you this afternoon.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Nov 8, 2017 at 5:53 PM, Argo, Michael <michael_argo@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Sorry for the delay.....You can word smith or cut it down.

Michael Argo – Deputy Chief of Staff to the Secretary

Michael Argo is a decorated former U.S. Navy SEAL Captain who served for three decades to include fighting in combat during Operation Just Cause in Panama to serving up to Operation Enduring Freedom in Iraq. He served as Commander and Commanding Officer for four separate commands, worked three Joint commands and deployed on numerous deployment around the world. CAPT Argo played college football at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill and earned a B.A. degree in Education. He also has as MS in Geography. More recently, CAPT Argo serve as a strategist and planner at the Office of Naval Intelligence in Washington DC with the KENNEDY Irregular Warfare Center and a short stint with the Department of Homeland Security at the Domestic Nuclear Detection Office.

On Tue, Nov 7, 2017 at 1:14 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey there Mike and Rick - Heather Swift here. I'm the press secretary at Interior and need a couple sentences about each of you that I can share with press. I've included two examples below for your reference. Look forward to meeting you both!

Scott Hommel - Chief of Staff to the Secretary

Scott Hommel is a decorated Marine veteran who served in the Gulf War. He has two decades of experience in state and federal government as well as work on behalf of military organizations like the National Guard Association of the United States. Most recently, Mr. Hommel served as then-Congressman Zinke's Chief of Staff in the House.

Heather Swift – Press Secretary

Before her appointment as the Department's Press Secretary, Heather Swift was a member of the Interior Beachhead Team. She joined after serving in Zinke's congressional office as Communications Director and as his Deputy Campaign Manager. Prior to her service with Zinke, Ms. Swift held various communications positions at public affairs firms and U.S. Senate races across the country. She is a two-time graduate of Saint John's University in New York City, where she earned a Bachelors of Science in Public Relations and graduated summa cum laude with a Master's of Science in International Communications.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Boulton, Caroline
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Help: Question from Politico
Date: Friday, November 17, 2017 2:54:15 PM

I would agree with that.

On Fri, Nov 17, 2017 at 2:51 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Thanks -- Is it fair to say the Department did not incur any expenses due to Lola's presence?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Nov 17, 2017 at 2:44 PM, Boulton, Caroline <caroline_boulton@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

He did pay for her dinner. It was recent because the Governor's office didn't give us a final cost per person for the dinner until the last two weeks so I'm not sure if the State of Alaska has processed it yet. There was no official reason per say, and she had planned to already have left Alaska by then until a few days prior. (b) (5)

On Fri, Nov 17, 2017 at 2:28 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

1. Did Secretary Zinke reimburse DOI for Lola's meal at the governors meeting in Denali?
1. Was there any reason for Lola to attend that dinner? I know that Interior staff had originally advised against it.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

Begin forwarded message:

From: Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com>
Date: November 17, 2017 at 2:13:55 PM EST
To: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: Question from Politico

- Did Secretary Zinke reimburse DOI for Lola's meal at the governors meeting in Denali?
- Was there any reason for Lola to attend that dinner? I know that Interior staff had originally advised against it.

--

Caroline Boulton
Special Assistant to the Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office of Scheduling & Advance
Caroline_Boulton@ios.doi.gov | Scheduling@ios.doi.gov

--

Caroline Boulton
Special Assistant to the Secretary
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office of Scheduling & Advance
Caroline_Boulton@ios.doi.gov | Scheduling@ios.doi.gov

From: Swift, Heather
To: Mashburn, Lori
Cc: Laura Rigas; Downey Magallanes
Subject: Re: Helpful process fix
Date: Thursday, November 16, 2017 11:47:48 AM

thanks!

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, Nov 16, 2017 at 11:36 AM, Mashburn, Lori <lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Below is the way I would phrase it.

"Brian has been an incredible asset to the Bureau since his first day. We are excited to have him temporarily step into this leadership role until a permanent Director is confirmed by the Senate. We couldn't be more thankful to Mike Nedd for leading the Bureau during the initial transition. Nedd helped execute big wins for sportsmen's access, multiple-use, and energy development on BLM lands over the past few months."

Lori K. Mashburn
White House Liaison
Department of the Interior
202.208.1694

On Thu, Nov 16, 2017 at 11:28 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Should we make it clear that Brian is also temporary until the Director is named?

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Nov 16, 2017, at 10:56 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can I confirm Brian's appointment? If so, does this work? "Brian has been an incredible asset to the Bureau since his first day. We are excited to have him step into this leadership role and couldn't be more thankful to Mike Nedd for leading the Bureau during the transition. Nedd helped execute big wins for sportsmen's access, multiple-use, and energy development on BLM lands the past few months."

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, Nov 16, 2017 at 10:44 AM, Mashburn, Lori

<lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I knew it was coming, but didn't know when until after the fact. Thought everyone else was already looped in.

Lori K. Mashburn

White House Liaison

Department of the Interior

202.208.1694

On Thu, Nov 16, 2017 at 10:43 AM, Laura Rigas

<laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I let the team know that changes were happening, we just didn't know when.

Laura Keehner Rigas

Communications Director

U.S. Department of the Interior

(202) 897-7022 cell

@Interior

On Nov 16, 2017, at 10:35 AM, Downey Magallanes

<downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

As far as I know, this was a stand-alone personnel change that was discussed in more than one 9 am meeting. I will let others weigh in on whether more are coming.

In terms of timing- Scott would have signed this exec sec package, this is not one I would have seen. I do understand the frustration. But not sure how this could have gone differently.

On Nov 16, 2017, at 9:49 AM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey sorry to beat a dead horse but if Laura and I could get information on high-profile personnel changes before they are made public that would be very helpful. I got the email below forwarded to me by a reporter. I imagine there will be more to come?

Thanks,

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: "Nedd, Michael"
<mnedd@blm.gov>

Date:
November 15,
2017 at 3:03:21
PM PST

To:
BLM_All_Employees
<blm_all_employees@blm.gov>

Subject: BLM
Acting Director

BLM employees:

This week,
Secretary Ryan
Zinke appointed
Brian Steed as Acting Director of the BLM, and I want to welcome him as he begins his journey leading this great agency. John Ruhs and I have worked alongside Brian since his appointment as Deputy Director for Programs and Policy in October, and we have come to know his ethic,

his intellect, and his passion for our multiple-use and sustained yield mission.
His experience includes working as Chief of Staff to U.S.
Representative
Chris Stewart of Utah, teaching and researching economics at the University of Utah, and serving as a Deputy County

Attorney in Iron
County, Utah.
He is a native of Logan, Utah, and now resides in Northern Virginia with his wife and three children.

Brian's western heritage and values make him
a perfect fit for the BLM team.

Since March 15,
I have had the honor of leading the BLM. Your tireless dedication to our mission inspires
me every day.
DOI leaders continually express their confidence in the BLM's leadership in the field and here in Washington,
which is a testament to all of you. Thank you for supporting me as the Acting Director over these months,

and remaining as ever BLM strong.

During the coming weeks,
John and I will transition to different roles.
John will return to his position as BLM Nevada
State Director, and I will assume the duties of Acting Deputy Director
for Operations.
I appreciate
John's sacrifice
over the past seven months while he has lived away from his family and the wide open spaces that he loves.

Please join me in welcoming Brian to his new position. As we move forward,
let's continue to stay focused on our shared mission and values that guide us in our stewardship of America's
public lands.

Take care and have a wonderful day! :
)
Michael D.
Nedd

From: Elaina Plott
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Hey Elaina
Date: Wednesday, May 31, 2017 6:20:18 PM

Amazing! I'll email Brad now. Thanks so much.

On May 31, 2017, at 5:32 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Haha no problem.

There's a number of folks at Interior/WH who work with each other. Mostly the COS, Comms, and Doug. It's a really good relationship. We all have open lines of communication.

You should talk with Brad Retike in Cabinet Affairs. (b) (6)

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 5:22 PM, Elaina Plott <(b) (6)> wrote:

Ha! Oh no, they shouldn't be nervous. Just thought I'd send out a mass email instead of needling you about contacts. I'm trying to best understand the relationship between Interior and the White House -- would Doug Domenech be best for that?

On May 31, 2017, at 5:18 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Elaina, I'm getting a lot of calls from colleagues that you're sending out emails to interview them. Would you mind sending me who you'd like to interview and I'll see if they are interested? It might surprise you but a lot of folks get nervous when reporters contact them.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:27 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Oh also I'd LOVE to talk to Lola -- is she in town anytime soon?

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:18 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Perfect! Want to say Friday around 4 at the Jefferson? They have fun summer drinks right now.

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:16 PM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Oh my gosh, I'm so sorry I didn't see your email come in on Thursday! Yes, let's do coffee or a drink on Friday afternoon. I'll get contacts for you on the other three.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:08 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Hey Heather! Wanted to circle back to this. Do you have time to grab coffee or a drink tomorrow or Friday?

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 12:52 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Who would the best contact for Mattis be? I emailed a somewhat generic DOD media email, but I imagine it went into a black hole. I've chatted with Senator Daines, but not Rob O'Neill or Rich Brooks -- do you have contacts for them?

As for background info, yes! I'd love to chat and get more color about the trip to Trump Tower. Are you in town next week?

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 12:47 PM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Awesome. Definitely link up with Mattis. They served together in Iraq in 2004. Senator Steve Daines and he have known each other since 1979. Rob O'Neill (the SEAL who shot bin laden) and his old football coach from University of Oregon Rich Brooks.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov 1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 12:42 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Hey Heather! This all sounds great. Let's arrange for riding on the week of the 5th -- I can chat with my editor about what our hard deadline is and see if New England can work as well. Thanks so much for keeping me in the loop.

I have an interview later today with Secretary Kelly, which should be great. I'd love suggestions of other folks to speak to, especially those who are close with the Secretary right now.

Yours,
Elaina

On May 25, 2017, at 11:20 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey there, Elaina - I wanted to follow up with you about catching Zinke in the field. Please keep this information close for now, we are not ready to announce his schedule, but the Secretary will travel to New England on the week of June 12th and make several stops throughout the week that you're welcome to tag along for. If that's too far out, we can arrange for a horseback ride around the DC area the week of the 5th.

Lastly, we had talked about interviews with other cabinet secretaries and people who have known the Secretary for a number of years. Can I get you any of those contacts?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov 1
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Elaina Plott
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Hey Elaina
Date: Monday, June 12, 2017 12:40:50 PM

Hey! (b) (6)

On Jun 12, 2017, at 11:20 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey lady, I forgot my work phone at the office. What's your number?

Also, Laura Rigas will be on the call with Mrs. Z. I'm slammed over here.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 5:22 PM, Elaina Plott <(b) (6)> wrote:

Ha! Oh no, they shouldn't be nervous. Just thought I'd send out a mass email instead of needling you about contacts. I'm trying to best understand the relationship between Interior and the White House -- would Doug Domenech be best for that?

On May 31, 2017, at 5:18 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Elaina, I'm getting a lot of calls from colleagues that you're sending out emails to interview them. Would you mind sending me who you'd like to interview and I'll see if they are interested? It might surprise you but a lot of folks get nervous when reporters contact them.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:27 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Oh also I'd LOVE to talk to Lola -- is she in town anytime soon?

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:18 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Perfect! Want to say Friday around 4 at the Jefferson? They have fun summer drinks right now.

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:16 PM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Oh my gosh, I'm so sorry I didn't see your email come in on Thursday! Yes, let's do coffee or a drink on Friday afternoon. I'll get contacts for you on the other three.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, May 31, 2017 at 2:08 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Hey Heather! Wanted to circle back to this. Do you have time to grab coffee or a drink tomorrow or Friday?

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 12:52 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Who would the best contact for Mattis be? I emailed a somewhat generic DOD media email, but I imagine it went into a black hole. I've chatted with Senator Daines, but not Rob O'Neill or Rich Brooks -- do you have contacts for them?

As for background info, yes! I'd love to chat and get more color about the trip to Trump Tower. Are you in town next week?

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 12:47 PM, Swift, Heather

<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Awesome. Definitely link up with Mattis. They served together in Iraq in 2004. Senator Steve Daines and he have known each other since 1979. Rob O'Neill (the SEAL who shot bin laden) and his old football coach from University of Oregon Rich Brooks.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 12:42 PM, Elaina Plott

<(b) (6)> wrote:

Hey Heather! This all sounds great. Let's arrange for riding on the week of the 5th -- I can chat with my editor about what our hard deadline is and see if New England can work as well. Thanks so much for keeping me in the loop.

I have an interview later today with Secretary Kelly, which should be great. I'd love suggestions of other folks to speak to, especially those who are close with the Secretary right now.

Yours,
Elaina

On May 25, 2017, at 11:20 AM, Swift, Heather
<heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey there, Elaina - I wanted to follow up with you about catching Zinke in the field. Please keep this information close for now, we are not ready to announce his schedule, but the Secretary will travel to New England on the week of June 12th and make several stops throughout the week that you're welcome to tag along for. If that's too far out, we can arrange for a horseback ride around the DC area the week of the 5th.

Lastly, we had talked about interviews with other cabinet secretaries and people who have known the Secretary for a number of years. Can I get you any of those contacts?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov |
Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Heather Swift
To: Doherty, Brian
Subject: Re: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 12:29:06 PM

Ok cool. Will let you know.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 24, 2017, at 10:26 AM, Doherty, Brian <Brian.Doherty@foxnews.com> wrote:

Ok copy that—the piece informed me that the review was almost complete & that’s about it—we wanted to see his review & have him discuss it on FOX—if he’s avail next week in the 2pm hr, please lemme know
Thanks!

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 11:53 AM
To: Doherty, Brian
Subject: Re: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

Hey Brian Zinke is not available, he's traveling, but just so you know the pitch you just sent has a lot of falsehoods. Background below

1. Zinke recommended no monuments be eliminated.
2. Monuments have been shrunk by presidents at least 18 times
3. Tawny is a democratic activist whose organization is funded by environmental groups. <https://flatheadbeacon.com/2017/08/23/chasing-big-bucks/>

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 24, 2017, at 9:26 AM, Doherty, Brian <Brian.Doherty@foxnews.com> wrote:

THANK U!

From: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
[mailto:(b) (6)]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 11:26 AM
To: Doherty, Brian
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

Hello Brian, yes I am.
I'm adding Heather at Interior. She's your best POC there. I believe the Secretary is traveling and not able.
Thanks.
Alexa

From: Doherty, Brian [mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 10:44 AM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO (b) (6) >
Subject: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

From: Doherty, Brian
Sent: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 3:48 PM
To: (b) (6)
Subject: Hi Alexa, this Thursday, Secy. Ryan zinke completes his Nat. Monuments Review--will recommend whether to eliminate or shrink more than 20 national monuments---we'd like to invite him on the 2pm hr

...could u point me in the correct direction?
Thank you!

From: Allison Putala [mailto:allison@kaminskyputala.com]
Sent: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:15 AM
To: Allison Putala
Subject: Sec. Zinke - Nat. Monuments Review INTERVIEW - Aug 24 Decision

Good Morning –

This THURSDAY, AUGUST 24 U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is recommending whether to eliminate or shrink more than 20 national monuments -- President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's NATIONAL MONUMENTS REVIEW.

The first-time presidents have the power in 111 years.

Recent NY Times coverage:

<https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2017/08/11/climate/doi-monument-review-five-to-watch.html>

LAND TAWNEY is a nationally sought-after expert on public lands policies.

He is available for interviews to speak AGAINST President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's NATIONAL MONUMENTS REVIEW.

