

From: Lori Mashburn
To: Natalie Davis
Subject: Fwd: Zinke's travels: Ski resort and Alaskan steakhouse
Date: Wednesday, October 11, 2017 1:48:14 AM

---

May want to pull some stuff from here.

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: POLITICO Pro <politicoemail@politico.com>
Date: October 10, 2017 at 6:32:22 PM EDT
To: <lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov>
Subject: Zinke's travels: Ski resort and Alaskan steakhouse
Reply-To: POLITICO subscriptions <reply-fe921371756c067576-1003300\_HTML-823306431-1376319-0@politicoemail.com>

Zinke's travels: Ski resort and Alaskan steakhouse

By Esther Whieldon and Ben Lefebvre

10/10/2017 06:29 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has attended at least two additional political fundraisers while traveling for official business, including a weekend ski getaway less than three weeks after he was sworn in where donors paid up to $3,000 to attend, according to sources and documents reviewed by POLITICO.

Zinke's previously undisclosed attendance at the events adds to scrutiny he is facing over his habit of mixing political activities with official business when traveling outside of Washington, D.C., and to questions over travel expenses incurred by members of President Donald Trump's Cabinet. In addition to the fundraisers, Zinke has held at least a half-dozen other events with big donors or influential conservative organizations while on official trips.

Zinke, a former Montana congressman who became secretary March 1, started his fundraising appearances even before attending a March 30 Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser in St. Croix that POLITICO reported last week, at which donors paid up to $5,000 per couple for a photo with him. The Justice Department's Office of Special Counsel, which is investigating Zinke's use of travel and political activities in office, has been asked by a watchdog group to look into his appearance there.

In the first of the newly disclosed appearances, Zinke attended a mid-March fundraiser at a ski resort in Big Sky, Mont., organized by committees affiliated with Republican Sen. Steve Daines, according to two attendees who saw him there. And in May, Zinke briefly stopped by a fundraiser for GOP Rep. Don Young at a steakhouse in Anchorage, Alaska, a spokesman for Young's campaign told POLITICO.

All three fundraisers occurred on trips that Zinke took for official Interior Department business. The Hatch Act and other federal laws allow Cabinet secretaries to participate in partisan political activities only if they do so on their own time and do not use any governmental resources. Federal Election Commission records for the campaign committees do not list any reimbursement payments to Interior for the events.

"Both law and common sense tell us that taxpayer resources are supposed to be used when you're doing the taxpayers' business [but] are not supposed to be used to help candidates get elected," said Brendan Fischer of the nonprofit watchdog organization Campaign Legal Center.

An Interior Department spokeswoman did not respond to specific questions about Zinke's attendance at the events nor whether the campaigns reimbursed Interior for any of his travel expenses, but she said ethics officials sign off on the secretary's trips and all of them comply with the law.

"The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in a statement.

Other guests attending the Montana fundraiser included Sens. John Hoeven (R-N.D.) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), according to an invitation to the March 17-19 event posted by a local political blog earlier that month. Donors were asked to contribute $3,000 if they were attending on behalf of a political action committee or $1,500 for an individual. Another invitation for events that weekend obtained by POLITICO sought donations as low as $500 to attend two dinners for Daines.

Hoeven hosted his own reception Friday night before the Daines dinner and a lunch Saturday, according to a campaign invitation obtained by POLITICO, which also informed guests that they could purchase "discounted ski lift tickets" at the resort.

Zinke was not named on the invitations, but his official schedule lists him as attending a "welcoming reception" for Daines on Friday night, spending "personal time with Senator Murkowski" at Big Sky Resort on Saturday and attending a "reception & dinner" for Daines that evening.

Two sources who attended the Daines fundraiser recalled seeing Zinke there. One of the sources, a lobbyist, said Zinke attended the Friday night social and the breakfast buffet the next day. The lobbyist said that when Daines introduced Zinke on Friday night, the Montana senator mentioned that Zinke was the state's first Cabinet secretary.

The Hatch Act bars Zinke from taking part in political events while acting in his official role as Interior secretary, which includes being identified by his title in invitations. But Richard Painter, a University of Minnesota professor and former White House chief ethics lawyer under President George W. Bush, said Daines referring to Zinke's Cabinet position doesn't appear to violate the law.

Zinke "should take reasonable steps to make sure people aren't using his official title" and not use the title himself at political events, Painter said. "But I don't know that he has an obligation to jump in and tell the senator he can't do that."

The secretary spent most of the day that Friday touring Yellowstone National Park, which the Interior Department manages through the National Park Service. He did not have any other official events listed on his schedule for Saturday and flew back to Washington, D.C., on Sunday.

A report posted by Interior on Zinke's March travel expenses shows that he claimed 75 percent of his per diem that Friday and did not claim any lodging or reimbursements over that weekend, which he took as personal days off. He did fly home on official taxpayer-funded travel, however.

The Young fundraiser occurred May 31, when Zinke was in Anchorage for a speech to the Alaska Oil and Gas Association's annual conference, where he signed a secretarial order for an updated assessment of how much oil exists in part of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. The invitation to the reception, a copy of which was obtained by political blog Must Read Alaska and shared with POLITICO, does not list Zinke as a special guest, nor does it say how much donors had to contribute to attend.

FEC records for the Alaskans for Don Young campaign committee show it received $9,800 in campaign contributions from individuals and political action committees on that day.

Young's campaign spokesman, Matt Shuckerow, said in an email that Zinke made "only very brief remarks" at the event, and that the campaign did not confirm his attendance in advance and did not require guests to pay to attend. "Not only did the campaign seek out the guidance of the Interior Department's ethics personnel prior to the event, it took concerted efforts to follow their strict guidance," Shuckerow said. He did not say whether the campaign reimbursed the Interior Department for any costs associated with Zinke's trip.

Zinke's calendar for that day includes a brief stop at Sullivan's Steakhouse in Anchorage, the same venue listed on the invitation, for a "Rep. Don Young Reception." Later that night, Zinke went to dinner with representatives of sportsmen's groups, according to his schedule.

The Anchorage stop came in the middle of a weeklong trip that included the use of a military plane to fly from Washington, D.C., to Norway, Greenland and then Alaska. Interior paid for Zinke and three Interior staff members to take the flight. Zinke's wife, Lola, also accompanied him on the trip but reimbursed the government for the cost of her seat, Interior has said.

In both of the newly disclosed appearances, Zinke did not pose for photos with high-dollar donors, as had been the case with the Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser. POLITICO's report on Zinke's appearance in that photo line led Walter Shaub, a former director of the U.S. Office of Government Ethics who is now with the Campaign Legal Center, to ask the Office of Special Counsel to open a Hatch Act investigation. The OSC typically opens investigations in response to complaints it receives, but a spokesman declined to comment on the status of Shaub's request.

Still, some watchdogs question whether Zinke is focused enough on his day job given how much attention he has paid to politics.

"There's always the risk that a high-level government official spending more time involved in political events may not be attending to their official duties," said Nick Schwellenbach, director of investigations at Project On Government Oversight.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/agriculture/story/2017/10/zinkes-travels-ski-resort-and-alaskan-steakhouse-163110>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Conservation; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: Domenech, Douglas
To: Mashburn, Lori; Mashburn, John K. EOP/WHO; Flynn, Matthew
Subject: FYI Senate Hearing Noticed last night
Date: Friday, July 14, 2017 8:44:33 AM

---

HEARING ANNOUNCEMENT

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

This notice is to advise you of a hearing before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. The hearing will be held on Thursday, July 20, 2017, at 10:00 a.m. in Room 366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, D.C.

The purpose of the hearing is to consider the nominations of:

- Ms. Brenda Burman, of Arizona, to be Commissioner of Reclamation, Department of the Interior;
- Ms. Susan Combs, of Texas, to be an Assistant Secretary of the Interior (Policy, Management and Budget);
- Mr. Paul Dabbar, of New York, to be Under Secretary for Science, Department of Energy;
- Mr. Douglas W. Domenech, of Virginia, to an Assistant Secretary of the Interior (Insular Affairs);
- Mr. David Jonas, of Pennsylvania, to be General Counsel, Department of Energy; and
- Mr. Mark Wesley Menezes, of Virginia, to be Under Secretary, Department of Energy.

The hearing will be webcast live on the committee's website, and an archived video will be available shortly after the hearing is complete. Witness testimony will be available on the website at the start of the hearing.

For further information, please contact Patrick McCormick with Chairman Murkowski's office or Sam Fowler with Ranking Member Cantwell's office at (202) 224-4971.

Sincerely,

Darla Ripchensky, PMP

Chief Clerk

U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources

304 Dirksen Senate Office Building

Washington, DC 20510

202.224.3607

Doug Domenech
Senior Advisor
US Department of the Interior

NOTE: Every email I send or receive is subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act.

From: POLITICO Pro
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: GAO to probe Zinke call to Murkowski
Date: Friday, September 08, 2017 5:17:06 PM

---

By Alex Guillén

09/08/2017 05:12 PM EDT

The Government Accountability Office will look into Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's calls to Alaska Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan over Obamacare repeal, according to letters sent today.

Two key House Democrats, Reps. Frank Pallone and Raul Grijalva, asked GAO to provide a legal opinion on the July calls, during which Zinke reportedly told Murkowski that her vote against moving forward with repeal efforts could negatively impact Alaskan energy goals in the Trump administration.

Interior's inspector general already concluded its own inquiry into the matter without making any findings after both senators declined to discuss the calls with investigators.

WHAT'S NEXT: GAO's letter does not specify how long the inquiry might take.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/09/gao-to-probe-zinke-call-to-murkowski-092685>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: GOP leaders: PAYGO cuts 'will not happen'
Date: Friday, December 01, 2017 4:45:27 PM

---

By Sarah Ferris

12/01/2017 04:32 PM EDT

Republican leaders are seeking to downplay the possibility that the GOP tax bill would trigger massive spending cuts under an obscure Senate rule known as PAYGO.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and House Speaker Paul Ryan released a joint statement this afternoon assuring that Congress wouldn't actually allow the across-the-board cuts to take place.

"This will not happen," McConnell and Ryan wrote, arguing that lawmakers have "readily available methods to waive this law, which has never been enforced since its enactment."

If the tax bill, H.R. 1 \(115\), is signed into law, both chambers would need to agree to waive the decades-old Pay-As-You-Go rule to prevent the triggering of $150 billion per year in cuts to a slew of federal programs, including Medicare and student loans.

GOP leaders have long been confident that they can strike a quick deal with Democrats to waive the federally mandated slashing.

"There is no reason to believe that Congress would not act again to prevent a sequester, and we will work to ensure these spending cuts are prevented," McConnell and Ryan wrote today.

But at least eight Democrats would need to support that vote in the Senate. And minority party lawmakers aren't making any promises they'll agree to bail out Republicans amid the frantic push to clear the tax bill.

A PAYGO waiver is likely to be included in a government funding bill this month, according to Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), who said she received a personal assurance from McConnell this week that the cuts would be stifled.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/agriculture/whiteboard/2017/12/gop-leaders-paygo-cuts-will-not-happen-183472>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Conservation. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: GOP tweaks Arctic drilling language to bump up revenue
Date: Thursday, November 30, 2017 11:54:02 AM

---

By Sarah Ferris

11/30/2017 11:51 AM EDT

Senate Republicans have reworked language on Arctic drilling in their tax bill to further boost revenue, hoping to resolve a procedural hiccup before the impending passage vote.

Senate Budget Committee leaders have tweaked provisions that would authorize drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, altering the language in a way they believe will comply with so-called Byrd rule requirements, a GOP committee aide confirmed today.

The budget panel had expected to raise $1 billion over a decade by opening up ANWR for drilling. But a report from the CBO, shared internally with budget staffers, estimated it would fall short by about $366 million, according to a Senate Democratic aide.

The GOP's revised drilling language would propose selling more oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, potentially producing hundreds of millions of dollars in additional revenue, the aide said.

If approved by the Senate parliamentarian today, the new language will be formally added before the high-stakes Senate floor vote on the tax plan, H.R. 1 \(115\).

The fate of the provision — championed by swing vote Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) — was called into question Wednesday after a warning from the parliamentarian.

Each part of the GOP's tax plan must comply with a complex set of budget reconciliation rules that allow the legislation to avoid a Democratic filibuster.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/11/gop-tweaks-arctic-drilling-language-to-bump-up-revenue-172653>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Conservation. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; interior\_news@updates.interior.gov
Subject: Gulf of Mexico Region-Wide Oil and Gas Lease Sale Yields $121 Million in High Bids on 508,096 Acres
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:48:18 PM

---

news release

Date: August 16, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov
John Filostrat (BOEM) 504-731-7815
john.filostrat@boem.gov

Gulf of Mexico Region-Wide Oil and Gas Lease Sale Yields $121 Million in High Bids on 508,096 Acres

Underscores Secretary Zinke’s initiatives to expand energy development, streamline regulations, enhance cooperation with industry and local governments

WASHINGTON – U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today announced that the region-wide Gulf of Mexico lease sale generated $121,143,055 in high bids for 90 tracts covering 508,096 acres in federal waters of the Gulf of Mexico. A total of 27 companies participated in the sale, submitting 99 bids totaling $137,006,181. The sale offered the largest amount of acreage in the history of the federal offshore program in the Gulf, including parcels offshore Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida.

“The path to American energy dominance starts in the Gulf, and the hard work of rig and platform workers, support staff onshore, and the industries that support them cannot go unnoticed,” said Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. “Today’s results will help secure their jobs and create more good paying jobs while generating $121 million in revenue to fund everything from conservation to infrastructure.”

Lease Sale 249, livestreamed from New Orleans, is the first offshore sale under the National Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) Oil and Gas Leasing Program for 2017-2022. Under this program, nine additional region-wide lease sales that combine all three planning areas are scheduled for the Gulf, where resource potential and industry interest are high, and oil and gas infrastructure is well established.

On June 29, President Donald J. Trump and Secretary Zinke announced a public comment period for a new National OCS Oil and Gas Leasing Program for years 2019-2024. The comment period is the first step in executing the new program. The 2017-2022 Program, which begins with the lease sale held today, will continue to be executed until the new National OCS Oil and Gas Leasing Program is complete.

Lease Sale 249 offered approximately 76 million acres offshore Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida for oil and gas exploration and development. It included 14,220 unleased blocks, located from three to 231 miles offshore, in the Gulf's Western, Central and Eastern planning areas in water depths ranging from nine to more than 11,115 feet (three to 3,400 meters). Excluded from the lease sale are blocks subject to the Congressional moratorium established by the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act of 2006; blocks that are adjacent to or beyond the U.S. Exclusive Economic Zone in the area known as the northern portion of the Eastern Gap; and whole blocks and partial blocks within the current boundary of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary.

"Today's lease sale is another important step in this Administration's strategy of responsible resource development and energy dominance," said Vincent DeVito, Counselor for Energy Policy at Interior. "Investors response reflects our work of making the Department of the Interior a better business partner and optimism in the results of this Administration."

The lease sale terms include stipulations to protect biologically sensitive resources, mitigate potential adverse effects on protected species, and avoid potential conflicts associated with oil and gas development in the region.

Additionally, BOEM has included appropriate fiscal terms that take into account market conditions and ensure taxpayers receive a fair return for use of the OCS. These terms include a 12.5 percent royalty rate for leases in less than 200 meters of water depth, and a royalty rate of 18.75 percent for all other leases issued pursuant to the sale. The 12.5 percent royalty rate for leases in less than 200 meters is lower than the proposed 18.75 percent royalty rate for shallow water leases that BOEM published in the Proposed Notice of Sale.

"Through regulatory streamlining, expanded offshore and onshore opportunities and great cooperation with our stakeholders, we expect to encourage competition while continuing to receive a fair and equitable return on oil and gas resources," said Katharine MacGregor, Acting Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management.

The estimated amount of resources projected to be developed as a result of the region-wide lease sale ranges from approximately 0.21 to 1.12 billion barrels of oil and 0.55 to 4.42 trillion cubic feet of gas. Most of the activity (up to 83% of future production) of the proposed lease sale is expected to occur in the Central Planning Area.

As of August 1, 2017, 15.9 million acres on the U.S. OCS are under lease for oil and gas development (2994 active leases) and 4.3 million of those acres (870 leases) are producing oil and natural gas. More than 97 percent of these leases are in the Gulf of Mexico; about 3 percent are on the OCS off California and Alaska. All terms and conditions for Gulf of Mexico Region-wide Sale 249 were detailed in the Final Notice of Sale (FNOS) information package and available at: <http://www.boem.gov/Sale-249/>.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: Swift, Heather
To: Laura Rigas; Lori Mashburn; Magallanes, Downey; Willens, Todd
Subject: Helpful process fix
Date: Thursday, November 16, 2017 9:49:29 AM

---

Hey sorry to beat a dead horse but if Laura and I could get information on high-profile personnel changes before they are made public that would be very helpful. I got the email below forwarded to me by a reporter. I imagine there will be more to come?

Thanks,

-

Heather Swift
Department of the Interior
@DOIPressSec
Heather\_Swift@ios.doi.gov | Interior\_Press@ios.doi.gov

From: "Nedd, Michael" <mnedd@blm.gov>
Date: November 15, 2017 at 3:03:21 PM PST
To: BLM_All_Employees
<blm\_all\_employees@blm.gov>
Subject: BLM Acting Director

BLM employees:

This week, Secretary Ryan Zinke appointed Brian Steed as Acting Director of the BLM, and I want to welcome him as he begins his journey leading this great agency. John Ruhs and I have worked alongside Brian since his appointment as Deputy Director for Programs and Policy in October, and we have come to know his ethic, his intellect, and his passion for our multiple-use and sustained yield mission. His experience includes working as Chief of Staff to U.S. Representative Chris Stewart of Utah, teaching and researching economics at the University of Utah, and serving as a Deputy County Attorney in Iron County, Utah. He is a native of Logan, Utah, and now resides in Northern Virginia with his wife and three children. Brian's western heritage and values make him a perfect fit for the BLM team.

Since March 15, I have had the honor of leading the BLM. Your tireless dedication to our mission inspires me every day. DOI leaders continually express their confidence in the BLM's leadership in the field and here in Washington, which is a testament to all of you. Thank you for supporting me as the Acting Director over these months, and remaining as ever BLM strong.

During the coming weeks, John and I will transition to different roles. John will return to his position as BLM Nevada State Director, and I will assume the duties of Acting Deputy Director for Operations. I appreciate John's sacrifice over the past seven months while he has lived away from his family and the wide open spaces that he loves.

Please join me in welcoming Brian to his new position. As we move forward, let's continue to stay focused on our shared mission and values that guide us in our stewardship of America's public lands.

Take care and have a wonderful day! : )
Michael D. Nedd

From: POLITICO Pro Energy Whiteboard
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: House Natural Resources Committee unveils new energy bill
Date: Friday, November 03, 2017 3:37:00 PM

---

By Ben Lefebvre

11/03/2017 03:34 PM EDT

House lawmakers today unveiled a new energy bill that would roll back Obama-era offshore drilling rules, create an offshore oil and gas revenue program for East Coast drilling and give more oil and gas permitting power to the states.

Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) introduced the bill, with House Natural Resource Committee Chairman Rep. Rob Bishop (R-Utah) and Texas Democratic Reps. Henry Cuellar and Vicente Gonzalez. The bill is expected to move through the committee next week and hit the House floor "in the near future," committee spokesman Parish Braden said.

Among the bill's provisions is a directive to create an offshore oil and gas revenue program for states along the Atlantic coast and Alaska, where the Interior Department is exploring opening more of the waters for offshore oil drilling.

The bill would also require Congress to approve any future removals of offshore acres from lease sales or establishment of new marine sanctuaries, an apparent response to the Obama administration's last-minute removal of some Alaska and Atlantic waters from development.

Onshore, the bill would also allow states to oversee drilling plans on federal land within their borders.

The bill calls on Interior to hold a lease sale for wind power projects off the California coast within one year of the bill's passage. Interior would also conduct feasibility studies for wind lease sales off the coasts of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam, with results due in six months and possible sales within a year of the bill's passing.

WHAT'S NEXT: The House Natural Resources Committee expects to take up the bill next week.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/11/house-natural-resources-committee-unveils-new-energy-bill-095213>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Regulations; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: Nachmany, Eli
Bcc: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov
Subject: ICYMI: Zinke, Murkowski share beers, tweet selfie
Date: Thursday, August 03, 2017 2:05:58 PM

---

E&E News -- INTERIOR: Zinke, Murkowski share beers, tweet selfie

August 3, 2017 (by Hannah Northey)

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) took this selfie during a visit yesterday. @SecretaryZinke/Twitter

In a sharp pivot from last week's health care tumult, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Alaska Republican Sen. Lisa Murkowski this morning appeared together in a selfie posted on Twitter, smiling and drinking beers.

Zinke, who hosted the senator last night at his private residence, is shown holding an Alaskan Brewing Co. IPA, with a cowboy hat hanging on a cabinet in the background.

"I say dinner, she says brews. My friends know me well. Thanks @lisamurkowski #Alaska #IPA #MadeInAmerica," the secretary tweeted.

The tweet drew a chuckle from environmental groups and commenters, with Aaron Weiss, a spokesman for the Center for Western Priorities, writing, "Decided you need your nominees confirmed after all?"

The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which Murkowski chairs, vets Interior Department nominees and is set to hear testimony from Joseph Balash on his nomination to be assistant Interior secretary for land and minerals management on Sept. 7 (E&E Daily, Aug. 3).

The panel later today will vote on three Interior nominees: Brenda Burman to lead the Bureau of Reclamation; Susan Combs to be Interior's assistant secretary of policy, management and budget; and Douglas Domenech to be Interior's assistant secretary of insular affairs (E&E Daily, July 25). That business meeting was rescheduled from last week.

The dinner took place after a week of political turmoil on Capitol Hill surrounding a failed attempt at health care reform in which President Trump — and then Zinke — called Murkowski about a critical vote that helped sink the measure (Greenwire, July 27).

Murkowski has yet to discuss the details of her call with Zinke but has characterized her discussion with Trump as "hard." Alaska Republican Sen. Dan Sullivan was more candid, telling reporters that Zinke told him Murkowski's vote could threaten energy development on federal land in the Last Frontier State.

Some experts have suggested Zinke's call has already raised the bar for keeping politics out of agency decisions, a situation that could trigger lawsuits and gum up Interior matters.

Escaping the media spotlight earlier this week, Murkowski retreated to Alaska to spend time salmon fishing with family and friends on an island off the state's southeast coast (E&E Daily, Aug. 2).

Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift, who has called reporting of Zinke's phone call "sensational," said today's Twitter photo reflects an ongoing and warm relationship between the secretary and Murkowski.

"They talk and meet often in both a professional and friendly capacity," she said in an email.

###

--

Sincerely,
Eli Nachmany
Writer, U.S. Department of the Interior
Office of Communications

From: POLITICO Pro Energy Whiteboard
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Inhofe waiting for deal on EPA picks before lifting his FERC hold
Date: Wednesday, October 18, 2017 5:21:58 PM

---

By Darius Dixon

10/18/2017 05:19 PM EDT

Sen. Jim Inhofe said he doesn't plan to release his hold on Democratic FERC nominee Richard Glick until senators reach a larger deal to move ahead with President Donald Trump's nominees to the EPA.

"I've still got a hold on Glick," the Oklahoma Republican told POLITICO. He said he is "concerned that we don't have our nominees confirmed on the EPA."

Inhofe said that he has raised the issue with Senate leadership and that he hopes there might be an arrangement to consider the EPA and FERC nominees within the next month or so. Both Republicans and Democrats have raised concerns about EPA nominees.

"I don't think it could happen as one package, but it could be an agreement that they will bring those up prior to the next recess," he said of the nominees.

FERC nominees traditionally move in bipartisan packages, so Trump's pick for FERC chairman, Kevin McIntyre, will likely be stuck until Glick's nomination gets floor time.

Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) attempted to have both FERC nominees approved just before the Senate's most recent recess earlier this month, but Inhofe objected.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Senate's next extended recess is Thanksgiving week.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/10/inhofe-waiting-for-deal-on-epa-picks-before-lifting-his-ferc-hold-094481>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Regulations; Energy: Senate Environment And Public Works Committee. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: Domenech, Douglas
To: Scott Hommel; Magallanes, Downey; Laura Rigas; Swift, Heather; James Cason; Micah Chambers; Daniel Jorjani; Mashburn, Lori; Bauserman, Christine; Caroline Boulton; Thiele, Aaron; Willens, Todd; Getto, Leila
Subject: Interior Cabinet Affairs Report for 7/27/17
Date: Thursday, July 27, 2017 3:50:02 PM

---

Attached and copied below.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR DAILY UPDATE FOR CABINET AFFAIRS – 7/27/17

Doug Domenech, Senior Advisor

Lori Mashburn, White House Liaison

NOTE: The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee has postponed their business meeting delaying the nominations of three Interior candidates.

Status of the Secretary

TODAY: The Secretary is in Texas and New Mexico.

Arrive Fort Bliss

Helicopter Tour of Organ Mountains

Travel to Las Cruces, NM

Roundtable with Ranchers & Stakeholders

Roundtable on Border Security

Meeting with Northern Ranchers on Rio Grande del Norte NM

HOLD: Media Availability

Driving Tour with BLM

Friday, July 28, 2017

Hike with Vet Voice Foundation

Meeting with Fort Sill Apache Tribe

Meeting with Mescalero Apache

Meeting with All Pueblo Council of Governors tribes

Friends of Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks

Travel to Santa Fe, NM

Saturday, July 29, 2017

Las Vegas National Wildlife Refuge

Greet Senators and Rep. Lujan and Consolidate Vehicles.

Hike to Canyon Bottom // Horseback Riding & Hiking

Travel to Albuquerque, NM

Dinner with Senators

Sunday, July 30, 2017

Travel to Las Vegas (LAS)

Travel to Kirt's Grotto

Meeting with BLM Support Staff

Fly Over Tour of Gold Butte National Monument

Helicopter Tour departs Gold Butte National Monument en route Basin and Range National Monument

Lunch Meeting with BLM Staff

White River Narrows Rock Art Site Tour

Shaman Knob / Mt. Irish

Tour of Mt. Irish Petroglyph Site

Travel to Las Vegas Airport

Monday, July 31, 2017

Travel to Mesquite, NV

Roundtable with Friends of Gold Butte

Depart Mesquite, NV en route Overton, NV

Roundtable with Local County, City, and State Officials

Depart Overton, NV en route Moapa Tribal Facility

Meeting with Moapa Band of Paiutes

Depart en route Las Vegas, NV

HOLD: potential other meeting

Wheels up Las Vegas, NV (LAS) en route Cincinnati, OH (CVG)

Wheels up Cincinnati, OH (CVG) en route Washington, DC (DCA)

8/1 Day One Bernhardt.

NOTE: the Secretary will be on personal leave August 5-19 out of the country. (Greece and Turkey)

Media TODAY

SECRETARY ZINKE WELCOMES THREE TO INTERIOR

WASHINGTON – Today, U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke welcomed three new hires to the Department in the Office of the Solicitor, the Office of Communications, and the Office of Congressional and Legislative Affairs. The new additions bring a combination of Congressional, Executive Branch, and private sector experience.

“I could not be happier with the way our Department has been staffing up in recent weeks. These new team members will help us more efficiently and effectively carry out the President's priorities on behalf of the American people,” Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke said.

Richard Goeken has been hired as Deputy Solicitor for Parks and Wildlife. Goeken has over 20 years of legal experience, beginning as an Associate and then a Partner at Saltman & Stevens, P.C. In 2012, Saltman & Stevens merged with Smith Currie & Hancock, L.L.P., where Goeken was a Partner for the last five years. His career has focused on environmental law and policy. Goeken is a graduate of the College of William & Mary's Law School.

Russell Newell returns to Interior as the Deputy Director of Communications. For the last five years, Newell has served as Director of Executive & Corporate Communication at Disney/ABC Television Group. Newell also served as Director of Communications and Media Relations for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, as Senior Media Advisor for Multi-National Forces-Iraq, and as a Public Affairs Officer and speechwriter at the Departments of State, Interior, and Homeland Security, as well as for Governor Jeb Bush.

Blake Deeley will serve as an Advisor in the Office of Congressional and Legislative Affairs. He has extensive experience on Capitol Hill, and was most recently a Policy Advisor in the Office of Congressman David McKinley of West Virginia and served as the lead staffer for the Congressional Coal Caucus. Prior to this, he was a Manager of Public Affairs at the Kentucky Chamber of Commerce, a Legislative Correspondent for Senator Mitch McConnell, and a Staff Assistant for Senator Rand Paul.

WEEK AHEAD July 26 thru August 3, 2017

Announcements/Releases/Events

- This week the Secretary is traveling to New Mexico and then Nevada to tour Monuments under review. We issued a media advisory with some details of his trip.
- We continue to support the WH's "Hero's Week" through social media and a video from the Secretary to employees and stakeholders.

TBD: will send out a press release "Interior Secretary Zinke Applauds Mine Proposal to Create Jobs in Virginia and West Virginia"

AGENCY RELEASES

National Park Service

- July 27: National NPS Release: NPS release on 10 Parks Honoring American Heroes.
- July 28: Local NPS Release: NPS will announce the opening of a public comment period on an environmental assessment for proposed utility and roadway crossings and a visitor trail within Tule Springs Fossil Beds National Monument.
- July 28: National NPS Release: NPS will release a theme study focusing on significant historic properties of the post-Civil War Reconstruction Era.
- Week of July 24: Local NPS Release: The Reconstruction Era National Monument will hold three public listening sessions (not related to July 28 Reconstruction Era Theme Study) in Beaufort, Port Royal, and St. Helena Island, South Carolina, as part of the development of a foundation document for this new park. Targeted stakeholder meetings will also be held in the respective communities during the day to identify the biggest challenges and opportunities facing the National Park Service in setting up these new areas and also provide input into the development of the foundation document and interpretive themes.

- July 31: Local NPS Release: NPS will announce another round of $1.189 million in American Battlefield Protection Grants (planning) to aid in the research, documentation, and/or interpretation of significant American battlefields. Releases will be done at the local level of NPS sites receiving funds.
- July TBD: National NPS Release: NPS announcement of annual Rutgers report on NPS Federal Historic Preservation Tax Incentives Program economic impact. Tax credits 2016 contributed $12.3 billion in output to the U.S. economy, added $6.2 billion in GDP. Historic preservation tax incentives encourage investments in historic preservation and revitalization of communities small and large across the country.
- July TBD: Denali National Park and Preserve will release a draft Long Range Transportation Plan for 30 days of public review and comment. The plan, developed over a three-year period, documents baseline conditions, examines funding options, and will help inform project priority setting. The plan focuses on the 90-mile-long park road and its importance to the visitor experience and resource protection, as well as its uses by concessionaire and in-holder buses, and private and administrative vehicles. Portions of the road, initially constructed nearly 100 years ago, have been subject to temporary closures in recent years, in part because slopes have become more unstable due to warming permafrost and other factors. Road use has increased as overall park visitation has grown to nearly 600,000 people per year.
- August 3: Congresswoman Stacey Plaskett will hold a public meeting with Regional Director Stan Austin in Saint John, Virgin Islands to update the community on the administrative realignment of national park superintendents in the Caribbean to now report to the Caribbean parks group superintendent.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

- July 31: National FWS Release: FWS release on proposal to expand hunting and fishing opportunities on 10 National Wildlife Refuges.
- July 31 (tent.): Local FWS Release: FWS plans to announce it is seeking public input to identify potential issues, concerns, impacts and alternatives to be considered in development of either an Environmental Assessment or an Environmental Impact Statement for a proposed General Conservation Plan for oil and gas activities in Santa Barbara County, California. This action is not expected to be controversial.
- July TBD: Local FWS Release: FWS and the State of Utah will issue a joint release regarding a court ruling putting the Utah Prairie Dog back under ESA protections.
- July TBD: FWS/USGS If-Asked Only: USGS to release a report on the Species Status Assessment for the Lesser Prairie Chicken. The study was commissioned by FWS.
- July TBD: National FWS Release: FWS will announce it has apportioned $50 million to state fish and wildlife agencies for developing and implementing programs that benefit wildlife and their habitats. The funding is provided through the FWS's State Wildlife Grants (SWG) program and is distributed through an apportionment formula in accordance with the Appropriations Act.

- July TBD: FWS will deliver to the Federal Register, a final rule establishing the 2017-18 hunting seasons and bag limits for certain migratory game birds to fulfill our responsibilities to the four international conventions to protect and manage migratory game birds. A prepared statement will be provided on our website with a link to the proposed rule.
- July TBD: FWS will deliver to the Federal Register, a proposal to establish annual hunting regulations for certain migratory game birds for the 2018-19 hunting season to fulfill our responsibilities to the four international conventions to protect and manage migratory game birds. A prepared statement will be provided on our website with a link to the proposed rule.

Bureau of Land Management

- July 31: Local BLM Release: BLM-NV will issue a Temporary Closure and Temporary Restrictions of Specific Uses on Public Lands for the Burning Man event in Pershing County, NV, to begin set-up for the event which will begin on August 27. The closure will remain in place until September 20. The event entails the largest Special Recreation Permit managed by the BLM.
- August 1-2: BLM-MT/Dakotas State Office will lead tribal site visits in Sidney to help determine if Federal land parcels that have been identified in the State of Montana's Indemnity Selection application are suitable for conveyance to the State according to the Enabling Act of 1889. Specifically, the site visits will inform determination of eligibility of the cultural sites in the area and assist in environmental assessment. The BLM has been coordinating with the State of Montana since 2015 to determine appropriate parcels to transfer to the State. Other participants include district employees and MT Department of Natural Resources.
- August 2: The BLM-UT Moab Field Office intends to approve Dawson Geophysical Co.'s three-dimensional geophysical seismic survey project. The project is located 26 miles northwest of Moab and encompasses approximately 38,700 acres. Seismic surveys are used to determine the location and size of oil and gas reservoirs. The project is slated to begin in September.
- August 2: BLM-WO staff will meet with an International Visitor Leadership Program group hosted by the University of Montana at Main Interior. The University has requested that Secretary Zinke greet the group. Timothy Fisher, BLM program management analyst from the National Conservation Landscape Program, will discuss the BLM's multiple use mission and priority programs.
- August 2: BLM-CA's Bakersfield Assistant Field Manager Becca Brooke/staff will meet with Pacific Gas and Electric (PG&E) to discuss the Federal Energy Regulation Commission (FERC) re-licensing process and study needs for the Kerckhoff hydroelectric project at Kerckhoff Dam, along the San Joaquin River, Fresno County, CA. PG&E is required to submit a Pre-Application for Development by November 2017 to begin a five-year re-licensing process. The 114-foot tall dam, built in 1920, is one of the primary features of the Kerckhoff hydroelectric project. It has two powerhouses. It produces 579 million kilowatt hours of electricity a year.

- August 3: Local BLM Release: BLM-NV's Las Vegas Field Office will hold a land sale under the Southern Nevada Public Land Management Act (SNPLMA) in Las Vegas. The BLM proposes to offer for competitive sale 81.25 acres of public land in 17 parcels. In accordance with the SNPLMA, sale funds are used for the development of parks, trails, and natural areas, capital improvements on Federal lands, acquiring environmentally sensitive land, and Lake Tahoe restoration projects.

U.S. Geological Survey

- July 26: Local USGS Release: USGS will release a study of water contaminants in Congaree National Park.
- August 1: Three Regional USGS-University Press Releases will go out to announce new host and consortium university partners for the Department of the Interior Alaska, Southeast, and Northwest Climate Adaptation Science Centers (managed by USGS). These hosting agreements are made between universities and the USGS, and the press releases are joint between these entities.
- August 2: National USGS Release: USGS release regarding increased Salinity in U.S. Rivers that might degrade drinking water quality and water infrastructure.

Bureau of Reclamation

- August 1: Reclamation's Albuquerque Area Office with the parties of the Taos Indian Water Rights Settlement will meet in Taos to discuss the latest progress on implementing the settlement. Each party will report out on its part of the project. There is significant local public and media interest and both are expected to attend.

Bureau of Ocean Energy Management

- August 2: BOEM Note to Stakeholders: Notice to Stakeholders on the Notice of Availability (NOA) for the Cape Wind Final Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement (SEIS).
- August 2: BOEM Note to Stakeholders: Notice to Stakeholders on the Notice of Availability for the Cape Wind Final Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement.
- August 2: Local BOEM Release: Alaska Press Release on Draft EIS for Liberty DPP.
- August 2: Local BOEM Release: BOEM announces Gulf G&G PEIS, which is expected to publish in Federal Register on Aug. 4.
- TBD: BOEM Note to Stakeholders: Note to Stakeholders on Information Transfer Meeting to be held in New Orleans August 22-24.

- TBD: BOEM Note to Stakeholders: Note to Stakeholders to specific groups for educational outreach on the New National OCS Oil and Gas Leasing Program inviting them to participate in an informational call.
- TBD: BOEM Note to Stakeholders: Note to Stakeholders on the Notice of Availability for the Cape Wind Final Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement.
- TBD: National BOEM Release: BOEM release on Marine Minerals Rule. The rule is finalized and in surnaming.

Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement

- July 27: Director Angelle attends API Upstream Committee meeting with Acting ASLM MacGregor
- July 28: National BSEE News Brief: American Hero Week - BSEE Inspectors Keep Energy Production Safe

Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement

- August 1: National OSMRE Release: OSMRE expects to announce publication of notices of availability for draft Environmental Assessments and unsigned Finding of No Significant Impact prepared for a federal mining plan modification at the Bridger Mine in Wyoming. OSMRE will accept comments for 30 days.
- August 3: National OSMRE Release: OSMRE celebrates 40th Anniversary Observance of the signing of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977. OSMRE confirmed Secretary will appear as the keynote speaker.

Land Buy-Back Program

- July 31: National LBBP Release: LBBP will put out a release and related outreach announcing a new Land Buy-Back Program strategy for addressing fractionation on Indian trust lands.

Office of Insular Affairs

- July 26: Local IA Release: Marshall Islands grants release announces Compact Infrastructure $149,436; Ebeye Special Needs $300,000; Health Care Program for four Atolls (Sec 177) $697,387.

CONGRESSIONAL

N/A

Political Appointee Update

Two new appointees started today bringing DOI politicals on board = 52

4 nominated awaiting confirmation.

Nominees Combs, Berman, and Domenech – Senate Committee vote scheduled Thursday.

Nominee Joe Balash as Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management has been announced.

Secretary Speaking Invitations

Accepted

7/27-31 National Monument Review Tour Nevada and New Mexico

8/5-20 Personal

Outstanding Invitations in Process

8/30 - West Virginia Chamber of Commerce Annual Meeting (White Sulphur Springs, WV)

Declining

7/31-8/2 - FBI National Academy Associates Annual Training Conference (DC)

8/2 - American Legion Northwest Regional Baseball Tournament's Opening Ceremony
General Welcome (Missoula, MT)

8/5 - Glacier National Park Conservancy remarks at Annual Backpacker's Ball
(Whitefish/Kalispell)

8/17 - Mineral Hill Conservation Project (Gardiner, MT)

8/18 - Council of State Governments-West State and Federal Relations Committee (Tacoma, WA)

8/21 - Gage County Tourism and Beatrice Chamber of Commerce (Beatrice, NE)

Emergency Management

In California, the Detwiler Fire, located in Mariposa County (CAL FIRE), has burned 81,250 (+1,250) acres and is 70 (+5)-percent contained. The fire is managed by a Type-1 Incident Management Team (IMT) with 4,279 (-216) personnel, including 122 (-1) DOI personnel. There are 1,500 (no change) residential structures threatened and 4,968 (no change) evacuees. Communities, transportation routes, and power infrastructure continue to be threatened, including transmission lines that supply Yosemite National Park with power. Full containment of the Detwiler Fire expected on August 5.

In Montana, the Lodgepole Complex Fire, located in Garfield County (BLM), has burned 270,200 (+200) acres and is 62 (+28)-percent contained. The fire is managed by a Type-2 IMT with 598 (-58) personnel, including 81 (-15) DOI personnel. There are 145 (no change) residential structures threatened and 50 (no change) evacuees. Sixteen (no change) residences have been destroyed. Weather conditions today include 8 to 12 mile per hour winds, and Critical Fire Weather is expected in the area tomorrow. The need for additional resources is not anticipated at this time, and full containment is expected on August 2.

In Oregon, the Upper Mine Fire, located in Harney County (BLM), has burned 4,100 (-700) acres and is 40 (+40)-percent contained. The fire is managed by a Type-2 IMT with 187 (no change) personnel, including 69 (no change) DOI personnel. Three (+3) residences, Sage Grouse Habitat, overhead power lines, and infrastructure are currently threatened by this fire. Outflow winds may result in some additional perimeter growth; however, full containment of this fire is expected on July 31.

In Montana, the Buffalo Fire, located in Powder River County (BLM), has burned 3,104 (-3) acres and is 80 (+46)-percent contained. The fire is managed by a Type-1 IMT with 268 (+109) personnel, including 45 (+18) DOI personnel. Significant resource demobilization is expected to start on July 29, and full containment of this fire is expected on July 30.

In Nevada, the Preacher Fire, located in Douglas County (BLM), has burned 5,386 (+735) acres and is 20 (no change)-percent contained. The fire is managed by a Type-2 IMT with 512 (+233) personnel, including 72 (-23) DOI personnel. Significant resource demobilization is expected to start tomorrow, and full containment of this fire is expected on July 29.

In Nevada, the Mahogany Fire, located in Humboldt County (BLM), has burned 5,000 (+500) acres and is 25 (+5)-percent contained. The fire is managed by a Type-2 IMT with 299 (-129) personnel, including 69 (-4) DOI personnel. There are 50 (+50) residences threatened; however, no evacuations are currently in place. Critical Sage Grouse Habitat, multiple recreation sites, federal communication sites, power grid transmission lines, a natural gas pipeline, and wildlife habitat are threatened. Full containment of this fire is expected on July 29.

Outside Media of Interest

Interior Secretary To Visit Las Cruces Amid Monuments Review.

The AP (7/26, Contreras) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is “scheduled to visit Las Cruces this week in connection with the Trump administration’s review of Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument.” The Albuquerque (NM) Journal (7/26, Coleman) reports that “on Thursday, Zinke will tour the Organ Mountains Desert Peaks National Monument by helicopter then meet with elected officials, ranchers, academics, border security experts, and others local stakeholders ‘who represent all sides of the issue,’ according to the Interior Department.” On Friday, Zinke is scheduled to “hike with southern New Mexico veterans and then hold meetings with the Mescalero Apache, Fort Sill Tribe, and Friends of Organ Mountains Desert Peaks “. On Saturday, Zinke will “hike and ride horseback with Sens. Martin Heinrich and Tom Udall, both of whom are opposed to shrinking either monument.”

Dozens Of GOP Senators Urge Trump To Expand Offshore Drilling.

The Daily Caller (7/26, Pearce) reports that “three dozen Republican senators sent a letter to Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke Wednesday supporting a plan that would increase access and development of offshore drilling along the U.S. east coast.” The Hill (7/26, Cama, Henry) reports that in the letter, “the senators said the government should write a drilling plan that would allow oil and gas leasing in areas not included in the 2017-2022 outline finalized by the Obama administration.” The senators wrote, “Offshore projects often have long lead times, so it is important to start today to make sure that the United States is planning for the future to maintain its steady and stable supply of production. We look forward to working with the Department of the Interior as you advance the new five-year program.”

Zinke Call Has Sullivan ‘Very Concerned’ After Tuesday Vote.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (7/26, Brehmer) reports that “according to Sen. Dan Sullivan’s spokesman Mike Anderson, Sullivan took a phone call from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Wednesday.” Anderson said, “As a result of that call, he’s very concerned about Alaska’s economy.” The article speculates that the call may be tied to Sen. Lisa Murkowski’s opposition to Republican efforts to reform health insurance.

Trump Interior Nominee Has A History Of Contempt For The Agency She’s About To Lead.

The Huffington Post (7/26, D’angelo) reports that former Texas Comptroller Susan Combs, who has been nominated to serve as assistant secretary of the Interior Department’s Office of Policy, Management and Budget, could “join the likes of Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt and Energy Secretary Rick Perry as top Trump officials with vehement opposition to agencies they’re tasked with helping to lead.” The article notes that Combs “regularly sparred with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service over species listings, petitioning in 2015 to have protections removed for an endangered songbird native to central Texas.” Last week, “some 70 conservation groups sent a letter to the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee urging members to reject the nomination, describing Combs as someone who ‘built her career favoring big corporations and special interests over the needs and survival of imperiled species.’”

Man Gets 68 Years In Prison In Bundy Ranch Standoff Case.

The AP (7/26, Ritter) reports that on Wednesday, Chief U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro in Las Vegas sentenced Gregory Burleson of Phoenix “to 68 years in prison for his role as a gunman in a standoff that stopped federal agents from rounding up cattle near the Nevada ranch of anti-government activist Cliven Bundy three years ago.” The AP notes that prosecutors “had sought a maximum sentence of 73 years for...Burleson after he was convicted of threatening and assaulting a federal officer, obstruction and traveling across state lines in aid of extortion.” However, Navarro “knocked five years off the recommendation, noting that the 53-year-old Burleson has gone blind, has serious health issues and was once an informant for the FBI.”

Interior Provides $635,885 For Micronesia Region.

The Saipan (MNP) Tribune (7/26) reports that acting Interior assistant secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula has “made available $635,885 for natural and cultural resource protection for all U.S. island jurisdictions in the Micronesia region.” Pula said, “It is reassuring to see the range of initiatives we have been able to support with this funding, from managing fisheries that support people’s livelihoods to suppressing the impacts of the damaging coconut rhinoceros beetle and little fire ant. We are happy to support and bolster the collaborative efforts of conservation-minded leaders across the Micronesia region.”

Federal Register Listings

Items cleared for the FR on Wednesday.

REG0007206 NPS National Register of Historic Places, July 8, 2017. The NPS is soliciting comments on the significance of properties nominated before July 8, 2017, for listing in the National Register of Historic Places or related actions. Notice 07/26/2017.

REG0007214 OSM Agency Information Collection Activities: OMB Control Number 1029-0091; Requirements for Surface Coal Mining and Reclamation Operations on Indian Lands. This Notice, under the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995 (PRA), announces that OSMRE will ask the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to renew its approval of an information collection for the requirements for surface coal mining and reclamation operations on Indian lands in 30 CFR part 750. OSMRE is requesting public comments on the renewal for 30 days.

Notice 07/26/2017.

WOLF TRAP

Tickets in the Secretary's box available. Please share with WH staff.

7-28-17	ORFF: Carmina Burana; Beethoven: Emperor Concerto	8:15 PM
7-29-17	Aretha Franklin	8:00 PM
8-1-17	Nashville in Concert	8:00 PM
8-2-17	Punch Brothers	8:00 PM
8-3-17	Blondie & Garbage	7:30 PM
8-4-17	La La Land in Concert	8:30 PM

Doug Domenech
Senior Advisor
US Department of the Interior

NOTE: Every email I send or receive is subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act.

From: Hinson, Alex
Bcc: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Interior Daily News and Talking Points 8/22/2017
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 12:13:09 PM

---

McClatchy (Stuart Leavenworth): Fate of 21 national monuments will land on Trump's desk this week

OPINION-THE HILL (Lena Moffitt): We might lose Giant Sequoia National Monument this week

OPINION-THE HILL (Chris Saeger): Interior Secretary Zinke has turned his back on the American West

(b) (5)

(b) (5)

New York Times (Lisa Friedman and Brad Plumer): Coal Mining Health Study Is Halted by Interior Department

(b) (5)

Washington Post (Lisa Rein): ‘You’re Fired’ may be harder than Trump thinks when it comes to federal workers

(b) (5)

###

--

Alex Hinson

Deputy Press Secretary
Department of the Interior
C: 202-641-5381

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; interior\_news@updates.interior.gov
Subject: Interior Department FY2017 Energy Disbursements Grow by $1 Billion to $7.11 Billion Under President Trump
Date: Thursday, November 30, 2017 1:17:22 PM

---

news release

Date: November 30, 2017
Contact: Interior\_Press@ios.doi.gov

Interior Department FY2017 Energy Disbursements Grow by $1 Billion to $7.11 Billion Under President Trump

Substantial increase in LWCF funds for conservation

WASHINGTON – U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke announced today that Interior’s Office of Natural Resources Revenue (ONRR) disbursements from energy and minerals production on Federal and American Indian lands and offshore areas totaled $7.11 billion in Fiscal Year 2017, an increase of nearly $1 billion over the previous year. States received $1.44 billion, Tribal governments and individual mineral rights owners received nearly $676 million, and $950 million went toward the Land and Water Conservation Fund, which invests in outdoor recreation opportunities and conservation in America’s state and local parks. The funds are derived from energy and minerals production on Federal and Indian lands and U.S. offshore areas. These revenues are a critical source of non-tax funding.

“Under President Trump’s American Energy Dominance agenda, we’ve increased energy funds by a billion dollars in our first year alone. That money goes right back to communities for things like public works projects, educational improvements, conservation and parks, and infrastructure upgrades,” Secretary Zinke said. “Energy is about more than just electricity and gas, it’s about a strong economy and strong communities. As the administration continues to cut red tape and end the overregulation of responsible energy development, we will be able to direct more funds to local communities and create more good-paying American jobs.”

“These additional revenues to states, including my home state of Utah, are just the beginning. They make a big difference – they pay for schools and public services. This critical stream of revenue supports rural communities across the country. I hope to see steady increases in these revenues as we continue to work with the administration to unlock American’s energy potential,” Chairman Rob Bishop (R-UT) said.

ONRR disbursed nearly $1.44 billion of the FY 2017 energy revenues to 36 states, as their cumulative share of revenues collected from oil, gas, and mineral production on Federal lands within their borders and from offshore oil and gas tracts in Federal waters adjacent to their shores. The top states receiving FY 2017 revenues were:

- Wyoming $669 million – Increase of $4.7 million
- New Mexico $455 million – Increase of $86.5 million
- Colorado $92 million – Increase of $8.1 million
- Utah $73.5 million – Increase of $5.5 million
- North Dakota $39.9 million – Increase of $7.4 million

Louisiana, and Montana also saw large increases in disbursements at $1.3 million and $1.02 million increase respectively. A complete list of states receiving revenues through FY 2017 is available on the Natural Resources Revenue Data portal located at <https://revenuedata.doi.gov/>.

In addition to state disbursements, $675.8 million was disbursed to American Indian tribes and individual Indian mineral owners; $1.14 billion to the Reclamation Fund; $959 million to the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF); $150 million to the Historic Preservation Fund; and the remaining $2.5 billion to the U.S. Treasury.

The revenues disbursed to the 34 Federally-recognized American Indian tribes and nearly 35,000 individual Indian mineral owners represents 100 percent of the revenues received for energy and mineral production activities on Indian lands. Most revenues are disbursed through the Interior Department's Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Office of Special Trustee for American Indians. Some Indian tribes have direct payment authorization from the Department of Interior and receive their energy and mineral revenue directly through an established lockbox deposit account. Tribes use these revenues to develop infrastructure, provide healthcare and education, and support other critical community development programs, such as senior centers, public safety projects, and youth initiatives.

“The Navajo Nation appreciates its ongoing working partnership with the Department of the Interior,” said Rowena Cheromiah, Navajo Nation's Minerals Royalty and Audit Manager. “For many years, we’ve worked together to ensure that the Navajo Nation is receiving accurate royalty payments for its mineral resources on Navajo Nation lands.”

These disbursements also included a substantial increase to the LWCF and U.S. Treasury from Phase II revenue sharing under the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act of 2006 (GOMESA), which took effect in FY2017. The GOMESA portion of the LWCF disbursement -- $67 million -- remains available until expended; the $892 million regular LWCF distribution for FY2017 must be used within 3 years. The Gulf producing states and coastal political subdivisions will receive their disbursements of FY 2017 qualified revenues in FY 2018, as required by the legislation.

The $7.11 billion disbursed in FY 2017 compares to the $6.23 billion the Department disbursed in FY 2016. The increase in disbursements is primarily attributed to a larger number of lease sales totaling higher acreage, efforts to streamline permitting and reduce regulatory burdens, and higher oil and gas prices experienced during the year as the economy and exports have continued to expand. All Federal, non-renewable energy revenues are collected, accounted for, analyzed, audited, and disbursed by ONRR from energy and mineral leases and other monies owed for the use of public resources on the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf and onshore Federal and American Indian lands. Since 1982, ONRR has disbursed more than $294 billion in mineral leasing revenues. ONRR makes most disbursements on a monthly basis from the royalties, rents, and bonuses it collects from energy and mineral companies operating on federal lands and waters.

The Land and Water Conservation Fund, established by Congress in 1964, invests in projects that help strengthen communities, preserve American history and protect national endowments of lands and waters. The Reclamation Fund, which Congress established in 1902, funds the development of irrigation projects on arid and semiarid lands of the 17 western states. The Historic Preservation Fund provides matching grants to State and Tribal historic preservation offices to pay for surveys of historic resources, training, nominations to the National Register of Historic Places, and preservation grants to local jurisdictions.

The FY 2017 disbursement data is scheduled to be published on the Natural Resources Revenue Data portal located at <https://revenue.data.doi.gov/> on November 30, 2017.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: POLITICO Pro Energy Whiteboard
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior Department grants Eni offshore Arctic drilling permit
Date: Tuesday, November 28, 2017 3:03:12 PM

---

By Ben Lefebvre

11/28/2017 03:00 PM EDT

The Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement approved a permit allowing Italian oil company Eni S.p.A. to drill an exploratory oil and gas well in the Beaufort Sea off the northeast coast of Alaska.

The approval is the first in two years to allow drilling in Arctic waters, BSEE said. It comes as the Interior Department pushes for increased offshore drilling as part of its effort to boost U.S. oil and gas production.

Eni could start drilling in the Beaufort Sea as early as next month, BSEE said. The company first applied for the permit in August.

Eni plans to base its operations on the man-made Spy Island, where it already operates oil and gas wells. It will use extended-reach drilling technology to dig the well in federal waters.

WHAT'S NEXT: Drilling is expected to start in December.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/11/interior-department-grants-eni-offshore-arctic-drilling-permit-150307>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; interior\_news@updates.interior.gov
Subject: Interior Department Supported $254 Billion in Economic Activity and Nearly 1.7 million Jobs in FY 2016
Date: Friday, September 29, 2017 5:14:37 PM

---

news release

Date: September 29, 2017
Contact: Interior\_Press@ios.doi.gov

Interior Department Supported $254 Billion in Economic Activity and Nearly 1.7 million Jobs in FY 2016

WASHINGTON – U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke today released the U.S. Department of the Interior’s Economic Report for Fiscal Year 2016. The report highlights that Interior activities supporting conventional and renewable energy, recreation, conservation, water energy supported $254 billion in economic output and nearly 1.7 million jobs during the year.

National parks, refuges, monuments and other public lands managed by Interior hosted an estimated 473 million recreational visits in 2016—up from 443 million in 2015—these visits supported $50 billion in economic output and about 426,000 jobs nationwide.

The Department’s diverse portfolio includes the management of some 500 million acres of public lands, and another 1.7 billion acres offshore on the Outer Continental Shelf. In addition, the Department is the Nation’s largest supplier and manager of water in 17 Western states. It oversees cutting-edge scientific research in the areas of geology, hydrology and biology and serves as Trustee for 567 federally-recognized American Indian and Alaska Native tribes.

Highlights from the report include:

- Fossil Fuel Energy: In FY 2016, Interior-managed lands and waters produced 768 million barrels of crude oil, 4.7 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, and 310 million tons of coal, supporting $68.3 billion in value added, $117.7 billion in economic output, and 582,000 jobs.
- Renewable Energy: In FY 2016, Interior lands and facilities produced 36.7 million MWh of hydropower (enough to power 3.4 million homes). Renewable energy projects on Interior lands – solar (6,859MW), wind (3,568 MW), and geothermal energy (1,543 MW) -- supported $3.8 billion in economic output and 17,000 jobs in FY 2016.

- Non-fuel Minerals: In FY 2016, Interior lands produced a wide variety of non-fuel minerals, supporting value added of $6.1 billion, economic output of $11.4 billion, and 39,000 jobs.
- Recreation: In FY 2016, Interior’s lands hosted an estimated 473 million visits, supporting $28.1 billion in value added, $50.0 billion in economic output, and 426,000 jobs.
- Water: Interior stores and delivers water for irrigation, municipal and industrial (M&I), and other uses supporting $28.9 billion in value added $49.7 billion in economic output, and 399,000 jobs in FY 2016. Interior also delivers water to support in-stream flows, wildlife refuges, and other uses that not typically reflected in economic contribution estimates.
- Forage and Grazing: In FY 2016, Interior lands provided access to 8.6 million animal unit months (AUMs) of forage, supporting $2.4 billion in economic output and 41,000 jobs.
- Timber: In FY 2016, about 673,000 mbf of sawtimber was harvested on BLM and tribal lands, supporting $0.48 billion in value added, $1.4 billion in economic output, and 6,200 jobs.
- Grants/Payments: Activities related to grant and payment programs administered by Interior supported $6.4 billion in value added, $9.1 billion in economic contributions, and 84,000 jobs in FY 2016.
- Conservation: Conservation is a component of recreation, restoration, water management, and even some mineral development activities. The value of these activities is not typically reflected in economic contribution estimates.
- Scientific Data: Interior’s data collection and research promote economic growth and innovation and play a role in promoting American competitiveness in a global marketplace. The value of these activities is not typically reflected in economic contribution estimates.

The report is paired with a web-based data visualization tool that lets the user customize the contribution analysis by bureau, activity or State. You can access the tool and download the full economic report, with a discussion of the analysis and methodology applied on the internet at <https://doi.sciencebase.gov/doidv/>.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: POLITICO Pro Energy Whiteboard
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior hikes Alaska oil, natural gas reserve estimates
Date: Friday, December 22, 2017 3:00:24 PM

---

By Ben Lefebvre

12/22/2017 02:58 PM EDT

The Interior Department sharply hiked its estimate of oil reserves contained in Alaska's lands and waters today, estimating that more than 17 billion barrels of oil could be tapped there.

The estimate from the U.S. Geological Survey and BOEM comes after Congressional Republicans opened a portion of the Alaska National Wilderness Refuge to drilling in their tax package this week, and as President Donald Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke press to boost oil and gas drilling in Alaska as part of the effort to achieve "energy dominance."

The updated estimates put the undiscovered, technically recoverable resources on federal, state and tribal land and offshore at 17.6 billion barrels of oil and more than 50 trillion cubic feet of gas.

"That's important because with the scientific knowledge, industry partners are more willing to explore the area," Zinke said. "New discoveries have changed our geologic knowledge of the area — and these assessments show that the North Slope will remain an important energy hub for decades to come in order to meet the energy needs of our nation."

USGS estimates a mean of 8.7 billion barrels of oil and 25 trillion cubic feet of gas could be recovered from the NPR-A. A 2010 resource assessment had put the figure at 1.5 billion barrels of oil.

BOEM's updated estimates of undiscovered technically recoverable resources in the Beaufort Sea Outer Continental Shelf Planning Area are 8.9 billion barrels of oil and 27.7 trillion cubic feet of gas, up 700 million barrels from its 2016 assessment.

Interior has struggled to sell oil and gas drilling leases in Alaska, particularly those on shore, as current low fossil fuel prices makes it difficult to profitably drill and transport oil from Alaska to market in the lower 48.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/12/interior-hikes-alaska-oil-natural-gas-reserve-estimates-319887>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior IG ends investigation of Zinke's call to Murkowski
Date: Wednesday, August 30, 2017 5:59:21 PM

---

By Ben Lefebvre

08/30/2017 05:55 PM EDT

The Interior Department's inspector general ended the investigation into whether Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke broke ethics rules in calls to Alaska Republican senators last month over their votes to repeal Obamacare, calling the initial investigation "unproductive."

The IG's efforts foundered after Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan declined to answer questions from the inspector general's office, Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall said in an Aug. 29 letter to Reps. Raul Grijalva (D-Ariz.) and Frank Pallone Jr. (D-N.J.), who had called for the inquiry.

"Both Senators Murkowski and Sullivan declined to be interviewed or to provide statements regarding the matter," Kendall wrote.

Kendall also wrote that because the episode was "extensively covered" by news outlets, her office "does not believe that it could meaningfully investigate the matter further."

Zinke called Murkowski and Sullivan in July after Murkowski had voted against repealing Obamacare legislation. During the call, Zinke said Murkowski's vote could endanger President Donald Trump's support for energy projects important to Alaska.

Interior plays a big role in Alaska, where the federal government controls 61 percent of the land. Interior is reviewing a multitude of projects tied to Alaska energy development, including a possible opening of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge for oil and gas drilling and allowing offshore oil drilling in currently off-limits Arctic waters.

A spokesman for the Democrat staff on the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, of which Pallone is ranking member, said the IG's decision to end the probe was "unfortunate."

WHAT'S NEXT: The GAO is also investigating Zinke's calls to the Alaska senators.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/08/interior-ig-ends-investigation-of-zinkes-call-to-murkowski-092299>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior outlines plan to speed permitting
Date: Wednesday, October 25, 2017 7:42:26 PM

---

Interior outlines plan to speed permitting

By Esther Whieldon and Ben Lefebvre

10/25/2017 07:39 PM EDT

The Interior Department said on Wednesday it was looking to speed up permitting for energy projects and minerals mining by tweaking policies designed to protect wildlife conservation areas.

Interior's Fish and Wildlife Service is also re-evaluating whether laws establishing protections for migratory birds should apply to energy projects, and it's reviewing the Obama rule that gave wind developers 30-year permits to injure or kill protected eagles.

"The federal government can and must be a better business partner," Vincent DeVito, counselor for energy policy to Secretary Ryan Zinke, said in statement accompanying the report that was written to comply with President Donald Trump's executive order calling on agencies to streamline the permit process for energy projects.

Interior said the Bureau of Land Management will examine whether to change procedures to speed up permitting, including how it grants rights of way through national monuments and other national conservation areas and for mineral leases near wild scenic rivers.

And within three months, FWS hopes to finalize new guidance on what FERC-licensed interstate pipelines should do to mitigate the damage they inflict on migratory birds and their habitat.

Interior has already taken steps on many of the rules listed in the report, including repealing a disputed Obama rule on hydraulic fracturing.

The department also made clear it was mulling loosening multiple rules governing drilling in Alaska.

The department could change or rescind numerous rules for offshore oil and gas drilling, such as eliminating the requirement that drilling companies have cap and flow systems and containment domes to stop oil spills within seven days' reach of well sites.

Another change would make it easier for BOEM to process permits for companies to conduct seismic testing offshore.

Another issue the report highlighted was a potential regulatory change to reduce the number of protests that challenge BLM lease sales. Those protests have risen sharply, the report said, and are typically focused on opposition to fracking or fighting climate change rather than parcel-specific protests.

"A regulatory change may be necessary to limit redundant protests that hinder orderly development," the report said.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/story/2017/10/interior-outlines-plan-for-speeding-up-permitting-163928>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior reimbursed for Zinke Virgin Island fundraiser, but contributions unaccounted for Date: Tuesday, December 19, 2017 4:12:04 PM

---

Interior reimbursed for Zinke Virgin Island fundraiser, but contributions unaccounted for

By Ben Lefebvre

12/19/2017 04:01 PM EDT

Taxpayers have finally been reimbursed for Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's participation in a political fundraiser last spring in the Virgin Islands — but questions remain about the donations he helped solicit, according to campaign finance records and interviews.

The Virgin Islands Republican Party repaid on Oct. 5 the Interior Department $275 for expenses related to Zinke's appearance, according to recent federal campaign finance filings. That was the same day POLITICO first reported that Zinke was the featured guest at the March 30 fundraiser, where records indicate that donors paid as much as $5,000 per couple for a chance to pose for a photo with the secretary.

The Virgin Islands Republican Party — a political action committee nominally based in the islands but run by a Washington-area GOP consultant — did not list any donations matching those amounts in its Federal Election Commission reports for March and April. That make it impossible to know who may have paid thousands of dollars for access to a member of President Donald Trump's Cabinet, whose office has refused to provide advanced schedules of his travels and appearances.

Still, the reimbursement may be enough to protect Zinke from accusations that his Virgin Islands appearance violated the Hatch Act, which prohibits government officials from using taxpayer resources to advance partisan causes. Zinke is facing multiple investigations for his pattern of mixing politics and official business during taxpayer-funded travels.

The Caribbean fundraiser, which occurred during a three-day official trip by Zinke to the island chain, is his only political event so far for which the Interior Department has received reimbursement.

Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said the department invoiced the VIGOP PAC for the amount. Swift did not reply to questions as to the timing of Interior's request for reimbursement.

"The invoice was calculated to cover the political activities portion of the Secretary's travel to the USVI in accordance with Hatch Act regulations," Swift said. "There is a formula used to determine what percentage of a given trip the political event makes up, and how much to reimburse."

Swift did not respond to questions whether Interior had sought reimbursement related to other political appearances by Zinke, such as his stop at a fundraiser for Rep. Don Young (R-Alaska) at an Anchorage steakhouse, or his attendance at a ski resort weekend organized by the leadership PAC of Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.), which POLITICO has previously reported. The secretary also attended a July fundraiser in Oregon for Republican Rep. Greg Walden, according to a local press account from the time.

The independent Office of Special Counsel, which investigates possible Hatch Act violations, has said in previous cases that timely reimbursement of the government's expenses is sufficient to avoid violating federal regulations that prohibit taxpayer dollars from paying for political activity. OSC, which declined to comment, is one of several agencies investigating Zinke's political activities.

Federal employees can face reprimands or even lose their jobs for violating the Hatch Act, but it is up to the president to decide how to punish violations by presidential appointees. OSC found that two members of former President Barack Obama's Cabinet had violated the Hatch Act, but neither faced major penalties.

Interior "should not be paying for any of Zinke's political travel," said Brendan Fischer, director of the bipartisan watchdog group Campaign Legal Center's federal and FEC reform program. "That being said, there is certainly a pattern of Zinke and other administration officials mixing official and political business, which the Inspector General is looking into. Public resources are supposed to be used to advance the public interest, not to coddle political donors."

Besides reimbursing Interior for Zinke's appearance, VIGOP also paid $875 for catering for a "VIGOP event" on March 30, according to FEC documents. That suggested the federal PAC was the one raising contributions at the event, Fischer said. But it does not appear to have disclosed at least some contributions associated with the appearance, something Fischer said could be a violation of campaign finance laws.

VIGOP has a murky relationship with the U.S. territory's official Republican Party organization, which has been riven by its own internal conflicts in recent years. The FEC classifies VIGOP as a non-party PAC and lists its treasurer as Scott B. Mackenzie, a D.C.-area political operative who declined to comment when reached by POLITICO.

Zinke has for years worked with the VIGOP, attending at least two of its meetings on the island while he was a Montana congressman. Zinke's own fundraising organizations spent millions of dollars on a group of political operatives tied to the PAC, including direct mailing company Forthright Strategies, whom Republicans have accused of preying on small donors. POLITICO first reported a week before the reimbursement on Zinke's use of a charter flight to travel to the islands on official business.

The chairman of the territorial Republican Party, John Canegata, said the fundraiser had been the work of the territorial party, not the PAC, and would be listed in reports filed with the Virgin Islands' election committee.

"All our donations, we will put that together in a form they provide and give that to them at the end of the year," Canegata told POLITICO.

Campaign finance reports for groups registered with the islands' government are due in June and December of each year, a spokeswoman for Election Services of the Virgin Islands said. Money raised at a March fundraiser would have had to have been reported on the June disclosure report, the spokeswoman said.

VIGOP is not officially part of the Virgin Island Republican Party structure and is not registered with the Elections System of the Virgin Islands as a fundraising organization, said Genevieve Whitaker, deputy supervisor of elections for the agency's St. Croix district.

Other Republicans in the Virgin Islands Republican territorial committee have complained about Canegata's relationship with Mackenzie's VIGOP, saying very little, if any, of the money Mackenzie's organization raises gets distributed to the party or candidates.

The committee also complained that Canegata signed a contract in 2013, a copy of which was obtained by POLITICO, naming VIGOP as a client of Base Connect, a direct mail fundraising company that other Republicans have accused of exploiting small donors. Political committees linked to Zinke have long done business with many of the same political consultants as VIGOP.

An invitation for the March 30 event in St. Croix solicited donations of up to $5,000 per couple to be event "patrons" or $1,500 to be part of its "host committee." According to Zinke's schedule, he participated in a photo line with donors in those categories. But no donations in VIGOP's federal campaign finance reports match the names of 10 other individuals listed as guests of honor on the invitation, which was obtained by POLITICO.

VIGOP reported 88 donations in March and April, mostly between $100 and $500 apiece. Three donations of $1,000 were the largest received in those months.

However, VIGOP's decision to reimburse Interior may insulate Zinke from some potential sanctions associated with his political behavior, judging by previous cases.

The Office of Special Counsel in 2012 determined that then-Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius had violated the Hatch Act by endorsing Obama's reelection and a local gubernatorial candidate during a speech in North Carolina at a gala for the Human Rights Campaign, where she was appearing on official business.

After HHS began receiving media inquiries about the speech, it reclassified the event as political and sought reimbursement from Obama's campaign and the Democratic National Committee. While the OSC said her remarks themselves violated the Hatch Act, it determined that HHS had satisfied requirements that the government be reimbursed for costs associated with political appearances.

In 2016, OSC determined that then-Housing and Urban Development Secretary Julian Castro had violated the law when he endorsed Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign in an interview with Yahoo News anchor Katie Couric.

Since joining Trump's Cabinet in March, Zinke has appeared at more than a dozen events with former campaign donors or conservative activists while traveling on official business, including at least four fundraisers for politicians or PACs, according to a POLITICO review of his schedule, event invitations, Interior Department emails and other documents.

The sort of mixing of official business with political activity that Zinke has engaged in could lead to an ethical breach even if it is legal, said Virginia Canter, executive branch ethics counsel for good-governance watchdog group Citizens for Ethics and Responsibility in Washington.

"What you become very concerned about is if you see the political activity driving the official activity," Canter said. "They may be in technical compliance with the law, but from appearance's perspective there could be abuse."

Zinke is under investigation by OSC and the Interior Department's inspector general. The FEC has separately raised questions about VIGOP's spending and is looking into Zinke's former leadership PAC, which relied on many of the same political consultants as the VIGOP.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/article/2017/12/interior-reimbursed-for-zinke-virgin-island-fundraiser-but-contributions-unaccounted-for-226980>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Energy Influence; Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; interior\_news@updates.interior.gov
Subject: Interior Repeals Defective Federal Mineral Valuation Rule
Date: Monday, August 07, 2017 4:11:26 PM

---

news release

Date: August 7, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Interior Repeals Defective Federal Mineral Valuation Rule

Clears the way for developing clearer, more workable regulations for accurate accounting and valuation of oil, gas and coal from Federal and Indian leases

WASHINGTON – To create more workable oil, gas and mineral valuation regulations and avoid costly litigation, the Department of the Interior today announced the repeal of the Consolidated Federal Oil and Gas and Federal and Indian Coal Valuation Reform Rule (Valuation Rule) which had created confusion and uncertainty regarding how companies report and pay royalties on energy and other mineral resources from federal onshore and offshore areas and American Indian lands.

The repeal of the Valuation Rule, published today in the Federal Register and effective on September 6, 2017, will provide certainty and clarity to the regulated community by continuing to require compliance with lawful and well-known oil, gas, and coal regulations in force for more than a decade. These regulations are easy to understand and provide certainty to industry and the Office of Natural Resources Revenue (ONRR) that correct payment has been made.

“Repealing the Valuation Rule provides a clean slate to create workable valuation regulations,” said Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke. “We are committed to working closely with stakeholders and the newly chartered Royalty Policy Committee to explore options for future rulemakings and to avoid the structural defects that were found in the prior rule. The Department and the Office of Natural Resources Revenue remain committed to collecting every dollar due. These are taxpayer and American Indian assets, and the public and American Indians deserve an accurate accounting and valuation.”

“The United States is a safer and more sustainable nation when we rely on our own natural resource development,” Secretary Zinke emphasized. “Repealing the Valuation Rule restores our economic freedom by ensuring our energy independence. The increased costs associated with the Valuation Rule had the potential to decrease exploration and production on Federal lands, both onshore and offshore, making us rely more and more on foreign imports of oil and gas.”

“I support Interior’s decision to repeal this rule and provide greater certainty to companies seeking to produce our valuable domestic resources, from Alaska to the Atlantic,” Senator Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) said. “While the federal government will continue to collect its fair share of revenues from responsible development, the repeal of this rule will help prevent negative impacts to exploration and production that would put our energy dominance at stake.”

“This rescindment is another important step by the Trump administration to position Interior as a facilitator of responsible energy development,” said House Natural Resources Committee Chairman Rob Bishop (R-UT). “I look forward to working with Secretary Zinke on ONRR policies and many other areas to spur more investment in Federal and Indian lands, foster greater regulatory certainty and eliminate or address pre-existing policies that work against these goals.”

“The Obama Administration's changes to royalties for coal, oil, and natural gas was just one in a series of barriers it put up to hold back energy production on federal lands,” said Congressional Coal Caucus Chairman David McKinley, P.E. (R-WV). “Returning to the more reasonable previous standards paves the way for further investment and development of energy resources. I applaud Secretary Zinke’s commitment to supporting American energy dominance.”

“This Obama-era rule was another misguided attack on affordable energy that would have caused significant harm to tribal, rural and Western economies,” said Congressional Western Caucus Chairman Paul Gosar (AZ-04). “This burdensome new regulation would have bankrupt small businesses, discouraged responsible energy production and hit the pocketbooks of hard-working American families. Furthermore, the rule would have imposed unnecessary and costly new reporting requirements that would have siphoned important revenues from local community coffers and the U.S. Treasury, creating a problem where there wasn’t one and having the opposite effect of what the regulation intended. I applaud Secretary Zinke’s leadership and am grateful he took action to provide certainty for job creators and to protect good-paying careers that are the backbone of many of our communities.”

Developed by ONRR, the stated intent of the Valuation Rule was to offer greater simplicity, certainty, clarity and consistency in product valuation and reporting for federal and Indian mineral lessees. However, industry stakeholders and trade associations filed three lawsuits challenging the rule. The petitioners also sent a joint letter to the ONRR Director asserting that it would be impossible for them to comply with the rule’s new royalty reporting and payment requirements by the deadline, exposing non-compliant lessees to significant civil penalties. In response to these and other concerns lessees expressed in writing and workshops, ONRR identified several areas in the rule warranting reconsideration to meet policy and implementation objectives. ONRR stayed the Valuation Rule on February 27, 2017 via Federal Register Notice and published an April 4, 2017 Notice of Proposed Rulemaking to repeal the rule.

Because provisions in the Valuation Rule increased the regulatory burden on the nation’s energy production, repealing the rule will reduce costs to oil, gas, and coal companies that would otherwise be passed to the American consumer. This greater efficiency for payors will reduce industry cost of compliance and ONRR's cost to ensure industry compliance, consistent with the Secretary's responsibility to the public, to good governance and to trust responsibilities to American Indian mineral owners to appropriately value production.

Members of the oil, gas, and coal industries also expressed support for parts of the Valuation Rule, as have members of environmental groups and the general public. The Department intends to further evaluate changes that may be warranted to the long-established oil, gas and coal regulations through the Royalty Policy Committee and publicly-vetted rulemaking, ensuring that valuation and revenue collection for the nation's mineral and hydrocarbon resources remain transparent and consistent, while the taxpayers receive every dollar due from resources on their public lands and offshore areas. The Royalty Policy Committee is chaired by Vincent DeVito, Counselor to the Secretary for Energy Policy, and the Executive Director is James Schindler.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; interior\_news@updates.interior.gov
Subject: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's Statement on the End of the Monuments Review Public Comment Period
Date: Tuesday, July 11, 2017 12:43:59 PM

---

news release

Date: July 11, 2017
Contact: Interior\_Press@ios.doi.gov

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's Statement on the End of the Monuments Review Public Comment Period

(WASHINGTON) – On Monday, July 10, the formal public comment period closed for the review of national monuments. More than 1.2 million comments were received on Regulations.gov and thousands more were received via traditional mail. Twenty-seven national monuments designated since January 1, 1996 that are more than 100,000 acres, or that were considered to have inadequate public input are under review in accordance with President Donald J. Trump's April 26, 2017, executive order.

“Too often under previous administrations, decisions were made in the Washington, D.C., bubble, far removed from the local residents who actually work the land and have to live with the consequences of D.C.’s actions. This monument review is the exact opposite,” said Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. “President Trump and I opened the formal public comment period – the first-ever for monuments designated under the Antiquities Act – in order to give local stakeholders a voice in the decision-making process. After hearing some feedback, I’d like to remind and reassure folks that even if a monument is modified, the land will remain under federal ownership. I am strictly opposed to the sale or transfer of our public lands, and nothing in this review changes that policy.

“These comments, in addition to the extensive on-the-ground tours of monuments and meetings with stakeholders, will help inform my recommendations on the monuments,” Zinke said. “I appreciate everyone who took the time to log-on or write in and participate in our government.”

As required by the executive order, Secretary Zinke submitted an interim report to the White House in June with various recommendations and observations on Bears Ears National Monument, which suggested the monument be reduced in size to conform with the intent of the Antiquities Act, that of designating the smallest compatible area. The report also recommended the creation of a national conservation area, and official co-management by the local Tribal governments.

The report came after Zinke spent several days on the ground in Utah touring the monument by air, car, foot, and horseback, speaking with stakeholders from Tribal, local, state and federal government, as well as representatives from the conservation, historic preservation, agriculture, tourism, and education sectors. The Secretary met with the Bears Ears InterTribal Coalition while in Salt Lake City on May 7, and the Acting Deputy Secretary Jim Cason held a four-hour follow-up meeting with the Bears Ears Commission and the InterTribal Coalition on May 25.

The Secretary also traveled to Maine’s Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument, and to Boston to hold meetings on the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts National Marine Monument off the coast of New England. The Secretary plans to visit Oregon, New Mexico, and Nevada in the coming weeks.

Regarding the comment period, the executive order stated:

In making the requisite determinations, the Secretary is directed to consider:

(i) the requirements and original objectives of the Act, including the Act’s requirement that reservations of land not exceed “the smallest area compatible with the proper care and management of the objects to be protected”;

(ii) whether designated lands are appropriately classified under the Act as “historic landmarks, historic and prehistoric structures, [or] other objects of historic or scientific interest”;

(iii) the effects of a designation on the available uses of designated Federal lands, including consideration of the multiple-use policy of section 102(a)(7) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1701(a)(7)), as well as the effects on the available uses of Federal lands beyond the monument boundaries;

(iv) the effects of a designation on the use and enjoyment of non-Federal lands within or beyond monument boundaries;

(v) concerns of State, tribal, and local governments affected by a designation, including the economic development and fiscal condition of affected States, tribes, and localities;

(vi) the availability of Federal resources to properly manage designated areas; and

(vii) such other factors as the Secretary deems appropriate.

82 FR 20429-20430 (May 1, 2017).

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; interior\_news@updates.interior.gov
Subject: Interior Secretary Zinke Announces Nomination of Joe Balash
Date: Thursday, July 20, 2017 1:29:06 PM

---

news release

Date: July 20, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Interior Secretary Zinke Applauds Nomination of Alaska’s Joe Balash as Assistant Secretary for Land and Mineral

WASHINGTON – President Donald J. Trump announced his intent to nominate Alaska’s Joe Balash to serve as the Department of the Interior’s Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management. A native of North Pole, Alaska, living in Washington D.C., Balash brings more than 19 years of experience in land and natural resource management.

Mr. Balash currently serves as the Chief of Staff to Alaska’s Senator Dan Sullivan. He is the former Commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, which has management responsibility for one of the largest single portfolios of land and water resources in the world, containing more than 100 million acres of uplands, 40-60 million acres of submerged lands and tidelands, and more than 500,000 barrels of oil produced daily.

“It’s been a long time since the Department had an Assistant Secretary from Alaska, and the President’s nomination of Joe Balash further proves his commitment to Alaska and rural America as a whole,” said Secretary Zinke. “Joe is no stranger to the Department of the Interior having worked alongside the Department on a number of projects in Alaska. He brings an incredible combination of state and federal experience to the table, and he will be very effective in helping the Department work with Congress to do the work of the American people. I look forward to his speedy confirmation in the Senate.”

“I am deeply honored to be able to serve at the Department of the Interior,” said Joe Balash. “As a nation, we are blessed with tremendous public lands and resources that give our people unparalleled opportunities for recreation and job creation for generations to come. I look forward to working with Secretary Zinke and his incredible team to seize on those opportunities and deliver on President Trump’s America First Energy Plan.”

“While I’m sad to see Joe leave the Senate, his departure is a big gain for Secretary Zinke, the Department of Interior, the United States and Alaska,” said Senator Sullivan. “His wealth of knowledge and passion for Alaska – and more broadly federal land issues – cannot be overstated. His advice and counsel on natural resource matters will be invaluable as Secretary Zinke and the Trump administration chart a new path toward American energy dominance. Alaska can and should be a critical element of this important national objective.”

“Joe Balash is an excellent choice for Assistant Secretary for Lands and Minerals Management, and I’m incredibly pleased that Secretary Zinke has chosen him for this important position,” Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairman Lisa Murkowski said. “From his time in the Alaska Governor’s Office and as Commissioner of Natural Resources, to his service as a Senate Chief of Staff, Joe is uniquely qualified for this role. He has significant experience on energy and resource policy, a demonstrated record of upholding Alaska’s interests as a landowner, and will make sure that America’s interests are well represented at the Interior Department.”

“The work being done by this administration in the areas of energy and public lands – including efforts to unleash our nation’s energy potential and reform years of mismanagement by our agencies – is something we value greatly as Alaskans,” said Congressman Don Young. “Critical to these efforts is the appointment of individuals and staff that understand the real-world impacts and consequences their decisions have on public lands and resources-oriented states like mine. As the Congressman for the state that was often ground zero for the countless missteps of the previous Interior Department, I commend Secretary Zinke for making Alaska a top-priority as he assembles his team. The addition of Joe Balash – someone I’ve worked with closely during his service as the Chief of Staff to Senator Dan Sullivan, a former Commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources and ardent supporter of responsible resource development – is an important step to begin solving the many challenges Alaskans and Americans have faced when dealing with the Department of the Interior.”

“Joe Balash’s appointment as Assistant Secretary will be good for Alaska and great for our nation. He is smart, honest, fair, and focused on solving problems and challenges in accordance with law while maximizing opportunity for Americans,” said former Alaska Governor Sean Parnell. “He knows how to work with diverse groups of people and interests to protect our nation’s interests in her public lands and environment while maximizing job creation and opportunity for all Americans. From an Alaska perspective, it is good to know that our state will have someone at Interior who understands the complexity of Alaska issues and the people affected by decision making in Washington. Joe Balash’s selection is, indeed, an extremely solid pick for the President and for the people.”

"As a lifelong Alaskan who understands the importance for the responsible management of our resources, I can't think of anyone who would do a better job at the Department of the Interior for all Americans," said Eddie Grasser, Vice-President, Safari Club International.

“Joe will make an excellent Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals. He brings to the office a wealth of experience and skills. First of all, he understands the importance of energy development, both on and offshore. Alaska is a great training ground for the decisions that are important to the rest of the United States in overall energy policy,” said Randall Luthi, the President of the National Ocean Industries Association. “His legislative experience will bode well for the Department with the Hill. His experience as Commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources means that he understands the importance of collecting different views and assuring energy development and the protection of other natural resources. The members of NOIA look forward to working with him to expand the US energy potential off our shores.”

“We welcome the pick of Mr. Balash as the assistant secretary of Land and Minerals Management. With his background as commissioner for natural resources in Alaska, Balash brings a depth of experience to Secretary Zinke and the Department of Interior,” said Erik Milito, API group director of Upstream and Industry Operations. “He should be a tremendous asset in helping to prioritize energy development and further strengthen U.S. energy and national security. We look forward to continuing to work with the Department of Interior on policies that will help keep energy affordable, create jobs, and protect our environment.”

As the Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management, Balash will advise and oversee the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement and the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement. The Assistant Secretary heads the Department of the Interior’s management of all federal lands and waters, and their associated mineral and non-mineral resources, as well as the appropriate regulation of surface coal mining. The Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management is committed to managing, protecting, and improving lands and waters to serve the needs of the American people at all times.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: U.S. Department of the Interior
To: alex\_hinson@ios.doi.gov; heather\_swift@ios.doi.gov; laura\_rigas@ios.doi.gov; lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Interior Secretary Zinke Announces Nomination of Joe Balash: TEST
Date: Wednesday, July 19, 2017 6:29:43 PM

---

news release

Date: July 19, 2017
Contact: Interior_Press@ios.doi.gov

Interior Secretary Zinke Applauds Nomination of Alaska's Joe Balash as Assistant Secretary for Land and Mineral

WASHINGTON – President Donald J. Trump announced his intent to nominate Alaska's Joe Balash to serve as the Department of the Interior's Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management. A native of North Pole, Alaska, living in Washington D.C., Balash brings more than 19 years of experience in land and natural resource management.

Mr. Balash currently serves as the Chief of Staff to Alaska's Senator Dan Sullivan. He is the former Commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, which has management responsibility for one of the largest single portfolios of land and water resources in the world. That Alaska Department of Natural Resources portfolio, containing more than 100 million acres of uplands, 40-60 million acres of submerged lands and tidelands, and more than 500,000 barrels of oil produced daily.

"It's been a long time since the Department had an Assistant Secretary from Alaska, and the President's nomination of Joe Balash further proves his commitment to Alaska and rural America as a whole," said Secretary Zinke. "Joe is no stranger to the Department of the Interior having worked alongside the Department on a number of projects in Alaska. He brings an incredible combination of state and federal experience to the table, and he will be very effective in helping the Department work with Congress to do the work of the American people. I look forward to his speedy confirmation in the Senate."

"I am deeply honored to be able to serve at the Department of the Interior," said Joe Balash. "As a nation, we are blessed with tremendous public lands and resources that give our people unparalleled opportunities for recreation and job creation for generations to come. I look forward to working with Secretary Zinke and his incredible team to seize on those opportunities and deliver on President Trump's America First Energy Plan."

"While I'm sad to see Joe leave the Senate, his departure is a big gain for Secretary Zinke, the Department of Interior, the United States and Alaska," said Senator Dan Sullivan. "His wealth of knowledge and passion for Alaska – and more broadly federal land issues – cannot be overstated. His advice and counsel on natural resource matters will be invaluable as Secretary Zinke and the Trump administration chart a new path toward American energy dominance. Alaska can and should be a critical element of this important national objective."

"Joe Balash is an excellent choice for Assistant Secretary for Lands and Minerals Management, and I'm incredibly pleased that Secretary Zinke has chosen him for this important position," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairman Lisa Murkowski said. "From his time in the Alaska Governor's Office and as Commissioner of Natural Resources, to his service as a Senate Chief of Staff, Joe is uniquely qualified for this role. He has significant experience on energy and resource policy, a demonstrated record of upholding Alaska's interests as a landowner, and will make sure that America's interests are well represented at the Interior Department."

"The work being done by this administration in the areas of energy and public lands – including efforts to unleash our nation's energy potential and reform years of mismanagement by our agencies – is something we value greatly as Alaskans," said Congressman Don Young. "Critical to these efforts is the appointment of individuals and staff that understand the real-world impacts and consequences their decisions have on public lands and resources-oriented states like mine. As the Congressman for the state that was often ground zero for the countless missteps of the previous Interior Department, I commend Secretary Zinke for making Alaska a top-priority as he assembles his team. The addition of Joe Balash – someone I've worked with closely during his service as the Chief of Staff to Senator Dan Sullivan, a former Commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources and ardent supporter of responsible resource development – is an important step to begin solving the many challenges Alaskans and Americans have faced when dealing with the Department of the Interior."

"Joe Balash's appointment as Assistant Secretary will be good for Alaska and great for our nation. He is smart, honest, fair, and focused on solving problems and challenges in accordance with law while maximizing opportunity for Americans," said former Alaska Governor Sean Parnell. "He knows how to work with diverse groups of people and interests to protect our nation's interests in her public lands and environment while maximizing job creation and opportunity for all Americans. From an Alaska perspective, it is good to know that our state will have someone at Interior who understands the complexity of Alaska issues and the people affected by decision making in Washington. Joe Balash's selection is, indeed, an extremely solid pick for the President and for the people."

"As a lifelong Alaskan who understands the importance for the responsible management of our resources, I can't think of anyone who would do a better job at the Department of the Interior for all Americans," said Eddie Grasser, Vice President, Safari Club International.

"We welcome the pick of Joe as the Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management," stated Khary Cauthen, American Petroleum Institute, senior director of Federal Affairs. "He has a deep understanding of what our nation's natural resources mean for our national and economic security. We look forward to working with Joe and this administration to ensure the U.S. continues to benefit from our nation's energy renaissance."

“Joe will make an excellent Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals. He brings to the office a wealth of experience and skills. First of all, he understands the importance of energy development, both on and offshore. Alaska is a great training ground for the decisions that are important to the rest of the United States in overall energy policy,” said Randall Luthi, the President of the National Ocean Industries Association. “His legislative experience will bode well for the Department with the Hill. His experience as Commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources means that he understands the importance of collecting different views and assuring energy development and the protection of other natural resources. The members of NOIA look forward to working with him to expand the US energy potential off our shores.”

"We welcome the pick of Mr. Balash as the assistant secretary of Land and Minerals Management. With his background as commissioner for natural resources in Alaska, Balash brings a depth of experience to Secretary Zinke and the Department of Interior," said Erik Milito, API group director of Upstream and Industry Operations. “He should be a tremendous asset in helping to prioritize energy development and further strengthen U.S. energy and national security. We look forward to continuing to work with the Department of Interior on policies that will help keep energy affordable, create jobs, and protect our environment.”

As the Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management, Balash will advise and oversee the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement and the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement. The Assistant Secretary heads the Department of the Interior’s management of all federal lands and waters, and their associated mineral and non-mineral resources, as well as the appropriate regulation of surface coal mining. The Assistant Secretary for land and Minerals Management is committed to managing, protecting, and improving lands and waters to serve the needs of the American people at all times.

###

Update subscription | Unsubscribe | Help | Contact Us

---

This email was sent to Email Address by: U.S. Department of the Interior · 1849 C Street, N.W. · Washington
DC 20240 · 202-208-3100

From: POLITICO Pro Energy Whiteboard
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior to reverse Obama sage grouse land protection, reconsider pacts with states
Date: Thursday, October 05, 2017 2:04:30 PM

---

By Esther Whieldon

10/05/2017 01:57 PM EDT

The Interior Department says it is terminating the Obama administration's proposal to block mining on about 10 million acres of sage grouse habitat in the West, and it announced plans to alter the land-use plans the agency put in place in 2015.

In notices posted on its website that will be published in the Federal Register, the Bureau of Land Management terminated its plans set out under the Obama administration for an environmental impact statement that would have potentially led to the agency withdrawing land in so-called sagebrush focal areas in Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah and Wyoming.

"The BLM has determined that the lands are no longer needed in connection with the proposed withdrawal," the notice says.

The agency is also asking for comment on changing the nearly 100 land-use plans BLM put in place under an agreement with states in lieu of listing the bird as either endangered or threatened under the Endangered Species Act.

BLM said it is re-opening the plans to comply with to a court decision earlier this year that held the agency did not adequately evaluate the designation of sagebrush focal areas in its 2015 greater sage-grouse plan amendment for Nevada.

WHAT'S NEXT: BLM will accept comments on the land use plan changes for 45 days after the notice is published in the Federal Register.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/10/interior-to-reverse-obama-sage-grouse-land-protection-reconsider-pacts-with-states-093991>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Conservation; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: Laura Rigas
To: Heather Swift; Alex Hinson; downey\_magallanes@ios.doi.gov; douglas\_domenech@ios.doi.gov; micah\_chambers@ios.doi.gov; Lori Mashburn; Russell Newell
Subject: INTERIOR: Murkowski to press Zinke on climate scientist's reassignment -- Thursday, July 20, 2017 -- www.eenews.net
Date: Thursday, July 20, 2017 4:41:38 PM

---

<https://www.eenews.net/eenewspm/2017/07/20/stories/1060057693>

Laura Keehner Rigas
Communications Director
U.S. Department of the Interior
(202) 897-7022 cell
@Interior

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Interior's "fire sale" for oil leases may come up short
Date: Friday, October 27, 2017 5:04:59 AM

---

Interior's 'fire sale' for oil leases may come up short

By Ben Lefebvre

10/27/2017 05:01 AM EDT

The Interior Department's latest attempt to jump-start President Donald Trump's pledge to unleash American "energy dominance" might run into cold market reality.

Interior plans to offer up for lease every available tract in the Gulf of Mexico as well as every open acre in Alaska's National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska in a bid to spur more oil and gas development. But with oil still hovering at $50 a barrel, and private land available in West Texas and North Dakota for fracking, Interior's plan to flood the market may find relatively few takers, experts said.

"It's almost like having a fire sale of all the acreage," said Ken Medlock, director of the Baker Institute's Center for Energy Studies at Rice University. "Wouldn't surprise me at all if there's a lot of acreage that doesn't sell."

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has said making the federal land available would prime the pump for more oil and gas production. The department plans to offer 10 million onshore acres in the NPR in northern Alaska in December and 77 million offshore acres across the entire Gulf of Mexico in March. And Interior will start offering leases for the entire Gulf of Mexico twice a year, a change from the previous practice of annual lease sales offering only specific portions of the Gulf at any given time.

"In today's low-price energy environment, providing the offshore industry access to the maximum amount of opportunities possible is part of our strategy to spur local and regional economic dynamism and job creation and a pillar of President Trump's plan to make the United States energy dominant," Zinke said in the offshore lease announcement.

While the lease sales are likely to generate some money for the federal government, analysts said the agency might be limited to a short-term cash infusion from the bids themselves, rather than generating much in royalties on production, since many companies would likely sit on the acreage and wait for oil prices to rise before drilling.

"Bidding on those leases generates revenue in [the first year] for the U.S. taxpayer, which has a benefit all its own," said Kevin Book, managing director for research at ClearView Energy Partners LLC. "As a result, offering as much as possible for lease may have the effect of maximizing bid bonuses, particularly if the leases come with favorable terms."

Interior's lease sales likely won't spur much oil and gas development in the Gulf or Alaska, however. The remoteness of both areas means production costs are high, making new projects in those locations a tough sell to companies that are grappling with low oil prices and are focused on increasing production in the lower 48 states.

U.S. oil production averaged 8.8 million barrels a day last year, up from 5.6 million barrels in 2011, according to Energy Information Administration data. Nearly 1 million barrels per day of U.S. crude are being exported this year.

Deep-water offshore projects cost billions of dollars and can take a decade to develop, and many companies have slashed spending in those areas, according to a recent report from market consulting agency IHS Markit.

The most likely outcome of the Gulf lease sale will be a modest number of companies picking up acreage adjacent to drilling rigs they already have operating, analysts said. That means that the March offshore lease sale may see a repeat of the result from the big offshore sale Interior held in August, said Justin Devery, a principal energy researcher at IHS Markit.

Interior had touted that last offshore lease sale as the biggest ever held by the department, with leases for 76 million acres up for sale. But the revenues for the government still fell relatively short, with Interior garnering $121 million from bids on 508,096 acres.

"The last [sale] was big and wide and there were only about 100 bids, so it wasn't an overwhelming response, that's for sure," Devery said. "The guys out there, they're adding inventories, adding to plays they already have, but there's no wildcatting going on. They're still showing up [to the lease sales], just not buying a lot."

In Alaska, there may be even less interest. BLM offered 1.5 million acres in the NPR-A in December 2016, and oil companies bid on only 613,528 acres.

ConocoPhillips, which announced in January a promising discovery in the area, accounted for nearly half of the 92 overall bids in that sale, with only three other, smaller companies participating. ConocoPhillips declined to say whether it was interested in properties in the upcoming NPR-A lease sale.

Oil companies already hold leases for just over 1 million acres of federal lands in Alaska, according to government data. Of that, only 16,822 acres are in production.

The remainder of those are acres the public cannot use and are not generating income for taxpayers, noted Nada Culver, senior counsel and director of the Wilderness Society's BLM Action Center.

"We will lose the ability to use those lands, and at the same time we're not necessarily going to see a return," Culver said. "So the American taxpayer is getting ripped off twice — you can't use these lands, and you're not getting a return on them letting these companies lock them up."

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/story/2017/10/interiors-fire-sale-for-oil-leases-may-come-up-short-163987>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include:

Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Is Trump delivering "energy dominance"?
Date: Wednesday, December 27, 2017 9:13:55 AM

---

Is Trump delivering 'energy dominance'?

By Ben Lefebvre

12/27/2017 09:11 AM EDT

President Donald Trump's pledge to establish U.S. "energy dominance" has been a key pillar of his America First platform, but after a year in office, his efforts seem destined to have only a modest impact on oil and gas production while setting back some of the fastest growing energy technologies.

Trump's call for energy dominance dates back to his May 2016 campaign rally in North Dakota, and pushing for energy production growth was the subject of one of his first executive orders. That directive was designed to unshackle the industry from what Republicans had decried as the burdens placed by the Obama administration on fossil fuel companies.

"They put American energy under lock and key," Trump said of the Obama administration in a speech unveiling the National Security Strategy earlier this month. "We have unlocked America's vast energy resources."

The good news for Trump is that the country is ending 2017 with record high oil and gas production. But the bad news is that the surge in energy output that started a decade ago may be nearing a plateau, and some experts worry that Trump's policies will hinder the shift to newer technologies that are likely to play a central role in the global economy in the coming years.

That includes renewable energy and electric vehicles, which could suffer setbacks if Trump erects trade barriers to solar imports and rolls back the aggressive vehicle fuel economy rules put in place under the Obama administration that experts say are crucial to driving investments in electric vehicles.

"The highest growing energy sources in the world are emerging technologies — electric vehicles and renewables — and this administration has proposed slashing the budget for clean energy," said Jason Bordoff, founding director of Columbia University's Center on Global Energy Policy. "We need to continue to invest in tomorrow's technologies, not only the ones we're using today."

U.S. oil production has nearly doubled during the past 10 years to an estimated 9.2 million barrels per day in 2017, and natural gas output has climbed by about 5 percent over that period to 73.5 billion cubic feet per day this year, a result of the massive investments by companies to deploy hydraulic fracturing and horizontal drilling technologies to unlock the resources trapped in shale rock. And now, industry consultants Wood MacKenzie are forecasting production will flatten out at 11.5 million barrels a day by 2026.

While adding another 2 million barrels a day to U.S. production is significant, it's a far cry from what Trump claimed at a rally in Pensacola, Fla., this month, when he said, "We are pursuing American energy dominance. And by the end of this year we will be totally self-sufficient." Even with the rising oil production, the U.S. imports nearly 8 million barrels of crude per day.

Trump's big bet is that cutting regulations and opening up areas that have long been closed off for drilling will boost oil and gas production even further. But the federal government's influence mainly extends to federal lands, so there may be little effect on the industry that is mostly clustered on private property in west Texas, North Dakota, Pennsylvania and elsewhere, analysts said.

"Shale resources are on private and state-owned lands, so that's where economic resources are," said Nick Loris, The Heritage Foundation's Fellow in Energy and Environmental Policy Nick Loris. "Because we were fortunate that the shale plays were on state and privately owned lands, we are already energy dominant."

Interior Department records show that companies have pulled back on the amount of federal land they've sought for drilling since 2006, when oil prices reached a peak near $145 a barrel. After the latest drop in prices in 2014, the number of oil and gas leases issued by the Bureau of Land Management fell to just 520 in 2016, the latest year for which information is available, far below the 3,746 it approved in 2006.

The number of wells drilled on federal land peaked at 5,343 in fiscal year 2007 before steadily dwindling to 847 last year, a decline that's in line with the drop in the U.S. oil price benchmark. But it also represents a relative pittance in overall U.S. drilling activity: Exxon Mobil and other companies started 38,186 wells throughout the country in 2008, a number that only experienced a prolonged significant drop when it fell to 19,014 in 2015, according to data from S&P Platts Global. The number was 16,806 near the end of December 2017.

The Trump administration's effort to draw companies back onto federal land has so far been a bust. In December, Interior offered every acre it had available in Alaska to drilling companies. Only two companies bid — ConocoPhillips and Anadarko Petroleum — yielding a modest $1.2 million for the federal coffers according to auction results data.

And with oil prices now at little more than a third of their June 2008 peak, expensive drilling operations in the federal waters in the Gulf of Mexico also lost their luster just as the shale gas boom starting to gain traction onshore. In March 2013, companies bid $1.2 billion for 1.7 million acres just in the central Gulf region, far more demand than the August sale for the entirety of the Gulf of Mexico that drew just $121 million for 508,096 acres.

Still, energy industry lobbyists contend that opening more federal acres to drilling is keeping in the spirit of a free market. Oil and gas companies may not need the acres today, but would prefer to have them on hand in case oil demand picks up, said Chris Guith, senior vice president for policy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Global Energy Institute.

"Some areas might not garner initial interest," Guith said. "But I'd prefer that possibility to there being great interest but regulators preventing access."

Trump has also said his approvals of the Keystone XL and Dakota Access pipeline have helped U.S. move toward energy dominance. While Dakota Access has been delivering oil from North Dakota to the Midwest, Keystone XL has still not started construction, and its developer, TransCanada, is still deciding whether to proceed after regulators in Nebraska approved added new restrictions on its route through the state.

Meanwhile, the administration is pushing exports of liquefied natural gas, even sending EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt on an unusual trip to Morocco this month to pitch the fuel. That business could be promising, but so far, of the 11 LNG export projects approved under the Obama administration, only one, Cheniere's Sabine Pass plant, has finished construction and started shipping.

The Trump administration's moves clearing the way for LNG shippers to deal directly with China, may offer an opportunity for LNG shipments grow and create more demand for U.S. gas, but so far they have come up short. Even an announcement of potential deal between China's Sinopec to buy into an Alaskan LNG project has drawn some skepticism, since several U.S. companies have previously walked away from the project, whose cost is believed to be far higher than the $43 billion estimated by Sinopec and the Alaska Gasline Development Corp.

European buyers have also been reluctant to commit to long-term contracts with U.S. LNG producers, and instead seem content to buy on the open market that is well supplied.

And part of the difficulties in winning new business could be partly to blame on Trump's talk of dominating global energy markets, which has raised hackles in Europe, said Frank Verrastro, senior vice president at the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

"We always derided other countries such as Russia that used energy as a geopolitical lever," Verrastro said. "Dominance suggests there is a subordinate role, and some people chafe at that."

Trump has pointed to a bounce in coal production as a victory for his policies, since output, which languished for years as coal-fired power plants shut down, grew eight percent during the first 11 months of this year to reach 719 million tons on the back of rising exports. But the Energy Information Administration expects that domestic coal production will fall next year "because of lower exports and no growth in coal consumption."

So far, the one new coal mine to open this year, the Acosta Mine near Pittsburgh, will employ 70 people full-time to mine a type of coal used in making steel, not the more prevalent thermal coal.

While the administration is giving the next wave of renewable energy short shrift, solar, wind and other next-generation power sources are forecast to generate 10 percent of the country's electricity this year, according to the EIA. Instead of looking to renewable to decrease the country's still-sizable dependency on oil imports, Trump has often dismissed the sector's potential and proposed slashing federal research into lowering the cost of solar power projects, and has come under fire for illegally withholding grant money awarded to advance energy research projects.