Land Tawney is currently the President and CEO of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers, the voice for public lands with over 250,000 members in 25 states. (bio and clips below)

He is a Montana native and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is also from Montana.

Land Tawney's organization launched a $1.4 million TV, radio, and digital buy targeting Secretary Zinke's REVIEW OF NATIONAL MONUMENTS.

TALKING POINTS:

- President Trump's actions continue to alienate his supporters as seen by sportsmen responses to the Department of Interior's review of 27 national monuments.
- Millions of people submitted official comments to Interior, 98% of which supported leaving monuments alone. Nonetheless, Zinke is implying as he tours the West that some of these monuments could be removed completely or significantly shrunk.
- Public lands and access to them are pivotal issues for westerners who rely on hunting and fishing opportunities for their livelihoods and heritage. In fact, protecting public lands frequently pops up towards top of issues rural westerners, and particularly Montanans – a state that went to Trump by over 20 points - care about.
- Conservatives can't take sportsmen for granted by lumping them in with their gun policy advocate neighbors. Support from sportsmen risks further erosion if Trump and Zinke don't start standing up for pro public lands policies, rather than just pro public lands statements. ("You can't love public lands more than I do." and "I'm a Teddy Roosevelt guy" – Zinke)

- Nationwide, sportsmen across the political spectrum strongly support monument protections staying as they are. In fact, a recent poll from Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, 77% of Republicans and 80% of Democrats support this. (Links here, slide # 24 here.)

Recent TV Clip:

MSNBC

<http://www.msnbc.com/kate-snow/watch/source-zinke-receives-nod-to-lead-interior-dept-833217603763>

If you're interested in an interview please contact me and I'll set up the logistics. Please note Land Tawney is available for interviews on an ongoing basis.

Thank you!

Best,

Allison 202-421-3211

LAND TAWNEY, President and CEO of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers

Land Tawney is a fifth-generation Montanan who developed his conservation ethic from a young age in duck blinds on warm water sloughs in the Bitterroot Valley, at the end of a fly rod during the salmon fly hatch on the Big Hole River, and chasing the wily wapiti in Cinnabar Basin. He's led the charge at BHA since 2013. During his time as President and CEO, staff has increased from 2-16 and membership has increased fifteen-fold to 15,000 across the country.

After decades of leading sportsmen's organizations and policy initiatives to bolster our outdoor heritage, Land has become a nationally sought-after expert on public lands policies. Recently featured in Men's Journal magazine as "The Face of the Resistance." Land continues to lead the charge in the national debate over the future of America's public lands.

Land sits on the boards of the Phil Tawney Hunters Conservation Endowment, named after his late father, and is active in local and regional sportsmen's groups. Any other spare time is spent on the stream, duck blind or chasing big game. Land enjoys anything outside with his wife Glenna, daughter Cidney, son Colin, and their "Triple T" black Labs, Turk Teller Tawney and Tule Thibodeau

Tawney.

About Backcountry Hunters & Anglers

Backcountry Hunters & Anglers has doubled in size over the last year, growing exponentially due in large part to President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's policies that threaten our public lands.

Backcountry Hunters & Anglers (BHA) is the sportsmen's voice for our wild public lands, waters and wildlife. We seek to ensure North America's outdoor heritage of hunting and fishing in a natural setting through education and work on behalf of fish, wildlife and wild places. With over 250,000 members and supporters and chapters in 25 states and British Columbia, BHA is increasingly drawing support from sportsmen and women from across the continent. We represent the challenge, solitude and adventure that only the backcountry can provide, and we are working hard with boots on the ground at all levels to ensure that our roadless areas and backcountry are protected for the fish and wildlife that thrive there. In addition to advocating for policies that protect the backcountry, we also work to curb illegal motorized use, promote ethical hunting and fishing practices, and protect special landscapes that have high quality fish and wildlife habitat values.

The mission of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers is to ensure North America's outdoor heritage of hunting and fishing in a natural setting, through education and work on behalf of wild public lands and waters.

Learn more

here: http://www.backcountryhunters.org/mission_and_values

Allison Kaminsky Putala

Principal

Kaminsky Putala Public Relations – KPPR

p: 202.421.3211

allison@kaminskyputala.com

This message and its attachments may contain legally privileged or confidential information. It is intended solely for the named addressee. If you are not the addressee indicated in this message (or responsible for delivery of the message to the addressee), you may not copy or deliver this message or its attachments to anyone. Rather, you should permanently delete this message and its attachments and kindly notify the sender by reply e-mail. Any content of this message and its attachments that does not relate to the official business of Fox News or Fox Business must not be taken to have been sent or endorsed by either of them. No representation is made that this email or its attachments are without defect.

From: Heather Swift
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 1:02:23 PM

Also I talked to Kaelan and he can do Afghanistan too. Z is VERY dialed in and reputable on that given his history.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 24, 2017, at 10:53 AM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
<(b) (6)> wrote:

What's topic are you thinking?

Sent from my iPhone

On Aug 24, 2017, at 12:10 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thanks girlie. I have him a bit of pushback.

Are you OK with Z doing Fox and Friends and Bret Baire on Monday? He also wants Sunday show.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 24, 2017, at 10:08 AM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6) > wrote:

Not recommending just wanted to give him best POC

From: Doherty, Brian
[\[mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM\]](mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM)
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 11:26 AM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
<(b) (6)>
Cc: Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: RE: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

THANK U!

From: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
[mailto:(b) (6)]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 11:26 AM
To: Doherty, Brian
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

Hello Brian, yes I am.
I'm adding Heather at Interior. She's your best POC there. I believe the Secretary is traveling and not able.
Thanks.
Alexa

From: Doherty, Brian
[mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 10:44 AM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6) >
Subject: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

From: Doherty, Brian
Sent: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 3:48 PM
To: (b) (6)
Subject: Hi Alexa, this Thursday, Secy. Ryan Zinke completes his Nat. Monuments Review--will recommend whether to eliminate or shrink more than 20 national monuments--- we'd like to invite him on the 2pm hr

...could u point me in the correct direction?
Thank you!

From: Allison Putala [mailto:allison@kaminskyputala.com]
Sent: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:15 AM

To: Allison Putala

Subject: Sec. Zinke - Nat. Monuments Review INTERVIEW -
Aug 24 Decision

Good Morning –

This THURSDAY, AUGUST 24 U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is recommending whether to eliminate or shrink more than 20 national monuments -- President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's NATIONAL MONUMENTS REVIEW.

The first-time presidents have the power in 111 years.

Recent NY Times coverage:

<https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2017/08/11/climate/doi-monument-review-five-to-watch.html>

LAND TAWNEY is a nationally sought-after expert on public lands policies.

He is available for interviews to speak AGAINST President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's NATIONAL MONUMENTS REVIEW.

Land Tawney is currently the President and CEO of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers, the voice for public lands with over 250,000 members in 25 states. (bio and clips below)

He is a Montana native and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is also from Montana.

Land Tawney's organization launched a $1.4 million TV, radio, and digital buy targeting Secretary Zinke's REVIEW OF NATIONAL MONUMENTS.

TALKING POINTS:

- President Trump's actions continue to alienate his supporters as seen by sportsmen responses to the Department of Interior's review of 27 national monuments.
- Millions of people submitted official comments to Interior, 98% of which supported leaving monuments alone. Nonetheless, Zinke is implying as he tours the West that some of these monuments could be removed completely or significantly shrunk.

- Public lands and access to them are pivotal issues for westerners who rely on hunting and fishing opportunities for their livelihoods and heritage. In fact, protecting public lands frequently pops up towards top of issues rural westerners, and particularly Montanans – a state that went to Trump by over 20 points - care about.
- Conservatives can't take sportsmen for granted by lumping them in with their gun policy advocate neighbors. Support from sportsmen risks further erosion if Trump and Zinke don't start standing up for pro public lands policies, rather than just pro public lands statements. ("You can't love public lands more than I do." and "I'm a Teddy Roosevelt guy" – Zinke)
- Nationwide, sportsmen across the political spectrum strongly support monument protections staying as they are. In fact, a recent poll from Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, 77% of Republicans and 80% of Democrats support this. (Links here, slide # 24 here.)

Recent TV Clip:

MSNBC

>>>http://www.msnbc.com/kate-snow/watch/source-zinke-receives-nod-to-lead-interior-dept-833217603763<<<<::

If you're interested in an interview please contact me and I'll set up the logistics. Please note Land Tawney is available for interviews on an ongoing basis.

Thank you!

Best,

Allison 202-421-3211

LAND TAWNEY, President and CEO of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers

Land Tawney is a fifth-generation Montanan who developed his conservation ethic from a young age in duck blinds on warm water sloughs in the Bitterroot Valley, at the end of a fly rod during the salmon fly hatch on the Big Hole River, and chasing the wily wapiti in Cinnabar Basin. He's led the charge at BHA since 2013. During his time as President and CEO, staff has increased from 2-16 and membership has increased fifteen-fold to 15,000 across the country.

After decades of leading sportsmen's organizations and policy initiatives to bolster our outdoor heritage, Land has become a nationally sought-after expert on public lands policies. Recently featured in Men's Journal magazine as "The Face of the Resistance." Land continues to lead the charge in the national debate over the future of America's public lands.

Land sits on the boards of the Phil Tawney Hunters Conservation Endowment, named after his late father, and is active in local and regional sportsmen's groups. Any other spare time is spent on the stream, duck blind or chasing big game. Land enjoys anything outside with his wife Glenna, daughter Cidney, son Colin, and their "Triple T" black Labs, Turk Teller Tawney and Tule Thibodeau Tawney.

About Backcountry Hunters & Anglers

Backcountry Hunters & Anglers has doubled in size over the last year, growing exponentially due in large part to President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's policies that threaten our public lands.

Backcountry Hunters & Anglers (BHA) is the sportsmen's voice for our wild public lands, waters and wildlife. We seek to ensure North America's outdoor heritage of hunting and fishing in a natural setting through education and work on behalf of fish, wildlife and wild places. With over 250,000 members and supporters and chapters in 25 states and British Columbia, BHA is increasingly drawing support from sportsmen and women from across the continent. We represent the challenge, solitude and adventure that only the backcountry can provide, and we are working hard with boots on the ground at all levels to ensure that our roadless areas and backcountry are protected for the fish and wildlife that thrive there. In addition to advocating for policies that protect the backcountry, we also work to curb illegal motorized use, promote ethical hunting and fishing practices, and protect special landscapes that have high quality fish and wildlife habitat values.

The mission of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers is to ensure North America's outdoor heritage of hunting and fishing in a natural setting, through education and work on behalf of wild public lands and waters.

Learn more

here: >>>http://www.backcountryhunters.org/mission_and_values<<<::

Allison Kaminsky Putala

Principal

Kaminsky Putala Public Relations – KPPR

p: 202.421.3211

allison@kaminskyputala.com

This message and its attachments may contain legally privileged or confidential information. It is intended solely for the named addressee. If you are not the addressee indicated in this message (or responsible for delivery of the message to the addressee), you may not copy or deliver this message or its attachments to anyone. Rather, you should permanently delete this message and its attachments and kindly notify the sender by reply e-mail. Any content of this message and its attachments that does not relate to the official business of Fox News or Fox Business must not be taken to have been sent or endorsed by either of them. No representation is made that this email or its attachments are without defect.

From: Heather Swift
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
Subject: Re: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 1:01:49 PM

National monument review

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 24, 2017, at 10:53 AM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
<(b) (6)> wrote:

What's topic are you thinking?

Sent from my iPhone

On Aug 24, 2017, at 12:10 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
wrote:

Thanks girlie. I have him a bit of pushback.

Are you OK with Z doing Fox and Friends and Bret Baire on Monday? He also wants Sunday show.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Aug 24, 2017, at 10:08 AM, Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6) > wrote:

Not recommending just wanted to give him best POC

From: Doherty, Brian
[\[mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM\]](mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM)
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 11:26 AM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
(b) (6)
Cc: Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: RE: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

THANK U!

From: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
[mailto:(b) (6)]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 11:26 AM
To: Doherty, Brian
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

Hello Brian, yes I am.
I'm adding Heather at Interior. She's your best POC there. I believe the Secretary is traveling and not able.
Thanks.
Alexa

From: Doherty, Brian
[mailto:Brian.Doherty@FOXNEWS.COM]
Sent: Thursday, August 24, 2017 10:44 AM
To: Henning, Alexa A. EOP/WHO
<(b) (6)>
Subject: Hi Alexa, are u still my poc at the WH? would Secy Zinke be avail tmrw (Friday) in the 2pm hr? thank you!

From: Doherty, Brian
Sent: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 3:48 PM
To: (b) (6)
Subject: Hi Alexa, this Thursday, Secy. Ryan zinke completes his Nat. Monuments Review--will recommend whether to eliminate or shrink more than 20 national monuments---we'd like to invite him on the 2pm hr

...could u point me in the correct direction?
Thank you!

From: Allison Putala [mailto:allison@kaminskyputala.com]
Sent: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:15 AM
To: Allison Putala

Subject: Sec. Zinke - Nat. Monuments Review INTERVIEW -
Aug 24 Decision

Good Morning –

This THURSDAY, AUGUST 24 U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is recommending whether to eliminate or shrink more than 20 national monuments -- President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's NATIONAL MONUMENTS REVIEW.

The first-time presidents have the power in 111 years.

Recent NY Times coverage:

<https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2017/08/11/climate/doi-monument-review-five-to-watch.html>

LAND TAWNEY is a nationally sought-after expert on public lands policies.

He is available for interviews to speak AGAINST President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's NATIONAL MONUMENTS REVIEW.

Land Tawney is currently the President and CEO of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers, the voice for public lands with over 250,000 members in 25 states. (bio and clips below)

He is a Montana native and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is also from Montana.

Land Tawney's organization launched a $1.4 million TV, radio, and digital buy targeting Secretary Zinke's REVIEW OF NATIONAL MONUMENTS.

TALKING POINTS:

- President Trump's actions continue to alienate his supporters as seen by sportsmen responses to the Department of Interior's review of 27 national monuments.
- Millions of people submitted official comments to Interior, 98% of which supported leaving monuments alone. Nonetheless, Zinke is implying as he tours the West that some of these monuments could be removed completely or significantly shrunk.

- Public lands and access to them are pivotal issues for westerners who rely on hunting and fishing opportunities for their livelihoods and heritage. In fact, protecting public lands frequently pops up towards top of issues rural westerners, and particularly Montanans – a state that went to Trump by over 20 points - care about.
- Conservatives can't take sportsmen for granted by lumping them in with their gun policy advocate neighbors. Support from sportsmen risks further erosion if Trump and Zinke don't start standing up for pro public lands policies, rather than just pro public lands statements. ("You can't love public lands more than I do." and "I'm a Teddy Roosevelt guy" – Zinke)
- Nationwide, sportsmen across the political spectrum strongly support monument protections staying as they are. In fact, a recent poll from Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, 77% of Republicans and 80% of Democrats support this. (Links here, slide # 24 here.)

Recent TV Clip:

MSNBC

>>>http://www.msnbc.com/kate-snow/watch/source-zinke-receives-nod-to-lead-interior-dept-833217603763<<<<;

If you're interested in an interview please contact me and I'll set up the logistics. Please note Land Tawney is available for interviews on an ongoing basis.

Thank you!

Best,

Allison 202-421-3211

LAND TAWNEY, President and CEO of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers

Land Tawney is a fifth-generation Montanan who developed his conservation ethic from a young age in duck blinds on warm water sloughs in the Bitterroot

Valley, at the end of a fly rod during the salmon fly hatch on the Big Hole River, and chasing the wily wapiti in Cinnabar Basin. He's led the charge at BHA since 2013. During his time as President and CEO, staff has increased from 2-16 and membership has increased fifteen-fold to 15,000 across the country.

After decades of leading sportsmen's organizations and policy initiatives to bolster our outdoor heritage, Land has become a nationally sought-after expert on public lands policies. Recently featured in Men's Journal magazine as "The Face of the Resistance," Land continues to lead the charge in the national debate over the future of America's public lands.

Land sits on the boards of the Phil Tawney Hunters Conservation Endowment, named after his late father, and is active in local and regional sportsmen's groups. Any other spare time is spent on the stream, duck blind or chasing big game. Land enjoys anything outside with his wife Glenna, daughter Cidney, son Colin, and their "Triple T" black Labs, Turk Teller Tawney and Tule Thibodeau Tawney.

About Backcountry Hunters & Anglers

Backcountry Hunters & Anglers has doubled in size over the last year, growing exponentially due in large part to President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's policies that threaten our public lands.

Backcountry Hunters & Anglers (BHA) is the sportsmen's voice for our wild public lands, waters and wildlife. We seek to ensure North America's outdoor heritage of hunting and fishing in a natural setting through education and work on behalf of fish, wildlife and wild places. With over 250,000 members and supporters and chapters in 25 states and British Columbia, BHA is increasingly drawing support from sportsmen and women from across the continent. We represent the challenge, solitude and adventure that only the backcountry can provide, and we are working hard with boots on the ground at all levels to ensure that our roadless areas and backcountry are protected for the fish and wildlife that thrive there. In addition to advocating for policies that protect the backcountry, we also work to curb illegal motorized use, promote ethical hunting and fishing practices, and protect special landscapes that have high quality fish and wildlife habitat values.

The mission of Backcountry Hunters & Anglers is to ensure North America's outdoor heritage of hunting and fishing in a natural setting, through education and work on behalf of wild public lands and waters.

Learn more

here: >>>http://www.backcountryhunters.org/mission_and_values<<<::

Allison Kaminsky Putala

Principal

Kaminsky Putala Public Relations – KPPR

p: 202.421.3211

allison@kaminskyputala.com

This message and its attachments may contain legally privileged or confidential information. It is intended solely for the named addressee. If you are not the addressee indicated in this message (or responsible for delivery of the message to the addressee), you may not copy or deliver this message or its attachments to anyone. Rather, you should permanently delete this message and its attachments and kindly notify the sender by reply e-mail. Any content of this message and its attachments that does not relate to the official business of Fox News or Fox Business must not be taken to have been sent or endorsed by either of them. No representation is made that this email or its attachments are without defect.

From: Rigas, Laura
To: Newell, Russell
Cc: Heather Swift; Caroline Boulton
Subject: Re: hi Heather, couple of questions
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 4:41:59 PM

Pls also make it clear that other spouses actually attended, rather than just were invited.
Thanks.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Fri, Oct 6, 2017 at 4:23 PM, Newell, Russell <russell_newell@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
did you want that spelling of bologna or baloney?

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Fri, Oct 6, 2017 at 4:14 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
You good with this?

“The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources.” - Heather Swift, DOI spokesman

"The Scheduling Office meets regularly with the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law to ensure that all travel is thoroughly reviewed and approved in advance and that it is fully compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations." --Joint Statement from Melinda Loftin (Department of the Interior Designated Agency Ethics Official and Director of the Departmental Ethics Office) and Edward Keable (Deputy Solicitor - General Law). Both are career members of the Senior Executive Service.

On Background -

Mrs. Zinke has never taken a flight at the expense of the department. She has never been on a flight chartered by the Department. She and a number of other spouses were invited to the Arctic CODEL, per standard procedure, and her fare was not paid for by the Department. She occasionally meets her husband while he is traveling and pays for her meals and travel at her own personal expense. There are no plans to hire her and any rumors to that point or that she runs or participates in DOI meetings are bologna.

From: "Rein, Lisa" <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com>
Date: October 5, 2017 at 6:16:15 PM EDT
To: 'Heather Swift' <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: RE: hi Heather, couple of questions

Ah, why don't you tell me what it is?

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Thursday, October 05, 2017 6:13 PM
To: Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com>
Subject: Re: hi Heather, couple of questions

Lisa - off the record you have a lot of really bad information here regarding Mrs. Zinke.

Heather Swift

Press Secretary

Department of the Interior

On Oct 5, 2017, at 6:03 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

We are doing a broad story for the weekend on Cabinet secretaries.. Will explore travel and a few other themes. Wanted to run a few things by you about Sec. Zinke

First.. Understand that he asks for the secretarial flag to fly on the roof of the Interior headquarters when he is in the building and come down when he is traveling or has left for the day.

This is a really interesting new thing, don't think other Cabinet members have done.. And, yes I had no idea there was even a secretarial flag for each agency! But see the bison with the stars.

So, wanted to ask about the practice, why the secretary does it (I am thinking this is an old military tradition?) and who is responsible for putting up the flag,, I assume the contract security folks?

Second:

From the secretary's travel schedule, we see that Mrs. Zinke has traveled with him several times, to the VI, the CODEL to the Arctic, to California for the meeting with Gov Brown,etc. Also, she has been present at meetings with employees and other meetings at Interior.

Wondering if you can tell me a bit about this.. Whether the Zinkes reimbursed the government for the cost of her travel when she has travelled and if her presence presents any conflict of interest since she is running Troy Downing's campaign.

Are there any plans to hire Mrs. Zinke as a government employee? (Sort of in the Ivanka Trump mold?)

Ok, thanks much.

Lisa Rein

Staff Reporter

Washington Post

202-334-5190

Cell 202-821-3120

@Reinlwapo

Send me a confidential tip

From: Heather Swift
To: Rein, Lisa
Subject: Re: hi Heather, couple of questions
Date: Thursday, October 05, 2017 6:19:57 PM

Lisa - off the record you have a lot of really bad information here regarding Mrs. Zinke.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 5, 2017, at 6:03 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

We are doing a broad story for the weekend on Cabinet secretaries.. Will explore travel and a few other themes. Wanted to run a few things by you about Sec. Zinke

First.. Understand that he asks for the secretarial flag to fly on the roof of the Interior headquarters when he is in the building and come down when he is traveling or has left for the day.

This is a really interesting new thing, don't think other Cabinet members have done.. And, yes I had no idea there was even a secretarial flag for each agency! But see the bison with the stars.

So, wanted to ask about the practice, why the secretary does it (I am thinking this is an old military tradition?) and who is responsible for putting up the flag,, I assume the contract security folks?

Second:

From the secretary's travel schedule, we see that Mrs. Zinke has traveled with him several times, to the VI, the CODEL to the Arctic, to California for the meeting with Gov Brown,etc. Also, she has been present at meetings with employees and other meetings at Interior.

Wondering if you can tell me a bit about this.. Whether the Zinkes reimbursed the government for the cost of her travel when she has travelled and if her presence presents any conflict of interest since she is running Troy Downing's campaign.

Are there any plans to hire Mrs. Zinke as a government employee? (Sort of in the Ivanka Trump mold?)

Ok, thanks much.

Lisa Rein
Staff Reporter
Washington Post
202-334-5190
Cell 202-821-3120
@Reinlwapo
Send me a confidential tip

From: Swift, Heather
To: Rein, Lisa
Subject: Re: hi Heather, from Lisa Rein re: Sec Zinke travel
Date: Wednesday, September 27, 2017 2:25:20 PM

roger dodger!

Also - I didn't see if you wrote on the firings. Did you?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Sep 27, 2017 at 1:38 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

Again, sorry for the long email

End of the day tomorrow or Friday at the latest would be great.

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, September 27, 2017 1:35 PM
To: Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com>
Subject: Re: hi Heather, from Lisa Rein re: Sec Zinke travel

What is your deadline?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Sep 27, 2017 at 1:10 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

Hi there. With Sec. Price in the news, we're looking into travel by other secretaries,, so apologies in advance for the detailed email. I'm working with a colleague, Drew Harwell. We've looked at Sec. Zinke's travel schedule since his confirmation in March, through July. Hoping you and your colleagues will be able to tackle these questions. Obviously an Interior secretary is going to be traveling a lot... We would just like to flesh out some questions. Many thanks, and really appreciate. Lisa

- OVERALL questions
- How many flights has Sec. Zinke taken on government or charter jets? Can you please provide the aircraft manifest, type of plane, destinations, dates of use, purpose, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips?
- On what trips did Sec. Zinke's wife Lola and/or other members of Sec. Zinke's family join?
- The calendar says that spouses attended a cultural briefing with local reindeer herders on May 26 in Norway. Was Lola Zinke one of the spouses?
- Did Sec. Zinke take steps to limit the costs of his travel? If so, what were they?

- Virgin Islands
 - What was the official purpose of the U.S. Virgin Islands trip during Zinke's first month as Interior secretary?
 - What was the cost of the trip?
 - Did Sec. Zinke's wife Lola attend?
 - While some flights appear to be commercial, others are not shown, including multiple flights on March 31. Can you please provide the manifest, type of plane, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips?

- Big Sky event
 - Sec. Zinke was in Big Sky in March 17-19, the same time Sen. Daines hosted a "weekend in the Montana mountains" benefiting the Daines Big Sky Committee. He attended multiple Daines receptions and stayed the night at Daines' home. A fundraiser flyer says requested contributions were $3,000 for PACs, $1,500 for personal.
 - What was the policy purpose of this trip?
 - Was this a political trip?
 - Who paid for Zinke's travel to the political events?

- Atlanta
 - What was the purpose of Sec. Zinke's trip to the NRA Institute for Legislative Action event in Atlanta on April 28? Was this a political event? What was the cost of flying on Air Force One, and did the DOI reimburse any other agencies for the seats of Sec. Zinke, Lola Zinke or his staff?

- April 12-20
 - During the trip, Sec. Zinke spoke at the Reagan Center in Santa Barbara and campaigned for Greg Gianforte. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - On April 15 and 16, Sec. Zinke was in Santa Barabra, including a meeting with former Congressman Bob Lagomarsino. What was the meeting about? Did these home trips entail personal or official use? The items don't say that it was "personal travel" or "paid for personally" - was it?

- On April 17, Sec. Zinke went to the Reagan Ranch Center and met the vice president of the Young America's Foundation. What was the official policy purpose of this trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
- May 5-13: Montana, Utah, California, Montana
 - What was the official policy purpose of Sec. Zinke's trip on May 5-13?
 - During the trip, Sec. Zinke gave keynote remarks to the RNC Spring Meeting Dinner and attended a rally for Greg Gianforte. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - On May 8 and May 9, Sec. Zinke traveled in a B200 Turboprop 8-passenger plane, the calendar states. Can you please provide the manifest, cost of the trip, owner of the jet and source of payment for the trips?
 - Sec. Zinke spent that weekend at home in Kalispell, Montana. He then flew to Dulles and home on Monday. Federal regulations say employees' official travel should by no means include personal use. Did these home trips entail personal use?
- May 25-June 2: Norway, Greenland, Alaska, Idaho
 - What was the official purpose of this trip?
 - Sec. Zinke attended a reception for Rep. Don Young at Sullivan's Steakhouse. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - Sec. Zinke flew from Boise to L.A. on June 2. The June 3 and 4 dates say "Personal travel // Paid for personally" in Santa Barbara. What did Sec. Zinke pay for? How much did he pay At what rate did he pay for the travel personally? What aircraft did he fly on? What was the total cost to government?
- June 25-28: Nevada, Montana
 - On June 25, Sec. Zinke attended the Rule of Law Defense Fund Reception & Dinner, where he sat at a dinner table with leaders of the casino industry, the NRA, the Chamber of Commerce and Koch Industries. What was the policy purpose of Sec. Zinke's attendance? Was this a political event?
 - On June 26, Sec. Zinke flew from Las Vegas to Kalispell on a private plane tied to a Republican donor. Can you please provide the aircraft manifest, purpose, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips? It appears Sec. Zinke spent the night afterward at his home in Whitefish; is that correct, and wouldn't that convey personal use?
- July 20-22: Colorado
 - On July 20, Sec. Zinke gave remarks in Denver at the American Legislative Exchange Council. He also attended a Colorado Republican Committee roundtable and gave remarks at the Western Conservative Summit.
 - What was the official policy purpose of these trips? Were these trips political or personal? What were Sec. Zinke's remarks at these trips. What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?

Lisa Rein

Staff Reporter

Washington Post

202-334-5190

Cell 202-821-3120

@Reinlwapo

Send me a confidential tip

From: Swift, Heather
To: Rein, Lisa
Subject: Re: hi Heather, from Lisa Rein re: Sec Zinke travel
Date: Wednesday, September 27, 2017 2:53:18 PM

Is this a cabinet wide inquiry? Was there a reason these specific trips were IDed?

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Sep 27, 2017 at 1:10 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

Hi there. With Sec. Price in the news, we're looking into travel by other secretaries, so apologies in advance for the detailed email. I'm working with a colleague, Drew Harwell. We've looked at Sec. Zinke's travel schedule since his confirmation in March, through July. Hoping you and your colleagues will be able to tackle these questions. Obviously an Interior secretary is going to be traveling a lot... We would just like to flesh out some questions. Many thanks, and really appreciate. Lisa

- OVERALL questions
- How many flights has Sec. Zinke taken on government or charter jets? Can you please provide the aircraft manifest, type of plane, destinations, dates of use, purpose, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips?
- On what trips did Sec. Zinke's wife Lola and/or other members of Sec. Zinke's family join?
- The calendar says that spouses attended a cultural briefing with local reindeer herders on May 26 in Norway. Was Lola Zinke one of the spouses?
- Did Sec. Zinke take steps to limit the costs of his travel? If so, what were they?
- Virgin Islands
 - What was the official purpose of the U.S. Virgin Islands trip during Zinke's first month as Interior secretary?
 - What was the cost of the trip?
 - Did Sec. Zinke's wife Lola attend?
 - While some flights appear to be commercial, others are not shown, including multiple flights on March 31. Can you please provide the manifest, type of plane, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips?
- Big Sky event
 - Sec. Zinke was in Big Sky in March 17-19, the same time Sen. Daines hosted a "weekend in the Montana mountains" benefiting the Daines Big Sky Committee. He attended multiple Daines receptions and stayed the night at Daines' home. A fundraiser flyer says requested contributions were $3,000 for PACs, $1,500 for personal.
 - What was the policy purpose of this trip?
 - Was this a political trip?
 - Who paid for Zinke's travel to the political events?
- Atlanta
 - What was the purpose of Sec. Zinke's trip to the NRA Institute for Legislative Action event in Atlanta on April 28? Was this a political event? What was the cost of flying on Air Force One, and did the DOI reimburse any other agencies for the seats of Sec. Zinke, Lola Zinke or his staff?