Trump, a long time foe of wind power, also dismissed the technology at his recent rally in Florida. "The windmills are wonderful, but when the wind does not blow, it causes problems. 'We have no energy this week,'" Trump said.

The biggest setback for renewables could come next month, when the administration is expected to erect tariffs on imports of solar panels, a move supported by Suniva, a company majority-owned by a Chinese firm, and the German-owned SolarWorld. Advocates of the trade barrier says it will level the playing field with Chinese solar manufacturers that have received state support, and help bolster U.S. panel manufacturing. But the U.S. solar industry and even the conservative Wall Street Journal editorial board are largely opposed to moves that will drive up the cost of solar, which has become competitive with coal and natural gas in many parts of the country.

"The solar industry created one in every 51 jobs last year, and grew 17 times faster than the rest of the economy," said Solar Energy Industries Association President and Chief Executive Abigail Ross Hopper. "President Trump can put America First and play a significant role in the growth of our industry by rejecting the tariff requests of two foreign-owned companies."

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/article/2017/12/is-trump-delivering-energy-dominance-250250>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Infrastructure; Energy: Regulations; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: Jorjani, Daniel
To: David Bernhardt; Lori Mashburn
Subject: Izembek
Date: Monday, January 01, 2018 12:01:15 PM

---

David and Lori - Who has the lead within DOI for locking down a date that works for POTUS, RZK, and Murkowski for the King Cove signing?

From: POLITICO Pro Energy Whiteboard
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: "Largest ever" Interior Alaska oil lease sale draws little interest
Date: Wednesday, December 06, 2017 8:29:12 PM

---

By Ben Lefebvre

12/06/2017 08:26 PM EDT

The Interior Department received only seven bids from two companies today in what it had billed as the "largest ever" oil and gas lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska.

The bids on the 10.3 million unleased acres in the NPR-A generated just $1.2 million in high bids, according to a Bureau of Land Management summary. The relatively low amount could undercut GOP arguments that opening up the nearby Arctic National Wildlife Refuge would generate $1 billion in revenue.

A BLM Alaska lease sale last year generated $18 million for 1.4 million acres offered.

Subsidiaries of ConocoPhillips and Anadarko were the only two companies that participated in the lease sale. The companies only bid for 80,000 acres, or less than 1 percent of the acreage offered. The highest bid amount was $14.99 per acre.

Low oil prices and the relatively cheap and plentiful land available for hydraulic fracturing in the lower 48 has hurt oil company interest in the out-of-the-way fields of Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) have pushed to open more public land to drilling, however, saying that doing so is important to increase domestic energy production.

Zinke had previously said that today's "large and unprecedented sale in Alaska will help achieve our goal of American Energy Dominance."

An Interior spokesperson did not immediately respond to questions.

WHAT'S NEXT: Republicans hope to keep ANWR drilling provisions in their budget proposal.

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/energy/whiteboard/2017/12/largest-ever-interior-alaska-oil-lease-sale-draws-little-interest-211280>

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Energy: Ryan Zinke; Energy: Interior Department. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: Robert Graboyes
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov
Subject: Mercatus Annual Dinner
Date: Thursday, November 30, 2017 10:43:31 AM

---

Lori,

It was a pleasure talking with you at the Mercatus Annual Dinner. So glad to have had the chance to chat.

Let's stay in touch. If I can be of service, please don't hesitate to let me know.

If you're interested in a peek at my work on health care, you can find it on the Mercatus website: <http://mercatus.org/robert-graboyes> or on my personal website: http://www.robertgraboyes.com/Index\_files/Work,%20Mercatus,%202013-date.pdf.

And Alanna always asks about you and Lydia. So you'll need to come by sometime.

Cheers,
Bob

Robert F. Graboyes, PhD / Senior Research Fellow

Mercatus Center at George Mason University / 3434 Washington Blvd, 4th floor / Arlington, VA 22201
(703) 993-9671 / @Robert_Graboyes / rgraboyes@mercatus.gmu.edu / www.mercatus.org
Professor (Health Economics): Virginia Commonwealth University & University of Virginia

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by Freight Rail Works: Congress Reconvenes for Deadline-Packed September
Date: Tuesday, September 05, 2017 9:13:26 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Congress reconvenes today with less than a month to reach a legislative agreement that would avoid a government shutdown and raise the debt ceiling. Both issues are being overshadowed by the rising cost of the federal response to Hurricane Harvey. (Bloomberg)
- Florida Gov. Rick Scott (R) declared a state of emergency Monday as chances increased that south Florida could feel the effects of Hurricane Irma, which is now a Category 5 hurricane. (USA Today)
- President Donald Trump is scheduled to meet today with key players on tax reform, including House Speaker Paul Ryan, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and the chairmen of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee. (Politico)

- Attorney General Jeff Sessions is scheduled to speak today about President Donald Trump's plan to delay a decision on the fate of about 800,000 people protected from deportation under the Obama administration's Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. Trump wants Congress to come up with a legislative solution. (The New York Times)

Chart Review

DACA has shielded nearly 790,000 young unauthorized immigrants from deportation

Pew Research Center

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

Heritage Foundation event on BRAC 10:30 a.m.

---

William Julius Wilson, J.D. Vance speak at Brookings Institution event 3:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

Atlantic Council discussion on modernizing NAFTA, North

American energy sector 9 a.m.

---

EPA public hearing on mid-term evaluations for greenhouse gas emissions standards 9 a.m.

---

Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on U.S.- Turkey relations 10:30 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup of the FY2018 Labor, HHS, Education appropriations bill 11 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup of FY2018 State & Foreign Operations appropriations bill 2 p.m.

THURSDAY

CAP event on part-time college students 10 a.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on Children's Health Insurance Program 10 a.m.

---

House Armed Services Committee hearing on problems with USS Fitzgerald, USS John S. McCain 2 p.m.

FRIDAY

Govs. Hickenlooper, Kasich discuss health care proposal at AEI 9:15 a.m.

---

Brookings Institution event on foreign cyber interference in U.S. elections 10:30 a.m.

SPONSORED BY FREIGHT RAIL WORKS

By investing billions in private dollars, not taxpayer funds, America's freight railroads have built a transportation network that is the envy of the world. This investment has ensured that U.S. industry remains competitive in the global economy. The lynchpin that makes it all possible: smart regulations. Explore the success story that is America's modern freight rail network and the regulatory structure that makes it possible at FreightRailWorks.org

General

GOP Faces Pileup of Urgent Tasks Topped by Debt Limit Extension

Anna Edgerton, Bloomberg

Republicans return to Washington Tuesday with less than a month to avoid a government shutdown and avert a default on the nation's debt, tasks that are being overshadowed by the quickly mounting costs of the response to Hurricane Harvey. Lawmakers need to pass a measure by Sept. 30 to fund the government, as well as one raising the debt limit before the end of the month.

North Korea Crisis: Russia's Putin Warns of 'Global Catastrophe'

F. Brinley Bruton and Alan Kaytukov, NBC News

Russian President Vladimir Putin warned Tuesday that ramping up the "military hysteria" around North Korea's escalating nuclear and missile tests could lead to a "global catastrophe." He also questioned the effectiveness of tightening sanctions, as the U.S. has suggested, saying that they will not change the behavior of Kim Jong Un and his regime.

EPA now requires political aide's sign-off for agency awards, grant applications

Juliet Eilperin, The Washington Post

The Environmental Protection Agency has taken the unusual step of putting a political operative in charge of vetting the hundreds of millions of dollars in grants the EPA distributes annually, assigning final funding decisions to a former Trump campaign aide with little environmental policy experience. In this role, John Konkus reviews every award the agency gives out, along with every grant solicitation before it is issued.

Breaking from tech giants, Democrats consider becoming an antimonopoly party

David Weigel, The Washington Post

A messy, public brawl over a Google critic's ouster from a Washington think tank has exposed a fissure in Democratic Party politics. On one side there's a young and growing faction advocating new antimonopoly laws, and on the other a rival faction struggling to defend itself.

---

Presidential

Trump's meeting with tax negotiators kicks off fall reform push

Aaron Lorenzo, Politico

When President Donald Trump sits down Tuesday with tax reform negotiators from his administration and Congress, they're hoping it will mark the start of a final push to get legislation to Trump's desk before the year is through.

Agreement on a plan to cut taxes for individuals and businesses, along with more fundamental changes to the tax code, would allow the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees to start putting meat on the bone with legislative language.

On DACA, President Trump Has No Easy Path

Glenn Thrush et al., The New York Times

For months, an anxious and uncertain President Trump was caught between opposing camps in the West Wing prodding him to either scrap or salvage an Obama-era program allowing undocumented immigrants brought to the country as minors to remain in the United States. Last week, with a key court deadline looming for Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, or DACA, Mr. Trump, exasperated, asked his aides for "a way out" of a dilemma he created by promising to roll back the program as a presidential candidate, according to two people familiar with the exchange.

Haley: Kim Jong Un 'begging for war'

Jeremy Herb et al., CNN

US Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley said Monday that North Korean leader Kim Jong Un was "begging for war" as she urged the UN Security Council to adopt the strongest sanctions measures possible to stop Pyongyang's nuclear program. Speaking at a Security Council emergency meeting, Haley said North Korea's sixth nuclear test was a clear sign that "the time for half measures" from the UN had to end.

Trump family and associates to be in Russia probe crosshairs

Eric Tucker et al., The Associated Press

A web of President Donald Trump's family and associates will be back in the crosshairs of congressional committees investigating whether his campaign colluded with Russia, as well as of the high-wattage legal team assembled by special counsel Robert Mueller. As Congress returns from a summer recess, some of the attention will be focused squarely on the president's eldest son,

Donald Trump Jr., who will meet privately in the coming weeks with staffers on the Senate judiciary and intelligence committees.

Key Trump Aide's Departure Rattles President's Allies

Shannon Pettypiece and Jennifer Jacobs, Bloomberg

President Donald Trump's allies are worried that the most damaging of the many recent departures from his White House may be that of Keith Schiller, a little-known former bodyguard who's one of the president's closest confidants outside his family. Schiller is leaving the White House soon to return to the private security business, according to three people familiar with his plans, for a job that will pay far more than his $165,000 government salary.

---

Senate

Graham backs Trump ending DACA with 6-month delay

Brandon Carter, The Hill

Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) said Monday that he would support President Trump's decision to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program if Trump gives Congress six months to find a legislative solution. "If President Trump chooses to cancel the DACA program and give Congress six months to find a legislative solution, I will be supportive of such a position," Graham said in a statement.

Senate's Obamacare fixes would build on heavy lifting by states

Adam Cancryn, Politico

While Congress was busy bickering over repealing the health law, officials in red and blue states worked frantically to soothe anxious insurers, tamp down rate increases and insulate their markets from the ceaseless chaos in Washington. The result is an Obamacare system that's still vulnerable, but far from the "disaster" President Donald Trump and his top health officials describe.

Everything you need to know about Sen. Menendez's bribery trial

Sarah Jorgensen and Laura Jarrett, CNN

It's a case with allegations spanning seven years, multiple countries, and involving hundreds of thousands of dollars. At the center of it: a sitting US senator.

---

House

Harvey Aid Package Adds to Full House Agenda

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

As the House returns from its summer recess, Republicans are looking to pass the eight remaining appropriations bills soon, which would complete a GOP omnibus they hope will serve as an opening bid for negotiations with the Senate. The chamber might also take quick action on an initial supplemental appropriations measure to provide money for Hurricane Harvey recovery efforts.

Democratic Soul-Searching in One Pennsylvania House Race

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

Democrats across the country are doing some soul-searching as Congress returns to the nation's capital. The crowded Democratic primaries taking shape raise questions about whether more liberal candidates can win in Republican districts.

---

States

Hurricane Irma now at Category 5, with 175 mph winds

Doyle Rice, USA Today

"Extremely dangerous" Hurricane Irma strengthened to a Category 5 storm Tuesday morning, the National Hurricane Center said, with sustained winds of 175 mph. The hurricane will blast the northern Caribbean with flooding rain, damaging winds and rough surf over the next few days, AccuWeather warned, bringing life-threatening conditions to the islands.

In Texas, Distrust of Washington Collides With Need for Federal Aid

Richard Fausset, The New York Times

Few places need the federal government right now more than Texas does, as it begins to recover from Hurricane Harvey. Yet there are few states where the federal government is viewed with more resentment, suspicion and scorn.

Cash-strapped states brace for Russian hacking fight

Cory Bennett et al., Politico

The U.S. needs hundreds of millions of dollars to protect future elections from hackers - but neither the states nor Congress is rushing to fill the gap. Instead, a nation still squabbling over the role Russian cyberattacks played in the 2016 presidential campaign is fractured about how to pay for the steps needed to prevent repeats in 2018 and 2020, according to interviews with dozens of state election officials, federal lawmakers, current and former Department of Homeland Security staffers and leading election security experts.

Schwarzenegger's bipartisan next political act: Terminating gerrymandering

Joe Garofoli, San Francisco Chronicle

Former California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger is a master at marketing, having scaled to the top of three different professions. But these days, the former bodybuilder and movie star is taking on perhaps his biggest sales challenge since he made "Last Action Hero": He's trying to get people to care about redistricting, the critical but arcane process of drawing political districts.

---

Advocacy

Reid Hoffman has billions of dollars and one of the best networks in Silicon Valley. Here's how he's using them to take on Trump.

Tony Romm, Recode

It began with a simple card trick. Reid Hoffman had grown tired of listening to Donald Trump trash talk Hillary Clinton and his ever-growing list of political foes.

New MPAA chief Charles Rivkin aims to be a diplomat for Hollywood at an uncertain time

Ryan Faughnder, Los Angeles Times

Upon arriving in Paris as the new U.S. ambassador to France and Monaco in 2009, Charles Rivkin used his show business pedigree to charm President Nicolas Sarkozy with a gift: a framed poster of Rita Hayworth. It was a smooth move for Rivkin, whom President Obama chose for the role after a 20-year career in the entertainment industry, including stints at Jim Henson Co. and "Yo Gabba Gabba" producer WildBrain.

---

A Message from Freight Rail Works:

In an environment of smart and balanced regulation, America's private freight railroads deliver for rail customers and consumers. Average freight rail rates are down 45 percent since the industry was partially deregulated. At the same time, railroads have poured more than $630 billion into a network that spurs billions of dollars in annual economic activity. Learn how proposed regulations could undo all of this at FreightRailWorks.org

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Congress's most important assignment after summer vacation

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Like so many procrastinating students putting off their summer homework assignments, Congress has postponed much of the United States' essential business until after the August recess - and left itself only 12 days on the legislative calendar to get it all done now that lawmakers are back in Washington. This legislative backlog could and should have been avoided if Capitol Hill worked under regular order, leavened by a modicum of bipartisanship.

Options for Removing Kim Jong Un

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

North Korea conducted its sixth nuclear test on Sunday, detonating a bomb 10 times more powerful than its last test a year ago. The South Korean government says Pyongyang is also preparing its third test of an intercontinental ballistic missile.

The Russian Company That Is a Danger to Our Security

Jeanne Shaheen, The New York Times

The Kremlin hacked our presidential election, is waging a cyberwar against our NATO allies and is probing opportunities to use similar tactics against democracies worldwide. Why then are federal agencies, local and state governments and millions of Americans unwittingly inviting this threat into their cyber networks and secure spaces?

Let 'dreamers' live the American Dream

Leon E. Panetta, The Washington Post

In October 1921, my Italian father arrived in the United States aboard the Providence, one of 1,800 third-class passengers searching for a better life in this country. At Ellis Island, he listed his total assets as $25 and his profession simply as "peasant."

---

Research Reports and Polling

President Trump Inc.

Public Citizen

The election of Donald Trump as president of the United States created an unprecedented situation. Never before had a businessman with a global business empire been elected president. The fact that the president of the United States would have such diverse business holdings, foreign and domestic, would pose enormous risks by itself.

Does Loss of Manufacturing Jobs Lead to Lower Life Ratings?

Jonathan Rothwell, Gallup

Previous research has shown very little evidence that more intensive import competition from China has been broadly harmful to the economies of metropolitan areas. That's despite the fact that import competition in a given area is related to a sharper loss of manufacturing jobs.

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Franken to Make Announcement From Senate Floor This Morning
Date: Thursday, December 07, 2017 9:21:23 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.) plans to resign from the Senate following calls from more than half of the Senate Democratic Caucus to quit amid allegations of sexual misconduct, according to an unnamed Democratic official. Franken's office said no final decision has been made, and the Minnesota Democrat plans to make an announcement from the Senate floor this morning. (Star Tribune)
- The House voted 231 to 198 to pass legislation that would let concealed carry license holders conceal a handgun in other states, with opposition from 14 Republicans and support from six Democrats. The measure, a top priority for the National Rifle Association, is strongly opposed by Senate Democrats. (Politico)

- President Donald Trump is set to meet today with Republican and Democratic leaders from the House and Senate to discuss a long-term budget deal as lawmakers prepare to pass a stopgap spending measure to avoid a government shutdown on Saturday. The House is expected to vote today on a bill that would keep the government open through Dec. 22, with the Senate expected to vote on the measure Friday. (Bloomberg)
- The Senate voted to begin negotiations with the House on competing bills that would overhaul the federal tax code, with the goal of resolving differences on issue such as deductions for medical expenses and state income taxes. The eight Senate GOP conferees include Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch of Utah, Budget Committee Chairman Mike Enzi of Wyoming, and Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski of Alaska. ( The Wall Street Journal)

Chart Review

Americans Are Skeptical of Muslim, Atheist Candidates, but That Could Change

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

ACCF event on Trump's economic policy agenda 9:30 a.m.

---

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on sanctions for nonproliferation 10 a.m.

---

Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on the Defense Department's acquisition reform efforts 10 a.m.

---

FBI director testifies before House Judiciary Committee 10 a.m.

---

CSIS event on OPEC's World Oil Outlook 2017 2 p.m.

FRIDAY

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on China and the U.S.-Japan alliance 10:30 a.m.

---

Trump campaign rally in Pensacola, Fla. 7 p.m.

General

Voters Back Government Shutdown to Renew Health Insurance Program for Kids

Jon Reid, Morning Consult

Two-thirds of voters in a new poll indicated support for shutting down the federal government until Congress reauthorizes the Children's Health Insurance Program, which lawmakers let expire in September amid partisan disagreements over how to pay for a funding extension. With funding for government operations set to expire on Friday absent congressional action, 67 percent of respondents said they support shutting down the government over CHIP, according to a Morning Consult/Politico poll conducted Dec. 1-3.

Flynn Said Russian Sanctions Would Be 'Ripped Up,' Whistle-Blower Says

Mark Mazzetti and Michael S. Schmidt, The New York Times

Michael T. Flynn, President Trump's former national security adviser, told a former business associate that economic sanctions against Russia would be "ripped up" as one of the Trump administration's first acts, according to an account by a whistle-blower made public on Wednesday. Mr. Flynn believed that ending the sanctions could allow a business project he had once participated in to move forward, according to the whistle-blower.

Republicans hammer Mueller, FBI as Russia investigation intensifies

Devlin Barrett and Sean Sullivan, The Washington Post

Republican activists and lawmakers are engaged in a multi-front attack on special counsel Robert S. Mueller III's probe of possible connections between associates of President Trump and Russian agents, trying to stop or curtail the investigation as it moves further into Trump's inner circle. For months, the president and his allies have been seizing on any whiff of possible impropriety by Mueller's team or the FBI to argue that the Russia probe is stacked against Trump - potentially building the political support needed to dismiss the special counsel.

---

Presidential

Trump to Meet Democrats With Congress on Track to Avoid Shutdown

Erik Wasson et al., Bloomberg

President Donald Trump will meet with congressional leaders from both parties Thursday to negotiate on a long-term budget deal as Congress prepares to pass a stopgap spending measure to avoid a U.S. government shutdown Saturday. The House is expected to vote on a two-week spending bill to keep the government open through Dec. 22, with Senate action coming by Friday.

U.S. 9th Circuit judges skeptical of Trump's travel ban

Maura Dolan, Los Angeles Times

Two days after the Supreme Court allowed President Trump to enforce his travel ban, a federal appeals court appeared skeptical that it complied with the law. During a hearing in Seattle before a three-judge panel of the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, a lawyer for the Trump administration argued the revised ban issued in September was based on careful study and tailored toward specific conditions in various countries.

Trump administration opposes unions in key Supreme Court case

Ian Kullgren, Politico

The Trump administration sided against public employee unions Wednesday evening in a Supreme Court case that could deal the labor movement a crippling financial blow. In a brief submitted in Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, the Office of Solicitor General sided with a child-support specialist for the state of Illinois who's challenging AFSCME's legal right to collect so-called "fair-share fees" from union nonmembers.

Trump Jr. Won't Provide Details of a Call With His Father

Sharon LaFraniere and Nicholas Fandos, The New York Times

Donald Trump Jr. refused on Wednesday to provide a congressional committee details of a July telephone conversation with his father about a meeting last year at which Trump campaign officials had expected to receive damaging information from the Russian government about Hillary Clinton. Testifying in a closed session before the House Intelligence Committee, Mr. Trump claimed that his conversation over the summer with his father, two days after The New York Times disclosed the June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower in Manhattan, was protected under attorney-client privilege because lawyers for both men were on the call.

Haley: 'Open question' if US athletes can attend Olympics in South Korea

Sophie Tatum, CNN

Whether US athletes will be able to attend the 2018 Winter Olympics in South Korea remains an "open question," US Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley said Wednesday night. The Winter Olympics are set to be held Feb. 9-25 in Pyeongchang, South Korea.

---

Senate

Sen. Al Franken plans a morning announcement on the Senate floor

Jennifer Brooks et al., Star Tribune

Democratic Party leaders united Wednesday in calling for Sen. Al Franken to resign from the U.S. Senate, an extraordinary rebuke to the Minnesota Democrat as he faced a new allegation of sexual harassment. Franken planned to make an announcement about his future Thursday morning on the Senate floor.

Senate Votes to Begin Tax-Overhaul Negotiations With House

Richard Rubin, The Wall Street Journal

The U.S. Senate voted Wednesday to start formal tax-bill negotiations with the House of Representatives as lawmakers began grappling with the delicate balance they must strike to advance final legislation through both chambers and to the president by Christmas. Republicans are weighing a number of changes that would expand tax cuts and force offsetting adjustments.

Bredesen running for Senate

Cari Wade Gervin, Nashville Post

Former Gov. Phil Bredesen is entering the Democratic primary for U.S. Senate. According to multiple sources, Bredesen began calling major donors this afternoon to confirm that he is in the race.

Indiana GOP Senate candidate voted Democrat until 2012

Brian Slodysko, The Associated Press

A wealthy Indiana Senate candidate who bills himself in television ads as a conservative Republican voted for more than a decade in the state's Democratic primaries, according to public documents obtained by The Associated Press. Records from the Dubois County Clerk's office, where candidate Mike Braun is registered to vote, show the 63-year-old consistently cast Democratic ballots in partisan primary elections until 2012.

---

House

House passes concealed carry gun bill in win for GOP and NRA

John Bresnahan, Politico

The House passed legislation to permit concealed carry license holders to conceal a handgun in other states, the first time Congress has taken action on a gun bill since President Donald Trump was sworn into office. The "Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act," a top priority for the National Rifle Association and other gun-rights groups, passed 231-198.

House Republicans Weigh Linking Debt Ceiling Increase to Spending Bill

Kristina Peterson and Kate Davidson, The Wall Street Journal

A group of House Republicans is considering pushing to raise the government's borrowing limit as part of the next long-term spending bill, a move that could help dispatch one of the thorniest issues for GOP lawmakers before next year's primary elections intensify. Rep. Doug Collins of Georgia, a member of House GOP leadership and the head of a working group of House Republicans on the debt limit, said lawmakers were considering increasing the debt ceiling as part of the bill funding the government for the rest of the fiscal year, known as an omnibus.

Ryan says Republicans to target welfare, Medicare, Medicaid spending in 2018

Jeff Stein, The Washington Post

House Speaker Paul D. Ryan (R-Wis.) said Wednesday that congressional Republicans will aim next year to reduce spending on both federal health care and anti-poverty programs, citing the need to reduce America's deficit. "We're going to have to get back next year at entitlement reform, which is how you tackle the debt and the deficit," Ryan said during an appearance on Ross Kaminsky's talk radio show.

Kihuen Mum on Re-Election Question

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

Nevada Democratic Rep. Ruben Kihuen declined to answer questions Wednesday morning about whether he will run for re-election. "We're going to be making another statement here in the next few days," Kihuen told Roll Call as he walked to the Capitol.

Andy Levin running to replace father Sandy Levin in 9th Congressional district

Lauren Gibbons, MLive.com

Andy Levin, the son of sitting U.S. Rep. Sandy Levin and the former head of the Michigan Department of Energy, Labor and Economic Growth, has announced his bid to replace his father in Washington, D.C. Andy Levin, of Bloomfield Twp., is the founder of a clean energy business and directed worker training as part of his role with the state of Michigan under former Gov. Jennifer Granholm.

John Conyers III was arrested for domestic abuse but not prosecuted

Andrew Blankstein and Alex Johnson, NBC News

John Conyers III, a Detroit hedge fund manager named as a possible successor to his scandal-rocked father, Rep. John Conyers, was arrested in Los Angeles this year on suspicion of domestic violence, but prosecutors declined to charge him, according to documents obtained by NBC News. The Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office cited a "lack of independent witnesses" and their conclusion that it "could not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the victim's injury was not accidentally sustained" while he was disarming her, according to case paperwork.

---

States

Race where Republican leads by 10 votes instrumental to deciding Va. politics' fate

Fenit Nirappil, The Washington Post

It was "Take Your State Legislator to School Day" in this coastal Virginia city. And two of them showed up.

Independent Greg Orman reshuffles the race for Kansas governor

Bryan Lowry and Jonathan Shorman, The Kansas City Star

A Johnson County businessman with tens of millions in assets took the first major steps Wednesday toward an independent candidacy for governor. Greg Orman, who mounted a failed bid for U.S. Senate in 2014, filed paperwork with the state to establish a campaign committee and begin fundraising.

Dallas County Sheriff Lupe Valdez, a Democrat, is running for governor

Patrick Svitek, The Texas Tribune

Dallas County Sheriff Lupe Valdez announced Wednesday morning that she is running for governor, giving Texas Democrats a serious candidate for the top job with five days until the candidate filing deadline for the 2018 primaries. "Like so many hardworking Texans, I know it's tough deciding between buying food, finding a decent place to live, and setting aside money for college tuition," Valdez said in a statement before filing at the Texas Democratic Party headquarters in Austin.

Gay man who was denied marriage license by Kim Davis is running for her job

Adam Beam, The Associated Press

David Ermold returned to the Rowan County courthouse Wednesday, nearly two years after Clerk Kim Davis refused to give him a marriage license because he was gay. Only this time, he did not want a license.

Illinois governor's race haunted by 2016 presidential primary

Natasha Korecki, Politico

An inevitable candidate. Accusations of a rigged primary.

---

Advocacy

Lobbyists push GOP in last-minute scramble to save tax breaks

Theodoric Meyer et al., Politico

Lobbyists have launched an all-out effort to save tax breaks and protect powerful industries as the Republicans' tax overhaul lurches toward President Donald Trump's desk. Builders and real estate interests are pushing to save the mortgage interest deduction.

Outdoors industry groups ratchet up Trump criticism

Devin Henry, The Hill

President Trump's decision this week to shrink two national monuments escalated a fight between the outdoors industry and his administration. Retailers such as Patagonia and REI slammed Trump's decision, equating it to theft, while lining up to challenge its legality.

Inside Oracle's cloak-and-dagger political war with Google

Tony Romm, Recode

The story that appeared in Quartz this November seemed shocking enough on its own: Google had quietly tracked the location of its Android users, even those who had turned off such monitoring on their smartphones. But missing from the news site's report was another eyebrow-raising detail: Some of its evidence, while accurate, appears to have been furnished by one of Google's fiercest foes: Oracle.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A new EPC report analyzes how countries that adopt EMV experience lower counterfeit card fraud rates. It's time for a dynamic data security strategy to protect consumers like you. Learn more from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

I Believe Franken's Accusers Because He Groped Me, Too

Tina Dupuy, The Atlantic

In mid-November, a Los Angeles radio host named Leeann Tweeden stepped forward to claim that Senator Al Franken had shoved his tongue down her throat under the pretext of a rehearsal for a sketch he'd written. The coup de grace was a photograph of a sleeping Tweeden and the now-senator pretending to grab her boobs for the camera.

Trump, Israel and the Art of the Giveaway

Thomas L. Friedman, The New York Times

I'm contemplating writing a book on the first year of President Trump's foreign policy, and I already know the name: "The Art of the Giveaway." In nearly 30 years of covering United States foreign policy, I've never seen a president give up so much to so many for so little, starting with China and Israel.

Why Donald Trump Would Regret Firing Robert Mueller

Karl Rove, The Wall Street Journal

They came like rapid-fire rifle shots. On Friday, former national security adviser Mike Flynn copped a deal, pleading guilty to making false statements to the FBI and promising to cooperate with Special Counsel Robert Mueller in return for avoiding more-serious charges.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

NEW REPORT: EMV adoption is critical to reduce counterfeit fraud in the U.S. Learn how EPC members are developing and implementing new technologies to make your life more secure.

---

Research Reports and Polling

The 2017 Annual Homeless Assessment Report \(AHAR\) to Congress The Department of Housing and Urban Development

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) releases the Annual Homeless Assessment Report to Congress (AHAR) in two parts. Part 1 provides Point-in-Time (PIT) estimates, offering a snapshot of homelessness- both sheltered and unsheltered- on a single night.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Hawaii Judge Exempts More Family Members From Travel Ban
Date: Friday, July 14, 2017 8:53:01 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Washington Brief

- A federal judge in Hawaii loosened President Donald Trump's temporary travel ban by removing a prohibition on grandparents, grandchildren, aunts, uncles and cousins. The judge said the Trump administration's approach to the ban contradicted a recent Supreme Court ruling regarding visitors from six Muslim-majority countries. (The Wall Street Journal)
- After several GOP senators expressed misgivings about the latest iteration of the Senate's health care bill, Trump tweeted that "Republican Senators must come through" and pass an Obamacare replacement bill. (Politico) House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) floated the idea of keeping his chamber in session if the Senate passes its measure before House lawmakers are scheduled to adjourn for their August recess. ( Roll Call)
- The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office published an analysis that says Trump's spending plan would not balance the budget in 10 years. White House estimates said Trump's budget would create a surplus. ( USA Today)
- When Russian lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya met with Donald Trump Jr. at Trump Tower in June 2016 she was joined by a former Russian counterintelligence officer who is now an American lobbyist. (NBC News)

Chart Review

The updated Senate health care bill: What you need to know
Politico

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

Friday

No events scheduled

---

General

CBO rejects Trump's claim that budget plan would eliminate deficit

Michael Collins, USA Today

The Congressional Budget Office cast doubt Thursday on the White House's claim that President Trump's proposed budget would balance in 10 years. In its analysis of the spending plan Trump unveiled in May, the non-partisan budget office said that the deficit would shrink under the Trump budget but would still total $720 billion in 2027.

Russian Lawyer Brought Ex-Soviet Counter Intelligence Officer to Trump Team Meeting

Ken Dilanian and Natasha Lebedeva, NBC News

The Russian lawyer who met with the Trump team after a promise of compromising material on Hillary Clinton was accompanied by a Russian-American lobbyist - a former Soviet counter intelligence officer who is suspected by some U.S. officials of having ongoing ties to Russian intelligence, NBC News has learned. NBC News is not naming the lobbyist, who denies any current ties to Russian spy agencies.

Peter W. Smith, GOP operative who sought Clinton's emails from Russian hackers, committed suicide, records show

Katherine Skiba, Chicago Tribune

A Republican donor and operative from Chicago's North Shore who said he had tried to obtain Hillary Clinton's missing emails from Russian hackers killed himself in a Minnesota hotel room days after talking to The Wall Street Journal about his efforts, public records show. In mid-May, in a room at a Rochester hotel used almost exclusively by Mayo Clinic patients and relatives, Peter W. Smith, 81, left a carefully prepared file of documents, including a statement police called a suicide note in which he said he was in ill health and a life insurance policy was expiring.

Trump's outside attorney to apologize to man he sent profane emails

Nolan D. McCaskill, Politico

President Donald Trump's outside attorney Marc Kasowitz will apologize to a man he told in a profanity-laced email to watch his back, a spokesman said Thursday. "Mr. Kasowitz, who is tied up with client matters, said he intends to apologize to the writer of the email referenced in today's ProPublica story," spokesman Mike Sitrick said.

Bill Clinton And George W. Bush Bond In Conversation About Leadership

Vanessa Romo, NPR News

On Thursday, former Presidents George W. Bush and Bill Clinton shared a stage and their ideas on what makes a strong leader in today's world. The intimate conversation was part of the graduation ceremony for the 2017 class of the Presidential Leadership Scholars Program held at the George W. Bush Presidential Center in Dallas.

Presidential

Hawaii Judge Orders Loosening of Trump Travel Ban

Brent Kendall, The Wall Street Journal

A Hawaii judge late Thursday ordered a nationwide loosening of President Donald Trump's temporary ban on U.S. entry for some travelers from six Muslim-majority countries, ruling the administration's strict approach contradicted a recent Supreme Court ruling. The decision is a fresh legal blow for the president just two weeks after a Supreme Court ruling allowed the administration to implement its travel ban against refugees and foreign nationals from six countries who have no connection to the U.S.

Trump: 'Republican Senators must come through' on health care bill

Louis Nelson, Politico

President Donald Trump turned up the pressure Friday morning on Senate Republicans, urging them via Twitter to make good on a years-old campaign promise by passing legislation to repeal and replace Obamacare. GOP leadership in the Senate has introduced legislation that would undo former President Barack Obama's signature healthcare law, but the repeal-and-replace measure has proven controversial even within the Republican caucus and it is unclear if the bill will be able to muster enough support to pass.

White House opioid commission to miss deadline for second time

Jacqueline Alemany, CBS News

President Trump's commission to fight the opioid epidemic will miss a deadline to file an interim report on the crisis for a second time, according to a notice set to be released Friday. The Commission on Combating Drug Addiction and the Opioid Crisis was created by executive order in March.

For Trump, Little Beats a Military Parade

Rebecca Ballhaus and William Horobin, The Wall Street Journal

For President Donald Trump, it doesn't get much better than an elaborate military parade. The U.S. president, who considered holding a military parade to celebrate his inauguration in January but ultimately opted against it, appeared thrilled by France's Bastille Day spectacle on Friday.

Trump's legal team faces tensions - and a client who often takes his own counsel

Philip Rucker et al., The Washington Post

The challenge for President Trump's attorneys has become, at its core, managing the unmanageable - their client. He won't follow instructions. After one meeting in which they urged Trump to steer clear of a certain topic, he sent a tweet about that very theme before they arrived back at their office.

Trump Backed Off Putin Because 'What Do You Do? End Up in a Fistfight?'

Maggie Haberman and Mark Landler, The New York Times

President Trump said on Wednesday that he had confronted President Vladimir V. Putin twice about whether Russia meddled in the 2016 presidential election, and changed the subject after Mr. Putin flatly denied it because, "What do you do? End up in a fistfight?" Speaking to reporters on Air Force One as he flew to Paris to take part in Bastille Day celebrations, Mr. Trump offered his first extended account of a dramatic closed-door meeting he held with Mr. Putin last week in Hamburg, Germany.

Senate

Senate Republicans Unveil New Health Bill, but Divisions Remain

Robert Pear and Thomas Kaplan, The New York Times

Senate Republican leaders on Thursday unveiled a fresh proposal to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act, revising their bill to help hold down insurance costs for consumers while allowing insurers to sell new low-cost, stripped down policies. Those changes and others, including a decision to keep a pair of taxes on high-income people and to expand the use of tax-favored health savings accounts, were intended to bridge a vast gap between the Senate's most conservative Republicans, who want less regulation of health insurance, and moderate Republicans concerned about people who would be left uninsured.

Without writing a check, Rick Scott clears GOP Senate race field

Adam C. Smith, Tampa Bay Times

Adam Putnam's 2018 gubernatorial campaign has been in the works for years, and the Republican agriculture commissioner has amassed $11 million in his campaign accounts. But that's not stopping formidable Republicans like House Speaker Richard Corcoran and state Sen. Jack Latvala from plotting primary challenges.

House

Ryan Teases August Recess Delay

Rema Rahman, Roll Call

House Speaker Paul D. Ryan said Thursday if the Senate delivers a health care bill before the summer is over, he'd be open to joining Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell in keeping his chamber in during at least part of the August recess. The Wisconsin Republican said if the Senate produces a health care bill at the same time members prepare to fly home for a month, "we're going to stay and finish health care."

House Dems plot to force Republicans to cast Russia votes

Austin Wright, Politico

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi and other senior Democrats on Friday will announce a new, coordinated strategy to force Republicans to cast votes on issues related to President Donald Trump's and his campaign aides' alleged ties to Russia. Pelosi and senior Democrats on several key House committees will hold a news conference to announce the strategy, which is to introduce a series of so-called resolutions of inquiry, according to a Democratic leadership aide.

Two former staffers charged in cyberstalking of U.S. House member, husband

Spencer S. Hsu, The Washington Post

Two former staff members have been charged in the circulation of nude images and video of an elected representative to Congress and her husband, federal prosecutors and the U.S. Capitol Police announced Thursday in Washington. Juan R. McCullum, 35, of Washington, was indicted by a grand jury on two counts of cyberstalking, and a co-worker, Dorene Browne-Louis, 45, of Upper Marlboro, Md., was indicted on two counts of obstruction of justice, said U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia Channing D. Phillips and Capitol Police Chief Matthew R. Verderosa in a statement.

Scalise upgraded to fair condition

Diamond Naga Siu, Politico

House Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) was upgraded to a fair condition on Thursday, though he still requires careful monitoring, according to MedStar Washington Hospital. He was previously downgraded to a serious condition after entering the intensive care unit July 6 due to an infection.

States

Gov. Kay Ivey bans lobbyists from executive branch appointments

Mike Cason, AL.com

Gov. Kay Ivey today banned officials in the executive branch from appointing registered lobbyists to serve on state boards and commissions. In an executive order, Ivey said more than 100 registered lobbyists now serve on boards or commissions.

Gov. Jerry Brown says the existence of humanity rests on his climate change deal

Liam Dillon and Melanie Mason, The Los Angeles Times

Gov. Jerry Brown on Thursday cast his new plan to fight climate change as essential to the fate of American democracy - and humanity itself. "America is facing not just a climate crisis with the rest of the world, we are facing a political crisis," Brown told lawmakers at the first public hearing on his proposal to reduce the state's carbon emissions.

Gov. Eric Greitens' nonprofit plans to run TV ads across Missouri

Jason Hancock, The Kansas City Star

Gov. Eric Greitens' nonprofit group is preparing to launch TV ads across the state focused on taxes and the state budget. According to publicly available records, the nonprofit A New Missouri Inc. is spending nearly $450,000 on TV ads on broadcast channels and another $65,000 on the cable channels Fox News and Hallmark.

Advocacy

U.S. farm lobby turns up heat on Trump team as NAFTA talks near

Richard Cowan, Reuters

With talks to renegotiate the NAFTA trade pact just weeks away, U.S. farm groups and lawmakers from rural states are intensifying lobbying of President Donald Trump's administration with one central message: leave farming out of it. Trump blames the North American Free Trade Agreement - the "worst trade deal ever" in his words - for millions of lost manufacturing jobs and promises to tilt it in America's favor.

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Do you know how the Durbin amendment is affecting you? For nearly six years, big-box stores have used this policy to pocket more than $42 billion instead of passing along savings to consumers as promised. Check out the Electronic Payments Coalition's video to learn more.

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

It Is Time for the U.S. Senate to Join the 21st Century

Zach Wamp, Morning Consult

Face it: Washington doesn't work the way it ought to. Plenty of agencies are mired in bureaucratic red tape and hundreds of rules appear to exist only to hamper a responsive and transparent federal government.

Crony capitalism isn't a right, so why does Senate healthcare bill give insurance companies the right to a bailout?

Rand Paul, Washington Examiner

I remember a lot of outrage about two things when I first ran for office: Obamacare and the bank bailouts. Unfortunately, the Senate healthcare bill combines the worst of those two - this time, we're bailing out the big insurance companies.

A Scary New Senate Health Care Bill

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

Republican leaders in the Senate have accomplished what seemed impossible a few weeks ago: They have made their proposal to destroy the Affordable Care Act even worse. On Thursday, the majority leader, Mitch McConnell, produced revised legislation that could effectively make it impossible for many people with pre-existing medical conditions to afford the treatment they need.

ObamaCare Moment of Truth

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republican leaders unveiled a revised health-care bill on Thursday, setting up a Senate watershed next week. Few votes will reveal more about the principles and character of this Congress.

Bungled collusion is still collusion

Charles Krauthammer, The Washington Post

The Russia scandal has entered a new phase, and there's no going back. For six months, the White House claimed that this scandal was nothing more than innuendo about Trump campaign collusion with Russia in meddling in the 2016 election.

Victory, Sacrifice and Questions of 'Collusion'

Peggy Noonan, The Wall Street Journal

Three important things happened this week. Two were insufficiently noted.

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Debit interchange convenience fees - the small charges retailers pay for the flexibility of accepting cards - make card transactions possible, secure, and reliable. Yet, the Durbin amendment changed the way this once reasonable cost of business is calculated, without providing any benefits to customers, small businesses, community banks, or credit unions. Find out why the Durbin amendment must be repealed in a video from EPC.

Research Reports and Polling

POLITICO-Harvard poll: Voters don't like Obamacare repeal, but other issues may sway midterms

Jason Millman, Politico

The bad news for Republicans: Their base doesn't like their plan for repealing Obamacare, and they don't think President Donald Trump's planned tax overhaul will help them. The good news for Republicans: It might not matter when the 2018 midterms roll around.

U.S. House seats rarely flip to other party in special elections

Drew DeSilver, Pew Research Center

Earlier this year, Democrats had hopes that a spate of special elections to the U.S. House of Representatives would flip at least a couple of Republican-held seats their way. But the GOP held onto all four of the seats that opened up when their former occupants took jobs in the Trump administration.

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: House Postpones Monday Votes as Irma Lashes Florida, Georgia, Alabama
Date: Monday, September 11, 2017 8:57:00 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- The House postponed Monday votes over concerns that some lawmakers would not be able to make it to Washington due to damage from Hurricane Irma, which has been downgraded to a tropical storm. (Washington Examiner)
- The Senate today is scheduled to begin consideration of the annual National Defense Authorization Act. Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.) has not indicated whether he will allow several controversial amendments to come up for a vote. (The Washington Post)

- Steve Bannon, President Donald Trump's former chief strategist, accused the "Republican establishment" of "trying to nullify the 2016 election." (Axios) Bannon, the head of Breitbart News, is assisting Republican primary challenges to GOP senators in Alabama, Arizona and Nevada. (Politico)
- Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton kicked off a monthlong media tour to promote her new book, which is set to be released tomorrow. During an interview that aired Sunday she said her 2016 loss to Trump "is still very painful." (The Wall Street Journal)

Chart Review

Are Americans sacrificing food and clothing to pay their taxes?

The Economist

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Atlantic Council/Georgetown Law event on Russia, Venezuela, North Korea 12 p.m.

TUESDAY

Center for Strategic & International Studies event on NAFTA renegotiations 9 a.m.

---

House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on North Korea 10 a.m.

---

House Energy & Commerce Committee hearing on electricity with FERC chairman 10 a.m.

---

WEDNESDAY

Sen. Portman, Rep. Tonko speak at event on opioid epidemic 8 a.m.

---

Rep. Ro Khanna speaks at Atlantic Council event on visa policies 10:30 a.m.

---

Millennial Action Project event on the book "The Impossible Presidency: The Rise and Fall of America's Highest Office" 12 p.m.

---

Airlines for America Commercial Aviation Industry Summit 12 p.m.

---

House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on Venezuela 2 p.m.

---

CFR event on the upcoming German federal election 6:30 p.m.

---

THURSDAY

POLITICO Pro Policy Summit 7:45 a.m.

---

Sens. Heitkamp, Whitehouse, Capito, Barrasso speak at Center for Climate and Energy Solutions 8:30 a.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on individual tax reform 10 a.m.

---

Senate HELP Committee hearing on the individual insurance market 10 a.m.

---

FRIDAY

AEI event on trade deficits and the Trump administration 10 a.m.

General

Bannon on 60 Minutes: 9 key quotes

Erica Pandey, Axios

Former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon appears on 60 Minutes Sunday night in his first-ever TV interview. Top quote: "The Republican establishment is trying to nullify the 2016 election. That's a brutal fact we have to face."

Bannon plotting primaries against slate of GOP incumbents

Alex Isenstadt, Politico

President Donald Trump's closest allies are planning a slate of primary challenges against Republican senators, potentially undermining the party's prospects in 2018 and further inflaming tensions between GOP leaders and the White House. The effort is being led by Steve Bannon, Trump's bomb-throwing former chief strategist, who is launching an all-out war against Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and the Republican establishment.

Hillary Clinton, in TV Interview, Says Election Loss Still 'Very Painful'

Eli Stokols, The Wall Street Journal

Hillary Clinton on Sunday described the lingering pain of being "gobsmacked" after losing the presidency 10 months ago to Donald Trump and said she wouldn't be a candidate for office ever again. "I think I am good, but that doesn't mean that I am complacent or resolved about what happened," the 2016 Democratic presidential nominee said in an interview Sunday morning with CBS News 's Jane Pauley.

Hurricane Irma pounds Florida; extent of damage not yet clear Adrees Latif and Zachary Fagenson, Reuters*

Hurricane Irma pounded heavily populated areas of central Florida on Monday as it carved through the state with high winds, storm surges and torrential rains that left millions without power, ripped roofs off homes and flooded city streets. Irma, once ranked as one of the most powerful hurricanes recorded in the Atlantic, came ashore in Florida on Sunday and battered towns as it worked its way up the state.

Violence Erupts on Desperate Caribbean Islands: 'All the Food Is Gone'

Azam Ahmed and Kirk Semple, The New York Times

At dawn, people began to gather, quietly planning for survival after Hurricane Irma. They started with the grocery stores, scavenging what they needed for sustenance: water, crackers, fruit.

---

Presidential

Trump on Hurricane Irma: 'This is some big monster'

Sarah N. Lynch, Reuters

U.S. President Donald Trump called Hurricane Irma "some big monster" as it battered the Florida coast, saying he wanted to go to the state very soon and praising emergency officials for their efforts to protect people. "The bad news is that this is some big monster," Trump told reporters at the White House, saying damage from the storm would be very costly.

Trump to Meet Malaysian Leader as He Works to Shore Up Asian Ties

Alan Cullison et al, The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump will host Malaysia's premier this week, in a visit that shows how hard his administration is working to court Asian allies to pressure North Korea over its nuclear-weapons program. Tuesday's visit by Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak comes as a U.S. Justice Department investigation into the looting of a Malaysian economic-development fund threatens to ensnare much of the country's ruling elite, including Mr. Najib.

China Thinks the U.S. Holds Key to Solve North Korea Crisis

David Tweed, Bloomberg

U.S. President Donald Trump has regularly called on China to stop North Korea's nuclear advancement, even saying in July it could "easily" end the crisis. In Beijing, however, leaders think the opposite. While the U.S. and China agree the Korean peninsula should be rid of nuclear weapons, they differ on how best to achieve that.

Where Trump's Hands-Off Approach to Governing Does Not Apply

Ben Protess et al., The New York Times

The Trump administration opened the door to allowing more firearms on federal lands. It scrubbed references to "L.G.B.T.Q. youth" from the description of a federal program for victims of sex trafficking. And, on the advice of religious leaders, it eliminated funding to international groups that provide abortion.

---

Senate

Senators eye defense bill as a way to challenge Trump's foreign policy

Karoun Demirjian, The Washington Post

Rank-and-file senators are eyeing the annual defense bill the Senate will take up this week as a chance to challenge President Trump's recent controversial moves on national security - but thus far, Republican leaders have resisted their efforts. Senators of both parties are drafting amendments that would step up sanctions against North Korea, roll back Trump's order to ban transgender troops from the military and force Congress to vote within six months on a replacement authorization for use of military force, or AUMF, against extremist groups.

Sen. John McCain Says He 'Will Be Grateful for Additional Time' He Has

Becky Bowers, The Wall Street Journal

Sen. John McCain (R. Ariz.), who returned to the Senate last week after treatment for an aggressive form of brain cancer, said Sunday his prognosis is good but "the challenges are very significant." "This is a very vicious form of cancer that I'm facing. All the results so far are excellent. Everything is fine," he told Jake Tapper on CNN's State of the Union on Sunday morning.

---

House

House cancels all Monday votes because of Hurricane Irma

Todd Shepherd, Washington Examiner

The U.S. House of Representatives has cancelled all scheduled votes for this Monday over concerns about members who may not be able to return to D.C. on time because of Hurricane Irma.

For a Florida congressman, 'safe room' becomes his office

David Cohen, Politico

Florida Rep. Ted Deutch lost track of how many tornado warnings there were. Throughout the day Sunday, the Democratic congressman was forced to shelter from the ferocious effects of Hurricane Irma, even as he attempted to keep atop of the situation, or, as he put it, "trying to stay abreast while running back and forth to the safe room during tornado warnings."

Why Ryan, Undercut by Trump, May Actually Emerge Stronger Sheryl Gay Stolberg, The New York Times

Paul D. Ryan rode to power two years ago like a hero on a white horse, a reluctant candidate for House speaker elected to heal wounds left by his predecessor, who could not tame the incessant infighting between hard-line conservatives and establishment Republicans. In one of his first real tests, Mr. Ryan discovered last week that those old wounds can reopen fast.

Why Most House Republicans Voted for a Deal They Loathed Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Most House Republicans griped about the fiscal package they were forced to vote on Friday, but ultimately, a relatively small portion of the conference was willing to vote against it. A little more than one-third of House Republicans voted against a package that would extend government funding and the debt ceiling for three months, while providing $15 billion in disaster relief aid, primarily to Texas and Louisiana to help with the Hurricane Harvey recovery efforts.

Could More House Retirements Imperil GOP Majority in 2018? Simone Pathé, Roll Call

House retirements are a staple of each election cycle. But the decision by three moderate Republicans not to seek re-election is worrying party members, already nervous about holding the majority in 2018.

---

States

President Trump declares disaster for Florida amid Hurricane Irma Steve Bousquet, Miami Herald

President Donald Trump on Sunday approved a major disaster declaration for Hurricane Irma in Florida, hours after Gov. Rick Scott requested it. In a week in which the president and governor spoke several times by phone, the governor's office said the disaster declaration will authorize federal funding to flow to areas affected by the storm and will reimburse cities and counties and the state for costs of response and recovery.

Gov. Deal tells Georgians, evacuees to hunker down for Irma
Meris Lutz, The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

With Hurricane Irma bearing down on Georgia, Governor Nathan Deal urged residents and evacuees alike Sunday to find a safe place and stay there until authorities give a signal that it is safe to go out. The governor's comments followed a tour of the State Operations Center at the Georgia Emergency Management and Homeland Security Agency.

Nevada treasurer's candidacy for governor sparks attack ads
Colton Lochhead, Las Vegas Review-Journal

Nevada Treasurer Dan Schwartz made his gubernatorial bid official last week, and establishment Republicans were none too happy. Schwartz, who was elected to treasurer in 2014, attacked "pay for play" politics in the speech announcing his campaign, and said he would be an independent voice in the governor's mansion.

California Lawmakers Spar Over Bills to Ease Housing Shortage
Ian Lovett, The Wall Street Journal

As the California legislature enters its final week of this year's session, lawmakers are battling over a series of bills designed to ease the state's worsening housing shortage, which is driving up prices and pushing low- and middle-income residents out of cities from Oakland to Los Angeles. Democrats, who control all branches of government in California, are hoping to bring the package of bills to a vote this week.

---

Advocacy

Lobbying money spikes under President Trump
Tony Mecia, Washington Examiner

Eight months into its current session, Congress has passed no major legislation. Republicans control both houses and the White House, yet they failed to produce a new healthcare bill.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A majority of voters are concerned with data breaches, yet there are no national data security standards to protect consumers at checkout. It's time retailers share responsibility for data security. Learn more from the Electronic Payments Coalition.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Supporting Rural America in the Tax Code Means Supporting Forest Owners

Tom Martin, Morning Consult

With Congress back in town following its summer recess, all eyes are turning to the congressional tax-writing committees as they work to pass tax reform legislation. Most rural Americans will be glad to see a simpler, more streamlined tax code.

9/11: Finding Answers in Ashes 16 Years Later

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

An inscription on the lobby wall greets visitors in Latin at the offices of the New York City medical examiner. It is an adage familiar to places where autopsies are performed.

Trial Lawyers and Breitbart Unite

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The Trump era is producing strange alliances. Witness how trial lawyers are lining up behind Breitbart-backed Roy Moore in Alabama's Senate GOP primary runoff later this month.

Trump's travel ban may expire before it reaches the Supreme Court

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Once again a federal court has ruled against the Trump administration's temporary ban on admission into the United States of refugees and citizens of six majority-Muslim countries. And once again, the Justice Department is appealing the ruling to the Supreme Court - this time arguing that the government should not have to exclude from the ban grandparents or other close family members of people within the United States, along with refugees sponsored by American resettlement organizations, while the case is pending before the court.

Well, What Should Hillary Do Now?

Susan Chira, The New York Times

In whatever role she carves out for herself, she will have to contend with the vitriol she has drawn throughout her public life. She and Donald Trump went into Election Day with historically low favorability ratings, a distinction they have both maintained after the election.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Four times as many voters trust financial institutions over retailers to create new, more secure ways to pay, which is just one reason why the payments industry is focused on innovation. Banks and credit unions are continuously working to provide consumers with the latest security features when they pay. Get the latest from EPC.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Key facts about Asian Americans, a diverse and growing population

Gustavo López et al., Pew Research Center

The U.S. Asian population is diverse. A record 20 million Asian Americans trace their roots to more than 20 countries in East and Southeast Asia and the Indian subcontinent, each with unique histories, cultures, languages and other characteristics.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Mueller's Team Investigating Democratic Lobbyist Tony Podesta
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 8:50:47 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Robert Mueller, the special counsel overseeing the Justice Department's Russia investigation, is looking into Democratic lobbyist Tony Podesta and the Podesta Group, according to sources. The probe into the firm's compliance with the Foreign Agents Registration Act began as part of an inquiry into the finances of Paul Manafort, President Donald Trump's former campaign chairman. (NBC News)
- The House Intelligence Committee will interview Brad Parscale, the Trump campaign's digital director, on Tuesday. The panel is investigating Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election. (The Wall Street Journal)

- Trump urged House Republicans during a conference call to support the Senate-passed fiscal year 2018 budget resolution this week rather than negotiating with the Senate to resolve differences with the House measure. Passage of the budget resolution is a key procedural step for Republicans looking to overhaul the tax code without Democratic support. (The Washington Post)
- Former Rep. Stephen Fincher (R-Tenn.) said he will run for the Republican nomination to replace Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.), who said last month he will not seek re-election in 2018. Rep. Marsha Blackburn (R) has already announced her own candidacy. (The Tennessean)

Chart Review

Trump Job Approval Slips to 36.9% in His Third Quarter
Gallup

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Rep. Kevin Brady speaks at SIFMA annual meeting 5:10 p.m.

---

White House press secretary, reporters speak at GWU event on Trump's first year 7 p.m.

---

Sen. Booker speaks at Milken Institute's Future of Health Summit 7 p.m.

TUESDAY

Reps. Clark, Mullin speak at The Hill's event on opioids 8 a.m.

---

Virginia governor, Sen. Gardner speak at Bloomberg event on technology 8 a.m.

---

Milken Institute's Future of Health Summit 8:15 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce subcommittee hearing on the 2017 hurricane response 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Perdue speaks at Heritage Foundation event on tax reform 10:30 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

HUD's Carson speaks at The Hill's event on housing 8:30 a.m.

---

Kentucky governor and Sens. Cassidy, Murphy speak at Washington Post health care event 9 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce Committee hearing on the opioid crisis 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Schatz speaks at Bloomberg event on digital infrastructure 3:20 p.m.

THURSDAY

House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on oversight of the U.S. refugee admissions program 9 a.m.

---

Senate HELP Committee hearing on free speech on college campuses 10 a.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

General

Trump joins House GOP call to rally support for Senate budget bill John Wagner and Tory Newmyer, The Washington Post

President Trump on Sunday afternoon urged House Republicans on a conference call to rally behind a Senate-passed budget bill, touting it as the quickest way to enact sweeping tax cuts later this year without Democratic support. "We are on the verge of doing something very, very historic," Trump told GOP lawmakers, adding that success on tax cuts could provide a springboard to action on other shared legislative priorities, according to a Republican familiar with the call.

Hopes Dim for Congressional Russia Inquiries as Parties Clash Nicholas Fandos, The New York Times

In a secured room in the basement of the Capitol in July, Jared Kushner, President Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser, fielded question after question from members of the House Intelligence Committee. Though the allotted time for the grilling had expired, he offered to stick around as long as they wanted.

US Preparing to Put Nuclear Bombers Back on 24-Hour Alert Marcus Weisgerber, Defense One

The U.S. Air Force is preparing to put nuclear-armed bombers back on 24-hour ready alert, a status not seen since the Cold War ended in 1991. That means the long-dormant concrete pads at the ends of this base's 11,000-foot runway - dubbed the "Christmas tree" for their angular markings - could once again find several B-52s parked on them, laden with nuclear weapons and set to take off at a moment's notice.

A Newly Assertive C.I.A. Expands Its Taliban Hunt in Afghanistan Thomas Gibbons-Neff et al., The New York Times

The C.I.A. is expanding its covert operations in Afghanistan, sending small teams of highly experienced officers and contractors alongside Afghan forces to hunt and kill Taliban militants across the country, according to two senior American officials, the latest sign of the agency's increasingly integral role in President Trump's counterterrorism strategy. The assignment marks a shift for the C.I.A. in the country, where it had primarily been focused on defeating Al Qaeda and helping the Afghan intelligence service.

EPA yanks scientists' conference presentations, including on climate change

Juliet Eilperin and Brady Dennis, The Washington Post

The Environmental Protection Agency has instructed two of its scientists and one contractor not to speak as planned at a scientific conference Monday in Providence, R.I., sparking criticism from some academics and congressional Democrats. EPA officials confirmed Sunday that its researchers would not present at the State of Narragansett Bay and Its Watershed program but did not offer an explanation for the decision.

Steve Bannon delivers blistering attack on former President George W. Bush

Maeve Reston, CNN

Steve Bannon delivered a withering attack on George W. Bush Friday night, bluntly questioning the former President's intelligence and his grasp of the concepts that he outlined in a speech that he gave New York this week. "There has not been a more destructive presidency than George Bush's," Bannon said during his dinnertime address at the convention banquet of the California Republican Party.

---

Presidential

Trump says he'd like tax reform bill on his desk closer to Thanksgiving

Sarah D. Wire, Los Angeles Times

President Trump raised expectations Sunday about Republicans' timetable for completing tax reform, indicating he expects the as-yet unwritten overhaul of the tax code on his desk by Thanksgiving. "I want to get it by the end of the year, but I'd be very disappointed if it took that long," he said on Fox's "Sunday Morning Futures With Maria Bartiromo."

Trump-aligned super PAC to hold fundraising meeting in Texas Tuesday

Alex Isenstadt, Politico

President Donald Trump's political operation will accelerate its planning for the 2018 and 2020 elections this week, with a group of deep-pocketed donors gathering in Texas to plot the path forward, according to four people involved in planning the event. Oilman T. Boone Pickens will host Trump's financial backers at his Mesa Vista ranch on Tuesday.

---

Senate

Former Republican Rep. Stephen Fincher enters Tennessee U.S.

Senate race

Joey Garrison, The Tennessean

Former Republican U.S. Rep. Stephen Fincher is entering next year's U.S. Senate race in Tennessee, a move that pits him against one of his former GOP congressional colleagues in the election to replace retiring Sen. Bob Corker. Fincher, a seventh-generation cotton farmer from tiny Frog Jump in West Tennessee - who bypassed college to continue the family business - announced his bid in an interview with the USA TODAY NETWORK - Tennessee.

Schumer: Bipartisan health care bill 'has a majority'

Rebecca Morin, Politico

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer said Sunday that the Alexander-Murray bipartisan health care bill has support from a majority of senators, and he urged Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to bring it to the floor "immediately." "This is a good compromise. It took months to work out. It has a majority. It has 60 senators supporting it. We have all 48 Democrats, 12 Republicans," Schumer (D-N.Y.) said on "Meet the Press" on NBC.

McConnell Signals Willingness to Hold Vote on Health Deal if Trump Approves

Nicholas Fandos, The New York Times

Senator Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, the majority leader, said on Sunday that he would be willing to bring a bipartisan proposal to stabilize health insurance markets up for debate if President Trump signaled his support. "If there's a need for some kind of interim step here to stabilize the market, we need a bill the president will actually sign," Mr. McConnell said on CNN's "State of the Union."

McConnell: Bannon a specialist 'at nominating people who lose'

Julia Manchester, The Hill

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) offered a stinging rebuke of former White House strategist Stephen Bannon for targeting GOP congressional candidates on Sunday, calling Bannon and his allies "specialists at nominating people who lose." "The kind of people who are supported by the element that you've just been referring to are specialists in defeating Republican candidates in November," McConnell told Dana Perino on "Fox News Sunday."

Conservatives, With Bannon's Help, Look for Revenge in Mississippi

Jeremy W. Peters, The New York Times

In the recent history of Republican infighting, few losses have been more bitter than Chris McDaniel's. Mr. McDaniel, a Mississippi state senator, still nurses the conviction that he was robbed of a seat in the United States Senate in 2014 by a Republican establishment that race-baited, covered up his opponent's affair and encouraged Democrats to raid the primary.

McCain Takes Swipe At President For Vietnam 'Bone Spur' Deferment

Scott Neuman, NPR News

In a week that saw two of President Trump's predecessors issue thinly veiled warnings about where the country is heading under his leadership, Arizona Republican Sen. John McCain fired off what appeared to be a long-delayed riposte to the man who once mocked his war record. In an interview broadcast Sunday on C-SPAN, McCain spoke on the 50th anniversary of his being shot down over North Vietnam - an event that led to his capture by communist forces and a five-and-a-half-year stay in the infamous "Hanoi Hilton" prison.

---

House

House Panel to Interview Trump Campaign Digital Director Brad Parscale

Julie Bykowicz, The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump's campaign digital director, Brad Parscale, will be interviewed Tuesday by the House Intelligence Committee, his first appearance before any of the panels examining the issue of Russian interference in the 2016 election. Mr. Parscale confirmed his scheduled appearance.

Women of Congressional Black Caucus demand Kelly apologize to congresswoman

Olivia Beavers, The Hill

The women of the Congressional Black Caucus on Sunday called on White House chief of staff John Kelly to apologize for his "reprehensible" remarks about Florida Rep. Frederica Wilson (D), in which he accused her of bragging about securing funding at a building dedication honoring slain FBI agents. "We, the women of the Congressional Black Caucus, proudly stand with Congresswoman Wilson and demand that General Kelly apologize to her without delay and take responsibility for his reckless and false statements," the female lawmakers said in a statement.

---

States

Rauner vows he'll keep fighting corruption in re-election announcement

Tina Sfondeles, Chicago Sun Times

Vowing he'll continue a war against "corrupt career politicians," Gov. Bruce Rauner formally announced his re-election bid Monday morning in a video. Rauner is the narrator of the two-minute YouTube video, dubbed "I Choose To Fight," which features the leather clad Republican governor on his Harley Davidson, driving through Illinois.

Two years out from election for governor, newly-elected U.S. Sen. John Kennedy's name floated as possible foe

Elizabeth Crisp, The Advocate

With two years until Louisiana's next election for governor, speculation is already growing over which Republican will mount a campaign against incumbent Democrat John Bel Edwards. And one familiar name in particular has been reverberating across the state in recent weeks: U.S. Sen. John Neely Kennedy, the former state treasurer who has been in the U.S. Senate not even a year.

National Democrats are jittery about Va. governor's race

David Weigel and Ed O'Keefe, The Washington Post

The Democratic National Committee gathered here over the past week with one worry on every activist's mind: We'd better not lose the Virginia governor's race. It's a surprising case of the jitters over a place that hasn't elected a Republican to statewide office in eight years - and that voted resoundingly against Donald Trump last year.

States may roll back children's health coverage without money from Congress

Rachana Pradhan and Sarah Frostenson, Politico

Federal funds for the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) expired Sept. 30, leaving states to come up with short-term fixes to keep their programs going. CHIP, now in its 20th year, primarily covers children from low-income families who earn too much to qualify for Medicaid.

In state capitols, women see rampant sexual harassment

Reid Wilson, The Hill

More than a dozen female state legislators, staffers and lobbyists in states across the country interviewed by The Hill say they routinely face unwanted advances from their male colleagues, ranging from inappropriate comments about one's appearance and invitations to private meetings, to physical contact and in extreme instances assault and rape. Many of the women used one word to describe the culture of harassment in their state capitals: Pervasive.

---

Advocacy

Mueller Now Investigating Democratic Lobbyist Tony Podesta

Tom Winter and Julia Ainsley, NBC News

Tony Podesta and the Podesta Group are now the subjects of a federal investigation being led by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, three sources with knowledge of the matter told NBC News. The probe of Podesta and his Democratic-leaning lobbying firm grew out of Mueller's inquiry into the finances of former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort, according to the sources.

Richard Trumka Wins Another Term as AFL-CIO President

Eric Morath, The Wall Street Journal

AFL-CIO members on Sunday evening selected Richard Trumka as president of the nation's largest labor federation, retaining a position he has held since 2009. Mr. Trumka said his goal was for labor unions to emerge with a unified political agenda at a time when the labor movement is split over what approach to take to President Donald Trump.

Why Has the E.P.A. Shifted on Toxic Chemicals? An Industry Insider Helps Call the Shots

Eric Lipton, The New York Times

For years, the Environmental Protection Agency has struggled to prevent an ingredient once used in stain-resistant carpets and nonstick pans from contaminating drinking water. The chemical, perfluorooctanoic acid, or PFOA, has been linked to kidney cancer, birth defects, immune system disorders and other serious health problems.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Trick or treat? The Durbin amendment has hurt consumers the most, according to TWELVE different studies. Let's end retailers' tricks at their customers' expense by repealing the Durbin amendment. Get the latest from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Sessions's plan for immigration courts would undermine their integrity

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Attorney General Jeff Sessions decried the state of the immigration courts in remarks Oct. 12 before the Justice Department's Executive Office for Immigration Review, lamenting "rampant abuse and fraud" in asylum applications. As part of Mr. Sessions's push for an overhaul of the immigration system, the department also plans to begin evaluating immigration judges on the basis of how many cases they resolve.

A Pressure Point for North Korea

Ted Cruz, The New York Times

On Oct. 31, the State Department faces a critical decision in our relations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The Iran-Russia-North Korea sanctions bill enacted in August included legislation I introduced that requires the secretary of state to decide whether to relist North Korea as a state sponsor of terrorism within 90 days.

Trump Caves on Ethanol

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The bipartisan pull of corporate welfare-also known as the swamp-is powerful. Last week it swallowed up no less than Donald Trump and his fearless Environmental Protection Agency administrator, Scott Pruitt.

House GOP Fears Wave in 2018 as Money Woes Grow

Josh Kraushaar, National Review

House Republicans are growing increasingly alarmed that some of their most vulnerable members aren't doing the necessary legwork to protect themselves from an emerging Democratic tidal wave. In some of the biggest media markets, where blockbuster fundraising is a prerequisite for political survival-most notably in New York City, Los Angeles, and Houston-Republican lawmakers aren't raising enough money to run aggressive campaigns against up-and-coming Democrats.

America's Forever Wars

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

The United States has been at war continuously since the attacks of 9/11 and now has just over 240,000 active-duty and reserve troops in at least 172 countries and territories. While the number of men and women deployed overseas has shrunk considerably over the past 60 years, the military's reach has not.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

What's scarier than a ghost? Retailers' broken promises over the Durbin amendment, which have cost consumers $6-8 billion each year. Stop this nightmare and get rid of this policy once and for all! Read more about the policy's failures.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Congress Approval Lowest Since July 2016, at 13%

Justin McCarthy, Gallup

Americans' approval of Congress ebbed further in October, to 13%, and it is now at its lowest point since July of 2016. This is a few percentage points higher than the historic low of 9% recorded in 2013.

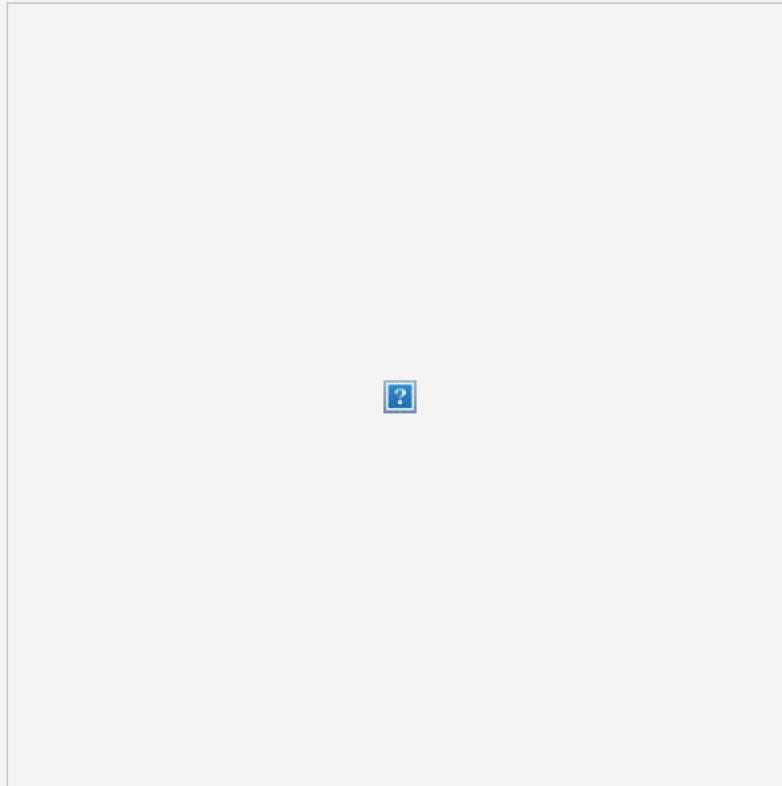

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Rep. Trent Franks Announces Resignation Amid Harassment Probe
Date: Friday, December 08, 2017 9:03:09 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Rep. Trent Franks (R-Ariz.) announced he will resign from Congress amid a House Ethics Committee investigation of his "discussion of surrogacy" with two female staffers. His resignation, which was urged by House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), is effective Jan. 31. (Roll Call)
- The House passed a stopgap spending bill to fund the government through Dec. 22 by a 235-193 vote, with opposition from 18 Republicans and support from 14 Democrats. The Senate cleared the legislation 81 to 14, and President Donald Trump is expected to sign the measure into law. (The Associated Press)

- The House Ethics Committee established a subcommittee to investigate allegations of misconduct by Rep. Blake Farenthold (R-Texas) after new information emerged about an $84,000 taxpayer-funded settlement he reached with his former communications director, who accused him of making sexually charged comments. He has denied wrongdoing in the case. (The Washington Post)
- House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) has been cleared by the House Ethics Committee of allegations that he disclosed classified information related to his panel's Russia investigation. Nunes, who said he would step aside but not recuse himself from the intelligence committee's probe into Russian meddling in the 2016 election, did not say if he would retake control of the Russia investigation. (Los Angeles Times)

Chart Review

How Congress Used Social Media in 2017

Quorum

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

FRIDAY

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on China and the U.S.-Japan alliance

10:30 a.m.

---

Trump campaign rally in Pensacola, Fla.

7 p.m.

General

Congress averts shutdown, sends Trump stopgap spending bill

Andrew Taylor and Alan Fram, The Associated Press

Congress on Thursday passed a stopgap spending bill to prevent a government shutdown this weekend and buy time for challenging talks on a wide range of unfinished business on Capitol Hill. The shutdown reprieve came as all sides issued optimistic takes on an afternoon White House meeting between top congressional leaders and President Donald Trump.

U.S. Payrolls Rise 228,000 While Wages Gain Less Than Forecast

Sho Chandra, Bloomberg

The U.S. added more jobs than forecast in November and the unemployment rate held at an almost 17-year low, though below-forecast wage gains suggest the labor market still has slack to absorb. Payrolls rose 228,000, above the median economist estimate of 195,000, after a downwardly revised 244,000 advance, Labor Department figures showed Friday.

Private War: Erik Prince Has His Eye On Afghanistan's Rare Metals

Aram Roston, BuzzFeed News

Controversial private security tycoon Erik Prince has famously pitched an audacious plan to the Trump administration: Hire him to privatize the war in Afghanistan using squads of "security contractors." Now, for the first time, BuzzFeed News is publishing that pitch, a presentation that lays out how Prince wanted to take over the war from the US military - and how he envisioned mining some of the most war-torn provinces in Afghanistan to help fund security operations and obtain strategic mineral resources for the US.

James O'Keefe, Practitioner of the Sting, Has an Ally in Trump

Kenneth P. Vogel, The New York Times

Days after Donald J. Trump launched his presidential campaign in June 2015, James O'Keefe, the conservative disrupter famous for trying to use secret recordings to embarrass liberals and journalists, visited Trump Tower and gave Mr. Trump a preview of his latest hidden camera video intended to undermine Hillary Clinton. The footage, widely dismissed after it was released some weeks later, showed officials from Mrs. Clinton's presidential campaign appearing to accept a payment for campaign swag from a Canadian woman at a Clinton campaign rally - in violation, Mr. O'Keefe contended, of election laws barring campaign contributions from foreigners.

---

Presidential

Trump will not speak publicly at Mississippi Civil Rights Museum opening

Sam R. Hall, Clarion Ledger

President Donald Trump will not speak publicly when he visits the Mississippi

Civil Rights Museum as part of the grand opening celebration. Gov. Phil Bryant's office announced late Thursday night that the president would take a tour of the museum that morning before speaking inside to an audience of "civil rights veterans, museum patrons and elected officials.

Trump looks to boost Moore with Friday rally

Ben Kamisar, The Hill

President Trump is headed to Florida on Friday for a rally that appears aimed at boosting Alabama GOP Senate candidate Roy Moore's chances in a special election next week. The trip to Pensacola, Fla. - just 20 miles away from the Alabama border - may have initially been scheduled to give Trump a way to rally the Republican base in Alabama while keeping some distance from Moore, who is accused of molesting teenagers.

Trump's richest friends are asking for changes to the GOP tax plan, and he's listening

Damian Paletta and Josh Dawsey, The Washington Post

Some of President Trump's wealthiest New York friends have launched a last-minute campaign to pressure him for changes to the GOP tax bill, telling the president personally that the current plan would drive up their taxes and hurt his home state. Trump on Saturday attended a fundraiser at the home of Stephen Schwarzman, chief executive of the Blackstone Group and the former leader of Trump's now-disbanded White House Strategy and Policy Forum.

Nearly Every Former U.S. Ambassador to Israel Disagrees With Trump's Jerusalem Decision

Sewell Chan, The New York Times

All but two of 11 former United States ambassadors to Israel contacted by The New York Times after President Trump's decision to recognize Jerusalem as Israel's capital thought the plan was wrongheaded, dangerous or deeply flawed. The 11 ex-envoys all closely followed Mr. Trump's announcement on Wednesday, in which he also set in motion a plan to move the American Embassy to Jerusalem from Tel Aviv.

Trump administration seeks to delay order to accept transgender recruits

Jacqueline Klimas, Politico

The Trump administration has asked a federal court for an emergency stay to delay a court order to begin opening the military to transgender recruits by Jan. 1. The move is the latest development in a complicated legal battle over President Donald Trump's order earlier this year that transgender personnel be banned from the ranks - a policy the Pentagon is currently studying how best to carry out.

Previously undisclosed emails show follow-up after Trump Tower meeting

Jim Sciutto et al., CNN

The British publicist who arranged the June 2016 meeting with Russians and Donald Trump Jr. sent multiple emails to a Russian participant and a member of Donald Trump's inner circle later that summer, multiple sources told CNN, the first indication there was any follow-up after the meeting. The emails raise new questions for congressional investigators about what was discussed at Trump Tower.

---

Senate

Senate confirms top EPA enforcement official

Valerie Volcovici, Reuters

The Senate on Thursday confirmed the Environmental Protection Agency's third high-level official after Administrator Scott Pruitt, approving Susan Bodine to become the agency's top enforcement official. Bodine will serve as assistant administrator for EPA's Office of Enforcement and Compliance Assurance, leading the agency's enforcement actions against polluters.

Senate GOP's Immigration Bill Without Path to Citizenship Panned Dean DeChiaro, Roll Call

Senate Democrats and even some Republicans are panning a GOP bill designed to protect undocumented young people and toughen immigration laws because it would not offer the so-called Dreamers a path to citizenship. The bill, introduced this week by Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles E. Grassley and Majority Whip John Cornyn, would offer Dreamers enrolled in the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, or DACA, three years of protected status in return for enhanced border security, a crackdown on "sanctuary" cities and other GOP immigration priorities.

With Tax Overhaul, Susan Collins Stretches Her Political Powers
Siobhan Hughes, The Wall Street Journal

Maine Sen. Susan Collins earlier this year decided to stay in her job instead of running for governor because she thought she could play a decisive role at a consequential time for the Senate. Last week, as her Republican colleagues inched toward passage of a $1.4 trillion tax bill, she tested that theory and brokered some of the most significant last-minute changes to the measure in exchange for her vote.

How to beat Roy Moore, according to the guy who nearly did
Daniel Strauss, Politico

Democrats haven't won a statewide election in Alabama in almost a decade. But in 2012, one Democrat almost pulled it off: Bob Vance, a mild-mannered circuit court judge from Birmingham, who came within 4 points of beating none other than Roy Moore.

Anybody but Corey Stewart? Virginia GOP looks for others to run against Sen. Kaine
Jenna Portnoy and Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

As Virginia Republicans gather Friday for their annual retreat, party leaders are alarmed at the possibility of fielding Corey Stewart as next year's U.S. Senate nominee and, with help from the national GOP, they are maneuvering to recruit someone else to be the face of the party. Stewart, who narrowly lost the GOP nomination for governor in June on a platform of Trumpism and what he called "Confederate heritage," has promised a "vicious" campaign in 2018 against Sen. Tim Kaine (D), a popular former governor who is seeking a second term in a state that he helped Hillary Clinton carry by five points as her running mate in the 2016 presidential election.

---

House

Arizona's Trent Franks to Resign Jan. 31
Bridget Bowman and Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Arizona Republican Trent Franks said Thursday he is resigning from Congress effective Jan. 31 amid an Ethics Committee investigation into discussions he had with two female staffers about surrogacy. In a lengthy statement Thursday evening, Franks said he and his wife struggled with fertility.

House Ethics Committee revives investigation into Rep. Farenthold Michelle Ye Hee Lee, The Washington Post

The House Ethics Committee announced Thursday it has established a subcommittee to investigate allegations of misconduct by Rep. Blake Farenthold (R-Tex.), expanding its work in light of new information that surfaced in recent weeks about a 2015 settlement agreement he reached with his former aide. The committee initially launched an investigation into Farenthold in September 2015, but it was "significantly delayed" because the committee could not get "key witnesses other than Representative Farenthold" to testify, according to the committee's statement.

Rep. Devin Nunes cleared of allegations that he disclosed classified information in Russia investigation

Sarah D. Wire, Los Angeles Times

The House Ethics Committee on Thursday cleared Rep. Devin Nunes of allegations that he disclosed classified information related to the House investigation of Russian meddling in last year's election. The committee said in a statement that experts it interviewed determined that the information the House Select Intelligence Committee chairman divulged was not classified.

RSC chief: House leaders say no funding for ObamaCare subsidies in spending bill

Nathaniel Weixel, The Hill

House leaders have promised conservatives that the next spending bill will not contain funding for ObamaCare cost-sharing reduction (CSR) payments, Rep. Mark Walker (R-N.C.) said Thursday. "The three things that we've been told are not gonna happen as part of our agreement: no CSRs, no DACA, no debt limit," Walker said, referring to the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program.

---

States

Gov. Mark Dayton likely to tap Lt. Gov. Tina Smith as Franken

replacement

J. Patrick Coolican, Star Tribune

Minutes after U.S. Sen. Al Franken announced his resignation, Gov. Mark Dayton said he was not yet ready to announce his pick to fill Franken's seat. But the DFL governor said he planned to make his decision within days - and many at the state Capitol expect he'll appoint Lt. Gov. Tina Smith.

Democrats ask federal judge for new election in tainted Va. House race

Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

Democrats seeking to take control of Virginia's House of Delegates have asked a federal judge to order a new election to rectify a delegate's race tainted by mix-ups over district lines. Republican Robert Thomas beat Democrat Joshua Cole by 82 votes on Nov. 7 in a contest to fill the seat being vacated by retiring Speaker William J. Howell (R-Stafford).

Governor, team face pushback over messaging app

The Associated Press

Several senior members of Missouri Gov. Eric Greitens' office have accounts with a secretive app that erases messages after they've been read, raising concerns among government-transparency advocates that the app could be used to undermine open-record laws. The Kansas City Star reported that it determined the governor and some of his staff have Confide accounts connected to their personal cellphones.

Ohio awards \$10M to boost opioid, addiction breakthroughs

Julie Carr Smyth, The Associated Press

Ohio awarded $10 million in grants Thursday to six companies and a university that have come up with innovative scientific ideas to address the national opioid epidemic. The Ohio Third Frontier Commission awarded the grants for ideas that include development of pain management alternatives and a mobile app to improve addiction treatment.

---

Advocacy

The 4 companies that lobbied most on tax overhaul - and what they got for it

Alexia Fernández Campbell, Vox

House and Senate Republicans recently passed a pair of tax bills that slash the corporate tax rate and give extra goodies to industries with some of the most active lobbyists. These include tax breaks for alcohol manufacturers, energy producers, and tech companies.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A new EPC report analyzes how countries that adopt EMV experience lower counterfeit card fraud rates. It's time for a dynamic data security strategy to protect consumers like you. Learn more from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Congress Must Preserve Private Activity Bonds for Hurricane Recovery

K. Nicole Asarch, Morning Consult

As the House and Senate prepare to strike a final deal on federal tax reform, we must not lose sight of how these discussions will impact ongoing recovery work following Hurricane Harvey. At stake are private activity bonds, which play a crucial role in financing the production of affordable housing and, importantly, supporting efforts to repair and rebuild homes, road, ports and other infrastructure damaged by the hurricane.

Al Franken's Resignation And The Selective Force Of #MeToo Masha Gessen, The New Yorker

On what he called the worst day of his political life, Senator Al Franken articulated two points that are central to understanding what has become known as the #MeToo moment. In an eleven-minute speech, in which Franken announced his intention to resign from the Senate, he made this much clear: the force that is ending his political career is greater than the truth, and this force operates on only roughly half of this country's population-those who voted for Hillary Clinton and who consume what we still refer to as mainstream media.

President Trump, come see what makes America great
Steve Bullock, The Washington Post

It's past time that folks in the West extended an invitation to the president to get outdoors. A little time in the backcountry has a way of helping us remember who we are and where we come from.

Jerry Brown's Pension Epiphany
The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republican plans to slash the state-and-local tax deduction are already reaping benefits in high-tax states. Democrats in the Northeast say they're having second thoughts about raising taxes.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

NEW REPORT: EMV adoption is critical to reduce counterfeit fraud in the U.S. Learn how EPC members are developing and implementing new technologies to make your life more secure.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Re-engineering politicians: How activist groups choose our candidates-long before we vote

Jonathan Rauch and Raymond J. La Raja, The Brookings Institution

Political analysts sometimes refer to the process by which candidacies emerge and test their viability as the "invisible primary": activities like candidate recruitment, training, networking, grassroots cultivation, and more. The practice has changed drastically in recent years, with far-reaching effects.

Rise in U.S. Immigrants From El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras Outpaces Growth From Elsewhere

D'Vera Cohn et al., Pew Research Center

The number of immigrants in the United States from El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras rose by 25% from 2007 to 2015, in contrast to more modest growth of the country's overall foreign-born population and a decline from neighboring Mexico. During these same years, the total U.S. immigrant population increased by 10%, while the number of U.S. Mexican immigrants decreased by 6%, according to a Pew Research Center analysis of U.S. Census Bureau data.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: RNC Halts Fundraising Efforts for Moore
Date: Wednesday, November 15, 2017 9:06:48 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- The Republican National Committee halted its fundraising efforts for Alabama Senate nominee Roy Moore, and Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) floated the possibility of a write-in campaign for Attorney General Jeff Sessions ahead of the Dec. 12 special election. President Donald Trump is expected to be thrust into the Republican Party debate over what to do about Moore following allegations of sexual misconduct. (The Associated Press)
- The House Rules Committee approved the parameters for four-hours of floor debate, with no amendments, on the House GOP's tax overhaul measure. Debate is expected today ahead of a Thursday vote on final passage. (The Hill)

- Fifty-six percent of registered voters in a new poll said they think Trump will personally benefit from the GOP's proposed changes to the tax code if they become law. Twenty-nine percent of respondents said they and their families will benefit from tax reform. (Morning Consult)
- The House voted 237 to 189 to pass legislation that would overhaul the federal flood insurance program and renew it for five years. The program is set to expire in December, but the Senate may not act until next year. (The Wall Street Journal)

Chart Review

Biden Would Beat Trump if 2020 Election Were Held Right Now

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

Sen. Manchin, Rep. Deutch speak at Roll Call event on energy policy 8 a.m.

---

HUD's Carson speaks at Bipartisan Policy Center event on housing 8 a.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee continues markup of tax reform bill 10 a.m.

THURSDAY

Reps. Bishop, Delaney at Progressive Policy Institute and Common Good event on infrastructure 8:30 a.m.

---

WisPolitics.com DC breakfast with Morning Consult CEO
Michael Ramlet 8:30 a.m.

---

Rep. Barr speaks at Cato Institute event on monetary policy 2 p.m.

FRIDAY

FCC's Pai speaks at Cato Institute event 11 a.m.

General

Pentagon to Pay for Surgery for Transgender Soldier

Courtney Kube, NBC News

An active-duty service member underwent gender transition surgery Tuesday in the first such procedure approved under a waiver allowing the Pentagon to pay for the operation. The patient is an infantry soldier who identifies as a woman, according to a source close to the service member.

Rex Tillerson Tells Myanmar Leaders to Investigate Attacks on

Rohingya

Hannah Beech, The New York Times

Secretary of State Rex Tillerson briefly visited Myanmar on Wednesday and urged its two most influential leaders to investigate "credible reports of widespread atrocities" by the country's security forces against Rohingya Muslims. In a five-hour visit in Myanmar, Mr. Tillerson met with Sr. Gen. Min Aung Hlaing, the nation's military commander, and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the Nobel laureate and head of the country's civilian government.

Secret Finding: 60 Russian Payments "To Finance Election Campaign Of 2016

Jason Leopold et al., BuzzFeed News

On Aug. 3 of last year, just as the US presidential election was entering its final, heated phase, the Russian foreign ministry sent nearly $30,000 to its embassy in Washington. The wire transfer, which came from a Kremlin-backed Russian bank, landed in one of the embassy's Citibank accounts and contained a remarkable memo line: "to finance election campaign of 2016."

---

Presidential

Trump returns, faces Alabama Senate scandal

Zeke Miller, The Associated Press

President Donald Trump spent five days in Asia largely keeping the Alabama Senate scandal at bay. He won't be so lucky on U.S. soil.

Majority of Voters Think Trump Would Benefit Personally from Tax Overhaul

Anna Gronewold, Morning Consult

As Congress inches closer to making sweeping changes to the federal tax code, a majority of registered voters believe President Donald Trump and his international conglomerate will be the winners if Republicans pass a tax bill, while fewer voters think American families will get a break. In a Morning Consult/Politico poll of 1,993 registered voters conducted Nov. 9-11, 56 percent said they believe Trump himself will benefit from proposed changes to the tax code and 57 percent said they think The Trump Organization will.

Pence Presses CEOs to Help Sell Tax Overhaul

Peter Nicholas, The Wall Street Journal

Vice President Mike Pence said Tuesday he believes that Republicans will secure the votes to pass a tax overhaul that is now making its way through Congress, whatever the outcome of the volatile Senate race in Alabama. Speaking at The Wall Street Journal's CEO Council gathering, Mr. Pence also called on the business executives in the audience to help make the case for passage of the tax plan.

Trump choosing white men as judges, highest rate in decades

Catherine Lucey and Meghan Hoyer, The Associated Press

President Donald Trump is nominating white men to America's federal courts at a rate not seen in nearly 30 years, threatening to reverse a slow transformation toward a judiciary that reflects the nation's diversity. So far, 91 percent of Trump's nominees are white, and 81 percent are male, an Associated Press analysis has found.

Pence short trip to Colts game cost Indy police more than \$14,000

Maureen Groppe, USA Today

Vice President Pence's brief trip to an Indianapolis Colts game last month cost the Indianapolis police more than $14,000, according to cost estimates the department provided to a watchdog group. The cost of the trip has been scrutinized because Pence left the game after some of the San Francisco 49ers kneeled during the national anthem.

---

Senate

GOP chairman releases modifications to tax bill, including mandate repeal

Naomi Jagoda, The Hill

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) released modifications to the Senate tax bill late Tuesday, including the effective elimination of ObamaCare's individual mandate and the expiration of tax changes for individuals after 2025. Hatch said in a statement that by repealing the mandate "we not only ease the financial burdens already associated with the mandate, but also generate additional revenue to provide more tax relief to [middle-class] individuals."

Steve Bannon And Allies Have Second Thoughts About Roy Moore, Sources Say

Lachlan Markay and Asawin Suebsaeng, The Daily Beast

Donald Trump's former chief strategist Steve Bannon is keeping the door open to ditching Roy Moore as the sexual-assault allegations against the Alabama Republican Senate candidate continue to pile up. Publicly, the Trump confidant and Breitbart chairman has stood behind Moore, who is now accused of attempted rape of a 16-year-old girl.

Roy Moore challenged Alabama law that protects rape victims, documents reveal

Jon Swaine, The Guardian

Roy Moore challenged the scope of an Alabama law that protects rape victims while serving as the most senior judge on the state's highest court, according to a review of records. As chief justice of Alabama's supreme court, Moore twice argued that the state's "rape shield" law should not prevent alleged sex offenders from using certain evidence about their underage accusers' personal lives to discredit them.

Senate confirms Bradbury after fight over 'torture memos'

Elana Schor and Lauren Gardner, Politico

The Senate on Tuesday narrowly confirmed Steven Bradbury to join the Department of Transportation, with two Republicans voting with Democrats in opposition over Bradbury's authorship of so-called torture memos during the George W. Bush administration. The 50-47 vote came after an impassioned plea from Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), who joined Democrats in a push to derail Bradbury's confirmation as the general counsel at DOT.

GOP and Bar Association Tangle Over Judicial Nominees

Joe Palazzolo, The Wall Street Journal

The American Bar Association has been a key gatekeeper for the federal courts since it began evaluating judicial nominees in the 1940s, but it is losing influence among Republicans in the U.S. Senate who view it as a liberal group. Tensions between Senate Republicans and the association, the largest organization of lawyers in the nation, have escalated in recent weeks after the ABA pronounced a Nebraska lawyer unfit to serve on the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, citing his "deeply-held social agenda."

---

House

House panel sets up floor debate on GOP tax reform bill

Cristina Marcos, The Hill

House Republicans' tax reform bill is set to reach the floor with no amendments, despite a push from some conservatives to include a repeal of the individual mandate. The House Rules Committee, which determines how legislation is considered on the floor, approved parameters late Tuesday for four hours of debate and no opportunity for lawmakers to amend the bill before an expected vote at the end of this week.

House Votes to Overhaul Flood-Insurance Program

Andrew Ackerman, The Wall Street Journal

The House on Tuesday voted largely along party lines to revamp the federal flood-insurance program, which expires in December and has struggled in recent years to keep pace with record disaster payouts. The measure passed with a 237-189 vote, largely with Republicans for it and Democrats against it.

Dems to launch new impeachment push on Wednesday

Mike Lillis, The Hill

A group of House Democrats will join forces Wednesday to introduce new articles of impeachment against President Trump, representing the broadest effort yet to oust him as commander in chief. The office of Rep. Steve Cohen (D-Tenn.), a Memphis liberal, announced the move.

DCCC Names First 11 Candidates in 'Red to Blue' Program

Simone Pathé, Roll Call

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee is naming 11 candidates Wednesday to the first round of its Red to Blue program, which highlights strong Democratic recruits. The list of 11 candidates, obtained first by Roll Call, includes recruits running in 10 competitive GOP-held seats and in one open seat Democrats are hoping to keep blue.

Trump group warns Republican lawmakers to get on board with tax reform, White House agenda

David M. Drucker, Washington Examiner

President Trump's officially designated political advocacy organization issued a stern warning Tuesday to Republicans in Congress: support the White House or face potentially millions of dollars in attack ads in 2018. America First Policies is on the air in North Carolina's 3rd Congressional District with more than $100,000 in "hard-hitting" cable television and digital advertising, plus phone calls, to pressure Republican Rep. Walter Jones to drop his opposition to the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act ahead of Thursday's planned vote.

---

States

Judge throws out lawsuit in key Virginia House race

Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

A Stafford Circuit Court judge on Tuesday threw out a lawsuit brought over a squeaker House of Delegates election that could determine whether Republicans hold their grip on the chamber. But hours later, the Democrat trailing in that race filed another lawsuit in federal court.

Pa. House Speaker Mike Turzai to run for governor

Liz Navratil, The Philadelphia Inquirer

House Speaker Mike Turzai, known for his conservative views and zest for battle with the Democratic administration, has joined the race for governor. The Republican from Allegheny County announced his plans to seek the GOP nomination Tuesday evening in a video posted to his campaign's social-media accounts.

Connecticut State Senate Approves Changes To State Budget

Christopher Keating, Hartford Courant

With lightning speed, the state Senate voted unanimously Tuesday in special session on budget fixes for the controversial hospital tax and a renters' rebates for the elderly and disabled. The Senate voted 34-0 with Republican Sen. Craig Miner of Litchfield and Democrat Ted Kennedy Jr. of Branford absent.

Gov. Rick Scott proposes \$87.4 billion state budget

Arek Sarkissian, Naples Daily News

Gov. Rick Scott wants the Legislature to consider a $87.4 billion spending plan he unveiled Tuesday in Jacksonville, the largest and last state budget of his elected career. The plan Scott titled the "Securing Florida's Future" budget is larger than the more than $69.3 billion budget he proposed during his first year in 2011.

Judge sides with South Carolina news media in fight over Republican caucus records

Schuyler Kropf, The Post and Courier

A judge has refused a request by South Carolina House Republicans to dismiss a lawsuit brought by a coalition of news outlets - including The Post and Courier - challenging the party's caucus contention it has a constitutional right to ban public access to its meetings and records. The filing doesn't immediately settle the news media's case, but it does give support to the argument that caucus activities should be open under current state law.

---

Advocacy

Mueller puts spotlight on foreign lobbying

Megan R. Wilson, The Hill

The cottage industry of foreign lobbying is taking center stage as special counsel Robert Mueller investigates the activities of people in President Trump's orbit. Foreign advocacy work in Washington is common, lucrative and occasionally controversial, but has rarely received the front-page scrutiny it's attracting now.

Inside the 'Lewandowski embassy'

Theodoric Meyer et al., Politico

Corey Lewandowski has a new base of operations in Washington: an elegant, century-old rowhouse that resembles his own version of the "Breitbart Embassy." Just as Steve Bannon does at the rowhouse a dozen blocks away where Breitbart News sometimes holds meetings and hosts parties, Lewandowski, Donald Trump's former campaign manager, stays upstairs when he's in town, according to five people familiar with the arrangement.

---

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

The numbers don't lie: the Durbin Amendment has been a windfall for the biggest retailers, but a failure for consumers. Get the real story about the Durbin Amendment's impact from the Electronic Payments Coalition.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Under Siege: A Disservice to Veterans Whose Livelihoods Are in the Federal Service

Keith Fusinski, Morning Consult

Since the Trump administration and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt have been at the helm, the cost that service members have paid to protect all Americans turns out to be steeper than expected. As part of a grateful country's recompense for their service, U.S. veterans get a preference in federal hiring decisions, as 31 percent of federal employees are vets.

The Roy Moore Mess

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

A famous country song aptly summed up where the Republicans are with Senate candidate Roy Moore in Alabama: You've got to know when to fold 'em. There is no doubt a sense in which Mr. Moore deserves the opportunity to challenge accusations against him for acts alleged to have happened more than 30 years ago.

There are no grounds for a special counsel to investigate Hillary Clinton

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

President Trump has made his position clear: He would like to see Hillary Clinton investigated. After leading chants of "Lock her up!" during his presidential campaign, Mr. Trump has moved on to tweeting his disappointment over the Justice Department's failure to look "into all of the dishonesty going on with Crooked Hillary."

Attorney General Jeff Sessions Doesn't Recall

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

The House Judiciary Committee hearing on Tuesday, at which Attorney General Jeff Sessions faced more than five hours of questions, was supposed to be about oversight of the Justice Department. The committee's Republicans appeared to have missed that memo.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A string of broken promises has left consumers feeling the sting of the Durbin Amendment, while big-box stores continue to pocket billions of dollars at customers' expense. The time for repeal is now. Find out the truth from EPC.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Department of Defense: Telehealth Use in Fiscal Year 2016 Government Accountability Office

The Department of Defense (DOD) provides health care services to 9.4 million active duty servicemembers and other beneficiaries domestically and overseas through its military hospitals, military service clinics, and a civilian network of providers. In some cases, DOD uses telehealth to help provide these services, defining telehealth as the use of telecommunication and information technologies to provide health assessments, treatments, consultations, and other services across distances.

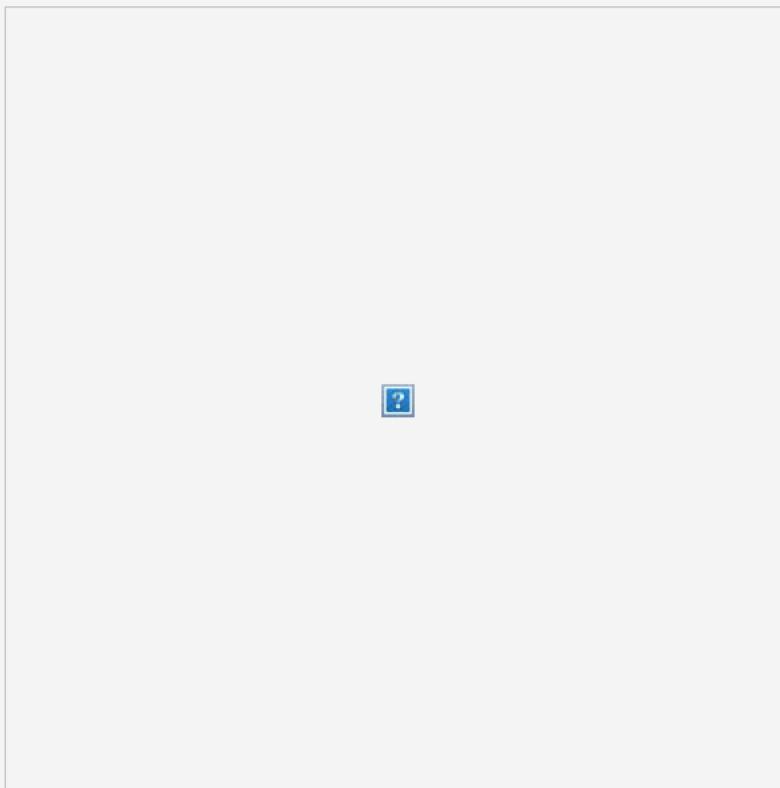

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Senate Clears $36.5 Billion Hurricane Relief Bill
Date: Wednesday, October 25, 2017 8:42:49 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- The Senate voted 87-12 to pass legislation that would provide $36.5 billion for hurricane relief, including $4.9 billion for low-interest loans to Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. The bill, which the House passed on Oct. 12, now awaits action from President Donald Trump, who is expected to sign it into law. (Bloomberg)
- Vice President Mike Pence cast the tie-breaking vote for a measure that would overturn a Consumer Financial Protection Bureau arbitration rule designed to make it easier for groups of consumers to sue financial institutions. The resolution now heads to the White House, where Trump is expected to sign the measure into law. (The Wall Street Journal)

- Trump imposed new restrictions on refugees from 11 countries as his administration lifted its 120-day suspension of refugee admissions. The new executive order begins a 90-day review period for the administration to conduct an "in-depth threat assessment" of the 11 countries, a period during which refugees can be admitted on a case-by-case basis. (Politico)
- A 44 percent plurality of U.S. voters said Trump wants to weaken the relationship between the United States, Canada and Mexico. The poll comes amid contentious, ongoing renegotiation talks regarding the 23-year-old North American Free Trade Agreement. (Morning Consult)

Chart Review

Many Voters Dislike Trump's Cuts to Health Insurer Subsidies

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

HUD's Carson speaks at The Hill's event on housing 8:30 a.m.

---

Kentucky governor and Sens. Cassidy, Murphy speak at Washington Post health care event 9 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce Committee hearing on the opioid crisis 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Schatz speaks at Bloomberg event on digital infrastructure

3:20 p.m.

THURSDAY

House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on oversight of the U.S. refugee admissions program

9 a.m.

---

Senate HELP Committee hearing on free speech on college campuses

10 a.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

General

Clinton campaign, DNC paid for research that led to Russia dossier

Adam Entous et al., The Washington Post

The Hillary Clinton campaign and the Democratic National Committee helped fund research that resulted in a now-famous dossier containing allegations about President Trump's connections to Russia and possible coordination between his campaign and the Kremlin, people familiar with the matter said. Marc E. Elias, a lawyer representing the Clinton campaign and the DNC, retained Fusion GPS, a Washington firm, to conduct the research.

Former Trump Campaign Chairman Paul Manafort Faces Another Money-Laundering Probe

Erica Orden and Nicole Hong, The Wall Street Journal

The Manhattan U.S. attorney's office is pursuing an investigation into possible money laundering by Paul Manafort, said three people familiar with the matter, adding to the federal and state probes concerning the former Trump campaign chairman. The investigation by the U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York is being conducted in collaboration with a probe by special counsel Robert Mueller into Mr. Manafort and possible money laundering, according to two of these people.

Federal court paves way for undocumented teen to have abortion

Ariane de Vogue and Emanuella Grinberg, CNN

A federal appeals court on Tuesday cleared the way for an undocumented teen in detention in Texas to end her pregnancy against the objections of the Trump administration. The full D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that 17-year-old Jane Doe is entitled to seek an abortion without delay.

Scott Brown: U.S. ambassador to New Zealand investigated over inappropriate comments

Eleanor Ainge Roy, The Guardian

The US ambassador to New Zealand Scott Brown has admitted he has been investigated over allegations he made inappropriate comments on his inaugural trip to Samoa, of which he is also the US representative. Brown told New Zealand media on Wednesday he wanted to address "innuendo and rumour" about his visit to Samoa in July to celebrate 50 years of the peace corps in the country.