- April 12-20
 - During the trip, Sec. Zinke spoke at the Reagan Center in Santa Barbara and campaigned for Greg Gianforte. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - On April 15 and 16, Sec. Zinke was in Santa Barabra, including a meeting with former Congressman Bob Lagomarsino. What was the meeting about? Did these home trips entail personal or official use? The items don't say that it was "personal travel" or "paid for personally" - was it?
 - On April 17, Sec. Zinke went to the Reagan Ranch Center and met the vice president of the Young America's Foundation. What was the official policy purpose of this trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
- May 5-13: Montana, Utah, California, Montana
 - What was the official policy purpose of Sec. Zinke's trip on May 5-13?
 - During the trip, Sec. Zinke gave keynote remarks to the RNC Spring Meeting Dinner and attended a rally for Greg Gianforte. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - On May 8 and May 9, Sec. Zinke traveled in a B200 Turboprop 8-passenger plane, the calendar states. Can you please provide the manifest, cost of the trip, owner of the jet and source of payment for the trips?
 - Sec. Zinke spent that weekend at home in Kalispell, Montana. He then flew to Dulles and home on Monday. Federal regulations say employees' official travel should by no means include personal use. Did these home trips entail personal use?
- May 25-June 2: Norway, Greenland, Alaska, Idaho
 - What was the official purpose of this trip?
 - Sec. Zinke attended a reception for Rep. Don Young at Sullivan's Steakhouse. Was this a political trip? What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?
 - Sec. Zinke flew from Boise to L.A. on June 2. The June 3 and 4 dates say "Personal travel // Paid for personally" in Santa Barbara. What did Sec. Zinke pay for? How much did he pay At what rate did he pay for the travel personally? What aircraft did he fly on? What was the total cost to government?
- June 25-28: Nevada, Montana
 - On June 25, Sec. Zinke attended the Rule of Law Defense Fund Reception & Dinner, where he sat at a dinner table with leaders of the casino industry, the NRA, the Chamber of Commerce and Koch Industries. What was the policy purpose of Sec. Zinke's attendance? Was this a political event?
 - On June 26, Sec. Zinke flew from Las Vegas to Kalispell on a private plane tied to a Republican donor. Can you please provide the aircraft manifest, purpose, cost of the trip and source of payment for the trips? It appears Sec. Zinke spent the night afterward at his home in Whitefish; is that correct, and wouldn't that convey personal use?
- July 20-22: Colorado
 - On July 20, Sec. Zinke gave remarks in Denver at the American Legislative Exchange Council. He also attended a Colorado Republican Committee roundtable and gave remarks at the Western Conservative Summit.
 - What was the official policy purpose of these trips? Were these trips political or personal? What were Sec. Zinke's remarks at these trips. What was the cost for this trip, and who covered the expenses?

Lisa Rein

Staff Reporter

Washington Post

202-334-5190

Cell 202-821-3120

@Reinlwapo

Send me a confidential tip

From: Rein, Lisa
To: "Heather Swift"
Subject: RE: hi Heather, touching base again
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 6:16:04 PM

Heather I never said that Mrs Zinke runs meetings, either. Never asked you that question .

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Friday, October 06, 2017 5:30 PM
To: Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com>
Subject: Re: hi Heather, touching base again

“The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources.” - Heather Swift, DOI spokesman

"The Scheduling Office meets regularly with the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law to ensure that all travel is thoroughly reviewed and approved in advance and that it is fully compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations." --Joint Statement from Melinda Loftin (Department of the Interior Designated Agency Ethics Official and Director of the Departmental Ethics Office) and Edward Keable (Deputy Solicitor - General Law). Both are career members of the Senior Executive Service.

On Background -

Mrs. Zinke has never taken a flight at the expense of the department. She has never been on a flight chartered by the Department. She and a number of other spouses were invited to and attended the Arctic CODEL, per standard procedure, and her fare was not paid for by the Department. She occasionally meets her husband while he is traveling and pays for her meals and travel at her own personal expense. There are no plans to hire her and any rumors to that point or that she runs or participates in DOI meetings are baloney.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 3:46 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

Just checking to see if you will have anything by COB today.
Many thanks.

Lisa Rein
Staff Reporter

Washington Post
202-334-5190
Cell 202-821-3120
@Reinlwapo
Send me a confidential tip

From: Rein, Lisa
To: "Heather Swift"
Subject: RE: hi Heather, touching base again
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 5:56:12 PM

Ok, thanks. I have never said there were rumors about hiring her. I asked the question myself because of her presence at official agency functions/meetings/ whatever.
The flag? Can you explain the reason, how it works.

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Friday, October 06, 2017 5:30 PM
To: Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com>
Subject: Re: hi Heather, touching base again

“The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources.” - Heather Swift, DOI spokesman

"The Scheduling Office meets regularly with the Departmental Ethics Office and the Division of General Law to ensure that all travel is thoroughly reviewed and approved in advance and that it is fully compliant with all applicable laws, rules, and regulations." --Joint Statement from Melinda Loftin (Department of the Interior Designated Agency Ethics Official and Director of the Departmental Ethics Office) and Edward Keable (Deputy Solicitor - General Law). Both are career members of the Senior Executive Service.

On Background -

Mrs. Zinke has never taken a flight at the expense of the department. She has never been on a flight chartered by the Department. She and a number of other spouses were invited to and attended the Arctic CODEL, per standard procedure, and her fare was not paid for by the Department. She occasionally meets her husband while he is traveling and pays for her meals and travel at her own personal expense. There are no plans to hire her and any rumors to that point or that she runs or participates in DOI meetings are baloney.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 6, 2017, at 3:46 PM, Rein, Lisa <Lisa.Rein@washpost.com> wrote:

Just checking to see if you will have anything by COB today.
Many thanks.

Lisa Rein
Staff Reporter
Washington Post
202-334-5190
Cell 202-821-3120
@Reinlwapo
Send me a confidential tip

From: Brian Pavlik
To: Swift_Heather
Subject: Re: Idea for SLOTUS
Date: Tuesday, November 07, 2017 2:01:22 PM

Yes, just that topic, see you at 230

On Nov 7, 2017, at 1 59 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

OK - Is it on this subject specifically?

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Nov 7, 2017 at 1:53 PM, Pavlik, Brian <brian_pavlik@nps.gov> wrote:
I am meeting with him at 2:30 today if you would like to join If so stop by office at 2:30 I am at 3129

On Tue, Nov 7, 2017 at 1:30 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Brian - when are you and Tom available to sit down this week and go over options for SLOTUS initiative?

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Nov 7, 2017 at 1:28 PM, Downey Magallanes <downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Ok, thanks If this hasn't already been followed up on, I think Heather should sit down with Tom and Brian when he has options to present

On Nov 3, 2017, at 11 01 AM, Larrabee, Jason <jason_larrabee@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Ladies,
Following up here
Tom Medema is the career POC in NPS and Brian Pavlik will be bird-dogging to ensure we have timely and successful events Brian is copied as well

Jason Larrabee
Acting Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks
U.S. Department of the Interior
1849 C Street, NW -- MIB Room 3154
Washington, DC, 20240
office: 202-208-4416

NOTE: Every email I send or receive is subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act.

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 12:18 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Thanks Downey!

Jason, art therapy for patients of all ailments, not just mental illness

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Oct 23, 2017, at 12:08 PM, Downey Magallanes <downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Can you assign someone to put together ideas

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Mashburn, Lori" <lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov>
Date: October 18, 2017 at 9:44:19 AM EDT
To: Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>
Cc: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>, "Magallanes, Downey" <downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov>, Scott Hommel <scott_hommel@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: Re: Idea for SLOTUS

That would be a wonderful idea!

Lori K. Mashburn
White House Liaison
Department of the Interior
202 208 1694

On Wed, Oct 18, 2017 at 9:10 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Love it

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U S Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Oct 18, 2017, at 8:46 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Mrs. Pence is really big into art therapy for those with mental illness (see article below). Perhaps we could do a joint event with her and NPS resident artists, or have her at a park to launch an initiative for art therapy in Parks. The Secretary's mother-in-law passed away from Alzheimer's disease so it's something that touches his family.

Karen Pence to outline goals for art therapy initiative

By Darlene Superville | AP October 18 at 7:25 AM

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec

WASHINGTON — When Karen Pence found out that an art therapist in hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico couldn't afford the clay her clients needed, she sprang into action.

A trained watercolor artist and advocate of the little-known mental health profession, Vice President Mike Pence's wife went to the Virginia art supply store she frequented when they lived in the state during his tenure in Congress, bought 120 pounds of self-drying clay and packed it aboard Air Force Two for their flight down to survey the damage.

"She cleaned him out," the vice president said of the store's owner.

Mrs. Pence made art therapy her cause ever since she first learned about it more than a decade ago. She has visited numerous art therapy programs, both in the U.S. and abroad, and on Wednesday in Florida, nine months into the administration, she planned to formally announce the goals for her art therapy initiative.

She wants to help people understand the difference between art therapy and arts and crafts, and to grasp that art therapy is a viable option for treating trauma, injury and other life experiences. She also wants to encourage young people to choose art therapy as a career.

"I don't think that a lot of people understand the difference between therapeutic art and art therapy," Mrs. Pence, a trained watercolor artist, told The Associated Press in an exclusive interview before the announcement at Florida State University in Tallahassee. The school has an art therapy program she described as "tremendous."

Blabbing to a girlfriend can be therapeutic, she explained, but it is not the same as art therapy, which has three elements: a client, a trained therapist and art.

As passionate as she is about raising art therapy's profile, other issues help make Karen Pence tick, too.

One of them is helping military families, especially spouses. Her only son, Michael, is in the Marines.

There's also her interest in honeybees. Mrs. Pence installed a beehive on the grounds of the U.S. Naval Observatory, where the vice president's official residence is located, to help call attention to a decline in managed bee colonies that officials say could negatively affect U.S. agricultural production. She had a beehive at the Indiana governor's residence for the same reason.

Now 60 and married to the vice president since 1985, Mrs. Pence has long been viewed as one of her husband's most trusted political advisers. They are often together on trips, at the White House, or at the observatory, almost always holding hands.

Since returning to Washington in January (the family lived in the area when her husband served in Congress), she has accompanied the vice president on goodwill tours of Europe, Asia and Latin America, as well as trips to survey recent hurricane damage in Texas, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. She tries to visit art therapy programs wherever she goes. Journalists who travel with Pence often keep an eye out for his wife; she often brings them cookies when he ventures back to the press cabin for small talk.

She's even done a little campaigning, urging Virginians to vote next month for Ed Gillespie in what's viewed as a tight gubernatorial race.

"It really makes a difference, I can tell you. Nobody thought that we were going to win," she said, an apparent reference to the Trump-Pence ticket.

The vice president often refers to his wife as the family's "prayer captain." She has led congregations in prayer during their hurricane-damage trips.

"We're people of faith so we just try and approach everything with prayer," Mrs. Pence said from her sunny, second-floor office in the Eisenhower Executive Office Building in the White House complex, where she and her staff enjoy coveted views of the Washington Monument and Jefferson Memorial. Art therapy drawings given as gifts adorn the outer office.

She proudly displayed several of her paintings, including of the Capitol dome, the vice president's residence, a Ball canning jar-turned-flower vase, a cardinal bird and a pink peony. She turns many of her watercolors into prints and boxed notecards that she gifts to art therapists she meets.

Except for myriad pets, including two cats, a dog and a rabbit named Marlon Bundo, the Pences are empty nesters. Their son and two adult daughters are off on their own.

subscribe

The story must be told.

Your subscription supports journalism that matters

Try 1 month for $1

"I think for us this is a good time in our life for this role because our kids are out of college. They're living their own lives," Mrs. Pence said.

She's also launching a blog in conjunction with Wednesday's announcement to chronicle her visits to art therapy programs.

Follow Darlene Superville on Twitter: <http://www.twitter.com/dsuperville>

Copyright 2017 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--
Brian Pavlik
National Park Service
1849 C St. NW Rm #3129
Washington, DC 20240
202-354-1827 (Office)
202-641-3709 (Mobile)

From: Daniel Jorjani
To: Melinda Loftin; Edward McDonnell; Joshua Campbell; heather_swift@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: Inquiry from Reporter re: Mrs. Z
Date: Tuesday, May 23, 2017 10:55:36 AM

Adding Heather.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 22, 2017, at 6:48 PM, Jorjani, Daniel <daniel.jorjani@sol.doi.gov> wrote:

Josh - Please work with Melinda and Ed to have a draft response prepared for my review by 11 am tomorrow. Thank you. Dan

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Date: Mon, May 22, 2017 at 6:47 PM
Subject: Inquiry from Reporter re: Mrs. Z
To: Daniel Jorjani <daniel_jorjani@ios.doi.gov>

Below is the inquiry I received from E&E (very nasty wording) and then below that in blue is what I've drafted so far as a response.

Hi, we're planning to run a story in Monday's Greenwire about Secretary Zinke's failure to resign from Continental Divide International LLC, Double Tap LLC, and Great Northern Veterans Peace Park Inc. before assuming office, as he promised to do in his agreement with the Office of Government Ethics. The story explains that his continued involvement with these entities as well as Lolita's role at CDI and access to top decisionmakers open the secretary up to, at the very least, the appearance of conflicts of interest.

Do you have any comment on Zinke's failure to follow through on his OGE agreement? Also, can you explain why Lolita has been allowed to sit in on meetings with the governor of California, a state in which she owns more than $1 million worth of property, and other closed-door events? How will Interior prevent her or the secretary for violating ethics and conflict of interest laws and policies?

I'd also like to note that the story includes links to previous reporting on Zinke's alleged travel fraud and close ties to the Special Operations for America PAC as well as documents about the history of CDI. That's not something you can really comment on, but I don't want you to be surprised when you see it in the story.

Please get back to me with a comment by 11 a.m. on Monday. Feel free to give me a call on my cell phone with any questions or concerns you may have about this request. I'm happy to elaborate if needed.

(b) (5)

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Daniel Jorjani
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Daniel Jorjani
Subject: Re: Inquiry from Reporter re: Mrs. Z
Date: Tuesday, May 23, 2017 10:51:14 AM

You said noon yesterday!

Sent from my iPhone

On May 23, 2017, at 9:49 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

any update? I have to respond by 11am

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, May 22, 2017 at 6:47 PM, Jorjani, Daniel <daniel.jorjani@sol.doi.gov> wrote:

Appreciated.

On Mon, May 22, 2017 at 6:47 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Below is the inquiry I received from E&E (very nasty wording) and then below that in blue is what I've drafted so far as a response.

Hi, we're planning to run a story in Monday's Greenwire about Secretary Zinke's failure to resign from Continental Divide International LLC, Double Tap LLC, and Great Northern Veterans Peace Park Inc. before assuming office, as he promised to do in his agreement with the Office of Government Ethics. The story explains that his continued involvement with these entities as well as Lolita's role at CDI and access to top decisionmakers open the secretary up to, at the very least, the appearance of conflicts of interest.

Do you have any comment on Zinke's failure to follow through on his OGE agreement? Also, can you explain why Lolita has been allowed to sit in on meetings with the governor of California, a state in which she owns more than $1 million worth of property, and other closed-door events? How will Interior prevent her or the secretary for violating ethics and conflict of interest laws and policies?

I'd also like to note that the story includes links to previous reporting on Zinke's alleged travel fraud and close ties to the Special Operations for America PAC as well as documents about the history of CDI. That's not something you can really comment on, but I don't want you to be surprised when you see it in the story.

Please get back to me with a comment by 11 a.m. on Monday. Feel free to give me a call on my cell phone with any questions or concerns you may have about this request. I'm happy to elaborate if needed.

(b) (5)

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Jorjani, Daniel
To: Swift, Heather
Cc: Daniel Jorjani
Subject: Re: Inquiry from Reporter re: Mrs. Z
Date: Monday, May 22, 2017 6:48:11 PM

Appreciated.

On Mon, May 22, 2017 at 6:47 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Below is the inquiry I received from E&E (very nasty wording) and then below that in blue is what I've drafted so far as a response.

Hi, we're planning to run a story in Monday's Greenwire about Secretary Zinke's failure to resign from Continental Divide International LLC, Double Tap LLC, and Great Northern Veterans Peace Park Inc. before assuming office, as he promised to do in his agreement with the Office of Government Ethics. The story explains that his continued involvement with these entities as well as Lolita's role at CDI and access to top decisionmakers open the secretary up to, at the very least, the appearance of conflicts of interest.

Do you have any comment on Zinke's failure to follow through on his OGE agreement? Also, can you explain why Lolita has been allowed to sit in on meetings with the governor of California, a state in which she owns more than $1 million worth of property, and other closed-door events? How will Interior prevent her or the secretary for violating ethics and conflict of interest laws and policies?

I'd also like to note that the story includes links to previous reporting on Zinke's alleged travel fraud and close ties to the Special Operations for America PAC as well as documents about the history of CDI. That's not something you can really comment on, but I don't want you to be surprised when you see it in the story.

Please get back to me with a comment by 11 a.m. on Monday. Feel free to give me a call on my cell phone with any questions or concerns you may have about this request. I'm happy to elaborate if needed.

(b) (5)

-
Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Davis, Lynda
To: Ullyot, John; Heather Swift; Cashour, Curtis; Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov; (b) (6)
Cc: Prince-Wheeler, Latriece R.; Wagner, John \(Wolf\); Hutton, James
Subject: RE: Interior Dept Assist - Board meeting tomorrow
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 7:11:12 AM

Got it!

Lynda C. Davis, Ph.D.
Chief Veterans Experience Officer
Department of Veterans Affairs

Sent with Good (www.good.com)

From: Ullyot, John
Sent: Monday, October 23, 2017 4:08:06 AM
To: Heather Swift; Cashour, Curtis; Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov; (b) (6)
Cc: Davis, Lynda; Prince-Wheeler, Latriece R.; Wagner, John (Wolf); Hutton, James
Subject: Re: Interior Dept Assist - Board meeting tomorrow

Thanks Heather — I'm connecting you here with Lynda Davis and Latriece Prince-Wheeler, who can help you with information on that event.

Thanks again,

John U.

On 10/22/17, 6:35 PM, "Heather Swift" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov<mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>> wrote:

Hi there John and Curt - could you please put me in touch with the comms person who is running point on tomorrow's board meeting of military family and caretakers? Mrs. Zinke is participating.

Apologies but this is an ASAP request. Can discuss further on the phone (b) (6)

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Swift, Heather
To: Davis, Lynda
Cc: [Wagner, John \(Wolf\); O'Shea, Laura; \(b\) \(6\); Prince-Wheeler, Latrice R.; Hutton, James; Laura.Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Cashour, Curtis; Ullyot, John](mailto:Wagner, John (Wolf); O'Shea, Laura; (b) (6); Prince-Wheeler, Latrice R.; Hutton, James; Laura.Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Cashour, Curtis; Ullyot, John)
Subject: Re: Interior Dept Assist - Board meeting tomorrow
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 8:21:00 AM

Thanks all. Dr. Davis and I were able to connect via email late last night.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 7:11 AM, Davis, Lynda <Lynda.Davis@va.gov> wrote:

I've got this thanks a million

Lynda C. Davis, Ph.D.
Chief Veterans Experience Officer
Department of Veterans Affairs

Sent with Good (www.good.com)

From: Wagner, John (Wolf)
Sent: Monday, October 23, 2017 4:10:37 AM
To: O'Shea, Laura
Cc: \(b\) \(6\); Davis, Lynda; Prince-Wheeler, Latrice R.; Hutton, James; Laura.Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Cashour, Curtis; Ullyot, John; Heather Swift (6); Davis, Lynda; Prince-Wheeler, Latrice R.; Hutton, James; Laura.Rigas@ios.doi.gov; Cashour, Curtis; Ullyot, John; Heather Swift)
Subject: Re: Interior Dept Assist - Board meeting tomorrow

Also, found out last night Laura is a staff POC for Dr Davis. Looping her in as well

John 'Wolf' Wagner
Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary
Public and Intergovernmental Affairs
U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs
O: 202-461-7500
john.wolf.wagner@va.gov<mailto:john.wolf.wagner@va.gov>>

[cid:65DA3D97-9296-40CA-BE93-6CC05BD3DE07]

From: "Ullyot, John" <John.Ullyot@va.gov<mailto:John.Ullyot@va.gov>>

Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 at 7:08 AM

To: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov<mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>>, "Cashour, Curtis" <Curt.Cashour@va.gov<mailto:Curt.Cashour@va.gov>>, "Laura Rigas@ios.doi.gov<mailto:Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov>" <Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov<mailto:Laura_Rigas@ios.doi.gov>>, "Rateike, EOP/WHO" <(b) (6)<mailto:(b) (6)>>>
Cc: "Davis, Lynda" <Lynda.Davis@va.gov<mailto:Lynda.Davis@va.gov>>, Latriece Prince-Wheeler <Latriece.Prince-Wheeler@va.gov<mailto:Latriece.Prince-Wheeler@va.gov>>, Department of Veterans Affairs Department of Veterans Affairs <john.wolf.wagner@va.gov<mailto:john.wolf.wagner@va.gov>>, "Hutton, James" <James.Hutton@va.gov<mailto:James.Hutton@va.gov>>>
Subject: Re: Interior Dept Assist - Board meeting tomorrow

Thanks Heather — I'm connecting you here with Lynda Davis and Latriece Prince-Wheeler, who can help you with information on that event.

Thanks again,

John U.

On 10/22/17, 6:35 PM, "Heather Swift" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov<mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>> wrote:

Hi there John and Curt - could you please put me in touch with the comms person who is running point on tomorrow's board meeting of military family and caretakers? Mrs. Zinke is participating.

Apologies but this is an ASAP request. Can discuss further on the phone (b) (6).

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

From: Scully, Steve
To: "Swift, Heather"
Subject: RE: Interview request Heather !
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:29:34 PM
Attachments: image002.png

We haven't done that for the others, so to be consistent probably not. It's a quick 25 minute interview that often includes engaging stories...so hopefully we can get that with the Interior Secretary. And of course, I will be asking about her...but likely just with the principle (in this case, him)

SS

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:27 PM
To: Scully, Steve <SSCULLY@c-span.org>
Subject: Re: Interview request Heather !

Just thinking out loud here, would you be interested in having Mrs. Zinke in for a couple minutes of the personal questions?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Aug 15, 2017 at 2:25 PM, Scully, Steve <SSCULLY@c-span.org> wrote:

THANKS HEATHER

I can promise you it's the easiest interview he will ever do...it's all about him. And any policy questions are at the 30,000 foot level in terms of his objectives as Interior Secretary, why he decided to leave Congress to take on this job, etc.

Thanks for such a prompt response. I am literally heading out soon for the HHS Secretary Price interview. Look forward to talking to the Interior Secretary as well

Best
Steve

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:22 PM
To: Scully, Steve <SSCULLY@c-span.org>
Subject: Re: Interview request Heather !

Hey Steve, this sounds like a fun opportunity. Let me chat with scheduler and see if we can get something

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Aug 15, 2017 at 1:55 PM, Scully, Steve <SSCULLY@c-span.org> wrote:

Heather,

I am launching a new C-SPAN series titled 'The Appointees.' The goal: To learn about the life stories of key White House staffers, Cabinet Members and Administration officials.

So far, we have interviewed OMB Director Mulvaney, Transportation Secretary Chao, Agriculture Secretary Perdue, HHS Secretary Price, VA Secretary Shulkin, Omarosa Manigault & Sarah Huckabee Sanders

I am reaching out to key cabinet members, including your office, to see if we can schedule a sit-down interview with Interior Secretary Zinke within the next month. I am also attaching links to two recent profiles, to give you a sense of our objective with these conversations. The goal would be the same with the Interior Secretary: to learn about his life and career. With so many key issues involving the department in the months ahead, this is a chance to learn more about the individual who is running Interior.

We can tape this interview IN HIS OFFICE...ideally within the next month. Typically we need 1:15 hour to set up. The interview itself runs approx. 25-27 minutes. Our interview with the HHS Secretary is airing THIS FRIDAY @ 8pm FYI.

I look forward to working with you on this project, and can answer any of your questions anytime.

Again, thanks Heather!

Steve

Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao

<https://www.c-span.org/video/?428272-1/conversation-transportation-secretary-elaine-chao>

OMB Director Mulvaney

<https://www.c-span.org/video/?427821-2/conversation-white-house-budget-director-mick-mulvaney>

400 N. Capitol St. NW
Suite 650
Washington, DC 20001

Steve Scully

Senior Executive Producer

White House & Political Editor

C-SPAN Networks

202.626.7956

TWITTER: @SteveScully

E-MAIL: SScully@C-SPAN.org

CONFIDENTIALITY NOTICE: This e-mail may contain information that is privileged, confidential or otherwise protected from disclosure. If you are not the intended recipient of this e-mail, please notify the sender immediately by return e-mail, purge it and do not disseminate or copy it.

CONFIDENTIALITY NOTICE: This e-mail may contain information that is privileged, confidential or otherwise protected from disclosure. If you are not the intended recipient of this e-mail, please notify the sender immediately by return e-mail, purge it and do not disseminate or copy it.

CONFIDENTIALITY NOTICE: This e-mail may contain information that is privileged, confidential or otherwise protected from disclosure. If you are not the intended recipient of this e-mail, please notify the sender immediately by return e-mail, purge it and do not disseminate or copy it.

From: Swift, Heather
To: Slayton, April
Subject: Re: Investigative Reporter Reaching Out w/ Urgent Query re: Susan LaPierre
Date: Friday, September 29, 2017 4:39:27 PM

Pardon my language but what an ass!

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Fri, Sep 29, 2017 at 4:32 PM, Slayton, April <april_slayton@nps.gov> wrote:

Mike - your message to me arrived not 20 minutes ago, so forgive me for being a little put off by the tone of your message and your expectation that courtesy requires an instantaneous response to every message.

As my original message conveyed, the process is managed by the Secretary and his staff, not the National Park Service. Consequently, I don't have any additional information that would warrant a phone conversation at this time, nor do I believe that any of my colleagues at NPS can be helpful in your reporting.

I apologize if you find my work unhelpful, but I prefer to acknowledge reporters who ask questions, even in cases where I am not able to provide information on the topics they are asking about.

April

--

April Slayton
Assistant Director for Communications
National Park Service
Visit us at www.nps.gov

On Fri, Sep 29, 2017 at 4:20 PM, Michael Spies <mspies@thetrace.org> wrote:

The courtesy of a call would be nice. If you actually read the email I sent to Michael, which was fairly explicit, I clearly know who appoints board members. Similarly, if I thought it would be remotely useful to contact a flak at the Interior Department, I obviously would have done that. I don't mean to be rude, but it often feels like people in your position are deliberately trying to be unhelpful.

Mike

On Fri, Sep 29, 2017 at 3:47 PM, Slayton, April <april_slayton@nps.gov> wrote:

Dear Mike,

I'm replying to you on behalf of Mike Reynolds, who is traveling this week.

Appointments to the National Park Foundation Board are made by the Secretary of the Interior, so your questions about that process are best answered by the DOI Office of Communications. You can reach the team there at Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov.

Many thanks,

April

--

April Slayton
Assistant Director for Communications
National Park Service
Visit us at www.nps.gov

From: Michael Spies <m spies@thetrace.org>
Date: September 29, 2017 at 12:09:04 PM EDT
To: <Michael_Reynolds@nps.gov>
Subject: Investigative Reporter Reaching Out w/ Urgent Query re:
Susan LaPierre

Dear Mr. Reynolds,

I'm a senior reporter at The Trace (thetrace.org), which is an investigative reporting site that covers the gun issue and co-publishes stories with a number of national news outlets, including The New Yorker, Politico, Rolling Stone, and Newsweek. Last month, I broke the story about the appointment of Susan LaPierre (wife of Wayne, the NRA CEO), to the board of the Parks Foundation: <https://www.thetrace.org/2017/08/nra-parks-department-interior-zinke-alaska/>.

I'm still seeking more information on her appointment. I find it odd, for example, that her bio makes no mention of the NRA: <https://www.nationalparks.org/sites/default/files/susan-lapierre.pdf>. It does mention the Women's Leadership Forum, as if it were a standalone entity, which it is not. It's actually called the NRA Women's Leadership Forum, and its chief function is to raise money for the NRA from wealthy women: <http://www.nrawlf.com/>.

Over the spring, when I learned about Susan's appointment, I filed a FOIA request seeking more information about it. That request was fulfilled the other week. If you didn't know, Susan is absolutely not a noted conservationist, and, like her husband, she absolutely does not hunt, and probably does not fish or hike either. The records show that Susan was officially appointed the day before the NRA's April Annual Meeting, where Zinke was slated to speak at the Leadership forum. The records also show that there were backchannel conversations between Chris Cox, the NRA's top lobbyist, and new appointees in the Interior Department about Susan's appointment.

To be frank: much of this doesn't add up or make sense to me, and it feels like there's something bigger going on. If you have any time today, please call me on my cell. I think we should talk. Here's the number: 973 809 0419. Would be happy to meet you in person.

Best,
Mike Spies

From: Heather Swift
To: Ricalde, Katy
Subject: Re: Invitation for Sec. and Mrs. Zinke from Bret Baier
Date: Wednesday, September 13, 2017 4:53:04 PM

I would be mortified. The Secretary too. Totally appreciate the heads up!

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 13, 2017, at 4:31 PM, Ricalde, Katy <katy.ricalde@foxnews.com> wrote:

Cool—sorry! Otherwise I would totally say yes! I just know how I would feel if I were in that situation and showed up to find neighbors and college buddies haha

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, September 13, 2017 4:17 PM
To: Ricalde, Katy
Subject: Re: Invitation for Sec. and Mrs. Zinke from Bret Baier

Oh no you are totally right. Awkward city.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 13, 2017, at 4:16 PM, Ricalde, Katy <katy.ricalde@foxnews.com> wrote:

It will just be friends of the Baiers—neighborhood couples, FOX couples, and a few others ---they only invited a handful of Members of Congress and Sec. Zinke was the only Cabinet Official.

I can ask Bret, but it might be awkward for you all—would be only staffers present.

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, September 13, 2017 4:11 PM
To: Ricalde, Katy
Subject: Re: Invitation for Sec. and Mrs. Zinke from Bret Baier

Katy, I'm about to RSVP the Secretary however Mrs. Zinke is unable to attend. The Secretary has asked if it is permissible for the invite to transfer to me or another member of his team?

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 12, 2017, at 1:22 PM, Ricalde, Katy <katy.ricalde@foxnews.com> wrote:

Yes—thank you! Hope all is well with you also.

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, September 12, 2017 1:15 PM
To: Ricalde, Katy
Subject: Re: Invitation for Sec. and Mrs. Zinke from Bret Baier

Great, thanks Katy. Hope all is well!

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Sep 12, 2017, at 1:12 PM, Ricalde, Katy <katy.ricalde@foxnews.com> wrote:

Heather,

I am going to send an evite your way. It is for Secretary Zinke and his wife from Bret and Amy Baier.

Thank you,

Katy Ricalde

New Media Specialist
Assistant to Bret Baier & Brit Hume
400 North Capitol Street, NW / Suite 550
Washington, DC 20001
Phone: 202.824.6471

This message and its attachments may contain legally privileged or confidential information. It is intended solely for the named addressee. If you are not the addressee indicated in this message (or responsible for delivery of the message to the addressee), you may not copy or deliver this message or its attachments to anyone. Rather, you should permanently delete this message and its attachments and kindly notify the sender by reply e-mail. Any content of this message and its attachments that does not relate to the official business of Fox News or Fox Business must not be taken to have been sent or endorsed by either of them. No representation is made that this email or its attachments are without defect.

From: Timothy Cama
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Invitation for you and your family December 6
Date: Wednesday, November 29, 2017 3:41:33 PM

Looks like Jen got an invite too, so we're already going. Thank you though!