Cubans Forcefully Reject Blame for U.S. Diplomats' Mystery Ailments

Andrea Mitchell and Mark Murray, NBC News

In an exclusive interview with NBC News, Cuban officials forcefully denied that their government was to blame for the mysterious ailments that have afflicted two dozen American diplomats and plunged relations with the U.S. into crisis. President Donald Trump has publicly blamed the government in Havana for the reported symptoms, which range from hearing loss and nausea to memory problems and mild traumatic brain injury.

---

Presidential

Trump targets 11 nations in refugee order

Ted Hesson, Politico

The Trump administration will resume refugee admissions, but will impose new security measures on 11 nations. President Donald Trump issued an executive order Tuesday to restart the refugee resettlement program, which was suspended for 120 days as part of the president's travel ban.

Voters Say They Think Trump Wants to Weaken U.S. Ties With NAFTA Partners

Ryan Rainey, Morning Consult

President Donald Trump and administration officials have been driving a hard bargain in recent talks with Canada and Mexico to renegotiate the North American Free Trade Agreement, to the point where NAFTA supporters in the United States are publicly speculating that the administration is trying to undermine the 23-year-old pact. A 44 percent plurality of registered voters said Trump wants to weaken the relationship between the United States, Canada and Mexico, according to a Morning Consult/Politico poll conducted online Oct. 19-23 among 1,988 Americans.

Inside Trump's meeting with Senate GOP

Alexander Bolton, The Hill

Senators arrived at their weekly lunch Tuesday prepared to witness a heavyweight bout between President Trump and Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.). Sen. Thom Tillis (R-N.C.) even brought popcorn. But the meeting was largely free of turmoil, according to the senators who were in the room, though it included some memorable moments.

Trump Asks GOP Senators: Should Taylor or Powell Be Fed Chief?

Kate Davidson and Peter Nicholas, The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump on Tuesday asked Republican senators for a show-of-hands poll on two candidates he is considering to be the next chairman of the Federal Reserve. Sen. Tim Scott (R., S.C.) said the president, who was on Capitol Hill at a Senate GOP caucus lunch, asked the group which candidate they preferred to lead the Fed-current Fed governor Jerome Powell or Stanford University economics professor John Taylor.

Trump to skip key East Asia Summit while in Asia

Jonathan Lemire, The Associated Press

President Donald Trump will skip a key Asia summit at the end of his trip to the region next month. The White House said Tuesday that Trump will be returning to the United States on Nov. 14, which is the same day as the East Asia Summit (EAS) in the Philippines.

Trump's Next Chance to Wreck Obamacare: Open Enrollment

John Tozzi et al., Bloomberg

At the Coastal Carolina Fair outside Charleston, S.C., you can visit a haunted house, touch a llama at the petting zoo, and, until this year, sign up for health coverage under the Affordable Care Act. Workers from the nonprofit Palmetto Project sometimes stayed at the fairgrounds until midnight over the past four years to help people enroll, but they won't be there Thursday when the fair opens.

---

Senate

Senate Passes Hurricane Relief Bill Granting Puerto Rico Loans

Erik Wasson, Bloomberg

The Senate sent President Donald Trump a $36.5 billion hurricane relief bill Tuesday that gives Puerto Rico access to $4.9 billion in low-interest Treasury loans, amid concerns that recovery efforts from the recent disasters will require significantly more funding. The measure, passed 82-17, also would replenish the troubled National Flood Insurance Program, which runs out of money as early as this week.

Congress Votes to Overturn CFPB Arbitration Rule

Andrew Ackerman and Yuka Hayashi, The Wall Street Journal

Congress overturned a rule by an Obama-appointed financial regulator that would have made it easier for consumers to sue banks in groups, with Vice President Mike Pence casting a tiebreaking vote in the Senate. The 51-50 vote handed the financial industry its most significant legislative victory since President Donald Trump took office and was a rebuke of Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Director Richard Cordray, who pressed ahead with his agenda in defiance of Republicans.

'Cascading effect': Sen. Jeff Flake's announcement jolts political world, Senate race

Dan Nowicki and Yvonne Wingett Sanchez, The Arizona Republic

U.S. Sen. Jeff Flake's surprise announcement that he is abruptly bowing out of his 2018 re-election race set Arizona's political world on end Tuesday, prompting prominent Republicans to take a fresh look at what is now an open seat. The new dynamic likely has any Arizona Republican member of the U.S. House of Representatives at least considering the opportunity.

Kid Rock: Of course I'm not running for Senate

Brian McCollum, Detroit Free Press

Mocking people who took the idea seriously, Kid Rock said Tuesday morning he's not running for U.S. Senate. "F- no, I'm not running for Senate. Are you kidding me?" Rock said on Howard Stern's SiriusXM show.

Major McConnell Ally Says Bannon Endorsements Could Give Democrats An Opening

Henry J. Gomez, BuzzFeed News

This week, one of the Democratic senators up for reelection next year in a state that Donald Trump won called Steve Bannon a white supremacist. Asked Sunday during an appearance on CNN's State of the Union if he agreed with an assertion by Democratic Rep. Frederica Wilson that the White House is "full of white supremacists," Ohio's Sherrod Brown used the opportunity to bash Trump's former chief strategist.

---

House

2 top Brady aides charged in probe of payoff to 2012 primary rival

Jeremy Roebuck et al., The Philadelphia Inquirer

Two longtime top political advisers to U.S. Rep. Bob Brady were charged Tuesday by a federal grand jury with taking part in a scheme to disguise a $90,000 payment to a challenger to Brady in the 2012 primary as part of a secret plan to pay the rival to drop out of the race. Charged were consultant Kenneth Smukler, 57, a gregarious politico and communications specialist; and Donald "D.A." Jones, 62, a more low-key technocrat who is an expert in get-out-the vote tactics.

Democrats: Tax reform failure will flip the House

Heather Caygle and Aaron Lorenzo, Politico

House Democrats have spent weeks publicly lambasting Republicans for trying to muscle through a partisan tax overhaul. But privately, Democratic leaders have no intention of engaging with Republicans even if they offered, sources close to them say.

Democrats Lack Strong Challengers for Some Vulnerable G.O.P.

House Seats

Nate Cohn, The New York Times

Democratic congressional challengers have posted very impressive fundraising tallies so far this year. In the last quarter, nearly three dozen Republican incumbents were outraised by at least one Democratic challenger - an astonishing number against sitting members of Congress.

NC representative laughs off criticism from 'swamp creature' Chuck Schumer

Brian Murphy, The News & Observer

Rep. Mark Walker has made a quick ascent during his short tenure in the U.S. House of Representatives. The second-term Republican from Greensboro is the chairman of the powerful Republican Study Committee, a post held a decade ago by Vice President Mike Pence.

---

States

Democrats win another NH House special election

Kyle Landrigan, New Hampshire Union Leader

New Hampshire Democrats won another special election to the Legislature, this one in Dover's Ward 1 in very Democratic-leaning territory. Casey Conley, a former reporter for Foster's Daily Democrat, won the seat handily over Republican Guy Eaton and Libertarian Barry Shields.

Democrats running for governor face off in San Francisco over healthcare, charter schools

Phil Willon and Seema Mehta, Los Angeles Times

Reflecting a growing divide among California Democrats on single-payer healthcare and charter schools, California gubernatorial candidates landed on separate sides of those issues during a candidate forum in San Francisco Tuesday. The most heated exchange came in a clash between former Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and Lt. Gov. Gavin Newsom over how to pay for a universal healthcare system that would cover all Californians and dramatically reshape medical coverage in the state.

Scott defends embattled Illinois governor, while branding his state 'anti-business'

Matt Dixon, Politico

Gov. Rick Scott announced on Tuesday he's making an economic development trip to Chicago to bring jobs to Florida. But in the process he's also walking a fine political line of defending the embattled GOP governor of Illinois, while still branding the state "anti-business."

Massachusetts Mulls Shifting to Atlantic Time-And Staying There

Jon Kamp, The Wall Street Journal

As Americans get ready to turn the clocks back next month, a Massachusetts commission is exploring whether the state should spring ahead one hour for good. Winter darkness comes early in New England, which sits along the edge of the Eastern Time Zone, and preserving more late-afternoon sunshine could yield some health and economic benefits, according to a draft report from a Massachusetts commission studying the issue.

---

Advocacy

Silicon Valley Gets Behind Initiative to Challenge Trump's Agenda in Court

Lizette Chapman, Bloomberg

The day after U.S. President Donald Trump ordered a ban on travelers from seven majority Muslim countries, Mamoon Hamid was rallying a response from Silicon Valley. The Pakistan-born venture capitalist held a private dinner that night in San Francisco, where he pitched other investors, entrepreneurs and technology executives on a coalition that could challenge the Trump administration's most controversial policies in court.

Private Prisons Boost Lobbying as Federal Detention Needs Grow Dean DeChiaro, Roll Call

One of the country's largest private prison companies is spending record amounts on lobbying amid efforts by the Trump administration to detain more undocumented immigrants, federal records show. The GEO Group, which has contracts with Immigration and Customs Enforcement, the Bureau of Prisons and the Marshals Service, has spent nearly $1.3 million on lobbying from Jan. 1 through Sept. 30, according to new lobbying records filed with Congress.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Trick or treat? The Durbin amendment has hurt consumers the most, according to TWELVE different studies. Let's end retailers' tricks at their customers' expense by repealing the Durbin amendment. Get the latest from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Enough

Jeff Flake, The Washington Post

As I contemplate the Trump presidency, I cannot help but think of Joseph Welch. On June 9, 1954, during the Army-McCarthy hearings, Welch, who was the chief counsel for the Army, famously asked the committee chairman if he might speak on a point of personal privilege.

The FBI's Political Meddling

Holman W. Jenkins, Jr., The Wall Street Journal

Let's give plausible accounts of the known facts, then explain why demands that Robert Mueller recuse himself from the Russia investigation may not be the fanciful partisan grandstanding you imagine. Here's a story consistent with what has been reported in the press-how reliably reported is uncertain.

We Need a Strategy for the Middle East

John McCain, The New York Times

Clashes this month between elements of the Iraqi security forces and Kurdish fighters around Kirkuk are deeply troubling, in particular because of the United States' longstanding friendship with the Kurdish people. These clashes are also emblematic of a broader, more troubling reality: Beyond our tactical successes in the fight against the Islamic State, the United States is still dangerously lacking a comprehensive strategy toward the rest of the Middle East in all of its complexity.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

What's scarier than a ghost? Retailers' broken promises over the Durbin amendment, which have cost consumers $6-8 billion each year. Stop this nightmare and get rid of this policy once and for all! Read more about the policy's failures.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Jeff Flake Becomes 1st Arizona US Senator Not to Seek 2nd Term

Eric Ostermeier, University of Minnesota

Jeff Flake's surprise announcement on Tuesday that he will not run for reelection in 2018 means he is the first of the 11 Arizona U.S. Senators since statehood never to run for a second term. Arizona has a history of long-serving members of the nation's upper legislative chamber.

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Senate Confirms Nielsen to Lead DHS
Date: Wednesday, December 06, 2017 9:05:20 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- The Senate voted 62 to 37 to confirm Kirstjen Nielsen to lead the Department of Homeland Security. Nielsen had served as chief of staff to John Kelly when he was DHS secretary, and she later became a top White House aide when Kelly was named President Donald Trump's chief of staff. (CNN)
- International leaders criticized Trump's plan to recognize Jerusalem as Israel's capital, which he is set to announce today. Pope Francis said he was "profoundly concerned," while China raised concerns about "possible aggravation of regional tensions." (The Associated Press)

- Donald Trump Jr., the president's eldest son, is scheduled to testify today before the House Intelligence Committee behind closed doors. Democratic investigators are interested in the Trump family's financial ties to Moscow and any communications Trump Jr. had with former national security adviser Michael Flynn, who pleaded guilty to lying to the Federal Bureau of Investigation about his meeting with Sergey Kislyak, Russia's ambassador to the United States. (The Hill)
- A new poll found that 61 percent of registered voters say Congress should probe all credible allegations of sexual misconduct against a sitting politician, even if the alleged events took place before the lawmaker took office. The survey comes amid allegations of past sexual misconduct involving Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.) and ahead of the Dec. 12 special election for Senate in Alabama, where Republican nominee Roy Moore has been accused of sexual misconduct from decades ago. (Morning Consult)

Chart Review

Deadline Looming, House GOP Keeps Talking About Funding

Options

Roll Call

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

California Attorney General Becerra speaks at National Press Club 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Burr speaks at Council on Foreign Relations event 12:45 p.m.

---

Sen. Coons speaks at ITIF event on the economy 1 p.m.

---

House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on Brexit negotiations 2 p.m.

THURSDAY

ACCF event on Trump's economic policy agenda 9:30 a.m.

---

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on sanctions for nonproliferation 10 a.m.

---

Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on the Defense Department's acquisition reform efforts 10 a.m.

---

FBI director testifies before House Judiciary Committee 10 a.m.

---

CSIS event on OPEC's World Oil Outlook 2017 2 p.m.

FRIDAY

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on China and the U.S.-Japan alliance 10:30 a.m.

---

Trump campaign rally in Pensacola, Fla. 7 p.m.

General

Voters Say No Statute of Limitations for Lawmakers Accused of Sexual Misconduct

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

Most voters say that lawmakers accused of sexual misconduct should be formally investigated, even if the alleged events occurred before they took office, a new Morning Consult/Politico poll shows. Sixty-one percent of poll respondents said Congress should probe all credible allegations of sexual misconduct against a sitting politician, while 28 percent said the legislative body should only investigate events that took place after a lawmaker was sworn in.

Justices Sharply Divided in Wedding Cake Case

Adam Liptak, The New York Times

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, who almost certainly holds the crucial vote in the case of a Colorado baker who refused to make a wedding cake for a gay couple, sent sharply contradictory messages when it was argued Tuesday at the Supreme Court. He asked a lawyer for the Trump administration whether the baker, Jack Phillips, could put a sign in his window saying, "We don't bake cakes for gay weddings."

DOJ reviewing whether gun bump stocks should be banned

Cristiano Lima, Politico

Federal authorities announced Tuesday they are reviewing whether bump stocks, the gun accessory used in a Las Vegas shooting in October that killed 58 concert-goers, should be prohibited. The Department of Justice and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives said the process will seek to determine whether existing regulations outlawing the possession of machine guns can be applied to the accessory, which lets semi-automatic weapons fire more rapidly.

---

Presidential

Warnings intensify as Trump readies Jerusalem declaration

Josef Federman and Matthew Lee, The Associated Press

America's friends and foes unleashed fierce criticism on Wednesday ahead of President Donald Trump's announcement recognizing Jerusalem as Israel's capital. While Israel welcomed the news, Palestinian officials declared the Mideast peace process "finished" and Turkey announced it would host a meeting of Islamic nations next week to give Muslim countries' leaders an opportunity to coordinate a response.

Trump pressuring congressional Republicans to speed up on tax reform

Nancy Cook and Aaron Lorenzo, Politico

President Donald Trump has told congressional leaders he'd like the final deal on tax reform to move even faster than the Dec. 22 goal they've set, according to White House officials. "We want it to proceed as quickly as possible, and we've communicated that to the Hill in a lot of ways," said Marc Short, White House director of legislative affairs.

Trump pushing to dismiss suit brought by former 'Apprentice' contestant over groping claims

Laura Nahmias, Politico

Sexual harassment allegations against President Donald Trump dating back to his days hosting the reality TV show "The Apprentice" will be raised in a New York courtroom Tuesday afternoon, where a judge will hear arguments on a motion to dismiss a suit brought by a former contestant who says Trump groped her a decade ago. Summer Zervos filed a defamation suit after Trump issued a statement appearing to dismiss her allegations that he repeatedly kissed her on the mouth, grabbed her breast and thrust his genitals at her when she appeared on the show in 2007.

---

Senate

Senate confirms Trump's 2nd permanent DHS chief

Eli Watkins, CNN

The Senate on Tuesday confirmed Kirstjen Nielsen to be secretary of Homeland Security, permanently filling the vacancy created when President Donald Trump selected retired Gen. John Kelly to be his chief of staff. Kelly left the Department of Homeland Security for the White House in late July during a shakeup that included the resignation of the former chief of staff, Reince Priebus.

GOP senators grumble over Trump, RNC backing Moore

Seung Min Kim and Kevin Robillard, Politico

Senate Republicans are still trying to keep their distance from Roy Moore, creating a fresh break with President Donald Trump and the Republican National Committee, which have re-embraced Moore less than a week before a key special Senate election despite accusations of child molestation against the Alabama Republican. Both the National Republican Senatorial Committee and the Senate Leadership Fund, a super PAC controlled by allies of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, said they plan on staying out of the contest. Several Republican senators furiously protested the RNC's decision on Tuesday.

Bannon Finds New Fight Backing Roy Moore, but Risks Are High Jeremy W. Peters, The New York Times

Four months ago, Stephen K. Bannon was plotting a takeover of Washington and the Republican Party from his office in the West Wing as chief strategist to President Trump. On Tuesday, Mr. Bannon the private citizen stood where his latest fight had taken him: the mulch floor of a barn in southern Alabama, where he delivered a passionate plea to elect Roy S. Moore, the former judge who faces numerous accusations that he preyed on young women, some of them teenagers.

Democrats place hold on McFarland nomination Manu Raju and Jeremy Herb, CNN

Democrats have placed a hold on the nomination of KT McFarland to be ambassador to Singapore until she answers their questions about her knowledge of communications between former national security adviser Michael Flynn and Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak, a Democratic source told CNN. McFarland told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in written comments that she "was not aware" of any communications between Flynn and the Russian ambassador - an assertion that appears to be contradicted by court documents unsealed Friday after Flynn pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI.

Senate Banking Advances Powell Nomination for Fed Chairman Doug Sword, Roll Call

The Senate Banking Committee voted 22-1 Tuesday to recommend confirmation of Jerome Powell as the next chairman of the Federal Reserve. Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren voted against the recommendation.

E.W. Jackson, conservative firebrand, preparing U.S. Senate bid in Virginia Jenna Portnoy, The Washington Post

E.W. Jackson, a firebrand minister who says yoga leads to Satan and gay people are ill, plans to announce he is seeking the Republican nomination to challenge U.S. Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) next year, according to Jackson's finance director. Jackson will announce his candidacy on Dec. 11 in the Chesapeake area, said Steven Thomas, who said he is raising money for Jackson's campaign and filled the same role during Jackson's 2013 losing bid for lieutenant governor.

---

House

Trump Jr. set for high-stakes interview with House intel panel

Katie Bo Williams and Olivia Beavers, The Hill

Donald Trump Jr. is set on Wednesday to testify before congressional investigators probing Russian interference in the election, the latest high-stakes interview of a member of President Trump's immediate family. The interview, which is voluntary and will take place behind closed doors with the House Intelligence Committee, is Trump Jr.'s second appearance on Capitol Hill and follows similar interviews by the president's son-in-law, Jared Kushner.

Donald Trump Jr. asked Russian lawyer for info on Clinton Foundation

Ken Dilanian and Natasha Lebedeva, NBC News

Donald Trump Jr. asked a Russian lawyer at the June 2016 Trump Tower meeting whether she had evidence of illegal donations to the Clinton Foundation, the lawyer told the Senate Judiciary Committee in answers to written questions obtained exclusively by NBC News. The lawyer, Natalia Veselnitskaya, told the committee that she didn't have any such evidence, and that she believes Trump misunderstood the nature of the meeting after receiving emails from a music promoter promising incriminating information on Hillary Clinton, Donald Trump's Democratic opponent.

House GOP Postpones Short-Term Spending Bill Vote

Kristina Peterson, The Wall Street Journal

A dispute among House Republicans over their year-end strategy forced GOP leaders to delay a vote on a stopgap spending bill, with just a handful of days before a partial government shutdown. House GOP leaders were still debating Tuesday evening whether to bring to the floor on Thursday a short-term spending bill to keep the government running through Dec. 22 or Dec. 30.

House GOP exploring tax plan changes to help California, other high-tax states

Mike DeBonis, The Washington Post

Top House Republicans said Tuesday they were exploring changes to their tax plan that would lower tax bills for Californians and others who pay high state income taxes - including by allowing Americans to deduct some state income tax payments from what they owe in federal taxes. House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady (R-Tex.) told reporters Tuesday that tax writers are looking at a number of ways to give relief to residents of high-tax states.

Black lawmakers resentful after Conyers resignation

John Bresnahan, Politico

The stunning fall of Democratic Rep. John Conyers - who resigned Tuesday amid a growing sexual-harassment scandal - has left confusion, anger, resentment and bewilderment inside the ranks of the Congressional Black Caucus, a group that Conyers helped found nearly four decades ago. Many CBC members see a double standard at play.

Conservative lawmakers met to discuss GOP chairman's ouster

Scott Wong, The Hill

Leaders of the conservative Republican Study Committee met last week and discussed their desire to oust Rep. Rodney Frelinghuysen as Appropriations chairman after the New Jersey Republican voted against the GOP tax-reform bill, The Hill has learned. Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.), a former Republican Study Committee (RSC) chairman who's now the party's chief vote-counter, participated in that discussion last Thursday, GOP sources said.

Lexington Mayor Jim Gray running for Congress

Daniel Desrochers, Lexington Herald Leader

After months of will-he, won't-he whispering among Kentucky Democrats, Lexington Mayor Jim Gray made it official early Tuesday: He's running for Congress. "We need to bring people together; we need to reach across partisan lines," Gray said as he launched his campaign in Berea.

---

States

Joe Trillo to run for governor as an independent

Patrick Anderson, Providence Journal

Joseph A. Trillo, the former Republican state lawmaker who became the leading Rhode Island advocate for President Donald Trump, said Tuesday he will run for governor as an independent, shocking many in the party he is leaving and adding a new wrinkle to the developing 2018 race. "To win with my message in Rhode Island I will need Democratic support. I feel this can only be accomplished by shedding party politics and running as an independent," Trillo said as he formally launched his campaign on radio station WPRO Tuesday afternoon.

Ben Jealous releases plan for statewide 'Medicare for all'

Michael Dresser, The Baltimore Sun

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ben Jealous released a plan Wednesday calling on Maryland to take the plunge and create a universal health care system without waiting for the the federal government to take the lead. The release of Jealous' outline of a statewide "Medicare for all" plan comes as he is planning a Wednesday night rally at the College of Notre Dame with 2016 presidential candidate Sen. Bernie Sanders, a supporter of single-payer health care who has endorsed Jealous' candidacy.

Women rock Tuesday's runoffs in metro Atlanta

Greg Bluestein, Atlanta Journal-Constitution

There was never any doubt that voters on Tuesday would elect Atlanta's second female mayor. But up and down the ballot for Tuesday's runoff, metro Atlanta voters sent a wave of other women to public office.

---

Advocacy

Conservative Groups Seeking Support for Tax Cuts Find It a Hard Sell

Jeremy W. Peters, The New York Times

A dozen high school students working for Americans for Prosperity, the conservative political network funded by Charles G. and David H. Koch, fanned out across the Little Havana neighborhood one day last week to make the case that the Republican tax bill was something to get excited about. "We believe it's time to fix our broken tax code and let families keep more of what they earn," Barbara D'Ambrosio, a sophomore, dutifully told an elderly woman who answered the door in her slippers.

How Trump Did the Impossible: Getting Solar and Oil Lobbyists to Unite

Ari Natter and Jennifer A Dlouhy, Bloomberg

In his 20 years of promoting renewable energy in Washington, Gregory Wetstone has made common cause with a range of special interest groups:- environmentalists, power utilities, even a handful of natural gas producers. But President Donald Trump's efforts to bail out the coal industry led Wetstone, the head of the American Council on Renewable Energy, to find a surprising new partner: Big Oil.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A new EPC report analyzes how countries that adopt EMV experience lower counterfeit card fraud rates. It's time for a dynamic data security strategy to protect consumers like you. Learn more from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Does President Trump Want to Negotiate Middle East Peace?

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

In the debate over a potential Israeli-Palestinian peace agreement, no issue is more charged with emotion than the future of Jerusalem. Should the holy city be the capital of the Israelis alone or shared with the Palestinians?

The Right Move on Monuments

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

President Trump announced Monday that he will dramatically reduce the acreage of two national monuments. The order ends excessive federal control of Utah land, allowing residents to protect their own territory and conserve their cultural relics.

What a presidential president would have said about the FBI Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Given how far President Trump strays from the norms of democratic rhetoric, we think it useful from time to time to recall how a more presidential president might speak. This is another such time.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

NEW REPORT: EMV adoption is critical to reduce counterfeit fraud in the U.S. Learn how EPC members are developing and implementing new technologies to make your life more secure.

---

Research Reports and Polling

One Nation, Divided, Under Trump: Findings from the 2017 American Values Survey Alex Vandermaas-Peeler et al., PRRI

Seven in ten (70%) Americans say that recent stories about women being sexually harassed and assaulted in the workplace are part of a broader pattern of how women are often treated, while about one-quarter (24%) say that they are isolated incidents. Nearly eight in ten (78%) women, and more than six in ten (63%) men, say that recent reports of sexual harassment and assault are not isolated incidents.

Best Places to Work in the Federal Government Partnership for Public Service

The annual Best Places to Work in the Federal Government® rankings are produced by the nonprofit, nonpartisan Partnership for Public Service and Deloitte. The 2017 rankings include the views of more than 498,000 civil servants from 200 federal organizations on a wide range of workplace topics.

Two-thirds of youth fearful about America's future, prefer Democratic control of Congress, Harvard youth poll finds Harvard Institute of Politics

A new national poll of America's 18- to 29-year-olds by Harvard's Institute of Politics (IOP), located at the Kennedy School of Government, finds that two-thirds of young Americans (67%) are more fearful than hopeful about America's future. Less than one year before the 2018 midterm elections, likely young American voters cite preference for Democratic control of Congress, 65% to 33%.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Supreme Court Grants Administration Request to Bar Most Refugees Under Travel Ban
Date: Wednesday, September 13, 2017 9:11:19 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- The Supreme Court lifted some restrictions on President Donald Trump's travel ban for the time being, allowing the administration to prohibit most refugees from entering the United States. A lower court had ruled that the administration cannot ban refugees who have a formal relationship with a refugee resettlement agency. (The Hill)
- Following last night's meeting with a bipartisan group of senators to discuss tax reform, Trump is scheduled to hold similar talks today with members of the House Problem Solvers Caucus and centrist Democratic "Blue Dogs."

The leaders will also discuss infrastructure and health care, and possibly immigration policy. (USA Today)

- House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) are scheduled to meet today to discuss the Dream Act and the fate of people enrolled in the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, which the Trump administration is expected to end in March. (The Washington Post)
- The House joined the Senate in unanimously adopting a joint resolution that condemns last month's racially motivated violence in Charlottesville, Va. The resolution will be sent to the White House as early as today. (The New York Times)
- GOP voters trust Trump more than Republican congressional leaders, 56 percent to 28 percent, to work with Democrats to achieve certain policy outcomes, according to a new poll. The national survey of registered voters also showed that Republicans prefer that Trump work with congressional Democrats, not just GOP lawmakers, to advance his agenda. (Morning Consult)

Chart Review

Poll: Most GOP Voters Trust Trump Over Party Leaders on Bipartisan Dealmaking

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

Sen. Portman, Rep. Tonko speak at event on opioid epidemic 8 a.m.

---

Rep. Ro Khanna speaks at Atlantic Council event on visa policies 10:30 a.m.

---

Millennial Action Project event on the book "The Impossible Presidency: The Rise and Fall of America's Highest Office" 12 p.m.

---

Airlines for America Commercial Aviation Industry Summit	12 p.m.
--	---------

---

House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on Venezuela	2 p.m.
---	--------

---

CFR event on the upcoming German federal election	6:30 p.m.
---	-----------

THURSDAY

Politico Pro Policy Summit	7:45 a.m.
----------------------------	-----------

---

Sens. Heitkamp, Whitehouse, Capito, Barrasso speak at Center for Climate and Energy Solutions	8:30 a.m.
---	-----------

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on individual tax reform	10 a.m.
---	---------

---

Senate HELP Committee hearing on the individual insurance market	10 a.m.
--	---------

FRIDAY

AEI event on trade deficits and the Trump administration	10 a.m.
--	---------

General

Congress Passes Measure Challenging Trump to Denounce Hate Groups

Glenn Thrush, The New York Times

The House and Senate have unanimously passed a joint resolution urging President Trump to denounce racist and anti-Semitic hate groups, sending a blunt message of dissatisfaction with the president's initial, equivocal response to the white nationalist violence in Charlottesville, Va., last month. The resolution passed the Senate without dissent on Monday and was approved without objection by the entire House on Tuesday night.

U.S. Threatens China Over North Korea Sanctions

Ian Talley, The Wall Street Journal

The Trump administration threatened on Tuesday to impose further sanctions on China if Beijing doesn't do more to shut down banks and other Chinese firms aiding North Korea. If China doesn't implement the United Nations sanctions regime it has backed, "We will put additional sanctions on them and prevent them from accessing the U.S. and international dollar system," Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Tuesday at a conference.

FEMA estimates 25 percent of Florida Keys homes are gone

Jason Dearen and Martha Mendoza, The Associated Press

With 25 percent of the homes in the Florida Keys feared destroyed, emergency workers Tuesday rushed to find Hurricane Irma's victims - dead or alive - and deliver food and water to the stricken island chain. As crews labored to repair the lone highway connecting the Keys, residents of some of the islands closest to Florida's mainland were allowed to return and get their first look at the devastation.

U.S. middle-class incomes reached highest-ever level in 2016, Census Bureau says

Heather Long, The Washington Post

The incomes of middle-class Americans rose last year to the highest level ever recorded by the Census Bureau, as poverty declined and the scars of the past decade's Great Recession seemed to finally fade. Median household income rose to $59,039 in 2016, a 3.2 percent increase from the previous year and the second consecutive year of healthy gains, the Census Bureau reported Tuesday.

Edith Windsor, Whose Same-Sex Marriage Fight Led to Landmark Ruling, Dies at 88

Robert D. McFadden, The New York Times

Edith Windsor, the gay-rights activist whose landmark Supreme Court case struck down the Defense of Marriage Act in 2013 and granted same-sex married couples federal recognition for the first time and rights to myriad federal benefits, died on Tuesday in Manhattan. She was 88.

---

Presidential

Supreme Court lifts restrictions on Trump travel ban

Lydia Wheeler, The Hill

The Supreme Court agreed late Tuesday to lift restrictions on President Trump's travel ban until further notice, allowing the administration to continue barring most refugees under the ban. The court granted the government's request to block a federal appeals court ruling that said the administration cannot ban refugees who have formal assurances from resettlement agencies or are in the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program.

White House Weighs Lowering Refugee Quota to Below 50,000

Julie Hirschfeld Davis and Miriam Jordan, The New York Times

The Trump administration is considering reducing the number of refugees admitted to the country over the next year to below 50,000, according to current and former government officials familiar with the discussions, the lowest number since at least 1980. President Trump promised during his 2016 campaign to deny admittance to refugees who posed a terrorist threat.

Trump to meet with bipartisan group of House moderates Wednesday

Nicole Gaudiano, USA Today

President Trump has invited a bipartisan group of moderate House members to the White House on Wednesday to discuss a host of issues, including tax reform, infrastructure and health care, according to a congressional source familiar with the meeting. The meeting may also include a discussion of the path forward for "DREAMers," undocumented immigrants who came to the U.S. as children, the source said, asking for anonymity to discuss a meeting that had not been publicly announced.

Trump Woos Democrats on Tax Overhaul at White House Dinner

John Voskuhl, Bloomberg

Three Democratic senators joined President Donald Trump for a White House dinner Tuesday aimed at winning their support for an as-yet unreleased tax overhaul bill that would be written by Republican leaders. Trump's guests - Joe Manchin of West Virginia, Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota and Joe Donnelly of Indiana - are the only three Democratic senators who haven't signed on to a list of conditions for supporting any tax legislation: that it not add to the federal deficit, that it not increase the burden on the middle class and that it go through the regular order process in Congress.

White House: Justice Department should 'certainly look at' prosecuting former FBI Director James Comey

Melissa Quinn, Washington Examiner

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Tuesday the Department of Justice should "certainly look at" whether to prosecute former FBI Director James Comey over recent actions. "That's not the president's role. That's the job of the Department of Justice and something they should certainly look at," Sanders said during Tuesday's White House press briefing when asked if President Trump would encourage the Justice Department to prosecute the former FBI director.

Russia Sought A Broad Reset With Trump, Secret Document Shows John Hudson, BuzzFeed News

In the third month of Donald Trump's presidency, Vladimir Putin dispatched one of his diplomats to the State Department to deliver a bold proposition: The full normalization of relations between the United States and Russia across all major branches of government. The proposal, spelled out in a detailed document obtained by BuzzFeed News, called for the wholesale restoration of diplomatic, military and intelligence channels severed between the two countries after Russia's military interventions in Ukraine and Syria.

---

Senate

Ready Or Not, Here Comes Bernie Sanders And His Single-Payer Plan

Jonathan Cohn, HuffPost

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) plans to unveil a new version of his "Medicare-for-all" proposal on Wednesday. But the actual substance of the plan may matter less than what he says about it — and the role he envisions that proposal playing in future debates over how to reform the U.S. health care system.

Conservative Democrat Open to Single-Payer Health System

Sahil Kapur, Bloomberg

The Senate's most conservative Democrat said Tuesday Congress should consider adopting a single-payer health-care system, a sign of how fast politics are shifting on what was once seen as a fringe issue on the left. "It should be explored," said West Virginia Senator Joe Manchin, who faces re-election next year in a state President Donald Trump carried by 42 points.

Senate to vote on Rand Paul's war proposal

Jordain Carney, The Hill

The Senate will weigh in on Sen. Rand Paul's push to sunset two war authorizations, a vote that follows the Kentucky Republican's threat to grind an annual defense bill to a standstill. Senators will hold a vote on Paul's amendment to sunset the 2001 and 2002 Authorizations for the Use of Military Force (AUMF) on Wednesday.

Cruz Wades Into Tax Debate With Focus on Expensing

Richard Rubin and Siobhan Hughes, The Wall Street Journal

Sen. Ted Cruz (R., Texas) will lay down a marker in the tax debate on Wednesday, endorsing full and immediate deductions for capital investment by businesses. In a speech at a Tax Foundation event, Mr. Cruz will emphasize that such full expensing instead of current multiyear depreciation schedules would make the tax code simpler and direct tax benefits to new investments, according to a person familiar with his remarks.

---

House

Ryan and Pelosi to huddle on Dream Act to protect DACA recipients

Ed O'Keefe, The Washington Post

Top House leaders plan to huddle Wednesday to begin discussing legislation that would provide protections to nearly 700,000 "dreamers" at risk of losing their legal status in six months if Congress fails to act. House Speaker Paul D. Ryan (R-Wis.) and House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) plan to meet with House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), House Minority Whip Steny H. Hoyer (D-Md.) and the leaders of the congressional Asian, Black and Hispanic caucuses to discuss potential debate of the Dream Act, a bill that would grant legal protections to the roughly 690,000 people currently enrolled in the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, the Obama-era executive action that protects undocumented immigrants who were brought to the United States as children.

Luis Gutiérrez doubles down, calls John Kelly 'mean' for supporting DACA's demise

Ed O'Keefe, The Washington Post

Rep. Luis V. Gutiérrez (D-Ill.) doubled down on his criticisms of White House Chief of Staff John F. Kelly on Tuesday, saying that President Trump's top aide is "mean" for standing by while the administration prepares to deport hundreds of thousands of immigrants known as "dreamers." Appearing Tuesday at a Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute event, Gutiérrez was asked by a Washington Post reporter moderating the event to clarify why he recently called Kelly a "hypocrite" and "a disgrace to the uniform he used to wear" because he supported Trump's decision to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program.

Dems to Mueller: Flynn failed to disclose trip to broker Saudi-Russian business deal

Manu Raju and Marshall Cohen, CNN

House Democrats sent special counsel Robert Mueller what they say is evidence that former national security adviser Michael Flynn failed to disclose a trip he took to the Middle East to explore a business deal with the Saudi government and a Russian government agency. The Democrats allege the retired Army lieutenant general broke the law by omitting the trip, according to the letter they sent to Flynn's former business partners requesting more information about his overseas travels and contacts.

---

States

Michigan Attorney General Schuette joins Republican race for governor

Paul Egan, Detroit Free Press

Michigan Attorney General Bill Schuette officially joined the Republican race for Michigan governor Tuesday night, promising that if elected he would cut state income taxes, push Congress to repeal the Affordable Care Act, and bring the state more and better-paying jobs. "Michigan needs leaders who are laser-focused on jobs," Schuette said in a hall at the Midland County Fairgrounds.

Democratic candidate for governor proposes Medicaid-for-all health care plan in Colorado

John Frank, The Denver Post

A Democratic candidate for governor is proposing a Medicaid-for-all health care system in Colorado, endorsing a public option to help address limited insurance options in rural counties. Cary Kennedy announced Tuesday that she supports allowing anyone to buy into the state's government-run Medicaid system - a policy stance that puts a line in the sand in the crowded 2018 Democratic primary on the issue of health care.

Over liberals' objections, Supreme Court says Texas need not draw new districts now

Robert Barnes, The Washington Post

Over the objections of four liberal justices, the Supreme Court ruled Tuesday night that Texas does not immediately have to redraw electoral districts that a lower court found diminished the influence of minority voters. The 5-to-4 ruling almost surely means the 2018 midterm elections will be conducted in the disputed congressional and legislative districts.

Kobach's unproven voter fraud claim is challenged by fellow Trump commission members

Hunter Woodall, The Kansas City Star

Kris Kobach faced backlash from two of his colleagues on President Donald Trump's election commission Tuesday over the Kansas Republican's recent unproven claim that voter fraud likely changed the outcome of a key U.S. Senate election in New Hampshire. Kobach, who is vice chairman of President Donald Trump's special election integrity commission, explained the thinking behind his allegation, which brought national criticism and attention his way, during the panel's second meeting Tuesday.

Gov. Matt Bevin's plan for budget cuts illegal, Attorney General Andy Beshear says

Tom Loftus, Louisville Courier-Journal

Much, and perhaps all, of the recent Bevin administration plan to cut spending within most state agencies is illegal, Attorney General Andy Beshear said Tuesday. Beshear said while it may be prudent to warn state agencies of the need to curb spending, the budget action taken by the administration on Friday violates Kentucky law.

Seattle Mayor Ed Murray resigns after fifth child sex-abuse allegation

Jim Brunner et al., The Seattle Times

For five months, Seattle Mayor Ed Murray rejected calls for his resignation amid allegations he sexually abused teens decades before entering politics. But Murray couldn't withstand a devastating new allegation from within his own family.

---

Advocacy

The NRA has already spent more money on lobbying in 2017 than it did all last year

Alex Yablon and Mike Spies, Business Insider

In the first two quarters of 2017, the National Rifle Association has already spent more on lobbying than it did in all of last year. The gun group has spent $3.2 million from January 1 to June 30 trying to advance its policy agenda, according to an analysis of data provided by Open Secrets, a campaign finance and lobbying watchdog.

'Friends of the Court' Have Hidden Ties to Big Investors

Zachary R. Mider, Bloomberg

Chuck Cooper, one of Washington's top litigators, gives each new lawyer in his firm a full-size broadsword, a reminder of his motto: "Victory or death." For the past four years, Cooper has pursued a claim against the U.S. government that could generate a huge payday for his client, Bruce Berkowitz, a wealthy Miami investor.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A majority of voters are concerned with data breaches, yet there are no national data security standards to protect consumers at checkout. It's time retailers share responsibility for data security. Learn more from the Electronic Payments Coalition.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Why We Need Medicare for All

Bernie Sanders, The New York Times

This is a pivotal moment in American history. Do we, as a nation, join the rest of the industrialized world and guarantee comprehensive health care to every person as a human right?

How Florida Saved Taxpayers

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

These columns are often critical of government, especially when public officials put taxpayers on the hook for future risks. Think Fannie Mae, or federal flood insurance. So it's worth pointing out when a government acts to reduce taxpayer liabilities ahead of a fiscal storm, as Florida did before Hurricane Irma.

The Supreme Court should strike down Wisconsin's gerrymandering

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

The Supreme Court has long kept a distance from arguments over gerrymandering, that most American practice of redrawing the lines of legislative districts in order to tip elections toward the party in power. But early next month, the justices will hear a challenge to the 2011 redrawing of Wisconsin's state legislative map by Republican lawmakers - a demonstration of how increasingly powerful technology allows partisan mapmakers to distort representation with ever-greater precision.

There's Blood In The Water In Silicon Valley

Ben Smith, BuzzFeed News

The blinding rise of Donald Trump over the past year has masked another major trend in American politics: the palpable, and perhaps permanent, turn against the tech industry. The new corporate leviathans that used to be seen as bright new avatars of American innovation are increasingly portrayed as sinister new centers of unaccountable power, a transformation likely to have major consequences for the industry and for American politics.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Four times as many voters trust financial institutions over retailers to create new, more secure ways to pay, which is just one reason why the payments industry is focused on innovation. Banks and credit unions are continuously working to provide consumers with the latest security features when they pay. Get the latest from EPC.

---

Research Reports and Polling

So Far, the GOP Isn't Outpacing Trump's Approval

David Byler, RealClearPolitics

Presidential approval matters in midterms - but how? Political scientists and analysts have puzzled over this question for years in academic journals and other wonkish publications.

Global Human Capital Report 2017

World Economic Forum

Human capital is a key factor for growth, development and competitiveness. This link works through multiple pathways at the individual, firm and national level.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Trump Says No Deal Reached With Democrats on DACA
Date: Thursday, September 14, 2017 9:05:28 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) said they reached an agreement with President Donald Trump to replace the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. (The New York Times) Trump later said on Twitter that no such deal was made. (CNN)
- Michael G. Flynn, the son of Trump's former national security adviser, is a subject of special counsel Robert Mueller's probe into Russia's meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and possible Trump campaign ties to the

Kremlin. (NBC News)

- The Trump administration imposed sanctions on four countries - Cambodia, Eritrea, Guinea, and Sierra Leone - for allegedly refusing to accept citizens of theirs who have been deported from the United States. (Fox News)

Chart Review

Congress Approval Remains at 16% in September

Gallup

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

Sens. Heitkamp, Whitehouse, Capito, Barrasso speak at Center for Climate and Energy Solutions 8:30 a.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on individual tax reform 10 a.m.

---

Senate HELP Committee hearing on the individual insurance market 10 a.m.

FRIDAY

AEI event on trade deficits and the Trump administration

10 a.m.

General

Mike Flynn's Son Is Subject of Federal Russia Probe

Carol E. Lee et al., NBC News

Michael G. Flynn, the son of President Donald Trump's former national security adviser, is a subject of the federal investigation into Russian meddling in the presidential election and possible collusion between Moscow and the Trump campaign, according to four current and former government officials. The inquiry into Flynn is focused at least in part on his work with his father's lobbying firm, Flynn Intel Group, three of the officials said.

Flynn Promoted Nuclear-Plant Project While in White House Christopher S. Stewart et al., The Wall Street Journal

As President Donald Trump's national security adviser, retired Lt. Gen. Mike Flynn promoted a controversial private-sector nuclear power plan in the Middle East that had once involved Russian companies, according to former security-council staffers and others familiar with the effort. While working at the White House, Mr. Flynn advocated for a group of former senior U.S. military officers with whom he had worked while in the private sector.

Mueller Probe Has 'Red-Hot' Focus on Social Media, Officials Say Chris Strohm, Bloomberg

Russia's effort to influence U.S. voters through Facebook and other social media is a "red-hot" focus of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into the 2016 election and possible links to President Donald Trump's associates, according to U.S. officials familiar with the matter. Mueller's team of prosecutors and FBI agents is zeroing in on how Russia spread fake and damaging information through social media and is seeking additional evidence from companies like Facebook and Twitter about what happened on their networks, said one of the officials, who asked not to be identified discussing the ongoing investigation.

US slaps sanctions on four nations for refusing to take deported nationals Lukas Mikelionis, Fox News

The U.S. government has imposed sanctions on four countries that it says have refused to accept their deported citizens as part of the Trump administration's immigration crackdown. According to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, the four countries - Cambodia, Eritrea, Guinea, and Sierra Leone - are facing the sanctions for "lack of cooperation" in accepting the deported citizens. Cambodia is in Southeast Asia while the three other countries are in Africa.

Martin Shkreli Is Jailed for Seeking a Hair From Hillary Clinton Stephanie Clifford, The New York Times

Martin Shkreli, the former pharmaceutical executive who is awaiting sentencing for a fraud conviction, was sent to jail on Wednesday after a federal judge revoked his bail because he had offered $5,000 for a strand of Hillary Clinton's hair. Mr. Shkreli, who was free on $5 million bail while he awaited sentencing, had made two Facebook posts offering cash to anyone who could "grab a hair" from Mrs. Clinton during her book tour.

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin requested government jet for European honeymoon Justin Fishel et al., ABC News

Secretary Steven Mnuchin requested use of a government jet to take him and his wife on their honeymoon in Scotland, France and Italy earlier this summer, sparking an "inquiry" by the Treasury Department's Office of Inspector General, sources tell ABC News. Officials familiar with the matter say the highly unusual ask for a U.S. Air Force jet, which according to an Air Force spokesman could cost roughly $25,000 per hour to operate, was put in writing by the secretary's office but eventually deemed unnecessary after further consideration of by Treasury Department officials.

---

Presidential

Pelosi and Schumer Say They Have Deal With Trump to Replace DACA

Maggie Haberman and Yamiche Alcindor, The New York Times

Democratic leaders on Wednesday night declared that they had a deal with President Trump to quickly extend protections for young undocumented immigrants and to finalize a border security package that does not include the president's proposed wall. The Democrats, Senator Chuck Schumer and Representative Nancy Pelosi, said in a joint statement that they had a "very productive" dinner meeting with the president at the White House that focused on the program known as Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, or DACA.

Trump pushes back on Dems' claims of DACA deal Sophie Tatum and Daniella Diaz, CNN

President Donald Trump pushed back Thursday morning against claims by top congressional Democrats that a deal has been reached over legislation to protect hundreds of thousands of young undocumented immigrants and that a border-security package would not include a wall along the US-Mexico border. "No deal was made last night on DACA," Trump tweeted.

White House: ESPN should fire Jemele Hill over Trump 'white supremacist' tweet

Marissa Payne and Des Bieler, The Washington Post

A tweet posted by ESPN "SportsCenter" host Jemele Hill labeling President Trump a "white supremacist" continued to make waves on Wednesday after a Washington Post reporter asked about it during the press secretary's news conference. Later on Wednesday, Hill expressed "regret" for the way her comments "painted ESPN in an unfair light."

'I will not be distracted by the noise'

Courtney Weaver, Financial Times

Ivanka Trump is one of the most powerful first children in US history. Courtney Weaver talks to her about expectations, criticism and what comes next.

---

Senate

Senate Keeps War-Authorization Resolutions Dating Back to Early 2000s

Kristina Peterson and Ben Kesling, The Wall Street Journal

The Senate voted Wednesday to retain two resolutions authorizing the use of military force that date back to the early 2000s, even while lawmakers from both parties complained that Congress has avoided reopening debate on U.S. military commitments overseas. In a 61-36 vote, the Senate set aside an amendment from Sen. Rand Paul (R., Ky.) that would have phased out both the 2001 authorization for the use of military force against al Qaeda and those connected to the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, as well as the 2002 resolution that gave former President George W. Bush authority to invade Iraq.

Cruz Pushes Dodd-Frank Repeal as Key Tax Reform Plank

Anna Gronewold, Morning Consult

As the White House courts Senate Democrats as it tries to pick up additional support for the Republican tax reform effort, Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) is risking alienating his colleagues across the aisle by promoting a repeal of the Dodd-Frank Act through the fast-track reconciliation process. At a Tax Foundation panel Wednesday, Cruz laid out goals for what he said was meaningful GOP tax reform.

Senator wants Google, Facebook to testify on sex-trafficking bill

David McCabe, Axios

A Republican senator wants Google and Facebook to publicly defend their opposition, articulated through one of their top trade groups, to a bill aimed at stopping sex-trafficking. The companies say it would imperil them legally.

As G.O.P. Moves to Fill Courts, McConnell Takes Aim at an Enduring Hurdle

Carl Hulse, The New York Times

President Trump is eager to put his conservative imprint on the federal judiciary, but an impediment remains. Though the Senate has virtually eliminated the ability of the minority party to block appointments to the bench from the Supreme Court on down, individual senators can still thwart nominees from their home states by refusing to sign off on a form popularly known for its color - the blue slip.

Roy Moore-connected foundation's back pay to Senate candidate, second mortgage raise questions

Howard Koplowitz, AL.com

As the Foundation for Moral Law fought - unsuccessfully - a lawsuit against it by a firm that helped the nonprofit raise money, the organization with ties to U.S. Senate candidate Roy Moore took out a second mortgage on its Montgomery building to pay Moore years of back pay, federal court filings and Montgomery County probate records showed. Meanwhile, it remains unclear years later who paid the $465,000 judgement against the foundation because the organization has not filed its taxes since 2014 and didn't report the payment in its most recently filed tax returns.

---

House

Moderate Republicans quietly form working group to craft immigration plan

Seung Min Kim and Rachael Bade, Politico

Moderate House Republicans angling for a legislative fix to the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program have quietly created an informal working group to try and craft an immigration plan that could pass Congress, according to GOP sources. The lawmakers have met off and on for months.

Meadows: Freedom Caucus 'Asked' to Develop Conservative Solution to DACA

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows told reporters Tuesday a Trump administration official asked his caucus to put together a conservative immigration plan that would provide a legislative solution to replace the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. "Administration officials don't want to be caught flat footed with no proposals," the North Carolina Republican said.

McCarthy backs Trump's call for Senate to ditch the filibuster

Deirdre Walsh and Ted Barrett, CNN

The number two House Republican leader made a fresh push Wednesday for Senate Republicans to change rules to make it easier to break filibusters of spending bills, echoing a similar call from President Donald Trump for the Senate to set aside long-held precedent that requires at least 60 votes for major legislation to pass. Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy boasted that the House was on the verge of passing all 12 annual appropriations measures, something that hasn't happened since 2004.

---

States

Eight Dead at Florida Nursing Home Left Without Air Conditioning in Wake of Irma

Scott Calvert et al., The Wall Street Journal

Eight nursing home patients died here Wednesday amid sweltering conditions after Hurricane Irma knocked out the air conditioning, and more than 150 others had to be evacuated. The events prompted Florida Gov. Rick Scott to order a state health agency to issue an immediate moratorium preventing the facility from admitting new patients.

Arizona Supreme Court to consider legality of Medicaid expansion

Ken Alltucker, The Arizona Republic

Three dozen current and former state lawmakers challenging the way Arizona funds the state's Medicaid expansion will argue their case before the Arizona Supreme Court. The state high court this week agreed to hear the Republican lawmakers' challenge to the state's Medicaid expansion, which extended insurance coverage to more than 400,000 low-income Arizonans.

California lawmakers OK free year of community college for all; bill goes to governor

Melody Gutierrez, San Francisco Chronicle

California would pick up the first year of community college for virtually all full-time freshmen under a bill passed by the state Legislature on Wednesday and headed to Gov. Jerry Brown. AB19 by Assemblymen Miguel Santiago, D-Los Angeles; David Chiu, D-San Francisco; and Kevin McCarty, D-Sacramento, would waive the $46-per-unit fee for full-time students in California entering their first year of community college.

When it comes to voter registration, Republicans are no longer in NC's top 2

Colin Campbell, The News and Observer

Unaffiliated voters now make up the second-largest group of voter registrations in North Carolina, with more registrations in that category than registered Republicans. The shift has been happening gradually, but unaffiliated registrations passed Republican registrations sometime between Sept. 2 and Sept. 9, according to data released by the State Board of Elections and Ethics Enforcement.

Missouri state senator who hoped for Trump assassination censured by her colleagues

Kurt Erickson and Jack Suntrup, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

The Senate voted overwhelmingly to censure state Sen. Maria Chappelle-Nadal on Wednesday afternoon. The censure amounts to a formal scolding from the body.

---

Advocacy

Trump ethics watchdog moves to allow anonymous gifts to legal defense funds

Darren Samuelsohn, Politico

The U.S. Office of Government Ethics has quietly reversed its own internal policy prohibiting anonymous donations from lobbyists to White House staffers who have legal defense funds. The little-noticed change could help President Donald Trump's aides raise the money they need to pay attorneys as the Russia probe expands - but raises the potential for hidden conflicts of interest or other ethics trouble.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A majority of voters are concerned with data breaches, yet there are no national data security standards to protect consumers at checkout. It's time retailers share responsibility for data security. Learn more from the Electronic Payments Coalition.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Reclaiming America's Values

Joe Biden, The New York Times

In over 45 years of working in global affairs, I've observed a simple truth: America's ability to lead the world depends not just on the example of our power, but on the power of our example. American democracy is rooted in the belief that every man, woman and child has equal rights to freedom and dignity.

The 30 Republicans Holding Up Tax Reform

Karl Rove, The Wall Street Journal

No matter how persuasive President Trump is, it's unlikely he can round up enough Democrats to get 60 votes in the Senate for tax reform. That means Republicans will need to use the Senate's reconciliation process, which avoids the filibuster, to pass their plan with 51 votes.

Escaping the Tax-Reform Budget Trap

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republicans know that their hold on Congress depends on passing tax reform, but what we hear about the debate behind the scenes is worrisome. The danger is that, as with health care, the GOP will hold themselves hostage to a budget process that is hostile to pro-growth tax policy.

How the Bernie Sanders Plan Would Both Beef Up and Slim Down Medicare

Margot Sanger-Katz, The New York Times

In his big new single-payer health care bill, Senator Bernie Sanders says he wants to turn the country's health system into "Medicare for all." But his bill actually outlines a system very different from the current Medicare program.

The Justice Department goes out of its way to side against a gay couple

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Should a Colorado baker have the right to turn away a gay couple seeking a custom wedding cake if he disapproves of their upcoming marriage? According to the Justice Department, the answer is yes.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Four times as many voters trust financial institutions over retailers to create new, more secure ways to pay, which is just one reason why the payments industry is focused on innovation. Banks and credit unions are continuously working to provide consumers with the latest security features when they pay. Get the latest from EPC.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Why Competition in The Politics Industry Is Failing America

Katherine M. Gehl and Michael E. Porter, Harvard Business School

Harvard Business School (HBS) launched the U.S. Competitiveness Project in 2011 as a multiyear, fact-based effort to understand the disappointing performance of the American economy, its causes, and the steps needed by business and government to restore economic growth and prosperity that is widely shared across all Americans. The Project identified a consensus set of essential policy steps needed to do so.

Partisans Differ Widely in Views of Police Officers, College Professors

Pew Research Center

Americans give strongly positive ratings to teachers and members of the military, while ratings of political and ideological groups - Democrats, Republicans, liberals and conservatives - are much less positive, and more starkly divided along partisan lines. Yet wide partisan and ideological divides are also seen in views of some professions.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Trump Sets New U.S. Strategy for Afghan War
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 8:44:58 AM

---

By Cameron Easley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump announced his strategy for the U.S.-led war in Afghanistan, though he declined to talk specifics when it came to troop levels or benchmarks for success. A troop surge is expected to be paired with a more hawkish stance toward Pakistan in a bid to crack down on terrorist activity in the two countries. (The New York Times)
- As Trump preps for his rally tonight in Phoenix, GOP leaders are hoping he lays off the state's potentially vulnerable U.S. Sen. Jeff Flake (R) and doesn't endorse - or increase his support - for long-shot primary challenger Kelli

Ward. (The Washington Post)

- House Speaker Paul Ryan took flak from constituents during a town-hall style forum hosted by CNN. The Wisconsin Republican largely blamed the Senate for a lack of progress on the GOP's agenda and said Trump "messed up" with his comments on Charlottesville, Va. (Politico)
- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) said there is "zero chance" that Congress will fail to raise the federal debt ceiling. But how lawmakers reach an agreement before an end-of-September deadline remains unclear. (The Washington Post)

Chart Review

A Second Korean War Could Quickly Spread Across All of Asia
Bloomberg

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

No events scheduled

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

Heritage Foundation event: Protecting Public Employees'
First Amendment Rights

12 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

General

Divers Find Remains in Search of U.S. Navy Ship Damaged in

Collision

Richard C. Paddock, The New York Times

Divers have found remains of missing American sailors in the flooded compartments of the Navy destroyer John S. McCain, which collided with an oil tanker on Monday off the coast of Singapore, the commander of the United States Pacific Fleet said Tuesday. The commander, Adm. Scott H. Swift, did not say how many bodies had been recovered from the ship, which is docked at Changi Naval Base here.

Spanish police track down, shoot dead Barcelona attacker

Angus Berwick, Reuters

Spanish police on Monday shot dead an Islamist militant who killed 13 people with a van in Barcelona last week, ending a five-day manhunt for the perpetrator of Spain's deadliest attack in over a decade. Police said they tracked 22-year-old Younes Abouyaaqoub to a rural area near Barcelona and shot him after he held up what looked like an explosives belt and shouted "Allahu Akbar" (God is Greatest).

Trump's team and lawmakers making strides on tax reform plan

Nancy Cook, Politico

President Donald Trump's top aides and congressional leaders have made significant strides in shaping a tax overhaul, moving far beyond the six-paragraph framework pushed out in July that stoked fears about their ability to deliver on one of the GOP's top priorities. There is broad consensus, according to five sources familiar with the behind-the-scenes talks, on some of the best ways to pay for cutting both the individual and corporate tax rates.

Republican committees have paid nearly \$1.3 million to Trump-owned entities this year

Matea Gold and Anu Narayanswamy, The Washington Post

The Republican National Committee paid the Trump International Hotel in Washington $122,000 last month after the party held a lavish fundraiser at the venue in June, the latest example of how GOP political committees are generating a steady income stream for President Trump's private business, new Federal Election Commission records show. At least 25 congressional campaigns, state parties and the Republican Governors Association have together spent more than $473,000 at Trump hotels or golf resorts this year, according to a Washington Post analysis of campaign finance filings.

In U.S. Trade Fight With Canada, the Border Watches, Warily
William Mauldin, The Wall Street Journal

The river that divides the U.S. and Canada in this border town also cuts directly through the Twin Rivers Paper Co.'s wood pulp and paper operation. The two-country arrangement has worked for years in the tightly integrated operation, with a Twin Rivers Canadian lumber mill up the road supplying wood chips to a plant that turns the chips into pulp in Edmundston, New Brunswick.

Jeffrey Lord, Fired Pro-Trump CNN Figure, In Talks With Breitbart
Lachlan Markay and Asawin Suebsang, The Daily Beast

It's been nearly two weeks since Jeffrey Lord, the former Reagan administration official and pro-Trump political commentator, was sacked from his contributor job at CNN. The abrupt firing, officially due to Lord tweeting "Sieg Heil!," prompted a phone call of support from Steve Bannon, then President Donald Trump's chief strategist.

---

Presidential

Trump Sets U.S. Strategy but No 'Blank Check' for Afghan War
Julie Hirschfeld Davis and Mark Landler, The New York Times

President Trump put forward on Monday a long-awaited strategy for resolving the nearly 16-year-old conflict in Afghanistan, but he declined to specify either the number of troops that would be committed, or the conditions by which he would judge the success of their mission there. In a nationally televised prime-time speech to troops at Fort Myer, Va., Mr. Trump said there would be no "blank check" for the American engagement in Afghanistan.

How Trump swallowed a bitter Afghanistan pill
Eliana Johnson, Politico

In his first national security address, President Donald Trump broke with his "America First" campaign rhetoric and his past skepticism about the war in Afghanistan, bowing to the stay-the-course advice of the generals who occupy top posts in his administration. Trump's Monday night speech laid out a new American strategy for the war in Afghanistan that he cast as a bold new approach - "I'm a problem-solver... in the end, we will win," he said - but which critics cast as an extension of a failed approach.

Lobbyist at Trump Campaign Meeting Has a Web of Russian Connections

Sharon LaFraniere et al., The New York Times

Rinat Akhmetshin, a Russian immigrant who met last summer with senior Trump campaign officials, has often struck colleagues as a classic Washington mercenary - loyal to his wife, his daughter and his bank account. He avoided work that would antagonize Moscow, they suggested, only because he profited from his reputation as a man with valuable connections there.

White House Going Ahead With HBCU Conference After Charlottesville

Darren Sands, BuzzFeed News

A White House official said that a Trump administration-backed conference for historically black colleges and universities will go ahead as planned next month. In recent days, a Democratic lawmaker and prominent nonprofit donor to the schools recommended to the White House that the National Historically Black Colleges and Universities Week Conference be postponed because of concerns "related to recent national events."

Secret Service director cleans up comments on Trump travel demands

Louis Nelson and Sarah Ferris, Politico

The head of the U.S. Secret Service appeared to engage in some damage control on Monday, clarifying in a statement that the stresses placed on the agency by the travel habits and large size of President Donald Trump's family are nothing new. In an interview with USA Today published earlier Monday, Director Randolph "Tex" Alles had said Trump and his family's travel had stretched the Secret Service's budget so thin that the agency would not be able to pay some agents for work already completed.

Trump nominee Sam Clovis: 'As far as we know' homosexuality's a choice, 'logical' LGBT protections could lead to legalization of pedophilia

Andrew Kaczynski and Paul LeBlanc, CNN

Sam Clovis, Donald Trump's pick to be chief scientist for the Department of Agriculture, has argued that homosexuality is a choice and that the sanctioning of same-sex marriage could lead to the legalization of pedophilia, a CNN KFile review of Clovis' writings, radio broadcasts, and speeches has found. Clovis made the comments between 2012 and 2014 in his capacity as a talk radio host, political activist, and briefly as a candidate for US Senate in Iowa.

---

Senate

As Trump heads to Arizona, GOP leaders want him out of Jeff Flake's Senate race

Sean Sullivan and Ed O'Keefe, The Washington Post

Long-shot Senate candidate Kelli Ward was sound asleep just after 4 a.m. in Arizona last week when President Trump praised her on Twitter. She and many other Republicans were caught utterly by surprise - and her phone started buzzing immediately.

McConnell says there is 'zero chance' Congress will fail to raise debt ceiling

Damian Paletta, The Washington Post

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) said Monday that there was "zero chance - no chance" Congress would fail to raise the debt ceiling by late September, although he offered no clues about how he hoped to persuade lawmakers to back such a measure. McConnell spoke during a public event in Kentucky with Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, who minutes before had implored Congress to focus immediately on raising the debt ceiling when members return to Washington after Labor Day.

McConnell: 'Most news is not fake'

Jordain Carney, The Hill

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) defended the media on Monday, just hours after President Trump lashed out at "fake news" on Twitter. "My view is that most news is not fake, but I do try to look at a variety of sources," McConnell said at a Louisville Chamber of Commerce event when asked what publications he reads amid "accusations and counteraccusations about fake news."

Susan Collins: 'Too difficult to say' whether Trump will be 2020 GOP nominee

Negassi Tesfamichael, Politico

Though President Donald Trump has already ramped up efforts for a 2020 reelection campaign, one of his frequent critics, Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), says it's unclear whether he will be the GOP nominee. "It's too difficult to say," Collins said in an interview with MSNBC on Monday when asked whether she thinks Trump will be the Republican Party's nominee.

---

House

Ryan faces heat back home in Wisconsin

Rachael Bade, Politico

Paul Ryan was one of most popular Republicans in the country last fall, routing his Democratic challenger and beating back a Donald Trump-inspired primary challenger who trolled him at every turn. Yet there he was, taking flak from discontent constituents at a town hall in Racine on Monday night.

This House Democrat Lost A Leadership Race To Nancy Pelosi. Now He May Run For President.

Alexis Levinson, BuzzFeed News

It's still more than three years until the next presidential election, and yet here was Ray Buckley - the chairman of the New Hampshire Democratic Party for the last decade - riding shotgun last Wednesday from Boston to Hopkinton, New Hampshire with Rep. Tim Ryan, the 44-year old Democrat from Youngstown, Ohio. Ryan made a name for himself when he challenged Nancy Pelosi for the leadership of the House Democrats last year, arguing he was the right man for the job because he was one of the few who was able to handily win re-election in a district where many of his white, working class constituents also voted for Donald Trump.

Judge orders Gianforte to take mugshot, fingerprints

Whitney Bermes, Bozeman Daily Chronicle

A Gallatin County judge has ordered that U.S. Rep. Greg Gianforte must have his mugshot and fingerprints taken as part of his misdemeanor assault conviction. In a one-page ruling issued Thursday afternoon, Justice Court Judge Rick West ordered that the Republican congressman must report to the Gallatin County Detention Center to provide booking information, including a photograph and fingerprints, no later than Sept. 15.

Ed Perlmutter changes course and will run for re-election to Congress

Mark K. Matthews, The Denver Post

U.S. Rep. Ed Perlmutter has found the "fire in the belly" again - or at least the desire to remain a member of Congress. The Arvada Democrat said Monday that he would run for a seventh term in Colorado's 7th Congressional District, a declaration that comes five short weeks after Perlmutter said he was done with politics when he dropped out of Colorado's crowded race for governor.

---

States

Why Gov. Doug Ducey won't attend President Donald Trump's Phoenix rally

Yvonne Wingett Sanchez, The Arizona Republic

Gov. Doug Ducey will greet President Donald Trump on the tarmac after Air Force One touches down Tuesday afternoon for his first presidential visit to the Grand Canyon state. But the Republican governor, who like many in the GOP has diplomatically sidestepped Trump and his more divisive rhetoric, will not attend Trump's campaign-style rally at the Phoenix Convention Center.

A Man Has Been Charged For Trying To Blow Up To A Confederate Statue

Jim Dalrymple II, BuzzFeed News

A man was charged Monday with attempting to blow up a Confederate statue in Texas. The man, Andrew Schneck, was spotted by a ranger kneeling in the bushes near a statue of Confederate Maj. Richard Dowling on Saturday evening at Houston's Hermann Park.

---

Advocacy

GOP divided over Trump's Ex-Im Bank nomination

Zachary Warmbrodt, Politico

President Donald Trump's nomination of former Rep. Scott Garrett to lead the Export-Import Bank has opened up yet another front in the Republican Party's civil war. Pro-business trade groups, free-market advocates and even social conservatives and gay-rights activists are targeting GOP senators with competing lobbying efforts as they clash over Garrett's past attempts to shut down the bank and his controversial views on LGBT issues.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Taking a road trip to escape the heat this summer? Watch out for skimmers at gas stations, which can steal your card data-including PINs-and cause you a headache during your vacation. Learn more from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

This would be a travesty of justice

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Even as President Trump urges the nation to heal, he is publicly considering a step whose effect would be the exact opposite: a pardon for former sheriff Joe Arpaio, the former Arizona lawman who made his name as a paragon of racial profiling. Pardoning Mr. Arpaio now would throw a bone to the president's partisans on the racist alt-right just days after Mr. Trump fed them a juicy steak by explicitly equating the neo-Nazis, anti-Semites and Ku Klux Klansmen in Charlottesville with those who marched against them.

\(Still\) Seeking IRS Accountability

Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The Obama Justice Department dismissed the IRS political targeting scandal as no big deal, and the Trump Administration hasn't been any better. At least the judiciary is still trying to hold someone to account for this government abuse.

Can Kid Rock Become Michigan's Next Senator?

David Byler, RealClearPolitics

"How could an entertainer with no political experience and a long history of controversial comments ever win one of the most important political positions in the United States?" No, that's not a quote from last year's presidential election.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

$2 BILLION! That's how much theft from gas station skimmers cost consumers in 2014. The Electronic Payments Coalition (EPC) has tips to help you protect yourself when you're filling up at home or traveling far and wide this summer.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Who Falls for Fake News? The Roles of Analytic Thinking, Motivated Reasoning, Political Ideology, and Bullshit Receptivity
Gordon Pennycook and David G. Rand, Yale University

Inaccurate beliefs pose a threat to democracy and fake news represents a particularly egregious and direct avenue by which inaccurate beliefs have been propagated via social media. Here we investigate the cognitive psychological profile of individuals who fall prey to fake news.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Trump's Approval Rating Falls Below 40% for First Time
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 8:53:17 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump's approval rating among registered voters fell to a new low, according to a new poll. Thirty-nine percent of respondents said they approve of his job performance, compared with 56 percent who disapprove. (Morning Consult)
- Trump threatened to shut down the government if Congress does not fund his proposed border wall in next month's spending debate. During Tuesday's campaign rally in Arizona, he also said the North American Free Trade Agreement is likely to be terminated. (The Washington Post)

- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) has privately expressed doubts that Trump can deliver on his policy agenda after a series of political crises this summer. The relationship between the two men is frayed - they have not spoken to each other in weeks. (The New York Times)
- Gov. John Kasich (R-Ohio) and Gov. John Hickenlooper (D-Colo.) hope to testify before a Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee hearing next month about stabilizing the health insurance market, as the congressional panel considers smaller, bipartisan proposals to health care policy. (Roll Call)

Chart Review

Trump's Approval Rating Dips Below 40% for First Time After Charlottesville

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

Heritage Foundation event: Protecting Public Employees'
First Amendment Rights

12 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

General

U.S. Navy Relieves Admiral of Command After Collisions

Gordon Lubold, The Wall Street Journal

The U.S. Navy removed the commander of the fleet that has suffered four recent collisions in Asia and the deaths of several sailors, the Pacific Fleet said in a statement. The Wall Street Journal reported Tuesday that the Navy was planning to remove Vice Adm. Joseph Aucoin -the three-star commander of U.S. Seventh Fleet in Yokosuka, Japan-though officials had declined to comment.

U.S. sanctions Chinese and Russian companies and individuals for conducting business with North Korea

Carol Morello and Peter Whoriskey, The Washington Post

As part of a broad effort to isolate North Korea, the Treasury Department on Tuesday placed sanctions on Chinese and Russian individuals and firms it said had conducted business with the country in ways that advanced its missile and nuclear weapons program. The sanctions against 10 companies and six individuals are designed to disrupt the economic ties that have allowed Pyongyang to continue funding its missile and nuclear program despite strict United Nations sanctions prohibiting it.

Clooney Foundation for Justice Donates \$1 Million to Combat Hate Groups in Wake of Charlottesville

Rebecca Rubin, Variety

The Clooney Foundation for Justice, led by George and Amal Clooney, gave a $1 million grant to help the Southern Poverty Law Center combat hate groups in wake of recent white nationalist gatherings in Charlottesville, Va. "We are proud to support the Southern Poverty Law Center in its efforts to prevent violent extremism in the United States. What happened in Charlottesville, and what is happening in communities across our country, demands our collective engagement to stand up to hate," George and Amal said in a statement.

Emails: Breitbart editor pledges to do 'dirty work' for Bannon, smears Ivanka

Oliver Darcy and Jake Tapper, CNN

A self-described "email prankster" seemingly fooled top editors at Breitbart over the weekend into believing he was Steve Bannon, the fired White House chief strategist who returned to the right-wing website as executive chairman on Friday. In the emails, Breitbart Editor-in-Chief Alex Marlow pledged that he and several other top editors would do Bannon's "dirty work" against White House aides.

Hillary Clinton: My "skin crawled" when Trump stood behind me

Shane Savitsky, Axios

MSNBC's Morning Joe has the first batch of excerpts from "What Happened," Hillary Clinton's forthcoming memoir on the 2016 presidential election, which feature her reflecting why she wrote the book and on President Trump's intimidation tactics that made her "skin [crawl]" during their second, town hall-style debate. Her reason for writing: "I want to pull back the curtain on an experience that was exhilarating, joyful, infuriating, and just plain humbling."

Is Anybody Home at HUD?

Alec MacGillis, New York Magazine

In mid-May, Steve Preston, who served as the secretary of Housing and Urban Development in the final two years of the George W. Bush administration, organized a dinner at the Metropolitan Club in Washington, D.C., for the new chief of that department, Ben Carson, and five other former secretaries whose joint tenure stretched all the way back to Gerald Ford. It was an event with no recent precedent within the department, and it had the distinct feel of an intervention.

---

Presidential

Trump threatens shutdown, suggests controversial pardon at Arizona rally

John Wagner et al., The Washington Post

President Trump on Tuesday threatened to shut down the government over border wall funding, said the North American Free Trade Agreement is likely to be terminated and signaled that he was prepared to pardon former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio, who is anathema to the Latino community. Trump's freewheeling comments came at a boisterous campaign rally here during which he also went on an extended diatribe about the media, blaming reporters for the negative fallout he has received over his responses to the hate-fueled violence in Charlottesville.

More Voters Want Pence as President Than Trump, Poll Shows

Anna Gronewold, Morning Consult

In a choice between the president of the United States and his second-in-command, more voters say Vice President Mike Pence should take charge of the country. A Morning Consult/POLITICO poll conducted Aug. 17-19 found 34 percent of registered voters said they'd rather have Pence as president than Donald Trump, if they had to choose.

Kushner in Middle East for peace talks

Annie Karni, Politico

While everyone was busy gazing into the solar eclipse on Monday, White House adviser Jared Kushner quietly snuck away to the Middle East for a trip that will take him to the Persian Gulf and Israel. Accompanying Kushner on Monday in the Gulf states were deputy National Security Adviser Dina Powell, and Middle East envoy Jason Greenblatt, a White House official said.

A coal country dispute over an alleged Trump promise unmet

Jeff Horwitz et al., The Associated Press

The Trump administration has rejected a coal industry push to win a rarely used emergency order protecting coal-fired power plants, a decision contrary to what one coal executive said the president personally promised him. The Energy Department says it considered issuing the order sought by companies seeking relief for plants it says are overburdened by environmental rules and market stresses.

---

Senate

Trump and McConnell Locked in a Cold War, Threatening the G.O.P. Agenda

Alexander Burns and Jonathan Martin, The New York Times

The relationship between President Trump and Senator Mitch McConnell, the majority leader, has disintegrated to the point that they have not spoken to each other in weeks, and Mr. McConnell has privately expressed uncertainty that Mr. Trump will be able to salvage his administration after a series of summer crises. What was once an uneasy governing alliance has curdled into a feud of mutual resentment and sometimes outright hostility, complicated by the position of Mr. McConnell's wife, Elaine L. Chao, in Mr. Trump's cabinet, according to more than a dozen people briefed on their imperiled partnership.

Senate Health Panel Will Hear From Governors, Insurance Leaders

Mary Ellen McIntire, Roll Call

The Senate's key health care panel announced plans to hear from governors and state insurance commissioners early next month about ways to rein in rising prices for medical insurance purchased directly by consumers. The Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee on Tuesday set a hearing Sept. 6 with state insurance commissioners and another on Sept. 7 with governors.

Obamacare votes muddle Sen. Dean Heller's message in tough re-election bid

Eliza Collins, USA Today

Sen. Dean Heller, R-Nev., is struggling to get his messaging straight. And it's becoming a problem, because Heller - who won his last election by just 1 percentage point - is one of the most vulnerable GOP senators trying to keep his seat in the 2018 midterm elections.

Former Romney aide enters GOP primary to unseat Warren

Max Greenwood, The Hill

Beth Lindstrom, who served as an aide to former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney (R), is mounting a bid to challenge Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) for her Senate seat. Lindstrom, a former consumer affairs director for Romney, cast herself in a video announcement as an "independent-minded Republican," saying "there's plenty of blame to go around" in Washington.

---

House

Dems' first wave of recruits 'outsiders' in 2017 version of Tea Party

Heidi M. Przybyla, USA Today

If there is a Democratic wave election in 2018, the tide will probably bring in individuals like Brendan Kelly, a state's attorney in St. Clair County and former Navy officer who's never run for the state legislature or Congress. For Democrats like 41-year-old Kelly - a clean-cut Irishman and University of Notre Dame alum who's prosecuted corruption on both sides of the aisle and sat on the school board - entering national politics is no longer distasteful. It's necessary.

Gowdy and Mulvaney tweak each other on Twitter

Kyle Cheney, Politico

Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) appeared to get into a pointed but apparently good-natured Twitter tiff Tuesday with Trump administration budget chief Mick Mulvaney, a fellow South Carolinian and former House member. Mulvaney tweeted a barb about Gowdy's famously shape-shifting mop of hair and joked that he'd buy Gowdy a comb and razor for his 60th birthday. Gowdy just turned 53.

---

States

Democratic gubernatorial candidates plunge into Confederate fight

Daniel Strauss and Negassi Tesfamichael, Politico

The white supremacist march that turned violent in Charlottesville, Virginia, is spurring a wave of Democratic governors and gubernatorial candidates to call for Confederate monuments in their states to come down. The push offers Democrats an opportunity to take on President Donald Trump and mobilize the base ahead of the 2018 elections - though some strategists say the focus should be on bread-and-butter issues rather than a revived culture war.

Iowa Seeks Ambitious Waiver to Reshape Health Law Within Its Borders

Anna Wilde Mathews et al., The Wall Street Journal

Iowa officials filed a federal application to alter major aspects of the Affordable Care Act next year, the most ambitious so far of a growing crop of state efforts to tweak the health law with the goal of shoring up individual insurance markets. Iowa's proposal, which state officials said they are already preparing to implement pending federal approval, would go the furthest in revamping the health law's rules, and its path will be closely watched in other states as Republican efforts to overhaul the ACA at the federal level appear stalled.

Trump signs resolution to improve safety at Metro

Martine Powers, The Washington Post

President Trump signed a resolution Tuesday giving final approval to the long-awaited Metro Safety Commission, the last legislative step in the years-long effort to establish an oversight organization tasked with making Metro safer. But there's plenty more that must still happen before the new agency is up and running.

Gov. Greitens stays execution of Marcellus Williams in 1998 murder Jason Hancock, The Kansas City Star

Hours before Marcellus Williams was to be put to death for the 1998 murder of a former newspaper reporter, Gov. Eric Greitens issued a stay of execution and appointed a board to look into the case." A sentence of death is the ultimate, permanent punishment," Greitens said in a statement Tuesday afternoon.

---

Advocacy

With alumni in the White House, Goldman sees an opening Barney Jopson, Financial Times

When Lloyd Blankfein, Goldman Sachs' chairman and chief executive, arrived at the Rayburn building on Capitol Hill in late 2010, he was battered and bruised. At the time his bank was viewed as a vivid example of Wall Street misbehaviour.

UPS CEO says tax reform could deliver more jobs to its Louisville air hub Lawrence Smith, WDRB

A tax cut for UPS could deliver more jobs to Louisville. UPS Chairman and CEO David Abney, along with House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady, came to Louisville on Tuesday to push tax reform.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

Taking a road trip to escape the heat this summer? Watch out for skimmers at gas stations, which can steal your card data-including PINs-and cause you a headache during your vacation. Learn more from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Trump's welcome self-correction

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

President Trump offered in his speech on Afghanistan Monday a rare but welcome story of self-correction. His "original instinct," he said, was "to pull out" of the country, but after studying the issue with his advisers over several months he realized that "the consequences of a rapid exit are both predictable and unacceptable."

Mr. Trump Sides With Wall Street; You Lose

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

The Trump administration has no grounds for blocking the "fiduciary rule," an Obama-era regulation that requires financial advisers to put their clients' interests first when giving advice or selling investments for retirement accounts. But blocking the rule remains an administration priority, no matter how arbitrary, capricious and harmful that would be.

Trump's Afghan Commitment

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

President Trump inherited a mess in Afghanistan, so give him credit for heeding his generals and committing to more troops and a new strategy. His decision has risks, like all uses of military force, but it will prevent a rout of our allies in Kabul and allow more aggressive operations against jihadists who would be delighted to plan global attacks with impunity.

Polls Show Trump Cratering? Not So Fast

Steve Kornacki, NBC News

Diagnosing the state of President Donald Trump's political health should be a simple matter. The story that the traditional metrics tell is straightforward.

Fake Polls Are A Real Problem

Harry Enten, FiveThirtyEight

Is Kid Rock leading the U.S. Senate race in Michigan? A story like that is essentially designed to go viral, and that's exactly what happened when Delphi Analytica released a poll fielded from July 14 to July 18.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

$2 BILLION! That's how much theft from gas station skimmers cost consumers in 2014. The Electronic Payments Coalition (EPC) has tips to help you protect yourself when you're filling up at home or traveling far and wide this summer.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Trump's Approval Rating Dips Below 40% for First Time After Charlottesville

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

Americans are taking a dimmer-than-ever view of President Donald Trump's job performance following his response to the white nationalist rally in Charlottesville, Va., earlier this month, when a woman was killed after a man aligned with one of the extremist groups allegedly drove a car through a crowd of counter-protesters. A new Morning Consult/POLITICO survey of 1,987 registered voters, conducted Aug. 17 through Aug. 19, shows 39 percent of respondents approve of the president while 56 percent disapprove, putting him 17 points underwater - the worst net rating he's posted since taking office.

US Senator Jeff Flake in Double Electoral Jeopardy Twelve Months Away from Primary Election

HighGround Public Affairs Consultants

A statewide Arizona survey of 400 likely Arizona 2018 General Election voters shows Republican incumbent Senator Jeff Flake fourteen points behind his primary Republican opponent Kelli Ward and eight points behind prospective Democratic opponent U.S. Congresswoman Kyrsten Sinema (D, AZ-9). The Republican Primary Election sample was of 273 high efficacy Republican and PND/Independent voters and has a margin of error of  $\pm 5.93\%$ .

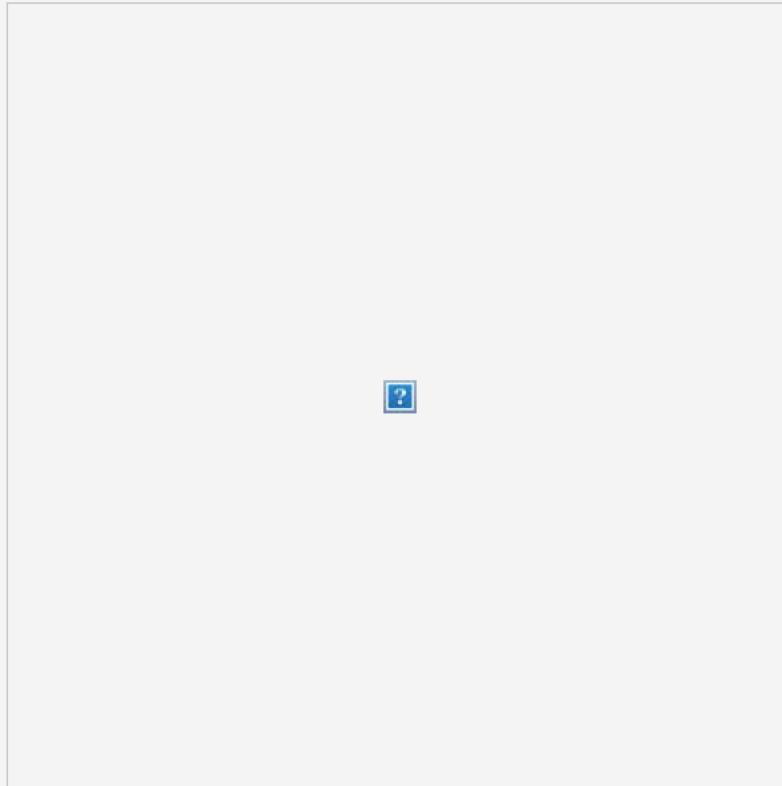

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Trump's Weekend Tweets About Russia Probe Prompt Warnings From Lawmakers
Date: Monday, December 04, 2017 9:05:09 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump tweeted that he had to fire Michael Flynn, his former national security adviser, "because he lied" to the vice president and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Legal experts and some Democratic lawmakers later said that if Trump pressured the FBI to not investigate Flynn while knowing he had lied, that could bolster a charge of obstruction of justice against Trump. (Reuters)
- Trump lent his support to Roy Moore, the Republican nominee for Senate in Alabama's Dec. 12 special election, saying in a tweet that "Democrats refusal to give even one vote for massive Tax Cuts is why we need Republican Roy Moore to win in Alabama." The comments were Trump's strongest in support of Moore since allegations that the former state Supreme Court chief justice had sexually assaulted teenage girls decades ago. (The Associated Press)

- Rep. Sander Levin (D-Mich.) said he will not run for re-election next year. The 86-year-old lawmaker said he will join the Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy at the University of Michigan after he finishes his 18th term in Congress. (Detroit Free Press)
- Lawmakers return to Capitol Hill today for a frantic week, with developments in the Russia investigation, debates over tax reform, and conflicts over immigration and gun polices, in addition to government funding that's set to expire on Friday. House GOP leaders are pushing for a two-week continuing resolution that would keep the government open until Dec. 22, but House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) is short on the Republican votes he needs to pass the measure without Democratic support. (Politico)

Chart Review

In U.S., Support for Government-Run Health System Edges Up
Gallup

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

No events scheduled

TUESDAY

Axios event on health care innovation 8 a.m.

---

Washington Post event on HIV/AIDS 8:30 a.m.

---

Senate Banking Committee confirmation hearing for Fed chairman nominee 10 a.m.

---

Brookings Institution event on Public Religion Research Institute's 2017 American Values Survey 10 a.m.

---

WEDNESDAY

California Attorney General Becerra speaks at National Press Club 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Burr speaks at Council on Foreign Relations event 12:45 p.m.

---

Sen. Coons speaks at ITIF event on the economy 1 p.m.

---

House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on Brexit negotiations 2 p.m.

---

THURSDAY

ACCF event on Trump's economic policy agenda 9:30 a.m.

---

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on sanctions for nonproliferation 10 a.m.

---

Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on the Defense Department's acquisition reform efforts 10 a.m.

---

FBI director testifies before House Judiciary Committee 10 a.m.

---

CSIS event on OPEC's World Oil Outlook 2017 2 p.m.

---

FRIDAY

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on China and the U.S.-Japan alliance 10:30 a.m.

---

Trump campaign rally in Pensacola, Fla. 7 p.m.

General

Congress faces frantic week with possible shutdown, taxes, Russia

John Bresnahan, Politico

Congress faces another frantic week as GOP leaders and President Donald Trump wrestle with a possible government shutdown; immigration, tax and gun policies; multiple allegations of sexual harassment against lawmakers; and the probe into Russia's meddling in the 2016 election. Funding for federal agencies is set to run out on Friday, but lawmakers don't really think there will be a shutdown - at least not yet.

Inside the secretive nerve center of the Mueller investigation

Robert Costa et al., The Washington Post

A white sedan whisked a man into the loading dock of a glass and concrete building in a drab office district in Southwest Washington. Security guards quickly waved the vehicle inside, then pushed a button that closed the garage door and shielded the guest's arrival from public view.

---

Presidential

Trump offers full support for embattled Republican Roy Moore

Nancy Benac, The Associated Press

President Donald Trump endorsed embattled Republican Roy Moore in the Alabama Senate race on Monday, looking past sexual misconduct allegations against the GOP candidate to argue that his vote is needed in Congress. Trump tweeted early Monday that "Democrats refusal to give even one vote for massive Tax Cuts is why we need Republican Roy Moore to win in Alabama."

Trump tweets about Russia probe spark warnings from lawmakers

Roberta Rampton and Karen Freifeld, Reuters

A series of tweets by U.S. President Donald Trump about the investigation into contacts between his 2016 campaign and Russia prompted concerns on Sunday among both Democratic and Republican lawmakers, with Republican Senator Lindsey Graham saying Trump could be wading into "peril" by commenting on the probe. "I would just say this with the president: There's an ongoing criminal investigation," Graham said on the CBS program "Face the Nation."

Emails Dispute White House Claims That Flynn Acted Independently on Russia

Michael S. Schmidt et al., The New York Times

When President Trump fired his national security adviser, Michael T. Flynn, in February, White House officials portrayed him as a renegade who had acted independently in his discussions with a Russian official during the presidential transition and then lied to his colleagues about the interactions. But emails among top transition officials, provided or described to The New York Times, suggest that Mr. Flynn was far from a rogue actor.

U.S. appeals courts to consider legality of Trump's latest travel ban

Mica Rosenberg, Reuters

Federal appeals courts in the states of Washington and Virginia are set to hear arguments this week on the legality of President Donald Trump's most recent travel ban, which sharply limits visitors and immigrants from eight countries, six of them Muslim-majority. Challengers, including the state of Hawaii and immigrant advocacy organizations, have argued the ban is discriminatory and violates the U.S. Constitution.

Trump moves to block Romney from the Senate

Alex Isenstadt, Politico

Donald Trump is going all out to persuade seven-term Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch to seek reelection - a push aimed in no small part at keeping the president's longtime nemesis, Mitt Romney, out of the Senate. Romney has been preparing to run for Hatch's seat on the long-held assumption that the 83-year-old would retire.

---

Senate

Feinstein: Senate Russia probe building obstruction case against Trump

Kailani Koenig, NBC News

A Senate investigation into Russia's meddling in the 2016 presidential election has revealed a possible obstruction of justice case against President Donald Trump, Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein said on "Meet The Press" Sunday. "The [Senate] Judiciary Committee has an investigation going as well and it involves obstruction of justice and I think what we're beginning to see is the putting together of a case of obstruction of justice," Feinstein, the panel's top Democrat, said.

Sen. Mitch McConnell softens on Roy Moore sexual assault accusations

Christopher Harress, AL.com

With nine days to go before voters in Alabama head to the polls, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell softened his tone on GOP candidate Roy

Moore during an interview Sunday. Sen. McConnell had previously called on Moore to drop out of the race after multiple women accused the twice-removed Alabama Chief Justice of making sexual advances on them when they were teenagers.

Sen. Chuck Grassley suggests estate tax repeal helps wealthy, not people who splurge on 'booze' or 'women'

Elizabeth Elizade, New York Daily News

Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) said he supports getting rid of the federal estate tax because it "recognizes the people that are investing," rather than those who spend their money on "booze or women or movies." "I think not having the estate tax recognizes the people that are investing as opposed to those that are just spending every darn penny they have, whether it's on booze or women or movies," the Republican senator told the Des Moines Register.

---

House

U.S. Rep. Sander Levin will retire from Congress when term ends next year

Kathleen Gray, Detroit Free Press

After 35 years in Congress, U.S. Rep. Sander Levin, D-Royal Oak, has decided it's time for a different adventure. The 86-year-old Democrat will not run for reelection in 2018, but will instead join the University of Michigan's Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy, where he will continue to work on issues that have engrossed him in Congress, such as health care and trade issues.

Conyers to decide within days on political future

Heather Caygle, Politico

Rep. John Conyers (D-Mich.) will decide in the next few days whether to resign in the face of sexual harassment allegations involving three women, his attorney said Friday. "We will discuss in the next day or so what Mr. Conyers plans to do," the attorney, Arnold Reed, said at a news conference in Detroit.

House Republicans Prepare Contempt Action Against FBI, DOJ

Billy House, Bloomberg

U.S. House Republicans are drafting a contempt of Congress resolution against Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein and FBI Director Christopher Wray, claiming stonewalling in producing material related to the Russia-Trump probes and other matters. Intelligence Chairman Devin Nunes and other committee Republicans, after considering such action for several weeks, decided to move after media including the New York Times reported Saturday on why a top FBI official assigned to Special Counsel Robert Mueller's probe of Russia-Trump election collusion had been removed from the investigation.

Battle for the House: GOP targets Democrats in Trump districts

Elena Schneider, Politico

When Democratic Rep. Matt Cartwright woke up on Election Day 2016, he represented a safe blue Pennsylvania district. But by the time he went to sleep that night, Donald Trump had painted Cartwright's turf red beneath his feet.

---

States

Maine's Obamacare Vote Revives Medicaid Expansion Debate in Some States

Mattie Quinn, Governing

Prior to last month's elections, no polling had been done on Maine's first-of-its-kind ballot initiative to expand Medicaid. Considering how controversial the health-care debate in Congress has been all year and the fact that the state elected a Republican governor, health policy experts were expecting a nailbiter.

ACLU of Nebraska sues to block executions, says Ricketts overstepped in referendum process

Paul Hammel, Omaha World-Herald

The 11 men on Nebraska death row do not have valid death sentences, a leading anti-capital punishment group argued in a lawsuit filed early today. The ACLU of Nebraska charged that the death penalty repeal, enacted by the State Legislature over a veto by Gov. Pete Ricketts, was in effect long enough to convert the death sentences for the 11 men to life in prison.

Kentucky GOP rejects governor's call for resignations

Adam Beam, The Associated Press

Kentucky's Republican governor asked his party on Saturday to call for the resignation of four GOP lawmakers who signed a secret sexual harassment settlement, but party leaders rejected it in a move the governor said "speaks to the fact that we've got real problems." The Republican Party of Kentucky's Central Committee held its regular meeting on Saturday.

Rep. Matt Dean tops GOP governor straw poll

Erin Golden, Star Tribune

Nearly a year out from next year's election for Minnesota governor, a straw poll of Republican Party activists on Saturday provided a first indication of which GOP candidate could end up on the ballot. More than 350 attendees of the Republican Party of Minnesota's State Central Committee meeting in Brainerd listened to speeches from seven candidates before casting their ballots.

What happened when North Carolina cut taxes like the GOP plans to for the country

Todd C. Frankel, The Washington Post

For a peek into a world after a massive tax cut, visit North Carolina and ride along with factory owner Eric Henry. Conservative groups have hailed North Carolina as a model of a tax overhaul since it began slashing state corporate and individual tax rates four years ago.

---

Advocacy

Giffords buys ads against 8 Republicans on concealed carry

Edward-Isaac Dovere, Politico

Gabby Giffords is going up on the air Monday with a six-figure ad buy against Reps. Rodney Frelinghuysen (R-N.J.) and Jason Lewis (R-Minn.) from her gun safety group. The ads come ahead of this week's expected House vote on Concealed Carry Reciprocity, which, if enacted, would be a massive opening of gun laws across the country, forcing all states to accept gun licenses issued in any state.

Analysis: More than 6,000 lobbyists have worked on taxes in 2017

Megan R. Wilson, The Hill

Tax reform is taking over Washington, so much so that more than half of all registered lobbyists have disclosed working on the issue, according to an analysis from Public Citizen, a government watchdog group. There are just under 11,000 active lobbyists in the nation's capital, according to data compiled by the Center for Responsive Politics (CRP), and more than half of them - 6,243 - have reported working on taxes this year, according to the report, which relies on CRP data.

Coal and nuclear firms seek billions in new tax credits

Amy Harder, Axios

Two separate lobbying pushes are underway urging Congress to create new multi-billion dollar tax credits benefiting virtually all coal and nuclear power plants across the United States. The price tags: up to $65 billion for coal and $4.8 billion for nuclear.

US firms push Washington to restart nuclear pact talks with Riyadh-sources

Reem Shamseddine and Sylvia Westall, Reuters

U.S. firms attracted by Saudi Arabia's plans to build nuclear reactors are pushing Washington to restart talks with Riyadh on an agreement to help the kingdom develop atomic energy, three industry sources said. Saudi Arabia has welcomed the lobbying, they said, though it is likely to worry regional rival Iran at a time when tensions are already high in the Middle East.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

A new EPC report analyzes how countries that adopt EMV experience lower counterfeit card fraud rates. It's time for a dynamic data security strategy to protect consumers like you. Learn more from EPC.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Tax Reform: What's in It for You

Mitch McConnell, The Wall Street Journal

For many Americans the legacy of the Obama economy is sluggish growth, stagnant paychecks and missed opportunities. A lost generation of workers still struggle with the consequences of the Great Recession and find it nearly impossible to get ahead.

Paul Manafort and Me

Corey Lewandowski, Politico

We were somewhere over New Jersey, on our way to an event in Delaware, on the Trump helicopter when all hell broke loose. On board were Mr. Trump, the campaign's press secretary Hope Hicks, security chief Keith Schiller, one Secret Service agent and me.

Why the Trump Team Should Fear the Logan Act

Daniel Hemel and Eric Posner, The New York Times

President Trump's former national security adviser, Michael Flynn, acknowledged in court last week that he lied to F.B.I. investigators about his communications with the Russian ambassador to the United States in the run-up to Mr. Trump's inauguration. While Mr. Flynn pleaded guilty to only one count of making materially false statements, his admissions leave little doubt that he also violated a federal criminal statute known as the Logan Act.

Trump's crusade against immigrants is an attack on America

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

The Trump administration likes to justify its multi-front crusade against immigration and immigrants as a revival of the rule of law, or a recalibration of the rules to favor disadvantaged American workers. In fact, it is largely a resurrection of xenophobia that coincides with a spike, nearly 50 years in the making, in the number of foreign-born residents living in the United States.

Let Them Not Bake Cake

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The Supreme Court on Tuesday will hear Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission, which ostensibly pits the government's interest in social equality against an individual's constitutional right to express his beliefs. But these two democratic values aren't incompatible, assuming the Justices respect America's pluralistic tradition that lets people of good faith disagree.

---

A Message from the Electronic Payments Coalition:

NEW REPORT: EMV adoption is critical to reduce counterfeit fraud in the U.S. Learn how EPC members are developing and implementing new technologies to make your life more secure.

---

Research Reports and Polling

CBS News poll: Alabama Republicans say allegations against Roy Moore false

CBS News

A new CBS News poll finds 71 percent of Alabama Republicans say the allegations against Roy Moore are false, and those who believe this also overwhelmingly believe Democrats and the media are behind those allegations. The poll found 92 percent of Republicans who don't believe the allegations against Moore say the Democrats are behind the charges, and 88 percent say newspapers and the media are behind them.

Post-Schar School Alabama poll Nov. 27-30, 2017

The Washington Post

This Washington Post-Schar School poll was conducted by telephone November 27-30, 2017, among a random sample of 1,304 adults in the state of Alabama, including landline and cell phone respondents. The error margin is 3.5 points among the sample of 1,110 registered voters and 4.5 points among the sample of 739 likely voters.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, July 16, 2017 9:01:52 AM

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump defended his eldest son, Donald Trump Jr., after it was revealed that in June 2016 he met with a Russian lawyer who has ties to the Kremlin. The meeting came after he was led to believe the lawyer would provide damaging information about Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, and that the information was part of the Russian government's effort to assist his father's presidential campaign. The meeting included a Russian-American lawyer who's a former Russian intelligence officer.
- A federal judge in Hawaii loosened Trump's temporary travel ban by removing a prohibition on grandparents, grandchildren, aunts, uncles and cousins. The judge said the Trump administration's approach to the ban contradicted a recent Supreme Court ruling regarding visitors from six Muslim-majority countries. Attorney General Jeff Sessions said the Trump administration will appeal the Hawaii ruling to the Supreme Court.
- The Congressional Budget Office said Trump's proposed budget would not balance in a decade, contradicting White House's estimates that say the spending plan would result in a surplus.
- Trump visited France, at the invitation of French President Emmanuel Macron. The two discussed trade and security. Trump also attended an event celebrating Bastille Day.
- A plurality of registered voters (40 percent) in a recent poll said North Korea is the top threat to the United States, while 30 percent said the Islamic State terrorist group is the main threat. Sixteen percent said it's Russia.

Congress

- Senate GOP leaders released a revised version of their health care bill, but several Republicans are still skeptical. The legislation includes a proposal from Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) that would allow insurers to sell cheaper plans that do not comply with all of Obamacare's regulations, in addition to keeping some of the Affordable Care Act's taxes on the wealthy and providing money for opioid addiction treatment. Timing for Senate consideration of the measure is uncertain, though, after the office of Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) said the lawmaker had surgery on Friday to remove a blood clot above his left eye, and that he will spend a week recovering in Arizona. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), who had previously said he wanted the Senate to vote on its health care bill the week of July 16, announced that the chamber would hold off on consideration of the measure while McCain recovers.
- Christopher Wray, Trump's nominee to lead the Federal Bureau of Investigation, testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee for his confirmation hearing, where he received bipartisan support. He said he would notify special counsel Robert Mueller if there is any attempt to interfere with the FBI's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election.
- Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen testified before House and Senate committees. The appearances on Capitol Hill may be her last since Trump is considering replacing her when her term expires in February.
- The House Appropriations Committee released a government spending bill that includes $1.6 billion to begin construction of Trump's proposed border wall along the U.S.-Mexico border. Minority Whip Steny Hoyer (D-Md.) reiterated the opposition of House Democrats.
- Most senators have seen negative swings in their approval ratings, according to a new 50-state survey. McConnell is the most unpopular senator, and Sen. Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.) is the only senator up for re-election next year whose approval rating is under water.

What's Ahead

- The Senate will convene Monday and take up the nomination of Patrick Shanahan to be deputy secretary at the Defense Department. The House is also in session on Monday.
- McConnell said he expects the CBO to publish its cost estimate of the Senate's revised health care legislation as soon as Monday. Sen. John Thune (R-S.D.) said Senate Republicans may rely on cost estimates from the Department of Health and Human Services and the Office of Management and Budget, instead of the nonpartisan CBO.
- Senators will remain in session for the first two weeks of August, and Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) floated the idea of keeping his chamber in session if the Senate passes its health care bill before the House is scheduled to adjourn.

Calendar Events (All Times Local)

Monday

House convenes	12 p.m.
SEC's Piwowar speaks at Heritage Foundation event on economic growth	12 p.m.
Brookings Institution's Municipal Finance Conference	1 p.m.
Senate convenes	3 p.m.

Tuesday

Brookings Institution's Municipal Finance Conference	7:45 a.m.
Energy Secretary Perry speaks at National Press Club	8:45 a.m.
Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on Callista Gingrich's nomination to be ambassador to the Vatican	10 a.m.

---

Rep. Massie speaks at Heritage Foundation event on aviation 11:30 a.m.

---

Wednesday

Center for American Progress event on voting rights 9 a.m.

---

Sen. Kaine speaks at Brookings Institution event on foreign policy 9 a.m.

---

Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on the Foreign Agents Registration Act 10 a.m.

---

Thursday

Senate Judiciary Committee meets to vote on nominations 9:30 a.m.

---

J.D. Vance speaks at Brookings Institution event on economic trends 10 a.m.

---

Friday

No events scheduled

---

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Trump says he does not fault son for meeting Russian lawyer
Steve Holland, Reuters

2) Russian Dirt on Clinton? 'I Love It,' Donald Trump Jr. Said

Jo Becker et al., The New York Times

3) Trump's Son Met With Russian Lawyer After Being Promised Damaging Information on Clinton

Jo Becker et al., The New York Times

4) America's Most and Least Popular Senators - July 2017

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

5) Hawaii Judge Orders Loosening of Trump Travel Ban

Brent Kendall, The Wall Street Journal

6) Former Soviet Counter Intelligence Officer at Meeting With Donald Trump Jr. and Russian Lawyer

Ken Dilanian et al., NBC News

7) Senate Parliamentarian Backs Republicans on Health Law Question

Paul M. Krawzak, Roll Call

8) Comey friend: Flynn memo was not classified

Kyle Cheney and Austin Wright, Politico

9) Trump suggested a cybersecurity pact with Russia. Lawmakers say they were 'dumbfounded.'

Cleve R. Wootson Jr., The Washington Post

10) Sharp Partisan Divisions in Views of National Institutions

Pew Research Center

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, August 06, 2017 9:02:29 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump signed into law new sanctions against Russia, but he criticized the Republican-controlled Congress for tying his hands with the legislation.
- Robert Mueller, the Justice Department's special counsel investigating Russian meddling in the 2016 election, has convened a grand jury, signaling his investigation has entered a new phase. Investigators expanded their probe to include the finances of Trump and his campaign associates.