--

Timothy Cama, Staff writer
The Hill
(202) 695-6245
Secure: timothy.cama@protonmail.com

On Wed, Nov 29, 2017 at 1:21 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Tim, on behalf of the Secretary and the office of communications I'd like to invite you, your wife and daughter to a White House East Wing Christmas tour on Wednesday, December 6, 2017 at 4:00PM

Arrival information will be emailed to you upon RSVP.

Please use this link to input your information: <https://events.whitehouse.gov/form/RsvpFormHoliday?rid=PCMkX9JB4Q>

If you cannot go, please let me know.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Heather Swift
To: Michael Doyle
Subject: Re: Invitation for you and your lovely wife
Date: Friday, December 01, 2017 12:45:09 PM

No worries

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Dec 1, 2017, at 12:37 PM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

Hey, I was just about to drop you a line...unfortunately, after checking with my Keeper of the Schedule, I was reminded that we are already (b) (6), so we can't make it. I'm sorry about that, and appreciate the invite.

Mike

From: Heather Swift [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Friday, December 01, 2017 12:33 PM
To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>
Subject: Re: Invitation for you and your lovely wife

Mike. You need to RSVP today if you want to go.

Heather Swift
Press Secretary
Department of the Interior

On Nov 29, 2017, at 1:37 PM, Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net> wrote:

Thank you very much, I will check with my bride!

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, November 29, 2017 1:31 PM
To: Michael Doyle <mdoyle@eenews.net>
Subject: Invitation for you and your lovely wife

Hi Mike - On behalf of the Secretary and the office of communications I'd like to invite you and your wife to a White House East Wing Christmas tour on Wednesday, December 6, 2017 at 4:00PM, hosted by Interior.

Arrival information will be emailed to you upon RSVP. Please use this link to input your information: [https://events.whitehouse.gov/form/RsvpFormHoliday?

rid=PCMKX9JB4Q](https://events.whitehouse.gov/form/RsvpFormHoliday?rid=PCMKX9JB4Q)

If you cannot go, please let me know.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Scott Cameron
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride
Date: Wednesday, August 09, 2017 7:56:10 PM

Just the bear facts.

Thanks,
Scott
Scott J. Cameron
Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary
Policy, Management and Budget
Department of the Interior

Cell 202-706-9031
Desk 292-208-4242

Sent from my iPhone

On Aug 9, 2017, at 7:12 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

This makes the Secretary's advice ring even more true: Bring bear spray. The big can.

NY Post
Bear swipes car for joyride

He's (slightly) smarter than the av-er-age bear!

A bear broke into an SUV and took it for a joyride in Colorado — before crashing it, trashing the interior and pooping inside, according to new reports.

“It would have taken a human being hours to do what this bear did in a couple minutes,” said Ron Cornelius, who found the car after the animal mowed down his mailbox, told the Durango Herald.

The bear hijacked the Subaru from Cornelius' neighbor early Friday — likely releasing the parking brake and causing the vehicle to roll down the driveway and crash into a utility box and the mailbox, the paper reports.

The ruckus woke Cornelius and his wife and they dashed outside to find the totaled SUV and called 911, fearing humans were still inside.

The couple didn't see the bear, but they did find the steering wheel and radio ripped out, the back window broken — and tell-tale bear poop left behind, they told the paper.

###

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Casey Hammond
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride
Date: Wednesday, August 09, 2017 11:08:38 PM

Awesome. Just as we spotted our first grizz in Yellowstone.

On Aug 9, 2017, at 5:12 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

This makes the Secretary's advice ring even more true: Bring bear spray. The big can.

NY Post
Bear swipes car for joyride

He's (slightly) smarter than the av-er-age bear!

A bear broke into an SUV and took it for a joyride in Colorado — before crashing it, trashing the interior and pooping inside, according to new reports.

“It would have taken a human being hours to do what this bear did in a couple minutes,” said Ron Cornelius, who found the car after the animal mowed down his mailbox, told the Durango Herald.

The bear hijacked the Subaru from Cornelius' neighbor early Friday — likely releasing the parking brake and causing the vehicle to roll down the driveway and crash into a utility box and the mailbox, the paper reports.

The ruckus woke Cornelius and his wife and they dashed outside to find the totaled SUV and called 911, fearing humans were still inside.

The couple didn't see the bear, but they did find the steering wheel and radio ripped out, the back window broken — and tell-tale bear poop left behind, they told the paper.

###

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Swift, Heather
To: Casey Hammond
Subject: Re: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:48:12 AM haha nice! from a far i hope

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Wed, Aug 9, 2017 at 11:02 PM, Casey Hammond <casey_hammond@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Awesome. Just as we spotted our first grizz in Yellowstone.

On Aug 9, 2017, at 5:12 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

This makes the Secretary's advice ring even more true: Bring bear spray. The big can.

NY Post
Bear swipes car for joyride

He's (slightly) smarter than the av-er-age bear!

A bear broke into an SUV and took it for a joyride in Colorado — before crashing it, trashing the interior and pooping inside, according to new reports.

“It would have taken a human being hours to do what this bear did in a couple minutes,” said Ron Cornelius, who found the car after the animal mowed down his mailbox, told the Durango Herald.

The bear hijacked the Subaru from Cornelius' neighbor early Friday — likely releasing the parking brake and causing the vehicle to roll down the driveway and crash into a utility box and the mailbox, the paper reports.

The ruckus woke Cornelius and his wife and they dashed outside to find the totaled SUV and called 911, fearing humans were still inside.

The couple didn't see the bear, but they did find the steering wheel and radio ripped out, the back window broken — and tell-tale bear poop left behind, they told the paper.

###

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Katharine MacGregor
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:52:38 AM

Aghhh bears...

On Aug 9, 2017, at 7:12 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

This makes the Secretary's advice ring even more true: Bring bear spray. The big can.

NY Post
Bear swipes car for joyride

He's (slightly) smarter than the av-er-age bear!

A bear broke into an SUV and took it for a joyride in Colorado — before crashing it, trashing the interior and pooping inside, according to new reports.

“It would have taken a human being hours to do what this bear did in a couple minutes,” said Ron Cornelius, who found the car after the animal mowed down his mailbox, told the Durango Herald.

The bear hijacked the Subaru from Cornelius' neighbor early Friday — likely releasing the parking brake and causing the vehicle to roll down the driveway and crash into a utility box and the mailbox, the paper reports.

The ruckus woke Cornelius and his wife and they dashed outside to find the totaled SUV and called 911, fearing humans were still inside.

The couple didn't see the bear, but they did find the steering wheel and radio ripped out, the back window broken — and tell-tale bear poop left behind, they told the paper.

###

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Benedetto, Kathleen
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:10:05 AM

Excellent

On Wed, Aug 9, 2017 at 7:11 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

This makes the Secretary's advice ring even more true: Bring bear spray. The big can.

NY Post

Bear swipes car for joyride

He's (slightly) smarter than the av-er-age bear!

A bear broke into an SUV and took it for a joyride in Colorado — before crashing it, trashing the interior and pooping inside, according to new reports.

“It would have taken a human being hours to do what this bear did in a couple minutes,” said Ron Cornelius, who found the car after the animal mowed down his mailbox, told the Durango Herald.

The bear hijacked the Subaru from Cornelius' neighbor early Friday — likely releasing the parking brake and causing the vehicle to roll down the driveway and crash into a utility box and the mailbox, the paper reports.

The ruckus woke Cornelius and his wife and they dashed outside to find the totaled SUV and called 911, fearing humans were still inside.

The couple didn't see the bear, but they did find the steering wheel and radio ripped out, the back window broken — and tell-tale bear poop left behind, they told the paper.

###

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--

Kathleen Benedetto
Special Assistant to the Secretary
Department of the Interior
Bureau of Land Management

(202) 208-5934

From: Alan Mikkelsen
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride
Date: Wednesday, August 09, 2017 8:29:19 PM
Attachments: ATT00001.htm

You should always carry bear spray. Bears like seasoning on their dinner...

Alan Mikkelsen
Deputy and Acting Commissioner Bureau of Reclamation
Chair, SIWRO Working Group
MIB 7653
1849 C Street NW
Washington, DC. 20240

Phone: 202-513-0583
Cell.: 406-240-0703

----- Original Message -----

From: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Date: Wed, August 09, 2017 5:12 PM -0600
To:
Subject: Just for Fun: Bear swipes car for joyride

This makes the Secretary's advice ring even more true: Bring bear spray. The big can.

NY Post

Bear swipes car for joyride

He's (slightly) smarter than the av-er-age bear!

A bear broke into an SUV and took it for a joyride in Colorado — before crashing it, trashing the interior and pooping inside, according to new reports.

“It would have taken a human being hours to do what this bear did in a couple minutes,” said Ron Cornelius, who found the car after the animal mowed down his mailbox, told the Durango Herald.

The bear hijacked the Subaru from Cornelius' neighbor early Friday — likely releasing the parking brake and causing the vehicle to roll down the driveway and crash into a utility box and the mailbox, the paper reports.

The ruckus woke Cornelius and his wife and they dashed outside to find the totaled SUV and called 911, fearing humans were still inside.

The couple didn't see the bear, but they did find the steering wheel and radio ripped out, the back window broken — and tell-tale bear poop left behind, they told the paper.

###

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Kirsten Fedewa
To: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: Kick-off to Summer Cocktails & Tribute to Vets and Those Serving in Congress (RSVP details here)!
Date: Wednesday, June 21, 2017 12:35:45 PM

Ok. We haven't heard back so thought I would check with you.

Hopefully you can come as our guest either way.

Cheers,
Kirsten

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 21, 2017, at 12:27 PM, Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hey Kirsten, Please go through the scheduling office. I don't have anything to do with the calendar process.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 21, 2017, at 12:11 PM, Kirsten Fedewa <kfedewa@fedewaconsulting.com> wrote:

Any word re Secretary Zinke?

Having trouble viewing this email? Click here

R.S.V.P. for June 27th Cocktails & Tribute to Vets and Those Serving in Congress

Greetings: Service is a noble calling.

As we look ahead to Independence Day and summer's lazy days, we remember the contributions of our Founding Fathers who dreamed of liberty and fought so that we can be free. That torch has been carried by generations we honor: the hard-working civilians, politicians, and most notably, those who risked and lost their lives in military uniform. There is also a rare group who served in the U.S. Armed Forces and now serve in public office. Their contributions are beyond measure.

Invited guests will include members of the U.S. Armed Forces, all House and Senate members of Congress, senior military officers, senior Congressional staff, and others in the Washington, D.C. community. The reception begins at 6 p.m. Program at approx. 6:45 p.m. (Details below).

Other details:

Jennifer Griffin, National Security Correspondent, FOX News as Emcee (pending confirmation)

Hospitality to include selection of premium whiskies hosted by Beam Suntory Ambassador Mark Eber; California wines by Wine Institute. and American beer by Beer Institute.

A veteran (with his war dog) helped by American Humane will speak briefly on the life-saving power of military and service dogs.

Special performance by internationally-acclaimed tenor Anthony Kearns, who recently performed in the televised concert, America Salutes You, last fall. Check out his rendition of O'America.

Networking opportunity to meet editors/ reporters from The Washington Examiner, including Tom Rogan (FOX and CNN Contributor) and others.

Special guests include:

- Colonel James Hickey (USAF-retired) and senior adviser to the U.S. Senate Armed Services Committee. Colonel Hickey was a part of the elite group that captured Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein.
- The Honorable James Gilmore, former Governor of Virginia and chairman of the Congressionally-appointed Advisory Panel to Assess Domestic Response Capabilities for Terrorism Involving Weapons of Mass Destruction (informally called the Gilmore Commission).
- Christine "CJ" Johnson, co-manager of the State Department program serving veterans with higher education who seek to continue service in foreign affairs.
-

Other special guests TBA.

To attend and/or support this fantastic annual event, please RSVP to here. I hope to see you there!

This event was designed to comply with House and Senate rules.

With warmest regards,

Kirsten

President, Kirsten Fedewa & Associates, L.L.C.

Former House/ Senate Press Secretary

c. 202.365.6936

o. 703.684.3339

www.fedewaconsulting.com

A Special Invitation: Join us on June 27, 2017

Featured, left, a soldier with his war dog, sharing an incredible bond.

Join us on Tuesday, June 27, 2017 for a fabulous annual evening reception featuring a selection of premium whiskies, fabulous wines, American beers, light hors d'oeuvres, and very special guests -- TBA!

Members of the U.S. House and U.S. Senate are invited to attend as our honored guests, in addition to top military and government officials, and many others in the Washington, D.C. community.

See photos from recent events!

From the Photo Album:

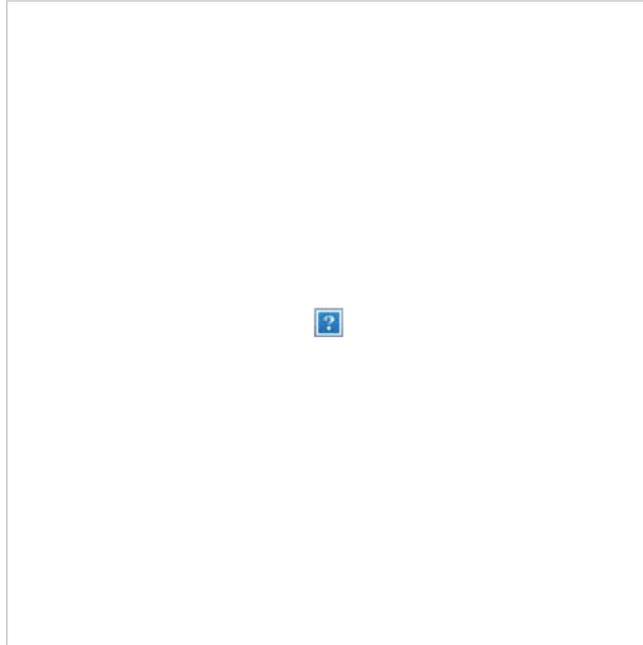

From the 2015 Tribute: General Steve Ritchie, the Air Force's only fighter pilot ace since Korea (far left), his wife Mariana, Kirsten Fedewa, and Kearns. Photos courtesy of Miguel Leonardo

Please email rsvpjune27vets@gmail.com for additional information!

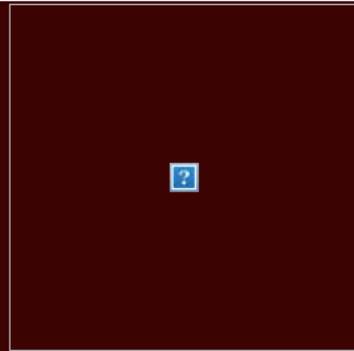

For sponsorship information, please contact me at kirsten@fedewaconsulting.com. Thank you!

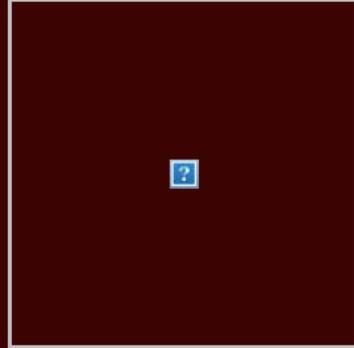

Anthony Kearns and CBS White House Senior Chief Correspondent Major Garrett as Master of Ceremonies at the 2015 Annual Tribute to Veterans.
Photo credit: Miguel Leonardo.

"The Man in the Arena"

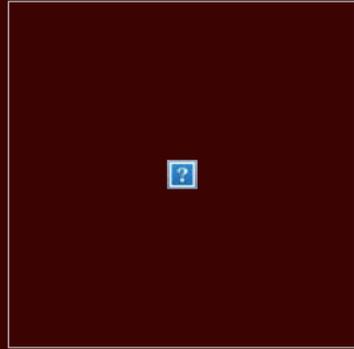

"It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs, who comes short again and again, because there is no effort without error and shortcoming; but who does actually strive to do the deeds; who knows great enthusiasms, the great devotions; who spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with

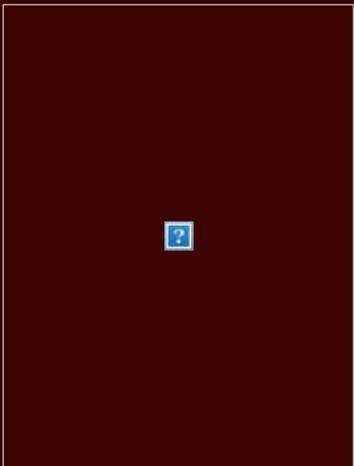

Anacostia Marine Color Guard

Congressman Charlie Rangel (NY)

Cong. Darrell Issa (CA) and U.S. Marines.

Cong. Ryan Zinke, (MT, left) and Rep. Mike Coffman (CO) featured those cold and timid souls who neither know victory nor defeat."

--President Theodore Roosevelt, April 23, 1910.

speakers.

Get Your Tickets Now for the June 27th Tribute!

The June 27th "Tribute to Veterans and Those Who Service in Congress" will feature a performance by renowned tenor Anthony Kearns.

Now living in the U.S., Anthony Kearns headlined a concert at the John F. Kennedy Center for Performing Arts as part of the "Ireland 100" celebrations. The festival coincided with the larger global celebration commemorating the 100th anniversary of the 1916 Easter Rising, which led to the independence of Ireland.

Recently, Mr. Kearns sang for Pope Francis I during his first historic visit to the United States. He also sang at the 2014 National Memorial Day Concert on PBS and during the Military Tribute at the 2016 Preakness Stakes. (Featured here before opening the National Memorial Day Parade in Wash, D.C.)

RSVP HERE

Designed by Kirsten Fedewa & Nancy Velasquez.

From: Swift, Heather
To: Nathan Adams
Subject: Re: load er up scottie
Date: Tuesday, May 30, 2017 4:44:15 PM

Small edits in red.

-
Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, May 30, 2017 at 4:28 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
photo attached.

Secretary Zinke Names Steve Wackowski as Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs

(ANCHORAGE) Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced that Steve Wackowski will serve as his Senior Advisor for Alaska Affairs based out of Anchorage. Zinke made the announcement in Anchorage as part of his current tour of Alaska.

"A lifelong Alaskan and Air Force Major, Steve is perfectly qualified to advise me on Alaskan issues," said Secretary Zinke. "Like 10 percent of Alaskans, Steve served in the military, and he then continued his service as a civilian working for elected officials. His broad range of experience will prove to be invaluable as the Department focuses on future energy opportunities in Alaska, the welfare of Alaska Natives, and the vast expanses of lands and waters under Interior's management."

"It's an incredible honor to be asked to serve on Secretary Zinke's staff. I look forward to working with our state, local, and First Alaskan partners to help unlock Alaska's potential," said Wackowski.

Wackowski grew up in Anchorage and spent his summers working in Ninilchik for his family's halibut and salmon sport-fishing business. After graduating from Bartlett High School in Anchorage, he played division I-AA football at Saint Mary's College, where he earned a degree in Computer Science and a commission in the Air Force Reserve from UC-Berkeley's Air Force ROTC program .

He is currently a Major in the Reserve and drills at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson at the 611th Air Operations Center. He has served on several active duty tours throughout his reserve career including contingency deployments to Afghanistan, Haiti, and Iraq.

After his last active duty tour Steve moved home to Alaska to work as the remote sensing operations manager for Fairweather Science, LLC in Anchorage. Steve's work detecting and mapping maternal polar bear dens for oil and gas companies on Alaska's North Slope was nationally recognized and helped earn him the Alaska Journal of Commerce's "Top 40 under 40" Award in 2015.

His public policy background includes serving as a Professional Staff member on the US Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee and as the late Senator Ted Stevens' last serving Press Secretary. He most recently managed U.S. Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski's reelection campaign.

Steve is an avid hunter and fisherman who says he continually gets out-fished by his wife Lindsay. They enjoy spending time in the Alaska outdoors with their two-year-old son, Lucas, and their red fox lab, Cali.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: Newell, Russell
To: Laura Rigas
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Lola Zinke tweet re: travel
Date: Thursday, October 12, 2017 10:35:18 AM

will do

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Thu, Oct 12, 2017 at 1:29 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Can you pls keep Brad and me in the loop on the response? Thx.

On Oct 11, 2017, at 2:45 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

.....

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

----- Forwarded message -----
From: Zack Colman <zcolman@eenews.net>
Date: Wed, Oct 11, 2017 at 2:09 PM
Subject: Lola Zinke tweet re: travel
To: "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Hi Heather,

Wanted to direct you to the responses in this tweet:
<https://twitter.com/LolaZinke/status/917711705374937089>

A Twitter user poses this question to Lola: So are you claiming that no taxpayer funds have ever been used to pay for your travel? DOI confirmed that you went along to Norway & AK

Lola then responds: please refer to Senate Select committee travel ethics rules

It appears this is an admission that Lola was on those flights but that she believes she followed all appropriate ethics rules (and, again, there may well have been clearance by ethics). Was Lola on those flights? Can you provide that clearance that ethics provided for her to be on those flights?

Since these responses are public, I'm operating with some considerable time pressure but I also want to get this right. So please let me know.

-Zack

--

Zack Colman

E&E News

White House correspondent

c: 248-563-9744

o: 202-446-0408

twitter: @zcolman

From: DuBray, Daniel
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Media Inquiry: Dan DuBray at BLM
Date: Thursday, October 19, 2017 11:28:10 AM

"It's not that big of a deal"? Ha! Tell that to my wife.

:~)

d

On Thu, Oct 19, 2017 at 11:10 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Definitely reach out to BLM for their statement but from the Department's perspective, "Dan is a westerner and a seasoned Interior professional, and we are thankful for him stepping into this temporary role at a time of transition. His previous experience at BLM will be a huge asset as the bureau continues to create revenue for state and local communities. There's no shortage of talent at Interior and we are confident that Dan, and Reclamation's acting chief of public affairs, Patti Aaron, will continue to do phenomenal jobs."

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Thu, Oct 19, 2017 at 10:11 AM, Scott Streater <ssstreater@eenews.net> wrote:

Hi Heather,

I see that Dan DuBray is now the new acting BLM communications director. If this is something that BLM communications can handle, just let me know. It's not that big of a deal. But can you or someone at BLM give me a quote this morning on this move? Dan comes from the Bureau of Reclamation, I see, and was a former Interior press secretary during the George W. Bush administration. Not sure if this is a temporary reassignment or a permanent move.

I need to file my story, as usual, by noon EST today.

Thanks much!

Scott Streater
E&E News reporter
ssstreater@eenews.net
719-264-0923 (office)
719-338-4677 (mobile)

E&E NEWS

122 C Street NW 7th Floor Washington, DC 20001

www.eenews.net | @EENewsUpdates

Energywire, Climatewire, Greenwire, E&E Daily, E&E News PM

--

Dan DuBray
Acting Assistant Director - Communications (WO-600)
Director's Office (Room 5645)
Bureau of Land Management
Department of the Interior
Washington, DC 20240
Office: (202) 208-5207
Twitter: @DuBray

From: Chris D'Angelo
To: Interior Press
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: MEDIA REQUEST – Sec. Zinke's trip to Channel Islands National Park
Date: Tuesday, January 02, 2018 3:50:24 PM

Bumping this email. On deadline.

Chris D'Angelo
Reporter, HuffPost
Washington, DC
m: 314-580-0191
Twitter: @c_m_dangelo
huffingtonpost.com/chris-dangelo/

On Fri, Dec 29, 2017 at 4:29 PM, Chris D'Angelo <chris.dangelo@huffpost.com> wrote:

Happy holidays Interior folks,

Hoping to speak with someone about Sec. Ryan Zinke's trip in April to Channel Islands National Park. Emails show that Zinke's guest list included, among others, his wife; his wife's aunt; Nita Vail, a political supporter; commercial fishermen Jason Robinson and Jeff Maassen; and Jon Jorgeson, an area yacht broker.

It is my understanding that one of the fishermen, Mr. Robinson, was fined in 2009 for illegally fishing in the reserve and that a judge tossed out the charges years later. The emails also show that several guests, including Robinson, Jorgeson and Maassen, were identified by Zinke as technical experts.

A few questions...

Exactly what technical expertise did these guests provide?

Which of Zinke's guests paid their own way and were issued a bill of collections? And who had their travel costs covered by government funds?

How much did Interior spend to bring along these technical experts?

Thanks and Happy New Year!

Chris D'Angelo
Reporter, HuffPost
Washington, DC
m: 314-580-0191
Twitter: @c_m_dangelo
huffingtonpost.com/chris-dangelo/

From: Ben Lefebvre
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: RE: More questions from Politico
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 11:31:56 AM

You can also try his email at njuliano@politico.com .

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, October 23, 2017 11:20 AM
To: Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com>
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: More questions from Politico

No he didn't. Can you please give me the contact information for your editor?

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 11:08 AM, Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com> wrote:

Official DOI business would be to see whether the DOI Chief of Staff has a false statement on his OGE form.

As for lying, that does not enter into this. As soon as she picked up the phone, I identified myself as a Politico reporter, told her I'm writing a story on Kimberly Bellissimo (story will be out in the next day or two) and have her on the record. Not sure where lying would enter into that.

Please let me know if you have anything on Hommel's OGE form and whether there's income coming in he didn't report.

Cheers,
Ben

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, October 23, 2017 11:01 AM
To: Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com>
Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: More questions from Politico

Ben can you please explain what the official Department of the Interior business is here? I understand you call and lied to the wife of our Chief of Staff to try and get personal information.

-
Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 10:51 AM, Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com> wrote:

Hi Heather, hope your weekend went well. A few questions for you. We're looking to run something this week, so hope to get your input in the next few days:

Chief of Staff Scott Hommel indicated on his OGE form 278 that his wife makes no income over $1,000 a year, correct?

How much money does Lucretia Hommel make, if any, from doing interior design work for Kimberly Bellissimo's homes in New Jersey and downtown Washington D.C.? Is it a non-profit, or does she make more than $1,000 a year from this business?

How much money does Lucretia Hommel make a year overall doing interior design for her business, Snobz? How much does she make selling furniture from her Web site, snobz.co? Is there a way to break that down to see how much money she makes, if any, selling Bellissimo's furniture on the Web site?

Did anyone in Interior's ethics office discuss with Hommel how to fill out OGE form 278?

Thank you,

Ben Lefebvre

Oil & gas policy reporter, POLITICOPro

Desk: 703-647-8775

Mobile/WhatsApp: 313-473-0537

Proton: bjlefebvre@protonmail.com

Twitter: @bjlefebvre

From: Newell, Russell
To: Ben Lefebvre
Cc: Swift, Heather; interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: More questions from Politico
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 5:46:12 PM

always glad to help answer questions about actual issues and not employee's wives' hobbies.

Russell Newell
Deputy Director of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 208-6232
@Interior

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 12:47 PM, Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com> wrote:

Well, I asked about GOMESA a few minutes ago. Feel free to field that one if you need something to do.

From: Russell Newell [mailto:russell_newell@ios.doi.gov]
Sent: Monday, October 23, 2017 12:44 PM
To: Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Cc: Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com>; interior_press@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Re: More questions from Politico

Ben, I'm still wondering if you plan to ever cover oil and gas policy

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 23, 2017, at 11:20 AM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

No he didn't. Can you please give me the contact information for your editor?

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 11:08 AM, Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com> wrote:

Official DOI business would be to see whether the DOI Chief of Staff has a false statement on his OGE form.

As for lying, that does not enter into this. As soon as she picked up the phone, I identified myself as a Politico reporter, told her I'm writing a story on Kimberly Bellissimo (story will be out in the next day ortwo) and have her on the record. Not sure where lying would enter into that.

Please let me know if you have anything on Hommel's OGE form and whether there's income coming in he didn't report.

Cheers,

Ben

From: Swift, Heather [mailto:heather_swift@ios.doi.gov]

Sent: Monday, October 23, 2017 11:01 AM

To: Ben Lefebvre <blefebvre@politico.com>

Cc: interior_press@ios.doi.gov

Subject: Re: More questions from Politico

Ben can you please explain what the official Department of the Interior business is here? I understand you call and lied to the wife of our Chief of Staff to try and get personal information.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Mon, Oct 23, 2017 at 10:51 AM, Ben Lefebvre

<blefebvre@politico.com> wrote:

Hi Heather, hope your weekend went well. A few questions for you. We're looking to run something this week, so hope to get your input in the next few days:

Chief of Staff Scott Hommel indicated on his OGE form 278 that his wife makes no income over $1,000 a year, correct?

How much money does Lucretia Hommel make, if any, from doing interior design work for Kimberly Bellissimo's homes in New Jersey and downtown Washington D.C.? Is it a non-profit, or does she make more than $1,000 a year from this business?

How much money does Lucretia Hommel make a year overall doing interior design for her business, Snobz? How much does she make selling furniture from her Web site, snobz.co? Is there a way to break that down to see how much money she makes, if any, selling Bellissimo's furniture on the Web site?

Did anyone in Interior's ethics office discuss with Hommel how to fill out OGE form 278?

Thank you,

Ben Lefebvre

Oil & gas policy reporter, POLITICOPro

Desk: 703-647-8775

Mobile/WhatsApp: 313-473-0537

Proton: bjlefevre@protonmail.com

Twitter: @bjlefevre

From: Critchfield, Marshall
To: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: Need bio info
Date: Thursday, May 25, 2017 2:27:21 PM

This is a variation of what I sent the sportfish guys for the round-table last week... Let me know if its enough to work with.

Marshall Critchfield is currently serving as an advisor to the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks at the Department of the Interior. Prior to joining the administration, Mr. Critchfield served in numerous roles for the Trump/Pence campaign in the battleground states of Iowa, Florida, and Pennsylvania.

Marshall comes to Interior with nearly twenty years of experience in project management and public affairs and is a lifelong sportsman - growing up on the edge of the game-rich Florida Everglades. He has worked with many non-profits over the years to conserve habitat and educate young people about the value of conservation and the thrill of the chase.

Mr. Critchfield holds a bachelor's degree from Florida Atlantic University in History and an MBA from Palm Beach Atlantic University. He and his wife Stephanie currently reside in Arlington, VA with their two daughters.

On Thu, May 25, 2017 at 2:09 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

I'm preparing a press release announcing new hires and you're included. Please send me 1-3 sentences highlighting your career and education.

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

--

Marshall Critchfield

Office of the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks
Office (202) 208-5996
Mobile (202) 706-4998
marshall_critchfield@ios.doi.gov

From: Boulton, Caroline
To: Magallanes, Downey
Cc: Swift, Heather; Timothy Williams
Subject: Re: News Alert: Trump Can Save Atlantic Fishing Industry by Reversing Obama Order
Date: Tuesday, June 06, 2017 3:20:15 PM

Lola is flying in on Friday--we can check, but highly doubt RZ will want to stay Saturday.

On Tue, Jun 6, 2017 at 3:12 PM, Magallanes, Downey <downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

If he is good with a Saturday and you all decide after chatting he should meet with him I am all for it.

On Tue, Jun 6, 2017 at 3:11 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Downey, maybe he can fly up to Boston and take Z fishing on Saturday to talk about the monument.