- At a Trump rally in West Virginia, Gov. Jim Justice announced he would switch parties and register as a Republican. Justice had one of the steepest drops in approval among his constituents earlier this year, according to Morning Consult's Governor Approval Rankings.
- A transcript of Trump's January call with Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto was leaked and published. Attorney General Jeff Sessions later detailed new steps to take on leakers.
- Trump's disapproval rating climbed to 53 percent, tying an all-time high, following the Senate's failure to repeal Obamacare and amid turmoil in his administration, a recent poll showed.
- White House Chief of Staff John Kelly completed his first week on the job, where he imposed a military-style discipline on administration staff. The week began with the departure of communications director Anthony Scaramucci, and news that the administration is considering Rick Perry to replace Kelly, who previously served as secretary of the Department of Homeland Security before taking the White House post.

Congress

- By a 92-5 vote the Senate confirmed Christopher Wray to be the next director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.
- The Senate unanimously passed legislation that would allow terminally ill patients to access drugs that have not yet been approved by the Food and Drug Administration. Senators also reauthorized funding for the FDA's prescription drug and medical device review process, by a 94-1 vote.
- With a unanimous Senate vote, Congress sent Trump a bill that would increase veterans education benefits by $3 billion over the next decade.
- Josh Hawley, Missouri's attorney general, formed a committee to consider seeking the Republican nomination to challenge Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill next year. The party does not yet have a challenger to one of the Senate's most vulnerable incumbents.
- In Pennsylvania, Rep. Lou Barletta (R-Pa.) said he would seek his party's nomination to challenge Sen. Bob Casey (D-Pa.) next year. In Montana, State Auditor Matt Rosendale (R) said he would challenge Sen. Jon Tester

(D).

- Rep. Diane Black (R-Tenn.), head of the House Budget Committee, said she would seek the Republican nomination for governor. She will need to resign her chairmanship or seek a waiver, per House Republican rules.
- Sen. Jeff Flake (Ariz.) released a book in which he faulted partisanship, and fellow Republicans, for the rise of Trump. In Arizona, where Trump is much more popular than him, Flake's challengers are taking notice of his distance from the president.

What's Ahead

- The House and Senate are in recess this week. Both chambers will hold pro-forma sessions, which in the Senate will prevent Trump from making recess appointments. Lawmakers are scheduled to return to Washington on Sept. 5.
- Trump left Washington on Friday for a 17-day stay at his residence at the Trump National Golf Club in Bedminster, N.J.
- Several town hall meetings with lawmakers are scheduled for the coming days.
- In Alabama, Republicans - including Sen. Luther Strange, Rep. Mo Brooks and former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore - are entering their final week of campaigning before the Aug. 15 primary for a special election.
- Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) said the Republican Party is too divided to continue its efforts to pass a major health care bill. Instead, he wants lawmakers to focus on tax reform when they return next month. House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) predicted that the tax debate will be easier than the health care one.
- The Trump administration had been planning to announce trade actions against China, but that announcement was delayed last week. It is not clear when the announcement will be rescheduled.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

No events scheduled

TUESDAY

Heritage Foundation event on countering extremism	11 a.m.
---	---------

---

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on the oil industry	12 p.m.
--	---------

---

Institute of Foreign Politics event on Russian foreign policy	5 p.m.
---	--------

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

House Veterans' Affairs Committee hearing on rural care	9:30 a.m.
---	-----------

---

Public Citizen event at on the Regulatory Accountability Act	10 a.m.
--	---------

FRIDAY

Mitchell Institute event on nuclear deterrence	8 a.m.
--	--------

---

Heritage Foundation event on U.S.-Taiwan relations	1:30 p.m.
--	-----------

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

- 1) Trump dictated son's misleading statement on meeting with Russian lawyer
Ashley Parker et al., The Washington Post
- 2) Health Care Failure Takes a Political Toll on Trump, GOP Lawmakers
Cameron Easley, Morning Consult
- 3) Trump Is Considering Perry for Homeland Security Chief Jennifer A. Dlouhy and Jennifer Jacobs, Bloomberg News
- 4) Sen. Flake Faults GOP, Democrat Partisanship for Trump Rise

The Associated Press

5) This week: Senate GOP picks up the pieces after agenda setback

Jordain Carney, The Hill

6) Justice Dept. to Take On Affirmative Action in College Admissions

Charlie Savage, The New York Times

7) Senate confirms Wray to lead FBI

Seung Min Kim, Politico

8) Commission urges President Trump to declare emergency over opioid crisis

Jessica Estepa, USA Today

9) Trump plan on China may come as soon as this week

Andrew Restuccia and Josh Dawsey, Politico

10) How a Lawmaker Survived Getting Caught Red-Handed Doing an Industry's Bidding

Lachlan Markay, The Daily Beast

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 9:01:41 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump signed a directive banning transgender people from joining the military. He also instructed the Pentagon and the Department of Homeland Security to evaluate what to do with transgender people who are currently serving.
- Trump pardoned former Arizona Sheriff Joe Arpaio, who had been convicted of criminal contempt for not following a judge's order to stop detaining Latinos solely on suspicions about their immigration status.

- Sebastian Gorka, a former Breitbart staffer who served as a deputy assistant to Trump, is no longer part of the administration. A White House official said Gorka did not resign, but confirmed that he is no longer employed at the White House.
- Trump threatened to shutdown the federal government if Congress does not include funding for his proposed border wall in a forthcoming spending measure that needs to be passed before Oct. 1 to avoid a shutdown.
- North Korea used multiple-rocket launchers to test three short-range missiles, the first such test since it launched two intercontinental ballistic missiles last month and threatened the United States.
- Trump outlined a new strategy for the war in Afghanistan in a primetime address. The administration's plan includes sending 3,900 additional U.S. troops to the country.
- The president's approval rating fell to a new low following his response to the deadly protest in Charlottesville, Va. on Aug. 12, with 39 percent of voters saying they approve of his job performance, compared with 56 percent who said they disapprove.

Congress

- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) pushed back on media reports of a growing divide between him and Trump, saying in a statement that they're both "committed to advancing our shared agenda together."
- Sen. Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.) faced more criticism from Trump, whose attacks were featured in a campaign commercial by Flake's top Republican challenger, former state Sen. Kelli Ward. Trump met with other possible Republican primary challengers during his visit to Phoenix.
- House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) took some flak from constituents during a town hall in his congressional district hosted by CNN. He later visited Oregon to tout the GOP's tax plan and said he's confident the House would pass the proposal by year's end.
- Missouri state Rep. Marsha Haefner said she's considering a campaign for the Republican nomination to challenge Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill next year. Irked by the focus of party brass on state Attorney General Josh Hawley, she met with consultants in Washington about a possible campaign.

- Rep. Ed Perlmutter (D-Colo.) reversed course and said he will run for re-election in Colorado's Seventh District next year. He previously sought the Democratic nomination for governor in 2018 but dropped his bid in July.

What's Ahead

- Congress will reconvene on Sept. 5.
- Trump is expected to travel to Missouri this week to campaign for tax reform. Hawley, the state's top GOP prospect to run for Senate next year, will not be in attendance. One of his top backers recently wrote an opinion piece urging Republicans to "disassociate ourselves from Trump."
- Five governors - Charlie Baker (R-Mass.), Steve Bullock (D-Mont.), Bill Haslam (R-Tenn.), Gary Herbert (R-Utah) and John Hickenlooper (D-Colo.) - are slated to discuss bipartisan fixes to the Affordable Care Act at a hearing on Capitol Hill. Their testimony will follow another hearing with state insurance commissioners.
- A judge in New Jersey denied requests by Democratic Sen. Robert Menendez's lawyers to delay his corruption trial or let them explain his absence to a jury if the trial interferes with Senate votes. Oral arguments are set to begin Sept. 6.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Brookings Institution event on criminal justice reform 10 a.m.

---

Cato Institute on the politics of 'Game of Thrones' 6:30 p.m.

TUESDAY

National Press Club lunch event with new NAACP President
Derrick Johnson 12:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

AEI event on retirement income 10 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on Iran 12 p.m.

THURSDAY

Brookings Institution event on global financial ecosystem 10 a.m.

---

National Press Club book event with Sheryl Attkisson 6:30 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Trump threatens shutdown, suggests controversial pardon at Arizona rally

John Wagner et al., The Washington Post

2) Ryan faces heat back home in Wisconsin

Rachael Bade, Politico

3) McConnell, in Private, Doubts if Trump Can Save Presidency

Alexander Burns and Jonathan Martin, The New York Times

4) Is Anybody Home at HUD?

Alec MacGillis, New York Magazine

5) Trump's Approval Rating Dips Below 40% for First Time After Charlottesville

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

6) Navy orders 7th Fleet review amid search for 10 from McCain

Lolita C. Baldor, The Associated Press

7) Emails: Breitbart editor pledges to do 'dirty work' for Bannon, smears Ivanka

Oliver Darcy and Jake Tapper, CNN

8) A Second Korean War Could Quickly Spread Across All of Asia

Brendan Scott and Adrian Leung, Bloomberg

9) Senate Health Panel Will Hear From Governors, Insurance Leaders

Mary Ellen McIntire, Roll Call

10) White House Sets Rules for Military Transgender Ban

Gordon Lubold, The Wall Street Journal

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, September 17, 2017 9:01:55 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump moved closer to a deal with House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) on how to replace the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. A recent poll found that voters trust the president more than congressional Republican leaders when it comes to bipartisan dealmaking.
- Trump signed a joint resolution condemning white supremacists and last month's racially motivated violence in Charlottesville, Va. He also met with

South Carolina Sen. Tim Scott, the Senate's only black Republican, who shared his concerns about Trump's "both sides" comments.

- The Supreme Court sided with a provision in Trump's travel ban, a move that allows the administration to continue preventing about 24,000 people from entering the United States even though they have relationships with refugee resettlement organizations. The court will hear oral arguments next month in two cases pertaining to the overall ban.
- The United States imposed sanctions on Cambodia, Eritrea, Guinea, and Sierra Leone, saying the countries have refused to accept their own citizens who have been deported from the United States.

Congress

- Conservatives on Capitol Hill expressed uneasiness about Trump's dealmaking with Democrats regarding DACA, particularly when it comes to granting citizenship. Republican voters, however, said achieving the policy of protecting so-called "Dreamers" should be an important or top priority for Congress.
- Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) introduced his single payer health care proposal, which would expand Medicare to all Americans, flanked by some of the Senate's 2020 Democratic presidential prospects. Sens. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) and Bill Cassidy (R-La.) proposed their own health care plan that would provide block grants to states.
- Senators scuttled an attempt by Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) to amend the National Defense Authorization Act to include a component repealing the war powers authorizations for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.
- The House passed a \$1.2 trillion spending package by a vote of 211 to 198. The measure is not expected to be taken up in the Senate, where it would likely face a Democratic filibuster. Congress faces a Dec. 8 deadline to pass another spending bill in order to avoid a government shutdown.
- Rep. Dave Trott (R-Mich.) said he will not run for re-election next year and will instead leave Congress at the end of his second term. He joins a string of House Republicans, including Pennsylvania Rep. Charlie Dent and Washington Rep. Dave Reichert, who are retiring in districts where Democrats say they have a better chance of winning open contests during the 2018 midterm elections.

- Rep. Mo Brooks (R-Ala.), who came in third in a special primary election last month for the Senate seat vacated by Jeff Sessions, endorsed former state Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore (R) in his effort to unseat incumbent Sen. Luther Strange (R) during a Sept. 26 primary runoff. Brooks previously withheld support for the two remaining GOP candidates, and he even suggested that a Democrat could win the general election.

What's Ahead

- The Senate is scheduled to convene on Monday to resume consideration of the National Defense Authorization Act. The House is not scheduled to return until Sept. 25.
- World leaders from 193 countries are scheduled to meet in New York this week for the 72nd U.N. General Assembly. Trump is expected to seek support for tougher measures against North Korea, which fired another missile over Japan last week.
- Trump said he'll visit Alabama on Saturday to campaign for Strange. The winner of the Sept. 26 runoff will face Democratic nominee Doug Jones, a former U.S. attorney, in December.
- Roger Stone, a longtime Republican strategist who has informally advised Trump, is scheduled to testify in private before the House Intelligence Committee on Sept. 26.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

U.S. Trade Representative Lighthizer speaks at CSIS event on trade policy 10:30 a.m.

TUESDAY

Senate Finance Committee hearing on business tax reform 10 a.m.

---

CAP event on gerrymandering 12 p.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event previewing 2017 Supreme Court term 12 p.m.

---

Sen. Capito at PCORI/Anthem event on opioids 3 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

Senate Aging Committee hearing on disaster preparedness and response needs for older Americans 9 a.m.

---

Washington Post event on health care 4 p.m.

THURSDAY

PPI event on NAFTA and U.S.-Mexico relations 10 a.m.

FRIDAY

Brookings Institution event on immigration policy 10 a.m.

---

Federalist Society event on budget process, omnibus spending bills 12 p.m.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Hurricanes in America have become less frequent

The Economist

2) Bannon on 60 Minutes: 9 key quotes

Erica Pandey, Axios

3) McConnell Says Democrats' Glee on Debt Limit Deal Was Premature

Carl Hulse, The New York Times

4) Hillary Clinton, in TV Interview, Says Election Loss Still 'Very Painful'

Eli Stokols, The Wall Street Journal

5) Trump to host six senators from both parties for White House dinner

Ed O'Keefe and Ashley Parker, The Washington Post

6) Pelosi and Schumer Say They Have Deal With Trump to Replace DACA

Maggie Haberman and Yamiche Alcindor, The New York Times

7) Trump to meet with bipartisan group of House moderates Wednesday

Nicole Gaudiano, USA Today

8) Mike Flynn's Son Is Subject of Federal Russia Probe

Carol E. Lee et al., NBC News

9) Senators eye defense bill as a way to challenge Trump's foreign policy

Karoun Demirjian, The Washington Post

10) Bannon plotting primaries against slate of GOP incumbents

Alex Isenstadt, Politico

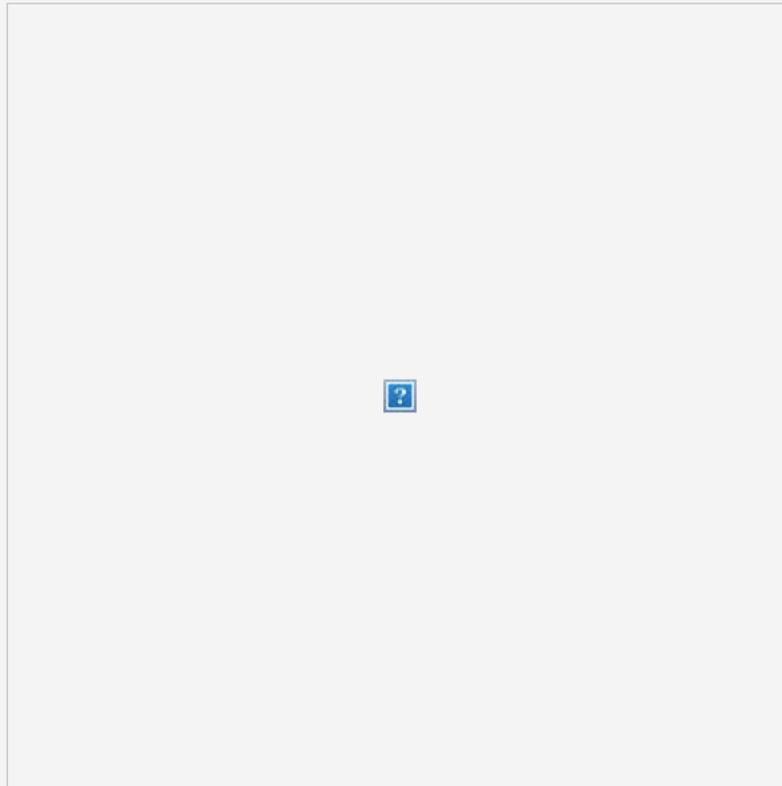

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, November 19, 2017 9:01:38 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump nominated Alex Azar to serve as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services and fill the position previously held by Tom Price, who left the administration amid criticism of his use of taxpayer-funded private charter jets. Azar, a former pharmaceutical company executive who served on the board of directors of a drug industry lobbying group, was a deputy secretary at HHS during the George W. Bush administration.
- Attorney General Jeff Sessions told members of the House Judiciary Committee that he did not lie under oath in previous congressional testimony about his contacts with Russian officials during Trump's 2016 campaign. He also said the Justice Department's review of allegations that the Clinton Foundation may have influenced an Obama administration decision to allow a Russian agency to buy a company with access to uranium in the United States will be conducted without regard to political considerations after the Justice Department told the committee that it's looking into whether a special prosecutor should be appointed.

- The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in California let Trump's travel ban partially go into effect, temporarily blocking another judge's ruling that had put on hold the administration's latest iteration of the ban that was announced on Sept. 24. The court ruling means the administration can block travel for people from Chad, Iran, Libya, Somalia, Syria and Yemen who do not have connections to the United States.
- Fifty-six percent of registered voters in a new poll said they think Trump will personally benefit from the GOP's proposed changes to the tax code if they become law. Twenty-nine percent of respondents said they and their families will benefit from tax reform.

Congress

- The House passed the GOP tax reform bill by a 227-205 vote, with all Democrats and 13 Republicans opposing the measure.
- The Senate Finance Committee approved that chamber's tax overhaul measure on a party-line vote of 14 to 12 after a four-day markup. Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) said he opposes the Senate GOP's bill.
- Roy Moore, the Republican nominee for Senate in Alabama's Dec. 12 special election, maintained support from state Republicans even as national Republicans further severed their ties to his campaign after more allegations of sexual misconduct emerged.
- Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.) was accused of kissing and groping a woman without her consent during a 2006 USO tour of the Middle East, before he was elected to the Senate. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) said the matter should be forwarded to the Senate Ethics Committee.

- A judge in New Jersey declared a mistrial in the federal corruption trial of Sen. Bob Menendez (D-N.J.) that lasted 11 weeks. While prosecutors did not say whether they would retry Menendez and his co-defendant, Florida doctor Salomon Melgen, McConnell called for a separate ethics investigation into Menendez.
- The House voted 237 to 189 to pass legislation that would overhaul the federal flood insurance program and renew it for five years. The program is set to expire in December, but the Senate might not take legislative action until 2018.
- The Senate passed the \$700 billion National Defense Authorization Act, sending the measure to the White House. There is not a clear plan from lawmakers on Capitol Hill regarding how they'll fund the increased spending for the Pentagon.
- Rep. Gene Green (D-Texas), who was first elected to Congress in 1992, said he will not seek re-election next year. Green is the sixth member of the Texas delegation to forgo a 2018 run, and he'll leave a district viewed as electorally safe for Democrats.

What's Ahead

- Congress is not in session this week. The Senate's next votes are scheduled for Nov. 27, and the House is scheduled to be back in session the following day.
- Senate leaders are aiming to take up the tax reform bill after Thanksgiving. Republican leaders on Capitol Hill are pushing to have a tax reform bill on Trump's desk by the end of the year.
- Lawmakers are working on a deal that would fund the government for the next two years. Current funding runs through Dec. 8.
- Alabama's special election for a Senate seat is scheduled for Dec. 12. Recent polls have shown gains for Moore's Democratic rival, former U.S. attorney

Doug Jones.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

American Enterprise Institute event on health care delivery 9 a.m.

---

Fed's Yellen speaks at New York University event 6 p.m.

TUESDAY

Brookings Institution event on U.S.-Saudi Arabia relations 2:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

Federal holiday -- no events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

- 1) GOP leaders weigh drastic plan to save Alabama Senate seat
Alex Isenstadt and Eliana Johnson, Politico
- 2) Senate Finance Committee approves GOP tax reform plan
Brian Faler, Politico
- 3) Gun-control rivals team up on bill to fix background-check database
Karoun Demirjian, The Washington Post
- 4) The More Education Republicans Have, the Less They Tend to Believe in

Climate Change

Kevin Quealy, The New York Times

5) House Passes Tax Bill, as Does Senate Panel

Thomas Kaplan and Alan Rappeport, The New York Times

6) U.S. House will reject total elimination of state and local tax deductions: Brady

Doina Chiacu, Reuters

7) A Wave Is a Comin'

Amy Walter, The Cook Political Report

8) Trump returns to GOP panic. Will he try to push Moore out?

Zeke Miller, The Associated Press

9) 'Where do his hands go?': Trump takes aim at 'Al Frankenstien' over groping claims

Herman Wong, The Washington Post

10) House Votes to Overhaul Flood-Insurance Program

Andrew Ackerman, The Wall Street Journal

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the Electronic Payments Coalition: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, December 10, 2017 9:01:42 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump signed into law legislation to fund the government through Dec. 22, giving lawmakers more time to reach an agreement on longer-term funding. The House passed the legislation 235 to 193, and the Senate cleared it on an 81-14 vote.
- Trump declared Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and said the United States will move its embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. The announcement sparked protests and prompted criticism from world leaders.

- The Supreme Court granted the Trump administration's request to fully reinstate the third iteration of the president's travel ban, pending appeal. Previous court rulings had said the administration could block nationals from eight designated countries only if those individuals lacked a bona fide relationship with a person or entity in the United States.
- Federal Bureau of Investigation Director Christopher Wray defended his agency from Trump's charge that it was "in tatters" during testimony before the House Judiciary Committee.

Congress

- Rep. Trent Franks (R-Ariz.) resigned Friday, a day after he said he would resign on Jan. 31, amid a House Ethics Committee investigation of his "discussion of surrogacy" with two female staffers. Friday's announcement came shortly before a news report that said he offered a staffer $5 million to act as a surrogate, and another media report that said two staffers were not sure if he wanted them to serve as surrogates by having intercourse with him or through in vitro fertilization.
- Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.) said he will resign from the Senate "in the coming weeks" amid allegations of sexual misconduct and after he lost the support of fellow Senate Democrats.
- Rep. John Conyers (D-Mich.), who was the longest-serving member in Congress, resigned amid sexual harassment allegations against him. Conyers endorsed his eldest son, John Conyers III, to replace him in the state's 13th District, though Conyers III has said he has not decided whether he will run. His great-nephew, state Sen. Ian Conyers, has said he is running for the seat.
- The House Ethics Committee established a subcommittee to investigate allegations of misconduct by Rep. Blake Farenthold (R-Texas) after new information emerged about an $84,000 taxpayer-funded settlement he reached with his former communications director, who accused him of making sexually charged comments. He has denied wrongdoing in the case.
- A new poll found that 61 percent of registered voters say Congress should probe all credible allegations of sexual misconduct against a sitting politician, even if the alleged events took place before the lawmaker took office.

- House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) was cleared by the House Ethics Committee of allegations that he disclosed classified information related to his panel's Russia investigation. Nunes, who said he would step aside but not recuse himself from the intelligence committee's probe into Russian meddling in the 2016 election, did not say if he would retake control of the Russia investigation.
- The Senate voted 62 to 37 to confirm Kirstjen Nielsen to lead the Department of Homeland Security. Nielsen had served as chief of staff to John Kelly when he was DHS secretary, and she later became a top White House aide when Kelly was named Trump's chief of staff.
- The House and Senate voted to go to a conference committee over competing bills that would overhaul the federal tax code. The eight Senate GOP conferees include Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch of Utah, Budget Committee Chairman Mike Enzi of Wyoming, and Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, while the House GOP's nine conferees include Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady of Texas.
- The House voted 231 to 198 to pass legislation that would let concealed carry license holders conceal a handgun in other states, with opposition from 14 Republicans and support from six Democrats. The measure, a top priority for the National Rifle Association, is strongly opposed by Senate Democrats.
- The House voted 364 to 58 to table a resolution to impeach Trump. Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Minority Whip Steny Hoyer (D-Md.) were among the Democrats who voted with Republicans to table the resolution, offered by Rep. Al Green (D-Texas), after saying in a joint statement, "Now is not the time to consider articles of impeachment."

What's Ahead

- Both the House and Senate are in session this week.

- Voters in Alabama head to the polls Tuesday for the special election to replace Jeff Sessions, who left the Senate earlier this year to be U.S. attorney general. The contest pits Republican nominee Roy Moore, the former chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court who has faced allegations of sexual misconduct, against Democratic nominee Doug Jones, a former U.S. attorney.
- Lawmakers on Capitol Hill have until Dec. 22 to reach another deal to fund the government.
- A conference committee is set to begin meeting to resolve differences in the House and Senate's separate tax reform bills. Among the issues up for debate are deductions for medical expenses and state income taxes, whether to repeal the corporate alternative minimum tax and the size of the corporate tax cut.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Axios event on energy under Trump	8 a.m.
-----------------------------------	--------

---

AEI event on the 2018 farm bill	8:30 a.m.
---------------------------------	-----------

TUESDAY

Rep. Hurd speaks at Wilson Center event on future of NAFTA	8 a.m.
--	--------

---

American Consumer Institute event on net neutrality	12 p.m.
---	---------

---

Heritage Foundation event on agriculture in NAFTA renegotiations	12 p.m.
--	---------

---

Agriculture Secretary Perdue speaks at National Press Club	12:30 p.m.
--	------------

---

House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on future of NAFTA	2 p.m.
---	--------

---

Sen. Whitehouse speaks at American Constitution Society event about obstruction of justice 3 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

CSIS event on U.S. trade enforcement agenda 8:45 a.m.

---

Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein testifies at House Judiciary Committee hearing 10 a.m.

---

House Ways and Means subcommittee hearing on the taxpayer experience with the IRS 10 a.m.

---

White House Council of Economic Advisers chairman speaks at Hamilton Project event 1:30 p.m.

THURSDAY

House Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on Grand Staircase-Escalante bill 9:30 a.m.

---

Stimson Center event on the impact of the first year of Trump's presidency 9:30 a.m.

FRIDAY

Wilson Center event on alternate forms of Brexit and implications for the U.K., EU, U.S. 9 a.m.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

- 1) Among the Tax Bill's Biggest Losers: High-Income, Blue State Taxpayers
Alicia Parlapiano and K.K. Rebecca Lai, The New York Times
- 2) Deutsche Bank Records Said to Be Subpoenaed by Mueller
Steven Arons and Shannon Pettypiece, Bloomberg
- 3) Congress faces frantic week with possible shutdown, taxes, Russia
John Bresnahan, Politico
- 4) A congressman's accuser: Blackballed and baby-sitting for cash

Rachael Bade, Politico

5) House conservatives almost topple tax vote

Bernie Becker et al., Politico

6) Warnings intensify as Trump readies Jerusalem declaration

Josef Federman and Matthew Lee, The Associated Press

7) 'I've Got a Crook Running My Campaign'

Corey Lewandowski, Politico

8) Senate Votes to Begin Tax-Overhaul Negotiations With House

Richard Rubin, The Wall Street Journal

9) What happened when North Carolina cut taxes like the GOP plans to for the country

Todd C. Frankel, The Washington Post

10) Inside the secretive nerve center of the Mueller investigation

Robert Costa et al., The Washington Post

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the National Association of Broadcasters: U.S. Reportedly Wiretapped Former Trump Campaign Chairman Before and After 2016 Election
Date: Tuesday, September 19, 2017 9:06:23 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump's former campaign chairman, Paul Manafort, was reportedly wiretapped by federal investigators, under a Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act court order, before and after the 2016 election. (CNN)
- The Senate voted 89-8 to pass its version of a $700 billion National Defense Authorization Act. The measure, which needs to be reconciled with the House-passed measure before final congressional consideration, would authorize a pay raise for the military and stronger missile defense but rejected a proposal by Defense Secretary Jim Mattis to begin closing more bases in 2021. (Reuters)

- Vice President Mike Pence plans to campaign for Sen. Luther Strange (R-Ala.) in Alabama on Monday, a day before a special primary election runoff against former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore (R). Trump is also expected to campaign for Strange ahead of the primary election that will determine which candidate faces Democratic nominee Doug Jones, a former U.S. attorney, in December. (Politico)
- Voters in both parties say they are content with the ideological positions of their parties, but they want their 2020 presidential candidates to be more true to their definitions of "liberal" and "conservative," according to a new poll. Six in 10 Democrats said their party is "about right" on the ideological spectrum, compared to half of Republicans who said the same of theirs. (Morning Consult)

Chart Review

The Latest Health Care Repeal Plan Would Give States Sweeping Discretion

The New York Times

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

Senate Finance Committee hearing on business tax reform	10 a.m.
---	---------

---

Center for American Progress event on gerrymandering	12 p.m.
--	---------

---

Heritage Foundation event previewing 2017 Supreme Court term	12 p.m.
--	---------

---

Sen. Capito at PCORI/Anthem event on opioids	3 p.m.
--	--------

WEDNESDAY

Senate Aging Committee hearing on disaster preparedness and response needs for older Americans 9 a.m.

---

Washington Post event on health care 4 p.m.

THURSDAY

PPI event on NAFTA and U.S.-Mexico relations 10 a.m.

FRIDAY

Brookings Institution event on immigration policy 10 a.m.

---

Federalist Society event on budget process, omnibus spending bills 12 p.m.

General

US government wiretapped former Trump campaign chairman Evan Perez et al., CNN

US investigators wiretapped former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort under secret court orders before and after the election, sources tell CNN, an extraordinary step involving a high-ranking campaign official now at the center of the Russia meddling probe. The government snooping continued into early this year, including a period when Manafort was known to talk to President Donald Trump.

With a Picked Lock and a Threatened Indictment, Mueller's Inquiry Sets a Tone

Sharon LaFraniere et al., The New York Times

Paul J. Manafort was in bed early one morning in July when federal agents bearing a search warrant picked the lock on his front door and raided his Virginia home. They took binders stuffed with documents and copied his computer files, looking for evidence that Mr. Manafort, President Trump's former campaign chairman, set up secret offshore bank accounts.

Poll: Voters Content With Party Stance But Want Ideologically Pure Candidates

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

Democratic and Republican voters both say they are comfortable with the ideological positions of their parties, but both groups also want their 2020 presidential candidates to be more ideologically true to their definitions of "liberal" and "conservative" when compared to their preferred candidate in 2016. A Morning Consult/POLITICO poll conducted Sept. 14-17 found six in 10 Democrats said their party is "about right" when they were also asked if they thought it was too liberal or conservative.

Iran Accuses U.S. of Sabotaging Nuclear Deal Ahead of U.N. Talks

Laurence Norman, The Wall Street Journal

Iranian Vice President Ali Akbar Salehi on Monday accused the U.S. of violating the spirit and letter of the 2015 nuclear deal, escalating a clash between the two countries at the start of a crucial week of talks on the accord's future. President Donald Trump has said he expects not to certify Iran's compliance with the accord when a decision comes due next month, a move that could unravel the agreement.

Pence Gets New Communications Team From the Capitol

Niels Lesniewski, Roll Call

Vice President Mike Pence has poached the Capitol for a new communications team. The departure of Pence's longtime spokesman Marc Lotter from the White House, which was announced last week, created an opening for two communicators from Capitol Hill to move in.

**GOP lawmakers: Move Appalachian agency out of Washington**

Matthew Daly, The Associated Press

Two powerful Kentucky Republicans have an idea to boost an economic development agency that helps Appalachia: Move it out of the nation's capital. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and veteran Rep. Hal Rogers are sponsoring a bill they say will refocus the Appalachian Regional Commission to invest more in the poorest communities in 13 Appalachian states.

---

Presidential

**Trump to lay out vision of U.S. role in the world, focusing on 'outcomes, not ideology'**

David Nakamura and Anne Gearan, The Washington Post

President Trump on Tuesday will present a vision of U.S. engagement with the world in a maiden address to the United Nations that aides said will be consistent with the nation's "values and traditions" but will not focus on advancing democracy abroad. This dichotomy of a U.S. leader pledging to shape global conditions to ensure America's prosperity and security without explicitly promoting its way of life is expected to distinguish Trump's speech from those of his White House forebears.

**Trump says U.S. prepared to take further action in Venezuela**

Henry C. Jackson, Politico

President Donald Trump said Monday that the "growing crisis" in Venezuela was unacceptable and that the U.S. was ready to take further action to ensure democracy was restored in the Latin American nation. "The Venezuelan people are starving. ... " Trump said, speaking at a dinner with leaders from the region on the sideline of the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

**Trump says he wants a massive military parade down Pennsylvania Avenue on July 4**

Abby Phillip, The Washington Post

President Trump's trip to France for the country's Bastille Day parade in July left a big impression. So big, in fact, that he wants to replicate the experience back home.

DACA recipients file suit over Trump's move to end program

Josh Gerstein, Politico

A half dozen DACA recipients are suing President Donald Trump over his decision to end the program giving quasi-legal status and work permits to undocumented immigrants who were brought to the U.S. as children. Several legal luminaries are backing the lawsuit filed Monday morning in federal court in San Francisco, including Harvard Law professor Larry Tribe and University of California at Berkeley law school dean Erwin Chemerinsky.

Donald Trump Jr. Gives Up Secret Service Protection, Seeking Privacy

Nicholas Fandos and Maggie Haberman, The New York Times

Donald Trump Jr., the president's eldest son, has elected to forgo protection by the Secret Service, according to a senior administration official, and another top White House official is losing hers. The agency ceased protecting Mr. Trump, who lives in New York City and is an executive at the Trump Organization, last week.

---

Senate

Senate sidesteps controversy, passes mammoth defense bill

Connor O'Brien, Politico

The Senate sidestepped controversy Monday and overwhelmingly passed a sweeping $692 billion defense policy bill for the new fiscal year. Scrapped without votes were a handful of contentious proposals to prevent transgender troops from being kicked out of the military, eliminate across-the-board budget cuts, bar indefinite detention of U.S. citizens and launch a new round of military base realignments and closures.

Pence to campaign for Luther Strange next Monday

Daniel Strauss and Matthew Nussbaum, Politico

Vice President Mike Pence will campaign for Sen. Luther Strange next Monday in Alabama, a senior administration official and two top political operatives involved in the Alabama Senate race confirmed to POLITICO. Pence's appearance in Alabama will come a day before the runoff between Strange and former Alabama chief Judge Roy Moore.

Senate GOP Has 12 Days to Repeal Obamacare and No Room for Error

Laura Litvan et al., Bloomberg

Senate Republicans making one last-ditch effort to repeal Obamacare have the daunting task of assembling 50 votes for an emotionally charged bill with limited details on how it would work, what it would cost and how it would affect health coverage - all in 12 days. They need to act by Sept. 30 to use a fast-track procedure that prevents Democrats from blocking it, but the deadline doesn't leave enough time to get a full analysis of the bill's effects from the Congressional Budget Office.

Senate Republicans Consider a Trillion-Dollar-Plus Tax Cut for Budget

Richard Rubin and Siobhan Hughes, The Wall Street Journal

Senate Republicans are considering writing a budget that would allow for up to $1.5 trillion in tax cuts over the next decade, said people familiar with the discussions. Budget talks are continuing and no final decision has been reached yet.

Bob Menendez's trial is already taking a political toll

Jonathan Tamari, The Philadelphia Inquirer

His bribery trial holds the most immediate peril for Sen. Bob Menendez - but federal prosecutors aren't the only ones threatening his political future. If he wins in court, the New Jersey Democrat still has to stand for reelection next year - and at least one poll shows that the daily headlines coming from his trial are already taking a toll.

---

House

Ryan Says House Would Vote on Graham-Cassidy If Senate Passes It

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Speaker Paul D. Ryan said Monday that the House would bring up a health care measure sponsored by Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy for a vote if it were to pass the Senate. "It would be our intention to bring the matter through," Ryan said at a news conference from a Harley Davidson facility in Wisconsin, where he was promoting GOP plans to overhaul the tax code.

Freedom Caucus chief: House would pass Obamacare repeal plan Rachael Bade, Politico

House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows predicted Monday that the House would pass a last-ditch effort to repeal Obamacare if it clears the Senate, with conservatives getting on board. The North Carolina Republican said in an interview that while it's too early for his group to take a position on the 11th-hour Obamacare replacement bill authored by Sens. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) and Bill Cassidy (R-La.), he is "very optimistic" about its prospects in the House.

After she was confronted by protesters, Pelosi says Democrats want a 'clean' Dream Act - with no border wall Jazmine Ulloa, Los Angeles Times

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi on Monday said she understood the fear in young protesters who shouted her down at a San Francisco news conference, asking for a legal path to citizenship for themselves and their parents. Speaking at Sacramento State hours after the disruption, Pelosi said she agreed with the protesters, pointing to the Dream Act as only the first step to broader immigration reform.

'You've Lost That Centrist Feeling': Comstock challenger hits cringe-worthy notes Jenna Portnoy, The Washington Post

If congressional races hinged on singing talent, Dan Helmer might have lost the race before it has really begun. Helmer, one of the Democrats competing to challenge Rep. Barbara Comstock (R) next year, released a painful-to-watch web ad Monday spoofing a "Top Gun" scene.

---

States

St. Louis mayor to meet with protesters after nights of violence Greg Bailey, Reuters

Activists in St. Louis plan to voice their concerns directly to the mayor on Tuesday over the acquittal of a white policeman who shot a black man to death, a verdict that sparked four night of violent protest. Mayor Lyda Krewson will speak with residents at a town hall meeting at a local high school, hoping to defuse tensions in a city where demonstrators have clashed with police and destroyed property.

New poll: Northam has slight edge, but Va. governor's race looks like a squeaker

Gregory S. Schneider, The Washington Post

Virginia's race for governor continues to look like a close contest, as Democrat Ralph Northam has a slight but statistically insignificant edge over Republican Ed Gillespie in one new poll of likely voters and another new poll shows a dead heat. Northam is the pick for 44 percent of likely voters and Gillespie gets 39 percent in the University of Mary Washington survey released Monday.

Kentucky joining 37 states in new approach to curb flow of addictive opioids

Beth Warren, Louisville Courier-Journal

Andy Beshear, Kentucky's attorney general, has joined 37 other states in announcing a new approach to reduce the flow of addictive opioid pain medicine. Beshear and his counterparts are urging health insurance companies to create financial incentives for pain management methods - other than prescribing opioids, unless the medication is for cancer patients.

Virgin Islands lack supplies for second hurricane pummeling

Sarah Ferris, Politico

Still in a state of near-total destruction from Hurricane Irma this month, the U.S. Virgin Islands are now bracing for another major storm and may be woefully unprepared. As much as 20 inches of rain could pound the islands of St. Croix, St. Thomas and St. John over the next two days, prompting President Donald Trump to declare a state of emergency on Monday.

---

Advocacy

Lobbyists on Edge Awaiting Details of Trump Tax Overhaul Plan

Ben Brody, Bloomberg

The National Association of Home Builders has already created ads to either support or oppose a U.S. tax-code overhaul, depending on how Congress and President Donald Trump propose to treat its favorite tax breaks. "We're at DEFCON One," said Jerry Howard, president of the trade group that represents 140,000 builders.

---

A Message from the National Association of Broadcasters:

Local radio and TV stations help drive our nation's economy, creating millions of jobs and generating more than $1 trillion in economic activity.

Click here to find out how America's local TV and radio stations are serving your community and state.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

The Republican Health Care Zombie Is Back

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

Republican lawmakers have wasted much of the year trying to repeal the Affordable Care Act, a move that would deprive millions of people of health insurance. They're back at it.

Graham-Cassidy Is a Triumph of Federalism

Theodore Kupfer, National Review

Republicans are trying to pass health-care reform: The noontide hour returns. The latest installment of this eternal endeavor is a bill drafted by Senators Lindsey Graham (R., S.C.) and Bill Cassidy (R., La.) that was introduced on September 13.

The 2016 election was not a fluke

Eugene Robinson, The Washington Post

Leaders of both major parties are wrong to think of the 2016 election as some kind of fluke. I believe a political realignment is underway, and those who fail to discern its outlines could end up powerless and irrelevant.

---

A Message from the National Association of Broadcasters:

Not only do local broadcasters provide a vital lifeline during times of emergency and critical news and weather for local communities, they also foster economic growth and development by serving as an advertising platform for local businesses.

Click here to find out how America's local TV and radio stations are serving your community and state.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Like Other ACA Repeal Bills, Cassidy-Graham Plan Would Add Millions to Uninsured, Destabilize Individual Market

Jacob Leibenluft et al., Center on Budget and Policy Priorities

In releasing a revised version of their legislation to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act (ACA), Senators Bill Cassidy and Lindsey Graham, along with co-sponsors Dean Heller and Ron Johnson, claimed that their bill isn't a "partisan" approach and doesn't include "draconian cuts." In reality, however, the Cassidy-Graham bill would have the same harmful consequences as those prior bills.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington, Presented by the National Association of Broadcasters: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, September 24, 2017 9:02:14 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump's temporary travel ban is set to be replaced with more targeted restrictions that would differ for each country. The changes could have an impact on a Supreme Court case challenging the travel ban. Oral arguments in that case are scheduled for Oct. 10.
- Trump vowed to "totally destroy North Korea" if it threatens the United States. He made the remarks during his first address to the United Nations General Assembly. North Korean leader Kim Jong-un responded by saying

Trump is a "mentally deranged U.S. dotard."

- The Treasury Department was given more authority by Trump to target banks, business and individuals with ties to North Korea. The executive order appeared aimed at China, the North's largest trading partner.
- Robert Mueller, the Justice Department's special counsel leading the Russia investigation, requested documents from the White House related to the firing of both national security adviser Michael Flynn and Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey, as well as the president's Oval Office meeting with Russian officials.
- The Trump administration scrapped Obama-era guidance for college campuses investigating sexual assaults, with Education Secretary Betsy DeVos saying the rules were skewed against students who are accused of assault. Interim guidance will allow campuses to decide which standards of evidence to use when investigating allegations.

Congress

- Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) said he would vote against a health care overhaul bill authored by fellow GOP Sens. Lindsey Graham (S.C.) and Bill Cassidy (La.). His announcement dealt a blow to Senate Republican leaders who are looking to secure 50 votes in support of an Obamacare repeal bill ahead of a Sept. 30 deadline.
- Facebook Inc. said it has reached an agreement with congressional investigators to share advertisements that were purchased by Russians during the 2016 U.S. presidential campaign. The company has already shared similar information with Mueller's team.
- The Senate voted 89-8 to pass its version of a \$700 billion National Defense Authorization Act. The measure, which needs to be reconciled with the House-passed measure before final congressional consideration, would authorize a pay raise for the military and stronger missile defense but rejected a proposal by Defense Secretary Jim Mattis to begin closing more bases in 2021.
- Republicans criticized a measure introduced by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), and co-sponsored by some of the Senate's possible 2020 Democratic contenders, calling the legislation akin to "socialism." Recent polling found that a 49 percent plurality of registered voters support the single-payer system proposed by Sanders, while 35 percent oppose the policy. Support for single-payer is up 5 percentage points since April.

- Democratic Reps. Adriano Espaillat, (N.Y.), Raul Grijalva (Ariz.) and Luis Gutierrez (Ill.) were arrested in New York as part of a protest outside of Trump Tower over the president's decision to end protections for hundreds of thousands of young people in the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program.

What's Ahead

- The House and Senate are in session this week.
- The Senate is scheduled to vote Monday on the nomination of William Emanuel to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board.
- Graham and Cassidy are set to face Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) in a town-hall style event Monday to debate the GOP's latest Obamacare repeal bill ahead of a potential Senate floor vote this week.
- Trump is set to meet with conservative groups on Monday to discuss tax reform. On Wednesday, House Republicans are expected to hold a half-day retreat on how to message their tax plan to the public.
- GOP voters in Alabama head to the polls Tuesday in a closely watched Republican primary runoff between Sen. Luther Strange and former state Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore. Trump campaigned for Strange on Friday, and Pence is scheduled to do the same on Monday.
- Trump's personal attorney, Michael Cohen, is slated to testify publicly before the Senate Intelligence Committee on Oct. 25.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Wharton Innovation Summit 8 a.m.

---

Rep. Ryan speaks at National Press Club 2 p.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on Graham-Cassidy health care bill 2 p.m.

TUESDAY

Sens. Johnson, Whitehouse speak at Atlantic Council event on strategic communications 8 a.m.

---

SEC's Clayton testifies before Senate Banking Committee 10 a.m.

---

Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on special counsels, separation of powers 10 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce Committee hearing on technology's role for consumers 10 a.m.

---

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 10 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 7:30 a.m.

---

House Homeland Security Committee hearing on threats to the United States 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Bennet speaks at Center for American Progress event on congressional priorities 1 p.m.

THURSDAY

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 7:30 a.m.

---

Reps. Dent, Jordan, Walker speak at Ripon Society event 7:45 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on constitutionality of Trump's travel ban 12 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) US government wiretapped former Trump campaign chairman

Evan Perez et al., CNN

2) The Latest Health Care Repeal Plan Would Give States Sweeping Discretion

Haeyoun Park and Margot Sanger-Katz, The New York Times

3) White House seriously considers abandoning some tax cuts for the wealthy

Damian Paletta and Mike DeBonis, The Washington Post

4) Trump using campaign, RNC funds to pay legal bills from Russia probe: sources

Karen Freifeld and Ginger Gibson, Reuters

5) Trump team drafting plan to deport more young people - Central American teens

Franco Ordoñez, McClatchy DC

6) Seven in 10 Dissatisfied With Way U.S. Is Being Governed

Frank Newport, Gallup

7) Trump Takes Agenda of Change to the United Nations

Farnaz Fassihi and Eli Stokols, The Wall Street Journal

8) Senate Backs Bill to Pump \$700 Billion Into Military

Richard Lardner, The Associated Press

9) U.S. Support for Free Trade Endures in Trump Era, Poll Shows

David Mark, Morning Consult

10) The 2016 election was not a fluke

Eugene Robinson, The Washington Post

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Alabama Voters Head to Polls for GOP Senate Primary
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:25:56 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Voters in Alabama are heading to the polls today to select the Republican nominee to replace Attorney General Jeff Sessions in the Senate. Sen. Luther Strange, who was appointed to the seat, is in a close race for second with Rep. Mo Brooks, and only one will head to the runoff with former Alabama Supreme Court Judge Roy Moore. (Politico)
- A Trump campaign staffer sent at least a half-dozen emails attempting to set up meetings with Trump or Trump campaign officials and Russian officials, according to emails. (The Washington Post)

- The Republican base is defending President Donald Trump's response to a white nationalist rally in Charlottesville, Va. They say his two-day refusal to condemn neo-Nazis is not a big deal. (McClatchy DC)

Chart Review

Donnelly, Popular Among Indiana Republicans, Awaits GOP Challenger

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

Special primary elections in Alabama and Utah

---

House meets for a pro forma session

9:30 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on reorganizing the federal government

11 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

North Korea Says It Will Wait 'a Little More' Before Acting on Guam Threat

Choe Sang-Hun, The New York Times

North Korea appeared on Tuesday to pause its threat to launch ballistic missiles toward Guam, saying it would wait to assess "the foolish and stupid conduct" of the United States before carrying the launchings out. The statement came as the United States and South Korea were preparing to conduct joint military exercises on the Korean Peninsula and surrounding waters starting on Monday, despite North Korea's vehement opposition to such drills.

GOP activists scold Republicans for criticizing Trump over Charlottesville

Katie Glueck and Lesley Clark, McClatchy DC

The Republican base is fiercely defending Donald Trump's response to a violent white nationalist rally, arguing that the president's dayslong refusal to explicitly condemn white supremacists and neo-Nazis is a matter of splitting hairs. Trump has faced enormous backlash from his own party's leaders for being slow to condemn the neo-Nazis and white-power groups who recently gathered in Charlottesville, Virginia, suggesting an increased willingness among Washington Republicans to break with an administration whose support among base voters has so far kept lawmakers in line.

Anthony Scaramucci talks to Colbert about Reince Priebus, Steve Bannon and Trump's Charlottesville remarks

Bethonie Butler, The Washington Post

On Monday, former White House communications director Anthony

Scaramucci appeared on "The Late Show With Stephen Colbert," where he faced a late-night host who for weeks has gleefully joked about his brief and chaotic time in the White House. Colbert introduced Scaramucci as "the shortest-tenured communications director in White House history."

South Korea to Prevent War at All Costs, President Moon Says Peter Pae, Bloomberg

South Korean President Moon Jae-in said that any military action against Kim Jong Un's regime requires his nation's approval, and vowed to prevent war at all costs. "There will be no war repeated on the Korean Peninsula," Moon said in a speech on Tuesday marking the anniversary of the end of Japanese occupation in the 1940s.

Far Right Plans Its Next Moves With a New Energy Alan Feuer, The New York Times

The white supremacists and right-wing extremists who came together over the weekend in Charlottesville, Va., are now headed home, many of them ready and energized, they said, to set their sights on bigger prizes. Some were making arrangements to appear at future marches. Some were planning to run for public office.

---

Presidential

Trump campaign emails show aide's repeated efforts to set up Russia meetings

Tom Hamburger et al., The Washington Post

Three days after Donald Trump named his campaign foreign policy team in March 2016, the youngest of the new advisers sent an email to seven campaign officials with the subject line: "Meeting with Russian Leadership - Including Putin. "The adviser, George Papadopoulos, offered to set up "a meeting between us and the Russian leadership to discuss US-Russia ties under President Trump," telling them his Russian contacts welcomed the opportunity, according to internal campaign emails read to The Washington Post.

The 'Fire and Fury' Crisis: Trump Risks a Backfire Over China and North Korea

Andrew Browne, The Wall Street Journal

By ordering his first trade action against Beijing, while amping up pressure on Chinese leaders to rein in Pyongyang's nuclear menace, U.S. President Donald Trump is bringing to a head two of the most intractable problems that bedevil U.S.-China relations. There are hints that Mr. Trump's hard-nosed strategy could be having an impact—at least in the near-term.

Bowling to pressure, Trump denounces hate groups by name

Jonathan Lemire, The Associated Press

Bowing to pressure from right and left, President Donald Trump condemned white supremacist groups by name on Monday, declaring "racism is evil" after two days of public equivocation and internal White House debate over the deadly race-fueled clashes in Charlottesville, Virginia. In a hastily arranged statement at the White House, Trump branded members of the KKK, neo-Nazis and white supremacists who take part in violence as "criminals and thugs."

Bannon in limbo as Trump faces growing calls for the strategist's ouster

Maggie Haberman, The New York Times

Rupert Murdoch has repeatedly urged President Trump to fire him. Anthony Scaramucci, the president's former communications director, thrashed him on television as a white nationalist. Lt. Gen. H. R. McMaster, the national security adviser, refused to even say he could work with him.

Trouble in Trumpland: The president's core supporters begin to worry

Susan Page and Josh Hafner, USA Today

There's trouble in Trumpland. The voters who backed Donald Trump like the disruption but are looking for more function from the outsider they helped put in the White House, members of the USA TODAY Network Trump Voter Panel say.

New York braces as thousands gather to protest Trump visit

Justin Sink and Henry Goldman, Bloomberg

Thousands of people took to New York streets on Monday to protest president

Donald Trump's response to weekend violence in Virginia, clogging midtown Manhattan as he arrived for his first overnight stay in the city since taking office. The president landed at John F. Kennedy International Airport about 8:15 p.m. Monday night.

---

Senate

5 things to watch in Alabama's special election

Seung Min Kim and Daniel Strauss, Politico

The Alabama GOP Senate primary on Tuesday will go a long way in answering the overriding question of the race: How much do Mitch McConnell's cash and Donald Trump's endorsement matter? The brutal fight on the Republican side is all but assured to go to a September runoff, with no one expected to reach the 50 percent threshold to win the nomination outright. Sen. Luther Strange has the backing of Trump - who remains immensely popular in Alabama and cut a robocall for the senator on Monday - and millions in ads from a McConnell-blessed super PAC.

New campaign targets GOP members who won't hold town halls

Alex Roarty, McClatchy DC

A group aligned with the Democratic Party is launching a new effort this week to criticize Republican politicians who don't hold town halls during August recess, using an online video and digital ads to accuse them of hiding from their constituents. The campaign from American Bridge 21st Century will run through Labor Day, the group said, and will include a website used to highlight the targeted GOP officials.

Russia Portfolio Comes in Handy for Senate Staffer

Niels Lesniewski, Roll Call

Naz Durakoglu started her new job working for Sen. Jeanne Shaheen in early June, shortly after the New Hampshire Democrat had pushed to add Russia sanctions to an Iran sanctions bill as it moved through the Foreign Relations Committee. But after Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Bob Corker of Tennessee said he would move ahead with a bipartisan effort to tighten sanctions against Moscow, Shaheen withdrew her amendments.

'Kid Rock' May Be Ineligible for Michigan Ballot

Nathan L. Gonzales, Roll Call

Robert Ritchie may end up challenging Democratic Sen. Debbie Stabenow next year, but his stage name, Kid Rock, may not be allowed to appear on the ballot in Michigan. Kid Rock is a household name to Americans under the age of 50, and voters might be attracted to vote for him as a middle finger to the political establishment.

---

House

A race to the right marks race for Chaffetz's replacement

Mike DeBonis, The Washington Post

A House special election has attracted hundreds of thousands of dollars in spending, a big-name outsider candidate and unusually heated political attacks in a state known for its relatively subdued politics. But as voters in Utah's 3rd Congressional District head to the polls Tuesday to start choosing a successor to retired Republican Jason Chaffetz, the race has garnered only a fraction of the national scrutiny given to other contests this year.

Former Hobbs Mayor runs for Congress

Algernon D'Ammassa, Deming Headlight Reporter

Another Republican is seeking to replace Steve Pearce in New Mexico's second Congressional district. Monty Newman, the former mayor of Hobbs who was elected as Chair of the Republican Party of New Mexico in 2010 with Pearce's endorsement, announced his bid for Congress on Monday through campaign spokeswoman Jessica Perez.

---

States

California files suit over Trump sanctuary city policy

Josh Gerstein, Politico

California has become the first state to sue the Trump administration over its anti-sanctuary cities policy. Speaking at a San Francisco news conference, California Attorney General Xavier Becerra said the state's suit argues that the Justice Department is violating the Constitution by trying to implement a new policy that would deny grants to jurisdictions that fail to give immigration authorities access to local jails or fail to give immigration officials 48 hours' notice on the release of prisoners being sought on immigration charges.

This Illinois Republican faced a choice: Vote for a tax increase or 'let it burn.'

Sandhya Somashekhar, The Washington Post

Reggie Phillips had all the right qualifications to get elected to the state House from this rural community about 200 miles and a world away from Chicago. The silver-haired businessman was successful and self-made, a born-again Christian with a deeply conservative, low-tax message.

La. Politics: Speaker, governor meeting ahead of 'fiscal cliff'

Jeremy Alford, LAPolitics.com

Republican Gov. John Bel Edwards is calling it Louisiana's "fiscal cliff," and it'll be the prime topic of conversations this week when he meets with Republican House Speaker Taylor Barras. The so-called cliff represents a dramatic drop, scheduled for next year, when temporary taxes collide with sluggish tax revenue for an anticipated $1.5 billion shortfall.

Kansas Republicans urge Roberts to back Senate rules change

Roxana Hegeman, The Associated Press

Two fellow Republicans in the Kansas congressional delegation urged a reluctant Sen. Pat Roberts on Monday to support changing the Senate rules to make it easier for the party to push through its legislative priorities. The sometimes testy exchange came at the convention of the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, typically a friendly venue for the state's all-Republican delegation.

A Top Lawyer Asks Supreme Court To Hear A Major Death Penalty Case

Chris Geidner, BuzzFeed News

One of the country's top lawyers is asking the Supreme Court to take up a case that could reshape - or even end - the death penalty in America. The aggressive filing comes as the Supreme Court is already set to hear a high-profile series of cases.

Nevada report shows human impact of Trump's proposed cuts to community development grants

Michelle Rindels, The Nevada Independent

Nevada could lose $20 million a year that's bolstering homeless shelters, rural 911 infrastructure and the Meals on Wheels program if a proposed cut in President Donald Trump's budget becomes reality. A report from Democratic Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto's staff that's scheduled for release on Monday highlights the types of projects backed by the Community Development Block Grant.

---

Advocacy

Tech companies in the crosshairs on white supremacy and free speech

Jim Finkle and Salvador Rodriguez, Reuters

The neo-Nazi website Daily Stormer had its internet domain registration revoked twice in less than 24 hours in the wake of the weekend violence in Charlottesville, Virginia, part of a broad move by the tech industry in recent months to take a stronger hand in policing online hate-speech and incitements to violence. GoDaddy Inc, which manages internet names and registrations, disclosed late on Sunday via Twitter that it had given Daily Stormer 24 hours to move its domain to another provider, saying it had violated GoDaddy's terms of service.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

How Mr. Trump Could Face Up to White Supremacists

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

There's a moral awakening taking place across America, but President Trump is still hiding under his blanket. The racists' march in Charlottesville, Va., on Saturday, a protest against the planned removal of a statue of the Confederate general Robert E. Lee, presented Mr. Trump with the most glaring opportunity yet to separate himself decisively from the white supremacists and neo-Nazis who have cheered him on since he announced his candidacy, and to make clear that America has no room for what they stand for.

A Short-Term ObamaCare Fix

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republicans in Congress haven't repealed or replaced Obama Care, but the Trump Administration still has an obligation to help Americans facing higher premiums and fewer choices. One incremental improvement would be rescinding regulations on temporary health-insurance plans.

The U.S. trade deficit is a good thing. Really

James Lankford, The Washington Post

Last month, the Trump administration issued its objectives for a renegotiation of the North American Free Trade Agreement. There is much about the trade agreement that should be modernized, such as updated rules for e-commerce and stronger intellectual property protections.

President Trump Cannot Redeem Himself

Frank Bruni, The New York Times

We saw Donald Trump's true colors on Saturday, when he was given the chance - a ready-made moment for presidential grace - to denounce the neo-Nazis in Charlottesville, Va., and instead found wrongdoing "on many sides." That was Trump minus the pressure and the planning. That was his initial instinct, his first impulse.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Will Luther Strange Lose Alabama's GOP US Senate Nomination?

Eric Ostermeier, University of Minnesota

With 10 Republican candidates appearing on Tuesday's ballot - including the incumbent, a U.S. Representative, and a very well-known ex-state supreme court justice - a primary runoff for the GOP U.S. Senate special election in Alabama is all but assured with no candidate expected to capture a majority of the vote. Senator Luther Strange is hoping Donald Trump's 11th hour endorsement will ensure he is one of the top two candidates headed to the runoff, besting four-term Congressman Mo Brooks with former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore expected to emerge with a plurality.

Where the robots are

Mark Muro, The Brookings Institution

Where are the robots, exactly? One answer-if you read the steady flow of doomy articles online - is that automation is everywhere, not just all over the media but (you would have to conclude) thoroughly infiltrating the economy. In that sense, the trend seems omnipresent even as it spawns a kind of free-floating dread amongst the chattering class.

Voters Pessimistic on Afghanistan as Trump Weighs Boosting Troops

Jessie Jiang, Morning Consult

Registered voters are feeling less confident about America's prospects in Afghanistan as the war there closes in on 16 years, recent Morning Consult/POLITICO polling shows. Less than a quarter of Americans (23 percent) believe the United States is winning the war there, versus 38 percent who believe it's losing, according to the poll of 1,992 voters.

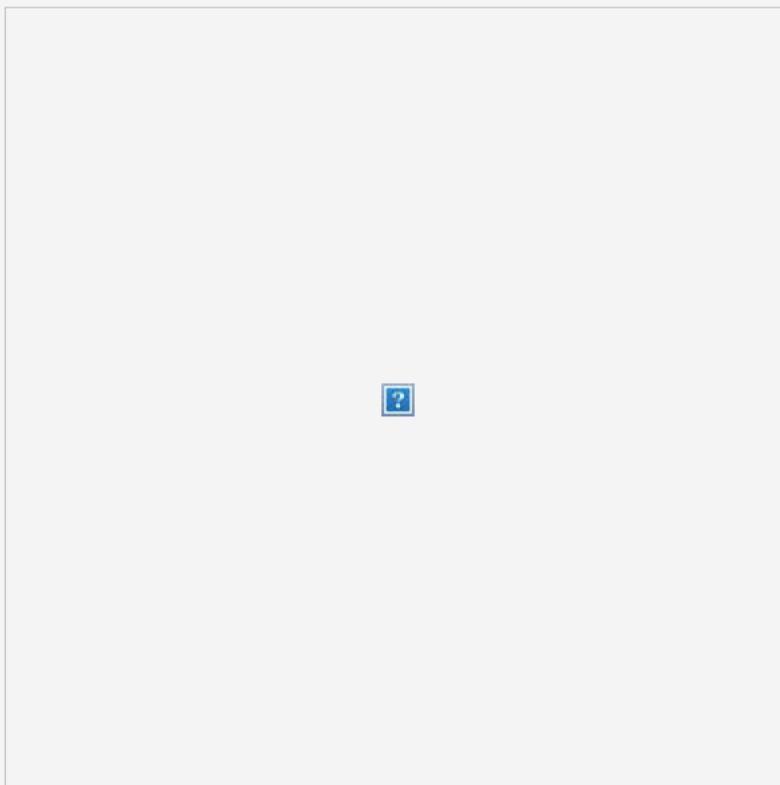

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Alabama Voters Head to Polls Today to Pick New Senator
Date: Tuesday, December 12, 2017 8:39:51 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Alabama voters head to the polls today in a special election to pick a new U.S. senator: Republican Roy Moore or Democrat Doug Jones. The Democratic nominee asked that "decency" prevail amid allegations of sexual misconduct against his rival, while Moore called the accusations "disgusting." (The Associated Press)
- A super PAC supporting Jones was revealed to be a joint project of the Senate Majority PAC and Priorities USA Action, two of the largest Democratic super PACs. The group's funding had remained secret, with Jones trying to distance himself from the national Democratic Party in his campaign against Moore. (Politico)

- Fifty-six female Democratic lawmakers called on the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee to investigate allegations of sexual misconduct against President Donald Trump. (NBC News) Separately, Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) and Sen. Ron Wyden (D-Ore.) said Congress should investigate the allegations if Trump does not resign. ( CNN)

Chart Review

Moore Relied Heavily On Fundraising Outside Alabama During Final Campaign Stretch

Roll Call

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

Rep. Hurd speaks at Wilson Center event on future of NAFTA 8 a.m.

---

American Consumer Institute event on net neutrality 12 p.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on agriculture in NAFTA renegotiations 12 p.m.

---

Agriculture Secretary Perdue speaks at National Press Club 12:30 p.m.

---

House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on future of NAFTA 2 p.m.

---

Sen. Whitehouse speaks at American Constitution Society event about obstruction of justice 3 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

CSIS event on U.S. trade enforcement agenda 8:45 a.m.

---

Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein testifies at House Judiciary Committee hearing 10 a.m.

---

House Ways and Means subcommittee hearing on the taxpayer experience with the IRS 10 a.m.

---

White House Council of Economic Advisers chairman speaks at Hamilton Project event 1:30 p.m.

---

Conference committee meeting on House, Senate tax overhaul bills 2 p.m.

THURSDAY

House Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on Grand Staircase-Escalante bill 9:30 a.m.

---

Stimson Center event on the impact of the first year of Trump's presidency 9:30 a.m.

---

Council on Foreign Relations event on "America's Forgotten Wars" 6:30 p.m.

FRIDAY

Wilson Center event on alternate forms of Brexit and implications for the U.K., EU, U.S. 9 a.m.

Custom Research and Content for Leading Advocacy Organizations

Morning Consult combines interactive content with groundbreaking survey research to take advocacy efforts to the next level. Start your campaign today.

General

Justice Department won't disclose details on Mueller ethics waiver

Josh Gerstein, Politico

The Justice Department is refusing to reveal details of the process that led up to former FBI Director Robert Mueller being granted an ethics waiver to serve as special counsel investigating the Trump campaign's alleged collusion with Russia during the 2016 presidential election. In response to a POLITICO Freedom of Information Act request, the agency released a one-sentence memo Friday confirming that Mueller was granted a conflict-of-interest waiver in order to assume the politically-sensitive post.

'Journalism for rent': Inside the secretive firm behind the Trump dossier

Jack Gillum and Shawn Boburg, The Washington Post

Fusion GPS bills itself as a corporate research firm, but in many ways it operates with the secrecy of a spy agency. No sign marks its headquarters above a coffee shop in Northwest Washington.

---

Presidential

White House calls for immigration reform after NYC terror attack

Jonathan Easley, The Hill

The White House on Monday called on Congress to overhaul the immigration system, saying an attack in New York City is evidence the U.S. needs to strengthen border security. "This attack underscores the need for Congress to work with the president on immigration reforms that enhance the national security and public safety," White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters.

Trump to Open the Door for Oil Drilling Off U.S.'s East Coast

Jennifer A Dlouhy, Bloomberg

The Trump administration is preparing to unveil as soon as this week an expansive offshore oil plan that would open the door to selling new drilling rights in Atlantic waters, according to people familiar with the plan. President Donald Trump ordered his Interior Department to write the new blueprint with the aim of auctioning oil and gas drilling rights off the U.S. East Coast - territory that his predecessor, former President Barack Obama, had ruled out.

World leaders gather at climate summit - without Trump

The Associated Press

More than 50 world leaders are gathering in Paris for a summit that President Emmanuel Macron hopes will give new momentum to the fight against global warming, despite U.S. President Donald Trump's rejection of the Paris climate accord. Some 3,100 security personnel are fanned out around Paris for Tuesday's event, including extra patrol boats along the Seine River. Macron will accompany the visiting leaders to the summit site on a river island by boat.

Trump wants to send U.S. astronauts back to moon, someday Mars

Steve Holland, Reuters

At a time when China is working on an ambitious lunar program, President Donald Trump vowed on Monday that the United States will remain the leader in space exploration as he began a process to return Americans to the moon. "We are the leader and we're going to stay the leader, and we're going to increase it many fold," Trump said in signing "Space Policy Directive 1" that establishes a foundation for a mission to the moon with an eye on going to Mars.

Spicer writing book about White House tenure

Brent D. Griffiths, Politico

Former White House press secretary Sean Spicer announced Monday night that he is writing a book about his brief run behind the podium, taking readers "behind the scenes of his turbulent tenure." "I've decided that it is incumbent on me to set the record straight," Spicer told Fox News' Sean Hannity on Monday night.

---

Senate

Turbulent Senate race now in hands of Alabama voters

Bill Barrow and Kim Chandler, The Associated Press

Depending on who is making the case, Alabama's special Senate election Tuesday is about either continuing the "Trump miracle" in Washington or allowing "decency" to prevail back home. At the center is Roy Moore - "Judge Moore," to his supporters.

Secret super PAC backing Jones in Alabama exposed

Gabriel Debenedetti, Politico

A mystery super PAC backing Democrat Doug Jones in Alabama is controlled by a pair of groups closely aligned with the national Democratic Party, even as the candidate strives to dissociate himself from Washington interests. Highway 31, which has dropped more than $4.1 million in support of Jones and against Roy Moore ahead of Tuesday's Senate special election, is a joint project of two of the largest national Democratic super PACs - Senate Majority PAC and Priorities USA Action - along with a group of Alabama Democrats, multiple senior officials familiar with the arrangement told POLITICO.

Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand calls on Trump to resign

Mick Krever and Sophie Tatum, CNN

Democratic Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand of New York told CNN on Monday that President Donald Trump should resign over allegations of sexual assault. "President Trump has committed assault, according to these women, and those are very credible allegations of misconduct and criminal activity, and he should be fully investigated and he should resign," Gillibrand told CNN's Christiane Amanpour in an exclusive interview.

Analysis: McConnell Enters Year-End Sprint With Options Limited

Joe Williams, Roll Call

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell is hoping to close out 2018 with a bang and silence the skeptics who just a few short months ago were ramping up calls for his ouster following a brutal defeat on the Republican effort to overturn the 2010 health care law. But after creating an intricate web of promises to get the GOP tax legislation past the Senate, the Kentucky Republican must now juggle the difficult task of keeping those commitments.

---

House

Fifty-six female Democratic lawmakers ask House to investigate Trump sexual misconduct claims

Tim Stelloh, NBC News

More than 50 female Democratic lawmakers on Monday asked the House oversight committee to investigate allegations of sexual misconduct against President Donald Trump. In a letter to committee chairman Rep. Trey Gowdy,

R-S.C., and ranking member Rep. Elijah Cummings, D-Md., the Democratic Women's Working Group wrote that the country deserves "a full inquiry into the truth of these allegations."

Dem lawmaker calls for extra protections to 'safeguard' Senate pages if Moore is elected

Avery Anapol, The Hill

Rep. Gwen Moore (D-Wis.) is calling for extra protections for Senate pages to prepare for the possible election of Alabama GOP Senate candidate Roy Moore. In a Dec. 8 letter to the Senate Sergeant at Arms, the congresswoman writes of her "urgent concern" for the safety of Senate pages if Moore is elected.

Tawdry Tales Depict a Texas Congressman's Frat House on the Hill

Sheryl Gay Stolberg, The New York Times

When Lauren Greene, a former communications director for Representative Blake Farenthold, sued him claiming sexual harassment, among her complaints was that he "disclosed that a female lobbyist had propositioned him for 'a threesome.'" Mr. Farenthold, in legal documents, said that Ms. Greene had it wrong. The woman wasn't a lobbyist, he said.

Congress Looks to Overhaul Sexual-Harassment Rules

Natalie Andrews, The Wall Street Journal

Lawmakers are moving to change procedures for reporting sexual harassment on Capitol Hill and how settlements are funded, after Congress was shaken last week by more allegations of improper behavior and three resignations. Lawmakers are looking inward at their own policies in the wake of the "Me Too" movement, which has created a national outpouring of personal stories involving sexual harassment and assault in the workplace.

Congressional scorekeeper: House-passed tax bill wouldn't pay for itself

Naomi Jagoda, The Hill

The tax bill House Republicans passed last month wouldn't produce enough revenue from economic growth to pay for itself, Congress's tax scorekeeper said in a 12-page report released Monday. The economic growth resulting from the bill would lower the measure's revenue loss by more than $400 billion over 10 years.

House passes Homeland Security cyber overhaul bill

Morgan Chalfant, The Hill

House lawmakers have passed legislation that would reorganize the Department of Homeland Security's cybersecurity mission. The House passed the legislation, which is spearheaded by Homeland Security Committee Chairman Michael McCaul (R-Texas), by a voice vote Monday evening.

Dates set for special election to replace Rep. Trent Franks

Ronald J. Hansen, The Arizona Republic

Gov. Doug Ducey announced dates for the special election to replace Rep. Trent Franks, who resigned abruptly on Friday amid allegations he sexually harassed two of his female employees. The governor's proclamation said: The primary election will be held on Feb. 27.

---

States

Kentucky Republicans call for resignation of GOP lawmaker accused of molesting girl

Daniel Desrochers, Lexington Herald Leader

The Republican Party of Kentucky called on a GOP member of the Kentucky House of Representatives to resign from office following a news report Monday that revealed he was accused of molesting a 17-year-old girl in 2012. "Last October, after local media reports about reprehensible and racist posts on his Facebook page, we asked then-candidate Dan Johnson to drop out of the race for State Representative," said Mac Brown, the chairman of the Republican Party of Kentucky.

Nebraska RNC official resigns to protest support of Moore

Alex Isenstadt, Politico

Nebraska Republican National Committeewoman Joyce Simmons resigned Monday in protest of the committee's financial support for Roy Moore. "I strongly disagree with the recent RNC financial support directed to the Alabama Republican Party for use in the Roy Moore race. There is much I could say about this situation, but I will defer to this weekend's comments by Senator Shelby," she wrote in an email to fellow party officials.

Maryland lawmakers to update sex harassment policy

Brian Witte, The Associated Press

Maryland lawmakers will take up a proposal to update the Legislature's sexual harassment policy by creating a central repository to keep track of complaints against legislators each year, an official to House Speaker Michael Busch said Monday. The proposal is scheduled for a vote Tuesday before the Legislative Policy Committee, a panel of state lawmakers that decides on rules for the Maryland General Assembly.

NC Democrats announce new candidates, and they're almost all women

Will Doran, The News & Observer

The wave of women signing up to run for political office has hit North Carolina. The state Democratic Party is spending Monday announcing nine new candidates for the state legislature Monday, including six women, according to party leaders.

---

Advocacy

Schumer, Cornyn alums launch lobbying firm

Alexi McCammond, Axios

A former top aide to Sen. Chuck Schumer (D-NY) and former chief counsel for Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX) are launching a lobbying firm and their first big task is taking on the "backpage" anti-sex trafficking bill. Izzy Klein, a top communications aide for Schumer, and Matt Johnson, Cornyn's former chief counsel, have worked on both sides of Capitol Hill across 12 committees and the Senate and House Leadership.

PhRMA sues to block Calif. drug transparency law

Nathaniel Weixel, The Hill

Drug companies are suing the state of California over a recently enacted law that would require manufacturers to give advance notice before significantly raising prices. The Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America (PhRMA), the industry's leading lobby group, filed a complaint late Friday seeking to block the law, which supporters say is one of the most comprehensive drug transparency measures in the country.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

The Comprehensive Case against Roy Moore

David French, National Review

Partisan politics does strange things to human minds. I continue to see Twitter, Facebook, and my email inbox light up with the most bizarre comparisons. Roy Moore is like Martin Luther King Jr. Moore is like General George S. Patton.

I'm Not Convinced Franken Should Quit

Zephyr Teachout, The New York Times

I care passionately about #MeToo. Women are routinely demeaned, dismissed, discouraged and assaulted. Too many women's careers are stymied or ended because of harassment and abuse.

The Trump administration's tax 'report' reads like fan fiction

Catherine Rampell, The Washington Post

Unable to produce an actual analysis of its tax plan, the Trump administration has resorted to cooking the books. Again.

The GOP's Capital-Gains Tax Hike

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republicans are on final approach to land their tax bill out of House-Senate conference, and for the most part the winds look favorable. Yet one surprising provision in the Senate bill would gratuitously harm individual investors, and the GOP ought to eliminate this de facto increase on capital-gains taxes.

Why Team Trump Needs to Lay Off the Mueller Probe

Bob Bauer, The New York Times

While President Trump's allies have unleashed a political assault on the investigation led by the special counsel, Robert Mueller, his lawyers are arguing that Mr. Mueller lacks even the legal authority to investigate the president for obstruction of justice. The president, they maintain, fully controls the executive branch and possesses the constitutional power to dismiss a subordinate like James Comey, the former F.B.I. director, for any reason.

---

Research Reports and Polling

For the first time, more Americans say 2010 health care law has had a positive than negative impact on U.S.

Hannah Fingerhut, Pew Research Center

While the future of the Affordable Care Act is in question, the public increasingly thinks the law has had a positive impact on the country. Today, more Americans say the 2010 health care overhaul has had a mostly positive than mostly negative effect on the country (44% versus 35%), while 14% say it has not had much effect.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: At Least 6 Trump Advisers Used Private Email Accounts to Discuss White House Matters
Date: Tuesday, September 26, 2017 9:05:58 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- At least six of President Donald Trump's top advisers, including former chief strategist Steve Bannon and former chief of staff Reince Priebus, used private email addresses on occasion to conduct official business. Trump's 2016 campaign repeatedly criticized Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton's use of a personal email address from when she was secretary of state. (The New York Times)
- Voters in Alabama head to the polls today for a special election primary runoff between Sen. Luther Strange (R) and former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore (R). On Monday, Bannon campaigned on behalf of

Moore, who leads in the polls, while Vice President Mike Pence rallied support for Strange. (AL.com)

- Roger Stone, a longtime Republican political operative and confidant of Trump, is set to testify privately before the House Intelligence Committee today. The panel is investigating Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and possible Kremlin ties to the Trump campaign. (Politico)
- House Democratic leaders said they oppose GOP efforts to expedite consideration of legislation that would fund the Federal Aviation Administration for six months, with a Sept. 30 deadline looming for FAA reauthorization. The measure currently includes a provision that would expand access to the flood insurance market for private insurers, but the bill does not extend the Children's Health Insurance Program or the DREAM Act. (Roll Call)
- Sam Fox, former U.S. ambassador to Belgium and a prominent Republican campaign donor, penned a fundraising appeal letter in which he told potential donors that Missouri Attorney General Josh Hawley (R) "is going to run" against Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill (D-Mo.) in 2018. Hawley is currently exploring a campaign but has not said publicly whether he is going to run. (Morning Consult)

Chart Review

Democrats Regain Edge in Party Favorable Ratings
Gallup

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

Sens. Johnson, Whitehouse speak at Atlantic Council event on strategic communications 8 a.m.

---

SEC's Clayton testifies before Senate Banking Committee 10 a.m.

---

Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on special counsels, separation of powers 10 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce Committee hearing on technology's role for consumers 10 a.m.

---

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 10 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 7:30 a.m.

---

House Homeland Security Committee hearing on threats to the United States 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Bennet speaks at Center for American Progress event on congressional priorities 1 p.m.

THURSDAY

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 7:30 a.m.

---

Reps. Dent, Jordan, Walker speak at Ripon Society event 7:45 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on constitutionality of Trump's travel ban 12 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

U.S. Sees 'Four or Five' Ways to Resolve North Korean Crisis

Margaret Talev et al., Bloomberg

The U.S. has gamed out four or five different scenarios for how the crisis with North Korea will be resolved, and "some are uglier than others," National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster said as tensions remain high between the two countries. While McMaster said the threat from Pyongyang is "much further advanced" than anticipated and the Pentagon said the president has a "deep arsenal" to draw upon if needed, U.S. officials dismissed North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho's comment that President Donald Trump's warnings to Pyongyang at the United Nations amounted to a declaration of war.

Anthony Weiner must report to prison by Nov. 6

The Associated Press

Anthony Weiner must report to prison by Nov. 6 to begin serving his 21-month sentence for sexting with a 15-year-old girl. As his sentence was announced Monday, the former Democratic congressman from New York dropped his head into his hand and wept, then stared straight ahead.

Russian operatives used Facebook ads to exploit America's racial and religious divisions

Adam Entous et al., The Washington Post

The batch of more than 3,000 Russian-bought ads that Facebook is preparing to turn over to Congress shows a deep understanding of social divides in American society, with some ads promoting African American rights groups, including Black Lives Matter, and others suggesting that these same groups pose a rising political threat, say people familiar with the covert influence campaign. The Russian campaign - taking advantage of Facebook's ability to send contrary messages to different groups of users based on their political and demographic characteristics - also sought to sow discord among religious groups.

Reines leaves consulting firm to protest Trump full time

Annie Karni, Politico

Hillary Clinton's longtime gatekeeper Philippe Reines is no longer just a freelancing critic of the Trump administration: he has quit his day job to devote himself full-time to excoriating the president and his top aides. Reines left the consulting firm he co-founded four years ago, Beacon Global Strategies, on Sept. 5 - one week before the release of Clinton's campaign memoir, "What Happened" - to turn full-time "resistance," a word he says he hates.

---

Presidential

At Least 6 White House Advisers Used Private Email Accounts

Matt Apuzzo and Maggie Haberman, The New York Times

At least six of President Trump's closest advisers occasionally used private email addresses to discuss White House matters, current and former officials said on Monday. The disclosures came a day after news surfaced that Jared Kushner, the president's son-in-law and adviser, used a private email account to send or receive about 100 work-related emails during the administration's first seven months.

Trump: 'Great anger' at Dallas Cowboys for taking a knee last night

Louis Nelson, Politico

President Donald Trump said online Tuesday morning that the booing prompted by the Dallas Cowboys' decision to kneel Monday night before the national anthem was the "loudest I have ever heard," blaming the protesting trend for declining NFL ratings. "Ratings for NFL football are way down except before game starts, when people tune in to see whether or not our country will be disrespected!" the president wrote on Twitter.

Trump says Puerto Rico in trouble after hurricane, debt 'must be dealt with'

Eric Beech, Reuters

U.S. President Donald Trump said on Monday Puerto Rico is in "deep trouble" after being hit by Hurricane Maria and that its billions of dollars of debt to the Wall Street and banks "must be dealt with." "Puerto Rico, which was already suffering from broken infrastructure & massive debt, is in deep trouble," Trump wrote in a series of posts on Twitter.

U.S. appeals court to consider rights of gay workers

Daniel Wiessner, Reuters

The Trump administration on Tuesday will urge a U.S. appeals court in Manhattan to rule that federal law does not ban discrimination against gay employees. The U.S. Department of Justice is supporting a New York skydiving company, Altitude Express Inc, in a lawsuit brought by former instructor

Donald Zarda, who accused the company of firing him after he told a customer he was gay and she complained.

Trump has been great for the economy. The anti-Trump economy, that is.

Ben Terris, The Washington Post

Noah Bookbinder may not be the first guy you'd draft to help unseat a president. For months, panicky liberals have gazed hopefully at special counsel Robert Mueller, the square-jawed former FBI director whose legal dream team has been kicking down doors and questioning countless Donald Trump associates over allegations that sound like something out of a spy novel.

---

Senate

Stephen Bannon sets sights on 2018 midterms, praises Trump in Fairhope speech

John Sharp, AL.com

President Donald Trump's former strategist said Monday he wasn't sure why the president was supporting Senator Luther Strange in Tuesday's Alabama Senate runoff election, noting that "it takes a moment of reflection." But Stephen Bannon, the chief executive at Breitbart News, never once criticized Trump or his decision to endorse Strange.

Missouri GOP Fundraiser Says Hawley Will Run for U.S. Senate

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

Missouri Attorney General Josh Hawley has largely avoided electoral politics since he launched his committee to explore a campaign for the Republican nomination to challenge Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill next year. But despite his public posture, at least one major donor says the young lawyer is all in for a Senate run.

Republicans vow to 'press on' with health care bill in CNN debate

Stephen Collinson, CNN

Two Republican senators leading the reeling, last ditch bid to replace Obamacare vowed to fight on Monday, even after another GOP defection dealt the potential killer blow to their bill. "We are going to press on. It's OK to vote.

It's OK to fall short, if you do, for an idea that you believe in," South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham told CNN's Jake Tapper and Dana Bash at town hall debate in Washington.

NJ voters overwhelmingly want Sen. Bob Menendez to resign if he is convicted of bribery

Herb Jackson, USA Today

New Jersey voters overwhelmingly want Sen. Bob Menendez to resign if he is convicted of bribery charges, and those with an unfavorable opinion of the Paramus Democrat outnumber those with a favorable view by more than 2-to-1, a Suffolk University poll conducted for the USA TODAY Network in New Jersey found. Menendez, 63, went on trial Sept. 6 in U.S. District Court in Newark for allegedly taking bribes over a period of years to use his office to benefit the business and personal interests of his longtime friend and codefendant, Dr. Salomon Melgen, also 63, of North Palm Beach, Fla.

---

House

Congress braces for Roger Stone show

Kyle Cheney, Politico

After months of taunting congressional Russia investigators from afar, Roger Stone, a longtime confidant of President Donald Trump, will meet them face-to-face on Capitol Hill Tuesday in what he promises will be "epic" testimony debunking charges of collusion between the Kremlin and Trump associates. The Republican operative will testify behind closed doors as part of the House Intelligence Committee's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 election.

Democrats May Sink FAA Extension, Hurricane Tax Relief Package

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Legislation that would reauthorize the Federal Aviation Administration for six months and provide tax relief to victims of recent hurricanes could fail on the House floor Monday evening amid Democratic opposition. The minority party's support is needed to pass the measure under a fast-track procedure known as suspension of the rules.

Full GOP Tax Proposal Will Wait Until Later

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

If the tax overhaul framework congressional leaders and White House officials are releasing Wednesday fails to appease rank-and-file member calls for more details, House Republican leaders may find themselves still short of the votes needed to pass a budget. That's especially problematic given that tax writers are not planning to unveil a full tax plan until after the House and Senate pass a reconciled budget.

Black lawmaker kneels on House floor in solidarity with athletes

Cristina Marcos, The Hill

Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (D-Texas) kneeled on the House floor Monday night to show solidarity with NFL players defying President Trump to protest police brutality. Jackson Lee, a member of the Congressional Black Caucus, blasted Trump for attacking NFL players who kneel during the national anthem at games to draw attention to the treatment of African Americans by law enforcement.

Fla. lawmaker warned officials before retirement home tragedy

Scott Wong, The Hill

A day before eight residents from the same Florida nursing home died, Rep. Frederica Wilson joined other state and federal officials on a Hurricane Irma recovery conference call and warned the situation could quickly turn deadly if power is not restored to local senior facilities. The Florida Democrat's phone had been ringing nonstop since Hurricane Irma knocked out power to much of South Florida on Sept. 10.

New NRCC adviser expected to lead outside-spending unit

Elena Schneider, Politico

The National Republican Congressional Committee is naming Joe King, an Ohio-based strategist with close ties to NRCC Chairman Steve Stivers, as a senior adviser to the committee - with the expectation that King will later lead the committee's independent expenditure unit in the 2018 election, according to a source close to the committee. King will advise the committee on races by "surveying the battlefield, determining what's important to us" and developing a "winning strategy," he said in an interview.

---

States

In Battered Puerto Rico, Governor Warns of a Humanitarian Crisis

Frances Robles et al., The New York Times

Gov. Ricardo A. Rosselló of Puerto Rico said on Monday that the island was on the brink of a "humanitarian crisis" nearly a week after Hurricane Maria knocked out its power and most of its water, and left residents waiting in excruciating lines for fuel. He called on Congress to prevent a deepening disaster.

Florida Governor Rick Scott May Have Broken the Law by Deleting Pleas for Help From Nursing Home Where 11 Died

Christal Hayes, Newsweek

Florida's governor may have broken the state's famously liberal public records laws by deleting several pleas for help from a nursing home where 11 died due to a power outage after Hurricane Irma. Gov. Rick Scott had given out his personal cellphone number to emergency responders and officials at the Hollywood Hills facility before the massive storm hit.

Poll shows 'Trump Effect' on race for Virginia governor

Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

President Trump looms large over the race for Virginia governor, according to a new survey that finds the president is a factor for a sizeable slice of the electorate. For nearly 40 percent of voters, Trump plays into the choice between Democrat Ralph Northam and Republican Ed Gillespie, according to a poll released Tuesday by the Wason Center for Public Policy at Christopher Newport University.

Hogan joins Virginia governor, D.C. mayor in trade mission to Canada

Erin Cox, The Baltimore Sun

Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan is leaving the country Tuesday to join Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe and Washington D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser on a trade mission to Canada. The trio will be in Toronto to pitch the capital region tourism to Ontario, and they will meet with the province's leader, Premier Kathleen Wynne.

---

Advocacy

Putting GOP women in Congress

Megan R. Wilson, The Hill

Jenn Higgins only intended to spend a brief time in Washington. But roughly 16 years later, she has found her place in D.C. When she's not lobbying on health care and tax policy, she's working to increase the number of women - particularly Republican women - in Congress.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Disrespecting the flag is a disgraceful way to protest Trump

Marc A. Thiessen, The Washington Post

This weekend, the more than 100 NFL players who refused to stand during the national anthem were met with boos from crowds in stadiums across America - and deservedly so. Playing in London, Baltimore Ravens and Jacksonville Jaguars players wouldn't stand for the U.S. national anthem but did for "God Save the Queen" in the very country we fought to win our independence.

I Understand Why They Knelt

David French, National Review

Americans do not and should not worship idols. We do not and should not worship the flag.

Trump's new travel ban still has no justification

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Four hours before President Trump's ban on travel from six majority-Muslim countries expired on Sunday, the White House issued a new proclamation - this time also barring entry into the United States by certain citizens of North Korea, Venezuela and Chad. Now in its third iteration, the travel ban has been steadily watered down from Mr. Trump's promised "Muslim ban."

Do Republicans Really Care About the Deficit?

Jared Bernstein, The New York Times

Though America really doesn't need a tax cut - demographic pressures alone suggest the need for more, not less, future revenues - President Trump and the Republican majority want one. But they don't want to pay for it, which means the budget deficit is going to rise.

---

Research Reports and Polling

History Gives Luther Strange Long Odds in US Senate Primary Runoff

Eric Ostermeier, University of Minnesota

As Luther Strange and Roy Moore suit up for Election Day in Alabama on Tuesday, political observers watch with great anticipation to see if (quasi-) establishment forces can tip the scales and bring an unexpected come-from-behind victory to the appointed senator. Moore brought home a plurality of 38.9 percent of the vote in last month's GOP primary - with Strange 6.1 points back in a 10-candidate field.

Key facts about unauthorized immigrants enrolled in DACA

Gustavo López and Jens Manuel Krogstad, Pew Research Center

Approximately 800,000 young unauthorized immigrants have received work permits and protection from deportation through the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, or DACA, since its creation five years ago. And nearly 690,000 of these immigrants are currently enrolled in the program, according to new data from U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Blowback From Trump's Remarks on Charlottesville Threaten GOP Agenda
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:56:59 AM

---

By Cameron Easley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump's relationships with members the business community, the armed services and his own party are fraying in the wake of his comments defending white nationalists. GOP leaders in Congress have distanced themselves from the remarks but have not mentioned Trump by name in their public comments. (The New York Times)
- The Trump administration confirmed it will make its cost-sharing reduction payments to insurers for the month of August. The president has repeatedly threatened to end the payments in hopes of pressuring congressional Democrats to the negotiating table on health care legislation. (Business)

Insider)

- In a wide-ranging interview, White House adviser Steve Bannon undercut the president's stance on North Korea and spoke frankly about his clashes with the administration's national security and trade officials as he pushes Trump to take on China. He later said he did not realize he was speaking on the record, according to a source close to the former Breitbart chairman.

(CNN)

Chart Review

There Are Still More Than 700 Confederate Monuments In The U.S.
FiveThirtyEight

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

China's Crackdown on North Korea Over U.N. Sanctions Starts to Pinch

Jane Perlez, The New York Times

Trucks packed with seafood were backed up, bumper to bumper, at the Chinese border with North Korea. Protesters carried red banners demanding compensation. And Chinese businessmen who have been making big money from North Korean crabs, shrimp and squid were furious.

Fed minutes: Central bank split over path of rate hikes

Jeff Cox, CNBC

A fissure appears to be developing at the Federal Reserve over when to raise interest rates: One side is preaching caution in a low-inflation environment while another worries over the price of delaying. The divide appeared in minutes released from the Federal Open Market Committee's July meeting, when central bank policymakers voted to hold the target rate to a range of 1 percent to 1.25 percent.

'Nazis must be confronted': World leaders accuse Trump of 'glossing over' racist violence

Amy B. Wang, The Washington Post

President Trump's off-the-rails Tuesday news conference - in which he once again blamed "both sides" in Charlottesville, effectively undoing his earlier conciliatory remarks - earned him another wave of backlash from world leaders Wednesday. British Prime Minister Theresa May didn't call Trump out by name but said in a statement Wednesday there was "no equivalence" between the two sides.

---

Presidential

Trump Comments on Race Open Breach With C.E.O.s, Military and G.O.P.

Michael D. Shear et al., The New York Times

President Trump found himself increasingly isolated in a racial crisis of his own making on Wednesday, abandoned by the nation's top business executives, contradicted by military leaders and shunned by Republicans outraged by his defense of white nationalist protesters in Charlottesville, Va. The breach with the business community was the most striking.

The Trump administration won't deal a blow to Obamacare - for now

Bob Bryan, Business Insider

The Trump administration will continue to fund critical Obamacare payments for the month of August despite the president's repeated threat to yank them. The White House confirmed on Wednesday that the cost sharing reduction (CSR) payments would continue to go to insurers to help offset the cost of providing poorer Americans with lower out-of-pocket costs.

Bannon says US locked in 'economic war' with China, slams White House colleagues

Jeremy Diamond, CNN

Embattled White House chief strategist Steve Bannon declared in an interview published Wednesday that the US is at "economic war with China," promised aggressive trade actions against Beijing and said he is "fighting" other top White House aides "every day." Bannon also dismisses the ratcheting up of tensions stemming from North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missile activity as "just a sideshow" and argues there is "no military solution" to the growing crisis, despite President Donald Trump's promises of "fire and fury" if North Korea continues to threaten or tries to target the US and its allies.

'He is stubborn and doesn't realize how bad this is getting'

Nancy Cook and Josh Dawsey, Politico

President Donald Trump's decision to double down on his argument that "both sides" were to blame for the violent clashes at a white supremacist rally in Charlottesville, Va., was driven in part by his own anger - and his disdain for being told what to do. Trump's temper has been a constant force in this 8-month-old White House.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions finds ally in Miami in fight against sanctuary cities

Alan Gomez, USA Today

Attorney General Jeff Sessions used a trip to this southern city on Wednesday to thank local officials for becoming the first in the nation to fully comply with President Trump's demands to help with immigration enforcement. Trump and Sessions have tried to get cities and counties to abandon so-called "sanctuary city" policies that limit their cooperation with federal immigration authorities by threatening to withhold federal grants.

Trump Lawyer Forwards Email Echoing Secessionist Rhetoric

Michael S. Schmidt and Matt Apuzzo, The New York Times

President Trump's personal lawyer on Wednesday forwarded an email to conservative journalists, government officials and friends that echoed secessionist Civil War propaganda and declared that the group Black Lives Matter "has been totally infiltrated by terrorist groups." The email forwarded by John Dowd, who is leading the president's legal team, painted the Confederate general Robert E. Lee in glowing terms and equated the South's rebellion to that of the American Revolution against England.

Virtual Unknown Hope Hicks to Lead White House

Communications for Now

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

Hope Hicks, a longtime aide to President Donald Trump, has been named the White House's interim communications director - a move that could raise her profile. According to a new Morning Consult/POLITICO survey, Hicks is the most unknown high-level staffer working at the White House.

---

Senate

GOP State Senator to Challenge Heitkamp

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

North Dakota state Sen. Tom Campbell has decided to challenge Democratic Sen. Heidi Heitkamp for her Senate seat, the state lawmaker confirmed Wednesday. Campbell said he made his decision after months of consideration and traveling the state.

Fusion GPS co-founder to be interviewed by Senate panel

Austin Wright, Politico

The co-founder of the firm that commissioned a dossier of salacious allegations against President Donald Trump will be interviewed later this month by the Senate Judiciary Committee, according to a source familiar with the issue. Glenn Simpson, head of the private investigation firm Fusion GPS, agreed to a voluntary, closed-door interview after Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) issued and then withdrew a subpoena for Simpson to appear at a public hearing last month.

Trump Re-Ups Support for Strange Ahead of Alabama Senate Runoff

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

President Donald Trump re-upped his support for Sen. Luther Strange (R) on Wednesday after he failed to avoid a runoff for the party's nomination in a special election for Attorney General Jeff Sessions' old seat in the Senate. Trump, whose late endorsement of Strange was featured prominently in his closing messages to voters, congratulated him and former state Supreme Court Judge Roy Moore, who led the contest.

---

House

Ryan Touts Permanent Tax Cuts Amid Talk of a Scaled Back Plan

Anna Edgerton, Bloomberg News

House Speaker Paul Ryan is sticking to the principle of making any tax cuts permanent - this time in a blog post Wednesday - even as others in his party have been discussing some temporary alternatives. Ryan's post notes that working families need the certainty of permanent tax-rate cuts to spend wisely and save for the future.

Democrats Will Introduce A Bill To Censure Trump Over His Response To Charlottesville

Emma Loop, BuzzFeed News

Three Democratic members of Congress are introducing a resolution to censure President Donald Trump over his "inadequate response" to the deadly white supremacist rally in Charlottesville this past weekend. While a vote to censure the president has no legal ramifications, it is a significant and rare symbolic vote of disapproval.

Rep. Dana Rohrabacher meets with WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange, plans to tell Trump what he heard

Christine Mai-Duc, The Los Angeles Times

Orange County GOP Rep. Dana Rohrabacher confirmed that he met Wednesday with WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange, who is still living in asylum at the Ecuadorean Embassy in London. In a statement, Rohrabacher's office said the Australian fugitive "emphatically stated that the Russians were not involved" in the theft of Democratic National Committee emails during the 2016 presidential campaign.

Lawmakers raise cash off Trump-Russia probe

Austin Wright and Darren Samuelsohn, Politico

Rep. Eric Swalwell's campaign website features ominous photos of President Donald Trump, Donald Trump Jr. and Jared Kushner. It warns about Russia's attacks on last year's presidential election and asks visitors to sign a petition demanding that a bipartisan commission investigate.

Farenthold to Run for Re-Election Despite Redistricting Issues

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

GOP Rep. Blake Farenthold said Wednesday that he would run for re-election in 2018, even though his southern Texas district might need to be redrawn. A federal panel ruled Tuesday that the boundaries for Farenthold's 27th District and the 35th District, represented by Democrat Lloyd Doggett, violated the Constitution and the Voting Rights Act.

Trump's Charlottesville Uproar Overshadows GOP Tax Plan

Roadshow

Sahil Kapur, Bloomberg News

Top Republican tax writers went to a national shrine for tax cutters - former President Ronald Reagan's California ranch - hoping to make a sales pitch for a historic overhaul of the U.S. tax code. But their efforts were overshadowed by the party's incumbent leader.

---

States

Federal court: Arkansas can block Planned Parenthood money

Andrew DeMillo, The Associated Press

A federal appeals court panel ruled Wednesday that Arkansas can block Medicaid funding to Planned Parenthood, two years after the state ended its contract with the group over videos secretly recorded by an anti-abortion group. In a 2-1 ruling, an 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel vacated preliminary injunctions a federal judge issued preventing the state from suspending any Medicaid payments for services rendered to patients from Planned Parenthood.

Mayor wants Trump to delay Phoenix rally

John Bowden, The Hill

The mayor of Phoenix, Arizona, issued a statement Wednesday night urging President Trump to delay his campaign rally in the city while "our nation is still healing" from the violence that took place in Charlottesville, Va. "It is my hope that more sound judgement prevails and that he delays his visit," Mayor Greg Stanton (D) said in a statement, also saying he is "disappointed" with the president.

Madigan: Attempt to override Rauner's education veto set for next week

Monique Garcia, The Chicago Tribune

Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan said Wednesday that he's "not walking away from" his party's bill to change the state's school funding system and planned votes next week to either override Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner's changes or eventually send him identical legislation again. Madigan's comments came after the state House overwhelmingly rejected a bill designed to reflect Rauner's amendatory veto of legislation to overhaul the way Illinois divvies up money for school districts.

---

Advocacy

Pot industry massively increases its Washington lobbying

Tony Mecia, Washington Examiner

As states increasingly legalize marijuana use, the pot industry has started plowing more money into shaping federal policies. In the first six months of 2017, the marijuana industry spent $450,000 on lobbyists, double the amount it did in the same period a year earlier, according to a recent report from the Center for Responsive Politics, which tracks lobbying expenditures.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

The U.S. cannot abandon Afghanistan now

The Editorial Board, The Washington Post

President Trump's evident frustration with the U.S. mission in Afghanistan is entirely understandable. After nearly 16 years of war, the country is torn by violence and the government of President Ashraf Ghani remains weak.

Blame-Sharing on Obamacare

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The oracles at the Congressional Budget Office this week descended from Delphi to predict 20% premium increases if the Trump Administration ends illegal Obama Care subsidies for insurers, and Democrats are happy to agree. Yet a careful reading of the report reveals some surprising results that are far less ominous and for consumers mostly benign.

Why I Quit Trump's Business Council

Richard Trumka, The New York Times

On Tuesday, President Trump stood in the lobby of his tower on Fifth Avenue in Manhattan and again made excuses for bigotry and terrorism, effectively repudiating the remarks his staff wrote a day earlier in response to the white supremacist violence in Charlottesville, Va. I stood in that same lobby in January, fresh off a meeting with the new president-elect.

The Breitbart Presidency

Rich Lowry, Politico

If Van Jones was right, that a moving tribute to the widow of a fallen Navy SEAL in a speech to Congress earlier this year was the moment Donald Trump became president, Trump's news conference on Tuesday was the moment he became a Breitbart contributing editor. Charlottesville has been a diminishing event for President Trump.

---

Research Reports and Polling

FBI Agents Gave Comey High Marks in His Final Months on the Job

Tom Winter, NBC News

Former FBI Director James Comey was widely admired by agents who worked for him, winning high scores in anonymous surveys for his values and trustworthiness, even as he became embroiled in controversies over investigations related to the 2016 election. Comey was fired in May by President Donald Trump, who called him a "showboat" and a "grandstander," suggested he was incompetent and described the FBI as "in turmoil" under his leadership.

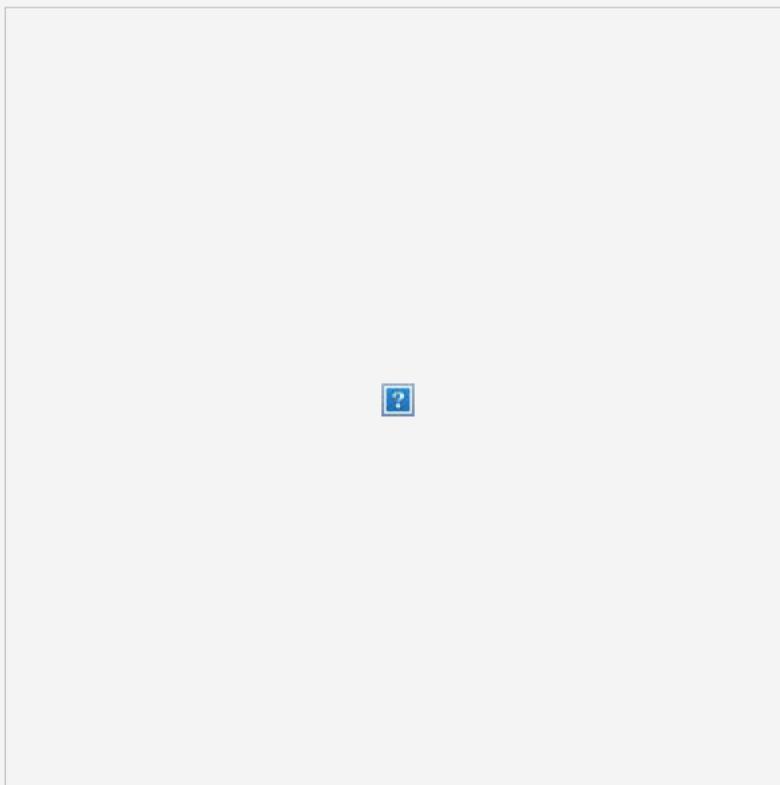

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Collins Says She Won't Run for Governor of Maine Next Year
Date: Friday, October 13, 2017 9:14:04 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Sen. Susan Collins (R) said she will not run for governor of Maine next year. Gov. Paul LePage (R) is prohibited from running again due to term limits, and Collins is next up for Senate re-election in 2020. (Politico)
- President Donald Trump today is slated to lay out his Iran strategy and announce that he will not re-certify Iran's compliance with the 2015 nuclear agreement ahead of an Oct. 15 deadline. But instead of rewriting the deal, the administration is expected to request Congress establish "trigger points," which could result in reimposing sanctions on Iran if the country crosses thresholds established by lawmakers. (The New York Times)

- Trump is planning to end federal subsidies to health insurance companies that help defer costs for low-income people. The move to eliminate cost-sharing reduction payments is seen as a blow to the Affordable Care Act and could cause a spike in health insurance premiums. (The Wall Street Journal)

Chart Review

Puerto Rico after Hurricane Maria: The Public's Knowledge and Views of Its Impact and the Response

Kaiser Family Foundation

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

FRIDAY

AEI event on U.S. agricultural policy

1:30 p.m.

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

The NFL Is Now One of the Most Divisive Brands in the U.S.

According to Morning Consult Brand Intelligence data published in The New York Times, the NFL has become one of the most controversial organizations in the country.