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

On Tue, Jun 6, 2017 at 3:03 PM, Magallanes, Downey <downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

you and I- on the same page!! I just emailed Tim he said he would track him down

On Tue, Jun 6, 2017 at 2:44 PM, Swift, Heather <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Downey, should we see if the author of this would like to meet with Zinke? He could be a good ally for a number of sportsmen/angler issues.

His bio is below.

Tred Barta (born March 28, 1952) is an American hunter, fisherman, and outdoorsman, who hosts The Best and Worst of Tred Barta on the Versus Channel. As a fisherman, Barta has amassed several world records, some still current. Barta experienced spinal stroke and cancer in 2009, leaving him paralyzed from the armpits down. However, Barta continues to hunt and fish as he did before the accident. Overcoming limitations and fears is part of "The Barta Way" which is Tred's inspiring message to audiences to take on every challenge despite the obstacles. As Tred often says, "I can do it, you can do it."

-

Heather Swift

Department of the Interior

@DOIPressSec

Heather_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Hinson, Alex <alex_hinson@ios.doi.gov>

Date: Tue, Jun 6, 2017 at 2:39 PM

Subject: News Alert: Trump Can Save Atlantic Fishing Industry by Reversing Obama Order

To:

Trump Can Save Atlantic Fishing Industry by Reversing Obama Order

June 6, 2017

First and foremost, I love my country. I voted for President Trump and I believe he is doing an excellent job for this great nation. I salute him for getting out of the mess known as the Paris Environmental Accord, but when it comes to saltwater issues greatly effecting the American public, President Trump gets an "F" for his missed opportunities.

I have written before in Newsmax and other outlets, but to refresh your memory, Obama used a 1916 loophole called the Antiquities Act. He roped off an area the size of Connecticut to abolish commercial fishing. He will allow recreational fishing, but it's completely up to the whim of the commerce department. The Aquatic National Monument undermines the regional economy and will deprive countless families of their livelihood.

Now listen up everyone. This 5,000 square mile area is rich in lobster, crab, squid, swordfish, tuna, and other high-demand seafood. The Hudson Canyon, right off New York City, is still in nomination for further sanctuary inventory and is in initiation of the nomination process. If Trump does not move to suppress, cancel, or obliterate the current national park, commercial and recreational fishermen will see a devastation of their businesses and their sport.

Soon, new members will be nominated for the Regional Fisheries Management Advisory Council which presently is riddled with left-wing anti-fishing council members. Trump must intervene. Earl Comstock of the Commerce Department met with the Recreational Fishing Alliance (RFA) and must do his job and get this message to President Trump!

Right now, the black sea bass population in New England is up 300 percent after a 6-year hiatus and rebuilding of their stock. At the same time, recreational fishermen are under strict regulations and may only catch five fish per day. Some of the best fishing is in November and December when tackle shops and marinas are barely hanging on. If a charter goes 15 miles offshore and drops anchor, in less than 5 minutes he will catch his 5 fish. The limit is grossly light because it's based on old science. Summer flounder is another example, because extremely restrictive, bad legislation affects the charter industry. It's based on 6-year-old data! The same problem exists with red snapper in the Gulf.

President Trump, you are my president. I give you an "A+" for protecting our country, expanding our economy, and being a leader of the free world, but you must address the flaws in the Magnuson-Steven's Act. You must strike down the Aquatic National Monuments off the New England coast which is seriously crippling the American fishing industry.

President Trump, I want to see you carry the vote of the fishermen in the 2020 elections. Invite me to the White House, give me 10 minutes of your time and I assure you, you will understand how important this is to the livelihood of the American fisherman. The recreational and commercial fishing industry beg you to do something. It is an unequivocal crime that Earl Comstock of the Commerce Department and Ryan Zinke of the Department of the Interior have not conveyed to President Trump the pleas, the letters, and phone calls not only from myself, but millions of fishermen.

President Trump, help us, we are the American people. You promised to "Make America Great Again." Why have you not struck down the executive order of Obama for the Aquatic National Monuments? The time for reversing this ridiculous executive order is now!

###

--
Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior
C: 202-641-5381

--
Downey Magallanes
Acting Deputy Chief of Staff
Senior Advisor and Counselor
downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov
202-501-0654 (desk)
202-706-9199 (cell)

--
Downey Magallanes
Acting Deputy Chief of Staff
Senior Advisor and Counselor
downey_magallanes@ios.doi.gov
202-501-0654 (desk)
202-706-9199 (cell)

--
Caroline Boulton
Department of the Interior
Scheduling & Advance
Caroline_Boulton@ios.doi.gov | Scheduling@ios.doi.gov

From: Paul Ross
To: Rigas, Laura
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: NPS Statement/Release on two Florida based superintendents
Date: Monday, May 22, 2017 7:49:54 PM

Got it.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 22, 2017, at 7:48 PM, Rigas, Laura <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Paul -- our A/S, Virginia, was not aware of this. Please ask them to HOLD until we can clear through her. Once we get through the budget, let's talk about process.
Thanks!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Mon, May 22, 2017 at 4:35 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:
Laura-

NPS has a release regarding a new superintendent at De Soto National Memorial. They also have an if-asked statement regarding the superintendent of Canaveral National Seashore returning to work after a sexual harassment investigation that led to the dismissal of the park's chief ranger. Both are below for your review.

The superintendent at Canaveral goes back to work sometime this week. De Soto want to put out their announcement tomorrow but NPS is asking them to wait until Wednesday.

-Paul

IF-ASKED

“The National Park Service has taken final personnel action in the investigation into sexual harassment at Canaveral National Seashore. NPS maintains a zero-tolerance policy with regard to discrimination and harassment and remains firmly committed to holding employees accountable for misconduct. We are working closely with Canaveral National Seashore staff to help them heal and move forward.”

For background, not for direct attribution:

As of May 12, Edwin Correa is no longer employed with the National Park Service. The National Park Service made a final decision concerning his employment with the agency and Mr. Correa has appeal rights to challenge the agency's decision.

Myrna Palfrey is concluding her temporary assignment with the regional partnerships office and will return as park superintendent, effective May 28. The superintendent took appropriate action to report charges of sexual harassment at the park.

Nathan Souder Selected as New Superintendent of De Soto National Memorial

ATLANTA – Today, National Park Service (NPS) Southeast Regional Director Stan Austin announced that Nathan Souder has been selected as the new superintendent of De Soto National Memorial in Bradenton, FL. Souder has been the acting superintendent there since March and officially begins his new role May 28, 2017.

“Nathan’s deep commitment to public service and civic engagement makes him a great fit for the job,” Austin said. “He brings with him broad experience and sound management skills. Nathan has dynamic employees he will lead in advancing the mission of De Soto National Memorial.”

Souder began his NPS career as a seasonal backcountry ranger in 2001 at Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado. His 16-year tenure with the agency has included assignments with increasing responsibility in legislative and congressional affairs, public affairs, budget, construction project management, and volunteer and youth programs. For the last two years, Nathan served as one of ten Urban Fellows across the country charged with increasing relevancy and collaboration for the National Park Service. As the Urban Fellow for Jacksonville, Florida, he split his time between working at Timucuan Ecological and Historic Preserve and downtown Jacksonville in City Hall.

“I am truly honored to be trusted with the responsibility of caring for this amazing memorial,” Souder said. “The park’s staff, volunteers and partners form an outstanding team that I am excited to continue working with. Together we will continue to engage with the local community and introduce new audiences to this hidden treasure.”

Souder holds a Bachelor of Science degree in public management from Indiana University's School of Public and Environmental Affairs. He and his wife Sarah have two children, Elias, 6, and Ethan, 4, who are already fond of Bradenton's people, beaches and clear water.

De Soto National Memorial commemorates the landing of Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto in Florida in 1539 and the first extensive organized exploration by Europeans of what is now the southern United States. The memorial, established in 1948, received nearly 233,000 visitors in 2016 who spent an estimated \$13.6 million in local gateway regions while visiting De Soto National Memorial. These expenditures supported 210 jobs and $19.1 million in total economic output in local economies surrounding the park.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

From: Rigas, Laura
To: James Cason; Daniel Jorjani
Cc: Heather Swift
Subject: Re: NPS Statement/Release on two Florida based superintendents
Date: Wednesday, May 24, 2017 4:55:47 PM

Hi all -- just checking in. Jim, did this go through the proper personnel process? Thanks!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Tue, May 23, 2017 at 9:42 AM, Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi-- per our discussion. Thx.

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

Begin forwarded message:

From: Virginia Johnson <virginia_johnson@ios.doi.gov>
Date: May 23, 2017 at 9:36:50 AM EDT
To: "Rigas, Laura" <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>
Cc: Heather Swift <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: Re: NPS Statement/Release on two Florida based superintendents

Good morning. We're heading out and away from comms soon. These look fine. Thanks again for flagging for me!

Virginia

On May 22, 2017, at 5:49 PM, Rigas, Laura <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Absolutely, will do. Many thanks and safe travels!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Mon, May 22, 2017 at 7:46 PM, Virginia Johnson

<virginia_johnson@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi, Laura.

Thanks for flagging this.

I had not seen. I'm at Yellowstone with sketchy service but traveling with Mike Reynolds. Will discuss with him and get back to you soonest but if not too late please hold until I can learn more.

Thanks.

Virginia

On May 22, 2017, at 3:35 PM, Rigas, Laura <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Hi Virginia -- are you aware of this? ok with you?
Thanks!

----- Forwarded message -----

From: Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov>
Date: Mon, May 22, 2017 at 4:35 PM
Subject: NPS Statement/Release on two Florida based superintendents
To: Laura Rigas <laura_rigas@ios.doi.gov>, "Swift, Heather" <heather_swift@ios.doi.gov>

Laura-

NPS has a release regarding a new superintendent at De Soto National Memorial. They also have an if-asked statement regarding the superintendent of Canaveral National Seashore returning to work after a sexual harassment investigation that led to the dismissal of the park's chief ranger. Both are below for your review.

The superintendent at Canaveral goes back to work sometime this week. De Soto want to put out their announcement tomorrow but NPS is asking them to wait until Wednesday.

-Paul

IF-ASKED

“The National Park Service has taken final personnel action in the investigation into sexual harassment at Canaveral National Seashore. NPS maintains a zero-tolerance policy with regard to discrimination and harassment and remains firmly committed to holding employees accountable for misconduct. We are working closely with Canaveral National Seashore staff to help them heal and move forward.”

*For background, not for direct attribution:
As of May 12, Edwin Correa is no longer employed with the National Park Service. The National Park Service made a final decision concerning his employment with the agency and Mr. Correa has appeal rights to challenge the agency’s decision. Myrna Palfrey is concluding her temporary assignment with the regional partnerships office and will return as park superintendent, effective May 28. The superintendent took appropriate action to report charges of sexual harassment at the park.*

Nathan Souder Selected as New Superintendent of De Soto National Memorial

ATLANTA – Today, National Park Service (NPS) Southeast Regional Director Stan Austin announced that Nathan Souder has been selected as the new superintendent of De Soto National Memorial in Bradenton, FL. Souder has been the acting superintendent there since March and officially begins his new role May 28, 2017.

“Nathan’s deep commitment to public service and civic engagement makes him a great fit for the job,” Austin said. “He brings with him broad experience and sound management skills. Nathan has dynamic employees he will lead in advancing the mission of De Soto National Memorial.”

Souder began his NPS career as a seasonal backcountry ranger in 2001 at Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado. His 16-year tenure with the agency has included assignments with increasing responsibility in legislative and congressional affairs, public affairs, budget, construction project management, and volunteer and youth programs. For the last two years, Nathan served as one of ten Urban Fellows across the country charged with increasing relevancy and collaboration for the National Park Service. As the Urban Fellow for Jacksonville, Florida, he split his time between working at Timucuan Ecological and Historic Preserve and downtown Jacksonville in City Hall.

“I am truly honored to be trusted with the responsibility of caring for this amazing memorial,” Souder said. “The park’s staff, volunteers and partners form an outstanding team that I am excited to continue working with. Together we will continue to engage with the local community and introduce new audiences to this hidden treasure.”

Souder holds a Bachelor of Science degree in public management from Indiana University’s School of Public and Environmental Affairs. He and his wife Sarah have two children, Elias, 6, and Ethan, 4, who are already fond of Bradenton’s people, beaches and clear water.

De Soto National Memorial commemorates the landing of Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto in Florida in 1539 and the first extensive organized exploration by Europeans of what is now the southern United States. The memorial, established in 1948, received nearly 233,000 visitors in 2016 who spent an estimated \$13.6 million in local gateway regions while visiting De Soto National Memorial. These expenditures supported 210 jobs and $19.1 million in total economic output in local economies surrounding the park.

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior

Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

From: Rigas, Laura
To: Ross, Paul
Cc: Swift, Heather
Subject: Re: NPS Statement/Release on two Florida based superintendents
Date: Wednesday, May 24, 2017 4:01:52 PM

Nope, pls hold. Thanks!

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

On Wed, May 24, 2017 at 2:15 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

Circling back here to see if this has received clearance yet? Thanks!

Paul R. Ross
Senior Public Affairs Specialist
Office of Communications
U.S. Department of the Interior
Office: (202) 501-4633 | Cell: (202) 507-1689

On Mon, May 22, 2017 at 4:35 PM, Ross, Paul <paul_ross@ios.doi.gov> wrote:

Laura-

NPS has a release regarding a new superintendent at De Soto National Memorial. They also have an if-asked statement regarding the superintendent of Canaveral National Seashore returning to work after a sexual harassment investigation that led to the dismissal of the park's chief ranger. Both are below for your review.

The superintendent at Canaveral goes back to work sometime this week. De Soto want to put out their announcement tomorrow but NPS is asking them to wait until Wednesday.

-Paul

IF-ASKED

“The National Park Service has taken final personnel action in the investigation into sexual harassment at Canaveral National Seashore. NPS maintains a zero-tolerance policy with regard to discrimination and harassment and remains firmly committed to holding employees accountable for misconduct. We are working closely with Canaveral National Seashore staff to help them heal and move forward.”

For background, not for direct attribution:

As of May 12, Edwin Correa is no longer employed with the National Park Service. The National Park Service made a final decision concerning his employment with the agency and Mr. Correa has appeal rights to challenge the agency's decision. Myrna Palfrey is concluding her temporary assignment with the regional partnerships office and will return as park superintendent, effective May 28. The superintendent took appropriate action to report charges of sexual harassment at the park.

Nathan Souder Selected as New Superintendent of De Soto National Memorial

ATLANTA – Today, National Park Service (NPS) Southeast Regional Director Stan Austin announced that Nathan Souder has been selected as the new superintendent of De Soto National Memorial in Bradenton, FL. Souder has been the acting superintendent there since March and officially begins his new role May 28, 2017.

“Nathan’s deep commitment to public service and civic engagement makes him a great fit for the job,” Austin said. “He brings with him broad experience and sound management skills. Nathan has dynamic employees he will lead in advancing the mission of De Soto National Memorial.”

Souder began his NPS career as a seasonal backcountry ranger in 2001 at Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado. His 16-year tenure with the agency has included assignments with increasing responsibility in legislative and congressional affairs, public affairs, budget, construction project management, and volunteer and youth programs. For the last two years, Nathan served as one of ten Urban Fellows across the country charged with increasing relevancy and collaboration for the National Park Service. As the Urban Fellow for Jacksonville, Florida, he split his time between working at Timucuan Ecological and Historic Preserve and downtown Jacksonville in City Hall.

“I am truly honored to be trusted with the responsibility of caring for this amazing memorial,” Souder said. “The park’s staff, volunteers and partners form an outstanding team that I am excited to continue working with. Together we will continue to engage with the local community and introduce new audiences to this hidden treasure.”