General

Twitter deleted data potentially crucial to Russia probes

Josh Meyer, Politico

Twitter has deleted tweets and other user data of potentially irreplaceable value to investigators probing Russia's suspected manipulation of the social media platform during the 2016 election, according to current and former government cybersecurity officials. Federal investigators now believe Twitter was one of Russia's most potent weapons in its efforts to promote Donald Trump over Hillary Clinton, the officials say, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

U.S. withdraws from UNESCO, the U.N.'s cultural organization, citing anti-Israel bias

Eli Rosenberg and Carol Morello, The Washington Post

The United States will withdraw from UNESCO at the end of next year, the State Department said Thursday, to stop accumulating unpaid dues and make a stand on what it said is anti-Israel bias at the U.N.'s educational, science and cultural organization. In notifying UNESCO of the decision Thursday morning, the State Department said it would like to remain involved as a nonmember observer state.

Mexico, Canada Focus on Reaching Nafta Overhaul Deal With U.S.

Anthony Harrup, The Wall Street Journal

Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto and Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau on Thursday reaffirmed their commitment to securing a pact with the U.S. to redraw the North American Free Trade Agreement. The two leaders met during Mr. Trudeau's state visit to Mexico, discussing bilateral relations and the negotiations under way in Washington this week to revise Nafta, which has linked the U.S., Mexico and Canada in a free-trade zone since 1994.

Where's Zinke? The interior secretary's special flag offers clue

Lisa Rein, The Washington Post

At the Interior Department's headquarters in downtown Washington, Secretary Ryan Zinke has revived an arcane military ritual that no one can remember ever happening in the federal government. A security staffer takes the elevator to the seventh floor, climbs the stairs to the roof and hoists a special secretarial flag whenever Zinke enters the building.

---

Presidential

Trump Won't Certify Iran Nuclear Deal, but He Also Won't Unravel It

Mark Landler and David E. Sanger, The New York Times

President Trump will make good on Friday on a long-running threat to disavow the Iran nuclear deal that was negotiated by his predecessor, Barack Obama. But he will stop short, for now, of unraveling the accord or even rewriting it, as the deal's defenders had once feared.

Trump to End Subsidies to Health Insurers

Stephanie Armour, The Wall Street Journal

The Trump administration will end billions of dollars in payments to insurers under the Affordable Care Act program, but President Donald Trump has privately told at least one lawmaker that the payments may continue if a bipartisan deal is reached on health care, according to people familiar with the matter on Capitol Hill and in the health-care industry. The White House in a statement Thursday night said that based on guidance from the Justice Department, the Department of Health and Human Services has determined there is no appropriation for the payments and the government can't lawfully make the payments.

Trump Interviews Stanford Economist John Taylor for Fed Chairman Job

Kate Davidson and Peter Nicholas, The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump is nearing a decision on whom to pick to lead the Federal Reserve, and met Wednesday with one of four candidates, according to people familiar with the matter. Mr. Trump met with Stanford University economist John Taylor, a White House official said. Mr. Taylor has criticized the central bank's easy-money stimulus policies since the financial crisis and pushed for the adoption of a mathematical formula to guide the Fed's interest-rate decisions.

John Kelly lets loose

Annie Karni, Politico

White House chief of staff John Kelly had a few things to get off his chest. He's not quitting or getting fired (at least not today).

---

Senate

Collins declines run for Maine governor

Daniel Strauss, Politico

Republican Sen. Susan Collins announced Friday that she would not run for governor of Maine, ending weeks of speculation with a decision to stay in the Senate. Collins' decision preserves her role as a key moderate and swing vote in the Senate.

Trump to extend March 5 deadline to end DACA protections if Congress doesn't act, GOP senator says

Elise Viebeck, The Washington Post

President Trump will extend a March 5 deadline to end protections for young undocumented immigrants if Congress fails to act by then, according to a Republican senator who spoke directly with the president about the issue. Sen. James Lankford (R-Okla.) said Trump told him he was willing to "give it some more time" to allow lawmakers to find a solution for "dreamers," unauthorized immigrants brought to this country as children, if Congress does not pass legislation extending protections before time is up.

Menendez case gets potential 'death blow'

Matt Friedman, Politico

When the corruption trial of U.S. Sen. Robert Menendez began in early September, the federal bribery charges threatened to end his career and land him in jail. By Wednesday, when the prosecution rested its case, Menendez was reportedly singing "Amazing Grace" in the courthouse elevator.

Concerns mount over Thad Cochran's health

Anna Palmer and Burgess Everett, Politico

Republicans are worried about Thad Cochran. The Mississippi senator has been recovering the past several weeks from a urological procedure.

---

House

Ryan Threatens to Keep Members in for Christmas to Finish Tax Overhaul

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Nothing seems to push lawmakers to get their jobs done and pass legislation more than the threat of having to be in Washington over the holidays. Knowing this, House Speaker Paul D. Ryan made it clear Thursday that Congress staying in session over Christmas is an option if they have not advanced a tax overhaul bill by then.

Congressman seeks probe of chartered flights by U.S. energy secretary

Emily Flitter and Timothy Gardner, Reuters

A Democratic U.S. congressman is asking the Department of Energy's watchdog to investigate Energy Secretary Rick Perry's travel on chartered aircraft, the congressman said at a hearing on Thursday. U.S. Representative Frank Pallone said Perry's trips on chartered planes need scrutiny in light of the "extreme" budget cuts the department faces in a 2018 federal budget proposed by Republican President Donald Trump.

Congressional Black Caucus Members Raise Diversity Concerns With Facebook COO

Edward Graham, Morning Consult

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus met on Thursday with Sheryl Sandberg, chief operating officer of Facebook Inc., to discuss questions they had about the social media giant's efforts to diversify its workforce and to prevent racially divisive ads from appearing on the social networking site. Rep. Robin Kelly (D-Ill.), ranking member of the Subcommittee on Information Technology and a member of the CBC who attended the meeting, said that Sandberg "was very agreeable with our concerns and acknowledged that they definitely have work to do."

---

States

California files legal challenge to Trump administration's revised travel restrictions

Patrick McGreevy, Los Angeles Times

California joined five other states Thursday in filing a court action seeking to block the Trump administration's new restrictions on travelers from a handful of countries, arguing it is unconstitutionally motivated by anti-Muslim animus. State Atty. Gen. Xavier Becerra said the new restrictions, which take effect Oct. 18, contain the same flaws as those previously challenged by states in the courts.

California governor responds to deadly wildfires from afar

Kathleen Ronayne, The Associated Press

Gov. Jerry Brown has remained a background player as one of the worst series of wildfires in California history tears across the state's wine country and beyond. He's yet to visit the fire zones, preferring to stay in Sacramento, where he's issued emergency declarations, secured federal disaster relief and commented on the deadly fires at press conferences for bill signings and in one visit to the state's central Office of Emergency Services.

Cuomo defends keeping Weinstein money, says criticism 'misses the point'

Jimmy Vielkind, Politico

Gov. Andrew Cuomo reiterated Thursday that he will keep some of the campaign money he's raised from embattled Hollywood mogul Harvey Weinstein, declaring the inquisition on that topic "misses the point." Cuomo, a Democrat who is positioning himself for a possible presidential bid in 2020, has raised $118,204 from Weinstein and his company since his 2006 campaign for attorney general.

Ald. Ameya Pawar leaves race for Illinois governor

Rick Pearson, Chicago Tribune

When he became the first Democratic governor candidate in January, North Side Ald. Ameya Pawar acknowledged he faced a big challenge in trying to corral progressive support to make up for his lack of significant money and name recognition. On Thursday, Pawar abruptly became the first major-tier contender to pull the plug on his candidacy, telling supporters he lacked the campaign cash needed to fully organize and compete across Illinois compared to better-funded and wealthier rivals in the March 18 primary election.

'She likes fancy words': Md. GOP delegate's mockery of Democratic

gubernatorial candidate sparks a backlash

Ovetta Wiggins, The Washington Post

Maryland House Minority Whip Kathy Szeliga (R-Baltimore County) is receiving some backlash for comments about Democratic gubernatorial candidate Maya Rockey Moore Cummings that some critics have characterized as petty and divisive. Szeliga wrote on her Facebook page: "Elijah Cumming's wife running for MD gov. - she likes fancy words - 'minutiae' to let us know how smart she is - 'I have a Ph.D. in political science with an emphasis on public policy,' she said. 'I am confident on mastering any minutiae when it comes to government and policy.'"

As Trump slams media, an Indiana lawmaker has drafted a bill to license journalists

Tony Cook, Indianapolis Star

An Indiana lawmaker has drafted a bill that would require professional journalists to be licensed by state police. Rep. Jim Lucas had the measure drawn up earlier this year and said he may file it to drive home a point about his signature issue - gun rights.

Weakening of anti-discrimination law could cost Missouri \$500,000 in federal funds

Bryan Lowry, The Kansas City Star

Missouri will no longer be allowed to participate in a federal housing program after state lawmakers changed the state's anti-discrimination law this year, according to a letter from federal officials. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development sent state officials a letter in July informing them that Gov. Eric Greitens' decision to sign Senate Bill 43, which critics say weakens the state's anti-discrimination protections, put the state out of compliance with the Fair Housing Assistance Program.

---

Advocacy

Hospital group warns Trump's executive order could weaken insurance markets

Jessie Hellmann, The Hill

The largest hospital association warned that an executive order signed by President Trump on Thursday could destabilize insurance markets and make coverage unaffordable for people with pre-existing conditions. "Today's Executive Order will allow health insurance plans that cover fewer benefits and offer fewer consumer protections," said Tom Nickels, executive vice president of the American Hospital Association, in a statement.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Republicans in Congress are about to give Trump even more power

Dianne Feinstein, The Washington Post

For 100 years the Senate has allowed home-state senators to play a central role in approving nominees for federal judgeships in their states. For a judicial nomination to move forward, both senators from a nominee's state must return a "blue slip" that signals their agreement that that nominee should receive a hearing in the Judiciary Committee.

Congress Can't Let Mr. Trump Kill Obamacare on His Own

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

Fed up with failed attempts in Congress to repeal the Affordable Care Act, President Trump on Thursday took matters into his own hands, signing an executive order that could significantly damage the health insurance market and harm millions of people. Mr. Trump directed his administration to effectively create an alternative health insurance system that does not include the safeguards of the A.C.A. and could sabotage that 2010 law, one of his predecessor's biggest accomplishments.

Salvaging Private Health Insurance

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republicans are still trying to defuse the ticking Obama Care bomb without blowing themselves up, and on Thursday the GOP cut the first wire: President Trump signed an executive order that could begin to revive private insurance markets. More to the point, Americans may start to have more choices at a lower cost. One piece of this week's order directs the Labor Department to "consider expanding access" to Association Health Plans, which would allow small businesses to team up to offer insurance.

Let white nationalists march - and their ideas die

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

After a few dozen racists led by Richard Spencer, the white nationalist, returned to Charlottesville for 15 minutes of torch-lit marching and chanting last weekend - a short-order reprise, without the violence, of their much larger demonstration in August - Mayor Mike Signer (D) said he is "looking at all our legal options" to prohibit future such spectacles in the city. It's easy to sympathize with Mr. Signer's anger and disgust: No mayor would want his town, his police and his constituents exposed to repeat performances by the loathsome Mr. Spencer and his band of thugs.

What Bob Corker Sees in Trump

Peggy Noonan, The Wall Street Journal

In early March I met with a dozen Republican U.S. senators for coffee as part of a series in which they invite writers, columnists and historians to share what's on their mind. The consuming topic was the new president.

How Elizabeth Warren Became the Soul of the Democratic Party

Graham Vyse, New Republic

The Democratic establishment was shocked-and in some cases appalled-by Bernie Sanders's insurgent bid for president last year. How could 12 million primary voters cast ballots not for market-friendly progressivism or New Deal liberalism, but democratic socialism?

---

Research Reports and Polling

Virginia's Gubernatorial Race: Where Things Stand With Less Than a Month to Go

Geoffrey Skelley, Sabato's Crystal Ball

The November of the year following a presidential election is always relatively quiet on the electoral front, with only regularly-scheduled statewide races for governor in New Jersey and Virginia. With the Garden State's contest looking like a safe Democratic pickup and Alabama's special election for the U.S. Senate not happening until December, coverage of the competitive Virginia race seems to be accelerating as it enters the final month before Election Day.

2017 Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey

U.S. Office of Personnel Management

The Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey (FEVS) is a tool that measures employees' perceptions of whether, and to what extent, conditions characterizing successful organizations are present in their agencies. Survey results provide valuable insight into the challenges agency leaders face in ensuring the Federal Government has an effective civilian workforce and how well they are responding.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Decision on Afghanistan Coming Soon, Mattis Says
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 7:58:36 AM

---

By Cameron Easley

Top Stories

- Ahead of today's meeting with President Donald Trump and other national security advisers at Camp David, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis said talks will move the administration toward a decision on Afghanistan, which he anticipates "in the very near future." (The Associated Press)
- There is a growing concern among lawmakers and advocates that the Trump administration will refuse to spend all the money Congress authorizes and appropriates for foreign aid programs, a move they fear could harm diplomacy efforts and jeopardize national security. (Politico)

- Police in Spain killed five suspected terrorists in Cambrils, a seaside resort town near Barcelona, after an attack left 5 injured early Friday morning. Authorities say the attack was linked to the earlier van incident on The Ramblas earlier Thursday which killed 13 people and injured 100 more. (The Associated Press)
- With Sinclair Broadcasting Group in the middle of $3.9 billion purchase of Tribune Media, which would see the company add 42 new stations, a new Morning Consult/POLITICO survey shows Americans put more trust in their local news outlets than national media. (Morning Consult)

Chart Review

U.S. Business Sectors Gain or Hold Steady in Public Esteem

Gallup

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

Barcelona van attack kills 13 in agonizing repeat for Europe

Barry Hatton and Joseph Wilson, The Associated Press

A van veered onto a promenade Thursday and barreled down the busy walkway in central Barcelona, swerving back and forth as it mowed pedestrians down and turned a picturesque tourist destination into a bloody killing zone. Thirteen people were killed and 100 were injured, 15 of them seriously, in what authorities called a terror attack.

Dow's Slide Drags Down Stocks World-Wide

Justin Yang, The Wall Street Journal

Global stock markets were lower Friday, amid political tensions in the U.S. and as some European stocks suffered following terror attacks in Spain. European markets were broadly lower after an assault in Barcelona where at least 13 people died and a subsequent attack in the Spanish coastal town of Cambrils.

WikiLeaks Turned Down Leaks on Russian Government During U.S. Presidential Campaign

Jenna McLaughlin, Foreign Policy

In the summer of 2016, as WikiLeaks was publishing documents from Democratic operatives allegedly obtained by Kremlin-directed hackers, Julian Assange turned down a large cache of documents related to the Russian government, according to chat messages and a source who provided the records. WikiLeaks declined to publish a wide-ranging trove of documents - at least 68 gigabytes of data - that came from inside the Russian Interior Ministry, according to partial chat logs reviewed by Foreign Policy.

Democrats Are Preparing To Run Against Mike Pence In 2020

Tarini Parti, BuzzFeed News

Democrats are already preparing for a possible 2020 presidential bid by Vice President Mike Pence, with a major group dedicating staff - including on the ground in Indiana - to dig up dirt on him, amid rumblings that Pence is positioning himself for a run. American Bridge 21st Century - a Democratic opposition super PAC and nonprofit funded by liberal megadonors - is leading the effort, which started earlier this summer and kicked into high gear following a New York Times story reporting on Pence's "shadow campaign."

AT&T-Time Warner Deal, an Early Trump Target, Reaches Advanced Stage

Drew FitzGerald and Joe Flint, The Wall Street Journal

The government review of AT&T Inc.'s 1.65% $85 billion takeover of Time Warner Inc. has reached an advanced stage, people close to the situation said, a significant milestone in a deal that was closely watched for signs of how the Trump administration would view large mergers. The deal's regulatory review has hit a late-stage point where AT&T lawyers are discussing merger conditions with the Justice Department, the people said.

---

Presidential

Mattis says a decision is closer on strategy for Afghanistan

Robert Burns, The Associated Press

After months of sometimes heated internal debate, the Trump administration has almost reached a decision on a new approach for fighting the 16-year-old war in Afghanistan, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis said Thursday. He gave no hint of what the strategy would look like.

Fears grow that Trump could ignore Congress on spending

Nahal Toosi, Politico

Lawmakers and activists are preparing for the possibility that President Donald Trump's administration, in its zeal to slash the federal budget, will take the rare step of deliberately not spending all the money Congress gives it - a move sure to trigger legal and political battles. The concern is mainly focused on the State Department, where Secretary of State Rex Tillerson has drawn criticism for failing to spend $80 million allocated by Congress to fight Russian and terrorist propaganda and for trying to freeze congressionally authorized fellowships for women and minorities.

Defiant, Trump Laments Assault on Culture and Revives a Bogus Pershing Story

Michael D. Shear and Maggie Haberman, The New York Times

Despite ongoing rebukes over his defense of white supremacists, President Trump defiantly returned to his campaign's nativist themes on Thursday. He lamented an assault on American "culture," revived a bogus, century-old story about killing Muslim extremists, and attacked Republicans with a renewed vigor.

Trump aides worry he hurt hopes of defeating Flake

Alex Isenstadt, Politico

President Donald Trump upended the Arizona Senate race on Thursday by signaling support for an underdog primary challenger - a move that went against the wishes of his advisers and potentially undercut their efforts to unseat GOP Sen. Jeff Flake. The president gave a shout-out on Twitter to Kelli Ward, a conservative former state senator running to take out Flake in a primary next year.

Trump scraps plan for White House infrastructure council

Jordan Fabian and Melanie Zanona, The Hill

President Trump is abandoning plans to form a council of outside advisers on infrastructure, the White House said Thursday. The council, which had not yet been assembled, would have provided the White House with advice on how to spend billions of dollars to improve the nation's roads, bridges and railways.

Rex Tillerson Is Not Going To Fire The Top Asia Diplomat Bannon Hates

Spencer Ackerman, The Daily Beast

The State Department is standing firmly behind a senior Asia-focused diplomat under attack by Steve Bannon. Bannon, Trump's chief strategist, phoned an American Prospect journalist to boast about his intentions to fire officials he considered insufficiently hardline on China and related regional issues.

Steve Bannon Detonates His Trump Survival Plan, Worrying Allies

Adrian Carraquillo, BuzzFeed News

Allies who spend too long in Donald Trump's dog house usually get sent away for good. Chief strategist Steve Bannon is trying to forestall that fate.

Gary Cohn stays put - for now - following Trump's comments on Charlottesville

Damian Paletta and Renae Merle, The Washington Post

The White House on Thursday took the unusual step of saying National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn would not resign, trying to contain the fallout from President Trump's controversial comments about the deadly riot in Charlottesville over the weekend and his assertion that "very fine people" were protesting alongside neo-Nazis. Cohn, who funded the Cohn Jewish Student Center at Kent State University in 2009, was mortified by Trump's comments, three people close to him said, and he has been bombarded with calls from friends asking him if he will leave.

---

Senate

Key Republican Calls for 'Radical Changes' in Trump's Presidency

Justin Blum and Billy House, Bloomberg News

A Senate Republican who once considered joining Donald Trump's administration called Thursday for "radical changes," saying the president hasn't yet demonstrated the characteristics needed to serve in his job. "We're at a point where there needs to be radical changes take place at the White House itself. It has to happen," Senator Bob Corker told local reporters in his home state of Tennessee.

Southwest Rises as 2018 Senate Battleground

Alexander Burns, The New York Times

Even before President Trump's rise, a pair of Western states foreshadowed some of the consuming clashes of his presidency: the tug of war between traditional conservatives and border-hawk nationalists, and the struggle for power between diverse, booming cities like Las Vegas and Phoenix, and far-flung rural precincts struggling to keep up. And in a season of political tumult, Nevada and Arizona have emerged anew as a defining battleground for both parties - states that encapsulate the evolving politics of the Southwest and may control the balance of power in the Senate.

At Senator Menendez's Trial, Stakes Are High for Democrats

Shane Goldmacher, The New York Times

When Senator Robert Menendez of New Jersey goes on trial on federal corruption charges in three weeks, far more than his own fate hinges on the outcome. If Mr. Menendez, a Democrat, is convicted and then expelled from the United States Senate by early January, his replacement would be picked by Gov. Chris Christie, the Republican governor of New Jersey and an ally of President Trump.

Progressives begin 2020 dissection of Kamala Harris

Alex Roarty and Christopher Cadelago, McClatchy DC

Kamala Harris, liberal hero? It certainly doesn't feel that way after some left-wing leaders and think-piece writers spent the summer dissecting the California senator's record - often harshly.

---

House

Call to Remove Confederate Statues From Capitol Divides

Democrats

Thomas Kaplan, The New York Times

The nationwide push to dismantle Confederate memorials divided Congress's most senior Democrats on Thursday, as Representative Nancy Pelosi, the House minority leader, pressed for the removal of Confederate statues from the Capitol while her Senate counterpart tried to keep the focus on President Trump's equivocation over white nationalists. "The Confederate statues in the halls of Congress have always been reprehensible," Ms. Pelosi said, putting pressure on the House speaker, Paul D. Ryan of Wisconsin, to act.

House GOP Tax Writers Stick with Full Expensing Provision

Anna Gronewald, Morning Consult

On the hallowed Republican grounds of the Reagan Ranch in Santa Barbara, Calif., House tax writers embraced a provision that would provide immediate relief to export-heavy businesses but whose high cost might prevent the deep corporate tax rate cuts they had initially promised. House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady confirmed Wednesday that GOP tax policy will include full expensing, which would allow businesses to immediately deduct equipment expenses from their income.

For Bobby Scott, a District Carved in Calm

Rema Rahman, Roll Call

At a recent town hall here in Virginia's second most populous city, Rep. Robert C. Scott patiently took questions from more than two dozen residents waiting in line. The queue stretched to the very back of a high school auditorium with some standing for the entire portion of the two-hour public meeting.

Grand Jury Indicts Former Democratic IT Staffer For Bank Fraud

Salvador Hernandez, BuzzFeed News

A federal grand jury has charged a former IT staffer for ex-Democratic National Committee chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz with bank fraud charges, the US Attorney's office announced Thursday. Imran Awan was arrested July 24 before getting on a plane to Pakistan.

Some Democrats Back Presidential Censure, Again

David Mark, Morning Consult

Some Hill Democrats are attempting to use censure, a political pressure technique that falls short of impeachment, to confront what they call gross presidential malfeasance. And like the episode with former President Bill Clinton, the Republicans aren't biting - though for starkly different reasons.

---

States

Palm Beach chamber head to charities: 'Have a conscience' on Mar-a-Lago

Alexandra Clough, Palm Beach Post

Laurel Baker, executive director of the Palm Beach Chamber of Commerce, minced no words Thursday about whether charities should continue to hold their events at Mar-a-Lago this season following President Donald Trump's statements about the recent violence in Charlottesville, Va. "If you have a conscience, you're really condoning bad behavior by continuing to be there," Baker said.

McCaskill, Clay and others call for Mo senator to resign after post hoping for Trump's assassination

Kevin McDermott, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

U.S. Sen. Claire McCaskill, U.S. Rep. William Lacy Clay and other top Missouri Democrats called Thursday for the resignation of fellow Democrat Maria Chappelle-Nadal, a state senator from University City, for posting a Facebook comment stating: "I hope Trump is assassinated!" "I condemn it," McCaskill said in a brief emailed statement. "It's outrageous. And she should resign."

10-year, \$1B life sciences plan bears fruit in Massachusetts

Steve LeBlanc, The Associated Press

n his offices at Boston Children's Hospital, Leonard Zon is busily developing cutting-edge stem cell therapies surrounded by fellow researchers, lab equipment and 300,000 striped, transparent zebrafish. Zon's lab - and the zebrafish - are the results of an initiative begun nearly a decade ago to make Massachusetts one of the country's premier life sciences incubators.

---

Advocacy

Dem group urges candidates to campaign against money in politics

Alex Roarty, McClatchy DC

A political group trying to drive big money out of politics is endorsing three House Democratic candidates - and declaring it an electoral necessity that the party adopt an aggressive message of campaign finance reform. In a first for the group this year, End Citizens United on Wednesday threw support to House Democratic challengers, breaking from past practice of backing incumbents and Senate candidates.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Donald Trump has no grasp of what it means to be president

The Economist

Defenders of President Donald Trump offer two arguments in his favour-that he is a businessman who will curb the excesses of the state; and that he will help America stand tall again by demolishing the politically correct taboos of left-leaning, establishment elites. From the start, these arguments looked like wishful thinking. After Mr Trump's press conference in New York on August 15th they lie in ruins.

I Voted for Trump. And I Sorely Regret It.

Julius Krein, The New York Times

When Donald Trump first announced his presidential campaign, I, like most people, thought it would be a short-lived publicity stunt. A month later, though, I happened to catch one of his political rallies on C-Span. I was riveted.

Refighting the Civil War

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

When Donald Trump first announced his presidential campaign, I, like most people, thought it would be a short-lived publicity stunt. A month later, though, I happened to catch one of his political rallies on C-Span. I was riveted. In fewer than seven days after the Charlottesville violence last weekend, statuary and other symbols of the American Confederacy are disappearing. Others are being vandalized-someone in Washington on Tuesday, perhaps a Middlebury history major, even spray-painted an expletive on the memorial to Abraham Lincoln.

Senate: Rating Changes in Five Races

Jennifer E. Duffy, Cook Political Report

There are new Senate ratings in five states. Updated bottom lines for these races are below.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Poll: Voters Trust Local News Outlets More Than National Ones

Edward Graham, Morning Consult

President Donald Trump has frequently lashed out at news organizations for reporting "fake news" about him and his administration, but most Americans continue to maintain faith in at least one media pillar - their local news outlets. A new Morning Consult/POLITICO poll conducted Aug. 10-14 found that 41 percent of registered voters have more trust in their local news outlets to report the truth, while 27 percent said they have more faith in the truthfulness of national news coverage.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: GOP Senators Defend McConnell After Trump Attacks
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:22:06 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Republican senators - including Arizona Sen. Jeff Flake and Nevada Sen. Dean Heller, both up for re-election next year - are coming to the defense of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), who is facing attacks from President Donald Trump. (The Hill)
- Trump on Thursday declared the opioid crisis a "national emergency," pledging "to spend a lot of time, a lot of effort and a lot of money" to address the problem. He has not yet adopted any specific recommendations from the President's Commission on Combating Drug Addiction and the Opioid Crisis. (The Washington Post)

- Russian President Vladimir Putin got the praise of Trump, rather than a critique, after he expelled 755 American diplomats from Moscow. Trump said he was "very thankful that he let go of a large number of people, because now we have a smaller payroll." (The New York Times)
- Some Democratic senators are accusing the Trump administration of ignoring them when nominating judges from their states, breaking longstanding tradition. Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) has also said he would be willing to advance the nominees without the home-state senators' approval. (Politico)

Chart Review

Voters Don't Trust Zinke to Decide on National Monuments

Morning Consult

poll public lands Zinke Trump energy

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

FRIDAY

Mitchell Institute event on nuclear deterrence 8 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on U.S.-Taiwan relations 1:30 p.m.

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

FBI Says ISIS Used eBay to Send Terror Cash to U.S.

Mark Maremont and Christopher S. Stewart, The Wall Street Journal

U.S. investigators uncovered a global financial network run by a senior Islamic State official that funneled money to an alleged ISIS operative in the U.S. through fake eBay transactions, according to a recently unsealed FBI affidavit. The alleged recipient of the funds was an American citizen in his early 30s who had been arrested more than a year ago in Maryland after a lengthy Federal Bureau of Investigation surveillance operation that found the first clues to the suspected network.

Four Top Cybersecurity Officials Are Leaving US Government

Kevin Collier, BuzzFeed News

Four senior cybersecurity officials are stepping down from their US government positions, raising concerns that an exodus of top leaders may make the federal government more vulnerable to hacking. Two of those resigning - Sean Kelley, the chief information security officer for the Environmental Protection Agency, and Richard Staropoli, the chief information officer for the Department of Homeland Security - had been in their jobs for just a few months.

Canadians in Cuba were also treated for hearing loss, Ottawa says amid U.S. probe of possible attack

CBC News

Global Affairs Canada has confirmed at least one Canadian diplomat in Cuba has been treated in hospital after suffering headaches and hearing loss. The information comes a day after the U.S. government said it believed some of its diplomats in Havana had been targeted with a covert sonic device that left them with severe hearing loss.

CNN severs ties with Jeffrey Lord

Brian Stelter, CNN

CNN severed ties with Jeffrey Lord on Thursday, hours after he ignited controversy by tweeting the words "Sieg Heil!" at a prominent liberal activist. "Nazi salutes are indefensible," a CNN spokesperson said in a statement.

Manafort switching legal team as feds crank up heat on him

Josh Dawsey, Politico

Former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort is changing his attorneys as a federal investigation heats up into his financial transactions, according to people familiar with the matter. Manafort's case will now be handled by Miller and Chevalier, a boutique firm in Washington that specializes in complicated financial crimes among other issues, these people said.

---

Presidential

Trump says opioid crisis is a national emergency, pledges more money and attention

Joel Achenbach et al., The Washington Post

President Trump on Thursday declared the country's opioid crisis a national emergency, saying the epidemic exceeded anything he had seen with other drugs in his lifetime. The statement by the president came in response to a question as he spoke to reporters outside a national security briefing at his golf club in Bedminster, N.J., where he is on a working vacation.

Trump Praises Putin Instead of Critiquing Cuts to U.S. Embassy Staff

Peter Baker, The New York Times

President Trump offered gratitude rather than outrage on Thursday for Russia's decision to force the United States Embassy in Moscow to slash its personnel by 755 people, despite bipartisan condemnation from other American leaders who protested the Cold War-style move. President Vladimir V. Putin last month ordered the seizure of two American diplomatic properties and directed the American Embassy staff in Russia be cut by more than half in retaliation for sanctions imposed by Congress because of Russia's meddling in last year's presidential election in the United States.

Trump Attorney Calls FBI's Raid on Manafort Home 'Gross Abuse'

Jacob Gershman and Del Quentin Wilber, The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump's outside attorney on Thursday denounced the FBI's July raid of former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort's Virginia home as "extraordinary invasive" and a "gross abuse" of the judicial process. In an email to The Wall Street Journal, Trump attorney John Dowd excoriated Special Counsel Robert Mueller's aggressive pursuit of evidence, calling the raid a gratuitous attempt to bully Mr. Manafort.

Trump's Twitter Fury at McConnell Risks Alienating a Key Ally Carl Hulse, The New York Times

By preventing President Barack Obama from filling a Supreme Court vacancy, Senator Mitch McConnell secured Donald J. Trump the signature accomplishment of his young presidency: the confirmation of Justice Neil M. Gorsuch. But any gratitude President Trump felt for Mr. McConnell's first-of-its-kind maneuver appears to be exhausted as the president, upset at the failed health care repeal, has turned his Twitter fire and fury on Mr. McConnell, the one person he may most need to execute a stalled Republican legislative agenda.

---

Senate

GOP senators rally to McConnell's defense amid Trump attacks Jordain Carney, The Hill

Republican senators are coming to the aid of Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, as President Trump has launched a string of attacks against the Kentucky Republican. Four GOP senators offered their support for McConnell on Thursday after the president escalated his war of words with the Senate leader, arguing he's failing to pass the GOP legislative agenda.

White House vs. Democrats in tense standoff over judge picks Seung Min Kim, Politico

President Donald Trump's judicial nominees are ignoring key Senate Democrats as they vie for lifetime appointments to the bench - a break from longstanding practice that diminishes the minority's power to provide a check against ideologically extreme judges. The brewing tension between the White House and the Senate over filling an unusually high number of judicial vacancies is impeding the pace at which Trump installs lifetime appointees to the federal bench - so far one of the president's few major victories, with his legislative agenda largely stymied in Congress.

Frustrated with Trump, McCain promotes his own Afghan plan Richard Lardner, The Associated Press

In a rebuke of President Donald Trump, Republican Sen. John McCain declared Thursday that "America is adrift in Afghanistan" as he promoted a war strategy that would expand the U.S. counterterrorism effort and provide greater support to Afghan security forces. McCain, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said the U.S. needs to put strict conditions on continued assistance to Afghanistan, and require the Kabul government to demonstrate "measurable progress" in curbing corruption, strengthening the rule of law and improving financial transparency.

Jeff Flake Isn't Worrying About A Trump Donor's Investment Against Him

Henry J. Gomez, BuzzFeed News

Robert Mercer, the Republican mega-donor who backs President Donald Trump, is spending big money to defeat Sen. Jeff Flake, one of Trump's loudest Republican critics, in 2018. Kelli Ward, the candidate Mercer favors, fell short last year in a bid to unseat Arizona's other Republican senator, John McCain - despite a major investment from Mercer and his wife.

Paul LePage says Eric Brakey is a long shot to beat Angus King Steve Collins, Maine Sun Journal

Gov. Paul LePage is sounding more and more like he plans next year to challenge independent Angus King's bid for a second term in the U.S. Senate. During a radio interview Thursday, the governor indicated that the only declared major party challenger - state Sen. Eric Brakey, R-Auburn - likely can't win.

U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke on 34-day road trip in underdog Senate bid Patrick Svitek, The Texas Tribune

Looking to overcome the long odds in his U.S. Senate campaign, U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke, D-El Paso, has hit the road for an aggressive 34-day tour of Texas. O'Rourke launched the trip without much fanfare at the end of last month, when he flew to San Antonio and bought a new truck for the trip.

'Maybe Putin is right': Republican Senate frontrunner on Russian leader

Paul Lewis and Adithya Sambamurthy, The Guardian

Roy Moore, the controversial former judge and a leading contender in Alabama's Senate race, has said "maybe Putin is right" and "more akin to me than I know" given the Russian leader's stance on gay marriage. Moore, who was propelled to fame in 2001 over his refusal to remove a monument to the Ten Commandments that he'd installed in state courthouse, is a leading contender to fill the vacancy left by Donald Trump's attorney general, Jeff Sessions.

---

House

Congressional Republicans Are Scrambling for a Debt-Ceiling Workaround

Andrew Desiderio, The Daily Beast

Six weeks before the government is set to run out of money to pay its bills, congressional Republicans are trying to cobble together an agreement to skirt a dramatic showdown within their own caucus. Four Republican congressional sources told The Daily Beast that GOP lawmakers have explored attaching a "clean" increase of the debt limit to an unrelated, popular, potentially-bipartisan piece of legislation rather than vote on it as a stand-alone measure.

Freedom Caucus tries to force Paul Ryan's hand Politico

The conservative House Freedom Caucus will file a petition today to try to force Speaker Paul Ryan to bring up a so-called "clean Obamacare repeal" bill. The legislation passed the House and Senate in the past - it repeals Obamacare after a two-year transition period.

Congressional investigators want to question Trump's longtime secretary, Rhona Graff, in Russia probe

Benjamin Siegel, ABC News

Congressional investigators want to question President Donald Trump's longtime personal secretary as part of their ongoing probe into a controversial meeting between Trump campaign officials and a Russian lawyer promising dirt on Hillary Clinton, ABC News has learned. Rhona Graff, a senior vice president at the Trump Organization who has worked at Trump Tower for nearly 30 years, has acted as a gatekeeper to Trump.

Congressman Visclosky questions Trump boast of strengthening

America's nuclear arsenal in a rare outspoken moment

Dan Carden, NWI Times

The top Democrat serving on the U.S. House panel responsible for defense spending is condemning President Donald Trump's "loose and imprecise language" concerning nuclear weapons. U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky, D-Merrillville, took issue Thursday with the Republican's claim, made via Twitter at 6:56 a.m Wednesday, that his "first order as president was to renovate and modernize our nuclear arsenal."

---

States

Questions Emerge Over What Wisconsin Must Give for Foxconn Plant

Julie Bosman, The New York Times

When Gov. Scott Walker announced last month that the electronics giant Foxconn had chosen Wisconsin as a site for its new factory, he was a picture of grinning, fist-pumping excitement. It would be the biggest economic project in Wisconsin history, Mr. Walker promised, with a $10 billion investment, as many as 13,000 jobs and a high-tech campus the size of 11 Lambeau Fields.

Political rally at Missouri State Fair ruffles feathers

Kurt Erickson, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

A year after the state's top farm organizations endorsed a Democrat for governor for the first time, Republican Gov. Eric Greitens will preside over a "Salute to Agriculture" next week at the Missouri State Fair. In a move that could help burnish the new governor's farm-country credentials after last year's snub, the first-ever event is being organized by the Missouri Republican Party, which says it wants to "celebrate Missouri's long history as an agricultural powerhouse."

Terry McAuliffe: "there's total dysfunction in Washington"

Shannon Vavra, Axios

Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe and Steve Benjamin, the mayor of Columbia, South Carolina, both blamed Washington for a failure to find solutions to the nation's problems. Officials in Washington "can't come to agreement on anything," McAuliffe told Axios' Mike Allen at a U.S. Conference of Mayors discussion on "City & State Partnerships."

---

Advocacy

Conservative Groups Call for Delay on Medical Device and Insurance Taxes

Jon Reid, Morning Consult

Dozens of conservative groups are calling on congressional Republican leaders to make sure that the Affordable Care Act's taxes on health insurers and medical device makers do not take effect next year. Congressional Republicans had aimed to permanently scrap nearly all Obamacare taxes as part of their effort to repeal and replace the ACA.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Let Calm and Cool Trump 'Fire and Fury'

Peggy Noonan, The Wall Street Journal

What is happening with North Korea is not analogous to what happened in 1962, except for the word crisis. Fifty-five years ago was a different age with vastly different players and dynamics. We all mine the past to make our points, but Mr. Gorka's evoking of the Cuban crisis to summon political support is intellectually cheap and self-defeating.

Donald Trump's First Nine Holes

Roger Cohen, The New York Times

Golf is a big deal to President Trump. Over the years he has defended his stubborn character by saying a change of swing is a mistake, and dismissed Mitt Romney as a guy who can't sink a three-foot putt.

John McCain's Defense Cut

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

There is no more passionate and principled advocate for greater military spending than Senator John McCain, so we wonder if the Arizona Republican appreciates that he recently voted to guarantee weaker U.S. defenses. To wit, his vote to kill health reform means that entitlements like Medicaid will continue to squeeze the Pentagon like an ever-tightening vise long after he has retired.

Democrats try to co-opt populist rage. Hilarity ensues.

Matt Bai, Yahoo News

Washington was abuzz this week with talk about the new Democratic agenda, "A Better Deal," which is suddenly dominating news coverage and captivating voters with a plan to remake the American economy, sending Republicans scrambling for a viable platform of their own in advance of the midterm elections. No, not really.

---

Research Reports and Polling

An Early Look at 2018 Premium Changes and Insurer Participation on ACA Exchanges

Rabah Kamal et al., The Kaiser Family Foundation

Each year insurers submit filings to state regulators detailing their plans to participate on the Affordable Care Act marketplaces (also called exchanges). These filings include information on the premiums insurers plan to charge in the coming year and which areas they plan to serve.

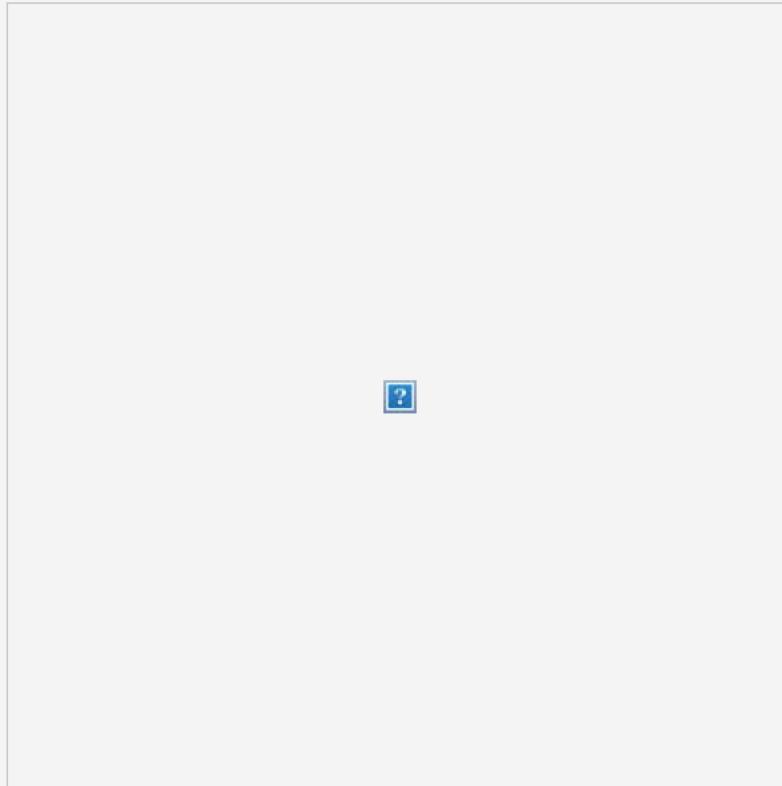

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: House Intel Panel to Release Thousands of Facebook Ads Purchased by Kremlin-Linked Groups
Date: Thursday, October 12, 2017 9:05:23 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Leaders of the House Intelligence Committee said they will soon release the Facebook ads purchased by Kremlin-linked groups as part of Russia's efforts to influence the 2016 U.S. presidential election. The announcement came after a closed-door meeting between lawmakers and Facebook Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg, and the public release of about 3,000 ads is likely after Nov 1. (USA Today)
- President Donald Trump is planning to sign an executive order today that would allow the sale of less-expensive health care plans that offer fewer benefits, a move that takes aim at the Affordable Care Act. The order is designed to let small businesses pool together to purchase insurance. (The Wall Street Journal)

- Trump's lawyers are open to the president being interviewed by Robert Mueller, the special counsel in the Justice Department's Russia investigation, according to an unnamed senior White House official. The White House believes the move could bring Mueller's probe closer to an end, even though a sit-down meeting poses risks for Trump, who could be asked about potential obstruction of justice regarding his dismissal of former Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey. (Politico)
- Federal prosecutors in New Jersey rested their case against Sen. Robert Menendez (D-N.J.), who is accused of taking gifts from Florida eye doctor Salomon Melgen in exchange for doing favors for him. Testimony over the past month came from former federal officials and congressional staffers, as well as former Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa). (The Washington Post)

Chart Review

**The N.F.L. Is Now One of the Most Divisive Brands in the U.S.**

The New York Times

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

HUD's Carson testifies at House Financial Services
Committee hearing 9:30 a.m.

---

Energy Secretary Perry testifies at House Energy and Commerce hearing 10 a.m.

---

House Oversight Committee hearing on 2020 Census 10 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on Iran policy

12 p.m.

FRIDAY

AEI event on U.S. agricultural policy

1:30 p.m.

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

Congressional staffer charged with filing false security clearance forms

Clarence Williams, The Washington Post

Prosecutors charged a top congressional staffer Wednesday with filing a false security clearance form nearly a year after he pled guilty to failing to pay taxes, officials said. The Justice Department alleges that Isaac Lanier Avant, chief of staff to Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-Miss.) and Democratic staff director for the Homeland Security Committee, "willfully made a false statement" on security clearance forms in 2008 and 2013, officials said in a news release.

Judge allows Dakota Access pipeline to keep running

Blake Nicholson, The Associated Press

A federal judge ruled Wednesday that the Dakota Access oil pipeline can continue operating while a study is completed to assess its environmental impact on an American Indian tribe. U.S. District Judge James Boasberg's decision will come as a blow to the Standing Rock Sioux, who have argued that an oil spill from the pipeline under Lake Oahe - from which the tribe draws its water - could have a detrimental effect on the tribal community.

Militants Free American Woman and Family Held for 5 Years in Afghanistan

Adam Goldman, The New York Times

An American woman and her family who have been held hostage by militants in Afghanistan for five years have been freed, ending a case that has long frustrated diplomats and F.B.I. agents involved in trying to secure their release, according to people familiar with the situation. The family was in Pakistan early Thursday, and the White House was preparing to release a statement once they are safely in American hands, according to people who described their status on condition of anonymity because the details have not yet been made public.

An old-school pharmacy hand-delivers drugs to Congress, a little-

known perk for the powerful

Erin Mershon, STAT

If House Speaker Paul Ryan comes down with the flu this winter, he and his security detail won't be screeching off toward the closest CVS for his Tamiflu. Instead, he can just walk downstairs and pick up the pills, part of a little-known perk open to every member of Congress, from Ryan and Majority Leader Mitch McConnell down to the newest freshman Democrat.

---

Presidential

In Start to Unwinding the Health Law, Trump to Ease Insurance Rules

Louise Radnofsky et al., The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump is planning to sign an executive order Thursday to initiate the unwinding of the Affordable Care Act, paving the way for sweeping changes to health-insurance regulations by instructing agencies to allow the sale of less-comprehensive health plans to expand. Mr. Trump, using his authority to accomplish some of what Republicans failed to achieve with their stalled congressional health-care overhaul, will direct federal agencies to take actions aimed at providing lower-cost options and fostering competition in the individual insurance markets, according to a Wall Street Journal interview with two senior White House officials.

President's lawyers may offer Mueller a meeting with Trump

Darren Samuelsohn, Politico

Donald Trump's lawyers are open to having the president sit down for an interview with Robert Mueller, according to a senior White House official, as part of a wider posture of cooperation with the special counsel's Russia probe. If Mueller doesn't request an interview by Thanksgiving, Trump's lawyers may even force the issue by volunteering Trump's time, the official said.

White House nominates AccuWeather CEO to head climate agency

David Shepardson, Reuters

U.S. President Donald Trump on Wednesday nominated the chief executive of AccuWeather Inc to head the government's meteorological agency that monitors the climate and issues daily weather forecasts. Trump nominated

Barry Myers, CEO of privately owned weather forecasting company AccuWeather, to head the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, part of the U.S. Commerce Department.

Trump's Tough Talk on Nafta Suggests Pact's Demise Is Imminent
Ana Swanson, The New York Times

The North American Free Trade Agreement, long disparaged by President Trump as bad for the United States, was edging closer toward collapse as negotiators gathered for a fourth round of contentious talks here this week. In recent weeks, the Trump administration has sparred with American businesses that support Nafta and has pushed for significant changes that negotiators from Mexico and Canada say are nonstarters.

At Pennsylvania appearance Trump turns back to tax overhaul; pitch aimed at truckers

Catherine Lucey and Josh Boak, Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

President Donald Trump pitched his tax plan as a boost for truckers at an event Wednesday in Pennsylvania, saying, "America first means putting American truckers first." Trump appeared before about a thousand cheering people at an airplane hangar dramatically draped with American flags.

"I Hate Everyone In The White House!": Trump Seethes As Advisers Fear The President Is "Unraveling"

Gabriel Sherman, Vanity Fair

At first it sounded like hyperbole, the escalation of a Twitter war. But now it's clear that Bob Corker's remarkable New York Times interview-in which the Republican senator described the White House as "adult day care" and warned Trump could start World War III-was an inflection point in the Trump presidency.

---

Senate

Prosecution rests in bribery trial of Sen. Robert Menendez

Devlin Barrett and Alan Maimon, The Washington Post

Menendez is accused of taking gifts - including a luxury hotel stay, flights on private jets, and hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign contributions - from Salomon Melgen, in exchange for doing favors for the doctor. One of the last pieces of evidence entered in the prosecution case was an email Menendez wrote to a staffer in 2009, in which the senator said he was looking for "the best juice" he could find inside the federal government to help Melgen in a multimillion-dollar billing dispute with Medicare.

Undisclosed deal guaranteed Roy Moore \$180,000 a year for part-time work at charity

Shawn Boburg and Robert O'Harrow Jr., The Washington Post

Former Alabama judge Roy Moore, a Republican candidate for U.S. Senate, once said publicly that he did not take a "regular salary" from the small charity he founded to promote Christian values because he did not want to be a financial burden. But privately, Moore had arranged to receive a salary of $180,000 a year for part-time work at the Foundation for Moral Law, internal charity documents show.

McConnell ratchets up judicial wars - again

Burgess Everett and Seung Min Kim, Politico

Mitch McConnell wants to further erode Democrats' influence over lifetime judge appointments, floating plans to jam through judicial nominees opposed by their home-state Democratic senators. But the Republican Senate leader's own Judiciary Committee chairman, Sen. Chuck Grassley, is warning McConnell: Not so fast.

Conservative leaders call on Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to resign

Deirdre Shesgreen, USA Today

An influential array of ultra-conservative leaders is calling on Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to resign, calling him a "failure" who "has cost Republicans almost a year of victories." "He has demonstrated that he either does not understand the frustration coming from conservatives and the urgency of passing key legislation - or he does not care," FreedomWorks President Adam Brandon said in a statement on Wednesday.

Bannon-tied group kicks off brutal GOP primary season

Jonathan Easley, The Hill

A pro-Trump outside group aligned with Stephen Bannon endorsed three Republicans running for Senate on Wednesday, firing the starting pistol on what's shaping up to be a nasty primary season for the GOP. The Great America Alliance - an antiestablishment group which counts Bannon's political adviser Andy Surabian as a strategist - announced it will support West Virginia Attorney General Patrick Morrisey (R), Montana state Auditor Matt Rosendale (R) and Rep. Marsha Blackburn (R-Tenn.) in their bids for Senate.

---

House

House Intel leaders to release Facebook ads purchased by Kremlin-linked groups

Erin Kelly, USA Today

Leaders of the House Intelligence Committee said Wednesday they will soon make public the Facebook ads that were purchased by Kremlin-linked groups as part of Russia's efforts to meddle in the 2016 presidential election. Rep. Mike Conaway, R-Texas, who is leading the panel's Russia investigation, said the committee will release about 3,000 ads provided to the panel by Facebook.

Curbelo: Regulatory Fix to Bump Stocks a 'Big Mistake'

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Rep. Carlos Curbelo on Wednesday called Speaker Paul D. Ryan's push for a regulatory fix banning bump stocks "a big mistake." "If we agree that this should be banned we should have the courage of our convictions and proceed with legislation that will make that explicitly clear," the Florida Republican said.

Opposition mounts against bill to renew surveillance program

Katie Bo Williams, The Hill

A carefully crafted compromise proposal to reform the NSA's warrantless surveillance program is in trouble, with opposition coming from libertarian-leaning conservatives and members of the House Intelligence Committee. The House Freedom Caucus appears dissatisfied with the National Security Agency reform measure, which was drafted by a bipartisan group of Judiciary Committee lawmakers led by chairman Bob Goodlatte (R-Va.).

House Dem pulls back from forcing impeachment vote

Cristina Marcos, The Hill

Rep. Al Green (D-Texas) stopped short of forcing a vote Wednesday on articles of impeachment against President Trump, but insisted his push isn't over yet. Green announced his intention on the House floor to offer the impeachment articles as a privileged resolution, which under House rules allows any member to force a vote within two legislative days.

Key House Republican Plans Bill to Rein In Credit Bureaus After Equifax Hack

Andrew Ackerman, The Wall Street Journal

A top House Republican is moving to boost federal oversight of credit-reporting companies, the first broad legislative effort to rein in the industry in response to the massive hack disclosed by Equifax Inc. last month. Rep. Patrick McHenry of North Carolina plans to introduce a bill on Thursday that is expected to require the companies to submit to regular federal cybersecurity reviews.

D.C. Republicans to Grimm: Stay in Staten Island

Rachael Bade and John Bresnahan, Politico

House Republicans have a message for ex-congressman and convicted felon Michael Grimm: Stay home. The disgraced former New York congressman, who served seven months in federal prison for tax evasion, wants to reclaim his old Staten Island seat, declaring a primary challenge against his successor, GOP Rep. Dan Donovan.

---

States

Former President Barack Obama to campaign for Ralph Northam in Richmond

Andrew Cain, Richmond Times-Dispatch

Former President Barack Obama will return to the campaign trail next Thursday to stump for Democratic gubernatorial nominee Ralph Northam at a rally in Richmond. Details on the location of the get-out-the-vote rally were not yet available.

Rockey Moore Cummings launches bid for Maryland governor

Ovetta Wiggins, The Washington Post

Maya Rockey Moore Cummings, a policy consultant who is married to longtime U.S. Rep. Elijah E. Cummings (D-Md.), is launching a bid for Maryland governor, becoming the second woman and the third African American to join the crowded Democratic primary field. "I truly believe Maryland is punching below its fighting weight," Rockey Moore Cummings, who is also a small-business owner, said in explaining her decision to seek the nomination to challenge Gov. Larry Hogan in 2018.

Covered California slaps a surcharge on health plans as Trump remains coy on subsidies

Chad Terhune, Los Angeles Times

California's health insurance exchange said Wednesday it has ordered insurers to add a surcharge to certain policies next year because the Trump administration has yet to commit to paying a key set of consumer subsidies under the Affordable Care Act. The decision to impose a 12.4% surcharge on silver-level health plans in 2018 means the total premium increase for those policies will average nearly 25%, according to Covered California.

Democrats Say Florida Nursing Home Deaths May Dog Scott If He Runs for Senate

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

In a tragedy at a nursing home whose air conditioners shut down during Hurricane Irma, Democratic strategists in Florida are seeing a possible cudgel against Gov. Rick Scott should he run against Democratic Sen. Bill Nelson next year. But Republican operatives defended Scott's handling of the disaster and said his actions could ultimately prove to be an asset in a potential campaign.

---

Advocacy

Facebook's Sandberg meets with lawmakers amid Russia probe

Mary Clare Jalonick, The Associated Press

One of Facebook's top executives met Wednesday with House members investigating the company's Russia-linked ads, and told them the social media giant is serious about dealing with the issue. Sheryl Sandberg, Facebook's chief operating officer, told lawmakers the company is working hard to ensure Americans "understand what the propaganda is that they may or may not be reading," said House Republican Rep. Mike Conaway, who is leading the House intelligence committee probe.

Business, farm groups lobby the Hill as contentious phase of NAFTA talks begin

John Lauinger, Politico

On Capitol Hill on Wednesday, there were signs of the increased stakes in the NAFTA talks: Business and agricultural groups mounted a lobbying push targeting more than 250 House members, and the Ways and Means chairman seemed to say businesses have reason to worry. At the White House, in the most visible and symbolic moment of the day, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau met with President Donald Trump, who relishes being unpredictable.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Trump May Do the Harm to Insurers That Congress Couldn't

Max Nisen, Bloomberg

Despite seven years of alleged prep work and more than seven months of high-pressure effort, destroying the Affordable Care Act was beyond Congress this year. But President Donald Trump might manage it anyway, with an executive order he could sign this week.

Mr. Trump Alone Can Order a Nuclear Strike. Congress Can Change That.

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

The broad debate over President Trump's fitness for the difficult and demanding office he holds has recently been reframed in a more pointed and urgent way: Does he understand, and can he responsibly manage, the most destructive nuclear arsenal on earth? The question arises for several reasons.

An Air-Traffic Winner

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The House has been working for months behind the scenes on the most significant improvement to commercial air travel in decades: Converting Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) air-traffic control into an operation governed by pilots, airlines, controllers and other industry experts. This would be good news for the economy and the traveling public, if Republicans don't wig out.

Faster, Steve Bannon. Kill! Kill!

Robert Kagan, The Washington Post

Rarely has a political party more deserved the destruction the Republican Party may be about to suffer at the hands of President Trump's former strategist, ideological guru and onetime puppeteer Steve Bannon. It was obvious during the earliest days of the campaign that Trump never intended to be either the leader or the protector of the Republican Party.

---

Research Reports and Polling

U.S. Voters Feel Good About Economy, But Not Trump, Quinnipiac University National Poll Finds; Voters Take A Knee For Both Trump And NFL Players

Quinnipiac University

American voters feel better about the economy and good about their own pocketbooks, but still disapprove 56 - 38 percent of the job President Donald Trump is doing, according to a Quinnipiac University national poll released today. Today's approval rating compares to a 57 - 36 percent disapproval in a September 27 survey by the independent Quinnipiac University.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: House to Vote Today on Short-Term Government Funding Bill
Date: Thursday, December 21, 2017 9:22:46 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- House Republican leaders are planning to vote on a short-term funding bill today in hopes of avoiding a government shutdown, with the Senate expected to take up the measure after House passage. In addition to the legislation that would fund the government through Jan. 19, House GOP leaders plan to vote on an $81 billion disaster-relief measure, which faces an uphill battle in the Senate and might not receive a vote there until next year. (Politico)
- The nomination of KT McFarland, former national security adviser Michael Flynn's ex-deputy, to be U.S. ambassador to Singapore is in jeopardy. Flynn's plea agreement with special counsel Robert Mueller appeared to contradict McFarland's congressional testimony, prompting some senators to question her interactions with Flynn regarding Russia. (CNN)

- Justice Department prosecutors are asking Federal Bureau of Investigation agents for information about their now-dormant criminal investigation into the Uranium One deal, which critics have linked to Bill Clinton and Hillary Clinton. The internal questioning comes on the orders of Attorney General Jeff Sessions after an assistant attorney general told Congress that the Justice Department would examine whether a special counsel was warranted. (NBC News)
- President Donald Trump issued his first commuted sentence for a federal prisoner, a commutation that had bipartisan support. Trump freed Sholom Rubashkin, the former owner of a kosher meat-processing plant, who was sentenced in 2009 to 27 years in prison for financial crimes. (The Hill)

Chart Review

Polls show sizable advantage for Democrats in 2018 midterm election

Politico

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

Sens. McConnell, Warner speaks at Axios event

8 a.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

2017 Brands in Review

This year, Morning Consult conducted nearly 1 million survey interviews on nearly 1,000 brands. Get a never-before-seen look at how public perception changed for the world's biggest brands.

General

Prosecutors ask FBI agents for info on Uranium One deal

Tom Winter et al., NBC News

On the orders of Attorney General Jeff Sessions, Justice Department prosecutors have begun asking FBI agents to explain the evidence they found in a now dormant criminal investigation into a controversial uranium deal that critics have linked to Bill and Hillary Clinton, multiple law enforcement officials told NBC News. The interviews with FBI agents are part of the Justice Department's effort to fulfill a promise an assistant attorney general made to Congress last month to examine whether a special counsel was warranted to look into what has become known as the Uranium One deal, a senior Justice Department official said.

Democrats ready year-long assault against tax cut package

David Weigel, The Washington Post

In just six seconds, the new ad from the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee previews an attack that will have millions of dollars behind it in 2018. "The Republican tax scheme gives huge breaks to corporations but raises taxes on middle class families," says a narrator, as a woman checks her mailbox and recoils.

Over Golf and an Airport Chat, Trump and GOP Hashed Out a Historic Tax Plan

Peter Nicholas et al., The Wall Street Journal

Over rounds of golf at President Donald Trump's club in northern Virginia in October, Sen. Lindsey Graham offered a warning: If the tax plan fails, the Republicans are "dead" as a party. Coming off the slow-rolling collapse of the party's effort to overhaul health-care laws, "the consequences of going o-for-2," Mr. Graham (R., S.C.) said, would be "just devastating."

Supreme Court sets guidelines for DACA legal fight

Josh Gerstein, Politico

The Supreme Court on Wednesday issued what appeared to be a compromise ruling that laid out guidelines for lower courts as they wrestle with legal issues stemming from the Trump administration's decision to wind down the immigration program providing quasi-legal status and work permits to so-called Dreamers. Less than two weeks ago, the justices split, 5-4, along ideological lines as they halted a lower court's orders requiring federal officials to assemble and disclose a large volume of documents related to the decision announced in September to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, also known as DACA.

Pawlenty eyes return to national stage but in a new GOP era

Thomas Beaumont and Kyle Potter, The Associated Press

Long ago, in a seemingly distant political universe, Tim Pawlenty was a fresh-faced Republican star with blue-collar appeal and presidential prospects. Now The former Minnesota governor is a high-powered banking lobbyist, and he's eyeing a climb back onto the national stage.

---

Presidential

Trump issues first commuted prison sentence

Jonathan Easley, The Hill

President Trump on Wednesday issued his first commuted sentence for a federal prisoner, freeing Sholom Rubashkin, the former owner of the country's largest kosher meat-processing plant who in 2009 was sentenced to 27 years in prison for a litany of financial crimes. The commutation had bipartisan support from lawmakers and had become a cause among many leading voices in the legal community, petitioning the Obama and Trump administrations to draw attention to a sentence they said was wildly disproportionate to the crime that had been committed.

Trump Plans Tax Signing on Jan. 3 Due to Technical Issue

Erik Wasson, Bloomberg

President Donald Trump plans to sign the tax bill on Jan. 3 to ensure automatic spending cuts to Medicare and other programs don't take effect, according to a House Republican aide familiar with the plans. The White House informed House GOP members of the timetable, following the likely decision by House Republicans to leave the so-called PAYGO provision out of a year-end spending deal to avoid a government shut down before Friday, the person said who asked not to be named because the plan hasn't been publicly announced.

US allowing Ukraine to buy arms from US companies

Michelle Kosinski and Eli Watkins, CNN

The Trump administration is now allowing the export of arms to Ukraine, marking a potentially significant turn against Russia. US State Department spokeswoman Heather Nauert said the department notified Congress on December 13 that it had approved an export license, which allows Ukraine to buy certain light weapons and small arms from US manufacturers.

Mueller Avoids Pitfalls by Giving Trump the Silent Treatment

Chris Strohm et al., Bloomberg

Through all the controversy, threats and noise surrounding the Trump-Russia investigation, one person has been conspicuously silent: Special Counsel Robert Mueller. The former FBI director hasn't uttered a single word in public since he was appointed in May to lead the probe into Russian meddling in the U.S. election despite increasingly combative attacks by Republicans and their allies on the FBI, the Justice Department and the integrity of his probe.

---

Senate

Senate unlikely to advance McFarland nomination amid questions about Flynn contacts with Russia

Manu Raju, CNN

President Donald Trump's nominee to be the ambassador to Singapore could be derailed in the Senate amid questions about whether she properly disclosed to Congress her communications with former national security adviser Michael Flynn, according to senators and sources from both parties. KT McFarland, who previously served as Flynn's deputy and is now Trump's nominee to be ambassador to Singapore, came under renewed scrutiny earlier this month after Flynn's plea agreement with Justice Department special counsel Robert Mueller appeared to be at odds with her testimony to Congress.

Cochran's future in the Senate in doubt

John Bresnahan, Politico

Sen. Thad Cochran, chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee, hasn't presided over a hearing since early September. The Mississippi Republican has not given a speech on the Senate floor all year, and he's introduced only two bills during that time, both of them minor.

Franken to resign in early January

Max Greenwood, The Hill

Sen. Al Franken will step down on Jan. 2, a spokesman for the Minnesota Democrat said Wednesday. Franken announced earlier this month that he would resign from the Senate in the face of sexual harassment allegations.

Senate shields taxpayer-funded harassment settlements from public

Elana Schor, Politico

The congressional office that handles sexual harassment complaints, along with a top Republican senator, have refused to divulge information about taxpayer dollars doled out to settle harassment claims - and pressure is mounting on them to come clean. Congress' Office of Compliance, which oversees payments to resolve sexual harassment claims and other workplace disputes, has given data on the Senate's taxpayer-funded settlements to Senate Rules Committee Chairman Richard Shelby (R-Ala.).

Senators Threaten Filibuster to Block Key Surveillance Law

Byron Tau, The Wall Street Journal

A bipartisan pair of senators vowed Wednesday to mount a filibuster of any long-term extension of a key surveillance law, complicating the efforts of congressional leaders to keep one of the most important spying tools in the government's arsenal from expiring. Sens. Rand Paul, a Kentucky Republican, and Ron Wyden, an Oregon Democrat, said they would block consideration of any long-term extension of the surveillance law.

Immigration Talks Gain Steam, but No Deal Seen Until Next Year

Laura Meckler and Kristina Peterson, The Wall Street Journal

Bipartisan talks over legislation to legalize young undocumented immigrants are gaining steam, key senators said, but top Democrats who have pushed for quick action said any fix won't happen by year's end. The immigration debate is one of many matters involved in year-end talks over a bill to keep the government funded.

---

House

House to vote on government funding Thursday

Rachael Bade and John Bresnahan, Politico

Speaker Paul Ryan and his top lieutenants plan to bring a short-term government funding bill to the House floor Thursday despite internal resistance - in hopes of averting a shutdown and then leaving town for the holidays. GOP leaders are betting that their conference doesn't want to trample on its tax victory by shuttering federal agencies.

U.S. lawmakers seek temporary extension to internet spying program

Dustin Volz, Reuters

Republican leaders in the U.S. House of Representatives are working to build support to temporarily extend the National Security Agency's expiring internet surveillance program by tucking it into a stop-gap funding measure, lawmakers said. The month-long extension of the surveillance law, known as Section 702 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, would punt a contentious national security issue into the new year in an attempt to buy lawmakers more time to hash out differences over various proposed privacy reforms.

House Republicans quietly investigate perceived corruption at DOJ, FBI

Kyle Cheney and John Bresnahan, Politico

A group of House Republicans has gathered secretly for weeks in the Capitol in an effort to build a case that senior leaders of the Justice Department and FBI improperly - and perhaps criminally - mishandled the contents of a dossier that describes alleged ties between President Donald Trump and Russia, according to four people familiar with their plans. A subset of the Republican members of the House intelligence committee, led by Chairman Devin Nunes of California, has been quietly working parallel to the committee's high-profile inquiry into Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election.

FBI deputy director to sit for closed interview with House panels

Sarah N. Lynch, Reuters

The FBI'S deputy director, Andrew McCabe, will appear for a closed-door interview on Thursday with two key U.S. congressional committees, after Republicans asked him to discuss the bureau's handling of its Hillary Clinton email probe. The Justice Department confirmed in a letter on Wednesday to the chairmen of the House of Representatives Judiciary and Oversight committees that McCabe will sit for a transcribed interview, but said McCabe will not be permitted to discuss anything related to Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election.

Fear and yelling in L.A. congressman's office led to silence on harassment, aides say

Emily Cadei, McClatchy DC

Los Angeles-area Congressman Brad Sherman says none of his staff ever complained about longtime aide and California Assemblyman Matt Dababneh, who's been accused of sexual harassment while working in the congressman's district office. Eight former aides said the environment in Sherman's D.C. and California offices was so toxic, it was laughable to think junior staff would have felt comfortable raising concerns about harassment - or anything else.

---

States

Virginia court tosses one-vote victory that briefly ended GOP majority in House

Jim Morrison and Fenit Nirappil, The Washington Post

Control of Virginia's legislature hung in limbo Wednesday after a three-judge panel declined to certify the recount of a key House race, saying that a questionable ballot should be counted in favor of the Republican and tying a race that Democrats thought they had won by a single vote. "The court declares there is no winner in this election," Newport News Circuit Court Judge Bryant L. Sugg said after the panel deliberated for more than two hours.

State officials panicked over children's health program

Rachana Pradhan, Politico

Families are becoming increasingly panicked about children losing health insurance without new funding from Congress, state officials warned Wednesday as a new report showed nearly 2 million kids could be dropped from coverage next month. Roughly 1.9 million children across the country could lose insurance in January if Congress fails to renew Children's Health Insurance Program funding, according to a new report from the Georgetown University Center for Children and Families.

Missouri attorney general will investigate Gov. Greitens' use of secret texting app

Jason Hancock, The Kansas City Star

Missouri Attorney General Josh Hawley has launched an investigation into whether Gov. Eric Greitens and his staff illegally destroyed public records by using an app that erases text messages. News of the investigation comes nearly two weeks after The Star first revealed that the governor and his senior staff use Confide, an app that destroys a text message after it has been read.

State Sen. Jack Latvala quits in face of corruption investigation, possible expulsion

Steve Bousquet, The Miami Herald

Facing a public corruption investigation and possible expulsion from the Florida Senate, Jack Latvala resigned Wednesday, a day after a retired judge concluded that he likely violated state corruption laws by trading legislative favors for physical contact and for sexually harassing and groping multiple women. Latvala, 66, of Clearwater, a longtime Tampa Bay leader and Republican candidate for governor, sent a letter of resignation to Senate President Joe Negron in an abrupt and dramatic end to a controversial career that spanned three decades.

---

Advocacy

Ex-Industry Lobbyists Win Top Jobs in Agencies They Once Fought Jennifer A Dlouhy and Jesse Hamilton

In his first year as president, Trump studded his cabinet with people who previously fought to undermine what some see as the traditional missions of the agencies they now lead. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, for example, built his political career suing the agency and challenging what he termed its "activist agenda."

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Trump's Opportunity to Save American Farmers

Dan Conston, Morning Consult

President Donald Trump was elected in large part on a promise to protect and restore key forgotten industries and help middle-class families get ahead. He has a unique opportunity to get a win on both and secure the promises he made during his campaign to working-class families.

Tax Reform Take 2: The States

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Congress passed the most sweeping tax reform since 1986 on Wednesday, and with any luck that success for the country will trigger a new reform debate in many states. To wit, how much will they have to cut income-tax rates to retain and attract the high-income earners who finance so much of their state budgets?

Congress Refuses to Do Right by Children's Health Care

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

As Republican lawmakers celebrate the passage of a tax bill that will make the wealthiest Americans richer, many lower-income families are faced with the real possibility that their children will soon lose their health insurance because Congress didn't care enough to renew funding for it. The Children's Health Insurance Program has enjoyed bipartisan support since its creation in 1997.

---

Research Reports and Polling

From #MAGA to #MeToo: A look at U.S. public opinion in 2017

Michael Dimock, Pew Research Center

In his first year as U.S. president, Donald Trump represented a clear break in style and substance from his predecessor, Barack Obama - and from many of the chief executives who came before them. The businessman-turned-politician upended Washington with unrestrained rhetoric and an "America First" agenda that included renegotiating international trade pacts, withdrawing from a worldwide climate change agreement and curtailing immigration into the United States.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: McConnell Says Focus Is Now on Repealing, Not Replacing, Obamacare
Date: Tuesday, July 18, 2017 8:43:23 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

The latest edition of Morning Consult's Governor Approval Rankings is now live. See the full results here.

Top Stories

- Two more GOP senators - Mike Lee of Utah and Jerry Moran of Kansas - said they oppose the latest iteration of the Senate's health care bill. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) said the chamber would now turn to "a repeal of Obamacare with a two-year delay to provide for a stable transition period." (Roll Call)

- The House Budget Committee released a blueprint of its spending plan for fiscal year 2018 that calls for $621.5 billion in defense spending and $511 billion for non-defense spending. Passage of a budget resolution would unlock a key procedural tool for Republican leaders hoping to tackle tax reform. (The New York Times)
- Republican governors are thriving in blue states like Massachusetts, Maryland and Vermont, according to a new 50-state voter survey. (Morning Consult) In Alabama, 64 percent of voters approve of Gov. Kay Ivey (R), who took over for scandal-plagued Robert Bentley (R) after he stepped down earlier this year. (Morning Consult)
- Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin reiterated that his preference for raising the debt ceiling is "to get it clean," meaning without spending cuts that could attract support from conservative lawmakers. He called for lawmakers to "get it done sooner rather than later." (The Washington Post)

Chart Review

America's Most and Least Popular Governors - July 2017 Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

Brookings Institution's Municipal Finance Conference 7:45 a.m.

---

Energy Secretary Perry speaks at National Press Club 8:45 a.m.

---

Gov. Fallin, Sens. Harris, Booker and Reps. Love, Jackson Lee, Collins at Justice Action Network event 9 a.m.

---

Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on Callista Gingrich's nomination to be ambassador to the Vatican	10 a.m.
--	---------

---

Rep. Massie speaks at Heritage Foundation event on aviation	11:30 a.m.
---	------------

WEDNESDAY

Center for American Progress event on voting rights	9 a.m.
---	--------

---

Sen. Kaine speaks at Brookings Institution event on foreign policy	9 a.m.
--	--------

---

House Budget Committee marks up 2018 budget resolution	10 a.m.
--	---------

---

Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on the Foreign Agents Registration Act	10 a.m.
---	---------

THURSDAY

Senate Judiciary Committee meets to vote on nominations	9:30 a.m.
---	-----------

---

J.D. Vance speaks at Brookings Institution event on economic trends	10 a.m.
---	---------

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

Steven Mnuchin, Trump's treasury secretary, is hurtling toward his first fiasco

Damian Paletta, The Washington Post

Shortly before he was sworn in as treasury secretary, Steven Mnuchin spoke with his predecessor to get some advice. Pay attention to the debt problems in Puerto Rico, Treasury Secretary Jack Lew warned Mnuchin, and remember that China's currency issues are more complex than the incoming president, Donald Trump, had suggested during the campaign, according to two people briefed on the exchange who spoke on the condition of anonymity to reveal private discussions.

Jeff Sessions Said A Plan Is Coming To Seize More Property From Drug Defendants

Dominic Holden, BuzzFeed News

US Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced Monday he will soon release a plan to seize more property from people accused of profiting from drugs. Addressing prosecutors from around the country, Sessions appeared to pledge the department will expand a practice that has been criticized for taking assets from citizens who in many cases haven't been convicted of a crime.

As Paperwork Goes Missing, Private Student Loan Debts May Be Wiped Away

Stacy Cowley and Jessica Silver-Greenberg, The New York Times

Tens of thousands of people who took out private loans to pay for college but have not been able to keep up payments may get their debts wiped away because critical paperwork is missing. The troubled loans, which total at least $5 billion, are at the center of a protracted legal dispute between the student borrowers and a group of creditors who have aggressively pursued them in court after they fell behind on payments.

Capitol Police Officer Injured in Car Crash

Andrew Breiner, Roll Call

A car crash near the Library of Congress on Monday injured a Capitol Police officer and the car's driver, authorities said. It is unclear at this point what caused the crash, but Capitol Police said around the same time that it planned to "disrupt" a suspicious vehicle's trunk shortly after the crash occurred.

---

Presidential

Trump blames Dems, 'a few Republicans' for collapse of healthcare bill

Rebecca Savransky, The Hill

President Trump on Tuesday put blame on Democrats and "a few Republicans" for the collapse of the Senate GOP's healthcare bill. "We were let down by all of the Democrats and a few Republicans," Trump tweeted.

U.S. Says It Aims to Cut Trade Deficits Through Nafta Revamp

Andrew Mayeda et al., Bloomberg

President Donald Trump said the U.S. wants to reduce trade imbalances with Mexico and Canada and boost exports of everything from farm goods to financial services as it prepares to kick off talks to revamp the North American Free Trade Agreement. The office of Trump's top trade negotiator on Monday released the administration's list of negotiating objectives for talks with Mexico and Canada that are expected to begin as early as Aug. 16.

Trump Certification Of Iran Nuclear Deal Comes With Tough Talk

Mark Seibel, BuzzFeed News

The Trump administration, on the verge of renewing its certification of the Iran nuclear deal, issued tough talking points on Monday - obtained by BuzzFeed News - to supporters promising that it will continue to search for ways to modify the agreement. The talking points said that the Treasury Department would impose sanction on seven entities Iranian government agencies and five individuals in an effort to show determination to punish Iran for what it called "malign activities" that make Iran "one of the most dangerous threats to US interests."

Growing cast of lawyers signing up to defend Trump and team

Julie Pace and Julie Bykowicz, The Associated Press

As the government's Russia investigations heat up, a growing cast of lawyers is signing up to defend President Donald Trump and his associates. But the interests of those lawyers - and their clients - don't always align, adding a new layer of drama and suspicion in a White House already rife with internal rivalries. Trump himself has both an outside legal team and a new in-house special counsel, Ty Cobb, for Russia-related matters. White House senior adviser Jared Kushner, who is also Trump's son-in-law, has a pair of high-powered attorneys working for him.

Trump Says He Has Signed More Bills Than Any President, Ever. He Hasn't.

Michael D. Shear and Karen Yourish, The New York Times

To hear President Trump tell it, his first six months in the White House should be judged in part by the legislation he has signed into law. At rallies, in speeches and on Twitter, Mr. Trump repeatedly boasts of the bills he has signed - 42 as of this week.

---

Senate

McConnell Abandons Obamacare Repeal and Replace Effort

Joe Williams, Roll Call

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell pulled the plug late Monday on the Republican effort to overhaul the U.S. health insurance system and pledged the chamber will now focus on only dismantling the 2010 health care law. "Regretfully, it is now apparent that the effort to repeal and immediately replace the failure of Obamacare will not be successful," the Kentucky Republican said.

Obama Officials Meeting With Senate Intelligence Panel

Mary Clare Jalonick, The Associated Press

Former National Security Adviser Susan Rice will speak to staff on the Senate intelligence committee this week. The panel, which is investigating Russian interference in U.S. elections, is interviewing several former Obama administration officials.

Key Democrat calls for ouster of DeVos's civil rights chief in light of 'egregious' remarks about sexual assault

Emma Brown, The Washington Post

Sen. Patty Murray of Washington, the top Democrat on the Senate education committee, is calling for the ouster of the Education Department's civil rights chief, saying she is unfit for the job. Candice Jackson, the acting head of the agency's Office for Civil Rights, triggered fierce criticism last week when she told the New York Times that "90 percent" of campus sexual-assault complaints "fall into the category of 'we were both drunk,' 'we broke up, and six months later I found myself under a Title IX investigation because she just decided that our last sleeping together was not quite right."

Rep. Hartzler Opts Against Missouri Senate Run; All Eyes on Hawley

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

Rep. Vicky Hartzler (R-Mo.) said Monday she would not seek her party's nomination to challenge Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill, who is widely viewed as one of the most vulnerable senators seeking re-election next fall. The announcement came less than two weeks after Rep. Ann Wagner (R-Mo.), who had been expected to run, said she would instead seek another term in Congress rather than risk losing her federal perch in a Senate race with little certainty for either party.

---

House

A New G.O.P. Battle Begins as Republicans Look to Pass a Budget Alan Rappeport, The New York Times

Republicans in Congress may be locked in an internal battle over their stumbling health legislation, but on Tuesday the fight begins over another herculean legislative lift: the budget. The House Budget Committee unveiled a blueprint of its 2018 budget resolution on Tuesday morning, setting up a potentially heated debate over the fractious Republican Party's fiscal priorities for the coming year.

Conservative caucus withholding support from Republican budget Niv Elis, The Hill

Members of the House Freedom Caucus are withholding support for the House GOP budget as lawmakers prepare for a committee vote on Wednesday. Conservatives in the Freedom Caucus would not have the votes to block approval of the budget by the House Budget Committee, but their opposition could sink the measure on final passage by the full House.

Angie Craig Back for Rematch Against Jason Lewis in Minnesota Simone Pathé, Roll Call

Angie Craig lost last year's open-seat race in Minnesota's 2nd District by less than 2 points. On Monday, the Democratic-Farmer-Labor candidate announced she'd try to unseat last year's rival, freshman GOP Rep. Jason Lewis.

Hurd Defends District Lines in Court

Kyle Stewart, Roll Call

Rep. William Hurd said more districts should be drawn like his, defending Texas' 23rd Congressional District ahead of a federal court decision on alleged racial gerrymandering that could impact the 2018 midterm elections. "My district is competitive, and that's a good thing...because it forces people to talk to a broader sense of the community," Hurd said Saturday as the closing witness in a trial over whether the district lines should be redrawn.

---

States

Republican Governors Thrive in Blue States, Polling Shows

David Mark, Morning Consult

A trio of Republican governors in deep blue states could - again - prove elusive electoral targets for Democrats in 2018. Govs. Charlie Baker of Massachusetts, Maryland's Larry Hogan and Phil Scott in Vermont sport enviable approval ratings, Morning Consult's latest survey of governors shows.

Ala. Governor Shines After Replacing Scandal-Plagued Predecessor

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

Alabama Gov. Kay Ivey (R), who ascended to the job after scandal forced out her predecessor, is among the country's most popular governors, just three months into her term. The former lieutenant governor, who took over in April after now-former Gov. Robert Bentley was forced to step down, is viewed favorably by 64 percent of her constituents, according to a Morning Consult survey of voters in all 50 states.

Gov. Eric Greitens' drug monitoring executive order aligns Missouri with rest of states

Jason Hancock and Andy Marso, The Kansas City Star

Missouri will no longer be the only state without a prescription drug monitoring program after Gov. Eric Greitens issued an executive order creating one on Monday in St. Louis. Greitens' order directs the Department of Health and Senior Services to build the database, which will be designed to help prevent doctor shopping, by which people get medicine from multiple physicians to feed an addiction or to sell.

Two cabinet appointments, and an extraordinary allegation, roil Maryland politics

Ovetta Wiggins, The Washington Post

Two Maryland cabinet secretaries are the unlikely figures at the center of a growing political brawl between the state's Republican governor and the Democratic-majority legislature that could end up in court. The dispute, over whether the legislature can prohibit the state from paying appointees whose nominations were sent to the state Senate but not approved, prompted an extraordinary allegation this week from Doug Mayer, Gov. Larry Hogan's chief spokesman.

Ethics panel: Beshear shouldn't investigate Bevin if he might run for governor

Daniel Desrochers, Lexington Herald-Leader

Attorney General Andy Beshear shouldn't investigate Gov. Matt Bevin if he might run for governor in 2019, a state ethics panel advised Monday. As long as Beshear, a Democrat, is considering a gubernatorial bid, he should refer any investigation of Bevin to a separate law enforcement entity, the Executive Branch Ethics Commission said in an advisory opinion.

Can Roy Cooper Show Democrats How to Win Again?

Edward-Isaac Dove, Politico

Roy Cooper wants Democrats to do something they haven't done in state politics in years: Go on offense. His eyes on 2018 state legislature races and potential special elections in between, the North Carolina governor is launching a multi-million dollar, multi-year effort to knock Republicans out of the state capital.

---

Advocacy

Outgoing Ethics Chief: U.S. Is 'Close to a Laughingstock'

Eric Lipton and Nicholas Fandos, The New York Times

Actions by President Trump and his administration have created a historic ethics crisis, the departing head of the Office of Government Ethics said. He called for major changes in federal law to expand the power and reach of the oversight office and combat the threat.

Kelly Ayotte's back - as an environmental advocate

Katie Glueck, McClatchy DC

The faction of the Republican Party that cares much about climate change is small. But it just scored an influential advocate with deep connections in Congress and in conservative political circles across the country.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

In Congress, Obstructionists Are Obstructing Themselves

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

Republican legislative leaders are in a bind. While they appear to have failed for now in their goal of destroying the Affordable Care Act, their eagerness to shower tax breaks on the wealthy at the expense of health coverage for millions of Americans has crimped their ability to pass other fiscal legislation.

The Trumps and the Truth

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Even Donald Trump might agree that a major reason he won the 2016 election is because voters couldn't abide Hillary Clinton's legacy of scandal, deception and stonewalling. Yet on the story of Russia's meddling in the 2016 election, Mr. Trump and his family are repeating the mistakes that doomed Mrs. Clinton.

Trump Just Came Very Close to Killing the Iran Deal

Eli Lake, Bloomberg

Under President Barack Obama this kind of thing was routine. Since the Iran nuclear deal was reached in 2015, every few months the State Department would inform Congress that the Tehran government was in compliance. Then Donald Trump was elected president.

---

Research Reports and Polling

America's Most and Least Popular Governors - July 2017

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

Familiar faces remain affixed the top and bottom of the new Morning Consult Governor Approval Rankings, based on interviews with more than 195,000 registered voters across the U.S. from April 1 through July 10. Chris Christie (R-N.J.) and Sam Brownback (R-Kan.) anchor the list of 50 governors, while their GOP colleagues in two blue states, Charlie Baker of Massachusetts and Larry Hogan of Maryland, lead the way with supermajority support from their constituents.

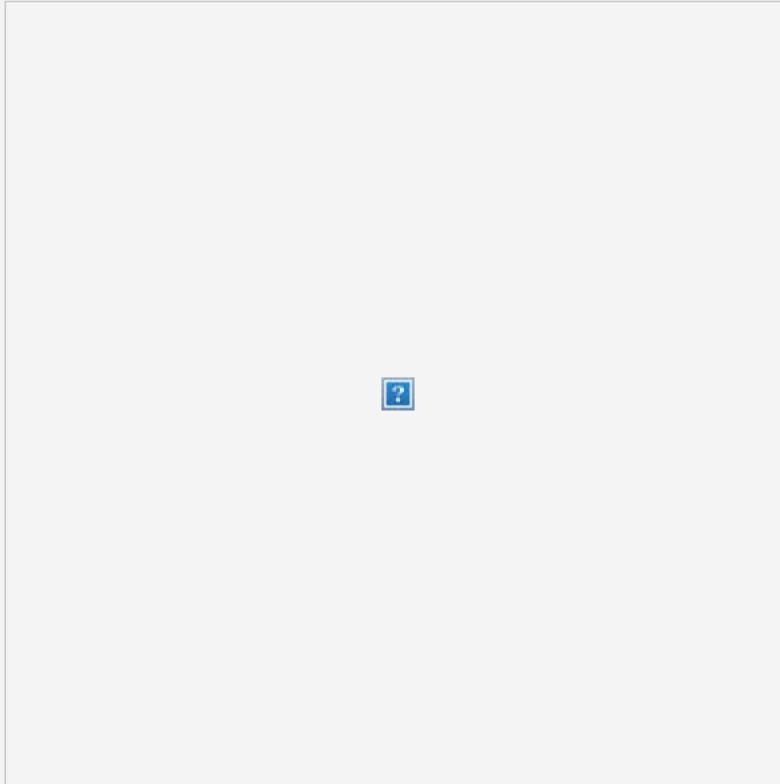

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Polling Shows Growing GOP Support for Tougher Gun Control Laws
Date: Wednesday, October 11, 2017 9:03:06 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Support from Republican voters for stricter gun control laws has risen 5 percentage points, to 49 percent, since June, according to a new poll. The nationwide survey also found that 75 percent of GOP voters support banning bump stocks - devices used by the Las Vegas shooter that speed up the rate at which semi-automatic weapons can fire. (Morning Consult)
- The Supreme Court dismissed a case challenging the expired version of President Donald Trump's travel ban, marking a legal victory for the administration, which had asked the court to drop the case after the temporary ban was replaced with an indefinite one affecting eight countries. (USA Today)

- The Trump administration increased its request from Congress for emergency hurricane relief funding to almost $35 billion, with the Office of Management and Budget asking for an additional $4.9 billion to help "address the immediate liquidity issue" for the government of Puerto Rico. The additional amount could be added to the recovery package the House is expected to approve this week. (Politico)
- Trump is scheduled to pitch the Republican tax plan today in Harrisburg, Pa., where he's expected to tout "a $4,000 pay raise" for the average American household. However, his economic advisers have said such a benefit would only materialize over eight years, with the annual amount closer to $500. (Bloomberg)

Chart Review

**GOP Voter Support for Stronger Gun Control Measures Is Growing, Polling Shows**

Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

Rep. Sinema at Bloomberg Government event on electronic payments	8 a.m.
--	--------

---

Reps. Neal, Roskam at tax policy event hosted by The Hill	8 a.m.
---	--------

---

Third Way event on federal student loans	9 a.m.
--	--------

---

Bipartisan Policy Center event on Medicare, Social Security	10 a.m.
---	---------

---

Rep. McHenry speaks at Financial Services Roundtable event on tax reform	11:30 a.m.
--	------------

---

Atlantic Council event on defensible cyberspace	5 p.m.
---	--------

THURSDAY

HUD's Carson testifies at House Financial Services Committee hearing	9:30 a.m.
--	-----------

---

Energy Secretary Perry testifies at House Energy and Commerce hearing	10 a.m.
---	---------

---

House Oversight Committee hearing on 2020 Census	10 a.m.
--	---------

---

Heritage Foundation event on Iran policy	12 p.m.
--	---------

FRIDAY

AEI event on U.S. agricultural policy	1:30 p.m.
---------------------------------------	-----------

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

North Korean Hackers Stole U.S.-South Korean Military Plans, Lawmaker Says

Choe Sang-Hun, The New York Times

North Korean hackers stole a vast cache of data, including classified wartime contingency plans jointly drawn by the United States and South Korea, when they breached the computer network of the South Korean military last year, a South Korean lawmaker said Tuesday. One of the plans included the South Korean military's plan to remove the North Korean leader, Kim Jong-un, referred to as a "decapitation" plan, should war break out on the Korean Peninsula, the lawmaker, Rhee Cheol-hee, told reporters.

Agriculture Secretary Perdue Favors Food Stamp Restrictions Heather Haddon and Jacob Bunge, The Wall Street Journal

Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue criticized the distribution of food stamps to Americans who are able to work, a stance that could concern food retailers who make billions of dollars in sales to the federal program's beneficiaries. Speaking at the WSJ Global Food Forum on Tuesday, Mr. Perdue said that relying on food stamps has become a "lifestyle" for some able-bodied adults.

Navy punishes 2 more over USS John S. McCain wreck The Associated Press

The commander and executive officer of the USS John S. McCain were relieved of their duties Wednesday due to lost confidence after the warship and an oil tanker collided near Singapore in August. The cause of the Aug. 21 collision is still under investigation but the U.S. Navy described it as preventable.

Obamas 'disgusted' by Weinstein reports Henry C. Jackson, Politico

Former President Barack Obama and former first lady Michelle Obama said Tuesday night that they were "disgusted" by recent reports detailing serial sexual misconduct by film producer and Democratic donor Harvey Weinstein. "Any man who demeans and degrades women in such fashion needs to be condemned and held accountable, regardless of wealth or status," the Obamas said in a joint statement.

---

Presidential

In victory for Trump, Supreme Court dismisses travel ban case Richard Wolf and Gregory Korte, USA Today

The Supreme Court dismissed a major challenge to President Trump's travel ban on majority-Muslim countries Tuesday because it has been replaced by a new version, sending the controversy back to the starting block. The ruling is a victory for the Trump administration, which had asked the court to drop the case after Trump signed a proclamation Sept. 24 that replaced the temporary travel ban on six nations with a new, indefinite ban affecting eight countries.

White House seeks \$4.9B to shore up Puerto Rico finances

Sarah Ferris, Politico

The Trump administration on Tuesday sought an additional $4.9 billion in emergency hurricane aid to stave off what Puerto Rico's governor recently warned could become a fiscal catastrophe. The Office of Management and Budget sent a formal request to House leadership Tuesday afternoon, revising its most recent recovery package request to nearly $35 billion.

Trump to Tout \$4,000 Worker Benefit in Tax Sales Pitch

Jennifer Epstein, Bloomberg

President Donald Trump will try to make the case that corporate tax breaks would benefit middle-class wage earners Wednesday evening - and an excerpt of his speech suggests he'll use a measure of salesmanship. Trump is expected to say the typical American household would get "a $4,000 pay raise" from facets of the planned legislation that would cut the corporate tax rate and end the current U.S. practice of taxing corporations' foreign earnings, according to part of the speech released by the White House.

Trump Wanted Tenfold Increase in Nuclear Arsenal, Surprising Military

Courtney Kube et al., NBC News

President Donald Trump said he wanted what amounted to a nearly tenfold increase in the U.S. nuclear arsenal during a gathering this past summer of the nation's highest ranking national security leaders, according to three officials who were in the room. Trump's comments, the officials said, came in response to a briefing slide he was shown that charted the steady reduction of U.S. nuclear weapons since the late 1960s.

---

Senate

Twitter reverses decision, will allow Blackburn to promote Senate ad

Kevin Robillard, Politico

Twitter is reversing a decision to block Rep. Marsha Blackburn of Tennessee from promoting her Senate campaign launch video on the social network. The company on Monday said a line in Blackburn's video referencing "baby body parts" was "inflammatory" and violated its guidelines, a decision that Blackburn and other Republicans quickly criticized.

McCaskill tears into GOP challenger Hawley during Jackson County visit

Bryan Lowry, The Kansas City Star

U.S. Sen. Claire McCaskill tore into her Republican challenger during a visit Tuesday to Independence, accusing Missouri Attorney General Josh Hawley of avoiding tough questions in recent weeks. Hawley, who filed in August with the Federal Election Commission to create a campaign committee, officially announced his candidacy Tuesday.

Senate Democrats worry Russia could jeopardize reelection bids Kyle Cheney et al., Politico

Democratic senators fighting to hold on to their seats next year are increasingly worried about a troubling reality: Russia appears set to mess with U.S. elections - again. The bipartisan leaders of the Senate Intelligence Committee warned last week that Russia's second straight attempt to upend a major election appears certain.

Lawmakers Seek to Crack Down on Veterans Affairs Budget Requests

Kellie Mejdrich, Roll Call

Following repeated last-minute requests from the Department of Veterans Affairs for billions of dollars to keep a private care access program running, lawmakers have introduced legislation to crack down on how the agency comes calling for more money. Sens. Jon Tester, D-Mont., John McCain, R-Ariz., Tim Kaine, D-Va., and Joe Manchin III, D-W.Va., introduced legislation that would require the VA to make additional funding requests outside the regular budget process 45 days before a veteran could lose health care or benefits, according to a press release late last week.

---

House

Nunes signs off on new subpoenas to firm behind Trump-Russia dossier

Evan Perez et al., CNN

The chairman of the House intelligence committee has issued subpoenas to the partners who run Fusion GPS, the research firm that produced the dossier of memos on alleged Russian efforts to aid the Trump campaign, according to sources briefed on the matter. The subpoenas - signed by California Republican Rep. Devin Nunes - were issued Oct. 4, demanding documents and testimony later this month and early November.

Iran deal negotiators to brief House Democrats

Heather Caygle, Politico

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi will hold a briefing with key negotiators of the Iran nuclear deal just days before President Trump is expected to decertify the Obama-era agreement. Former Secretary of State John Kerry and former Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz, who spearheaded the negotiations that led to the agreement, will participate in a panel discussion for Democratic lawmakers on Wednesday, according to a notice obtained by POLITICO.

DCCC to donate all Harvey Weinstein donations to women's group

Ed O'Keefe, The Washington Post

The campaign arm for House Democrats is donating more than $23,000 it's received from Harvey Weinstein over more than two decades in response to allegations of rape and sexual assault against the Hollywood mogul. The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee confirmed it has received $23,225 from Weinstein in four separate donations since 1993.

---

States

Corey Stewart in talks to endorse Gillespie at urging of Trump allies Bannon and Bossie

Laura Vozzella and Robert Costa, The Washington Post

Corey Stewart, who pilloried Republican Ed Gillespie during their GOP gubernatorial primary fight in Virginia, has been communicating with Gillespie about a potential endorsement at the urging of former White House chief strategist Stephen K. Bannon and President Trump's former deputy campaign manager, David N. Bossie, according to five people familiar with the matter. Stewart, who had run for governor in Trump's anti-establishment mold and derided Gillespie as "Establishment Ed," withheld his support after narrowly losing the June 13 primary.

Biden to campaign for Northam in Northern VA

NBC 12

Former Vice President Joe Biden will hit the campaign trail in Northern Virginia on Saturday as Election Day draws closer. Biden and Democratic candidate for governor Ralph Northam will host a workforce development roundtable in Reston.

Ben Jealous wants tuition-free college in Maryland. His plan is like Sanders' 'College For All' bill

Ovetta Wiggins, The Washington Post

Maryland gubernatorial candidate Ben Jealous wants Maryland to become the second state after New York to provide public higher education free of charge. Jealous told a group of students and progressive activists gathered Tuesday night at the University of Maryland, Baltimore, that he would help pay for the plan by ending mass incarceration.

Internal affairs: Gov. Scott Walker's administration shut unit down for exposing Lincoln Hills problems

Patrick Marley, Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

The leaders of a Department of Corrections internal affairs unit that was recently shut down by Gov. Scott Walker's administration said changes were ordered because they had done too good a job at exposing problems at the state's juvenile prison. A Department of Corrections spokesman discounted that contention.

Kansas Tried a Tax Plan Similar to Trump's. It Failed.

Jim Tankersley, The New York Times

In December 2014, the University of Kansas agreed to pay David Beaty $800,000 a year, plus incentives, to be the football program's head coach, but with an interesting structure: More than two-thirds of that pay would be channeled to an organization called DB Sports L.L.C. DB Sports is what accountants call a pass-through entity, and it pays all of its profits directly to Mr. Beaty.

Steve Bullock and the Lost Art of Political Persuasion

Gabriel Debenedetti, Politico

He's one of the most popular governors in the country. Some Democrats think he'd make a great presidential candidate. There's just one problem: Few outside of Montana have heard of the guy.

---

Advocacy

Sheryl Sandberg is headed to D.C. to do damage control on Facebook's Russian ad problem

Tony Romm, Recode

Facebook is dispatching Sheryl Sandberg, its powerful chief operating officer, to Washington, D.C., this week, as the company attempts to contain the political fallout from revelations that Russian agents spread disinformation on the social network. The house call to the nation's capital - confirmed to Recode on Tuesday by multiple source - comes as Facebook prepares to join its tech peers and testify at two public congressional hearings in November that are focused on the Kremlin's suspected meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election.

Former Pence aide Pitcock joining Oracle

Nancy Cook and Anna Palmer, Politico

Vice President Mike Pence's former chief of staff and longtime aide Josh Pitcock has landed a new job at the tech giant Oracle, according to two people briefed on the hire. Pitcock left the White House in August during a summer of high-profile departures that included chief of staff Reince Priebus, chief strategist Steve Bannon, and communications director Sean Spicer.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Tax Reform and Deficits

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

While you are reading about Donald Trump's Twitter irruptions, real news keeps happening. To wit, results for the government's complete fiscal year 2017, which ended on Sept. 30, prove again that the federal budget will never be balanced without faster economic growth.

Erdogan is bullying America. Trump should do something.

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Authoritarian governments around the world have increasingly embraced the disgraceful tactic of arresting U.S. citizens and holding them as de facto hostages in an attempt to gain leverage over Washington. Iran and North Korea were pioneering practitioners - and both repeatedly extracted U.S. concessions.

Mr. Trump Nails Shut the Coffin on Climate Relief

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

The Trump administration formally proposed on Tuesday to roll back yet another of President Barack Obama's efforts to position the United States as a global leader in the fight against climate change. The move, though widely anticipated, was deeply disheartening.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Americans' Views on Government Regulation Remain Steady

Art Swift, Gallup

For the 12th year in a row, more Americans say there is "too much" government regulation of business and industry than say there is either "too little" or "the right amount." Forty-five percent of U.S. adults say there is too much government regulation of business and industry, compared with 23% who think there is too little and 29% the right amount.

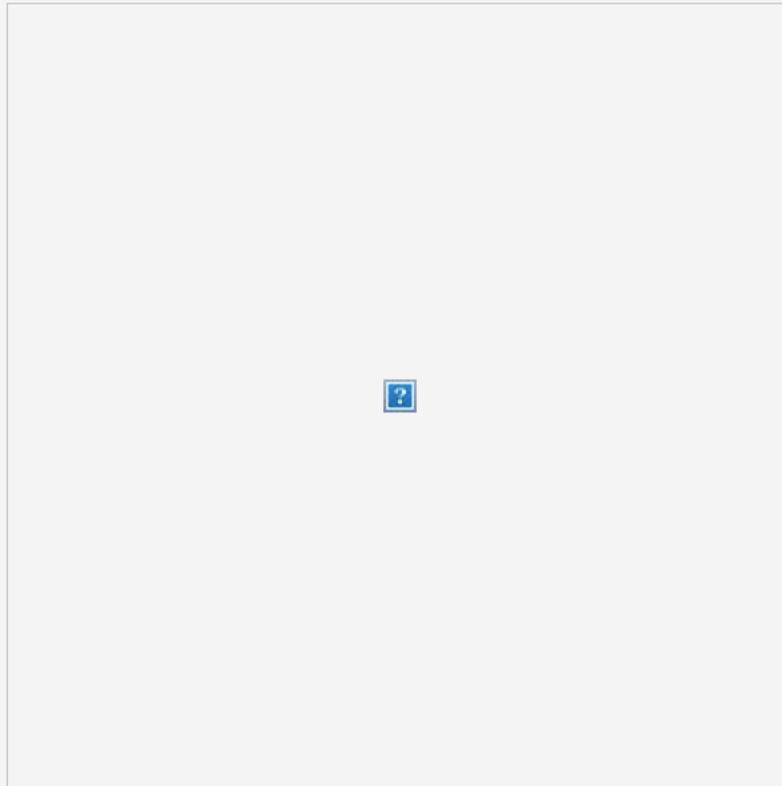

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Rep. Tiberi Plans to Announce He's Resigning From Congress
Date: Thursday, October 19, 2017 8:50:45 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Rep. Pat Tiberi (R-Ohio), chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on health, is expected to resign from Congress, with sources saying an announcement is possible before the end of the week. Republicans briefed on his plans said he will take an executive post with the Ohio Business Roundtable, but it's unclear whether Tiberi intends to vacate his House seat before the end of his ninth term. (The New York Times)
- The Senate is set to vote today on its fiscal year 2018 budget resolution. Republicans are expected to approve the measure, a necessary step that would allow GOP lawmakers to pass tax-reform legislation without Democratic support. (CNBC)

- A federal judge in California said he plans to issue a ruling next week in a case brought by 19 states requesting that the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services continue cost-sharing reduction payments to insurance companies. The case was filed after President Donald Trump said the payments would be ended. (Politico)
- Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) endorsed a Democratic bill that would establish disclosure requirements for political ads sold online, including who paid for them. Democratic Sens. Mark Warner (Va.) and Amy Klobuchar (Minn.) are planning to introduce the legislation today. (The Wall Street Journal)

Chart Review

Wide Partisan Gaps in U.S. Over How Far the Country Has Come on Gender Equality

Pew Research Center

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

CSIS event on U.S. energy policy 12:30 p.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on North Korea 3 p.m.

FRIDAY

Brookings Institution event on Trump's deregulatory efforts 10:30 a.m.

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

The NFL Is Now One of the Most Divisive Brands in the U.S.

According to Morning Consult Brand Intelligence data published in The New York Times, the NFL has become one of the most controversial organizations in the country.

General

Judge plans to rule next week in Obamacare subsidies fight

Josh Gerstein, Politico

A federal judge said Wednesday he plans to rule next week on a request to force the Trump administration to make Obamacare subsidy payments that it plans to cut off beginning with a payment due on Friday. A group of 19 states filed suit last week in federal court in San Francisco, asking that the Department of Health and Human Services be required to continue the so-called cost-sharing reduction payments despite President Donald Trump's announcement last week that they would be ended.

Congress Rolls Toward Shutdown Fight Over Immigration and Obamacare

Laura Litvan and Erik Wasson, Bloomberg

The year's most divisive fights in Congress are set to converge in a bitter partisan clash in December that could result in a U.S. government shutdown. The unresolved battles - over a wall on the U.S.-Mexico border, immigration, health-care subsidies, Planned Parenthood and storm relief - are hanging over talks on must-pass spending legislation to keep the government open after Dec. 8.

Sessions: 'Dreamers' Fix Must Drive Down Illegal Immigration

Dean DeChiaro, Roll Call

Attorney General Jeff Sessions told senators Wednesday they could work with President Donald Trump to protect undocumented childhood immigrants from deportation as long as "amnesty" is coupled with efforts to reduce illegal immigration overall. "The president has said he wants to work with Congress. He has a heart for young people," Sessions told the Senate Judiciary Committee at a wide-ranging Justice Department oversight hearing.

House, Senate intel committees receive briefing from Google

Mary Clare Jalonick, The Associated Press

Google has briefed the House and Senate intelligence committees ahead of two Nov. 1 hearings that will examine Russian efforts to influence U.S. elections through social media. Officials from Google talked to investigators behind closed doors in recent weeks as part of the committees' probes into Russian meddling in last year's election, according to people familiar with the briefings.

Hardly any federal employees are fired for poor performance. That could be a good sign, report says.

Eric Yoder, The Washington Post

The low rate at which federal employees are fired for poor performance doesn't prove the government accepts it but instead "could actually be a positive sign," the agency that decides appeals of discipline against federal employees has said. A report from the Merit Systems Protection Board in effect responds to members of Congress and others who contend that federal managers don't care, or don't dare, to take disciplinary action because of civil service protections.

---

Presidential

Trump is nominating a longtime antitrust lawyer as the head of the Federal Trade Commission

Tony Romm, Recode

President Donald Trump intends to nominate Joe Simons, a longtime antitrust lawyer who has represented tech companies like Microsoft, as the next chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, a White House official confirmed on Wednesday. Trump also plans to announce his candidate to fill the open Democratic slot at the FTC: Rohit Chopra, an ally of Sen. Elizabeth Warren.

Second judge halts Trump's travel ban

Lydia Wheeler, The Hill

A second federal district judge has put a hold on President Trump's latest travel ban. Judge Theodore Chuang, a federal district judge in Maryland, temporarily blocked the majority of the president's ban on nationals from eight countries, but he said the president could still ban individuals from North Korea, business officials from Venezuela and individuals lacking a credible claim of a bona fide relationship with a person or entity in the United States.

Trump White House debates presidential visit to demilitarized zone along North Korean border

David Nakamura, The Washington Post

It has become the ultimate symbol of American resolve against the threat of North Korea: a visit by the U.S. commander in chief to "freedom's frontier," the heavily guarded demilitarized zone that has separated the North and South for 64 years. Wearing bomber-style jackets, surrounded by military officers, peering through binoculars, all but one president since Ronald Reagan have gazed across the barren strip of land at the 38th parallel from an observation post where they've been moved to talk tough.

Families of fallen have mixed experiences with Trump, if any
Calvin Woodward and Tom Davies, The Associated Press

Some got sympathy and solace. Some got silence. One got a promise of cash.

---

Senate

Senate poised for crucial vote related to tax reform measure
CNBC

President Donald Trump's drive to overhaul the U.S. tax code headed for a pivotal moment on Thursday, with Senate Republicans poised to approve a budget measure that would help them pass tax legislation without Democratic support. The Senate and the House of Representatives must agree on a fiscal year 2018 budget resolution for Republicans to meet their goal of enacting a tax bill and sending it to Trump for his signature by the end of this year.

McCain Backs Measure to Tighten Disclosure of Online Political Ads
Byron Tau, The Wall Street Journal

A proposal to require social media companies to disclose information about political advertising on their platforms has drawn the support of a key Senate Republican. Sen. John McCain (R, Ariz.), a longtime proponent of stricter political advertising disclosure rules and spending restrictions, has signed onto a bill being written by two Senate Democrats that was prompted by concerns about Russian activity on social media during the 2016 election, according to a statement from his office.

McConnell to hold Senate in session for longer workweeks
Burgess Everett, Politico

Mitch McConnell is putting an end to the Senate's light schedule. The Senate majority leader is preparing to hold the chamber in session for more rigorous workweeks, including Fridays and possibly even weekends, according to two sources familiar with the matter.

Frail and disoriented, Cochran says he's not retiring

John Bresnahan and Anna Palmer, Politico

Mississippi GOP Sen. Thad Cochran insists that he is not retiring from Congress, despite widespread speculation about the veteran lawmaker's health and political future. The 79-year-old Cochran appeared frail and at times disoriented during a brief hallway interview on Wednesday.

---

House

Signaling Frustration, Senior House Republican Plans to Quit Early

Alexander Burns and Jonathan Martin, The New York Times

In a sign of mounting frustration among Republicans in Washington, Representative Pat Tiberi of Ohio, a senior lawmaker with close ties to his party's leaders, is expected to resign and take up an executive post with a business group in his home state, according to three Republicans briefed on his plans. An abrupt departure by Mr. Tiberi, who is an influential member of the House Ways and Means Committee, would signal a deepening level of discontent among mainstream Republicans in Congress.

Mike Pence's brother launches run for Indiana US House seat

Brian Slodysko, The Associated Press

Greg Pence, one of Mike Pence's older brothers, launched a campaign Wednesday for the eastern Indiana congressional seat that the vice president and former governor represented for 12 years. A campaign announcement video touts Greg Pence as a Republican who believes in "fiscal responsibility, the sanctity of life" and "our Second Amendment rights."

Gowdy threatens to subpoena DOJ, USDA over officials' air travel

Kyle Cheney, Politico

House Oversight Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy on Wednesday threatened to subpoena the Department of Justice and Department of Agriculture for failing to adequately respond to a bipartisan inquiry on the use of private jets by senior officials. In a letter to leaders of the two cabinet agencies, the South Carolina Republican and the committee's top Democrat, Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-Md.), said both departments missed their Oct. 10 deadline to provide documents detailing the use of charter jets and other taxpayer-funded flights for officials' personal travel.

Pelosi calls on Congress to pass DREAM Act at stop in Los Angeles Makeda Easter, Los Angeles Times

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi on Wednesday called on the GOP-controlled Congress to come up with a new Dream Act by year's end and suggested a link between that policy and how her party fares in the 2018 midterm elections. Pelosi appeared at the Coalition for Humane Immigrant Rights with community leaders and Deferred Action for Childhood Arrival recipients in Los Angeles.

---

States

Obama Returns to Campaign Trail to Rally Black Voters Jonathan Martin and Alexander Burns, The New York Times

President Barack Obama will hit the campaign trail on Thursday to rally black voters behind candidates for governor in Virginia and New Jersey amid stern warnings that African Americans may not come out in force on an Election Day that is just three weeks away. Mr. Obama's appearances on behalf of Virginia's lieutenant governor, Ralph S. Northam, in Richmond and the financier Philip D. Murphy in Newark - two white candidates in predominantly black cities - come as Democrats struggle to inspire African-Americans to vote this year.

Trump strategist quits Gillespie campaign for Va. governor, sources say

Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

The man who rallied Southwest Virginia to vote for Donald Trump last year quit Republican Ed Gillespie's gubernatorial campaign this week, offended by a personal snub and exasperated by the campaign's highly cautious stance toward the president, according to three Republicans familiar with his decision. Jack Morgan's departure follows a half-empty Gillespie rally headlined by Vice President Pence on Saturday in Southwest Virginia, a coal country region that voted overwhelmingly for Trump in November.

Settlement proposed in North Carolina transgender bathroom lawsuit

Colleen Jenkins, Reuters

Transgender people would be allowed to use public restrooms in North Carolina that match their gender identity under a settlement agreement filed on Wednesday that aims to resolve the federal lawsuit over the state's widely criticized bathroom law. The consent decree proposed by Governor Roy Cooper, the American Civil Liberties Union and transgender people who sued the state would remove some of the law's harmful effects, civil rights groups said.

N.J. governor debate full of nasty exchanges between Murphy and Guadagno

Brent Johnson, NJ.com

The race to replace Chris Christie as New Jersey's governor isn't sleepy any more. That much was clear Wednesday night as Democratic nominee Phil Murphy and Republican nominee Kim Guadagno spent much of their second and final televised debate shooting verbal arrows at each other.

Dem megadonor Steyer calls on govts, mayors to support impeaching Trump

Lisa Hagen, The Hill

Billionaire Democratic donor Tom Steyer sent a letter to mayors and governors urging them to publicize their stances on impeaching President Trump and call on federal lawmakers to support his removal from office. Steyer addressed the letter to all 50 governors and 2,000 mayors of cities around the country, who he said, "have a duty to speak out."

---

Advocacy

Bank industry searches for wins under Trump

Sylvan Lane, The Hill

United States banks and financial services companies are digging in for a long fight to curtail the Dodd-Frank Act, the Obama-era banking regulation bill.

Republicans lack the votes in the Senate to fulfill President Trump's campaign promise to "dismantle" Dodd-Frank and face pushback from Obama-era officials who still hold key regulatory roles.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Steve Bannon's Motley Crew of Challengers

Karl Rove, The Wall Street Journal

Steve Bannon, the failed presidential adviser and alt-right sympathizer, has declared war on incumbent Republicans, particularly Sen. Mitch McConnell. From his perch at Breitbart, Mr. Bannon is vowing to defeat officeholders who back Mr. McConnell as majority leader or who won't sign onto Mr. Bannon's populist agenda.

Trump trivializes the deaths of four soldiers

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

Staff Sgt. Bryan C. Black, 35, always relished a challenge. As a child, he drove himself to learn chess; as a teen, he excelled as a wrestler; and as an adult, he joined the Army, where he finished Ranger school and joined the Special Forces.

Congress, End the Health Care Chaos. You Have 9 Million Kids to Protect.

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

President Trump and Republicans in Congress have brought chaos to the American health care system by trying to destroy the Affordable Care Act and failing to reauthorize the Children's Health Insurance Program, which, with bipartisan support for the past 20 years, has provided care for millions of children. Over the next few weeks they can choose to set things right or to destroy them. Senators Lamar Alexander and Patty Murray on Tuesday announced a bipartisan deal that could help stabilize the A.C.A.'s insurance markets and undo some of the damage Mr. Trump has done through administrative actions.

More Freedom for More Money

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

How does Washington define "bipartisan"? We are about to find out if it means that Republicans surrender to everything Democrats want, or if it means a genuine trade of policy priorities in which both sides get something and the country benefits.

The Supreme Court Justices Need Fact-Checkers

John Pfaff, The New York Times

Supreme Court justices have a tough job. They are required to hand down decisions that can affect millions of people and cost billions of dollars.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Building Blocks for Effective Performance Management

U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board

In 2016, the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) conducted a Merit Principles Survey (MPS) that asked supervisors a wide range of questions about their experiences managing civilian employees with a particular focus on performance management issues. We then combined answers to questions about resources for work units (four questions), performance management training (3 questions), and measuring subordinate performance (2 questions) to form a single score to measure the presence of these building blocks for performance management.

Stress-Testing States

Dan White et al., Moody's Analytics

One of the few great inescapable facts in the field of economics is the reality of the business cycle. No matter how high-flying an economy might appear, another recession is coming sooner or later.

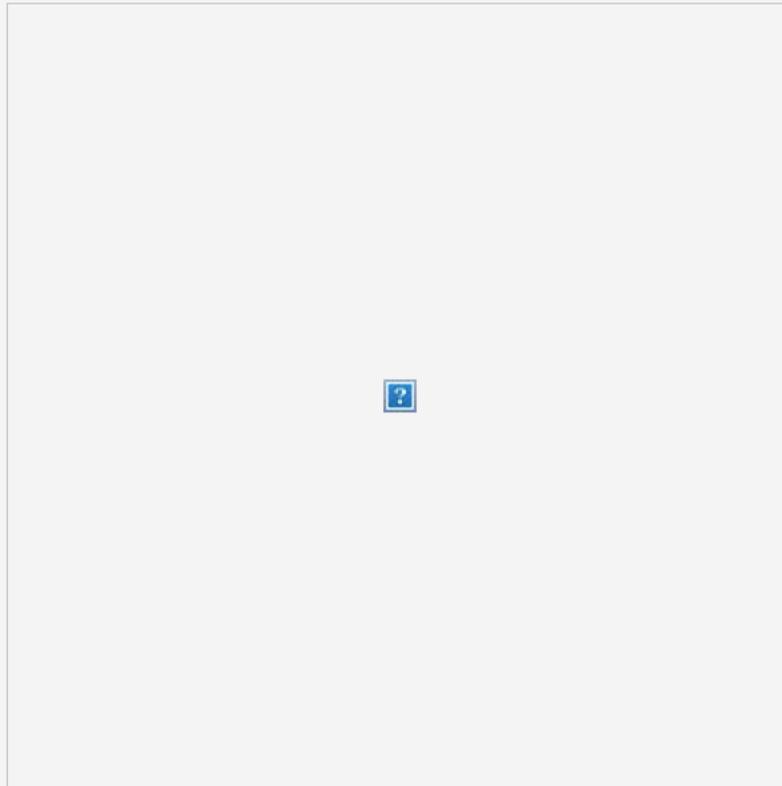

PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Senate Passes Tax Bill, Sending Measure Back to House for Final Vote
Date: Wednesday, December 20, 2017 9:12:47 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- The Senate voted along party lines to pass legislation that would overhaul the tax code, but because of small changes the Senate made to the bill to comply with the chamber's budget rules, the House will have to vote on the measure again. The House is expected to hold the final vote today and then send the measure to President Donald Trump, who is expected to sign the legislation into law by Christmas. (The New York Times)
- Congressional leaders are attempting to include several priorities - from disaster aid to the Children's Health Insurance Program - in legislation that would keep the government open past Friday, when current funding is set to expire. House leaders are planning to vote on a measure authorizing funding until Jan. 19 that could be combined with a full year's defense spending bill and an $81 billion disaster aid package, after which the Senate would work on its own version of the legislation that would have to be sent back to the House. ( Bloomberg )

- The Democrats' Steering Committee voted 41-18 in favor of Rep. Jerrold Nadler (N.Y.) over Rep. Zoe Lofgren (Calif.) to be the top Democrat on the House Judiciary Committee. The vote was a procedural step ahead of a vote among the entire Democratic caucus today to succeed now-former Rep. John Conyers (D-Mich.), who resigned from Congress amid a sexual misconduct scandal. ( The Hill )
- House Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Goodlatte (R-Va.) and House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) asked the Justice Department to make Federal Bureau of Investigation Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, FBI chief of staff Jim Rybicki and FBI lawyer Lisa Page available for transcribed interviews as early as Thursday, the next step in the expanding confrontation between congressional Republicans and the FBI. The two chairmen are seeking information about the bureau's handling of the investigation into Hillary Clinton's handling of classified information and of Trump's campaign associates' possible ties to Russia. ( Politico )

Chart Review

Support for GOP Tax Bill Could Hurt Lawmakers' Re-election Bids
Morning Consult

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

WEDNESDAY

National Economic Council Director Cohn at Axios event 8 a.m.

THURSDAY

Sen. Warner speaks at Axios event 8 a.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

2017 Brands in Review

This year, Morning Consult conducted nearly 1 million survey interviews on nearly 1,000 brands. Get a never-before-seen look at how public perception changed for the world's biggest brands.

General

Congress Dives Into Shutdown Drama Hours After GOP Win on Taxes

Erik Wasson and Laura Litvan, Bloomberg

Congressional leaders are trying to jam as many extras as possible into a must-pass spending bill that may end up ricocheting between the House and Senate right up to the deadline three days from now. Republican leaders, poised to finish a sweeping tax-cut bill this week, are eager to avoid an embarrassing shutdown.

Senators, White House lay groundwork for Dreamers deal

Seung Min Kim et al., Politico

Top senators and White House officials are laying the groundwork for a major immigration deal in January to resolve the fate of young undocumented immigrants whose legal protections were put in limbo by President Donald Trump. At a Tuesday afternoon meeting with nearly a dozen senators deeply involved in immigration policy, White House chief of staff John Kelly pledged that the administration will soon present a list of border security and other policy changes it wants as part of a broader deal on so-called Dreamers, according to people who attended the meeting.

Poll: Public sours on GOP tax plan as Democrats regain lead on economy

Mark Murray, NBC News

The tax plan that Republicans are soon expected to pass has grown more unpopular in the last two months, with nearly two-thirds of Americans believing it's designed mostly to help corporations and the wealthy, according to the latest NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll. In addition, the survey finds that Democrats have overtaken Republicans on which party better handles the economy - their first lead on this question since 2013 and their largest since 2009.

Supreme Court abortion showdown is defused

Josh Gerstein and Renuka Rayasam, Politico

A looming Supreme Court showdown over abortion rights for immigrant children in federal custody appeared to be defused Tuesday night after the U.S.

government released one of the pregnant teens at the center of the fight, citing new evidence that she is an adult. Lawyers for the Trump administration said a birth certificate for the immigrant known in court filings as Jane Roe shows her to be 19, not 17 as previously thought.

---

Presidential

Without New Laws or Walls, Trump Presses the Brake on Legal Immigration

Miriam Jordan, The New York Times

A scientist recruited by the renowned Cleveland Clinic is stuck in India because his visa is delayed. An entrepreneur courted by Silicon Valley companies had his application denied.

White House Reaches Out to Black Republicans for Administration Jobs

Louise Radnofsky, The Wall Street Journal

White House chief of staff John Kelly has invited black Republicans to submit resumes for administration jobs, after the departure of Omarosa Manigault Newman left the West Wing without prominent African-American officials. Mr. Kelly told reporters Tuesday that he spoke with a group of black Republicans on Monday and made the request there.

White House takes down 'We the People' petitions site before responding to a single one

Eli Rosenberg, The Washington Post

The White House has taken down a popular online tool created by President Barack Obama's administration that allowed the public to create online petitions, some of which required an official response. All of the petitions, including one that called on President Trump to release his tax returns - the most popular, with more than a million signatures - disappeared from Petitions.WhiteHouse.Gov as part of what a statement posted on the site said was part of a maintenance effort to improve its performance.

Trump denies he considered revoking Gorsuch's nomination

Nolan D. McCaskill, Politico

Responding to a Washington Post story, President Donald Trump on Tuesday denied he considered rescinding the nomination of Supreme Court Justice Neil Gorsuch. "A story in the @washingtonpost that I was close to 'rescinding' the nomination of Justice Gorsuch prior to confirmation is FAKE NEWS," Trump tweeted Tuesday morning.

---

Senate

Republican Tax Bill Passes Senate in 51-48 Vote

Thomas Kaplan and Alan Rappoport, The New York Times

Republicans took a critical step toward notching their first significant legislative victory since assuming full political control, as the House and Senate voted along party lines on Tuesday and into early Wednesday to pass the most sweeping rewrite of the tax code in decades. The $1.5 trillion tax bill, which is expected to head to President Trump's desk in the coming days, will have broad effects on the economy, making deep and lasting cuts to corporate taxes as well as temporarily lowering individual taxes.

Collins Says News Coverage of Her Tax Vote 'Unbelievably Sexist'

Steven T. Dennis, Bloomberg

Republican Senator Susan Collins ripped news coverage of her decision to vote for the GOP tax-cut bill as "unbelievably sexist" on Tuesday. "I cannot believe that the press would have treated another senator with 20 years of experience as they have treated me," the Maine senator told reporters at the Capitol.

Kaine warns U.S. mission shift in Syria, Iraq might be illegal

Olivier Knox, Yahoo News

Sen. Tim Kaine, D-Va., pressed the Trump administration on Tuesday to clarify whether U.S. forces deployed in Syria and Iraq to fight ISIS are shifting their focus to confront Iran and its proxies. The Democrat also warned that such a change in the military mission might be illegal absent explicit authorization from Congress.

The Hill Interview: McConnell: 2017 a great year for GOP

Alexander Bolton, The Hill

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) is hailing 2017 as a year of major Republican accomplishments, dismissing the unpopularity of the Republican tax bill as the influence of "left of center" press coverage. The anticipated passage of tax reform gives McConnell and his party a much-needed triumph at the end of a year in which the GOP has at times struggled to govern.

---

House

Nadler wins steering committee vote for Judiciary post

Mike Lillis, The Hill

Rep. Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) on Tuesday won the first leg of the race to become the leading Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, marking an early victory for seniority in the contest to replace Rep. John Conyers atop the powerful panel. The Democrats' Steering and Policy Committee voted 41-18 to recommend Nadler, over Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-Calif.), to succeed Conyers (D-Mich.), who was forced to resign from Congress earlier this month over a string of sexual harassment allegations.

GOP chairmen seek to interview top FBI officials on Clinton, Trump

Kyle Cheney, Politico

Two powerful House Republicans are asking the Justice Department to make senior FBI officials available to testify to Congress as early as this week, the latest salvo in an expanding confrontation between the GOP and the bureau. Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Goodlatte and Oversight Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy say they're seeking information from FBI officials about their handling of two probes: the investigation of Hillary Clinton's handling of classified information and the investigation of President Donald Trump's campaign associates and their ties to Russia.

Paul Ryan Says He's Sticking Around, Vague With Timeline

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

Speaker Paul D. Ryan on Tuesday sought to tamp down rumors that he's planning to resign soon or retire at the end of 2018, separately telling the House Republican Conference and the press that he's not going anywhere. However, the Wisconsin Republican did not qualify either statement with a timeline, leaving open to the possibility that he may not seek another term in Congress.

House Panel Approves Sexual Harassment Training Guidelines

Katherine Tully-McManus, Roll Call

The House Administration Committee on Tuesday approved guidelines for implementing newly mandated sexual harassment and discrimination training, as members were set to unveil this week more legislation that would respond to allegations of sexual misbehavior on Capitol Hill. The panel adopted by voice vote a set of regulations governing fulfillment of the training, including that it must be in person, have options for reporting complaints even from a bystander and that trainees must be allowed to ask questions anonymously.

---

States

A single vote leads to a rare tie for control of the Virginia legislature

Gregory S. Schneider, The Washington Post

The balance of power in Virginia's legislature turned on a single vote in a recount Tuesday that flipped a seat in the House of Delegates from Republican to Democratic, leaving control of the lower chamber evenly split. The outcome, which reverberated across Virginia, ends 17 years of GOP control of the House and forces Republicans into a rare episode of power sharing with Democrats that will refashion the political landscape in Richmond.

Not-So-Happy New Year: Alabama Set To Toss Kids Off Insurance Plan Starting Jan. 1

Phil Galewitz, Kaiser Health News

Citing Congress' failure to restore federal funding of the Children's Health Insurance Program, Alabama plans to drop 7,000 kids from coverage on New Year's Day, the first step to shutting down coverage for everyone, state officials said Monday. Those children, who are up for their yearly renewal in January, will not be allowed to continue in the program, and the state also plans to freeze enrollment at the same time.

Rauner lays out how second term will be different, blames Emanuel for first-term failures

Rick Pearson and Bill Ruthhart, Chicago Tribune

Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday raised the central questions surrounding his re-election campaign: What exactly would be different in a second term? Why won't his agenda "just be crushed by" Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan "again and again?"

Legislative economist - again - tosses cold water on Scott's rosy economic narrative

Matt Dixon, Politico

The rosy picture Gov. Rick Scott described at nearly every public appearance last week was again dinged by Amy Baker, the state's top legislative economist, whose analysis of Florida's economic rebound has in the past given ammo to the governor's political foes. Baker's analysis is most often on display during often little-noticed public meetings of state economists, but it has already been used by Democrats to try to muddy the waters as Scott prepares a likely run against three-term Sen. Bill Nelson, Democrats' only statewide elected official.

Future of Keystone XL pipeline becomes more muddled after latest decision by Nebraska PSC

Paul Hammel, Omaha World-Herald

The future of the Keystone XL pipeline became even more muddled Tuesday with further delays expected. The Nebraska Public Service Commission unanimously rejected TransCanada's request to amend its application for a route across Nebraska.

---

Advocacy

Heritage Foundation taps Kay Coles James to be next president

Nolan D. McCaskill and Eliana Johnson, Politico

The conservative Heritage Foundation announced Tuesday that board member Kay Coles James will serve as its sixth president starting next year. Her goal, she said Tuesday, will be to expand the base of the conservative movement and "take it to places it may not have been before."

The pharma industry spent \$57 million lobbying last year. And that's just the start of its spending

Jay Hancock, Kaiser Health News

Facing bipartisan hostility over high drug prices in an election year, the pharma industry's biggest trade group boosted revenue by nearly a fourth last year and spread the millions collected among hundreds of lobbyists, politicians and patient groups, new filings show. It was the biggest surge for the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, known as PhRMA, since the group took battle stations to advance its interests in 2009 during the run-up to the Affordable Care Act.

Boeing Bothered by Lobbyist Who Helped Failed Ex-Im Nominee John McCormick, Bloomberg

President Donald Trump's nominee to head the export credit agency nicknamed the "Bank of Boeing" had the assistance of a lobbyist with ties to European planemaker Airbus SE to guide him through a contentious nomination process that resulted Tuesday in his rejection by the Senate Banking Committee. That relationship has troubled Boeing Co., the U.S. Export-Import Bank's biggest customer.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Tax Reform Means Your Paycheck Will Grow Paul Ryan, *The Wall Street Journal

The Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, which the House passed Tuesday, represents the biggest advancement for growth and opportunity in recent memory. It provides real relief to middle-income families and realizes policy goals conservatives have sought for decades.

Trump's National Security Strategy isn't much of a strategy at all Editorial Board, *The Washington Post

The National Security Strategy issued by the Trump administration Monday differs from those of previous presidents in some fundamental ways, as might be expected given President Trump's transgressive nationalism and protectionism. It also differs from some of the policies the president himself has favored so far, especially with regard to Russia and China.

Democrats Are the New Republicans Frank Bruni, *The New York Times

Family values. How long have we been subjected to that subjective phrase, championed by Republicans who equated it with heterosexuality, fecundity and Christian piety - and who appointed themselves the custodians of those?

---

Research Reports and Polling

Who Gets a Tax Cut Under the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act?

Amir El-Sibaie, Tax Foundation

Last Friday the House and Senate conferees signed off on a conference report resolving differences between the versions of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act that passed each chamber. The final bill is similar to the amended Senate bill from last month, with mostly minor changes, notably, to individual income brackets, the refundability of the child tax credit, and the individual alternative minimum tax.

U.S. Voter Economic Outlook Hits All-Time High, Quinnipiac University National Poll Finds; But Voters Disapprove Of Trump's Handling Of Economy

Quinnipiac University

A total of 63 percent of American voters say in a poll released today the nation's economy is "excellent" or "good," while 34 percent say it is "not so good" or "poor," the highest positive rating for the economy since the Quinnipiac University Poll began asking the question in 2001. A total of 76 percent of voters describe their own financial situation as "excellent" or "good," as 23 percent say "not so good" or "poor," the independent Quinnipiac (KWIN-uh-pe-ack) University Poll finds.

Most Americans Say Trump's Election Has Led to Worse Race Relations in the U.S.

Pew Research Center

Nearly a year into Donald Trump's presidency, a majority of Americans (60%) say his election has led to worse race relations in the United States. Just 8% say Trump's election has led to better race relations, while 30% say it has not made a difference.

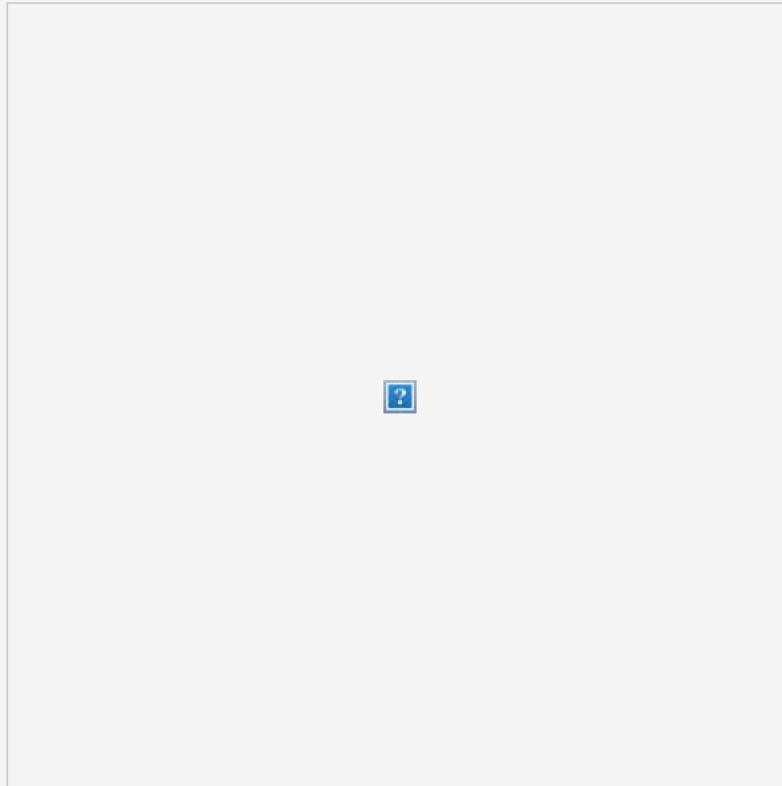

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Trump Says "All Options Are on the Table" After North Korea Launches Missile Over Japan
Date: Tuesday, August 29, 2017 9:05:07 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump spoke with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe for 40 minutes after North Korea fired a test missile over Japan. In a statement, Trump reiterated his threat that "all options are on the table." (Politico)
- Texas Gov. Greg Abbott (R) said the region grappling with the fallout from Hurricane Harvey will have to recognize a "new normal," even as officials struggle to measure the full scale of the crisis amid continued flooding. Trump is scheduled to visit the Corpus Christi, Texas, area today. (The New) York Times)

- Trump defended his pardon of former Arizona Sheriff Joe Arpaio, who was convicted of criminal contempt earlier this year. He said because he announced his pardon during Hurricane Harvey, "I assumed the ratings would be far higher than they would be normally," denying the suggestion he tried to bury the news. (The Washington Post)
- The House Ethics Committee said it is expanding its investigation of New York Rep. Chris Collins' (R) role in recruiting House colleagues to invest in an Australian pharmaceutical company. The investigation began in May after complaints were filed alleging insider trading. (The Hill)

Chart Review

North Korea Fires Missile Over Japan, Renewing Tensions in Asia
Bloomberg

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

TUESDAY

National Press Club lunch event with new NAACP President
Derrick Johnson 12:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

AEI event on retirement income 10 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on Iran 12 p.m.

THURSDAY

Brookings Institution event on global financial ecosystem 10 a.m.

---

National Press Club book event with Sheryl Attkisson 6:30 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

Amid Harvey havoc, northeastern politicians sourly recall Texas "no" votes on Sandy aid

Abby Livingston, The Texas Tribune

Many New Yorkers and New Jerseyans serving in Congress have, for nearly five years now, kept a list of names handy to roll out at a moment's notice. They call it "the Comeuppance Caucus." For some, the list is on a physical paper or bookmarked on a computer.

Hurricane aid adds to GOP's dreadful September

Jennifer Scholtes and Austin Wright, Politico

House Speaker Paul Ryan and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell already face a daunting September, with deadlines looming to avoid a government shutdown and debt default. Now they'll likely have to add a multibillion-dollar aid package to the list to address the devastation from Hurricane Harvey.

Freight Companies Scramble to Reroute Goods in Wake of Harvey

Paul Page and Brian Baskin, The Wall Street Journal

Trucking fleets, railroads and shipping lines are rerouting cargo and setting up alternate supply lines as Tropical Storm Harvey promises to disrupt freight traffic across southeast Texas for days. Seaports in Houston and Corpus Christi have been closed to most ships since before Harvey made landfall Friday, and rising waters from days of heavy rains and catastrophic flooding are threatening long stretches of highways and railroad tracks, bringing freight transportation in a major American hub to a virtual standstill.

Two Bankers Are Selling Trump's Tax Plan. Is Congress Buying?

Julie Hirschfeld Davis and Kate Kelly, The New York Times

Gary D. Cohn and Steven Mnuchin have spent months behind closed doors with Republican congressional leaders sketching the contours of an elaborate and politically difficult tax overhaul that is President Trump's top priority. Mr. Trump hopes to jump-start the process on Wednesday, traveling to Springfield, Mo., for a speech calling for large tax reductions and a long-anticipated revamping of the code.

'Dreamer' Plan That Aided 800,000 Immigrants Is Threatened
Miriam Jordan, The New York Times

Jessica Rojas beat poverty to put herself through engineering college, where she collected accolades for academic achievement. After graduating last year, Ms. Rojas, who grew up in Chicago, was hired by a utility company to help modernize the city's electrical grid.

---

Presidential

Trump on North Korea's missile launch: 'All options are on the table'

Louis Nelson, Politico

North Korea's most recent ballistic missile test "has signaled its contempt" for its neighbors and the international community, President Donald Trump said in a statement released Tuesday morning, reiterating his threat that "all options are on the table." "The world has received North Korea's latest message loud and clear: This regime has signaled its contempt for its neighbors, for all members of the United Nations, and for minimum standards of acceptable international behavior," Trump's statement said.

Trump defends Arpaio pardon, assumed 'ratings would be far higher' by announcing during hurricane

Ashley Parker, The Washington Post

President Trump defended his controversial pardon of former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio on Monday, saying his decision to announce it during Hurricane Harvey likely earned it "far higher" ratings. Speaking at a joint news conference with the president of Finland, Trump made his first comments on Arpaio since his decision to pardon the Arizona lawman Friday - defending both the timing of the pardon late Friday evening, as Harvey made landfall, and the decision itself.

Trump Punishes Longtime Aide After Angry Phoenix Speech, Sources Say

Jennifer Jacobs and Kevin Cirilli, Bloomberg

Donald Trump was in a bad mood before he emerged for a confrontational speech in Arizona last week. TV and social media coverage showed that the site of his campaign rally, the Phoenix Convention Center, was less than full.

Trump Administration Lifts Limits On Military Hardware For Police

Ryan Lucas, NPR News

The Trump administration is lifting limits on the transfer of some surplus military hardware, including grenade launchers, bayonets and large-caliber weapons, to police departments. Attorney General Jeff Sessions made the announcement in a speech on Monday to the Fraternal Order of Police conference in Nashville, Tenn.

Dueling clergy protests over the Trump presidency converge on Washington

Perry Stein and Julie Zauzmer, The Washington Post

They wore clerical collars and vestments, their heads covered with kippahs and taqiyahs. Religious leaders and congregants rallied Monday in Washington to say "the soul of the nation" is at stake.

---

Senate

Senate chairman eyes Sessions testimony this fall

Seung Min Kim and Elana Schor, Politico

Senate Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley is preparing for testimony by Attorney General Jeff Sessions as soon as next month - a high-stakes appearance for Sessions, who's likely to face tough questions over the ongoing investigation into President Donald Trump's ties to Russia. Grassley (R-Iowa) wrote to Sessions on Monday that "unfortunately we still do not have a confirmed date" for the committee's usual Department of Justice oversight hearing.

Experts: Roy Moore-connected foundation may be violating tax-exempt status

Howard Koplowitz, AL.com

The Foundation for Moral Law, a nonprofit run by Kayla Moore - the wife of U.S. Senate candidate Roy Moore - may be violating its tax-exempt status by posting Moore's campaign ads and articles about Moore's campaign, according to attorneys who specialize in nonprofit tax law who spoke to AL.com. Tax-exempt 501(c)(3) organizations like the foundation, whose activity largely comprises filing religious liberty lawsuits, are barred from engaging in political activity and could lose their tax-exempt status if the IRS determines they did so.

---

House

Ethics panel extends review of Rep. Collins over investments

Cristina Marcos, The Hill

The House Ethics Committee announced Monday that it is extending its review of Rep. Chris Collins's (R-N.Y.) role in recruiting investors to buy stock in an Australian pharmaceutical company. Ethics Committee Chairwoman Susan Brooks (R-Ind.) and ranking Democrat Ted Deutch (Fla.) said in a joint statement that they would determine how to proceed in the case by Oct. 12.

Republican floats measure to kill Mueller probe after 6 months

Austin Wright, Politico

Rep. Ron DeSantis (R-Fla.) is pushing an amendment to severely curtail special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into the Trump campaign's ties to Russia. DeSantis has put forward a provision that would halt funding for Mueller's probe six months after the amendment's passage.

DCCC Launches Health Care Facebook Ads in Targeted Districts

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee is launching a new Facebook ad campaign aimed at nearly all of its 80 GOP targets that highlights the Republican health care bill. The ads are targeted at Republicans who voted for the bill - and even Republicans who voted against it.

---

States

Texas Governor Warns of a Long, Slow Recovery

Julie Turkewitz et al., The New York Times

As one of the most destructive storms in the nation's history pummeled southeast Texas for a fourth day, forecasts on Monday called for still more rain, making clear that catastrophic flooding that had turned neighborhoods into lakes was just the start of a disaster that would take years to overcome. Local, state and federal officials conceded that the scale of the crisis was so vast that they were nowhere near being able to measure it, much less fully address it.

McAuliffe, Hogan, Bowser agree with LaHood that Metro board should shrink

Robert McCartney, The Washington Post

Former U.S. transportation secretary Ray LaHood urged the Washington region's top elected officials Monday to tackle Metro's problems by appointing a temporary "reform board" of five members to replace the transit system's existing 16-member governing body. Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe (D), Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) and D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) all endorsed the overall goal of shrinking Metro's board, but they wanted more details about how it would happen.

After protest in his district, Miller says he regrets offering his 'historical perspective' about Justice Taney

Ovetta Wiggins, The Washington Post

Maryland Senate President Thomas V. Mike Miller Jr., under fire for opposing the removal of a statue of former Supreme Court chief justice Roger B. Taney from the State House grounds, said Monday that he did not intend to cause division by defending the author of the Dred Scott decision. "As a student of history, I intended to respectfully state my preference for education about our flawed history and the greater historical context of Justice Taney," Miller (D-Calvert) said in a statement.

---

Advocacy

How D.C. Lobbyists Helped Paul Manafort Prop Up a Putin Puppet Betsy Woodruff, The Daily Beast

For years, the influence-peddlers' work for a pro-Kremlin party flew under the radar. Then Bob Mueller's Trump-Russia probe got rolling.

ACLU challenges Trump administration's transgender military ban Justin Jouvenal, The Washington Post

The American Civil Liberties Union filed a lawsuit Monday challenging the Trump administration's controversial ban on transgender people enlisting, receiving Armed Forces medical care for sex reassignment surgeries, and possibly continuing to serve. The suit, filed in federal court in Maryland on behalf of six active-duty military members, argues that the ban is unconstitutional because it discriminates against transgender people and treats them unequally.

Bloomberg charity scrutinized by India for anti-tobacco funding, lobbying - documents

Aditya Kalra, Reuters

India has been investigating how Bloomberg Philanthropies, founded by billionaire Michael Bloomberg, funds local non-profit groups for anti-tobacco lobbying, government documents show, making it the latest foreign non-government organization to come under scrutiny. Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government has since 2014 tightened surveillance of non-profit groups, saying they were acting against India's national interests.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

'The President Speaks For Himself'

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

It should be among the easier tasks of a cabinet member to affirm, without hesitation, that the president he or she serves represents the values of the American people. But that was more than Secretary of State Rex Tillerson could muster during an interview on "Fox News Sunday."

The Arpaio pardon displays Trump's disdain for the rule of law

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

President Trump hinted for weeks that he might pardon former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio. When he finally did so on Friday, the White House's official statement lauding Mr. Arpaio failed to mention the charge for which Mr. Trump had granted clemency: a criminal conviction of contempt of court for defying an order to halt racial profiling.

Behind the Bedlam in Berkeley

Editorial Page, The Wall Street Journal

As Charlottesville drew attention to the worst elements of the far right, Sunday's melee revealed an increasingly violent fringe of the radical left that has received far less media coverage, much less criticism. It's called Antifa, pronounced "An-tee-fa," which is short for "anti-fascist."

Mr. President, End DACA

The Editors, National Review

Recent reports suggest that President Trump is torn about what to do about DACA, the de facto amnesty for so-called DREAMers instituted by Barack Obama. We understand the hesitation, since many of the beneficiaries of this amnesty have sympathetic stories, but as a matter of fidelity to our constitutional system and his campaign promises, Trump must end DACA.

Are Trump's August Controversies Careless-Or Calculated?

Gerald F. Seib, The Wall Street Journal

Here are two ways of looking at how President Donald Trump has spent his August: He has ruined the month—perhaps even his presidency—by mindlessly picking fights with Republican congressional leaders and the media, and by wallowing in divisive cultural issues rather than pushing his economic agenda. But here is another: Rather than stumble and fumble into these controversies, Mr. Trump has quite deliberately chosen his issues and his enemies.

---

Research Reports and Polling

U.S. Muslims are religiously observant, but open to multiple interpretations of Islam

Elizabeth Podrebarac Sciupac, Pew Research Center

For American Muslims, being highly religious does not necessarily translate into acceptance of traditional notions of Islam. While many U.S. Muslims say they attend mosque and pray regularly, sizable shares also say that there is more than one way to interpret their religion and that traditional understandings of Islam need to be reinterpreted to address the issues of today.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Trump Waives Jones Act to Expedite Delivery of Relief Supplies to Puerto Rico
Date: Thursday, September 28, 2017 9:09:19 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said President Donald Trump has waived the Jones Act, a law that was prohibiting foreign ships from delivering relief supplies to Puerto Rico. The U.S. territory is still in the early stages of recovery after Hurricane Maria made landfall last week. (The Hill)
- Executives at Facebook Inc., Twitter Inc. and Google Inc. have been asked to testify before House and Senate committees investigating Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election. Lawmakers and their investigators are interested in the role social media and online advertising may have played.

(Bloomberg)

- House Republicans released a plan that would provide $10 billion in funding for Trump's proposed wall along the U.S.-Mexico border. The legislation, which is unlikely to pass in the Senate, would also add 10,000 border patrol agents and Customs and Border Protection officers. (Politico)

Chart Review

Minorities and Americans without college degrees showed greatest gains in wealth since 2013, new data says

The Washington Post

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

THURSDAY

The Atlantic's Washington Ideas conference 7:30 a.m.

---

Reps. Dent, Jordan, Walker speak at Ripon Society event 7:45 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on constitutionality of Trump's travel ban 12 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

Frustrated Lawmakers Ask Facebook to Explain Its Russia Response

Steven T. Dennis and Billy House, Bloomberg

Facebook Inc., Twitter Inc. and Alphabet Inc.'s Google are set to face intense public scrutiny from U.S. House and Senate panels as investigators focus on social media's role in Russia's efforts to interfere in the 2016 presidential election. Executives from all three companies were asked to appear before the Senate committee Nov. 1, while the House panel requested them next month, according to aides from both committees.

FBI has 1,000 open investigations into violent white supremacy, domestic terror: Agency chief

Mike Levine, ABC News

The FBI has about 1,000 open investigations into potential domestic terrorists, including people who may be linked to extremist white supremacy, white nationalism and environmental movements, the agency's new chief, Christopher Wray, told Congress today. During his first testimony as FBI director, Wray said domestic terrorism is "a very, very serious" matter that the investigative agency spends "a lot of our time focused on."

With Tax Cuts on the Table, Once-Mighty Deficit Hawks Hardly Chirp

Thomas Kaplan, The New York Times

In 2001, when surging budget surpluses fueled hopes of extinguishing the national debt, a pitched battle broke out over President George W. Bush's proposed $1.6 trillion tax cut. Nevermind that the tax cut's 10-year tab was supposed to leave behind more than $3 trillion in surpluses - Democrats and some Republicans said that the tax cut was just too large.

Gorsuch's speeches raise questions of independence, critics say

Robert Barnes, The Washington Post

No member of Congress was more essential to Neil M. Gorsuch's ascent to the Supreme Court than Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, who blocked President Barack Obama's nominee for the job and then spearheaded the confirmation process for Gorsuch. Last week found McConnell (R-Ky.) and Gorsuch traveling the Bluegrass State together for a tour of the senator's alma maters.

Bannon's Back and Targeting China

Joshua Green, Bloomberg

As President Trump's chief strategist, Steve Bannon operated mostly behind the scenes to press his hard-right brand of nationalist politics, with only intermittent success. Since leaving the White House on Aug. 18, he's taken on a much more public role-declaring war against GOP congressional leaders on 60 Minutes and endorsing Roy Moore's insurgent candidacy in Alabama's Senate primary, despite Trump backing his opponent, Luther Strange.

---

Presidential

Trump lifts Jones Act to bolster Puerto Rico relief

Mallory Shelbourne, The Hill

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders announced early Thursday that President Trump has waived the Jones Act, lifting shipping restrictions to bolster relief efforts on hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico. "At @ricardorossello request, @POTUS has authorized the Jones Act be waived for Puerto Rico. It will go into effect immediately," Sanders tweeted, referring to Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló.

Trump Administration To Drop Refugee Cap To 45,000, Lowest In Years

Joel Rose, NPR News

The Trump administration plans to cap the number of refugees the U.S. will accept next year at 45,000. That is a dramatic drop from the level set by the Obama administration and would be the lowest number in years.

Mattis, in Afghanistan, Criticizes Iranian and Russian Aid to Taliban

Gordon Lubold and Craig Nelson, The Wall Street Journal

U.S. Defense Secretary Jim Mattis on Wednesday criticized Iran and Russia for continuing to arm and support Taliban fighters in Afghanistan, aid that American officials say provides the militant group with both firepower and added legitimacy. Mr. Mattis, on his first visit to Afghanistan since President Donald Trump spelled out a new South Asia strategy last month, met with Afghan President Ashraf Ghani and North Atlantic Treaty Organization Secretary-General Jens Stoltenberg, along with the top U.S. commander there, Gen. John Nicholson.

In Indiana, Trump promises 'revolutionary change' to tax code

Maureen Groppe, USA Today

President Trump promised Wednesday to bring "revolutionary change" to the federal tax code that will help the middle class - and not the wealthy. "They can call me all they want. It's not going to help," Trump said of the well-to-do in a speech in Indianapolis.

---

Senate

Rubio won't seek Foreign Relations chairmanship

Seung Min Kim and Elana Schor, Politico

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) said Wednesday that he has no interest in seeking the chairmanship of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, clearing the way for Sen. Jim Risch (R-Idaho) to claim the gavel in the next Congress. The committee's current chairman, Sen. Bob Corker of Tennessee, announced Tuesday that he would not seek reelection in 2018.

Roy Moore's Alabama Victory Sets Off Talk of a G.O.P. Insurrection

Alexander Burns and Jonathan Martin, The New York Times

Republicans are confronting an insurrection on the right that is angry enough to imperil their grip on Congress, and senior party strategists have concluded that the conservative base now loathes its leaders in Washington the same way it detested President Barack Obama. The defeat of Senator Luther Strange, Republican of Alabama, in a primary election on Tuesday night appears to have ushered in a season of savage nomination fights and activist-led attacks on party leaders, especially on Senator Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, the majority leader.

Senate Republicans have never heard of Roy Moore

John Bresnahan, Politico

Senate Republicans say they know almost nothing about Roy Moore, their wildly controversial candidate in the Alabama special election. But they really, really want him to be elected to the Senate.

Half of California's likely voters think Sen. Dianne Feinstein should retire, poll finds

Phil Willon, Los Angeles Times

As Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein contemplates a 2018 bid for reelection, a new poll has found that 50% of California's likely voters think she shouldn't run again. Just 43% of likely voters support Feinstein running for a sixth term, according to a Public Policy Institute of California poll released Wednesday.

---

House

House Republicans propose \$10 billion for Trump's border wall

Rachael Bade, Politico

House Republicans on Wednesday unveiled a plan to provide $10 billion for President Donald Trump's border wall with Mexico, a bill unlikely to clear the Senate but which could fuel a shutdown fight in December. Homeland Security Committee Chairman Mike McCaul (R-Texas) said his panel will vote on the legislation next week.

Titus skips Senate race, will run for re-election to Congress

Gary Martin, Las Vegas Review-Journal

Las Vegas Democrat Dina Titus announced Wednesday that she will forgo a Senate race and instead seek re-election to Nevada's 1st congressional district. Titus, who is serving her fourth term in Congress, cited her seniority in the House and position on committees as a reason for seeking re-election in the Democrat majority district.

Black Caucus chair: 'Utter disgust' with Trump's handling of race

Mike Lillis, The Hill

The head of the Congressional Black Caucus lashed out at President Trump Wednesday, accusing the president of both insensitivity and ignorance when it comes to issues of race. In a letter to Trump, Rep. Cedric Richmond (D-La.) said the president's verbal attacks on NFL players protesting police brutality marked a "disgraceful response" to demonstrators -- most of them African American -- fighting for social justice.

Scalise to Appear on '60 Minutes' on Sunday

Griffin Connolly, Roll Call

House Majority Whip Steve Scalise's first public interview since he was shot at a Congressional baseball team practice in June will air on Sunday. The interview with CBS's Norah O'Donnell will air on "60 Minutes" as part of a feature on Scalise's experience during the shooting and his recovery from it.

---

States

Judge strikes down Kentucky abortion law, saying it violates physicians' free speech

Darcy Costello, The Louisville Courier-Journal

A Kentucky law requiring doctors who conduct abortions to first perform ultrasounds and describe the image to the patient violates the First Amendment rights of those physicians, according to a federal judge. U.S. District Judge David Hale ruled Wednesday in favor of the American Civil Liberties Union's challenge to the law, made on behalf of the state's sole abortion provider, EMW Women's Surgical Center, and barred the state from enforcing it.

Clinton to raise money for Northam in Va. governor race

Gabriel Debenedetti, Politico

Hillary Clinton is set to return to the electoral fray next week. The Democratic Party's 2016 presidential nominee will break from her book tour to raise campaign money for Virginia Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam, the party's gubernatorial nominee, next Wednesday, multiple Democrats familiar with the plan confirmed to POLITICO.

Florida nursing homes challenge governor's order to install generators

The Associated Press

A group that represents nursing homes and assisted living facilities is challenging Florida Gov. Rick Scott's order that they install generators by Dec. 1, saying the deadline is impossible to meet and the order is simply a reaction to one incompetent nursing home where 11 people died in sweltering heat after Hurricane Irma. LeadingAge Florida filed the legal challenge with the Florida Division of Administrative Hearings on Tuesday, claiming Scott's order went beyond what's necessary to protect residents in nursing homes and assisted living facilities.

---

Advocacy

Lobbyists prepare for battle royal over tax breaks

Theodoric Meyer, Politico

House Speaker Paul Ryan warned Republican lawmakers on Wednesday to steel themselves to hear from "10,000 lobbyists" set on defending prized tax breaks that could be on the chopping block. Those lobbyists are getting ready, too.

Homeowner tax relief looks vulnerable as industry breaks ranks

Lorraine Woellert, Politico

The National Association of Home Builders split with industry allies to endorse a White House plan that reduces tax breaks for homeowners, increasing the vulnerability of a write-off that was once considered untouchable. The rift is a first for the industry, where real estate agents, builders, bankers and others in the homebuying pipeline typically lock arms to defend the mortgage-interest tax deduction as a building block to homeownership and wealth creation.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Washington Set Puerto Rico Up for Disaster

Hector Figueroa, The New York Times

It's been more than a week since I've had any word in New York from my 93-year-old father in Puerto Rico. He lives in Coamo, a town in the path of the worst storm to hit the island since 1928.

Congress must act to preserve CHIP and protect America's children

Tina Lee Cheng, The Baltimore Sun

On any given day we see dozens of children and adolescents at the Harriet Lane Clinic, part of the Johns Hopkins Children's Center located in the heart of Baltimore City. The kids come in from around the city for a variety of services - anything from a vaccine to comprehensive care for complex health conditions.

It's time for Mitch McConnell to go

Erick Erickson, The Washington Post

Until morale improves, the primary challenges against establishment Republicans from upstart conservatives will continue. And morale will not improve until Republicans replace Mitch McConnell as Senate majority leader.

---

Research Reports and Polling

"Big Six" Tax Framework Provides Windfall to High-Income Households, With Working Families Largely an Afterthought

Chuck Marr, Center on Budget and Policy Priorities

The "Big Six" Republican tax framework announced today specifies large tax cuts aimed at profitable corporations and wealthy households while offering only vague promises for lower- and middle-income working families. It closely follows many aspects of the House GOP's "Better Way" plan released last year, which was heavily tilted to those high on the income scale.

Big 6 Tax Framework Could Cost \$2.2 Trillion

Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget

The so-called "Big 6" today released their framework for comprehensive tax reform. While significant detail still needs to be filled in, enough exists for a very rough and very preliminary estimate of the details presented. Based on those details - and many assumptions - we estimate the plan calls for roughly $5.8 trillion of tax cuts and $3.6 trillion of base broadening, resulting in about $2.2 trillion of net tax cuts.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Trump's National Security Strategy to Focus on Economic, Trade Policies
Date: Monday, December 18, 2017 9:21:13 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- President Donald Trump today is expected to introduce his national security strategy, which will emphasize economic and trade policies. The strategy will focus on confronting unfair trade practices and urge U.S. "energy dominance." (The Wall Street Journal)
- Trump said he is not considering firing special counsel Robert Mueller amid criticism by conservatives over Mueller's acquisition of emails sent and received by Trump transition officials. Kory Langhofer, general counsel for Trump's transition group, said Mueller's investigators obtained transition emails from the General Services Administration instead of the transition team, a disclosure he called "unauthorized." (The Associated Press)

- Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) will not be on Capitol Hill for the expected final vote on tax overhaul legislation later this week, but his absence will not likely determine whether the bill passes now that GOP Sens. Bob Corker (Tenn.) and Marco Rubio (Fla.) say they will support the measure. McCain had spent several days in the hospital recovering from the side effects from chemotherapy treatment for brain cancer, and his office said he "looks forward to returning to Washington in January." (CBS News)
- Republican leaders in the House and Senate are backing conflicting strategies aimed at avoiding a government shutdown, with a Dec. 22 deadline for reaching a deal. A House strategy that would fund the Pentagon while doing nothing for Democratic priorities faces a tough reception in the Senate, where Republicans need Democratic votes to pass a government funding measure, and a Senate effort to pass legislation that would prop up Obamacare insurance markets could lose support among House Republicans. (Politico)

Chart Review

Democrats hold biggest lead in congressional preference since 2008
NBC News

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Center for Strategic & International Studies event on western and Chinese infrastructure development abroad 9 a.m.

---

House Rules Committee hearing on the Systemic Risk Designation Improvement Act 5 p.m.

TUESDAY

Incoming Virginia delegates Hurst, Roem speak at National Press Club 10 a.m.

---

Senate Banking Committee nomination hearing for Scott Garrett to lead Export-Import Bank 10 a.m.

---

Treasury official speaks at Council on Foreign Relations about combating human rights abuses and corruption 10 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

Education Secretary DeVos testifies before House Committee on Education and the Workforce 2 p.m.

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

2017 Brands in Review

This year, Morning Consult conducted nearly 1 million survey interviews on nearly 1,000 brands. Get a never-before-seen look at how public perception changed for the world's biggest brands.

General

**GOP leaders in House, Senate endorse conflicting shutdown strategies**

Rachael Bade et al., Politico

Republican leaders in both houses of Congress face a sticky situation this week as they try to avert a government shutdown: Each side has promised its members things that will not fly in the other chamber. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) told moderate Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) he'd support passage of legislation by the end of the year to prop up Obamacare insurance markets - so long as she votes for tax reform.

Record sexual harassment settlement exposes byzantine congressional process

Leigh Ann Caldwell, NBC News

Of all the secret deals cut on behalf of accused members of congress, the one that resulted in the largest settlement yet uncovered may be the most surprising. The details provide a window into a process so opaque, convoluted and confusing that even the accused congressman was left in the dark about exactly how and why his accuser ended up being paid $220,000 for her claim.

Paranoia grips Capitol Hill as harassment scandal spreads

Elana Schor and Rachael Bade, Politico

The details change almost daily, but the rumor won't die: A credible news organization is preparing to unmask at least 20 lawmakers in both parties for sexual misconduct. Speculation about this theoretical megastory is spreading like wildfire across Congress and beyond, a lurking bad-press boogeyman that's always described as on the verge of going public.

E.P.A. Employees Spoke Out. Then Came Scrutiny of Their Email.

Eric Lipton and Lisa Friedman, The New York Times

One Environmental Protection Agency employee spoke up at a private lunch held near the agency headquarters, saying she feared the nation might be headed toward an "environmental catastrophe." Another staff member, from Seattle, sent a letter to Scott Pruitt, the E.P.A. administrator, raising similar concerns about the direction of the agency.

Fallout from allegations of tea party targeting hamper IRS oversight of nonprofits

Robert O'Harrow Jr., The Washington Post

Years of conservative attacks on the Internal Revenue Service have greatly diminished the ability of agency regulators to oversee political activity by charities and other nonprofits, documents and interviews show. The fall in oversight, a byproduct of repeated cuts to the IRS budget, comes at a time when the number of charities is reaching a historic high and they are becoming more partisan and financially complex.

CDC Pushes Back Against Report of Words Like 'Fetus' And 'Transgender' Being Banned

Alana Abramson, Time

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is pushing back against a report alleging that the Trump administration had banned the organization from using specific words in next year's budget documents. The Washington Post reported the news on Friday, citing an analyst who had been briefed on the ban of seven terms, which was confirmed by other CDC officials.

---

Presidential

Trump Plans Shift to U.S. Security Strategy

Michael R. Gordon, The Wall Street Journal

President Donald Trump will put his domestic economic and trade policies at the heart of a new national-security strategy that depicts the world as one of heightened rivalries and potentially dangerous competition. The new strategy, with an emphasis on confronting unfair trade practices and precluding rivals from stealing American technology, holds potentially far-reaching implications for relations with China, which is described as a "revisionist power" that is seeking to undermine U.S. security and prosperity.

Trump says he isn't considering firing Mueller over emails

Jonathan Lemire, The Associated Press

President Donald Trump says he is not considering firing special counsel Robert Mueller, but that didn't stop him from adding to the growing conservative criticism of Mueller's acquisition of thousands of emails sent and received by Trump officials before the start of his administration. The disclosure came in a letter sent to two congressional committees by Kory Langhofer, general counsel of Trump's still-existing transition group, Trump for America.

After Alabama loss, Trump has ambitious plans to campaign in 2018 midterms

Josh Dawsey and Michael Scherer, The Washington Post

President Trump is not on the ballot in 2018, but the White House is planning a full-throttle campaign to plunge the president into the midterm elections, according to senior officials and advisers familiar with the planning. Trump's political aides have met with 116 candidates for office in recent months, according to senior White House officials, seeking to become involved in Senate, House and gubernatorial races - and possibly contested Republican primaries as well.

---

Senate

Sen. John McCain returns to Arizona, will miss vote on GOP tax bill

CBS News

Republican Sen. John McCain is returning to Arizona after spending several days in a Maryland hospital recovering from side effects from chemotherapy treatment for brain cancer, CBS News has learned. McCain left Washington Sunday and is heading back to his home state to spend the holidays with his family.

Tax Bill: Bob Corker Demands Answers From Chairman Orrin Hatch About Last-Minute Tax Provision

David Sirota and Josh Keefe, International Business Times

Facing a firestorm of criticism, Republican Sen. Bob Corker (TN) sent a letter Sunday night to Senate Finance Committee Chair Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, asking how the final tax bill ended up including a special tax cut provision experts say would particularly benefit investors in real-estate related LLCs. The letter follows an International Business Times investigative series showing that Corker, President Donald Trump, House Speaker Paul Ryan and a handful of key GOP lawmakers overseeing the tax bill have multimillion-dollar ownership stakes in such LLCs, meaning they could be personally enriched by the provision, which was added to the final tax legislation released on Friday.

Franken urged to reverse his resignation

Edward-Isaac Dove, Politico

At least four senators are urging Al Franken to reconsider resigning, including two who issued statements calling for the resignation two weeks ago and said they now feel remorse over what they feel was a rush to judgment. Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.), who urged Franken not to step down to begin with - at least not before he went through an Ethics Committee investigation - said the Minnesota senator was railroaded by fellow Democrats.

Jones: Trump shouldn't resign over misconduct allegations

Hope Yen, The Associated Press

Democratic Sen.-elect Doug Jones says he doesn't think President Donald Trump should resign over allegations of sexual misconduct, echoing the White House's position that voters have already spoken on the issue. "I don't think the president ought to resign at this point. We'll see how things go, but certainly those allegations are not new, and he was elected with those allegations at front center," said Jones, whose upset win in last week's Alabama special election was due in large part to allegations that his Republican opponent, 70-year-old Roy Moore, had engaged in sexual misconduct with teenage girls as a deputy district attorney in his 30s.

How the oldest Senate ever is taking a toll on the business of Washington

Paul Kane, The Washington Post

In November, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, who is 83, was at the helm when the Senate's massive tax bill came through the Finance Committee. But Hatch also deputized four younger Republicans on the panel to serve as de facto co-chairmen over various parts of the legislation.

---

House

Virginia Democrat Bobby Scott Accused of Sexual Harassment

Eric Garcia, Roll Call

A former fellow with the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation on Friday accused Virginia Rep. Robert C. Scott of sexually harassing her. M. Reese Everson, who worked in Scott's office during her fellowship in 2013, made the accusations during a press conference.

Kansas Dem Andrea Ramsey, accused of sexual harassment, to quit U.S. House race

Lindsay Wise and Bryan Lowry, The Kansas City Star

Andrea Ramsey, a Democratic candidate for Congress, will drop out of the race after The Kansas City Star asked her about accusations in a 2005 lawsuit that she sexually harassed and retaliated against a male subordinate who said he had rejected her advances. Multiple sources with knowledge of the case told The Star that the man reached a settlement with LabOne, the company where Ramsey was executive vice president of human resources.

House Democrats Face Tough Choices in Judiciary Panel Race

Todd Ruger, Roll Call

Two experienced Democratic lawmakers with contrasting styles are vying to become the ranking member of the House Judiciary Committee, and the vote this week could signal much more than just who will press the party's agenda on the panel. The choice of Rep. Jerrold Nadler of New York or Rep. Zoe Lofgren of California will reveal much about the Democrats' long-term strategy for a key committee as it deals with the tumult of President Donald Trump's administration, the special counsel investigating his campaign, threats to civil rights and a reckoning of allegations of improper sexual behavior sweeping through Capitol Hill.

House Intelligence Panel Is Rushing to Complete Russia Probe

Nicholas Fandos, The New York Times

The House Intelligence Committee is racing to complete its investigation of Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election, scheduling a host of witness interviews here and in New York for next week as Congress heads for its break, and, Democrats said, leaving other leads unfollowed. Some of the most important witnesses are to be interviewed in New York by committee staff early next week, possibly leaving Democrats to choose between attending those depositions or voting on the massive tax bill coming before the House.

---

States

Gov. Tom Wolf calls for resignation of Sen. Daylin Leach following

allegations of inappropriate behavior

Charles Thompson, PennLive.com

Gov. Tom Wolf Sunday became the first major public official to call for Sen. Daylin Leach to resign from office in the wake of newly-published allegations about inappropriate treatment of staff. Wolf's statement, issued by his press office shortly after 4 p.m., came in response to a lengthy Philadelphia Inquirer report detailing complaints from several former female staffers about a history of sexually suggestive jokes and a number of instances of inappropriate touches.

Gov. Terry McAuliffe proposes higher taxes in Northern Virginia to support Metro

Robert McCartney, The Washington Post

Northern Virginians would pay higher taxes on real estate sales, hotel stays and wholesale gasoline to provide Metro with long-sought dedicated funding under a proposal to be announced Monday by Gov. Terry McAuliffe (D). The new tax revenue of $65 million a year would be in addition to $85 million that Northern Virginia would earmark for Metro from funds the region already devotes to transportation, according to the McAuliffe plan.

Gov. Cuomo Proposes \$11.5 Million Gang-Fighting Plan

Melanie Grayce West, The Wall Street Journal

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo unveiled an $11.5 million plan on Sunday that aims to curtail recruitment of new gang members to MS-13 on Long Island. The proposal, part of the governor's 2018 agenda, focuses on social and education programs for at-risk youth in Suffolk County.

Iowa Supreme Court justice blocks Register's use of court records

Clark Kauffman, Des Moines Register

An Iowa Supreme Court justice has issued a highly unusual order prohibiting the Des Moines Register from publishing information gleaned from court records. The Register has objected, calling the order an unlawful form of prior restraint that violates the First Amendment and "stands as an undesirable and unsustainable outlier in the law and policy of this state and this nation."

---

Advocacy

Lobbyist Has To Change The Way She Does Business In Era Of #MeToo

NPR News

The growing awareness about sexual harassment has opened up a dialogue in the workplace and changed behavior. But that transition can have awkward moments, too. Jennifer Green has been a lobbyist in the Florida state legislature in Tallahassee for more than 20 years, and she's found that she's had to change the way she does business.

Bitcoin boom brings new scrutiny from Washington

Sylvan Lane and Ali Breland, The Hill

Bitcoin boom brings new scrutiny from Washington Bitcoin and other cryptocurrencies rallied to all time highs this past week, attracting new attention from U.S. regulators. Professional and amateur investors are flocking to the digital currencies as they explode in value.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Defense Bill Shows Impediments to Fiscal Restraint

Sean Kennedy, Morning Consult

Republican members of Congress have long considered security spending to be a sacred cow. The refrain has been a familiar one: Any cuts to the Department of Defense would jeopardize national security.

Democrats Against Tax Reform

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Republicans are poised this week to cut taxes for most American workers and businesses, fulfilling a core campaign promise. But before the House and Senate vote, it's worth noting that they may do so without a single Democrat in support.

The Senate is rushing through Trump's judicial nominees. These embarrassments prove it.

Editorial Board, The Washington Post

President Trump has confirmed 12 nominees to judgeships on the federal courts of appeals - more than any other modern president achieved during his first year. Yet while Republicans may pride themselves on this record, a string of recent embarrassments shows that the Senate is rushing too quickly through Mr.â€™s Trump's choices.

The Spiraling Diaspora From Puerto Rico

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

It's been 12 weeks and counting, and Puerto Rico still flounders in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria, left to beg for federal help. The politics and indifference underlying the island's desperation recall the lyrics of Stephen Sondheim 60 years ago in "West Side Story": Nobody knows in America Puerto Rico's in America!

Paul Ryan Is More Than A Policy Wonk

Amy Walter, The Cook Political Report

Rumors have been swirling around Washington for a few weeks now that Speaker Paul Ryan will hang up the Speaker's gavel in 2018. The famously wonky Wisconsin-ite is on the cusp of achieving his long-time goal of tax reform, and after that happens, the thinking goes, there's little left for Ryan to do except for the drudge work like responding to President Trump's tweets and disciplining sexual harassers.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Placing Priority How Issues Mattered More than Demographics in the 2016 Election

David Winston, Democracy Fund Voter Study Group

The 2016 presidential election was arguably one of the most unusual in American history. The two major political parties chose nominees whom the majority of the country viewed unfavorably.

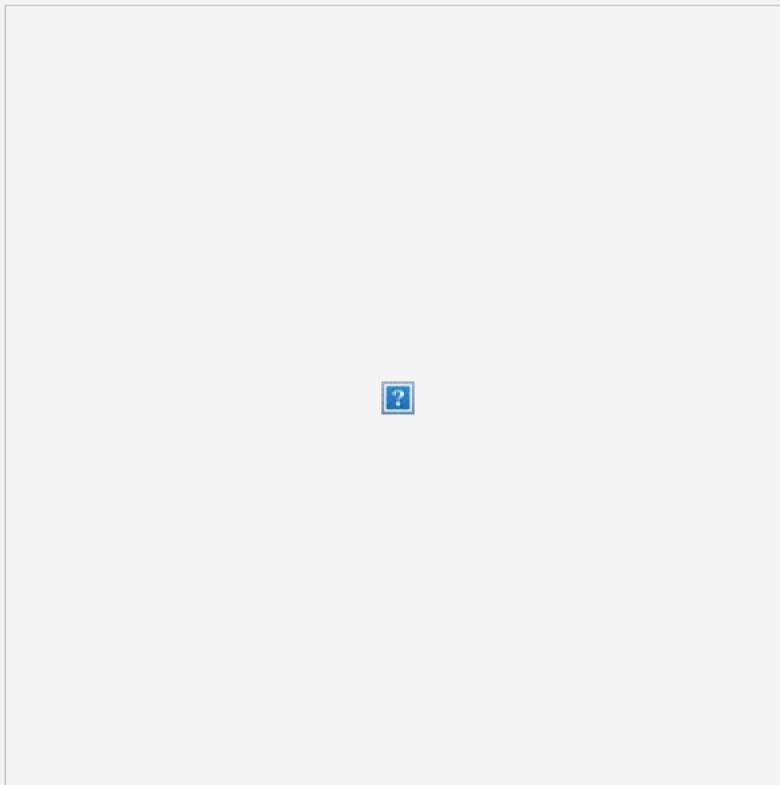

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Trump's Team Investigating Mueller's Team
Date: Friday, July 21, 2017 8:48:23 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- Lawyers and aides to President Donald Trump are investigating the investigators hired by special counsel Robert Mueller, scouring their records for potential conflicts of interest in an attempt to discredit their work. Trump has said Mueller's team would be outside its mandate if they moved beyond Russia and into his personal finances. (The New York Times)
- House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) went to a factory in Massachusetts to pitch his tax reform plan, calling a 20 percent business tax rate "realistic." Republicans are aiming to pass comprehensive tax reform this year. (CNBC)

- The United States is said to be preparing a ban on Americans traveling to North Korea. The reported policy shift follows the death of Otto Warmbier, a U.S. student who died after being imprisoned in North Korea, where he was on a tour. (Reuters)

Chart Review

Since Trump's Election, Increased Attention to Politics - Especially Among Women

Pew Research Center

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

Tour operators say U.S. to ban citizens from travel to North Korea

Se Young Lee and James Pearson, Reuters

Two tour agencies that arrange trips to North Korea said on Friday the U.S. government will soon ban its citizens from traveling there, after the death of a U.S. student arrested there while on a tour. Koryo Tours said the ban would be announced on July 27 and would go into effect 30 days later.

Moscow in talks with U.S. to create cyber security working group - RIA report

Denis Pinchuk, Reuters

Moscow and Washington are in talks to create a joint cyber security working group, Russia's RIA news agency reported on Thursday, citing Andrey Krutskikh, a special presidential envoy on cyber security. "The talks are underway ... different proposals are being exchanged, nobody denies the necessity of holding the talks and of having such contacts," Krutskikh said, according to RIA.

The strange legal battle that is pitting Trump's secretaries of the Treasury and State against each other

Damian Paletta and Carol Morello, The Washington Post

Two of President Trump's most senior cabinet members became embroiled Thursday in an unusual legal battle over whether ExxonMobil under Secretary of State Rex Tillerson's leadership violated U.S. sanctions against Russia. Treasury officials fined ExxonMobil $2 million Thursday morning for signing eight business agreements in 2014 with Igor Sechin, the chief executive of Rosneft, an energy giant partially owned by the Russian government.

---

Presidential

Trump Aides, Seeking Leverage, Investigate Mueller's Investigators

Michael S. Schmidt et al., The New York Times

President Trump's lawyers and aides are scouring the professional and political backgrounds of investigators hired by the special counsel Robert S. Mueller III, looking for conflicts of interest they could use to discredit the investigation - or even build a case to fire Mr. Mueller or get some members of his team recused, according to three people with knowledge of the research effort. The search for potential conflicts is wide-ranging.

Mueller Expands Probe to Trump Business Transactions

Greg Farrell and Christian Berthelsen, Bloomberg

The U.S. special counsel investigating possible ties between the Donald Trump campaign and Russia in last year's election is examining a broad range of transactions involving Trump's businesses as well as those of his associates, according to a person familiar with the probe. FBI investigators and others are looking at Russian purchases of apartments in Trump buildings, Trump's involvement in a controversial SoHo development in New York with Russian associates, the 2013 Miss Universe pageant in Moscow and Trump's sale of a Florida mansion to a Russian oligarch in 2008, the person said.

Trump expected to make Scaramucci communications director

Jonathan Swan, Axios

President Trump is expected to announce that Wall Street financier Anthony Scaramucci will be White House communications director, according to two sources familiar with the planning. Trump has left the role open since Mike Dubke resigned in May, and the President has vented frequently to his friends about the performance of his press operation.

The Trump Administration Wants To Loosen Bear Hunting Rules In Alaska Parks

Nidhi Subbaraman, BuzzFeed News

The Interior Department is directing the National Park Service to overturn controversial hunting rules in public park lands in Alaska, according to a memo obtained by the National Parks Conservation Association. The July 14 memo was written by Virginia Johnson, a political appointee at Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's office.

---

Senate

GOP Senators Take Sessions' Side in Spat With Trump

David Hawkings, Roll Call

Confronted with the rare and awkward choice of siding with either a president of their party or a Cabinet member who's a former colleague, Senate Republicans are sounding of single mind: Attorney General Jeff Sessions, until five months ago a senior GOP senator from Alabama, has done nothing to merit the upbraiding he's been taking from President Donald Trump. Being a former member of one of the most exclusive clubs in American politics, it seems, has privileges - including insulation from a wave of piling on when your job seems in jeopardy.

GOP Floats Proposal to Ease Medicaid Cuts

Louise Radnofsky and Kristina Peterson, *The Wall Street Journal

Senate Republicans, scrambling to win support for their health-care bill, pushed a measure Thursday that they said could ease the impact of the bill's Medicaid cuts on low-income people. Advocating for the new direction is a little-known health official who is now at the center of the health-care fight: Seema Verma, head of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, which oversees the two federal medical programs.

Under fire for opposing health bill, Mike Lee hits back

Burgess Everett and Jennifer Haberkorn, *Politico

Mike Lee hears the chorus of critics, with blame from the establishment wing of the GOP cascading on the Utah senator for being the Republican that stopped Obamacare repeal. And he's ready to respond.

Trump Admin Actively Encouraging Kid Rock to Run for Senate, Want to Help Campaign, Insiders Say

Benny Johnson, *Independent Journal Review

Some Trump administration officials are actively looking for ways to help Kid Rock run and win a U.S. Senate seat in Michigan, according to multiple sources close to the administration. Two people with detailed knowledge of internal White House political dealings spoke on the condition of anonymity with Independent Journal Review, and cited a heavy curiosity by administration officials over the rap/rock superstar's flirtation with running for office.

Harry Reid's Legacy Hangs Over Nevada Senate Race

Eli Yokley, *Morning Consult

As she considers a U.S. Senate run, Democratic Rep. Dina Titus could find herself going up against the political machine built by former Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid during his decades in Nevada politics. Many strategists, elected officials and outside groups - from Nevada to Washington, D.C. - aligned almost instantly with Rep. Jacky Rosen, the first-term Democrat whom Reid and his leadership successor, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.), recruited to carry the party's torch against Republican Sen. Dean Heller next fall.

---

House

Paul Ryan says tax reform will get done because GOP is 'much more unified' on issue

Christine Wang, CNBC

House Speaker Paul Ryan said he feels more confident that tax reform can get done this year than a health-care overhaul because Republicans are "wired the same way" on the issue. "Obviously, as you can see in the Senate, there is a difference of opinions on how to do health-care reform. We are so much more unified on tax reform, on what it looks like, and how to do it and the need to do it," the Wisconsin Republican told reporters Thursday.

House Republicans try to revive ban on Pentagon transgender surgeries

Rachael Bade, Politico

Several House Republicans are working behind the scenes to revive a failed effort to bar the Pentagon from funding gender reassignment surgeries for troops. A mix of GOP defense hawks and conservatives are urging Speaker Paul Ryan and his team to use a procedural trick to automatically include the controversial proposal in a spending package set for floor consideration next week.

House Tees Up Vote Next Week on Bid to Undo CFPB Arbitration Rule

Ryan Rainey, Morning Consult

The House will vote next week on a resolution that would block the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's new rule that bars banks from requiring arbitration clauses in consumer contracts, House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) said Thursday. The resolution, H.J. Res. 111, was introduced by Rep. Keith Rothfus (R-Pa.) with the backing from every Republican member of the House Financial Services Committee.

---

States

Democratic state attorneys general urge Trump to keep DACA, say it has boosted economy

Maria Sacchetti, The Washington Post

Attorneys general from 19 states and the District of Columbia are urging President Trump to save an Obama-era program that protects nearly 800,000 undocumented immigrants from deportation, and offering to help him defend it in court. Led by California Attorney General Xavier Becerra, the group of Democrats is twice the size of the 10-state coalition of Republican officials that have threatened to sue the Trump administration if it does not start to phase out the program by Sept. 5.

Gillespie shifts from avoiding Trump to dropping the president's name

Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

Two little words are on Ed Gillespie's lips of late: "President Trump." Since launching his bid for Virginia governor, the establishment Republican had treated the man in the White House like a Voldemortian unmentionable.

Texas businesses rallying against bathroom bill

Chris Tomlinson, Houston Chronicle

When did it become OK for the state's top politicians to ignore Texas executives on issues critical to our economic future? Gov. Greg Abbott and Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick are reviving their bill that would deny transgender Texans the liberty to live public lives.

---

Advocacy

Koch network prepares pivot to tax reform

Maggie Severns, Politico

A political group backed by Charles and David Koch will soon kick off a multi-million dollar campaign in support of overhauling the tax code that is poised to become the Koch network's closest collaboration with the White House. The Koch-funded Americans for Prosperity will launch its new tax reform efforts on

Aug. 2 at the Newseum, according to an invitation reviewed by POLITICO.

Small Banks Warn Lawmakers Against 'Extreme' Overhaul of GSE Rules

Anna Gronewold, Morning Consult

Amid efforts to overhaul Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as they deplete their capital buffer, small lenders are warning against actions they say could be disastrous for community-based mortgage lending. Representatives from small banks and credit unions on Thursday urged the Senate Banking Committee to avoid mirroring previous congressional proposals regarding government-sponsored enterprises and instead called for changes to level the playing field for all mortgage lenders.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Sessions Hangs In There

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

The White House said Thursday that President Trump still has confidence in Attorney General Jeff Sessions, but after the past two days the better question is whether Mr. Sessions still has confidence in the President. Mr. Trump needs the AG at this point more than the reverse.

Obama stood up to Russian interference. Now Trump must follow through.

Denis McDonough, The Washington Post

I have watched with concern the tone, substance and trajectory of the national debate about Russian efforts to interfere in the 2016 U.S. presidential election. I write today to set the record straight about the events of last fall and, more important, to ensure that we as a nation do not lose sight of what happened - and what we must do to preserve our democracy.

Trump, ObamaCare and the Art of the Fail

Peggy Noonan, The Wall Street Journal

It was a political drubbing of the first order. A new Republican president and a Republican Senate and House put everything they had into a bill to repeal and replace ObamaCare, and couldn't do it. The leadership is rocked.

A Republican Health Care Fix

J. D. Vance, The New York Times

Imagine a young father stepping into the street. He is alert and conscientious.

To Shrink Jails, Let's Reform Bail

Kamala D. Harris and Rand Paul, The New York Times

Kalief Browder, a 16-year-old New Yorker, was arrested on charges of stealing a backpack in 2010. To ensure he would show up for trial, and because of a previous offense, the judge set bail at $3,000.

John McCain Is a National Treasure

Dov Zakheim, Foreign Policy

I first got to know John McCain when I was a fresh-faced analyst at the recently established Congressional Budget Office and he was a captain in the Navy's Office of Legislative Affairs. We dealt briefly with each other when he served in the House of Representatives, and I was an official in Caspar Weinberger's Defense Department.

---

Research Reports and Polling

On Abortion, Americans Discern Between Immoral and Illegal

Frank Newport and Robert Bird, Gallup

Americans are often more likely to view behaviors as morally wrong than they are to advocate that these behaviors be made illegal. This underscores a general tendency for Americans to hesitate before deciding that banning an action is appropriate.

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, July 23, 2017 9:01:39 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

White House

- President Donald Trump said that an investigative team led by special counsel Robert Mueller, who is looking into Russia's involvement in the 2016 U.S. election and possible ties to Trump's campaign, would be crossing a line if it began probing his finances. Mueller's team is said to be looking into Trump's business dealings, and the president's team of lawyers and aides is now investigating Mueller's team by looking for any conflicts of interest in an attempt to discredit their work.

- Trump said he would never have nominated Jeff Sessions to be attorney general if he knew Sessions would recuse himself from overseeing the Justice Department's Russia investigation. Sessions, a former Alabama senator, said he plans to continue on in his post.
- Fifty-two percent of registered U.S. voters said Donald Trump Jr.'s meeting with a Kremlin-linked attorney in June 2016 was inappropriate, according to a Morning Consult/POLITICO poll. Voter support for the meeting rose 5 points, to 28 percent, when poll participants were told the lawyer "could allegedly provide official documents and information that would incriminate Hillary Clinton."
- Sean Spicer announced his resignation as White House press secretary, citing disagreements with Trump's hiring of New York financier Anthony Scaramucci as communications director. Spicer told Trump the hiring was a major mistake. Scaramucci said deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders will take over when Spicer leaves in August.
- The Trump administration can continue to block many refugees from six predominantly Muslim countries with its temporary travel ban, but the Supreme Court said the ban could not apply to foreigners who are grandparents or cousins of Americans. That exemption prompted a Hawaii judge to challenge the implementation.
- After certifying that Iran is complying with the Obama-era nuclear deal, the Trump administration slapped new sanctions on 16 entities and individuals it said support Iran's elite military unit and ballistic missile program.

Congress

- The Congressional Budget Office said the latest version of the Senate's bill to repeal and replace Obamacare would leave 22 million more people uninsured. Repeal without replacement - an approach Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) said he now wants the Senate to consider - would leave 32 million more people uninsured, and it would double insurance premiums by 2026, the CBO said.
- Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) was diagnosed with brain cancer. McCain may undergo chemotherapy and radiation treatment. His office has given no timeline for when he might return to the Senate.

- Former Sen. Harry Reid (D-Nev.) has focused his political machine on getting Rep. Jacky Rosen to win the Democratic nomination to challenge Sen. Dean Heller (R-Nev.) next year. But Rep. Dina Titus (D-Nev.) said she has good poll numbers and is still considering a campaign against Rosen.
- Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) and Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) announced their introduction of the Dream Act, with Graham saying that if Trump wants to get the Republican Party on board with saving "Dreamers" from deportation he could do so "at the snap of his fingers."

What's Ahead

- The House and Senate will each convene on Monday.
- The Senate is slated to vote on the nomination of David Bernhardt to be deputy secretary of the Interior. McConnell is still pushing for a vote on health care this week, despite fears he may not have the votes to advance the legislation.
- Trump's son-in-law and adviser Jared Kushner is slated to appear privately before the Senate Intelligence Committee on Monday as part of the panel's Russia probe.
- The leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee struck a deal with Donald Trump Jr. and the president's former campaign chairman, Paul Manafort, that lets the two men avoid testifying in public this week so long as they provide records and private testimony to the panel.
- House leaders rejected the White House's objections and reached consensus on a plan to modify a Russia sanctions package. The House could move forward on the legislation, which includes sanctions against Iran and North Korea, as soon as Tuesday.
- The House this week is also slated to vote on: Rep. Phil Roe's (R-Tenn.) Forever GI Bill; a resolution aimed at blocking the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's arbitration rule; and spending bills for various parts of the government, including defense, the legislative branch, energy and water programs, and military construction and Veterans' Affairs.

- After Rep. Vicky Hartzler (R-Mo.) said she would not run for her party's nomination to challenge Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill, all eyes are now on state Attorney General Josh Hawley, who has not yet announced his intentions.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

IMF's Lagarde speaks at the Center for Global Development 10:30 a.m.

---

House Freedom Caucus Chairman Meadows speaks at Press Club 12 p.m.

---

Brookings Institution event on broadband in Trump's infrastructure plan 3 p.m.

---

House Rules Committee meeting 5 p.m.

TUESDAY

Senate Agriculture Committee hearing on commodities, credit and crop insurance 8:30 a.m.

---

Chinese ambassador to the United States remarks at Institute for China-America Studies conference 9:10 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup of THUD spending bill 11 a.m.

---

Sens. Reed, Coons, Peters speak at Alliance For Manufacturing Foresight event 12 p.m.

---

Commerce Secretary Ross speaks at The Economic Club of Washington 12 p.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup of CJS spending bill 2:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

Sen. Cassidy speaks at Bloomberg Government event on health care 7:30 a.m.

---

Reps. Blumenauer, Bucshon, Murphy speak at The Hill's health care event 8 a.m.

---

House Agriculture Committee hearing on renegotiating NAFTA 10 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee reviews Treasury Dept. budget request 10 a.m.

---

Sens. Whitehouse, Schatz speak at AEI about carbon taxes 3 p.m.

THURSDAY

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin testifies before House Financial Services Committee 10 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations Committee markup of CJS, THUD, legislative branch bills 10:30 a.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) A Top Republican Vows a Vote on Health Care, but Uncertainty Reigns

Robert Pear, The New York Times

2) America's Most and Least Popular Governors - July 2017

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

3) The Top Jobs in Trump's Administration Are Mostly Vacant: Who's to Blame?

Karen Yourish and Gregor Aisch, The New York Times

4) Citing Recusal, Trump Says He Wouldn't Have Hired Sessions

Peter Baker et al., The New York Times

5) Has Trump Turned CNN Into an Existential House of Dread

Sarah Ellison, Vanity Fair

6) Warner Wants More Investigation Into Trump Digital Campaign Role

Mark Niquette and Alan Bjerga, Bloomberg News

7) McConnell Abandons Obamacare Repeal and Replace Effort

Joe Williams, Roll Call

8) Trump is killing the Republican Party

Joe Scarborough, The Washington Post

9) House panel approves budget with hopes for tax reform

Andrew Taylor, The Associated Press

10) Trump Aides, Seeking Leverage, Investigate Mueller's Investigators

Michael S. Schmidt et al., The New York Times

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, July 30, 2017 9:01:42 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump replaced White House Chief of Staff Reince Priebus with Homeland Security Secretary John Kelly, who is expected to be sworn in on Monday.
- Marine Gen. Joe Dunford, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, said "there will be no modifications" to the military's current transgender policies until Trump issues official guidance to the Defense Department. Trump's tweets declaring that transgender people would no longer be allowed to serve in the military were criticized by congressional Republicans .

- Trump said he is disappointed in Attorney General Jeff Sessions, calling him "beleaguered." Trump is frustrated with Sessions' recusal from the Justice Department's Russia probe, and the president has reportedly spoken privately with confidants about the possibility of using a recess appointment to replace Sessions.
- Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner was on Capitol Hill to speak with House and Senate investigators looking into Russian meddling in the 2016 election. In a public statement, Kushner said he "did not collude."
- White House communications director Anthony Scaramucci criticized Chief of Staff Reince Priebus and strategist Steve Bannon during a profanity-laced interview. He also threatened to fire any White House communications staffers involved in leaking information to journalists.

Congress

- Senate Republicans failed to coalesce around one of three plans to repeal the 2010 Affordable Care Act, despite years of campaign promises to do so. Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) cast the the deciding vote against against the so-called "skinny repeal" measure.
- The Senate passed a bill that would impose new sanctions on Russia, Iran and North Korea. Russia's Foreign Ministry responded by ordering the United States to reduce the number of diplomatic staff it has in Russia by Sept. 1.
- The House passed a $789 billion defense spending package that included funding for 70 miles of a wall along the southern U.S. border, which lawmakers have dubbed as a downpayment on Trump's proposed border wall.
- In Wisconsin, Marine veteran Kevin Nicholson (R) announced his campaign for Senate against Democratic Sen. Tammy Baldwin. In Indiana, Rep. Luke Messer (R) said he will seek his party's nomination to challenge Sen. Joe Donnelly (D).
- As he campaigns against Sen. Luther Strange (R-Ala.) for the Republican Party's Senate nomination on Aug. 15, Rep. Mo Brooks (R-Ala.) has taken aim at Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), saying he should step down as majority leader.

What's Ahead

- The House is in recess until September.
- The Senate, which is expected to be in session through the first two weeks of August, will reconvene on Monday at 4 p.m. to consider executive nominations. McCain will not be present, with his office saying he will begin "targeted radiation and chemotherapy" for his recently diagnosed brain cancer.
- The White House said Trump intends to sign into law the Russia sanctions bill that was passed with overwhelming support in both chambers.
- Trump is scheduled to be in Huntington, W. Va., for a campaign rally Thursday.
- Rep. John Delaney (D-Md.) said he will run for president in 2020.
- If GOP lawmakers want to do something on health care after last week's failure, they have a couple options: a bipartisan push with support from Democrats, or smaller changes, such as addressing cost-sharing reduction payments to insurers.
- Congressional Republicans and administration officials said they're aiming to tackle tax reform later this year. The border adjustment tax, opposed by conservatives, is off the table.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Brookings Institution event on next steps for NATO 10 a.m.

---

Center for American Progress event on the power of black women 12 p.m.

TUESDAY

Senate Finance Committee hearing on affordable housing 10 a.m.

---

Pew Charitable Trusts webinar on flood threats to public schools 2 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

Brookings Institution event on congressional procedural politics 10 a.m.

---

Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on the Colombia peace process 10 a.m.

THURSDAY

Senate Energy & Natural Resources Committee hearing on wild land fire risk 10 a.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on nominations 10 a.m.

---

Federal Communications Commission monthly meeting 10:30 a.m.

---

Trump campaign rally in Huntington, W. Va. 7 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Anthony Scaramucci Called Me to Unload About White House Leakers, Reince Priebus, and Steve Bannon

Ryan Lizza, The New Yorker

2) Trump Has Averaged 50% or Higher Job Approval in 17 States

Jeffrey M. Jones, Gallup

3) Trump talks privately about the idea of a recess appointment to replace Sessions

Carol D. Leonnig et al., The Washington Post

4) Mo Brooks' Senate ad focuses on baseball shooting, upsets Steve Scalise's staff

Paul Gattis, Alabama.com

5) Sessions' New Civil Asset Forfeiture Policy Fares Poorly Among Voters

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

6) Obamacare Repeal Fails Early in Senate Health-Care Debate

Laura Litvan et al., Bloomberg News

7) Many Republicans Doubt Clinton Won Popular Vote

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

8) 'I Did Not Collude,' Kushner Says After Meeting Senate Investigators

Matt Apuzzo and Maggie Haberman, The New York Times

9) Senate Rejects Slimmed-Down Obamacare Repeal as McCain Votes No

Robert Pear and Thomas Kaplan, The New York Times

10) House passes spending package with border wall money

Sarah Ferris, Politico

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:02:31 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump on Saturday condemned "hatred, bigotry and violence on many sides" in Charlottesville, Va., after a demonstration over a Confederate statue on Saturday turned violent and deadly.
- U.S. tensions with North Korea escalated last week, after a Defense Intelligence Agency report surfaced revealing North Korea has miniaturized warheads small enough to fit atop intercontinental ballistic missiles. Trump threatened "fire and fury" against North Korea if it endangered the U.S., prompting its leader, Kim Jong Un, to threaten the U.S. territory Guam.

- Trump's disapproval topped 55 percent in a Morning Consult/POLITICO poll released last week, the highest of his presidency. The same survey, conducted into last weekend, found most Americans say U.S.-North Korea relations have worsened under Trump.
- Trump shrugged off Russian President Vladimir Putin's decision to expel 755 American diplomats from Moscow over new U.S. sanctions. Rather than express outrage, he said he was "thankful" Putin "let go of a large number of people" so the U.S. can save money, though it is not clear the State Department is no longer employing the diplomats.
- It was revealed that federal investigators raided the Washington, D.C.-area home of Trump's former campaign chairman, Paul Manafort, the day after he met with Senate investigators in July. Federal investigators have sought the cooperation of his son-in-law as they investigate his own finances, as well as Russian meddling in the 2016 election.
- A draft report by scientists for 13 federal agencies found the average temperature in the U.S. has risen rapidly since 1980 and that Americans are feeling the effects of climate change right now, language at odds with Trump's rhetoric on the issue.

Congress

- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) took heat last week after he took on Trump's "excessive expectations" about how quickly legislation could be enacted. Several Republican senators came to his defense.
- Some rank-and-file Democrats, as well as a handful of Republicans, have said Trump should go to Congress to request an authorization for the use of military force should he try to make good on his threats to North Korea.
- Several Senate Democrats say Trump's judicial nominees are not meeting with them, breaking a tradition of the upper chamber. Also bucking tradition, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) has said he would be willing to advance the nominees without the home-state senators' approval.

- A Morning Consult/POLITICO poll found 44 percent of voters approve of a plan, backed by Trump and sponsored by Sens. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) and David Perdue (R-Ga.) to curb legal immigration.
- Danny Tarkanian, the son of famed University of Nevada Las Vegas basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian and a perennial candidate, said he will challenge Nevada Sen. Dean Heller for the Republican Senate nomination next year.

What's Ahead

- Voters in Alabama will head to the polls Tuesday for a special election for the Republican nomination in Attorney General Jeff Sessions' old Senate seat. Sen. Luther Strange, who was appointed to the seat in February, is polling second to former Alabama Supreme Court Judge Roy Moore, but earned the endorsement of Trump, which his campaign is touting. Rep. Mo Brooks (R) is also competing for the seat. If nobody breaches 50 percent of the vote, there will be a Sept. 26 run-off.
- Voters in Utah will go to the polls to select the Republican nominee to replace Rep. Jason Chaffetz (R), who left Congress in June. There are three candidates vying for the nomination in the safe Republican district.
- While Congress is home for recess, some are scrambling to find a way to raise the debt limit, despite political opposition among conservatives. The government is expected to reach its borrowing limit by the end of September.
- Sen. Michael Enzi (R-Wyo.), chair of the Senate Budget Committee, has told fellow Republicans he plans to mark up the fiscal year 2018 budget resolution in September. The move is key to the party's effort to tackle tax reform this fall.
- Members of the conservative House Freedom Caucus are planning to use a procedural move to try to force another vote on repealing Obamacare. The tactic would require signatures from a majority of lawmakers.

- The House and Senate are expected to fully convene again on Sept. 26. Trump will return to Washington tomorrow to call for a probe into Chinese trade actions.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

No events scheduled

TUESDAY

Special primary elections in Alabama and Utah All day

---

House meets for a pro forma session 9:30 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on reorganizing the federal government 11 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Canadian diplomat in Cuba also suffered hearing loss

Matthew Lee, The Associated Press

2) Scientists Fear Trump Will Dismiss Blunt Climate Report

Lisa Friedman, The New York Times

3) The Congressional Map Has A Record-Setting Bias Against Democrats

David Wasserman, FiveThirtyEight

4) Republicans Discuss a Mix of Temporary, Permanent Tax Changes

Anna Edgerton, Bloomberg News

5) Inside the Air Force One ride where Trump shook up his staff

Marisa Schultz, New York Post

6) Back home, Speaker Ryan can't escape questions about GOP

Scott Bauer, The Associated Press

7) Now Starring in the West Wing: Sarah Huckabee Sanders

Michael M. Grynbaum, The New York Times

8) New Chief of Staff Kelly Moves Quickly to Tame Trump's Tweets

Jennifer Jacobs et al., Bloomberg News

9) Finding a Road Forward

Haley Byrd, Independent Journal Review

10) Enzi Plans September Budget Markup as McConnell Urges Speed

Paul M. Krawzak, Roll Call

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 9:01:45 AM

---

By Cameron Easley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump damaged relationships with influential members of the business community, the national security apparatus and the congressional GOP by defending white nationalists involved in the Charlottesville, Va., confrontation which left one woman dead. Republican activists defended the president and attacked lawmakers who spoke out against his remarks.
- Steve Bannon, Trump's chief strategist, departed the White House for good Friday days after undermining the administration's position on North Korea and disclosing a long-running internal feud with national security and trade officials in an interview with The American Prospect.

- The administration confirmed it would make its August payments to Obamacare insurers, something Trump has repeatedly threatened to withhold in hopes of leveraging Democrats to the negotiating table on a health care overhaul.
- Trump responded to the terror attack in Barcelona, Spain, by resurfacing a debunked story about a general dipping bullets in pig blood before executing Muslims during the Phillipine-American War.
- Defense Secretary James Mattis said U.S. officials were moving closer to a decision on future plans for Afghanistan. He also suggested to reporters that the Pentagon may not follow the president's directive regarding transgender members of the military.
- Trump waded into Arizona Republican Sen. Jeff Flake's primary race, praising his opponent, Kelli Ward, and spooking some of his own advisers have been strategizing about how to best impact the race and endanger Flake, a vocal critic of the president.
- Trump's criticism of another senator, Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) was largely backed by Republican voters, a new Morning Consult/POLITICO survey showed.
- A Trump campaign staffer sent at least a half-dozen emails attempting to set up meetings with Trump or Trump campaign officials and Russian officials, according to emails.
- Hope Hicks, a longtime aide to President Donald Trump, was named the White House's interim communications director. A Morning Consult/POLITICO survey showed she is the most unknown high-level staffer at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

Congress

- Senior Republicans in Congress are growing increasingly concerned that Trump's constant controversies - particularly his equivocation over the tragic events in Charlottesville, Va. - will do real damage to the party's efforts to enact its agenda.

- Former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore will face Sen. Luther Strange in a September runoff for the Republican nomination for Attorney General Jeff Sessions' old Senate seat. Moore led Strange 39 percent to 33 percent in Tuesday's primary.
- Provo Mayor John Curtis secured the Republican nomination in former Rep. Jason Chaffetz's old House seat. He beat two other Republicans for the nod in the safe Republican district.
- House Speaker Paul Ryan reiterated his goal of securing permanent cuts through the GOP's effort to overhaul the tax code on a party-line vote.
- House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi called for the removal of Confederate statues from the Capitol, while Ryan said the decision should be left up to the states.
- House Democrats are also pushing for a floor vote on a resolution to censure Trump for his Charlottesville remarks.

What's Ahead

- Trump is scheduled to attend a supporters' rally in Phoenix, Ariz., on Tuesday, though the city's mayor has asked the president to delay his visit in the wake of the Charlottesville fallout.
- The Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to interview the co-founder of the firm that commissioned a dossier of salacious allegations against President Donald Trump later this month.
- Congressional recess continues until after the Labor Day weekend, with the Senate and House both set to convene on Sept. 2.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

No events scheduled

TUESDAY

No events scheduled

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

Heritage Foundation event: Protecting Public Employees'
First Amendment Rights

12 p.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Trump campaign emails show aide's repeated efforts to set up Russia meetings

Tom Hamburger et al., The Washington Post

2) Bannon says US locked in 'economic war' with China, slams White House colleagues

Jeremy Diamond, CNN

3) White House Acts to Stem Fallout From Trump's First Charlottesville Remarks

Glenn Thrush and Rebecca R. Ruiz, The New York Times

4) GOP activists scold Republicans for criticizing Trump over Charlottesville
Katie Glueck and Lesley Clark, McClatchy DC

5) McMaster won't say if he can work with Bannon

Madeline Conway, Politico

6) Trump Comments on Race Open Breach With C.E.O.s, Military and G.O.P.

Michael D. Shear et al., The New York Times

7) Moore, Strange Advance to Runoff in Alabama Senate Primary

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

8) Republican Voters Largely Back Trump for Knocking McConnell

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

9) China's Crackdown on North Korea Over U.N. Sanctions Starts to Pinch

Jane Perlez, The New York Times

10) There Are Still More Than 700 Confederate Monuments in the U.S.

Kathryn Casteel and Anna Maria Barry-Jester, FiveThirtyEight

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, September 03, 2017 9:01:56 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump made two trips to Texas as the state grappled with the aftermath of Hurricane Harvey. Vice President Mike Pence also visited the state. Early estimates put the cost of recovery at \$190 billion.
- The White House said Trump will nominate Pennsylvania Rep. Tom Marino (R) to be the next drug czar and Oklahoma Rep. Jim Bridenstine (R) to be the next NASA administrator.

- Trump gave a speech in Springfield, Mo., to call on Congress to cut taxes and reform the overall tax code. Other than his call for a 15 percent corporate tax rate, he did not include many specifics.
- The Trump administration slashed by almost \$116 million the amount it will spend on advertising and grants aimed at getting people to sign up for health care plans under the Affordable Care Act. Democrats fear the administration is trying to undermine the law ahead of the Nov. 1 open enrollment period.
- Robert Mueller, the Justice Department's special counsel, issued subpoenas to a spokesman and a former lawyer for Paul Manafort, Trump's former campaign chairman.
- The United States ordered the closure of Russia's consulate in San Francisco and forced the Kremlin to scale back its diplomatic staff in New York and Washington. Moscow took similar actions against U.S. diplomats after Trump signed into law new sanctions against Russia.

Congress

- House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows (R-N.C.) said members of the conservative faction would be willing to support a short-term plan to fund the government past Sept. 30, even if it does not include funding for Trump's proposed border wall. Lawmakers are considering funding the government until December to allow more time to reach a long-term agreement.
- Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) said she would co-sponsor single-payer health care legislation backed by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), putting the potential 2020 prospect opposite California's other Democratic senator, Dianne Feinstein.
- Arizona Rep. Trent Franks (R) said he would not enter the Republican primary to challenge Sen. Jeff Flake. He was among the group of potential candidates, including former state Sen. Kelli Ward, who met with Trump about challenging Flake.
- The House Ethics Committee said it is expanding its investigation of what role Rep. Chris Collins (R-N.Y.) played in getting members of Congress to invest in an Australian pharmaceutical company.

- Rep. Lou Barletta (R-Pa.) said he would run for Senate in hopes of challenging Democratic incumbent Sen. Bob Casey next year. He is considered the most well-known candidate among those seeking the Republican nomination. Other GOP candidates include state Reps. Jim Christiana and Rick Saccone, as well as businessman Jeff Bartos.
- Hawaii Rep. Colleen Hanabusa (D) said she will challenge her home state's governor, David Ige, for the party's nomination for governor next year.

What's Ahead

- Both chambers of Congress are scheduled to reconvene on Tuesday.
- House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) are scheduled to head to the White House on Wednesday to meet with Trump about the September agenda, which includes government funding, hurricane relief and the debt limit.
- Members of both chambers are expected to be briefed by top Trump administration officials this week about the security situations in North Korea and Afghanistan. Closed sessions with Defense Secretary James Mattis, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and others are scheduled for Wednesday.
- A judge in New Jersey denied a request by Sen. Robert Menendez (D-N.J.) to delay oral arguments in his corruption trial, which is set to begin on Wednesday. The trial is expected to last six to eight weeks.
- Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee have set a date to privately question Donald Trump Jr. about his June 2016 meeting with a Kremlin-connected lawyer. The date has not been made public but is expected in the "next few weeks."

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Federal holiday -- no events scheduled

TUESDAY

Heritage Foundation event on BRAC 10:30 a.m.

---

William Julius Wilson and J.D. Vance speak at Brookings Institution event 3:30 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

Atlantic Council discussion on modernizing NAFTA, North American energy sector 9 a.m.

---

EPA public hearing on mid-term evaluations for greenhouse gas emissions standards 9 a.m.

---

Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on U.S.- Turkey relations 10:30 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup of the FY2018 Labor, HHS, Education Appropriations Bill 11 a.m.

---

Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup of FY2018 State & Foreign Operations Appropriations Bill 2 p.m.

THURSDAY

CAP event on part-time college students 10 a.m.

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on Children's Health Insurance Program 10 a.m.

---

House Armed Services Committee hearing on problems with USS Fitzgerald, USS John S. McCain 2 p.m.

FRIDAY

Govs. Hickenlooper, Kasich discuss health care proposal at AEI

9:15 a.m.

---

Brookings Institution event on foreign cyber interference in U.S. elections

10:30 a.m.

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Trump Weighs Tying Debt Limit Increase to Harvey Aid

Margaret Talev, Bloomberg

2) Tillerson: Trump 'speaks for himself'

Eli Watkins, CNN

3) Federal Judge Temporarily Blocks Texas Law Cracking Down on Sanctuary Cities

Alicia A. Caldwell, The Wall Street Journal

4) GOP Voters Don't Want Shutdown - Unless It Funds Border Wall

Eli Yokley, Morning Consult

5) Trump on North Korea's missile launch: 'All options are on the table'

Louis Nelson, Politico

6) Harris to co-sponsor Sanders' single-payer bill

Carla Marinucci, Politico

7) Administration Cutting Ads and Grants Aimed at Boosting Affordable Care Act Sign-ups

Stephanie Armour and Anna Wilde Mathews, The Wall Street Journal

8) Congress to get briefings next week on North Korea, Afghanistan

Jeremy Herb, CNN

9) Tracking Harvey's Destructive Path Through Texas and Louisiana

The New York Times

10) Special counsel subpoenas Manafort's former attorney and spokesman

Evan Perez, CNN

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, October 01, 2017 9:02:44 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump and congressional leaders rolled out the framework of their plan to overhaul the tax code. They proposal calls for slashing the corporate rate from 35 percent to 20 percent and lowering the top individual tax rate from 39.6 percent to 35 percent. Trump called the plan a "middle class miracle."
- The White House said Secretary of Health and Human Services Tom Price resigned, effective Friday night, after a controversy erupted over his use of taxpayer-funded private flights for government business. Trump designated Deputy Assistant Secretary Don Wright as acting secretary. Cabinet officials, including Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, have also been criticized recently for opting to take more expensive means of travel.

- Trump temporarily waived the Jones Act to allow foreign-operated ships to transport cargo from U.S. ports to Puerto Rico. The waiver, granted on Thursday, was set to last 10 days.
- Trump's search for a new Department of Homeland Security secretary is "back to square one," with Rep. Michael McCaul (R-Texas) reportedly out of the running to replace John Kelly, who's now chief of staff at the White House. McCaul, the head of the House Homeland Security Committee, had publicly broken with Trump on his travel ban, in addition to pushing back on the president's criticism of the Russia investigations.
- The White House launched an internal investigation into the use of private email accounts by senior staffers while conducting official government business. The move came after a news report that Jared Kushner, Trump's son-in-law, and other top aides were found to have used their personal email addresses to discuss White House matters.
- Trump issued a proclamation that indefinitely banned travel to the United States by most citizens from Chad, Iran, Libya, North Korea, Somalia, Syria and Yemen. The Supreme Court in turn canceled oral arguments scheduled for Oct. 10 on his executive order and asked litigants to file new briefs answering whether they think Trump's latest proclamation renders the legal question about the original order "moot."

Congress

- Senate Republicans scrapped efforts to consider a health care bill authored by Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) and Sen. Bill Cassidy (R-La.) ahead of a Sept. 30 procedural deadline. Graham said they will return to it after their efforts to overhaul the tax code.
- In a blow to Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and the Republican establishment, former Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice Roy Moore beat Sen. Luther Strange (R-Ala.) 54.6 percent to 45.4 percent in a special primary runoff for Attorney General Jeff Sessions' old Senate seat. On Dec. 12, Moore will face Democratic nominee Doug Jones, whose backers acknowledged a tough road ahead.

- Congress sent legislation to Trump that would reauthorize the Federal Aviation Administration for six months and give tax relief to hurricane victims.
- The Senate unanimously confirmed former Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman to be U.S. ambassador to Russia.
- House Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) returned to Congress for the first time since he was injured by gunfire at a Congressional Baseball Game practice in June.
- House Republicans released a plan that would provide \$10 billion in funding for Trump's proposed wall along the U.S.-Mexico border. The legislation, which is unlikely to pass in the Senate, would also add 10,000 border patrol agents and Customs and Border Protection officers.
- Rep. Kyrsten Sinema (D-Ariz.) said she would seek her party's nomination for Senate next year as Sen. Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.) seeks re-election. Lower-profile Democrats are already in the race, and Flake, one of the most vulnerable Republicans in the 2018 midterm elections, was already facing heat from his right from former state Sen. Kelli Ward (R).
- Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he will not seek a third term next year. His exit paves the way for a wide open nominating contest: Rep. Marsha Blackburn (R) and retired football player Peyton Manning have been mentioned as possible candidates, and conservative activist Andy Ogles has already announced his candidacy.

What's Ahead

- Both the House and Senate are in session this week.
- The Senate on Monday is expected to vote on the renomination of Federal Communications Commission Chairman Ajit Pai to continue as a member of the FCC.

- The Senate Budget Committee released its fiscal year 2018 budget resolution ahead of hearings this week. The measure would allow for $1.5 trillion in tax cuts over the next decade. The House is expected to vote on its own budget resolution this week. Congressional passage of a budget resolution would set the stage for Republicans to pass their tax overhaul with a simple majority in the Senate.
- Trump said he will visit Puerto Rico on Tuesday as the U.S. territory grapples with the damage from Hurricane Maria. The administration has been criticized for its handling of recovery efforts in the wake of the storm.
- Executives from Facebook Inc., Twitter Inc. and Google Inc. have been asked to testify before House and Senate committees in the coming week as part of their investigations into Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election.
- Trump faces an Oct. 15 deadline to declare whether Iran is complying with the framework of its nuclear agreement with the United States and other countries. A recent poll found that 54 percent of registered voters said they support the international accord.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Rep. Gallagher speaks at Wilson Center event on America First 10 a.m.

TUESDAY

Sen. Klobuchar, Rep. Meehan speak at Atlantic event on drug prices 8 a.m.

---

Senate Banking Committee hearing on Wells Fargo 10 a.m.

---

---

Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on Trump's DACA decision	10 a.m.
---	---------

---

Senate Finance Committee hearing on international tax reform	10 a.m.
--	---------

---

RSC members speak at Heritage Foundation event on taxes	2:30 p.m.
---	-----------

---

McCain Institute event on Russian containment	6 p.m.
---	--------

---

Sen. Cotton speaks at CFR event on Iran nuclear deal	6 p.m.
--	--------

WEDNESDAY

U.S. Chamber of Commerce Cybersecurity Summit	8 a.m.
---	--------

---

House Financial Services Committee hearing with SEC's Clayton	10 a.m.
---	---------

---

Senate Banking Committee hearing on Equifax breach	10 a.m.
--	---------

---

OMB's Mulvaney speaks at Washington Post event	10:30 a.m.
--	------------

---

Senate Budget Committee markup of fiscal year 2018 budget resolution	2:30 p.m.
--	-----------

THURSDAY

Sen. Cotton speaks at Washington Post event	9 a.m.
---	--------

---

House Financial Services Committee hearing on Equifax breach	9:15 a.m.
--	-----------

---

Chairman of Council of Economic Advisers speaks at Tax Policy Center event	9:30 a.m.
--	-----------

---

Senate Budget Committee markup of fiscal year 2018 budget resolution	10:30 a.m.
--	------------

---

Peterson Institute event on global economic prospects for 2017	12:15 p.m.
--	------------

---

BPC event on Turkish relations	2 p.m.
--------------------------------	--------

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) The large parts of America left behind by today's economy

Kim Hart, Axios

2) Trump Maps Lobbying Trip for Tax Plan Likely to Whack N.Y., N.J.

Sahil Kapur, Bloomberg

3) Trump temporarily lifts Jones Act to bolster Puerto Rico relief

Melanie Zanona, The Hill

4) At Least 6 White House Advisers Used Private Email Accounts

Matt Apuzzo and Maggie Haberman, The New York Times

5) GOP Tax Plan to Allow for Top Individual Rate Above 35%

Richard Rubin and Michael C. Bender, The Wall Street Journal

6) This is what the White House wants in exchange for saving Dreamers from deportation

Anita Kumar, McClatchy DC

7) New Order Indefinitely Bars Almost All Travel From Seven Countries

Michael D. Shear, The New York Times

8) House Republicans propose \$10 billion for Trump's border wall

Rachael Bade, Politico

9) Minorities and Americans without college degrees showed greatest gains in wealth since 2013, new data shows

Heather Long and Tracy Jan, The Washington Post

10) Roy Moore Wins Senate G.O.P. Runoff in Alabama

Jonathan Martin and Alexander Burns, The New York Times

PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2017 9:01:50 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- The Trump administration took two big swings at the Affordable Care Act: President Donald Trump signed an executive order directing the federal government to allow the sale of cheaper health insurance plans that provide fewer benefits, and the White House said it will end subsidies to health insurance companies that help defer costs for-low income people.
- Trump withdrew certification of the Iran nuclear agreement, but stopped short of terminating the 2015 deal. Rather than immediately imposing new sanctions that could jeopardize the international accord, he said he wants Congress to craft new "trigger points" for sanctions.

- Trump named Kirstjen Nielsen as his pick to lead the Department of Homeland Security, which hasn't had a full-time secretary since John Kelly left the agency in July to become White House chief of staff.
- Trump dismissed a news report that said he told senior national security advisers in July that he favored a massive increase in the U.S. nuclear arsenal, calling the article "pure fiction." After raising the possibility of challenging the broadcast license of NBC News, which published the first report on the topic, Trump said it is "frankly disgusting the press is able to write whatever it wants to write."
- Trump listed immigration policy principles that he said "must be included as part of any legislation addressing" the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program. The demands include funding for his proposed border wall with Mexico and cutting off federal grants to so-called sanctuary cities, but administration officials stopped short of threatening to veto DACA legislation that doesn't include the policy principles.
- The Supreme Court dismissed a case challenging the expired version of Trump's travel ban, marking a legal victory for the administration, which had asked the court to drop the case after the temporary ban was replaced with an indefinite one affecting eight countries.
- Trump remains popular with a majority of voters in 16 states, but his approval is underwater in 25 and the District of Columbia, according to a comprehensive survey of voters in all 50 states. Trump has failed to improve his standing, even in states he won handily as the Republican nominee during the 2016 presidential election, according to the poll conducted from Jan. 20 to Sept. 26.

Congress

- Sen. Susan Collins (R) said she will not run for governor of Maine next year. Gov Paul LePage (R) is prohibited from seeking re-election due to term limits. Collins is next up for Senate re-election in 2020.
- Missouri Attorney General Josh Hawley said he will seek the Republican nomination to challenge Sen. Claire McCaskill (D) next year. The 37-year-old, first-time elected official has received praise from Breitbart, led by former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon, and many of the state GOP's establishment leaders, alike.

- Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) said she will run for a fifth term in 2018. Billionaire Tom Steyer has not ruled out challenging Feinstein, and state Senate Democratic Leader Kevin de León is reportedly close to announcing his candidacy.
- Federal prosecutors in New Jersey rested their case against Sen. Robert Menendez (D-N.J.), who is accused of taking gifts from Florida eye doctor Salomon Melgen in exchange for doing favors for him. Testimony over the past month came from former federal officials and congressional staffers, as well as former Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa).
- Republican lawmakers called for calm as Trump escalated a feud with Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.) after he dubbed the White House an "adult day care center" and said Trump could be leading the nation "on the path to World War III." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) issued a statement calling Corker a "particularly important player" on the budget, the passage of which is a key procedural hurdle for Republicans hoping to overhaul the U.S. tax code.
- The House voted 353 to 69 to pass a \$36.5 billion disaster aid package that includes money for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Puerto Rico and the National Flood Insurance Program, as well as funding to fight wildfires in the West.
- Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-Fla.) introduced legislation with bipartisan support that would ban bump stocks, devices that allow semi-automatic weapons to fire nearly as fast as automatic weapons. House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) said a "regulatory fix is the smartest, quickest fix" to "tighten up compliance" with federal laws banning automatic weapons.

What's Ahead

- The Senate is in session this week. Senators are scheduled to hold a confirmation vote Monday for Calista Gingrich to be the U.S. ambassador to the Holy See.

- The House is in recess this week. The chamber is scheduled to reconvene on Oct. 23.
- Leaders of the House Intelligence Committee said they will release the Facebook ads purchased by Kremlin-linked groups as part of Russia's efforts to influence the 2016 U.S. presidential election. The public release is likely to come after Nov. 1.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

U.S. Chamber of Commerce event on the U.S. workforce 8 a.m.

TUESDAY

Bloomberg Government event on affordable housing 8 a.m.

---

Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee hearing on prescription drug costs 10 a.m.

---

National Iranian American Council event on the future of the Iran nuclear deal 12 p.m.

---

U.S. Chamber of Commerce TecNation event 12:30 p.m.

---

Georgetown Law event on Trump-Russia investigation 3:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

BPC event with former Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz 9 a.m.

---

Sens. Hassan, Portman speak at Washington Post event on opioid epidemic 9 a.m.

---

Attorney General Sessions testifies before Senate Judiciary 10 a.m.

Committee

---

U.S. Chamber of Commerce event on health reform 1:30 p.m.

---

Sens. Cruz, Sanders debate GOP tax plan on CNN 9 p.m.

THURSDAY

CSIS event on U.S. energy policy 12:30 p.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on North Korea 3 p.m.

FRIDAY

Brookings Institution event on Trump's deregulatory efforts 10:30 a.m.

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

The NFL Is Now One of the Most Divisive Brands in the U.S.

According to Morning Consult Brand Intelligence data published in The New York Times, the NFL has become one of the most controversial organizations in the country.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

- 1) Trump Approval Dips in Every State, Though Deep Pockets of Support

Remain

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

2) "I hate everyone in the White House!": Trump seethes as advisers fear the president is "unraveling"

Gabriel Sherman, Vanity Fair

3) Trump's popularity is slipping in rural America: poll

Chris Kahn and Tim Reid, Reuters

4) Inside Trump's Head: An Exclusive Interview With the President, And The Single Theory That Explains Everything

Randall Lane, Forbes

5) Menendez case gets potential 'death blow'

Matt Friedman, Politico

6) Trump May Do the Harm to Insurers That Congress Couldn't

Max Nisen, Bloomberg

7) House Intel leaders to release Facebook ads purchased by Kremlin-linked groups

Erin Kelly, USA Today

8) In Start to Unwinding the Health Law, Trump to Ease Insurance Rules

Louise Radnofsky et al., The Wall Street Journal

9) John Kelly lets loose

Annie Karni, Politico

10) Trump to End Subsidies to Health Insurers

Stephanie Armour, The Wall Street Journal

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, October 22, 2017 9:02:09 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- U.S. District Court Judge Derrick Watson of Hawaii blocked the latest iteration of President Donald Trump's travel ban affecting citizens of several Muslim-majority countries, a day before it was set to fully take effect. A judge in Maryland issued another ruling against the ban a day later.
- Trump feuded with Rep. Frederica Wilson (D-Fla.) over the details of a phone conversation he had with the widow of one of the four U.S. soldiers killed during an ambush in Niger on Oct. 4. White House Chief of Staff John Kelly, whose son was killed in battle in 2010, delivered a personal defense of the president's phone call and called the criticisms of Trump unfair.

- Trump met with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) in a show of party unity, describing their relationship as "very good." He said the two of them are "fighting for the same thing" - a major overhaul of the U.S. tax code.
- Former Presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama delivered implicit rebukes of Trump during separate, unrelated appearances. Bush, who has refrained from criticizing his successors, bemoaned the "casual cruelty" of the current political discourse, while Obama's criticisms came while campaigning on behalf of Democratic gubernatorial candidates in New Jersey and Virginia.

Congress

- The Senate voted 51-49 to adopt its fiscal year 2018 budget resolution, positioning Republicans to pass forthcoming tax-reform legislation without Democratic support.
- Rep. Pat Tiberi (R-Ohio), who has been in Congress since 2001, announced his resignation and said he will step down by Jan. 31 to become president of the Ohio Business Roundtable. Tiberi currently serves as chairman of the House Ways and Means Subcommittee on Health.
- Rep. Tom Marino (R-Pa.) withdrew from consideration to lead the Office of National Drug Control Policy following a Washington Post/"60 Minutes" report that said he helped shepherd legislation through Congress that later hindered the Drug Enforcement Administration's ability to crack down on opioid distributors.
- Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) urged fellow Republicans to change course after failed efforts to repeal the 2010 Affordable Care Act. He called on GOP senators to support legislation he negotiated with Sen. Patty Murray (D-Wash.), the HELP Committee's ranking member, that would attempt to stabilize the individual insurance market, adding that the measure has 11 Republican and 12 Democratic co-sponsors.
- Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) signed on to a Democratic bill that would establish disclosure requirements for online political ads, including who paid for them. The legislation was introduced by Sens. Mark Warner (Va.) and Amy Klobuchar (Minn.).

- Attorney General Jeff Sessions cited executive privilege during during testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, refusing to answer questions about conversations he had with Trump regarding the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Russia probe and Trump's decision to fire former FBI Director James Comey. Sessions told senators he has not been interviewed by special counsel Robert Mueller, but said he would "absolutely" meet with Mueller if asked to do so.
- As former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon antagonizes Washington's political establishment and threatens to back primary challenges against certain Republican lawmakers, a new poll found that 57 percent of Republican voters saying Trump is more in touch with them, while 27 percent said the same about congressional Republicans. Trump privately offered his support to three Republican senators who are in Bannon's crosshairs - Wyoming's John Barrasso, Nebraska's Deb Fischer and Mississippi's Roger Wicker - and could soon endorse them.

What's Ahead

- Both the House and Senate are in session this week.
- Trump is expected to visit Capitol Hill on Tuesday to speak with Senate Republicans at their weekly policy lunch. Trump's first visit to the Capitol to address Senate Republicans comes as GOP lawmakers move forward with plans to overhaul the tax code.
- The House is set to sign off on the Senate-passed budget resolution as soon as this week, a key procedural step for Republicans to override the tax code without Democratic support.
- House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) and House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Ed Royce (R-Calif.) said the chamber will vote this week on non-nuclear sanctions on Iran's ballistic missile program and Hezbollah.

- Trump said he will declare the opioid epidemic a national emergency this week.
- A federal judge in California said he plans to issue a ruling this week in a case brought by 19 states requesting that the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services continue cost-sharing reduction payments to insurance companies. The case was filed after Trump said the payments would be ended.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Rep. Kevin Brady speaks at SIFMA annual meeting 5:10 p.m.

---

White House press secretary, reporters speak at GWU event on Trump's first year 7 p.m.

---

Sen. Booker speaks at Milken Institute's Future of Health Summit 7 p.m.

TUESDAY

Milken Institute's Future of Health Summit 8:15 a.m.

---

Reps. Clark, Mullin speak at The Hill's event on opioids 8 a.m.

---

Virginia governor, Sen. Gardner speak at Bloomberg event on technology 8 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce subcommittee hearing on the 2017 hurricane response 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Perdue speaks at Heritage Foundation event on tax reform 10:30 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

HUD's Carson speaks at The Hill's event on housing 8:30 a.m.

---

Kentucky governor and Sens. Cassidy, Murphy speak at Washington Post health care event 9 a.m.

---

House Energy and Commerce Committee hearing on the opioid crisis 10 a.m.

---

Sen. Schatz speaks at Bloomberg event on digital infrastructure 3:20 p.m.

THURSDAY

House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on oversight of the U.S. refugee admissions program 9 a.m.

---

Senate HELP Committee hearing on free speech on college campuses 10 a.m.

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

The NFL Is Now One of the Most Divisive Brands in the U.S.

According to Morning Consult Brand Intelligence data published in The New York Times, the NFL has become one of the most controversial organizations in the country.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

- 1) Polling Lends Weight to Worries Over GOP Civil War

Cameron Easley, Morning Consult

2) Signaling Frustration, Senior House Republican Plans to Quit Early

Alexander Burns and Jonathan Martin, The New York Times

3) White House fears Senate will sink tax cuts

Burgess Everett and Josh Dawsey, Politico

4) Capitol Hell: Inside Rep. Tim Murphy's Toxic Congressional Office

Matt Fuller, HuffPost

5) Brady and Ryan Mulling Big Gamble on Key Tax Deduction

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

6) U.S. Senate Adopts Budget, Giving Momentum to Trump's Tax-Cut Plans

Erik Wasson et al., Bloomberg

7) Most Voters in Poll Back Trump's Health Care Order But Are Divided Over Impact

Jon Reid, Morning Consult

8) Without Saying 'Trump,' Bush and Obama Deliver Implicit Rebukes

Peter Baker, The New York Times

9) A growing share of Americans say it's not necessary to believe in God to be moral

Gregory A. Smith, Pew Research Center

10) Judge plans to rule next week in Obamacare subsidies fight

Josh Gerstein, Politico

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, December 03, 2017 9:01:55 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- Michael Flynn, President Donald Trump's former national security adviser, pleaded guilty to lying to the Federal Bureau of Investigation about conversations he had with the Russian ambassador to the United States in December 2016 during the presidential transition. Flynn said he was cooperating with the investigation led by special counsel Robert Mueller, who is probing Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election and possible ties to Trump's associates.
- The White House has reportedly devised a plan to force out Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and replace him with Central Intelligence Agency Director Mike Pompeo. The plan would involve Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) replacing Pompeo as head of the CIA. Trump denied that Tillerson is on his way out.

- Trump repeatedly pressured Republican senators to end the Senate Intelligence Committee's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election, according to Committee Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.). While a spokesman for the White House said Trump did not act improperly, Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), the panel's former chairwoman, said the requests were "inappropriate" and a breach of the separation of powers.
- Trump threatened to impose new sanctions on North Korea following the country's latest test of an intercontinental missile that some experts say could reach the entire U.S. Eastern Seaboard. Tillerson said the Treasury Department will announce a "long list" of new sanctions against North Korea.
- Trump shared videos on Twitter from an ultranationalist British party account that purportedly show Muslims committing acts of violence. White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders defended the retweets, saying that Trump was talking about the need for national security and defense spending, while the office of British Prime Minister Theresa May issued a statement saying, "It is wrong for the president to have done this."
- A federal judge in Washington sided with Trump by refusing to block White House budget director Mick Mulvaney, appointed by the president to be acting director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, from taking charge of the agency. Leandra English, the CFPB's deputy director, had requested an emergency restraining order, arguing that she should be acting director since then-Director Richard Cordray appointed her as his successor before he resigned.

Congress

- The Senate passed its tax reform bill on a 51-49 vote. Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.), who raised concerns about the measure's long-term effect on the federal budget deficit, was the only Republican to vote against the legislation. No Democrats voted for it.

- Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) pulled out of a planned meeting with Trump and GOP leaders after Trump tweeted that he does not "see a deal" with the Democrats on government funding ahead of a Dec. 8 deadline.
- Rep. Ruben Kihuen (D-Nev.) was accused of harassing and making sexual advances toward his former campaign finance director during his 2016 campaign. Pelosi and Rep. Ben Ray Lujan (D-N.M.), chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, called on the freshman lawmaker to resign.
- Pelosi and the highest-ranking African American in the House, Assistant Democratic Leader James Clyburn of South Carolina, were among party leaders who said Rep. John Conyers should resign amid allegations of sexual harassment. The Michigan Democrat has denied any wrongdoing and said, through his attorney, that he has no plans to resign or retire.
- Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.) faced more pressure to resign following another allegation of sexual harassment against him and the pressure on Conyers. The Senate Ethics Committee confirmed that it has opened a "preliminary inquiry" into the allegations against Franken.
- The House adopted a resolution that would require lawmakers and their staff to undergo annual trainings that address workplace harassment and discrimination. The Senate adopted a similar resolution on Nov. 9.
- Rep. Joe Barton (R-Texas) said he will not seek re-election next year, an announcement that came three weeks after he said he would seek an 18th term in Congress. Barton's private life has come under scrutiny after sexually explicit images and lewd messages from extramarital relationships surfaced online.
- Rep. Luis Gutiérrez (D-Ill.) said he will not seek re-election next year, and he endorsed Cook County Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia for the Democratic nomination to succeed him. Gutiérrez, who's in his 13th term in the House, said he wants to spend time helping to rebuild hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico.

What's Ahead

- Both the House and Senate are in session this week.
- Government funding is scheduled to run out on Dec. 8. House Republicans are considering a plan that would extend funding through Dec. 22 to allow more time for negotiations on a long-term spending measure.
- Trump is set to travel to Salt Lake City on Monday to announce that he will shrink the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments.
- The White House said Trump is not planning to campaign for Roy Moore, the Republican nominee for Senate in Alabama's Dec. 12 special election. But it is reportedly considering other ways to activate Trump's base to support Moore.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

No events scheduled

TUESDAY

Axios event on health care innovation 8 a.m.

---

Washington Post event on HIV/AIDS 8:30 a.m.

---

Senate Banking Committee confirmation hearing for Fed chairman nominee 10 a.m.

---

Brookings Institution event on Public Religion Research Institute's 2017 American Values Survey 10 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

California Attorney General Becerra speaks at National

Press Club	10 a.m.
Sen. Burr speaks at Council on Foreign Relations event	12:45 p.m.
Sen. Coons speaks at ITIF event on the economy	1 p.m.
House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on Brexit negotiations	2 p.m.

THURSDAY

ACCF event on Trump's economic policy agenda	9:30 a.m.
Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on sanctions for nonproliferation	10 a.m.
Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on the Defense Department's acquisition reform efforts	10 a.m.
FBI director testifies before House Judiciary Committee	10 a.m.
CSIS event on OPEC's World Oil Outlook 2017	2 p.m.

FRIDAY

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace event on China and the U.S.-Japan alliance	10:30 a.m.
Trump campaign rally in Pensacola, Fla.	7 p.m.

NEW: COMMUNITY IMPACT RANKINGS

Which Brands Make the Best Impact on Your Community?

Over 300,000 Americans weigh in on the companies that are doing the most for their communities.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) Is Chief Justice Roberts A Secret Liberal?

Oliver Roeder, FiveThirtyEight

- 2) Corporate Tax Rate in Flux as Senate Votes to Open Debate
Siobhan Hughes and Richard Rubin, The Wall Street Journal
- 3) Judge in CFPB Leadership Lawsuit Says He Will Act Quickly
Lalita Clozel, The Wall Street Journal
- 4) Judge sides with Trump's pick to take over consumer agency
Jessica Gresko and Ken Sweet, The Associated Press
- 5) House panel votes to expand right to carry concealed guns in victory for NRA
Mike DeBonis, The Washington Post
- 6) Following Senate, House Mandates Sexual Harassment Training
Katherine Tully-McManus, Roll Call
- 7) Gutiérrez won't seek reelection
Natasha Korecki, Politico
- 8) Battle for Control of Consumer Agency Heads to Court
Stacy Cowley, The New York Times
- 9) Republicans rewriting tax bill hours before possible vote
Seung Min Kim and Colin Wilhelm, Politico
- 10) With uncanny twists and an allegedly rogue registrar, Virginia House left in limbo
Laura Vozzella, The Washington Post

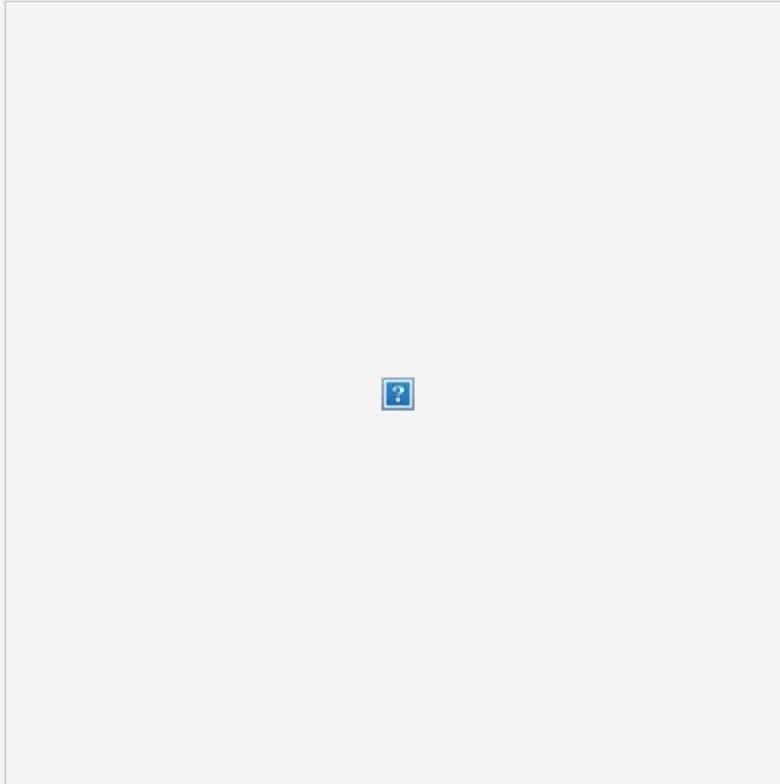

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, December 17, 2017 9:01:47 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump signed into law the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 2018, authorizing $700 billion for a military budget that includes spending on missile defense programs and pay raises for troops. But in order to tap into the full amount, lawmakers would need to agree to roll back a 2011 law that caps 2018 defense spending at $549 billion.
- Democrats criticized Trump for tweeting that Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) would come "begging" for campaign contributions at his office and "would do anything for them." Gillibrand, who is among the Democratic senators who have called for Trump's resignation over allegations of sexual misconduct, called the tweet a "sexist smear."

- The Pentagon will begin accepting transgender troops Jan. 1, in compliance with a federal court order. Trump had previously ordered the Defense Department to reverse the Obama-era plan to accept transgender service members, prompting legal challenges against the Trump administration by advocates for transgender troops.
- Senior FBI officials who helped investigate Trump's campaign last year exchanged text messages before the election that describe the possibility of a presidential victory by Trump as "terrifying" and saying Democratic rival Hillary Clinton "just has to win," according to recently released documents. The White House said the FBI has "extreme bias" against the president.

Congress

- The conference committee tasked with reconciling the differences between the House- and Senate-passed tax bills released a compromise measure that would lower the corporate tax rate to 21 percent, almost double the standard deduction, and scale back the deduction for state and local taxes. Sen. Bob Corker of Tennessee, the only GOP senator to vote against the Senate-passed tax overhaul bill, and Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), whose demands were met regarding an expanded child tax credit, both said they will vote in favor of the revised bill.
- Democrat Doug Jones pulled off an upset in Alabama's special election for a U.S. Senate seat, beating Republican nominee Roy Moore, 49.9 percent to 48.4 percent. It was the first time since 1992 that Alabama voters elected a Democrat to the Senate. Moore has not conceded the race, despite urging from Trump to do so.
- Minnesota Gov. Mark Dayton (D) appointed Lt. Gov. Tina Smith (D) to replace Sen. Al Franken, who is expected to resign in the coming weeks following allegations of sexual misconduct. Smith said she will run in November's special election, which will determine who holds the seat through 2020, and Rep. Keith Ellison (D-Minn.) has said he will not challenge her.
- House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) reportedly informed some of his closest confidants that this will be his final term as speaker, and that he would like to serve through the 2018 midterm elections and then retire from Congress. Ryan responded "no" when asked by reporters if he was leaving soon.

- Rep. Blake Farenthold said he will retire from Congress after finishing his current term, amid new sexual harassment allegations against him. The Texas Republican had come under pressure from House GOP leadership to step down.
- The House Ethics Committee launched an investigation into allegations of sexual misconduct involving Rep. Ruben Kihuen. While the first-term Nevada Democrat has denied the accusations against him, he also said he would not seek re-election next year.
- House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) dismissed Democratic requests that the panel investigate allegations of sexual misconduct against Trump.

What's Ahead

- Congress is in session this week.
- The House is poised to vote on tax overhaul legislation Tuesday, followed by the Senate later in the week.
- House Republicans are pressing ahead with a plan to pass spending bills that would fund defense programs above the sequestration cap through Sept. 30 and extend funding for non-defense agencies until Jan. 19 with a continuing resolution before government funding expires on Dec. 22. Senate Democrats have warned that they have enough votes to block such legislation.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Center for Strategic & International Studies event on western and Chinese infrastructure development abroad 9 a.m.

---

House Rules Committee hearing on the Systemic Risk Designation Improvement Act 5 p.m.

TUESDAY

Incoming Virginia delegates Hurst, Roem speak at National Press Club 10 a.m.

---

Senate Banking Committee nomination hearing for Scott Garrett to lead Export-Import Bank 10 a.m.

---

Treasury official speaks at Council on Foreign Relations about combating human rights abuses and corruption 10 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

Education Secretary DeVos testifies before House Committee on Education and the Workforce 2 p.m.

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

2017 Brands in Review

This year, Morning Consult conducted nearly 1 million survey interviews on nearly 1,000 brands. Get a never-before-seen look at how public perception changed for the world's biggest brands.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

- 1) Democrat Doug Jones Trumps Roy Moore in Alabama
Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

2) The Taxman Cometh: Senate Bill's Marginal Rates Could Top 100% for Some

Richard Rubin, The Wall Street Journal

3) House GOP Charts Spending Collision With Senate

Lindsey McPherson, Roll Call

4) Boston. Racism. Image. Reality: The Spotlight Team takes on our hardest question

The Spotlight Team, The Boston Globe

5) GOP negotiators move closer to reducing top tax rate for high-income households but face blowback

Erica Werner and Damian Paletta, The Washington Post

6) Tawdry Tales Depict a Texas Congressman's Frat House on the Hill

Sheryl Gay Stolberg, The New York Times

7) Schiff denies leaking 'non-public' information about Trump Jr.'s testimony

Kyle Cheney, Politico

8) Aid for disaster-stricken states could be punted into January

Sarah Ferris, Politico

9) Jones: In 'gracious' call, Trump invited me to the White House

Mallory Shelbourne, The Hill

10) Special Elections So Far Point To A Democratic Wave In 2018

Harry Enten, FiveThirtyEight

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: Week in Review & What's Ahead
Date: Sunday, December 24, 2017 9:01:49 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Morning Consult Washington will be off Dec. 25 through Jan. 1. Publication of the morning briefs and afternoon updates will resume Jan. 2.

Week in Review

The White House

- President Donald Trump signed into law legislation that will overhaul the tax code, marking the first major legislative accomplishment for Trump since taking office. The Senate passed the $1.5 trillion tax bill on a party-line vote, and in the House the measure was opposed by 12 Republicans and all Democrats.
- Trump signed into law a stopgap spending measure that averted a shutdown by funding the government through Jan. 19.

- The U.N. General Assembly voted 128 to 9, with 35 abstentions, for a resolution that effectively denounced Trump's decision to recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and his plan to move the U.S. embassy there from Tel Aviv. Before the vote, Trump threatened to cut off U.S. financial assistance to countries that supported the resolution.
- The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit denied an attempt by the Trump administration to halt transgender people from joining the military.
- Trump introduced his first national security strategy document in a speech, calling "unrivaled power" the "most certain means of defense." He argued that American economic prosperity was critical to U.S. national security, and the strategy describes the administration's approach to a range of issues, including international terrorism, Russian aggression, Chinese influence and North Korea's nuclear program.
- A federal judge in New York dismissed a lawsuit that alleged Trump violates the Constitution when his businesses receive payments from foreign and state governments, saying the plaintiffs lacked standing to bring the suit. The ruling did not address whether government payments to Trump's businesses violate the Constitution's emoluments clauses.
- Justice Department prosecutors are asking Federal Bureau of Investigation agents for information about their now-dormant criminal investigation into the Uranium One deal, which critics have linked to Bill Clinton and Hillary Clinton. The internal questioning comes on the orders of Attorney General Jeff Sessions after an assistant attorney general told Congress that the Justice Department would examine whether a special counsel was warranted.
- Trump issued his first commuted sentence for a federal prisoner, a commutation that had bipartisan support. Trump freed Sholom Rubashkin, the former owner of a kosher meat-processing plant, who was sentenced in 2009 to 27 years in prison for financial crimes.

Congress

- The House passed an \$81 billion disaster relief bill. The Senate did not take up the measure due to Democratic objections.

- The Senate Banking Committee rejected the nomination of Scott Garrett, Trump's pick to lead the Export-Import Bank, in a 10-13 vote. It was the first time a congressional committee has voted down one of Trump's nominees.
- The nomination of KT McFarland, former national security adviser Michael Flynn's ex-deputy, to be U.S. ambassador to Singapore is in jeopardy. Flynn's plea agreement with special counsel Robert Mueller appeared to contradict McFarland's congressional testimony, prompting some senators to question her interactions with Flynn regarding Russia.
- Matthew Petersen, the judicial nominee who was the subject of a viral video of him unable to answer basic law questions at his confirmation hearing, withdrew his name from consideration. Petersen was the third judicial nominee whose confirmation was derailed this year over criticisms about being unqualified.
- The House Democratic Caucus voted 118-72 in favor of Rep. Jerrold Nadler (N.Y.) to be the top Democrat on the Judiciary Committee. Nadler, a constitutional-law expert, defeated Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-Calif.), who also sought to fill the seat held by Rep. John Conyers (D-Mich.) until he resigned from Congress earlier this month amid allegations of sexual misconduct.
- The House Ethics Committee said it is expanding its investigation into Rep. Blake Farenthold (R-Texas), who has been accused of sexually harassing at least one former staffer, to include allegations that he lied to the panel and misused official resources for campaign activities. The committee also said it is appointing a subcommittee to probe allegations of sexual misconduct made by a former campaign aide and a Nevada-based lobbyist against Rep. Ruben Kihuen (D-Nev.), who has said he will not seek re-election next year.
- The House Office of Compliance disclosed three additional sexual harassment settlements totaling $115,000 from fiscal years 2008 through 2012 as part of a broader disclosure of $342,225.85 in public money used to settle claims against House member-led offices during those years. The Senate spent more than \$1.45 million over the past 20 years settling harassment and discrimination cases, according to data released by the Senate Rules Committee.
- The Senate Intelligence Committee is looking into Jill Stein, the former Green Party presidential nominee, as part of its investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election. When asked what the panel was looking for with regard to Stein's campaign, Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.) said, "collusion with the Russians."

What's Ahead

- Trump left the White House on Friday for his Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida for an 11-day holiday vacation.
- The Senate is scheduled to reconvene on Jan. 3. Senator-elect Doug Jones (D-Ala.) and Senate-appointee Tina Smith (D-Minn.), the state's lieutenant governor who was appointed to fill outgoing Democratic Sen. Al Franken's seat, are expected to be sworn in when lawmakers return.
- The House plans to return Jan. 8, leaving them with eight legislative days before government funding is slated to expire.
- Congress will return to big challenges on issues such as the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, the Children's Health Insurance Program, defense spending, surveillance and the federal borrowing limit.
- Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) said he is unlikely to push for changes to programs such as Social Security and Medicare next year, citing a lack of Democratic support. Earlier this month House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) indicated he wants to tackle entitlement reforms in 2018.
- The House Intelligence Committee sent letters asking Steve Bannon, Trump's former strategist, and Corey Lewandowski, his former campaign manager, to testify before the panel, which is investigating Russian meddling in the 2016 election. The committee wants them to appear voluntarily in early January.

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

Federal holiday -- no events scheduled

TUESDAY

No events scheduled

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

2017 Brands in Review

This year, Morning Consult conducted nearly 1 million survey interviews on nearly 1,000 brands. Get a never-before-seen look at how public perception changed for the world's biggest brands.

Morning Consult Washington Top Reads

1) FBI's McCabe Meets with House Panel as Grassley Calls for Firing Steven T. Dennis and Billy House, Bloomberg

2) Shutdown threat fades as House moves toward funding vote

Rachael Bade and John Bresnahan, Politico

3) Congress Dives Into Shutdown Drama After GOP's Win on Taxes

Erik Wasson and Laura Litvan, Bloomberg

4) Trump issues first commuted prison sentence

Jonathan Easley, The Hill

5) GOP leaders in House, Senate endorse conflicting shutdown strategies

Rachael Bade et al., Politico

6) House unveils massive \$81 billion disaster aid package

Sarah Ferris and John Bresnahan, Politico

7) GOP Gets a Key 'Yes' Vote for Its Tax Bill

Siobhan Hughes and Richard Rubin, The Wall Street Journal

8) Trump Plans Shift to U.S. Security Strategy

Michael R. Gordon, The Wall Street Journal

9) Collins Says News Coverage of Her Tax Vote 'Unbelievably Sexist'

Steven T. Dennis, Bloomberg

10) Lobbyist Has To Change The Way She Does Business In Era Of #MeToo

Scott Simon, NPR News

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: White House Grapples With Reaction to Trump's Charlottesville Remarks
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:37:43 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- White House officials are trying to stem the fallout from President Donald Trump's reluctance to condemn white supremacists for violence and a death in Charlottesville, Va., this weekend. Gov. Terry McAuliffe (D-Va.) said Trump's "words were not - not - what this nation needs." (The New York Times)
- Attorney General Jeff Sessions defended Trump's remarks on Monday and said his Department of Justice would protect the right of people "to protest against racism and bigotry." (NBC News)

- China said Monday it would cut off imports of North Korean goods such as coal and iron following an exchange that escalated last week between Trump and Kim Jong Un over North Korea. (The Associated Press)
- National security adviser H.R. McMaster would not say whether he can work with Trump's top political strategist, Steve Bannon, amid reports that conflict is rising between the two. (Politico)
- Three Republicans will face off tomorrow in a special primary election for former Utah GOP Rep. Jason Chaffetz's House seat. The race has tightened in the final days as outside groups poured money into the race, mostly aimed at front-runner John Curtis, the mayor of Provo. (Roll Call)

Chart Review

Mitch McConnell's Favorables Down Among Republicans
Gallup

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

MONDAY

No events scheduled

TUESDAY

Special primary elections in Alabama and Utah

---

House meets for a pro forma session

9:30 a.m.

---

Heritage Foundation event on reorganizing the federal government

11 a.m.

WEDNESDAY

No events scheduled

THURSDAY

No events scheduled

FRIDAY

No events scheduled

SPONSORED BY BRAND INTELLIGENCE

This Is the Future of Brand Reputation Tracking

See how Morning Consult Brand Intelligence is changing the way media, marketing and communications executives are managing brand reputation.

General

China to Cut off North Korean Imports Under UN Sanctions

Joe McDonald, The Associated Press

China announced Monday it will cut off imports of North Korean coal, iron ore and other goods in three weeks under U.N. sanctions imposed over the North's nuclear and missile programs. China, the isolated North's main trading partner, has been reluctant to push leader Kim Jong Un's regime too hard for fear it might collapse.

'Look at the campaign he ran': Charlottesville mayor is becoming one of Trump's strongest critics

Kristine Phillips, The Washington Post

A white nationalist site calls him "anti-white." An article it published in May outlines some highlights of Michael Signer's term as the mayor of Charlottesville: his endorsement of a $10,000 donation to pay for legal costs to help immigrants and refugees, and his decision to declare his city a "capital of the resistance" just days after President Trump was sworn into office.

Health Insurers Get More Time to Calculate Increases for 2018

Robert Pear, The New York Times

The Trump administration is giving health insurance companies more time to calculate price increases for 2018 because of uncertainty caused by the president's threat to cut off crucial subsidies paid to insurers on behalf of millions of low-income people. Federal health officials said the deadline for insurers to file their rate requests would be extended by nearly three weeks, to Sept. 5.

Julian Assange, A Man Without A Country

Raffi Khatchadourian, The New Yorker

The Ecuadorian Embassy in London is situated at the end of a wide brick lane, next to the Harrods department store, in Knightsbridge. Sometimes plainclothes police officers, or vans with tinted windows, can be found outside the building.

How a Conservative TV Giant Is Ridding Itself of Regulation

Cecilia Kang et al., The New York Times

The day before President Trump's inauguration, the top executive of the Sinclair Broadcast Group, the nation's largest owner of television stations, invited an important guest to the headquarters of the company's Washington-area ABC affiliate. The trip was, in the parlance of the business world, a deal closer.

---

Presidential

White House Acts to Stem Fallout From Trump's First Charlottesville Remarks

Glenn Thrush and Rebecca R. Ruiz, The New York Times

White House officials, under siege over President Trump's reluctance to condemn white supremacists for the weekend's bloody rallies in Charlottesville, Va., tried to clarify his comments on Sunday, as critics in both parties intensified demands that he adopt a stronger, more unifying message. A statement on Sunday - issued more than 36 hours after the protests began - condemned "white supremacists" for the violence that led to one death.

Sessions Says Dept. of Justice Will Defend Protesters Against 'Racism and Bigotry'

Kalhan Rosenblatt, NBC News

Attorney General Jeff Sessions became the latest official in the Trump administration to defend the president's comments following the car-ramming attack in Charlottesville, while promising the Department of Justice would take "vigorous action" to defend the rights of Americans to protest bigotry. "Well [Trump] made a very strong statement that directly contradicted the ideology of hatred, violence, bigotry, racism, white supremacy - those things must be condemned in this country," Sessions told TODAY on Monday.

McMaster won't say if he can work with Bannon

Madeline Conway, Politico

National security adviser H.R. McMaster repeatedly dodged on Sunday when asked whether he can work with White House strategist Steve Bannon. McMaster and Bannon, who used to run the right-wing nationalist website Breitbart News, are reportedly in conflict with each other as they work in the Trump administration.

Trump Will Get His Tax Cuts, Vast Majority of Economists Say

Rich Miller and Catarina Saraiva, Bloomberg

The pros who make their living forecasting the economy overwhelmingly expect President Donald Trump and his fellow Republicans to push through tax cuts in time for next year's congressional elections. They just don't think that the reductions will do all that much to help the economy in 2018.

Trump Chips Away at Postcrisis Wall Street Rules

Ryan Tracy and Dave Michaels, The Wall Street Journal

Efforts toward financial deregulation are beginning to take concrete shape on rules governing trading desks, bank boardrooms, corporations' financial disclosures and more. Nearly seven months into the Trump administration, regulators are setting the stage for a wave of eased rules.

Trump campaign ad says his 'enemies' are trying to undermine his progress

John Wagner, The Washington Post

A new television ad unveiled Sunday by President Trump's reelection campaign committee accuses "the president's enemies" of trying to undermine his success in office. The 30-second spot, produced six months into Trump's term, targets Democrats and the news media, and touts what the campaign says are successes that the president has managed to achieve, including a low unemployment rate and record stock-market closes.

Trump's faith advisers condemn white supremacists

Marilia Brocchetto and Dan Merica, CNN

As thousands of white nationalist and "alt-right" protesters descended on Charlottesville, Virginia, for the "Unite the Right" rally Saturday and clashed with counterprotesters, voices from both sides of the aisle were raised to condemn the gathering. Included in those voices were two members of President Trump's evangelical advisory board - a group of pastors and faith leaders who advise Trump - and also a Latino evangelical minister who delivered a prayer at the presidential inauguration in January.

---

Senate

Trump's feuding base faces showdown in Alabama Senate race

Robert Costa, The Washington Post

President Trump's endorsement of Sen. Luther Strange (R-Ala.) was supposed to settle things. An anti-establishment president would repair his frayed relations with Republican leaders by backing their favored candidate in Alabama's special election for a U.S. Senate seat.

Can Jeff Flake survive the role of chief Republican antagonist to Trump?

Ed O'Keefe, The Washington Post

Over two months, Sen. Jeff Flake has dodged bullets on a baseball field, buried his elderly father and watched one of his political mentors, Sen. John McCain, battle terminal brain cancer. And that was all before he published a book that doubles down on his criticisms of President Trump, which in less than two weeks since its release has once again put him at odds with members of his own party.

Republicans use Spanish-language radio to attack Bill Nelson on Venezuela and Cuba

Alex T. Daugherty, The Miami Herald

In their first radio ad against Sen. Bill Nelson, the National Republican Senatorial Committee is attacking the Democrat up for reelection over his perceived softness towards Venezuela and Cuba. The ad, titled "Accomplice," is the latest evidence that the ongoing crisis in Venezuela will become a political issue in South Florida, where Venezuelan voters are concentrated in parts of Miami-Dade and Broward Counties.

Powerful Venezuelan lawmaker may have issued death order against Rubio

Patricia Mazzei, The Miami Herald

One of Venezuela's most powerful leaders may have put out an order to kill Florida Sen. Marco Rubio, a fervent critic of the South American country's government, according to intelligence obtained by the U.S. last month. Though federal authorities couldn't be sure at the time if the uncorroborated threat was real, they took it seriously enough that Rubio has been guarded by a security detail for several weeks in both Washington and Miami.

---

House

Tight Race for Chaffetz's Utah Seat Due to Outside Spending

Bridget Bowman, Roll Call

The Republican primary to fill former Utah Rep. Jason Chaffetz's seat has tightened in the final days before the Tuesday election, thanks to buckets of outside money being poured into the race. The primary is "certainly not a race [where] I would want to bet the farm on who was going to win," veteran Utah GOP consultant Dave Hansen said.

'Right to Try' Bill Could Face Slower Action in House

Andrew Siddons, Roll Call

A Senate-passed bill intended to help dying patients access experimental drugs will likely face lengthier deliberations in the House. While the Senate fast-tracked the bill on Aug. 3, the House will likely subject it to a hearing and markup before bringing it up to a vote, according to congressional aides and a lobbyist.

---

States

McAuliffe Defends Police Response to Violence in Charlottesville

Sheryl Gay Stolberg, The New York Times

Gov. Terry McAuliffe of Virginia on Sunday strongly defended the police response to the violent demonstrations here on Saturday, saying that law enforcement authorities had done "great work" in "a very delicate situation. "Mr. McAuliffe, in an impromptu sidewalk interview before addressing two church congregations on Sunday morning, said the police estimated that 80 percent of those at the white nationalists' rally and counterprotests - including members of self-styled militias in camouflage gear - were armed, "yet not a shot was fired."

Secessionists push for South to break away from US again

Jay Reeves, The Associated Press

As 21st century activists seek to topple monuments to the 19th century Confederate rebellion, some white Southerners are again advocating for what the Confederates tried and failed to do: secede from the Union. It's not an easy argument to win, and it's not clear how much support the idea has: The leading Southern nationalist group, the Alabama-based League of the South, has been making the same claim for more than two decades and still has an address in the U.S.A., not the C.S.A.

Lexington mayor says Confederate statues at courthouse will be moved

Beth Musgrave, Lexington Herald Leader

Mayor Jim Gray said Saturday he is taking steps to remove two controversial Confederate-era statues from the lawn of the former Fayette County Courthouse on Main Street. Gray's announcement came the same day as multiple people were killed and injured in Virginia after a vehicle drove into counter-protesters who had clashed with white nationalists around a Confederate-era statue in Charlottesville.

Illinois Senate Overrides Governor's Veto of Chicago School Aid

Elizabeth Campbell, Bloomberg

The Illinois Senate overrode Governor Bruce Rauner's partial veto that would have cut millions of dollars for Chicago's cash-strapped school district, bringing the state closer to ending an impasse that's prevented aid from flowing to elementary and high schools. Rauner, a Republican, had issued an amendatory veto of a bill that overhauled Illinois school funding practices, deriding the measure as a "pension bailout" for Chicago.

---

Advocacy

Uber spent \$1.2M on lobbying efforts in New York in first half of 2017

Glenn Blain, The New York Daily News

Ride-sharing company Uber put its lobbying efforts into high gear during the first half of 2017, spending more than $1.2 million to influence lawmakers, records show. Uber's spending easily ranked it among Albany's most active lobbyists during the period and came as the state Legislature considered - and ultimately passed - a measure that cleared the way for ride-sharing companies to operate in upstate New York and on Long Island.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

President Trump flunks a moral test

Lexington, The Economist

Deep down, it is always about him. What the world thinks of him. The applause that is his due.

What Trump Got Wrong on Charlottesville

Erick-Woods Erickson, The New York Times

As a conservative, I see both the social justice warrior alt-left and the white supremacist alt-right as two sides of the same coin. Both would punish others for wrongthink. Both see the other side not as opponents, but as evil that can justifiably be silenced.

Trump badly missed the mark on Charlottesville

The Editorial Board, The New York Post

"We condemn in the strongest possible terms this egregious display of hatred, bigotry and violence on many sides. On many sides." Such was President Trump's statement Saturday on the violence in Charlottesville, Va. Really: That was it.

The Poison of Identity Politics

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

As ever in this age of Donald Trump, politicians and journalists are reducing the violence in Charlottesville, Virginia, on Saturday to a debate over Mr. Trump's words and intentions. That's a mistake no matter what you think of the President, because the larger poison driving events like those in Virginia is identity politics and it won't go away when Mr. Trump inevitably does.

We're Holding Pyongyang to Account

Jim Mattis and Rex Tillerson, The Wall Street Journal

In the past few months, multiple illegal North Korean ballistic-missile and ICBM tests-coupled with the most recent bellicose language from Pyongyang about striking the U.S., Guam, our allies and our interests in the Asia-Pacific region-have escalated tensions between North Korea and America to levels not experienced since the Korean War. In response, the Trump administration, with the support of the international community, is applying diplomatic and economic pressure on North Korea to achieve the complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula and a dismantling of the regime's ballistic-missile programs.

The Fed's job is about to become much harder

Lawrence H. Summers, The Washington Post

With Janet Yellen's term ending in February, President Trump will have to nominate, and the Senate confirm, a new Fed chair in coming months. There will be much discussion of the merits and implications of various candidates for the job.

---

Research Reports and Polling

McCain Favorability Up to 58% After Healthcare Vote

Jeffrey M. Jones, Gallup

Arizona Sen. John McCain's favorable rating is 58% after he cast the vote that sank GOP attempts to repeal the Affordable Care Act. That is five points higher than McCain's previous reading from August 2015, with a surge in Democratic favorability more than making up for a decline among McCain's fellow Republicans.

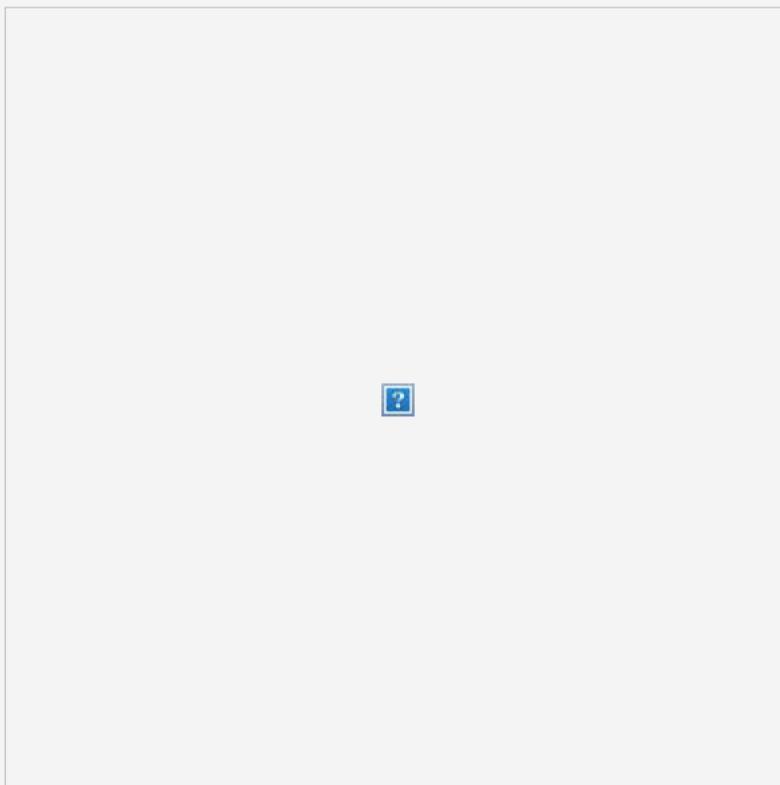

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US

Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: Morning Consult
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; The Morning Consult
Subject: Morning Consult Washington: White House Says Moore Should Have Conceded Alabama Senate Race by Now
Date: Friday, December 15, 2017 8:51:05 AM

---

By Eli Yokley

Top Stories

- White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Roy Moore's concession speech "should have already taken place," following Tuesday's special election in Alabama, where the Republican nominee lost to Democrat Doug Jones by 20,715 votes. Moore has yet to concede the Senate race, and Alabama Secretary of State John Merrill - who has said the election will be certified Dec. 28 - has dismissed conspiracy theories of voter fraud promoted by pro-Moore websites. (The Washington Post)
- Vice President Mike Pence delayed a planned trip to Jerusalem in order to be available for next week's expected tax bill vote on Capitol Hill, where Senate Republicans may need him to break a deadlock. Sen. Marco Rubio

(R-Fla.) has threatened to oppose the legislation if it does not expand a child tax credit, and Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), a swing vote, has not taken a position on the final measure that's set to be introduced today. (Politico)

- The Federal Communications Commission voted along party lines to repeal the Obama-era net neutrality rules. The regulatory rollback - opposed by companies such as Google Inc., Twitter Inc. and Facebook Inc. - allows internet service providers to slow or block websites and apps or charge more for faster speeds. (The Associated Press)
- Robert Mueller, the special counsel investigating Russian interference in the 2016 election, requested the emails of any employee of the data firm Cambridge Analytica who worked on President Donald Trump's 2016 campaign. The firm's chief executive, Alexander Nix, was interviewed via videoconference by the House Intelligence Committee. (The Wall Street Journal)

Chart Review

How Partisanship Impacted the 115th Congress Quorum

Events Calendar (All Times Local)

FRIDAY

Wilson Center event on alternate forms of Brexit and implications for the U.K., EU, U.S.

9 a.m.

2017 Brands in Review

This year, Morning Consult conducted nearly 1 million survey interviews on nearly 1,000 brands. Get a never-before-seen look at how public perception changed for the world's biggest brands.

General

FCC votes along party lines to end 'net neutrality'

Barbara Ortutay and Tali Arbel, The Associated Press

The Federal Communications Commission repealed the Obama-era "net neutrality" rules Thursday, giving internet service providers like Verizon, Comcast and AT&T a free hand to slow or block websites and apps as they see fit or charge more for faster speeds. In a straight party-line vote of 3-2, the Republican-controlled FCC junked the long-time principle that said all web traffic must be treated equally.

Haley: Missile debris 'proof' of Iran's UN violations

Zachary Cohen et al., CNN

Standing in front of a display of recovered missile debris, US Ambassador to the UN Nikki Haley presented what she called "concrete evidence" of Iran's weapons proliferation on Thursday at a military base in Washington and called on the international community to join "a united front in resisting this global threat." The short-range ballistic missile serving as her backdrop was made in Iran, then sent to Houthi rebels in Yemen who fired it at a civilian international airport in Saudi Arabia, according to Haley.

Trump allies say Tillerson has 'not learned his lesson' and cannot continue in job for long

Josh Dawsey and Anne Gearan, The Washington Post

Secretary of State Rex Tillerson seemed focused this week on rebooting his image as a beleaguered Cabinet member on the outs with his boss and his own employees - holding a rare town hall with employees, promising foreign trips into 2018 and saying he is "learning" to enjoy his job. But then he went off script by offering another invitation for diplomatic talks with nuclear-armed North Korea, putting him at odds once again with President Trump and senior White House officials, who are increasingly exasperated with the secretary of state and say he cannot remain in his job for the long term.

---

Presidential

White House urges Roy Moore to concede, as supporters look for evidence of 'voter fraud'

David Weigel, The Washington Post

Two days after losing Alabama's special Senate election, Republican nominee Roy Moore has yet to concede the race to Democrat Doug Jones - even after

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said that he should. "I think the president's position is pretty clear in his outreach to Doug Jones directly," Sanders said at Thursday's briefing with reporters.

Tax reform gets in the way of Pence's Jerusalem victory lap

Matthew Nussbaum and Seung Min Kim, Politico

Vice President Mike Pence began planning a Christmastime trip to Jerusalem weeks before President Donald Trump decided to upend decades of U.S. policy by formally recognizing the city as Israel's capital. The visit, which Pence announced at a ceremony for the 70th anniversary of the United Nations vote establishing Israel as a sovereign state, was designed not just as a move to reaffirm ties with a key ally but as a victory lap for Pence, who was instrumental in lobbying Trump to stick with his campaign promise on Jerusalem.

Mueller Sought Emails of Trump Campaign Data Firm

Rebecca Ballhaus, The Wall Street Journal

Special Counsel Robert Mueller has requested that Cambridge Analytica, a data firm that worked for President Donald Trump's campaign, turn over documents as part of its investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. election, according to people familiar with the matter. Mr. Mueller asked the firm in the fall to turn over the emails of any Cambridge Analytica employees who worked on the Trump campaign, in a sign that the special counsel is probing the Trump campaign's data operation.

Doubting the intelligence, Trump pursues Putin and leaves a Russian threat unchecked

Greg Miller et al., The Washington Post

In the final days before Donald Trump was sworn in as president, members of his inner circle pleaded with him to acknowledge publicly what U.S. intelligence agencies had already concluded - that Russia's interference in the 2016 election was real. Holding impromptu interventions in Trump's 26th-floor corner office at Trump Tower, advisers - including Trump's son-in-law, Jared Kushner, and designated chief of staff, Reince Priebus - prodded the president-elect to accept the findings that the nation's spy chiefs had personally presented to him on Jan. 6.

DHS Plans to End Work Eligibility for Spouses of H-1B Holders

Laura Meckler, The Wall Street Journal

The spouses of highly skilled foreign workers would no longer be able to work legally in the U.S. under a regulatory change proposed by the Trump administration on Thursday. The plan, laid out in a notice that it intends to propose a rule in 2018, would undo a program by the Obama administration that benefits foreign couples where one person is working in the U.S. on an H-1B visa.

White House aims to sway opinion on immigration overhaul

Zeke Miller and Jill Colvin, The Associated Press

The White House is embarking on a major campaign to turn public opinion against the nation's largely family-based immigration system ahead of an all-out push next year to move toward a more merit-based structure. The administration was laying the groundwork for such a drive even before an Islamic State-inspired extremist who was born in Bangladesh tried to blow himself up in Midtown Manhattan on Monday.

---

Senate

Senators Go Their Own Way on Stopgap Funding

Jennifer Shutt, Roll Call

Senators are preparing to completely rework the temporary spending bill needed to keep much of government open past Dec. 22. The legislation will be stripped of the House-passed Defense appropriations bill and a partisan measure reauthorizing the Children's Health Insurance Program, which many expected.

Grassley demands answers on FBI officials' texts about Trump

Kyle Cheney, Politico

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley demanded answers Thursday about when top Department of Justice officials became aware of anti-Donald Trump text messages sent in 2015 and 2016 by top FBI officials, including one senior agent involved in the investigation of any Trump campaign connections to Russia. "The limited release of 375 text messages between Mr. Peter Strzok and Ms. Lisa Page indicate a highly politicized FBI environment during both the Clinton and Russia investigations," Grassley wrote in a letter to deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, who appointed special counsel Robert Mueller to lead a criminal probe of Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election.

Senate Republicans try to shield Mueller from criticism of his Russia probe

Karoun Demirjian, The Washington Post

Senate Republicans are scrambling to shield special counsel Robert S. Mueller III from mounting GOP fury about new evidence that members of his team were biased against President Trump, as factions of the party charge that his entire investigation is tainted. The stakes are high: If the GOP moves to hold Mueller accountable for his former subordinates' actions, it could enable Trump to order his ouster and cripple the inquiry he has run examining Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election and whether the president's campaign coordinated with the Kremlin to tilt its outcome in his favor.

Republicans join push to lift secrecy around misconduct in Congress

Susan Cornwell and Caren Bohan, Reuters

Prominent Republican senators on Thursday embraced a push to overhaul rules for addressing sexual harassment in the U.S. Congress, signing on to a bill that would protect victims and require lawmakers to pay for their own settlements. The legislation builds on demands to lift the veil of secrecy around sexual harassment and misconduct on Capitol Hill, and has gained steam in recent months as a wave of women have come forward with accusations against prominent American men in politics, media and entertainment.

Lindsey Graham: There's a 30 Percent Chance Trump Attacks North Korea

Uri Friedman, The Atlantic

It's become a grim ritual in Washington foreign-policy circles to assess the chances that the United States and North Korea stumble into war. But on Wednesday Lindsey Graham did something different: He estimated the odds that the Trump administration deliberately strikes North Korea first, to stop it from acquiring the capability to target the U.S. mainland with a long-range, nuclear-tipped missile.

---

House

Some Democrats renew calls for Kihuen to resign after second woman accuses him of harassment

Humberto Sanchez et al., The Nevada Independent

Nevada Democratic Rep. Dina Titus had strong words for her fellow congressman Ruben Kihuen the day after another woman's sexual harassment allegations against him came to light, asking "What part of no don't you understand?" Titus has yet to call directly for Kihuen's resignation - House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi on Thursday reiterated her call for Kihuen to step down.

Keith Ellison Will Not Challenge Smith for Franken's Seat in 2018

Griffin Connolly, Roll Call

Rep. Keith Ellison will not run in Minnesota's special election for Senate to replace Sen. Al Franken in 2018, the six-term Democratic lawmaker signaled Wednesday. Minnesota Lt. Gov. Tina Smith has been pegged to replace Franken through January 2019. Smith, a Democrat, said she plans to run in the November 2018 special election.

House intel heading to NY for two key interviews, prompting grumbling from Democrats

Manu Raju and Jeremy Herb, CNN

The House Intelligence Committee plans to hold two off-site interviews next week with high-profile witnesses who have ties to President Donald Trump, prompting grumbling among Democrats who contend that the GOP is rushing to wrap up the Russia probe, with more left to investigate. The witnesses - one is a Russian-American businessman, Felix Sater, and the other Trump's longtime personal assistant, Rhona Graff - will be interviewed by Republican and Democratic staff next week in New York, two sources said.

---

States

Republican delegate prevails after recount in key Va. House race with 100-vote margin

Antonio Olivo, The Washington Post

Virginia state Del. Timothy D. Hugo (R-Fairfax) prevailed in the first of four scheduled election recounts that will determine which party holds power in the House of Delegates, leaving Democrats to stake their hopes on the remaining races, whose outcomes will be determined next week. After Democrat Donte Tanner gained a net of seven votes, Hugo's lead dropped to 99 votes at the end of a two-day recount inside Fairfax County's Circuit Court that, despite the high stakes, went smoothly and with little partisan friction.

New York state AG to sue over net neutrality reversal

David Shepardson, Reuters

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman and at least two other state law enforcement chiefs said on Thursday he would lead a multi-state legal challenge to the U.S. Federal Communications Commission vote to reverse landmark 2015 net neutrality rules. Schneiderman, a Democrat, said in a statement that states "will sue to stop the FCC's illegal rollback of net neutrality."

Republican governors meet with Pence over NAFTA concerns

Lesley Wroughton, Reuters

Republican governors from four U.S. states on Thursday met with Vice President Mike Pence to voice deep concerns over proposed changes to NAFTA that could affect jobs and manufacturing in their states, officials who attended the meeting said. The meeting at the White House included Governors Kim Reynolds of Iowa, Rick Snyder of Michigan, Bill Haslam of Tennessee and Asa Hutchinson of Arkansas, as well as President Donald Trump's Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross and U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer.

California regulators sign off on the state's ambitious 2030 climate change plan

Liam Dillon, Los Angeles Times

California climate regulators on Thursday approved a detailed plan for the state to meet its 2030 carbon reduction goals. The effort, known formally as the "scoping plan," details the state's strategies for reducing greenhouse gas emissions 40% below 1990 levels over the next 13 years as a way to fight climate change.

Nebraska Democratic chairwoman says party will field candidate in 2018 governor's race - even if she has to put her name on ballot

Roseann Moring, Omaha World-Herald

Nebraska Democrats will field a seasoned political figure in the state gubernatorial race in 2018, party Chairwoman Jane Kleeb said Thursday - even if she has to put her own name on the ballot. Her decision comes after party leaders considered not recruiting a Democrat in an effort to help State Sen. Bob Krist, an independent, in his bid to unseat Republican Gov. Pete Ricketts.

---

Advocacy

With Billions at Stake in Tax Debate, Lobbyists Played Hardball

Kenneth P. Vogel and Jim Tankersley, The New York Times

As the largest tax rewrite in decades powered through Congress, lobbyists found themselves sprinting to keep up and find ways to persuade, influence or cajole the small group of lawmakers empowered to tweak language in the final version of the joint Senate and House bill. The lobbyists and their allies opened their wallets wide to fund advertisements, phone banks and field campaigns.

Fearing 2018 Democratic Wave, Right-Wing Lobbyists Are Mobilizing Against A \$15 Minimum Wage Push

Lee Fang and Nick Surgey, The Intercept

Even before Democrat Doug Jones's unlikely win in the race for an Alabama Senate seat, Republicans were worried: There could be a wave of Democratic victories ahead, a backlash against President Donald Trump, in next year's elections. The wave could carry with it a raft of pushes for progressive policies.

---

Opinions, Editorials and Perspectives

Congress must act on the 'dreamers'

Tim Cook and Charles Koch, The Washington Post

The holidays are upon us, and families across the United States are coming together to celebrate. Yet for about 690,000 of our neighbors, colleagues and friends, this holiday season is marked by uncertainty and fear.

Trump's Lies vs. Obama's

David Leonhardt et al., The New York Times

After we published a list of President Trump's lies this summer, we heard a common response from his supporters. They said, in effect: Yes, but if you made a similar list for previous presidents, it would be just as bad.

The Internet Is Free Again

The Editorial Board, The Wall Street Journal

Disney's deal announced Thursday to buy some premium 21st Century Fox properties for $52.4 billion underscores how technology is remaking the media landscape. This discomfits some, but the Federal Communications Commission is right to let markets steer competition and innovation.

Is Trump Driving the Stock Market Rally?

Raymond Fisman and Eric Zitzewitz, The New York Times

"Highest stock market ever!" President Trump boasted last week. By his own reckoning, Wall Street's rally since his election is proof of the economic potency of his presidency.

---

Research Reports and Polling

Government Gets Lower Ratings for Handling Health Care, Environment, Disaster Response

Pew Research Center

Since 2015, opinions about the federal government's handling of several major issues have become less positive and much more partisan. Yet majorities continue to say the government should have a "major role" on such issues as defending against terrorism and helping lift people from poverty.

Party Hoppers: Understanding Voters Who Switched Partisan Affiliation

Robert Griffin, Democracy Fund Voter Study Group

Partisan affiliation is one of the most stable features of the modern American electorate. While individuals' feelings toward politicians or their attitudes about policy can change quickly, partisanship is a deep-seated identity resistant to change.

This email was sent by: Morning Consult
PO Box 27068 Washington, DC, 20038, US
Manage your email preferences

SUBSCRIBE

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Changing the math on the Clean Power Plan — Perry's eagerly anticipated hearing next week — DOE, PHMSA picks confirmed
Date: Friday, October 06, 2017 5:45:01 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/06/2017 05:42 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff and Darius Dixon

Morning Energy will not publish on Monday, Oct. 9. Our next Morning Energy newsletter will publish on Tuesday, Oct. 10. Please continue to follow Pro Energy issues here.

CHANGING THE MATH ON CLIMATE CHANGE: In a move that will set the tone for the Trump administration's legal and political battles over climate regulation, EPA plans to consider fundamentally altering the benefits it associates with the Clean Power Plan in an upcoming proposal to rescind the Obama-era emissions reduction rule, Pro's Emily Holden reports, citing multiple sources familiar with recent drafts. Taken together, the changes will eliminate tens of billions of dollars in the Clean Power Plan's benefits that could be used to bolster EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's legal argument for pulling back the regulation.

Among the changes, President Donald Trump's EPA will dramatically alter its use of the social cost of carbon by no longer considering any social or economic benefits the rule creates outside the United States and counting far fewer of the health benefits that might have come from reducing air pollutants. Obama's regulators accounted for the fact that levels of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide and particulate matter would decline along with the greenhouse gases, but the Trump proposal won't count any of those additional reductions if pollutant levels were already at levels deemed safe by the agency in other regulations.

Proponents of the Obama regulation argue Pruitt's EPA is relying on fuzzy math and ignoring the fact utilities are transitioning to cleaner energy sources faster than anticipated. Janet McCabe, who led EPA's air office under Obama, said Trump's team seems to be ignoring the fact that many states are already on track to hit the rule's targets ahead of schedule. "Every other story is about how costs are coming down, about how emissions are reducing, about how power companies are making choices to close their coal plants or run them less because they're so expensive," she said. And David Doniger, climate director for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said "the courts are going to look very, very hard at this kind of cooking of the books."

EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman's response: "While it appears you are writing a piece based on rumors about CPP, the facts are that the Obama administration's estimates and analysis of costs and benefits was, in multiple areas, highly uncertain and/or controversial."

TGIF ONE AND ALL! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Craig Meyers was first up to identify Reps. Debbie Dingell and Doris Matsui as the two current lawmakers who replaced their spouses in their congressional seats. For today: Who is the first participant in the U.S. Senate Youth Program to be elected to the body? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

GET YOUR POPCORN READY! Energy Secretary Rick Perry should expect a bevy of tough questions in his first appearance before the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Energy next Thursday. Chief among them will be his effort to quickly push through new FERC rules benefitting coal and nuclear plants that has united the oil, gas, wind and solar industries — along with consumer groups — against him. Look for Democrats to push Perry on his use of non-commercial aircraft as secretary, in light of reports he chartered a private plane one day before HHS Secretary Tom Price resigned. More information on the Oct. 12 hearing here.

He may not enjoy a home field advantage: Fellow Texans are usually quite chummy with their former governor but the FERC grid proposal might have them peppering Perry with non-softballs. Rep. Pete Olson said Perry had grabbed "the tiger by the tail" and predicted it would be a "big" area of discussion from both parties. "I'm concerned because it appears to be picking winners and losers," he told reporters. "Every time we do that, it hurts the consumer."

But first: Perry is scheduled to speak this morning at a Veterans in Energy forum in Arlington, Va. this morning.

DOE, PHMSA PICKS CONFIRMED: Before heading out on a 10-day recess, the Senate confirmed by voice vote Howard "Skip" Elliott to run the Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration and Bruce Walker to lead DOE's electricity delivery and energy reliability office. Lawmakers also cleared Timothy Gallaudet's nomination as No. 2 at NOAA by voice vote and passed a resolution declaring Thursday "Energy Efficiency Day."

Not in the cards: Confirmation of FERC chairman nominee Kevin McIntyre and Democratic commissioner pick Rich Glick. Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairman Lisa Murkowski asked unanimous consent to approve the selections, but an unidentified senator objected. Murkowski, who has been pushing to get FERC to full complement this week, said on the floor she was "disappointed" after the objection.

HELP THAT MESS IN TEXAS: Gov. Greg Abbott, Sens. John Cornyn and Ted Cruz and all but three of Texas' House members requested $18.7 billion in disaster funding be included in the next Appropriations package as the state continues its recovery from Hurricane Harvey. "We all recognize that the funding already appropriated is a small fraction of the federal resources needed to help rebuild Texas," they wrote.

Not so fast? House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy indicated Thursday his chamber would take up the White House's $29 billion disaster aid request next week but Republican Study Chairman Mark Walker said his influential bloc might oppose the package without corresponding spending cuts, Pro's Budget & Appropriations Brief's Sarah Ferris reports.

Seems unnecessary: The Trump administration removed information about the status of drinking water and electricity access on Puerto Rico from FEMA's site, The Washington Post reports. Government figures show 9.2 percent of the island now has electricity and 54.2 percent of people have potable drinking water. Meanwhile, Flint Mayor Karen Weaver released a letter of support Thursday to San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulin Cruz sent earlier in the week.

Over in Florida, lawmakers are looking at potential ways to alleviate fuel shortages in the aftermath of hurricanes, but POLITICO Florida's Bruce Ritchie reports solutions may be elusive. That isn't stopping Democratic Sen. Bill Nelson, who filed legislation Thursday requiring DOE to create a gas supply reserve that would hold at least 1 million barrels of oil in two separate locations, Bruce and Sergio Bustos report.

Veep alert! Vice President Mike Pence is visiting the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico today for an update on Hurricane Maria recovery efforts.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER? As POLITICO reported was likely way back in March, the White House formally selected Faegre Baker Daniels attorney Andrew Wheeler to serve as No. 2 at EPA, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. Wheeler, a former staffer to Sen. Jim Inhofe and the EPW Committee, was formerly a registered lobbyist for coal producer Murray Energy but deregistered in an Aug. 11 filing. Hopefully, he'll keep participating in ME's trivia!

REPORT: ENERGY-RELATED CO2 EMISSIONS DOWN: Energy-related emissions of carbon dioxide fell 1.7 percent in 2016 — that's 89 million metric tons, according to an Energy Information Administration report out Thursday. Emissions have declined in six of the past 10 years and energy-related ones are down 14 percent from 2005 levels. Transportation-related carbon emissions rose in 2016, though emissions from the industrial, commercial and sectors were all down. Natural gas emissions surpassed those from coal in 2016, though the report notes "natural gas produces more energy for the same amount of emissions as coal."

** A message from Chevron: We're piloting a program that uses drones to keep an eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xO60oe> **

LAWSUIT THREATENED OVER MISSED OZONE DEADLINE: A group of 14 state attorneys general threatened to sue EPA for missing an Oct. 1 deadline to decide which parts of the U.S. do or do not meet the 2015 ozone standard. They join a coalition of environmental groups, which vowed to sue Pruitt earlier this week.

TAX OVERHAUL: BIOFUELS PRODUCERS LIKE THE PASSTHROUGH TAX BREAKS: Like everyone, ethanol producers await the details of Republican tax overhaul plans, but they see at least one feature they like: the tax cut on passthrough businesses. The principles in the "Big Six" tax overhaul call for a reduction in the tax rate from 36.9 percent to 25 percent on taxes paid by businesses run by sole proprietors, partnerships, and "S Corps", commonly called "passthrough" businesses. "That's how our plants are mostly organized, we see this as potential positive for our members," said John Fuhrer, senior director for government affairs for Growth Energy, an ethanol producers group.

FERC EYES NEW ENFORCEMENT CHIEF: Two sources with knowledge of the plans tell Pro's Darius Dixon and Esther Whieldon that Skadden attorney John Shepherd Jr. is expected to become FERC's next enforcement chief. According to Shepherd's bio, his practice focuses on market design, market power and market manipulation issues in the energy and natural gas markets. The timing of the announcement is not certain.

GRIFFITH STEPPING INTO MURPHY'S E&C SLOT: With embattled Rep. Tim Murphy opting Thursday to resign from Congress later this month, an Energy and Commerce aide tells ME Virginia Rep. Morgan Griffith is expected to become chairman of the panel's Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee.

ASSUME E15 BILL DEAD (FOR NOW): Both Senate EPW Chairman John Barrasso and bill sponsor Deb Fischer now say a measure S. 517 \(115\) that would allow year-round sales of higher blends of ethanol won't even get a committee vote this year, Pro's Eric Wolff reports.

Even with five committee members as co-sponsors, there wasn't sufficient support among panel members and a flurry of amendments threatened to go after bedrock environmental laws. "I think what happened [was] it looked like we were really going to do this. So we loaded the box up with every Clean Air Act amendment we could think of," a refining industry source who opposed the bill told Eric.

MAIL CALL! GOP URGES DOI LEAK PROBE! House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop and Oversight Subcommittee Chairman Bruce Westerman sent a letter Thursday requesting a briefing and copies of written policies concerning unauthorized leaks at Interior. They point to four leaks over the past several months with documents not yet finalized. "Improper disclosure of internal agency information, however, both classified and nonclassified, is an unacceptable practice," they wrote. "It is vital that those responsible for unauthorized releases are held accountable."

TWO THUMBS UP! Sen. Bill Cassidy, Barrasso and Murkowski wrote a letter Thursday to Perry to voice support for a proposed rule that would speed approvals of small-scale liquefied natural gas exports. DOE formally proposed the regulation on Sept. 1 and the comment period ends Oct. 16.

ANOTHER PRUITT PROBE PURSUED: Three senior House Energy and Commerce Democrats — Frank Pallone, Paul Tonko and Diana DeGette — asked EPA's inspector general in a Thursday letter to investigate Pruitt's installation of a $25,000 "privacy cube" in his office. "[Americans] have a right to know if Administrator Pruitt is wasting taxpayer money on duplicative and unnecessary purchases for his office," they wrote.

HEARING ON FEDERAL STAFFING SOUGHT: All House Oversight Democrats asked for a hearing to be scheduled on Trump administration efforts to downsize the federal workforce. Read it here.

KELLOGG VP SEEKING UPTON'S SEAT: Democrat George Franklin, a vice president at Kellogg announced Thursday he'll seek Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee Chairman Fred Upton's congressional seat, WWMT reports. It remains unclear, of course, whether the incumbent Upton will seek reelection to the House, run for Senate or retire.

RECORDS SOUGHT FOR PERRY'S TRUMP HOTEL SPEECH: Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington filed a FOIA request seeking all records and requests for reimbursement stemming from Perry's speech to the National Mining Association at the Trump Hotel earlier this week. Copy here.

MUSK'S BIG IDEA: Elon Musk is open to helping rebuild Puerto Rico's electric grid. "The Tesla team has done this for many smaller islands around the world, but there is no scalability limit, so it can be done for Puerto Rico too. Such a decision would be in the hands of the PR govt, PUC, any commercial stakeholders and, most importantly, the people of PR," he tweeted Thursday. Gov. Ricardo Rossello responded on Twitter "let's talk" and said Puerto Rico could be Musk's "flagship project"

ANTI-PIPELINE AD LAUNCHED IN VIRGINIA: The Southern Environmental Law Center launched a $200,000, three-week television ad campaign in Virginia opposing the Atlantic Coast Pipeline being pushed by Dominion Energy.

HUNDREDS SEEK WILDFIRE FIX: More than 200 groups asked congressional leadership to enact "a comprehensive solution to the wildfire suppression funding issue that addresses the borrowing issue and the erosion of budgets due to increasing wildfire suppression costs." They voiced support for bipartisan House H.R. 2862 \(115\) and Senate S. 1842 \(115\) bills.

QUICK HITS

- Jerry Brown's California Dream: The Rolling Stone Interview. Rolling Stone.
- US oil exports will keep booming after hitting record 2 million barrels a day, analysts say. CNBC.
- U.S. Gulf oil producers curtail output ahead of Tropical Storm Nate. Reuters.
- Interior Department rejects 25 endangered species petitions, including several linked to climate change. Washington Post.
- EPA's Scott Pruitt prefers meeting with Republicans, just not on Mondays. CNN.
- Worker dies at Kentucky coal-fired power plant. AP.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:00 a.m. — 2017 Veterans In Energy Forum, NRECA, 4301 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA 22203

11:00 a.m. — Sen. Angus King holds a Senate Energy Committee field hearing in Searsmont, Maine on how combined heat and power and microgrid technology approaches can reduce industrial energy costs, watch here

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about energy, safety, and some truly high-flyin' doin'. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping to help keep a close eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xO60oe> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/changing-the-math-on-the-clean-power-plan-024942>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

EPA's climate rule withdrawal will include big changes to cost calculations Back

By Emily Holden | 10/05/2017 08:47 PM EDT

The Trump administration will consider fundamentally limiting the way the federal government counts benefits from curbing climate change and air pollution in an upcoming proposal to rescind former President Barack Obama's signature climate regulation, according to multiple sources familiar with recent drafts.

In nixing the Clean Power Plan, EPA will suggest changing the benefits it counts, which would bolster its arguments that the rule's economic burdens would outweigh its gains from cleaner air, reduced illnesses and greater energy efficiency.

President Donald Trump has long vowed to erase Obama's restrictions on coal plants, and then announced he was pulling out of the Paris climate accord, so it's no surprise he plans to eliminate the rule. But the fine print will have big implications for the inevitable yearslong legal fights to come. It could anger environmental advocates while satisfying some industries and conservative states.

"It may seem like inside baseball, but this is going to set the tone," said John Larsen, a director at the analysis firm Rhodium Group. "We haven't seen the details of any sort of regulatory plan from this administration yet on climate."

EPA could release its withdrawal proposal in the coming days, while leaving the door open to eventually replace the rule with one that would pose minimal costs but provide few climate benefits, as POLITICO reported last month.

Among other changes, Trump's EPA will drastically alter how it uses the social cost of carbon, a metric for assigning a monetary value to curbing emissions. The agency will decline to consider any social or economic benefits the rule creates outside the United States — unlike the Obama administration, which included worldwide impacts in its calculations.

And it will count far fewer of the health benefits that might have come from reducing air pollutants that cause premature deaths, heart attacks and asthma hospitalizations.

Taken together, the sources say, the recalculations eliminate tens of billions of dollars of the rule's benefits, which Obama's EPA had contended would outweigh the costs of enforcing a faster shift away from coal-fired power. The new numbers could be meant to aid EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's legal case for scrapping the rule.

The rule's supporters are already accusing Trump and Pruitt of promoting fake math. They say the administration is ignoring the reality that power companies are making the transition to green energy even faster than Obama anticipated.

"Like so many things, they seem to be completely ignoring what's happening in the real world," Janet McCabe, who led EPA's air office under Obama, said of Trump's team. "Every other story is about how costs are coming down, about how emissions are reducing, about how power companies are making choices to close their coal plants or run them less because they're so expensive."

David Doniger, climate director for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said that "the courts are going to look very, very hard at this kind of cooking of the books."

"There are two kinds of ways to get the law wrong, to play fast and loose with science and facts or with the economics, and you can lose for either or both reasons," he said.

But EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman said that if anyone's numbers were questionable, it was Obama's.

"While it appears you are writing a piece based on rumors about CPP, the facts are that the Obama administration's estimates and analysis of costs and benefits was, in multiple areas, highly uncertain and/or controversial," she said in an email Thursday night.

The businesses and states that opposed Obama's regulation say it's about time EPA reconsidered the costs. For example, it's reasonable to count only the rule's U.S. benefits since Americans would be paying the costs, said Jeff Holmstead, an industry lawyer who was EPA's air administrator under former President George W. Bush.

The math surrounding the rule has long been a political lightning rod.

The Obama-era EPA said the rule would be a net gain for society because shifting to cleaner energy sources would slow climate change and reduce pollution-related illnesses, among other benefits. In contrast, studies financed by conservative groups estimated that the regulation would cost the economy hundreds of billions of dollars during the same time frame.

The rule sought to cut the U.S. power industry's carbon pollution 32 percent by 2030, compared with 2005 levels — and as of two years ago, the country was more than halfway there. The regulation was the centerpiece of Obama's pledge that the U.S. would fulfill its part of the 2015 Paris climate agreement.

Trump has since announced he's pulling the United States out of Paris, unless he can "negotiate" a more favorable deal, and he's ordered EPA to undo a host of Obama-era regulations, chief among them the Clean Power Plan.

He has also directed his agencies to recalculate Obama's math on the social and economic impacts of climate change.

In a March executive order, Trump disbanded an interagency team that had been working on revising the social cost of carbon.

He also told his agencies to revert to White House guidance from 2003, which directed regulators performing cost-benefit analyses to "focus on benefits and costs that accrue to citizens and residents of the United States." Any look at international implications should go into a separate report, the George W. Bush-era guidance said.

That "America First" approach to regulation is a big departure from Obama's methods, which considered the worldwide effects of reducing U.S. carbon pollution, but it will help Trump's EPA justify repealing the rule.

In the Clean Power Plan, the Obama administration had estimated that each metric ton of carbon dioxide imposes about $40 of costs on society. That means the plan would yield about $30 billion in global climate benefits by 2030 — but only $2 billion to $7 billion in domestic gains, less than the rule's estimated cost, according to the think tank Brookings.

Experts who support the international strategy say going back is misguided. Michael Greenstone, the chief economist for Obama's Council of Economic Advisers in 2009 and 2010, told lawmakers in March that using a social cost of carbon that incorporates only U.S. benefits is "essentially asking the rest of the world to ramp up their emissions."

Noah Kaufman, an economist for World Resources Institute's climate program, said that "because climate change is a global problem, it requires a global solution."

"If countries try to solve it only for themselves, not taking into account how U.S. emissions affect the global community, and the global community doesn't consider how it affects us ...

you're just never going to solve the problem," Kaufman said.

EPA will also refuse to count many of the health benefits that the Obama administration estimated would arise as side effects of reducing carbon emissions, the sources said. Specifically, Obama's regulators accounted for the fact that levels of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide and particulate matter — pollutants already regulated by other EPA rules — would decline along with the greenhouse gases.

In contrast, Trump's EPA won't count those ancillary reductions if the pollutants were already below levels that the agency has deemed safe in other standards.

Environmental advocates say that logic is wrong, because further curbing those pollutants means people will be even healthier. But Holmstead said that while it's legitimate for EPA to look at the other pollutant reductions the rule might achieve, the agency shouldn't count them to offset costs.

The changes to the cost-benefit analysis will come in a regulatory impact analysis that aims to highlight a wide range of cost estimates for the rule. The analysis will accompany EPA's proposed rule for rescinding the Clean Power Plan and its advanced notice of proposed rulemaking on options to replace the regulation.

Obama's critics estimate the rule would force consumers to pay $200 billion more by 2030 and saddle electricity customers with double-digit price hikes in many states, according to a study contracted by the conservative American Energy Alliance's Institute for Energy Research.

The Obama-era EPA and many academic institutions and think tanks have argued that the rule would cost far less, between $5 billion and $8 billion in 2030 by the agency's previous calculations. Plus, they have said, the social benefits of reducing carbon levels, slowing climate change and ratcheting down illness-causing air pollution would far offset the costs, achieving $26 billion to $45 billion in net benefits by 2030.

Advocates say costs are already proving to be even lower than expected as power companies move away from coal on their own.

The Institute for Policy Integrity at New York University School of Law this week released a paper compiling multiple studies that have found that Clean Power Plan compliance costs have fallen dramatically since the rule came out in 2015. That included an analysis from the American Petroleum Institute that estimated lower costs than EPA's original expectations.

"The takeaway from this should be, if we're going to do anything with the Clean Power Plan right now, given these trends we should be strengthening the goals," said Jack Lienke, an author of that paper and regulatory policy director for the institute. "Emissions can be reduced much more cheaply. That's a reason to set more aggressive targets, not to weaken targets or repeal them altogether."

To view online click here.

Back

White House seeks nearly $30B in disaster aid package Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/04/2017 06:13 PM EDT

The White House this afternoon formally requested nearly $30 billion in emergency funding for its ongoing recovery efforts in hurricane-battered regions like Puerto Rico, Florida and Texas.

In a letter to congressional leaders, the Trump administration asked for $12.8 billion for FEMA's disaster relief fund, $16 billion for the National Flood Insurance Program and $576.5 million for the forest service's firefighting fund.

"We need the help of Congress to stabilize the affected communities and replenish dwindling and depleted funds," Office of Management and Budget chief Mick Mulvaney wrote. He said the money should be classified as "emergency spending," meaning it would not require spending offsets.

House and Senate appropriators immediately released statements in support of the White House's request and pledged to act quickly. House Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen (R-N.J.) said he would "put legislation forward as soon as possible."

Rep. Nita Lowey, his Democratic counterpart on the panel, said she supported Trump's request for FEMA, but added it needed to go further.

"Congress should add to this request by appropriating funding for flexible Community Development Block Grants; rebuilding coastlines, roads, transit systems, airports, ports, and other infrastructure; small business loans; and repairs to military installations and other federal facilities damaged in the storms," said Lowey, of New York.

The White House's request had previously been reported by POLITICO.

To view online click here.

Back

RSC chief stakes opposition to hurricane relief without offsets Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/04/2017 10:50 PM EDT

The Republican Study Committee's chairman is threatening to oppose the next round of hurricane relief funding if Congress doesn't cut spending to cover the costs.

"We're going to come out strong for those to be offset," Rep. Mark Walker (R-N.C.) told POLITICO late Wednesday. "Just because Republicans are in charge doesn't mean deficits and debts no longer matter."

Walker said he has for weeks told fellow lawmakers, including those in leadership, to demand offsets. Now he is going public with his position as Congress considers the White House's new $29 billion disaster aid request.

Lawmakers are expected to vote mid-month on the fresh aid plan, which includes $13 billion in Federal Emergency Management Agency funding that would not count toward Congress' annual spending limits.

GOP leaders have signaled there are likely to be more requests to come, and the price tag for hurricane recovery could total hundreds of billions of dollars.

So far, Congress has allocated $15 billion in emergency funding since the three devastating storms began ravaging the U.S. and its territories with Hurricane Harvey's initial blow in late August.

Walker's demands are likely to incite a years-old fiscal fight within the GOP over whether emergency spending should add to the nation's deficit.

Prominent conservatives, including Vice President Mike Pence and House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), have for years argued that disaster relief should be offset.

"Congress must ensure that a catastrophe of nature does not become a catastrophe of debt," then-congressman Pence said in a 2005 floor speech that has resurfaced in recent weeks.

In 2011, a similar demand by House conservatives brought the government to the brink of shutdown.

Walker proposes Congress consider reshuffling money from accounts like the Energy Department's loan program for manufacturing fuel-efficient cars.

This year, a majority of House Republicans already agreed to bend the pay-as-you-go requirement for the $15 billion hurricane relief package (H.R. 601 \(115\)) enacted last month. Ninety Republicans, including Walker, opposed the legislation, which also funded the government through Dec. 8 and temporarily suspended the debt ceiling.

On future packages, Walker said he believes "the bulk" of the House's Republicans will join in opposition if there are no offsets.

The first emergency package was different, he argues, because it was an immediate response when "there were people's lives in the balance" and it "wasn't an overwhelming amount."

Walker stressed that he isn't planning to hold a disaster package "hostage" but wants to remind fellow Republicans that they, too, have campaigned against runaway spending.

"We just want to say, 'Hey, we're waving a flag out here,'" Walker said. "If we don't have the money, then is it not due diligence to go find out where money is being spent frivolously?"

To view online click here.

Back

Sources: Trump expected to tap Wheeler as EPA deputy Back

By Andrew Restuccia, Alex Guillén and Anthony Adragna | 03/16/2017 08:00 PM EDT

President Donald Trump is expected to tap Andrew Wheeler, a coal lobbyist and former aide to Sen. Jim Inhofe, to be deputy administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, sources familiar with the hiring process told POLITICO.

Sources cautioned that the decision has not yet been finalized, but they said Wheeler is expected to get the job. It's unclear when Trump will make the announcement, but one source said it could be weeks before Wheeler is officially tapped.

Wheeler worked as an EPA staffer earlier in his career. He later joined Inhofe's Senate office and then spent more than a decade as a Republican staffer on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, where he worked on several major pieces of legislation, including the 2005 and 2007 energy bills.

He has worked at the law firm Faegre Baker Daniels since 2009. He now co-leads the firm's energy and natural resources practice.

Wheeler is a registered lobbyist for Murray Energy, the nation's largest privately owned coal company, which regularly filed lawsuits against the Obama administration over its environmental regulations.

As a lobbyist, Wheeler may need to obtain a waiver to serve at the EPA.

Trump signed an executive order in January that bars registered lobbyists from participating in "any particular matter" on which they lobbied in the past two years. Those lobbying restrictions last for two years from the time the person joins the administration.

But the executive order says the administration can grant "any person a waiver of any restrictions" in its ethics and lobbyist requirements. Unlike an order signed by former President Barack Obama in 2009, Trump's executive order doesn't require public disclosure of the waivers.

Aside from Murray, Wheeler also lobbies on unspecified energy and energy efficiency issues for Underwriters Laboratories, an Illinois-based lab company, and on agricultural issues for cheese maker Sargento. His former clients include Xcel Energy and Bear Head LNG, as well as a cooking oil-recycling company, an auto auctioner and a medical isotope coalition.

Wheeler won't be the only energy lobbyist to join the Trump administration. Mike Catanzaro, a lobbyist at the firm CGCN Group whose clients included several fossil fuel companies, took a job at the White House last month as an energy and environmental adviser at the National Economic Council. Catanzaro is a former EPW staffer to Inhofe.

Meanwhile, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, a fellow Oklahoman, has also brought former Inhofe aide Ryan Jackson on as chief of staff. Byron Brown, a former Inhofe aide, is EPA's deputy chief of staff and Mandy Gunasekara, a former EPW counsel, is now a senior policy adviser to Pruitt.

More aides with ties to Inhofe are expected to join the EPA in the coming weeks. Susan Bodine and Brittany Bolen, two EPA staffers, are widely expected to be offered jobs at EPA.

Wheeler, a White House spokeswoman and an EPA spokesman did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

White House announces Wheeler pick for EPA deputy Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/05/2017 03:52 PM EDT

The White House today nominated Andrew Wheeler to be deputy EPA administrator.

POLITICO reported in March that Wheeler was the leading contender for the job, which will help run day-to-day operations at EPA while the agency works to undo many Obama-era regulations.

Wheeler previously worked for Sen. Jim Inhofe and the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. Since 2009, he has been an attorney at the law firm Faegre Baker Daniels, where he was a registered lobbyist for coal producer Murray Energy. Wheeler de-registered himself as a Murray lobbyist in an Aug. 11 filing.

Wheeler will be at least the seventh political staffer with ties to Inhofe to land at EPA. Others include chief of staff Ryan Jackson, deputy chief of staff Byron Brown, adviser Mandy Gunasekara and Susan Bodine, the enforcement nominee who started working as an enforcement adviser to Administrator Scott Pruitt last month ahead of her Senate confirmation.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will likely schedule a confirmation hearing for Wheeler in the coming weeks.

To view online click here.

Back

Sources: FERC enforcement critic in line to become enforcement chief Back

By Darius Dixon and Esther Whieldon | 10/05/2017 04:29 PM EDT

Skadden attorney John Shepherd Jr. is expected to be named FERC's next head of enforcement, according to two sources with knowledge of the plans.

Shepherd co-authored a paper for the Energy Law Journal in 2010 calling for new due process rules within the FERC enforcement office, which polices energy markets for manipulation, and has made headlines for levying multi-million dollar fines against firms like JPMorgan Chase and Barclays. Shepherd co-authored the paper with William Scherman, a former FERC general counsel who has been critical of the agency's enforcement work.

According to his biography on the Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom website, Shepherd's practice focuses on market design, market power and market manipulation issues in the energy and natural gas markets. His biography also highlights his success securing the "dismissal of a non-public investigation against a Midwest natural gas company for alleged capacity 'flipping' violations."

The sources said the timing of the appointment was not certain.

Reached by phone today, Shepherd said he had not been contacted about the position.

Last month, fellow Skadden attorney James Danly became FERC's general counsel.

To view online click here.

Back

Tim Murphy resigns from Congress Back

By Rachael Bade and Jake Sherman | 10/05/2017 04:06 PM EDT

Rep. Tim Murphy (R-Pa.), the embattled anti-abortion lawmaker who allegedly encouraged his lover to terminate a pregnancy, on Thursday announced his plan to resign from office later this month — just a day after announcing his plan to retire following the 2018 election.

The Pennsylvania Republican's about-face came after House GOP leaders and senior Republicans upped the pressure on Murphy to step down. Republican sources familiar with Murphy's thinking said the married father of one child initially believed he could weather a story in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, revealing he had sent a series of text messages to his girlfriend — a psychologist half his age — encouraging her to have an abortion. Murphy has been a strongly anti-abortion lawmaker during his 15 years in Congress.

"This afternoon, I received a letter of resignation from Congressman Tim Murphy, effective October 21," Speaker Paul Ryan said in a statement. "It was Dr. Murphy's decision to move on to the next chapter of his life, and I support it."

But many senior Republicans did not believe Murphy could — or should — survive until the end of his term. Several top Republicans said Ryan, who met with Murphy Wednesday evening to discuss his future, also wanted him to step down.

GOP insiders also were worried that additional damaging stories could surface involving Murphy and his office. The Post-Gazette revealed that his staff was in turmoil for years, with the congressman yelling at aides and throwing folders.

"As I said last night, the circumstances surrounding this situation are extremely disappointing to me," National Republican Congressional Committee Chairman Steve Stivers said in a statement.

But Stivers predicted that Republicans would easily hold Murphy's district, despite the scandal that destroyed the GOP lawmaker's career.

"The NRCC is undefeated in special elections this year and I'm supremely confident that will continue," the Ohio lawmaker said. "In the meantime, we look forward to seeing how national Democrats can spin yet another special election loss into a so-called moral victory."

The sudden furor surrounding Murphy brought a wave of detractors eager to tell of their mistreatment at his hands during his time in Congress.

Five former Murphy employees contacted POLITICO to share stories of inappropriate behavior by both Murphy and his chief of staff Susan Mosychuk. Those included tales of staff being berated as "worthless" and "stupid." Others told of being forced by Mosychuk to take the stairs instead of the elevators as punishments for underperforming.

Republicans believed the matter could become an ethics issue that would trigger an investigation and distract from GOP messaging. With Murphy set to resign in two weeks, any ethics probe would end as soon as he left office.

Throughout Wednesday, Murphy held a series of private meetings with other GOP lawmakers as he sought to save his career. Pennsylvania GOP Reps. Charlie Dent and Bill Shuster huddled with Murphy in his office on Wednesday afternoon, but would not discuss what was said following the private session.

By Thursday morning, Murphy began to understand those complications and had drafted a resignation letter.

Murphy's departure from Congress is expected to set off a scramble to replace him in what is a safe GOP seat. Democrats signaled that they have very low expectations of making a competitive run there.

"Pennsylvania's 18th Congressional District is a reliable Republican stronghold, but the grass-roots energy behind Democrats has proven powerful this year, and we will be closely tracking this district and special election," said Meredith Kelly, communications director for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

In Pennsylvania special elections, the state central committees for both parties select primary nominees, rather than through a primary vote.

Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf, a Democrat, will set the special general election date, which some political operatives believe will occur on the same day as the regular primary date next May.

"I'd assume the governor would put it on primary election day of next year," said Mark Harris, a Republican consultant in the state. "If that's the case, there would be two ballots — a special election ballot and a primary ballot. In theory, a candidate could win the special election and another candidate could win the primary."

Two Republican candidates announced their bids on Thursday — state Sen. Guy Reschenthaler, a former judge and Iraq War veteran, and state Sen. Kim Ward. Local operatives also named state Rep. Rick Saccone, who's currently running for the U.S. Senate, as another potential candidate.

Three Democrats were already vying to take on Murphy before he resigned, including Pam Iovino, a veteran who picked up an endorsement from VoteVets on Wednesday. But Democratic operatives said they expect more candidates to jump in, naming Matt Smith, president of the Greater Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, state Rep. Dan Miller and Westmoreland County Commissioner Ted Kopas.

John Bresnahan and Elena Schneider contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Bill to expand E15 ethanol dead for the year Back

By Eric Wolff | 10/05/2017 03:36 PM EDT

A bill to allow year-round sales of higher blends of ethanol won't get a vote in the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee this year after it attracted amendments that targeted major environmental laws, Republican senators told POLITICO.

Both EPW Chairman John Barrasso (R-Wyo.) and Sen. Deb Fischer (R-Neb.), author of S. 517 \(115\), said it lacked the votes to get out of committee despite having five members as co-sponsors. A majority of the remaining Republicans opposed the measure, and Fischer failed to win the backing of at least six Democrats to get it through the committee. Fischer had previously decided against bringing the bill to markup in July.

Republicans like Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.), who opposed the bill, saw it as a chance to weaken the Clean Air Act, and industry sources said Democrats had a string of their own plans to try to address concerns about higher food prices and increased air pollution. The combined weight of the amendments under discussion ultimately sunk the bill.

"The original sponsor said the votes aren't there; I don't expect to see it this year," Barrasso said. Fischer agreed that the bill would not come up for a vote this year.

Ethanol producers have long argued that allowing year-round sale of gasoline with 15 percent ethanol would help increase the number of credits that refiners must use to comply with the Renewable Fuel Standard — and ultimately drive down prices. But the oil industry sees the RFS as "broken," and major producers have no interest in small tweaks, especially one that would cut into the sale of their product.

Fischer won committee time in May for her bill, which would waive a Clean Air Act provision that prevents summer sales of E15 in some states after a last-minute scramble for votes on a resolution to kill an Obama-era rule limiting methane leaks by gas producers. Barrasso agreed to give her bill a hearing and a markup vote in exchange for votes from Fischer, Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and other corn-state Republicans. The methane resolution ultimately failed.

Ethanol producers had hoped to sway Democrats by touting the fuel's lower greenhouse gas profile than gasoline, and the hope that allowing E15 to be sold all year would create higher demand for advanced biofuels with even lower emissions, a top concern for longtime RFS supporter Sen. Ed Markey (D-Mass.).

The committee also has five senators among its members thought to be considering running for the Democratic nomination for president in 2020: Sens. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), Cory Booker (N.J.), Kirsten Gillibrand (N.Y.), Kamala Harris (Calif.) and Jeff Merkley (Ore.). Ethanol remains a key issue in Iowa, and a "yes" vote could have been a boost to a primary bid.

But industry sources say that Democrats, along with the Sierra Club, which opposed the bill, had concerns about the potential for higher food prices and air pollution. A biofuels and a refining industry source said Democrats wanted an amendment to cap ethanol volumes if food prices ran too high, and some Democrats worried that the air waiver, which has to do with fuel evaporation provisions, would create air pollution problems.

Though Fischer had sought a rifle shot that would address only the Clean Air Act waiver, the legislation ultimately "ricochets all over the place," said a refining industry source who opposed the bill.

"I think what happened [was] it looked like we were really going to do this. So we loaded the box up with every Clean Air Act amendment we could think of," he said.

Inhofe had his sights on the Clean Air Act, and he had planned a host of amendments, including killing the Clean Power Plan and the Waters of the United States rule, and sunseting the conventional biofuel requirement that is typically filled by ethanol. The amendments would be hard for Republicans to oppose but would have been virtually impossible for Democrats to support, if any got attached to the bill.

"We think it is very unfortunate that this bill has been caught up by unrelated issues," John Fuher, senior director for government affairs for Growth Energy, an ethanol group, said in a statement. "We continue to believe that this legislation is necessary, as it would lift an outdated, unnecessary restriction on retailers who want to offer their customers the choice of a cleaner, more affordable fuel option year-round."

Oil groups who opposed the legislation were more upbeat.

"We are pleased that E15 waiver is not moving," said Frank Macchiarola, downstream director for the American Petroleum Institute. "We think it reflects a broad bipartisan consensus that, first, E15 is not ready for the market place, and second, the RFS needs to be addressed holistically with significant reforms based on free market fundamentals that protect the American consumer."

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Concerns mount over mysterious Whitefish Energy contract — Nominees get votes today in EPW — Murkowski's winning streak rolls on
Date: Wednesday, October 25, 2017 5:43:43 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/25/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Emily Holden, Esther Whieldon and Alex Guillén

QUESTIONS MOUNT OVER WHITEFISH CONTRACT: Lawmakers from both parties expressed concern Tuesday over the $300 million contract offered to the little-known company Whitefish Energy from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's hometown for electric grid recovery work in Puerto Rico and vowed to pursue additional information about it. "I obviously want to find out more about it because this is quite a substantial contract and one that is really important for the people of Puerto Rico right now," Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski told reporters. She wasn't sure if her committee would tackle the matter, but she plans to hold a hearing on the broader Puerto Rican recovery "within the next week or so."

Bishop has concerns: House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop told reporters he wants more information on how many bids there were, the criteria for selection and who made the final call on Whitefish. "We have questions about it, but we need more information," he said. "I'm not reading anything into it because I'd probably be wrong, but there are questions."

Democrats, too: Top Natural Resources Democrat Raul Grijalva and Senate Energy ranking member Maria Cantwell both called for further probes into the contract. "Today I am calling on the Government Accountability Office to investigate the circumstances surrounding the multi-million dollar contract awarded to Whitefish Energy— a brand new company with two employees," Cantwell said in a statement. The Puerto Rican government tweeted Tuesday it would audit the contract. Wasting no time, American Oversight filed a FOIA seeking any information from Interior about Zinke's connection to the deal (the agency has denied he had any role in it).

Vote of full confidence: Even amid the controversy over the Whitefish contract, POLITICO's report of Zinke's close connections to so-called scam PACs and the secretary's travel habits, Bishop said he isn't worried about Zinke's performance. "I see nothing right now that would say he is not doing a credible performance at his job," he said. "I think he's justified in how he's traveled. We asked the questions in comparison to what happened in the past. I think he'll weather that fairly well."

Headed to Puerto Rico: Bishop said he'll visit Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands later this week to view recovery efforts first hand. "I want to make sure that we are structurally there to make sure that what assistance is given can get to the people directly on the immediate humanitarian needs," he said. "That's what I'd like to see." The Utah Republican said he'll hold hearings when he returns, hopefully in coordination with the Senate so officials can make just one trip to Washington.

Oh and in case anyone was wondering: Bishop wholeheartedly endorsed using the emerging tax reform process to explore opening up ANWR to potential drilling. "Hell yes. Give me a rational person that doesn't want to drill in ANWR," he said.

And ICYMI, your ME host and Pro's Nick Juliano looked at Zinke's separate briefings to House Natural Resources Democrats and Republicans, which Democrats described as "weird."

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and NEI's Robert Powers was first to pick Delaware as the state with the fewest counties (it has three). ME acknowledges the question could have been worded more precisely as neither Alaska nor Louisiana has counties. That said, for today: With Delaware Rep. Lisa Blunt Rochester assuming office this year, just two states have never elected a woman to Congress. Which ones? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

BIG DAY FOR TRUMP NOMINEES: One week and a mega-RFS fight later, Senate EPW gavels in today at 10 a.m. to consider a big group of Trump nominees. Most controversial are two EPA selections: Michael Dourson's bid to run the chemicals office and William Wehrum's selection to run the air office. Also on tap are David Ross's selection to run the water office, Matthew Leopold's selection to be general counsel and Paul Trombino's bid to run the Federal Highway Administration. Lawmakers will also consider Jeffery Baran's renomination to the NRC, which Chairman John Barrasso seemed decidedly cool toward during a confirmation hearing last month. After the votes, the committee will consider a discussion draft of wildfire management legislation.

Word of caution: These selections may have to wait a while for floor votes after clearing committee. There's a significant backlog and Democrats have already hinted they'll make some of the most controversial selections — think Dourson and Wehrum — jump through procedural hurdles before confirmation. Remember the committee Democrats demanded information on Dourson's advisory role at EPA on Tuesday.

MURKOWSKI'S MAJOR WINNING STREAK: Less than three months after they reportedly threatened her policy priorities over her refusal to back Obamacare repeal, the Trump administration is seemingly giving Murkowski everything she could want, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. Interior is moving ahead with efforts to help reverse the long decline in Alaska's energy production, mulling new drilling permits off the Alaskan coast, taking the first steps toward opening ANWR to oil exploration and edging toward building a road through the federally protected Izembek wilderness, among other longtime Murkowski priorities now within reach. "She holds the purse strings and occupies key positions on committees for the Interior department, so it's a smart move to keep her happy," said Kate Kelly, a former senior adviser to former Interior secretary Sally Jewell.

Murkowski said the administration isn't trying to sway her: "I think in fairness the administration is working on issues that are important and they care about. And these are matters that we've been talking about with them since they came into office, so this is about priorities that they have laid down, and we agree."

NO MORE CARROT, TIME FOR STICK: House Oversight ranking member Elijah Cummings asked Chairman Trey Gowdy in a Tuesday letter to subpoena Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder for documents related to the Flint water crisis, in particular when he learned about cases involving Legionnaire's disease. "Governor Snyder has been obstructing our investigation for months, and it is now clear that the only way he will turn over the documents we asked for is if he is compelled to do so," Cummings wrote. If Gowdy doesn't want to issue the subpoena himself, Cummings asked the committee to vote on one at its next meeting.

WHAT'S HAPPENING ON THE HOUSE FLOOR? Lawmakers today take up legislation H.R. 469 \(115\) that would limit the ability of the government to enter into so-called "sue and settle" agreements by requiring settlements to be posted online and opened to additional intervenors. The U.S. Chamber issued a "key vote" letter ahead of the vote. It comes after the chamber cleared legislation H.R. 732 \(115\) on Tuesday that would restrict the government's ability to enter into settlement agreements that fund third-party activities by a vote of 238 to 183.

DISASTER AID CLEARED: The Senate sent a second installment of disaster relief funding to Trump's desk Tuesday, signing off on $36.5 billion to respond to wildfires and hurricanes, including $16 billion to pay off some of the national flood insurance program's debt so that it can make good on claims. It follows $15.3 billion that Congress approved in September. The money comes with no changes to the troubled flood insurance program and with no new restrictions on how communities rebuild as they face rising risks from extreme weather exacerbated by climate change. Trump administration disaster response officials have said they don't want to finance risky projects and will consider new flood standards, according to the Washington Post, although they've yet to unveil them.

CAN WE TALK? Members of the Sustainable Energy and Environment Coalition sent a letter to House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady requesting a meeting to discuss potential sustainable energy and environmental policies for inclusion in the emerging tax reform package.

BERNHARDT TO SPEAK AT HEARTLAND-SPONSORED CONFERENCE: The number two official at Interior, David Bernhardt, plans to deliver the keynote closing address at the Heartland Institute's American First Energy Conference in Houston next month, the organization announced Tuesday.

CUOMO'S ENERGY CZAR BASHES PERRY'S PITCH: Richard Kauffman, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's top energy adviser, warned that Energy Secretary Rick Perry's push to bolster coal and nuclear power plants might force the state to keep its two remaining coal plants open and hamper its ability to hit its ambitious climate goals, POLITICO New York's Marie J. French reports.

FUNNY COINCIDENCE! Boy, Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds sure has gleaned a ton of face time with the Trump administration lately. She met with Pruitt on Tuesday, one week after the administrator sent a letter outlining a number of victories for the Midwest on the Renewable Fuel standard. Pruitt then tweeted a picture from a roundtable session with the National Association of Home Builders clearly showing his still-unconfirmed enforcement chief Susan Bodine pictured right to his left.

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gyQXsp> **

CARBON TAX MEETS BUDGET: Connecticut Democrat Rep. John Larson plans to introduce a carbon tax amendment when the Ways and Means Committee begins debating tax reform, he told E&E News. Larson acknowledged the measure will likely go nowhere in the Republican-controlled Congress, but argued it could help pay for an expensive infrastructure package President Donald Trump wants to pass. Larson's office expects a markup on the Republican tax plan the week after lawmakers finalize a federal budget.

COMMERCE MARINE MONUMENT REPORT DUE TODAY: Today is Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross's deadline to send the White House his recommendations on 11 national marine monuments and sanctuaries created or expanded by presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama. But don't expect to see the report anytime soon as Commerce is expected to take a page from Zinke's playbook and send the document over without releasing it. Trump directed Ross to analyze the costs of maintaining the massive monuments and sanctuaries located in the Great Lakes and far offshore of California, New England states, Hawaii and Pacific remote islands — and to estimate any lost energy development opportunities. Zinke's leaked report to the White House earlier this year recommended opening up three of the monuments to commercial fishing.

GREENS ASK COURT TO RESTORE HIGHER CAFE PENALTIES: Five states and several environmental groups separately asked a federal court in New York on Tuesday to restore higher civil penalties for CAFE violators, with the green groups calling the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's delay of the higher penalties "without statutory authority and in blatant disregard of the Administrative Procedure Act." Both coalitions asked the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals for fast action so as not to "reward" NHTSA for an illegal action. "Automakers are deciding, now, whether to comply with fuel-economy standards based on the applicable penalty: delaying the long-overdue penalty increase will thus lead to less efficient vehicles and greater emissions of harmful air pollutants," they wrote. "Meanwhile, the only countervailing purpose for the delay is to make it easier for automakers to evade the standards." The rule boosted the fines, which had not been indexed to inflation, from $5.50 per tenth of a mile per gallon to $14 starting with model year 2019 vehicles.

MORE SAGE GROUSE MEETINGS ANNOUNCED: BLM announced more regional public meetings on the changes it could make to its plans for protecting greater sage grouse habitat in Western states. The BLM Montana/Dakotas office will hold a meeting on Nov. 8 and BLM's Wyoming office will host sessions on Nov. 6 and 8. The agency has already announced meetings in Colorado, California and Oregon. The agency created the plans in 2015 under an agreement with states in lieu of listing the bird as either endangered or threatened under the Endangered Species Act but re-opened them at Zinke's bidding.

REPORT: GETTING HOTTER IN HERE: Nearly 210 million Americans live in counties where they face health threats from extreme summer heat events, according to an NRDC analysis. Huge cities, including New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston, may experience six times as many dangerously hot summer days by 2100 as they did between 1975 and 2000 on average.

HELPED WANTED? It appears the director position at the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy is still vacant, according to the response Morning Tech recently received to a FOIA request. "OSTP ... was unable to locate any records responsive to this request," the office noted when asked if there was a status update about whether the director's role had been filled (h/t Morning Tech).

TAKE A GLANCE! The Environmental Council of the States unveiled a new website Tuesday enabling users to look at individual state environmental protection efforts. There are 15 states currently participating in the site with more expected to follow.

QUICK HITS

— The 'sweet spots' fueling the US shale oil boom 'will not last forever,' Saudi Aramco CEO says. CNBC.

— Developers Plan Wind Farms Off Jersey as Christie Era Ends. Bloomberg.

— U.S. considers higher entry fees at 17 popular national parks. Chicago Tribune.

— Coal-export terminal backer sues state over permit denial. AP.

— Robert Redford: Scott Pruitt Is 'Hell-Bent' On Dismantling EPA Rules. Time.

HAPPENING TODAY

8:30 a.m. — "Briefing Ahead of COP23 - What's at Stake in Bonn?" RSVP:
roadtobonn@cop23.com.fj

10:00 a.m. — "Empowering State Based Management Solutions for Greater Sage Grouse Recovery," House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1324

10:00 a.m. — Senate Environment and Public Works Committee holds a business meeting and hearing on "The Wildfire Prevention and Mitigation Act of 2017," Dirksen 406

2:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on American Indian lands bill, House Natural Resources Indian, Insular, and Alaska Native Affairs Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gyQXsp> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/concerns-mount-over-mysterious-whitefish-energy-contract-025211>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Zinke funneled millions to questionable PACs Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Nick Juliano | 10/24/2017 05:04 AM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has directed millions of dollars in political contributions since 2014 to a network of Washington operatives that prominent conservatives have accused of profiting by misleading donors.

Beneficiaries of Zinke's largesse include groups linked to Washington-area political operative Scott B. Mackenzie, organizer of a Virgin Islands GOP political action committee that hosted the secretary at a St. Croix fundraiser in March. Before that, when Zinke was a Republican congressman from Montana, his political operation steered significant portions of its spending to a handful of Washington, D.C.-area consulting firms that also have had ties to Mackenzie and his associates.

Zinke has continued this relationship even as other Republicans have recoiled from dealing with Mackenzie, whose critics say he operates "scam PACs" that raise small-dollar donations from conservative voters but then spend the bulk of the money on consultants and overhead. The critics include former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who filed a suit accusing Mackenzie and other defendants of running a "national fundraising scam" after they gave his 2013 campaign for governor less than a half percent of the money they had raised in his name.

Similarly, Zinke's own leadership PAC also relied heavily on small donors while spending heavily on consultants, in a departure from how most members of Congress operate those kinds of groups.

The details about Zinke's fundraising and spending practices have not been previously reported, nor has his years-long relationship with Mackenzie's Virgin Islands Republican Party, a group that some Republicans in the Caribbean island chain have accused of misrepresenting itself to donors. POLITICO's analysis of Federal Election Commission filings, plus interviews with campaign finance lawyers and people familiar with the Virgin Islands group's fundraising, offer a deeper picture of the political activism of the retired Navy SEAL who serves in President Donald Trump's Cabinet.

None of the records indicate that Zinke violated the law or received any direct compensation from his association with Mackenzie, the Virgin Islands PAC or its consultants. But one campaign finance expert said the information shows that Zinke was not behaving like a typical politician.

"To say the least, this is highly unusual," said Karl Sandstrom, a former Democratic FEC commissioner who now works at the law firm Perkins Coie.

An Interior Department spokeswoman declined to comment on the assistance Zinke has offered to the Virgin Islands group or his use of political consultants. Mackenzie declined to be interviewed, and officials from the Virgin Islands organization — also known as VIGOP — did not respond to requests for comment.

Zinke is separately facing investigations by Interior's internal watchdog and the independent Office of Special Counsel over his habit of mixing politics and official business.

Legal limits on Zinke's partisan activities have tightened now that he's Interior secretary, and he has cut ties with his PACs since being sworn in. Still, he has kept up appearances at fundraisers and other political events — averaging more than one per month — a pace that is unusual for a Cabinet member. Those include his appearance at the March fundraiser in the Virgin Islands, which occurred during a taxpayer-funded trip less than a month after he became secretary.

Complaints among Republicans about "scam PACS" have been on the rise for years, focusing on groups that target conservative voters as a source for donations. Those complaints have repeatedly focused on Mackenzie, the founder of a number of GOP-leaning PACs that have used slogans such as "Stop Hillary Clinton" to raise money from conservatives — then appeared to do little actual politicking.

Such groups make use of what past FEC leaders have described as a loophole in campaign finance law. The commission declined to take action against one of Mackenzie's Virginia-based PACs, the Conservative StrikeForce, after former Rep. Allen West (R-Fla.) complained in 2012 that it had been "fraudulent" in raising money from his supporters while falsely implying it would aid his reelection campaign. While the PAC's actions were "troubling," the commission's attorneys wrote, they didn't violate any laws or rules that the FEC has the power to enforce.

Cuccinelli made similar criticisms in his 2014 lawsuit, which accused Mackenzie, Conservative StrikeForce and other defendants of using the bulk of the money they had raised in his name to "enrich themselves." The case was eventually settled, with Conservative StrikeForce agreeing to pay Cuccinelli's campaign $85,000 and turn over its donor lists.

Conservative commentator Erick Erickson warned campaigns as far back as 2010 that he might not endorse any Republican candidate who used one Mackenzie-linked consulting firm, then known as Base Connect and now called ForthRight Strategy. Montana Democrats accused Zinke of facilitating a "political Ponzi scheme" with his connections to Mackenzie-linked firms during his 2014 congressional campaign, though the charges apparently gained little traction.

More recently, Rep. Will Hurd (R-Texas) — who was angered last year when the Virgin Islands GOP used his photo without his permission on fundraising solicitations — said in a statement to POLITICO that the Virgin Islands group and ForthRight "are preying on seniors in a disgusting attempt to enrich themselves."

Adav Noti, a former FEC associate general counsel who now works for the nonprofit watchdog Campaign Legal Center, said in an interview that he had dealt with the Virgin Islands group and Mackenzie as an FEC official, and that in his opinion, "They are a scam PAC."

"Scott Mackenzie has a number of scam PACs," Noti said. "He was probably the first, or one of the first, with the idea of bilking people out of money through PACs. People are being defrauded, and that needs to stop."

The FEC is scheduled to decide Thursday whether to fine Mackenzie for less-serious discrepancies in campaign filings by two other PACs of which he's the treasurer, Freedom's Defense Fund and the Conservative Majority Fund.

None of the criticism has seemed to deter Zinke, who used part of a government-paid trip to the Virgin Islands in March to attend a VIGOP fundraiser, where — as POLITICO reported in early October — an invitation listed tickets costing as much as $5,000 a couple, and Zinke's schedule indicated that high-dollar donors had a chance to take photos with him. It was at least the third VIGOP event Zinke had attended there since 2015.

VIGOP, which the FEC classifies as a "non-party" PAC, directed more than a third of its spending during the 2016 election cycle to a handful of Washington-area consulting firms, including ForthRight and at least three other companies that share its address on 15th Street Northwest, according to campaign filings and other documents. Those firms also received more than $3.2 million during the same period from Zinke's congressional campaign, leadership PAC and a super PAC he founded before running for Congress, federal campaign records show.

Between the 2014 and 2016 elections, Base Connect had renamed itself ForthRight Strategy after a former executive pleaded guilty to child pornography charges. A number of the firm's clients left, but Zinke's campaign and his newly formed leadership PAC not only stayed with the firm but also spent substantially more on it in the next election.

Zinke also publicly endorsed ForthRight's performance in his 2014 congressional race, offering a testimonial that was displayed on the firm's website until this month, when the watchdog group Campaign for Accountability filed an ethics complaint.

"Your results and personal commitment to Team Zinke were bar none!" the company quoted Zinke as saying on its website. "I greatly value the professional as well as the personal relationship we have developed over many years."

This praise came even though Zinke's campaign appears to have received less than it spent from its relationship with the firm.

ForthRight says it raised $1.9 million for Zinke's 2014 race by sending out 1.6 million pieces of mail, attracting nearly 44,000 new donors whose average contribution was $44. About $550,000 of that haul went to Zinke's campaign for "voter mail, radio ads, TV ads, get-out-the-vote activities and lawn signs," according to the firm's website. But that was less than the $608,000 that Zinke's campaign spent on postage and direct mail from Century Data Mailing Service, a firm located at the same 15th Street address as ForthRight, according to FEC records.

In the run-up to last year's election, Zinke's campaign and his leadership PAC, known as SEAL PAC, spent about $3 million combined on ForthRight Strategy, Direct Support Services and Legacy Lists — all of which operate out of the same office and list ForthRight CEO Kimberly Bellissimo among their executives. (Bellissimo did not respond to POLITICO's requests for comment.)

Special Operations for America, a super PAC that Zinke founded in 2012 before running for office, also paid firms at that address a total of about $1.8 million during the 2014 and 2016 campaign cycles.

Mackenzie is not listed on ForthRight's website or business filings but was long associated with the firm under its previous names, Base Connect and BMW Direct, both of which listed him as a staff member as far back as 2007.

Besides sharing an affinity for the same consultants as Mackenzie's VIGOP, Zinke's SEAL PAC has also followed a similar fundraising model: It raised two-thirds of its money from small donors in 2016, then steered only 4 percent of its spending to other campaigns, with almost all the rest going to operating expenses and overhead.

Typically, members of Congress use their leadership PACs to cover expenses that cannot be funded from their campaign accounts and to contribute to fellow politicians, using donations of up to $5,000 from lobbyists and other PACs. But SEAL PAC relied on donations of less than $200 for about two-thirds of the $3 million it collected during the 2016 cycle, according to a review of the donations. The group then spent more than $2.6 million on overhead and gave just $118,000 to other congressional campaign committees.

Relying heavily on small-dollar donations is one hallmark of the "scam PAC" play, said Brett

Kappel, a partner at the law firm Akerman LLP who specializes in campaign finance, lobbying and government ethics.

"Unfortunately, they generally target the most vulnerable segment of the population with the least disposable income — retired people living on fixed incomes," said Kappel, who declined to discuss specific cases. "Frequently, these are elderly conservative voters who are upset with the direction of the country."

Lorraine Hutchinson, of Butler, Pennsylvania, told POLITICO that these elderly voters included her mother, who she noticed was repeatedly contributing to SEAL PAC and other organizations, though she didn't have the disposable income to spare. Hutchinson said Zinke's PAC was one of the slowest to cease soliciting money when she asked them to stop. At one point, Hutchinson resorted to posting a plea on SEAL PAC's Facebook page.

"It took a great deal of time and effort but I managed to get most of them to stop. The Seal PAC was one of the most persistent," Hutchinson told POLITICO in a Facebook message last week. "I am convinced that these groups knowingly take advantage of the vulnerable elderly and this is a widespread problem without any easy solutions."

Erickson told POLITICO in 2015 that groups that raise political donations without doing much actual politicking are "completely a drain" on the conservative movement, saying they threatened to sap the donors' enthusiasm while achieving no concrete results.

But Bellissimo, the ForthRight CEO, defended direct-mail fundraising in a 2014 post for The Daily Caller.

Donors who send checks in response to mail solicitations "are some of the most patriotic, conservative, generous, and sophisticated people on the planet. ... They are also 'movement' people," Bellissimo wrote. "They are willing to sacrifice their dollars on a principled conservative even when they know that candidate is an underdog."

Mackenzie has similarly defended his high operating costs, telling the FEC in response to West's complaint that "fundraising is expensive and getting more so every year."

Bellissimo's firm has played a crucial role in partnering with Mackenzie's Virgin Islands PAC: Several months before Mackenzie filed the VIGOP's initial paperwork with the FEC in December 2013, Virgin Islands Republican Party Chairman John Canegata signed a contract with Base Connect Vice President Timothy Webster making the firm the exclusive fundraiser for the PAC, according to a copy of the confidential document reviewed by POLITICO.

Some Republicans in the Virgin Islands objected to the use of their name in fundraising mailers urging voters to "Stop Hillary Clinton," and Canegata's involvement with Mackenzie has exacerbated divisions within the local party's governing body.

The anti-Clinton pieces, "at best, solicit donations under false pretenses," four members of the Virgin Islands Republican Territorial Committee wrote in a February 2015 internal report, a copy of which was obtained by POLITICO. The members reported that "not a single penny of the funds received through these solicitations have been used for any purpose identifiable to any effort to oppose the election of Hillary Clinton as president."

Bellissimo introduced Zinke to VIGOP in 2015, his first year in Congress, a source familiar with VIGOP's operations told POLITICO. Zinke, his wife, Lola, and Bellissimo flew to St. Thomas to attend a VIGOP event in November of that year. Photos of the VIGOP members posted on Facebook show Zinke and Bellissimo mingling at the Caribbean venue alongside Canegata and Saul Anuzis, a Michigan-based GOP operative who helped raise money for VIGOP. Neither Anuzis nor Canegata responded to requests for comment.

In February 2016, Bellissimo posted a photo of Zinke speaking at the Hay-Adams hotel across from the White House and bragged that she had "the privilege of playing staffer for Congressman Zinke this afternoon." When a friend commented on the Facebook post, saying the then-House freshman should run for president, she replied: "Maybe someday.... Will you help me campaign for him?"

Zinke returned for another VIGOP event at the Ritz-Carlton in St. Thomas less than two weeks after the 2016 election, according to social media posts. Then came his appearance at the VIGOP fundraiser this past March — this time as a member of Trump's Cabinet.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke separately briefs Democrats, Republicans on national security matter Back

By Anthony Adragna and Nick Juliano | 10/24/2017 03:25 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke delivered a pair of secret briefings Tuesday to members of the House Natural Resources Committee, a session Democrats said was confusing and unusual.

Zinke met separately with Republicans and Democrats from the committee in a secure room in the basement of the Capitol typically reserved to discuss classified information. The topic of discussion was a "national security matter," and lawmakers declined to say much more than that.

"Suffice to say that they related to international resource issues," Rep. Jim Costa (D-Calif.) told POLITICO after the briefing.

"This was a confusing meeting — certainly interesting and important issues — but I can't tell you a damn thing [about it] because it was all wrapped around the veneer of confidentiality," Rep. Jared Huffman (D-Calif.) said. "It's a check-the-box exercise to say, 'I met with the Democrats.'"

Lawmakers offered few details as they emerged from Zinke's separate sessions with Democrats and Republicans on the House Natural Resources Committee. Ranking Member Raul Grijalva (D-Ariz.) said it was the first Natural Resources meeting in a SCIF, or sensitive compartmented information facility, during his 14-year tenure in Congress.

Democrats who attended the session said Zinke's presentation and subsequent questions left little time for a host of other issues they hoped to raise with him, such as his review of national monument designations and ethical questions surrounding Zinke's associations with alleged "scam PACs," non-commercial travel and reorganization plans for the agency.

"He gave a brief statement about his travel and that was it," Costa said, declining to offer additional details.

Rep. Niki Tsongas (D-Mass.) said Zinke "tried to explain where the costs are coming from," but did not go into any detailed explanation about his participation in political fundraisers while on official trips or say whether Interior had been reimbursed for any of those costs. Tsongas would not elaborate further.

Zinke declined to answer questions from POLITICO as he entered the meeting about his political activity or travel. "It must be a slow news day," he quipped.

Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop (R-Utah) said the use of the SCIF was necessary for "parts of" what Zinke had to say, but he did not anticipate that lawmakers would have to receive additional classified briefings from the secretary. Bishop declined to describe the subject of the meeting.

Grijalva said Zinke's presentation concerned "something that could have been done in another setting" and said "it did keep us from talking about some very substantive stuff."

He add that whether Zinke intended to or not, "the substance of what we came here to talk about — and the majority of members that were there came to talk about — never got talked about."

The briefing comes as new ethics questions swirl about Zinke's activities.

POLITICO reported Tuesday the former Montana congressman has directed millions of dollars to questionable groups that raise small-dollar donations from conservative voters but then spend the bulk of the money on consultants and overhead. And a little-known energy company, Whitefish Energy, that is based in Zinke's hometown recently won a \$300 million contract to help restore Puerto Rico's power grid despite being just two years old.

Those latest controversies come on the heels of the agency's inspector general looking into Zinke's use of taxpayer-funded charter planes and concerns about his participation in fundraising or other political events while on official travel. But Democrats said there wasn't enough time to dive into those topics.

"We didn't talk about much that was not directly related" to the national security topic, Rep. Donald McEachin (D-Va.) said.

Some Democrats said the secure setting was unnecessary.

"We were playing national security games in a [secure room] with the secretary of Interior at a time when we should be asking hard questions about why climate scientists are being reassigned to desk jobs, about why our public lands are being given away," Huffman said afterward. "The swamp is getting worse and worse in this administration. We should have been talking about it, and we were playing war games."

To view online click here.

Back

Democrats want details on Dourson's advisory post at EPA Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/24/2017 02:58 PM EDT

Senate Environment and Public Works Committee Democrats want EPA nominee Michael Dourson to explain his role as an adviser to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt while he awaits confirmation to become head of the Office of Chemical Safety and Pollution Prevention.

The agency confirmed last week that Dourson is serving as a special adviser on chemicals ahead of his official confirmation.

"Your appointment creates the appearance, and perhaps the effect, of circumventing the Senate's constitutional advice and consent responsibility for the position to which you have been nominated," the 10 lawmakers, led by Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.), wrote in a letter to Dourson. "Your improper involvement in EPA decisions could provide grounds for subjects of EPA regulations and oversight to challenge the legal validity of those decisions in court."

They asked Dourson to describe his duties, his relationship with the career official serving as acting head of the OCSPP and whether any of that official's duties have been delegated to Dourson.

The letter also asked several questions on certain chemical and legal issues Dourson declined to answer ahead of his confirmation. "We expect that you have familiarized yourself with these issues and can be more forthright in answering the questions we previously asked," it said.

Whitehouse last month sent a similar letter to Susan Bodine, who started as a special adviser to Pruitt on enforcement ahead of her confirmation to run the Office of Enforcement and Compliance Assurance. A spokesman did not say whether his office had received a response.

WHAT'S NEXT: Dourson's nomination will receive a committee vote alongside other nominees on Wednesday. It is unclear when he will receive a floor vote.

To view online click here.

Back

Murkowski draws energy policy wins despite health care stance Back

By Esther Whieldon | 10/24/2017 05:00 PM EDT

It's been three months since the Trump administration first threatened reprisals against Alaska if Sen. Lisa Murkowski didn't get in line on repealing Obamacare.

Instead, it's giving her seemingly everything she could want.

The Interior Department is considering issuing new permits to drill off the Alaskan coast, taking the first steps toward opening the long off-limits Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil exploration, and edging toward building a road through the federally protected Izembek wilderness, a project long championed by Murkowski.

That's all despite the late July phone call from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to the chairwoman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee to warn her that her opposition to the measure killing Obamacare could endanger federal projects in the state — a threat that quickly leaked to the media. And though she never backed the repeal, the administration has remained solidly behind her priorities.

"The Trump team appears to be learning that the tasty carrot is a better way of moving a senator than a poorly wielded stick," said Paul Bledsoe, who worked as a Clinton White House energy aide and is now a lecturer at American University.

Zinke's Interior Department is moving ahead with efforts to help reverse the long decline in Alaska's energy production, a priority for Murkowski, since the oil industry still provides about one-third of the state's jobs.

And President Donald Trump and Zinke have continued to put Alaskans into prominent administration posts, including nominating Tara Sweeney as assistant secretary of Indian Affairs. Sweeney, who was an executive for a corporation of indigenous groups that own millions of acres of oil-rich land, is the wife of Murkowski's former state director, Kevin Sweeney.

Zinke's late July calls to Murkowski and Sen. Dan Sullivan (R-Alaska) allegedly threatening to pull support from their energy and land priorities prompted lawmakers to seek a GAO probe, although a separate inquiry by Interior's inspector general ended in August after the two Alaska senators declined to discuss the incident with investigators.

For her part, Murkowski responded to Zinke by delaying her panel's consideration of several Interior and DOE nominees — though she advanced those nominations a few days later after sitting down with Zinke for a beer.

Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift in an emailed statement did not deny that the administration is trying to win Murkowski's support, and she noted Zinke "works with a number of Senators on both sides of the aisle to advance shared priorities" on such things as restoration of the Everglades in Florida and expanding access to the Sabinoso Wilderness in New Mexico.

The support for many of Murkowski's priorities after the dustup doesn't appear to be a coincidence, according to Kate Kelly, a former senior adviser to former Interior secretary Sally Jewell.

"These decisions don't happen in a vacuum," said Kelly, who is now at the Center for American Progress. In addition to heading the committee that oversees much of the Interior's activities, Murkowski also chairs the subcommittee that controls its appropriations.

"She holds the purse strings and occupies key positions on committees for the Interior department, so it's a smart move to keep her happy," Kelly said.

Murkowski maintained that the administration is not trying to sway her.

"Absolutely not," she told POLITICO in a brief interview. "I think in fairness the administration is working on issues that are important and they care about. And these are matters that we've been talking about with them since they came into office, so this is about priorities that they have laid down, and we agree."

Bledsoe agreed that Murkowski and the Trump administrations share many of the same priorities in boosting energy development on public lands and removing Obama administration restrictions. But he said he saw Interior's actions as an acknowledgment that "they need her every bit as much as she needs them. As the near-misses on their big legislative items have accumulated, the White House is recognizing that they're not immune from old-fashioned politics."

After years of stonewalling by the Obama administration, Murkowski appears to be close to winning Interior's permission for a 12-mile road through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge to link the isolated city of King Cove to an all-weather airport. Documents obtained through a public records request by Defenders of Wildlife show the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is pursuing a land exchange for the road. The records, first reported by The Washington Post, include emails among staff that say the push for the exchange is coming from Zinke's office.

On the oil front, the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is expecting to release a draft five-year offshore oil and gas leasing plan by the end of the year to allow drilling in parts of Alaska's Chukchi and Beaufort seas, which former President Barack Obama had closed off last year.

And Zinke is quietly working on an environmental review that would allow oil companies to perform seismic testing in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, according to an Aug. 11 memorandum from the FWS Alaska region acting Director James Kurth. The House is slated to vote Thursday to formally back the Senate's budget resolution passed last week that included language that would give Murkowski a path forward for opening ANWR up to drilling.

In August, BLM issued a call for nominations for new oil and gas leases in Alaska's National Petroleum Reserve, an area near ANWR that has long been home to oil production. BLM also published an order in the Federal Register on Tuesday lifting a ban on mining on 700 acres near Fairbanks that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration had set aside as a buffer around an array of weather satellite receivers. The land sits next to an open-pit gold mine owned by Kinross, which has conducted exploratory drilling in the area.

The Interior actions may not be designed to win Murkowski support for any specific Trump policies, said Pat Pourchot, who served as Interior's special assistant for Alaskan affairs under former secretary Jewell, but fostering a good relationship may pay dividends down the road.

"It doesn't matter if it's an exact quid pro quo or not, but it can't hurt to try to have good relationship with people in other branches of government or other branches of congress that might help you on your priorities," Pourchot said.

To view online click here.

Back

POLITICO New York: Energy czar says federal proposal to subsidize coal, nukes threatens state's climate goals Back

By Marie J. French | 10/24/2017 05:29 PM EDT

ALBANY — Gov. Andrew Cuomo's top energy official said Tuesday that the federal government's proposed rule to subsidize coal and nuclear power plants could force New York to keep its last two coal plants open and threatens the state's climate goals.

Richard Kauffman called the proposed federal rule that would guarantee returns for generators that keep a 90-day fuel supply on hand a "shot across the bow" for New York's ambitious renewable energy and climate goals. The proposed rule being considered by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission would upend competitive electricity markets and has drawn criticism from a range of industry actors. It's backed by the Trump administration and has drawn support from coal states and the nuclear industry.

"I find it ironic that this administration talks about states' rights until it's something they don't want, in which case there's federal pre-emption," Kauffman said during a talk at the Rockefeller Institute in Albany. "This is an example where states should be permitted to do what we want to do. ... We will absolutely not cede a single bit of our prerogative but ... I'm concerned there are a number of potential routes the federal government could take to get in the way of our policy."

The stated rationale of the federal government's proposal is concern about grid reliability and resilience in the face of declining fuel diversity. Kauffman said after his discussion that he's sympathetic to the spirit behind the proposal because of the lack of value placed on fuel diversity.

"We can be heading to a single source [with natural gas]. ... Natural gas prices in the past have been historically volatile, we don't have a price on carbon in wholesale markets, there's not a wholesale market value for resiliency services," Kauffman said. "We certainly understand the need for a whole variety of market reforms at FERC."

New York has addressed the effect of historically low natural gas prices on nuclear plants, crafting a subsidy based on the environmental benefits of the state's upstate nuclear power plants after they threatened to close. State policymakers and the New York Independent System Operator are also evaluating the possibility of placing a price on carbon in the electric sector in a way that supports the state's policy goals.

Kauffman said it would ultimately be preferable to have a federal price on carbon rather than for states to go it alone.

This story first appeared on POLITICO New York on Oct. 24, 2017.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Dourson nomination imperiled as more Republicans undecided — Keystone spill reported days before key decision — Last day of Bonn climate talks
Date: Friday, November 17, 2017 6:03:17 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 11/17/2017 05:50 AM EDT

With help from Sara Stefanini

DOURSON'S IN DEEP TROUBLE: It's not looking good for President Donald Trump's nominee to run EPA chemicals office with at least five more Republicans not ready to back Michael Dourson on Thursday, Pro's Nick Juliano and your ME host report. Republican Sens. Jeff Flake, Bob Corker, John McCain and Pat Toomey were all publicly noncommittal about Dourson's nomination with Sen. Susan Collins going further to say she was "leaning against" supporting the former industry-funded toxicologist. Remember just one more defection sinks Dourson after Republican North Carolina Sens. Thom Tillis and Richard Burr said they wouldn't vote to confirm him.

Toomey's concerns: "Sen. Toomey remains concerned about the PFOA issue in Bucks County and Montgomery County and remains dedicated to addressing it," a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Republican said, naming two Philadelphia-area counties where toxic firefighting chemicals leached into the ground from two closed naval bases.

Leadership doesn't seem too optimistic about Dourson at this point. "We'll have to see whether it's a viable nomination, and with two against him obviously that doesn't leave us a lot of room," Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn told us. "We haven't made a decisions on that yet, but we'll be revisiting it."

But it may not matter: Dourson is currently at the agency as a senior adviser to Administrator Scott Pruitt and none of the Republicans we spoke to seemed anxious to kick him out, even if he lacked support to be confirmed. "I'll leave that up to the EPA to decide," Tillis said. Even Sen. Joe Manchin, who opposes confirmation despite supporting several other Trump nominees, said he was not asking Dourson to leave his current post. But other Democrats, who have criticized the arrangement from the start, want Dourson out of the agency ASAP: "He is a lightning rod that we don't need and I would hope that we don't have to deal with him at EPA," Sen. Ben Cardin told ME.

Why his selection matters: Dourson, whose prior clients include Dow Chemical, Koch Industries and Chevron, has frequently recommended standards many factors less protective than public health and EPA research suggested. And in the early 2000s, Dourson helped West Virginia set drinking water guidance limits for PFOA at 150 parts per billion. That was 150 times less protective than manufacturer DuPont's own internal standard of 1 part per billion and more than 2,000 times less protective than EPA's recommendation of 70 parts per trillion.

KEYSTONE SPRINGS A LEAK: Days before Nebraska regulators decide whether to approve its expansion through their state, the original Keystone pipeline spilled 210,000 gallons of heavy Canadian oil in South Dakota Thursday, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. Pipeline operator TransCanada said it shut down the line around 7 a.m. after discovery of the leak in Marshall County and alerted the Pipeline and Hazardous Material Safety Administration. The leak was on original section of the Keystone pipeline system, opened in 2010, that runs from Alberta east through Canada and then down through South Dakota until Steele City, Neb. The Nebraska Public Service Commission will decide Monday whether to approve the route of Keystone XL — an expansion of the original system that takes a shorter path from Alberta to Steele City.

Environmentalists seized on the incident: "These pipelines are bound to spill, and they put communities, precious drinking water, and our climate at risk," Greenpeace's Rachel Rye Butler said in a statement. "The Nebraska Public Service Commission needs to take a close look at this spill." And 350.org Executive Director May Boeve said: "This is exactly the kind of disaster we can expect more of if Keystone XL is approved."

WE MADE IT TO FRIDAY EVERYBODY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Andeavor's Stephen Brown first to identify former Rep. Joe Kolter as the other congressman caught up in the post office scandal. For today: Just two Supreme Court justices have ever graced American currency (both out of circulation). Who were they? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

ICYMI: Interior's inspector general said Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke hasn't properly documented his travel as secretary, leaving it unable to determine whether he violated government rules or improperly mixed partisan political activity with official business, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt said the Obama administration's "organizational and operational mess" was to blame for the lack on documentation.

New for Pros! The Pro app brings real-time policy intelligence and customizable notifications to your smartphone and tablet. Download the Pro app for iPhone and iPad | Get the Pro app on Google Play

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yQ8q7z> **

BONN TRAVAIL: Today's the last day of the climate summit in Bonn, Germany, and most of the high-level activities seem to have already wrapped. Look for final high-level speeches this morning and the closing session in the afternoon. Fingers crossed, everything will be wrapped and settled around midday U.S. time.

One awkward thing: Germany's continued dependence on coal has been a sore spot for this year's summit host. And with difficult coalition talks underway to form a government, Barbara Hendricks, the German environment minister, was caught in a difficult spot when asked about the new anti-coal alliance. "We were asked, whether we want to participate. I have asked for understanding, that we cannot decide this ahead of the next government. The initiative, however, will keep us up to speed about what's happening," she said in an emailed statement.

WHERE IN THE WORLD IS SCOTT PRUITT? Today the EPA administrator delivers remarks at the Federalist Society's 2017 National Lawyers Convention at 11:15 a.m. Link to the schedule here.

Attractions yet to come: Nearly a year after his confirmation, Pruitt makes his first return visit to Senate EPW on Jan. 31, 2018, your ME hosts reports. Ranking member Tom Carper said the visit is "long overdue" but adds he's "glad that a date has finally been set." He'll also testify before the House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee on Dec. 7.

On Thursday, he met with Washington state Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers at agency headquarters. Picture here.

WHAT THEY'RE SAYING: Here's what various energy groups are saying about House passage of its tax package H.R. 1 \(115\) Thursday afternoon.

— Edison Electric Institute President Tom Kuhn is decidedly on board: "The single most important action we can do to grow our economy and to create jobs is to pass comprehensive tax reform this year, and this is a giant step forward in getting comprehensive tax reform across the finish line."

— Malcolm Woolf, Senior Vice President of Policy for Advanced Energy Economy, has mixed feelings about the bill: "While we are encouraged that the House is reducing the corporate tax rate and finally providing equal treatment for technologies like fuel cells, combined heat and power, geothermal, and advanced nuclear, today's vote also completely undermines market certainty for the wind, solar and electric vehicle businesses."

— API's Jack Gerard likes what he sees: "By including pro-growth proposals like lowering the corporate tax rate and strong cost-recovery provisions, this legislation will help unleash economic growth and allow our industry to continue providing safe, reliable energy for Americans."

— The National Enhanced Oil Recovery Initiative, a coalition of coal, oil, labor and environmental groups, hopes a tax extenders package expected to be considered in the Senate Finance Committee has space for extending a CCS credit: "Carbon capture legislation has unprecedented bipartisan, bicameral support and deserves congressional action."

The Senate Finance Committee cleared its own version of the tax overhaul late Thursday 14 to 12, Pro Tax's Brian Faler reports.

CONFIRMED: Before the Thanksgiving jet fumes got them, the Senate confirmed Brenda Burman to run the Bureau of Reclamation by voice vote, your ME host reports. "FINALLY! Excited to finally have Brenda Burman confirmed to lead @usbr," Zinke tweeted in response.

NUDGING PEOPLE ON APPROPRIATIONS: The Senate Appropriations Committee plans to unveil its chairman's mark for the Interior and Environment fiscal 2018 spending bill next week, along with three other outstanding packages, Pro Budget & Appropriations Brief's Sarah Ferris reports. They won't be marked up but will allow staff level work on funding to trudge along, as Appropriations Chairman Thad Cochran ruled out any short-term spending bill that extends past New Year's Eve.

Speaking of which, three sources tell POLITICO's John Bresnahan, Seung Min Kim and Sarah Ferris the White House will ask today for $44 billion to help storm-ravaged communities in Texas, Puerto Rico and Florida.

NEW WRINKLE TO TEST! The North American Electric Reliability Corp.'s recent two-day test of energy companies and government agencies' response to simulated cyber and physical attacks featured for the first time "fake news" on social media to gauge how participants react, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. "I think that term has become part of our lexicon now and so there's an awareness as to is what we're seeing completely accurate or is it designed to fool us?" Marcus Sachs, senior vice president and chief security officer at NERC, said. "Is it potentially a threat actor making something up and trying to psychologically push people in a wrong direction?" More than 6,000 people from the power, oil and gas sectors as well various federal agencies participated in this year's event.

ABOUT THAT PUERTO RICAN OUTAGE: Whitefish Energy said a Wednesday power outage in Puerto Rico had nothing to do with the company's efforts on the island. A since-updated Mashable article linked to in Thursday's ME suggested the outage might have been related to its repair work. "The outage in PREPA Rico on Wednesday, just like the one last week, has absolutely nothing to do with the work performed by Whitefish Energy on the 50100 transmission line," a spokesman said in a statement. "That line was turned over to PREPA several weeks ago and our crews are no longer in the area as they are working elsewhere on the island." The island's utility blamed the outage on a "technical failure."

MOVING FORWARD: Virginia took the next step toward joining Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative on Thursday as the commonwealth's Air Pollution Control Board released a plan for public comment that proposes to cap carbon dioxide emissions from power generation in Virginia at 33 million tons or 34 million tons in 2020, with 3 percent annual reduction through 2030, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. Public comments are expected to last at least 60 days once the plan formally appears in the Virginia Register.

HAMMING IT UP: Billionaire Continental Resources chief and Trump supporter Harold Hamm told an Energy Information Administration webinar Thursday its forecasts had overstated oil production this year by 200,000 barrels a day, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. Hamm said the estimates were hurting his business. "We believe the EIA must be responsive to changing dynamics and do it on a timely basis," Hamm said. "Shareholders are demanding return on investment. Hopefully we will give the EIA data a more realistic stamp."

SIERRA CLUB HITS BACK ON GRID PUSH: Responding to FERC Chairman Neil Chatterjee's comments about an "interim" grid proposal, the Sierra Club launched targeted ads on Facebook, YouTube, Twitter, and Google Display in 11 states opposing Energy Secretary Rick Perry's grid resiliency push. Watch here.

MAIL CALL! ROUND OF APPLAUSE TO YOU: House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop, as well as the committee's subcommittee chiefs, sent a letter to Trump voicing support for reorganizing Interior. "Any thoughtful DOI reorganization should give serious consideration to relocating select agencies away from Washington," they wrote. "Simply put, federal employees should know and live around the people, lands, and economies they regulate."

CHANGE COURSE ON RFS CUTS: Eighteen House Democrats, led by Donald Milford Payne and Ruben Gallego, sent a letter to Pruitt urging him to preserve existing biofuels volume requirement mandates. They fear the proposed 2018 volumes "will curtail investment in innovation and have an adverse impact on our country. It will particularly affect communities of color and urban areas that already face air pollution issues and higher costs of living, especially in regard to gasoline prices."

DON'T DO IT: Colorado Sen. Michael Bennet sent a letter to Zinke opposing a proposal to raise National Park Service fees. Read it here.

MORE TIME PLEASE: More than two dozen House Democrats asked Zinke for a 45 day extension of the public comment period on Interior's plan to modify or rewrite sage grouse conservation plans. Link here.

GROUPS WANT GRID PUSH RECORDS: The Environmental Working Group and American Oversight filed a public records request Thursday seeking communications, emails and calendar entries for meetings between senior DOE officials and corporations including Peabody Energy and Murray Energy. It also requests any records related to lobbying groups such as the Edison Electric Institute, the Nuclear Energy Institute, and the American and National Coal Councils. Link here.

LIGHTER CLICK: Queen Elizabeth II visited a wind turbine blade factory on Thursday and the pics are about as awesome as you'd expect. Link here.

QUICK HITS

— Fossil Fuels' Fishy New Friends. Bloomberg Businessweek.

— Pope Francis denounces climate change deniers. AP.

— Northern Pass gets federal permit to bring energy across the Canadian border. Concord Monitor.

— As U.S. Debates Ending Electric Car Tax Credit, China Aims to Expand Sales. New York Times.

— Rising U.S. Oil Stocks Weigh on Prices. Wall Street Journal.

— Texas wind energy projects worth about $11 billion in limbo after U.S. House tax vote. Dallas Morning News.

HAPPENING TODAY

8:00 a.m. — U.S. Gas Infrastructure Exports Initiative Launch Event, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Hall of Flags, 1615 H Street NW

11:15 a.m. — EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt addresses The Federalist Society's National Lawyer Convention, 1127 Connecticut Avenue, NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yQ8q7z> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/11/dourson-nomination-imperiled-as-more-republicans-undecided-026442>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Dourson at risk of rejection as more Republicans lean no Back

By Nick Juliano and Anthony Adragna | 11/16/2017 05:55 PM EDT

President Donald Trump's nominee to a key chemical safety job at the EPA is at risk of rejection after Republican senators balked amid accusations that he is too eager to cover for companies peddling dangerous products.

North Carolina's two GOP senators have said they will vote against confirming Michael Dourson as an EPA assistant administrator, citing a record that included work on a chemical linked to cancer deaths near a Marine Corps base in their home state. And Maine Republican Susan Collins said Thursday that she is leaning no as well — a vote that would be enough to sink his nomination.

Democrats are optimistic about turning four additional Republicans who they believe should be in play based on contamination issues back home.

Republican leaders have not decided what to do about Dourson's nomination, Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn (R-Texas) said Thursday.

"We'll have to see whether it's a viable nomination, and with two against him obviously that doesn't leave us a lot of room," Cornyn told POLITICO. "We haven't made a decisions on that yet, but we'll be revisiting it."

Critics say Dourson, a former industry-funded toxicologist, regularly downplayed the risks of chemicals such as PFOA and trichloroethylene that are contaminating soil and water in communities across the country. Dourson has already begun working at EPA as a senior adviser to Administrator Scott Pruitt, an arrangement Democrats have condemned as improper.

"There are all these local contamination issues across the country that have been bubbling up recently or have been out there for years, and because Dourson is this hired gun ... he's almost by nature of his job been working on these really controversial chemicals," said Jack Pratt, chemicals campaign director for the Environmental Defense Fund, which opposes Dourson's nomination.

Republican North Carolina Sens. Thom Tillis and Richard Burr said Wednesday that they could not support Dourson because of his past work as a toxicologist who was frequently hired by industry to rebut public health concerns about chemicals. Collins said Thursday that she is "leaning against" confirming him.

A legislative aide said Democrats are eyeing Republican Sens. Jeff Flake of Arizona, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, Bob Corker of Tennessee and Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania, although Flake, Toomey and Corker told POLITICO they're still undecided.

"Sen. Toomey remains concerned about the PFOA issue in Bucks County and Montgomery County and remains dedicated to addressing it," a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Republican said, naming two Philadelphia-area counties where toxic firefighting chemicals leached into the ground from two closed naval bases. Toomey is reviewing the nomination "with these concerns in mind," but the spokesman did not say how he plans to vote.

However, even if the nomination is pulled or rejected, Dourson will still be able to influence

EPA's implementation of a major chemical safety law because he has already started working at the agency. Democrats have criticized that arrangement, though EPA says previous administrations allowed people to begin working there before being confirmed.

EPA's chemical safety office, which Dourson has been nominated to lead, has a heavy workload after Congress in 2016 passed a bipartisan law updating the Toxic Substances Control Act for the first time in nearly 40 years. The office has been charged with evaluating the safety of chemicals already in use and determining how to test new chemicals before they are allowed into the marketplace.

The near-universal support TSCA reform won in Congress last year may help explain the wariness among lawmakers about giving chemical industry allies too much of a foothold in EPA.

"They wanted to give the public some assurance that the products on their shelf are safe, and when you put the chemical industry in charge that's not going to happen," said Madeleine Foote, a legislative representative with the League of Conservation Voters.

Tillis and Burr stopped short of calling for Dourson to step down from his existing position at the agency. "I'll leave that up to the EPA to decide," Tillis told POLITICO.

Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.), who has supported several Trump nominees, said he would vote against Dourson but not object to him continuing to work at EPA.

Before joining EPA last month, Dourson was a professor at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine's Risk Science Center, and he founded the nonprofit Toxicology Excellence for Risk Assessment, which was often conducted industry-funded research. He also previously worked at EPA from 1980 to 1995. Past clients of Dourson and his research group have included Dow Chemical, Koch Industries and Chevron, according to the Associated Press.

Critics say Dourson's research routinely concluded that chemicals were safer in far higher concentrations than those recommended by agencies like EPA, putting communities at greater risk of finding toxic substances like perchlorate, TCE or PFOA in their air or drinking water.

Pratt said Dourson's work followed a pattern.

"Over and over again these chemical companies would hire him, he'd look at the research, and say the standard that EPA or whatever regulatory body has is too strict — it should be looser," Pratt said.

Dourson told the Environment and Public Works Committee at his confirmation hearing last month that he did not have a thumb on the scale.

"I can give you as many or more examples of situations where the science that we brought forward as a team actually lowered the safe dose or risk position for various sponsors," Dourson told Sen. Tom Carper (D-Del.) at the hearing. "If confirmed, I will rely on the guidance of EPA ethics officials."

Tillis and Burr said they could not support Dourson based on his record and North Carolina's history of chemical pollution problems, such drinking water at Camp Lejeune that was contaminated for decades by chemicals including trichloroethylene. TCE is one of the first 10 chemicals EPA must evaluate under the new safety law, but Dourson has previously endorsed health standards that are 1.5 to 15 times less protective than those backed by other researchers, according to EDF.

Retired Marine Corps Master Sgt. Jerry Ensminger, whose daughter died of leukemia linked to the contaminated water at Camp Lejeune, met with Tills and aides to Burr to urge their opposition, according to the Wilmington Star News.

Among his other industry-funded work, Dourson appeared before an EPA scientific advisory panel session concerning the pesticide chlorpyrifos on behalf of CropLife America. He led a 2008 paper on acrylamide, which can form during high-temperature cooking of some starchy foods, that received funding from major food companies like Burger King, Frito-Lay and McDonald's. And he studied 1-bromopropane, a solvent linked to some neurological and reproductive disorders, in 2004 with funding from Albemarle Corp. and Ameribrom Inc.

In all cases, he recommended standards many factors less protective than public health and EPA research suggested.

He also has done work for industry-friendly state governments. In the early 2000s, Dourson helped West Virginia set drinking water guidance limits for PFOA, also known as perfluorooctanoic acid or C8, at 150 parts per billion. That was 150 times less protective than manufacturer DuPont's own internal standard of 1 part per billion and more than 2,000 times less protective than EPA's recommendation of 70 parts per trillion.

During his confirmation hearing, Dourson argued that the research had evolved significantly since his recommendation to West Virginia, saying that "the science has progressed, significantly advanced since the time of 2004 and the new science indicates a lower level." And he defended the integrity of his work overall.

"Throughout my career — with EPA, TERA and now with the University of Cincinnati — I have been objective in my work and applied sound science to come to my conclusions," Dourson said.

To view online click here.

Back

Collins 'leaning against' Dourson for EPA chemicals role Back

By Anthony Adragna | 11/16/2017 12:35 PM EDT

Sen. Susan Collins told reporters today she's "leaning against" backing Michael Dourson's nomination to run EPA's chemicals office, which would leave him without adequate support for confirmation in the closely divided chamber.

"I have a lot of concerns about Mr. Dourson, but I've not yet made a final decision," she said.

North Carolina Republican Sens. Richard Burr and Thom Tillis both came out in opposition on Wednesday to Dourson, who is currently working as an adviser at the agency. Both declined to say if he should leave that role today.

Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) also said today he had not decided whether to support the nomination.

To view online click here.

Back

Keystone pipeline spills 210,000 gallons of oil in South Dakota Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/16/2017 05:02 PM EDT

The Keystone pipeline spilled 210,000 gallons of heavy Canadian oil in South Dakota, pipeline operator TransCanada said in a statement today.

TransCanada shut down the pipeline around 7 a.m. ET after discovering the leak in Marshall County, the company said. Crews isolated the spill and called in emergency responders, the company said. TransCanada also alerted the Pipeline and Hazardous Material Safety Administration of the spill.

The spill comes less than a week before a local regulatory commission in Nebraska is scheduled to rule whether to approve the route through the state where TransCanada wants to build Keystone XL, an expansion of the original Keystone line.

TransCanada said it has received enough interest from shippers to green-light Keystone XL project if it gets the go-ahead from the Nebraska Public Service Commission.

To view online click here.

Back

Watchdog slams Zinke for failing to document travel Back

By Eric Wolff | 11/16/2017 04:16 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke failed to properly document his travel, the agency's watchdog said Thursday, preventing it from determining whether he had violated government rules.

Zinke has come under scrutiny for mixing taxpayer-funded travel with political activities, as well as taking military or private planes rather than flying commercial, and the investigation by Interior's Office of Inspector General seeks to clarify whether all procedures were correctly followed.

"Our investigation is delayed by absent or incomplete documentation for several pertinent trips and a review process that failed to include proper documentation and accountability," Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall said in a letter obtained by POLITICO and first reported by The Washington Post.

Zinke's travels have drawn scrutiny after Interior revealed he had taken non-commercial flights at taxpayer expense, POLITICO and other news outlets have reported. POLITICO has also reported that the former congressman from Montana has mixed taxpayer-paid trips with political work, such as when he participated in a fundraiser on behalf of the Virgin Islands GOP.

The IG criticized Zinke for failing to complete documentation for his travel in the fiscal year that ended on Sept. 30, and said that the process established by Interior's Ethics Office and Office of the Solicitor "does not include sufficient documentation of the legal and ethical analysis conducted to distinguish between personal, political, and official travel, or consistent cost analysis to justify use of non-commercial travel."

The IG asked for documentation of all of Zinke's travel, as well as for the documentation of travel by his wife, Lola Zinke, with documentation for how and when the travel was paid.

Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt, the agency's second-ranking official, blamed the lack on documentation on the Obama administration for leaving behind "an organizational and operational mess."

In his response letter, Bernhardt emphasized that Interior employees would continue to cooperate with the IG, and said he would provide documentation as requested.

But he also went on to note that former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell hadn't completed her documentation for 12 trips taken last year and in January of this year, and he said some trips may have never been entered in the system.

"When I arrived at the Department in August 2017 it was clear to me that the Secretary and I had inherited an organizational and operational mess," he wrote. "From my perspective, regarding IOS travel procedures, it appears that the exact same procedures and processes utilized by the previous Administration remain in place and continue to be dysfunctional."

Zinke joins a cast of Trump administration officials, including Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and now-departed Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price, who are accused of misuse of taxpayer funds for travel.

Esther Whieldon contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

New anti-coal push in Bonn pits nations against U.S. Back

By Emily Holden | 11/16/2017 03:08 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — Canada and the U.K. on Thursday launched an anti-coal alliance at the global climate summit here, a direct challenge to the Trump administration's bid to promote new high-efficiency coal-fired power plants.

Canadian Environment Minister Catherine McKenna and Claire Perry, the U.K. minister for climate change, formally launched the 27-member group whose declaration said it will seek to close down existing coal plants and "impose a moratorium on any new traditional coal power stations without operational carbon capture and storage."

"Coal is literally choking our cities, with close to a million people dying every year from coal pollution," McKenna said.

Almost 40 percent of global electricity comes from coal, and while McKenna acknowledged that phasing it out would not be easy, she said it was crucial to achieve climate goals and protect public health.

Other members include France and Italy, which both aim to phase out coal in the next decade, and Finland, Mexico and New Zealand. Two U.S. states — Washington and Oregon — will also join. Both have already announced plans to shutter their coal plants. While the group's members consume only a small fraction of the global coal supply, they aim to form a powerful political partnership.

McKenna said despite the U.S. effort to support coal, the economic case for the fuel was fading.

"There are cheaper, more sustainable sources of power, in particular clean power, renewables," she said. "The economics dictate it, but we need to be supporting countries that want to make the move. We've said that there are developing countries [where] there might be a price differential. We want to be helping to support them. This is the huge opportunity."

Officials from the White House have used the annual climate change conference to tout "cleaner" fossil fuels, including at a controversial event on Monday that drew protesters. But the head of the American negotiating team delivered a speech to the assembled nations that carefully steered clear of coal.

Judy Garber, an acting assistant secretary at the State Department, at the COP23 high-level session said the U.S. still intends to withdraw from the 2015 Paris deal and is open to rejoining later under "more favorable" terms. The U.S. team has said it was not planning to discuss those terms at the Bonn meeting.

Garber noted "dramatic decreases in the cost of low-emissions technologies and fuels, including natural gas, solar, wind, energy storage and energy efficiency," but also referenced work with China and India capturing carbon emissions from coal.

"We know that each country will need to determine the appropriate energy mix based on its particular circumstances, taking into account the need for energy security, promotion of economic growth and environmental protection," she said. "In that context, we want to support the cleanest, most efficient power generation, regardless of source."

Not all developed countries are on board with the new anti-coal pitch, including Germany, where Chancellor Angela Merkel is still struggling to form a new government.

"We were asked whether we want to participate. I have asked for understanding, that we cannot decide this ahead of the next government," said Barbara Hendricks, the German environment minister. "The initiative, however, will keep us up to speed about what's happening."

Kalina Oroschakoff contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt to testify before EPW in late January 2018 Back

By Anthony Adragna | 11/16/2017 03:55 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt will appear before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee on Jan. 31, 2018, making his first return to the panel nearly a year after his confirmation, the panel announced today.

"It is important that EPA Administrator Pruitt testifies before the committee," Chairman John Barrasso said in a statement. "It will give senators the chance to hear about the important work being done at the agency."

Committee Democrats have already expressed outrage Pruitt hasn't returned since his confirmation in February so waiting more than two additional months likely won't mollify that the anger.

"Mr. Pruitt's appearance before our committee, which oversees the agency he leads, is long overdue," Ranking member Tom Carper said in a statement. "While I think it is unacceptable that members of this committee will have to wait over a year to hear directly from Administrator Pruitt, I am glad that a date has finally been set, and I look forward to his testimony on January 31st."

WHAT'S NEXT: Pruitt will testify on Jan. 31.

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt to testify before House panel Dec. 7 Back

By Alex Guillén | 11/16/2017 12:00 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt will testify before the House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee on Dec. 7.

"We're looking forward to receiving a much-needed update from Mr. Pruitt on his priorities for the agency, including his stated policy of getting EPA 'back to the basics' and its impact on the agency's activity going forward," E&C Chairman Greg Walden and Subcommittee Chairman John Shimkus said in a joint statement. "Following EPA's controversial and expansive interpretation of its authorities during the past administration, it is past time for EPA to refocus on pursuing its important public health and environmental missions as Congress originally intended."

The appearance will be Pruitt's first before the Energy and Commerce Committee. Democrats on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee are also seeking to have Pruitt testify soon, noting he has not appeared before that committee since his confirmation hearing on Jan. 18.

To view online click here.

Back

Senate Finance Committee approves GOP tax reform plan Back

By Brian Faler | 11/16/2017 10:37 PM EDT

The Senate's tax-writing committee this evening approved Republicans' sweeping plan to overhaul the tax code.

The Finance Committee voted along party lines, 14-12, to forward the proposal on to the full Senate. Approval came after four days of sometimes testy consideration, during which Republicans substantially revised the measure while voting down dozens of Democratic amendments.

Senate leaders aim to take up the bill — which would cut both business and individual taxes while killing Obamacare's individual mandate requiring health insurance — after Thanksgiving.

The Finance panel's vote came hours after the House approved its own competing tax plan. Lawmakers aim to get compromise legislation to President Donald Trump's desk by the end of the year.

To view online click here.

Back

Senate confirms Burman to lead Bureau of Reclamation Back

By Anthony Adragna | 11/16/2017 06:11 PM EDT

The Senate cleared Brenda Burman's nomination to run the Bureau of Reclamation by voice vote on Thursday.

"FINALLY! Excited to finally have Brenda Burman confirmed to lead @usbr," Secretary Ryan Zinke tweeted in response.

Burman's nomination to lead the nation's wholesale water and hydroelectric power provider got caught up in the battle over Zinke's national monument designation review.

Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin placed a hold on her nomination until he landed a meeting with Zinke to discuss the review and lifted it after that meeting took place earlier this week.

WHAT'S NEXT: Burman will assume her position running the Bureau of Reclamation.

To view online click here.

Back

Senate appropriators to release details on four spending bills Back

By Sarah Ferris | 11/16/2017 03:46 PM EDT

The Senate Appropriations Committee plans to unveil its remaining four spending bills next week as it ratchets up pressure on congressional leaders to strike a budget deal.

The committee will release a so-called chairman's mark for each of the fiscal 2018 bills — Defense, Financial Services, Homeland Security and Interior and Environment — early next week. The bills will not be marked up in full committee, according to a GOP aide.

The Senate will not be in session, but the bills will be released to allow staff-level work during the holidays, the aide said. After the Thanksgiving break, Congress will have just days left until government funding expires.

Appropriations Chairman Thad Cochran announced the plans in a rare statement directed at congressional leadership this afternoon, warning about the fast-approaching Dec. 8 deadline.

"We need a new budget deal to finish our work. Congress and the administration must reach agreement on acceptable top-line funding levels," Cochran wrote. "I urge all parties to those negotiations to redouble their efforts to reach agreement."

In a break with some House conservatives, Cochran (R-Miss.), ruled out any short-term spending bill that extends past New Year's Eve.

Cochran, who also chairs the Defense subcommittee, urged House and Senate leaders to reach an accord that would lift the budget cap for the Pentagon. Without a deal, Cochran said he would be "hard-pressed" to write a bill that "fully meets our national security needs or reflects the priorities of the Senate."

To view online click here.

Back

White House seeks at least $44B in third disaster request Back

By John Bresnahan, Seung Min Kim and Sarah Ferris | 11/16/2017 06:57 PM EDT

The White House will ask Congress on Friday to approve at least $44 billion to help storm-ravaged communities in Texas, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Florida, according to three sources privy to the request.

It would mark the third aid installment in three months. Congress has already approved $52 billion in response to the spate of hurricanes that killed 260 people and caused hundreds of billions of dollars in damage.

The latest request falls short of what local officials had sought for their recovery, though the White House is expected to send additional aid proposals in the coming months. Texas had asked for $61 billion for reconstruction, and Puerto Rico has sought $96 billion.

Both the House and Senate are expected to take up the request next month, possibly as part of a year-end spending deal. The request comes as lawmakers leave town for a weeklong Thanksgiving break.

To view online click here.

Back

Grid attack simulation exercise includes 'fake news' scenario Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/16/2017 05:10 PM EDT

A two-day exercise to test energy companies and government agencies' response to simulated cyber and physical attacks on the electric grid has added a new wrinkle: using "fake news" on social media to gauge how participants react.

The North American Electric Reliability Corp. holds its so-called GridEx simulations every two years, and this year's event drew about 6,000 people from the power, oil and gas sectors as well as from FERC, NERC, DOD, DHS, DOE and other national agencies.

This year's exercise included simulations similar to the malware attacks made on Ukrainian energy and transport companies earlier this year. And it also included a social media component in which GridEx administrators put out news stories, and allowed utilities to post their own accounts on social media.

"We had some reaction from members questioning whether what they're seeing is accurate, and using the words 'Is this fake news?'," said Marcus Sachs, senior vice president and chief security officer at NERC. "I think that term has become part of our lexicon now and so there's an awareness as to is what we're seeing completely accurate or is it designed to fool us? Is it potentially a threat actor making something up and trying to psychologically push people in a wrong direction?"

The 2015 exercise led companies and agencies to improve their response to natural disasters and create a cyber mutual assistance program, said Kevin Wailes, co-chairman of the electricity subsector coordinating council and CEO of the Lincoln Electric System.

WHAT'S NEXT: NERC expects to publish a report on lessons learned from GridEx IV in March.

To view online click here.

Back

Virginia advances proposal to join RGGI Back

By Darius Dixon | 11/16/2017 04:57 PM EDT

Virginia's Air Pollution Control Board today decided to officially move ahead with a proposal for the state to join the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative.

The plan, which will now go out for public comment before it's finalized, proposes to cap carbon dioxide emissions from power generation in Virginia at 33 million tons or 34 million tons in 2020, with 3 percent annual reduction through 2030.

Outgoing Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe announced the decision to join the multi-state program earlier this week at the climate summit in Bonn, Germany. In a statement today backing the board's decision, McAuliffe made a dig at President Donald Trump.

"Virginia is uniquely vulnerable to the threat of climate change and many of our residents are already experiencing its impacts. ... I am proud that Virginia is joining states around the nation that are filling the void of leadership that President Trump has left on transforming the energy sector and protecting our environment," he said.

New Jersey, which exited the pact under Republican Gov. Chris Christie, is also set to rejoin RGGI.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Air Pollution Control Board is expected to take public comments for at least 60 days once it's announced in the Virginia Register.

To view online click here.

Back

Hamm tells EIA its high oil forecasts are hurting his business Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/16/2017 04:57 PM EDT

Continental Resources chief and Trump supporter Harold Hamm told an Energy Information Administration webinar on Thursday that the agency was overestimating U.S. crude output and hurting his business.

The presentation by Hamm, who is largely credited with sparking the oil rush in North Dakota, is the latest sign of the policy influence that energy executives have in the Trump administration. Like coal magnate Bob Murray and refinery owner Carl Icahn, billionaire Hamm has regularly had Trump's ear.

"When it comes to public policy and politics and being at that table, it appears they now have a seat they didn't necessarily have before," said Jon Haubert, an energy consultant and founder and managing partner of HB Legacy Media.

During his approximately 15-minute presentation, Hamm said he had given input to the EIA since 2012 in his role as head of the Domestic Energy Producers Alliance, a trade group he co-founded and represents 29 companies. He said that the EIA forecasts had overstated oil production this year by 200,000 barrels a day, a discrepancy he complained was hurting this business with investors. Continental's share price is down about 10 percent from a year ago, but had fallen as much as 40 percent during the summer.

"We believe the EIA must be responsive to changing dynamics and do it on a timely basis," Hamm said. "Shareholders are demanding return on investment. Hopefully we will give the EIA data a more realistic stamp."

EIA has estimated the U.S. oil production will average 9.2 million barrels a day in 2017. Hamm's Continental Resources and other oil companies have suffered from low oil prices, which have been under pressure from high crude inventories and the growth in U.S. production in recent years. A lower estimate from EIA could help lift oil prices and boost oil company profits.

Hamm met with Energy Secretary Rick Perry in September to argue that the EIA was overestimating U.S. oil output for the next few years. The former wildcatter also appeared onstage with Trump at an event in Mandan, N.D. earlier that month.

Matt Lee-Ashley, senior fellow at the liberal Center for American Progress, said he believed backing from Trump helped Hamm get a spot in the EIA meeting.

"Harold Hamm has been very clear that he has a financial interest in the EIA's forecasts and he has put political pressure on the EIA to change their forecasts," he said. "This not only hurts the EIA's all-important reputation of being independent, but it raises questions about whether the Trump administration is letting Hamm influence the government's crude oil forecasts for his personal financial benefit."

An EIA spokesman did not reply to questions as to how Hamm came to join the panel. A spokeswoman for Continental Energy and the DEPA declined to answer specific questions, only saying "DEPA has been providing insight to the EIA for years."

Market analysts were less worried that Hamm's participation in the webinar would mar the EIA's reputation for independence.

"Dialogue with industry players should not, in and of itself, create concerns about the reliability of the EIA's data and forecasts," said Pavel Molchanov, a Raymond James energy analyst.

To view online click here.

Back

FERC chief urges critics to 'move past' DOE's proposal Back

By Darius Dixon | 11/16/2017 01:30 PM EDT

FERC Chairman Neil Chatterjee said Thursday that the agency was developing its own approach to support grid resilience rather than working from the proposal submitted by Energy

Secretary Rick Perry.

Chatterjee told reporters after FERC's monthly meeting that the issue of supporting baseload coal-fired and nuclear power plants had caused a "hyperbolic reaction" because many people did not understand the agency's process.

"I think part of the problem is that people are still debating the [notice of proposed rulemaking] as it was submitted to us [by the Energy Department]," he said. "What I'm trying to say is we've moved past that and we're moving toward a constructive solution that still answers the questions that Secretary Perry asked in the NOPR in a way that does not distort markets and is legally defensible."

Chatterjee said his effort to implement an "interim" proposal to prop up economically struggling generators in power markets is still being ironed out, but it may direct grid operators to identify what plants are needed for "resilience."

"Once it's fully fleshed out and I feel that it's a defensible product, I want to be able to present that to my colleagues so they can review it," he said, noting that he would ensure that his fellow commissioners would have sufficient time to review it.

In an interview with Utility Dive on Wednesday, Chatterjee said he was considering an order to require regional grid operators to provide "interim compensation" for power plants that contribute to grid resilience and are at risk of closing before FERC can finish a formal rulemaking, or that those grid operators "show cause that [they] not be required to do so."

Chatterjee said Thursday that "on-site, secure, firm fuel that does not depend on just-in-time delivery," as among the characteristics of power plants that contribute to grid resilience.

The interim FERC chief said that he didn't see any threat to the renewable industry or to natural gas from his plan.

"I genuinely believe that this will not have a negative impact on gas. I believe deeply in natural gas and its value. ... I don't want to do anything to hurt the gas industry," he said.

Chatterjee said that he's pushing an interim proposal to preserve certain power plants because "in the short term, I just want to make sure that the patient doesn't die while we do the longer-term analysis."

However, he didn't envision that his plan — which doesn't appear to have broad support among the FERC leadership yet — would have a mechanism to compensate consumers for paying plants that ultimately turn out not to have been necessary in any long term review.

"As we look through this, we will try and make this as minimally disruptive — we'll try to keep the costs down — to consumers as possible," Chatterjee said, adding that "consumers have paid for things that have a lot less value to the grid than long term resilience and security."

He added: "Thinking about the consequences if we got this wrong, it's a pretty reasonable ask."

Kevin McIntyre, President Donald Trump's pick to lead FERC, is expected to be sworn in in the next few days.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Energy amendments ready for House debate — Little new energy talk from Trump in North Dakota — EPA preps as Hurricane Irma hits Caribbean
Date: Thursday, September 07, 2017 5:53:09 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 09/07/2017 05:45 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff, Ben Lefebvre and Darius Dixon

TEED UP, READY TO GO: House Rules Committee lawmakers readied 80 EPA and Interior amendments for floor consideration as the chamber moves through its mammoth, 1,300-page spending package H.R. 3354 \(115\) starting today. Here are six worth watching as debate moves along:

1. An amendment from senior Natural Resources Committee Democrats restoring funding to EPA's environmental justice program by taking funds from the Interior secretary's office,
2. An effort by New York Republican Rep. John Katko to restore $250 million in Clean Water State Revolving Funds, an infrastructure program that usually enjoys broad bipartisan support,
3. A push by Rep. Gary Palmer to eliminate funding for the Diesel Emissions Reduction Act, which helps convert diesel engines to more efficient ones. Several dozen groups sent a letter to House members opposing the move.
4. A bipartisan amendment from Republican Frank LoBiondo and Democrat Don Beyer to block offshore drilling in a host of Atlantic sites,
5. An amendment from Rep. Scott Perry blocking EPA from issuing any regulations under Section 115 of the Clean Air Act, feared by some conservatives as a hidden weapon to mandate carbon regulations,
6. A Republican amendment that would bar federal agencies from using funds to cover legal fees associated with Clean Air Act, Clean Water Act and Endangered Species Act settlements.

Other Democratic amendments expected to fail would block President Donald Trump's administration from delaying ozone standards, being able to unilaterally withdraw the Waters of the U.S. rule and preparing a new five-year offshore oil and gas leasing plan.

A full list of amendments is available here.

NOT MUCH ENERGY CHATTER IN MANDAN: Trump's tax talk at Andeavor's refinery in Mandan, N.D., yielded little fresh energy news on Wednesday. Addressing a crowd at the plant that had expanded in 2012 to take in more Bakken crude, Trump warned of a tax code that caused businesses to be "regulated out of existence." Continental Resources CEO and Trump pal Harold Hamm made a brief cameo in sunglasses to say: "You find oil in North Dakota! And the Bakken!"

Trump freestyled on energy regulations and pipelines: "The Dakota Access Pipeline is finally open for business. Now, what other politician, if elected President, would have done that one? They would have stayed so far away. And I did it immediately, and I didn't even do it in that case for jobs. It was the right thing to do. And that is flowing now beautifully." ME would note that any of the other 2016 GOP presidential candidates would have approved the pipeline if elected.

Memorable: Trump, who tried a softer touch to get centrist Sen. Heidi Heitkamp on board with tax reform that he used on Missouri Sen. Claire McCaskill, may have inadvertently written the Democrat's first reelection ad by calling her on stage and proclaiming her a "good woman." Heitkamp tweeted an (awkward) selfie with refinery workers, while potential challenger Rep. Kevin Cramer posted a selfie with Trump.

WELCOME TO THURSDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and NEI's Robert Powers was first up to identify Alaska as our least densely populated state. For today: In what state was the first ATM in the U.S. installed (back in 1969)? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to adragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

** A message from Chevron: Advanced technology is helping us find safer ways to deliver energy. We're piloting a program that uses drones to monitor tanks and pipelines. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2grzhhE> **

U.S. TERRITORY BRACES FOR IRMA: There are already reports of massive damage from the massive Category 5 Hurricane Irma across the Caribbean, but Puerto Rico's electric company warned Wednesday the storm with 185 miles an hour winds could leave the island without power for four to six months, the Miami Herald reports. Meanwhile, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt approved an emergency fuel waiver for Florida and the agency said it was securing 22 current or former Superfund sites in the 100 southernmost miles of the state.

In an all-staff email, Pruitt thanked employees for their response efforts to Hurricane Harvey in Texas and said the agency had already begun preparations for Irma's landfall. "While Harvey caused extreme flooding, our biggest health and environmental concerns in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands are potential oil spills and the potential impacts of power disruptions on drinking and waste water systems," he wrote. The agency is working with regions 2 and 4 to secure Superfund sites and drinking and waste water systems to prevent spills. And the Miami Herald looks at what two Florida nuclear plants are doing to get ready.

NEW ENERGY BUYERS GROUP FORMS: A collection of corporate giants — Microsoft, Walmart, Amazon, Salesforce, Lockheed Martin and Aligned Energy, among them — is today launching the Advanced Energy Buyers Group. The new entity, coordinated by Advanced Energy Economy, will push to expand the market for purchasing renewable and other advanced energy sources as large companies seek to hit their sustainability targets. "We've made good progress, but more work needs to be done to advance policies that make it easier and cheaper for more companies, schools, hospitals and families to buy clean energy," Rob Bernard, chief environmental strategist at Microsoft, said in a statement.

ENERGY INDUSTRY HITS BACK AT EXXON STUDY: Energy in Depth argues in a Wednesday post that a Harvard study asserting that Exxon Mobil misled the public on climate change left out many of the company's public advertorials on the subject, an oversight that would have "severely weakened" the study's conclusions. They say some of the pieces included in the research came mainly from Mobil before it merged with Exxon, meaning the study "largely compared the climate research of one company with the advertorials of a different company." Neither author responded to requests for comment.

WILDFIRE FUNDING MAY HITCH A RIDE: Lawmakers are poised pass an initial injection of relief funding for Hurricane Harvey, but senior Republicans want a second bill to also address the dozens of wildfires throughout the West. "There will be more disaster relief coming up obviously and I would suspect that wildfire will be part of that," Rep. Mike Simpson, a senior appropriator, told reporters. "There are other things than just hurricanes and right now they're burning in the west." House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop said he could go along with that approach, but still hoped to pursue broader reforms to how the federal government responds to wildfires.

RUMOR QUASHED: Any idea that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke might mount a 2018 challenge to Democratic Sen. Jon Tester seemed to die Wednesday when his wife, Lola, signed on as campaign chair for Tester challenger Troy Downing. "I first met Troy on a fishing trip and his kindness, intelligence, youthful enthusiasm, business experience and amazing military history made me think that one day he must serve his state and country again," she said. "And right now is the perfect time."

NOMINEE TRAIN KEEPS ON ROLLING: The Senate will take a big step for FERC today when the Energy and Natural Resources Committee runs Trump's latest picks for the agency through the ringer — but don't expect all too much pulse-pounding excitement. Kevin McIntyre, Trump's FERC chairman-in-waiting, is likely to get peppered by Democrats about his long list of energy industry clients during his long stretch with Jones Day, and commitments to maintain FERC's independence. On the other hand, Rich Glick, general counsel for ENR Democrats, is generally well-liked on both sides of the aisle. But the reason FERC nominees, and members of other federal commissions, from different parties tend to move together is so everyone has something to gain and good reason to hold their fire. By all accounts, McIntyre and his record are boring — which will work in his favor. But much like earlier FERC nomination hearings, expect questions about the growth of renewables, the survival of coal and the threats of climate change.

Two Interior noms up too: Joseph Balash, Sen. Dan Sullivan's chief-of-staff and a deputy commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, gets his hearing on his bid to become Interior's assistant secretary for land and mineral management. And Ryan Nelson, general counsel for Idaho-based Melaleuca, an online "wellness shopping club" since 2009, gets his day in the hot seat as he vies to become Interior's solicitor. Take a look at his newly-obtained ethics and financial documents.

If you go: The hearing is slated to begin at 10:30 a.m. in Dirksen 366.

SVINICKI SAYS SUMMER SHUTDOWN HIT 35 AT NRC: Plans to scuttle the Summer nuclear project may cause about 35 NRC employees to find other jobs at the agency, NRC Chairwoman Kristine Svinicki said Wednesday. "Summer was in the neighborhood of 35 agency-wide positions impacted," she said at an agency all-hands meeting, amid a years' long effort to resize the NRC's staffing and mission as the nuclear industry declines. But, Svinicki said, in spite of the heartache for those employees, it doesn't represent a major shift for an agency with more than 3,200 employees. "The project has been canceled so efforts are ongoing to look at positions where those same skill sets of those individuals might align," she said.

Svinicki: DOE didn't ask us to help on grid study: An NRC staff meeting is its own kind of jargonfest, and one staffer took issue with nuclear-related language in DOE's recent grid study that seemed to confuse regulators. Among its recommendations, the study urged the NRC to revisit "nuclear safety rules under a risk-based approach," without giving the term much context. "I'm not certain if they recognized the distinction between risk-informed and risk-based," Svinicki said. The NRC leans more heavily on "risk-informed" regulation, which factors in safety elements that aren't purely calculations of issues that could lead to accidents. The NRC reached out to DOE to help with the report, Svinicki said, but "to my knowledge, they appreciated that but did not take us up on it. I think it's fair to say that the language DOE used was developed by them without really any kind of reaction from NRC or any of our experts."

DOE ELECTRICITY GROUP SHRUNK: Energy Secretary Rick Perry has decided to reduce the size of the Energy Department's Electricity Advisory Committee from 32 to 24 people, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. But he's decided to install six new members even as he reduces the board's overall size. The electricity advisory committee will meet next Wednesday and Thursday in Arlington, Va.

MURKOWSKI LOOKING AT GRANTS ISSUE: Sen. Lisa Murkowski, who oversees the Appropriations subcommittee in charge of EPA funding, told reporters she's looking into reports the agency halted all grants to Alaska for several weeks in the aftermath of her vote against the GOP healthcare bill. "I want to know, is this really so? Cause, if so, that's kind of upsetting," she said. An agency spokeswoman pushed back on the reports, telling TPM "a state was never was singled out in the grant review process; grants were never withheld."

STEEL GROUP BACKS SUNIVA SOLAR TRADE PETITION: The Steel Manufacturers Association, representing 30 North American producers, is backing a bid from Suniva and SolarWorld Americas to have the ITC impose steep tariffs on imported solar cells and modules. "The steel industry fought back in 2001 and was awarded temporary relief that gave the industry the chance to recover," Philip Bell, president of the group, wrote in a letter. "The American solar industry deserves a similar chance."

NEW MEXICANS PUSH ZINKE ON LAND LEASING: Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich, as well as Rep. Ben Ray Lujan, asked Zinke to uphold a previous commitment to defer all leases on land near Chaco Culture National Historical Park as the federal government mulls how to manage the area. "We further appreciate your recent public support for the BLM and BIA's cooperative approach, and respectfully request that you maintain the status quo and defer leasing" until the process is completed, they wrote in a letter.

SCALING ON UP: The World Resources Institute, in a report out today, urges cities to accelerate the shift to cleaner cooking, work to scale up distributed renewable energy sources and prioritize expanding energy efficiency of buildings and appliances as they push to expand energy access amid rapid growth.

AN ELECTRON STORED IS AN ELECTRON EARNED: Utility customers installed a record number of behind-the-meter batteries and other power storage systems in the second quarter of 2017, GTM Research and the U.S. Energy Storage Association say in a report out this morning. Behind-the-meter systems are typically smaller than big utility-scale systems, and are usually installed by residential or commercial customers. The numbers are still tiny, as only 32 megawatt hours of capacity were installed, led by California, Hawaii and New York, all of which have incentive programs.

CONTOURING THE EVER-ELUSIVE CARBON TAX: The R St. Institute is out with a new paper this morning looking at how to structure a border-adjusted carbon tax "to deal with imports from and exports to other nations that do not have an equivalent carbon price."

MOVER, SHAKER: Elbert Lin has left his post as solicitor general for West Virginia to go to Hunton & Williams. Lin made his name when he helped persuade the U.S. Supreme Court to put a stay on the Clean Power Plan. Lin will be joined at Hunton by Virginia Solicitor General Stuart Raphael.

Dave Hoppe, Speaker Paul Ryan's chief of staff until January, has joined 38 North Solutions as a senior principal. The group advises groups primarily in the energy and tech sectors. "His vast experience in public policy and political strategy complements our team's expertise in clean energy and technology innovation," Katherine Hamilton, the firm's chair, said in a statement.

BROMIGOS? After "horsing around" during an earlier visit to New Mexico, Heinrich tweeted a picture of him getting back at Zinke with a headlock Wednesday.

QUICK HITS

— Federal Utility: Coal Ash Removal Would Take 24 Years. AP.

— Oil Companies Leaking Benzene Lobbied Against Pollution Rules. International Business Times.

— Hurricanes Irma, Harvey restart debate on climate change and warmer oceans. Miami Herald.

— Putin Rejects Cutting Off Oil to North Korea. New York Times.

— Large chunk of U.S. chemical production struggling to come back online after Harvey. Houston Chronicle.

— Harvey Swept Hazardous Mercury Ashore. The Mystery: Its Source. New York Times.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:00 a.m. — "NAFTA and North American Energy: What Comes Next?" Atlantic Council, 1030 15th ST NW, 12th Floor

10:00 a.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing on three nominations, Dirksen 366

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: Advanced technology is helping us find better and safer ways to deliver energy to America. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping capabilities to monitor Chevron wells, tanks, and miles of pipeline. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2grzhHE> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/09/little-new-energy-talk-from->

trump-in-north-dakota-024474

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump tries softer touch to woo Heitkamp on tax reform Back

By Matthew Nussbaum and Elana Schor | 09/06/2017 05:21 PM EDT

President Donald Trump has already tried negotiation-by-threat in his push for tax reform - but on Wednesday he took a softer touch to woo North Dakota Democratic Sen. Heidi Heitkamp to his side.

Trump invited Heitkamp to join him on Air Force One before a joint appearance in her home base of Mandan to tout his signature legislative goal.

The president is leaning on Democratic senators from states he won in 2016 to support his effort for tax reform in hopes of avoiding the narrow defeat suffered by his health care reform proposal in August.

He used a trip last week to Missouri to take a direct shot at its politically vulnerable Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill, telling his audience at a factory that "you have to vote her out of office" if she doesn't support tax reform.

He did make remarks Wednesday targeting Democrats broadly. "If Democrats don't want to bring back your jobs, cut your taxes, raise your pay and help America win, voters should deliver a clear message," Trump said. "Do your job to deliver for America or find a new job. Do something else. Just do something else."

But he welcomed Heitkamp warmly, declaring her a "good woman."

"Everyone's saying what is she doing up here?" Trump said, gesturing to Heitkamp as she walked on stage. "I'll tell you what. We'll have your support. I hope we have your support."

Later, he added: "You listening, Heidi? She's listening. She heard that. We're not going to put her on the spot. I'm not doing it."

Trump carried North Dakota by 36 points in November. But while Heitkamp has voiced a willingness to support tax reform in the past, it's unclear just how much incentive there will be to cross party lines and hand a win to a president whose approval ratings are mired below 40 percent.

Congressional Republicans plan to pass a tax bill using the filibuster-proof maneuver known as budget reconciliation, signaling to senior Democrats that the GOP will likely pursue cuts for corporate and wealthy taxpayers that are deeply unpopular with their liberal base. Given that initially partisan tone of the tax debate, Democrats are preparing for few if any defections on a bill that may not come to a vote until next year.

Heitkamp, however, is one of the three Democratic senators who declined to sign onto a letter last month committing most of the caucus to opposing any tax bill that cuts bills for wealthy earners. That makes her a ripe target for Trump, who briefly considered appointing the former state tax commissioner to his Cabinet earlier this year.

Heitkamp's looming reelection battle is another potent motivator as Trump courts her vote. One of her potential challengers next year, Rep. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.), also joined Trump on Air Force One for the Wednesday flight, as did North Dakota Republican Sen. John Hoeven.

The business community in North Dakota shares some of Trump's optimism that Heitkamp can be wooed on taxes.

"The one thing I know about Sen. Heitkamp is on that on many business issues she is fairly business friendly," said Andy Peterson, president and CEO of the Greater North Dakota Chamber of Commerce, who will be attending Wednesday's event. "On things like energy and taxes and things like that, she generally gets it and understands what it takes to make a business operate. ... She has been very friendly with our office on a lot of issues."

"She's not afraid to vote her conscience on something and then stand up and be accountable for why she voted that way," he added.

But Oregon Sen. Ron Wyden, the top Democrat on the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee, said he is "not concerned about" the caucus sticking together to support the stipulations that most of them committed to last month.

Wyden predicted "exceptional unity" around those conditions, including no tax cuts for the top 1 percent of earners and no bill that adds to the deficit, adding that he has talked taxes with Heitkamp "a number of times in recent weeks - she is arguably one of most knowledgeable people about taxes I've met in public life."

The handful of Democratic senators who didn't sign onto the taxes letter, including Heitkamp, "said they agreed with the overwhelming part of this," Wyden added.

A coalition of liberal groups known as Not One Penny, after their opposition to tax breaks for the wealthy, on Wednesday rolled out a five-figure ad buy targeting Heitkamp and Hoeven on the issue.

Sens. Joe Donnelly (D-Ind.) and Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.), who appeared with Vice President Mike Pence in his home state last week, joined Heitkamp in declining to sign the Senate Democratic statement on taxes.

Other red-state Democratic senators facing voters in 2018 appear less inclined to entertain a potential tax-cut plan that adds to the deficit as relief from Hurricane Harvey and other natural disasters takes a separate toll on the Treasury.

"I've got my own guidelines around tax reform: Simplify it, make sure it doesn't add to the debt. Give a break to working families and small businesses," Sen. Jon Tester (D-Mont.) said in an interview.

"But the truth is that we're dealing with a situation right now, with Houston and fires in Montana -- we've got 40 active fires now - $3 million a day, maybe more than that's going out the window. So we've just got to make sure we're fiscally responsible here moving forward."

To view online click here.

Back

House passes $7.9 billion aid bill for Hurricane Harvey Back

By Sarah Ferris | 09/06/2017 12:35 PM EDT

The House overwhelmingly approved a $7.85 billion measure this afternoon for response to Hurricane Harvey, with the goal of landing the legislation on President Donald Trump's desk by week's end.

The aid bill now heads to the Senate, where GOP leaders plan to link it to a separate effort to raise the debt ceiling. But an offer this morning from Democratic leaders has complicated that calculus.

Trump is aiming to quash growing GOP opposition to the strategy to raise the debt ceiling as part of a Hurricane Harvey relief package, according to multiple House and White House officials. And the House is expected to ultimately approve the deal.

"It's 100 percent the Senate is going to put the debt ceiling on Harvey. It'll come back here, and I think it'll get bipartisan support," Rep. Chris Collins (R-N.Y.) said this morning.

Congress aims to deliver the first installment of aid by Friday, when FEMA is expected to run out of emergency dollars.

House Speaker Paul Ryan told GOP lawmakers in a closed-door meeting this morning that they must agree to a funding deal this week, even if it means staying in town through Saturday.

In contrast to the lump sums allocated for past disasters like Hurricane Sandy in 2012, Congress is expected to send multiple aid packages in the coming months to help with Hurricane Harvey recovery — an effort Texas Gov. Greg Abbott has estimated at between $150 and $180 billion.

The disaster relief package was passed on a 419-3 vote, with Reps. Andy Biggs (R-Ariz.), Justin Amash (R-Mich.) and Tom Massie (R-Ky.) voting against it.

To view online click here.

Back

DOE shrinks electricity advisory board Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/06/2017 05:34 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry is installing new members to the Energy Department's Electricity Advisory Committee even as he whittles down the size of the board.

The 2016-17 roster for the board, which reports to the assistant secretary for electricity deliverability and energy reliability, had numbered 32 people, but including the new members, it will now total 24, since 14 members didn't have their terms renewed.

DOE says that three members had asked the agency not to renew their terms because of other commitments or because they had left the country.

Perry installed six new members: Mike Heyeck, a former AEP executive and founder of Grid Group; Paul Hudson, ex-chairman of the Texas Public Utilities Commission; Mladen Kezunovic, an engineering professor at Texas A&M; Bryan Olnick, an executive with Florida Power & Light; David Wade, CEO of the Electric Power Board of Chattanooga; and Tom Weaver, an official with AEP.

EAC members serve two-year terms, but about half of the positions are staggered so that some measure of continuity is maintained.

The board, which typically meets three times a year, is purely advisory and works on a range of power-related issues. The panel's charter states that there be "approximately 30" members.

Those not returning are: Ake Almgren, Merwin Brown, Paula Carmody, Paul Centolella, Carlos Coe, Phyllis Currie, Mark Lauby, Janice Lin, Anne Pramaggiore, Paul Roberti, Sue Tierney, Rebecca Wagner, Audrey Zibelman, and Carl Zichella.

WHAT'S NEXT: The electricity advisory committee will meet next Wednesday and Thursday in Arlington, Va.

To view online click here.

Back

States, foreign governments press ITC to reject solar petition Back

By Luis Sanchez | 08/15/2017 05:48 PM EDT

Several industry leaders, state government officials and representatives of foreign governments pressed the U.S. International Trade Commission at a hearing Tuesday to reject a petition from two domestic solar manufacturers asking for steep tariffs on imported solar cells and modules.

U.S. solar manufacturer Suniva and SolarWorld Americas have asked the commission to declare that solar cell and module imports from predominantly Asian nations have caused "significant injury" to their domestic business.

"U.S. module manufacturers suffered net losses exceeding a billion dollars over a five-year period," Matthew J. McConkey, a spokesperson for Suniva, said at Tuesday's hearing. "As U.S. demand for solar products increased from 2005 to 2016, foreign suppliers, including those from China, Korea, Canada and Malaysia, began capturing an even larger share of the U.S. market."

If the ITC agrees with the two companies that a "deluge" of solar imports had distorted the U.S. market, it could have huge impact on the renewable energy source that has grown rapidly over the past decade as costs for the panels that turn sunlight into electricity have plunged.

Chinese companies dominate the global production of solar cells and modules, and they have built extensive supply chains and manufacturing operations across Asia. President Donald Trump had often criticized China for its trade practices, and on Monday he issued an executive memorandum calling for U.S. trade officials to "consider all available options" to get China to stop coercing U.S. companies to hand over valuable technology.

Suniva, which is based in Georgia and is majority-owned by China's Shunfeng International, filed its section 201 petition with the ITC in April, just eight days after it filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection. SolarWorld later joined the petition.

The commission has until Sept. 22 to make an injury determination and would submit its report on a proposed remedy to the president by Nov. 13. Trump then has until Jan. 12, 2018, to make a decision on a remedy and present his plan to Congress.

Suniva and SolarWorld are seeking an initial tariff of 40 cents per watt of capacity on all imported solar cells and a 78 cents per watt minimum price for modules, roughly twice the current domestic price for solar modules. Suniva alleges that wages for industry workers dropped by 27 percent and 1,200 U.S. manufacturing jobs were lost between 2012 and 2016 because of imports.

The two companies, the two largest surviving domestic manufacturers of solar cells and modules, are seeking the protections to keep cheaper solar modules from being sold on the U.S. market and further hurting the U.S. industry.

However, opponents of the petition said that manufacturing the equipment is only a small part of the U.S. solar industry. Out of the 260,000 people working in the U.S. solar industry, only about 38,000 people work in manufacturing.

The Solar Energy Industries Association argues that tariffs and price floors would damage the whole solar industry, eliminating 88,000 jobs.

"One out of every 50 new jobs created last year in the U.S. was a solar job. Solar is an American success story whose future remains bright," said Matthew Nicely, a spokesperson for SEIA. "Its continued success could be destroyed by the misguided actions of the two petitioners and their small group of supporters whose workers represent less than one percent of all those that work for this dynamic American industry."

Government officials from several U.S. states also expressed their opposition to the petition at Tuesday's hearing, citing potential job and investment losses.

"If this petition is granted, it may save a few hundred cell or module manufacturing jobs, but there are many thousands of good manufacturing installation jobs that will be lost," Jason Saine, a North Carolina state representative said. "A remedy will do more harm than good here with the only benefit going to a small number of companies that frankly don't deserve it."

Al Christopher, director of the Virginia Department of Mines, Minerals and Energy, said that solar projects were not just helping the economy in his state; they also act as "a vital marketing tool in attracting the growing number of companies seeking renewable energy options when deciding where to make investments."

Several representatives of foreign governments also argued the tariffs weren't justified and they urged the commission to exclude their nations from possible tariffs.

"The value of imports from Korea was quite low for most of the period investigated," Korean Minister Counsellor for Trade, Industry and Energy Chang K. Kim said. When the shipments from his country increased in 2016, the imports went to the "utility segment of the market and were part of the share the domestic industry could not supply."

Sibylle Zitko, a representative for the European Commission, went a step further, contending "inefficiencies" and "bad investments" were more to blame for Suniva and SolarWorld's woes rather than imports.

"The criteria for the inquisition for safeguard measures are clearly not met in this case and thus the investigation should be terminated," Zitko said.

McConkey said the argument that Suniva and SolarWorld brought their financial problems on themselves was both false and offensive, and the petitioners only needed to show at Tuesday's hearing that they had suffered because of the imports. "We'll get to remedy later this fall," he said,

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Energy dominance meets market realities — Multiple congressional probes of Whitefish contract — RFS concessions fuel GOP war of words
Date: Friday, October 27, 2017 5:49:37 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/27/2017 05:47 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén and Eric Wolff

MY HEART DRILL GO ON? Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has made opening up more areas for oil and gas drilling a key part of delivering on President Donald Trump's pledge to unleash "energy dominance" but there may not actually be that many takers, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. Interior plans to offer 10 million onshore acres in the National Petroleum Reserve in northern Alaska in December and 77 million offshore acres across the entire Gulf of Mexico in March, but the combination of low oil prices and ample private land available for fracking may keep some away. "It's almost like having a fire sale of all the acreage," said Ken Medlock, director of the Baker Institute's Center for Energy Studies at Rice University in Houston. "Wouldn't surprise me at all if there's a lot of acreage that doesn't sell."

Short-term cash infusion: The federal government is likely to make money from the bids themselves, but many companies are likely to sit on the acreage and wait for oil prices to rise before they start drilling. Both the Gulf and Alaska have high production costs given the remoteness of both locations, making new projects in those locations a tough sell to companies. The most likely outcome of the Gulf lease sale is that a modest number of companies may buy acreage next to drilling rigs already in operation. "They're still showing up [to the lease sales], just not buying a lot," Justin Devery, a principal energy researcher at IHS Markit, told Ben.

That irks advocates: When companies leave lands idling the public gets hit twice since the lands cannot be used and they aren't generating income for taxpayers, according to Nada Culver, senior counsel and director at The Wilderness Society's BLM Action Center. "We will lose the ability to use those lands, and at the same time we're not necessarily going to see a return."

Relatedly, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources will hold a Nov. 2 hearing on the potential for oil and gas exploration in ANWR as the committee seeks to meet reconciliation instructions from the budget to raise $1 billion in revenue over the next decade.

AND FOR YOUR RADAR TODAY: Trump huddles with Zinke in the Oval Office today 11:30 a.m. No topic specified, though ME bets Zinke's recommendations on national monument designations will pop up.

TGIF EVERYONE! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and QEP Resources' Shane Schulz was first to identify Hawaii, Idaho, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Maine as the five states with two House seats. For today: Which four states have the most congressional seats? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

LET THOSE WHITEFISH LETTERS FLY: Lawmakers penned three separate letters Thursday seeking information related to the $300 million contract awarded to the tiny Whitefish Energy based in Zinke's hometown, Pro's Ben and your ME host report.

—A bipartisan group of House Energy and Commerce lawmakers wants a briefing from Whitefish Energy. "In light of the questions that have been raised about your company's involvement in recovery efforts ... it is important to develop a clear understanding of the facts," they wrote in a Thursday letter to Whitefish Energy CEO Andrew Techmanski.

—House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop and Oversight Subcommittee Chairman Bruce Westerman asked the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority for all documents related to its decision to ink the Whitefish contract. They also asked more broadly for information on how PREPA enters into third-party contracts and what procedures it must follow if it departs from the normal process. Link.

—Senate Energy ranking member Maria Cantwell and Ron Wyden asked GAO to investigate the contract in a separate letter.

Bipartisan resiliency push for rebuilding: A powerful bloc of senators, including the top Republican and Democrat on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the Finance Committee chairman, are pressing the Senate leadership for weather-resilient distributed energy to rebuild the power grids of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, Pro's Emily Holden reports. "Decentralized energy resources operating in microgrids are more likely to remain functioning during and after storms," says the letter, spearheaded by Sen. Al Franken and signed by Sens. Lisa Murkowski, Orrin Hatch, Rob Portman and Cantwell.

Remember that Superfund drinking water story? Sens. Tammy Duckworth and Elizabeth Warren led five of their Democratic colleagues in questioning whether residents on the smaller Puerto Rican island of Vieques had adequate communication infrastructure to heed EPA warnings not to drink water from Superfund sites. "We are unable to guarantee residents there will heed EPA's guidance and avoid the potential adverse health effects associated with drinking contaminated water unless there is sufficient Federal Government presence on the island to provide access to clean drinking water," they wrote in a letter. "We urge you to make monitoring and securing the Vieques site a priority for the duration of recovery."

Another CODEL leaves: A bipartisan group of lawmakers, helmed by House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy and Minority Whip Steny Hoyer, are visiting the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and the Florida Keys today and Saturday to examine ongoing recovery efforts from the string of recent hurricanes. Also traveling: Bishop, Jeff Denham, Norma Torres and Anthony Brown. Their visit comes as the Rhodium Group released a report Thursday concluding Hurricane Maria caused the "largest blackout in American history." Trump signed into law Thursday legislation H.R. 2266 \(115\) that provides $36.5 billion to help FEMA with recovery efforts, relieve about half of the National Flood Insurance Program's debt and to keep Puerto Rico's government operational.

Hearing scheduled: The Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee announced it would hold a hearing next Thursday to examine the state and federal responses to the storms, as well as ongoing recovery efforts.

Cornyn: Don't force disaster offsets: Count Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn as opposed to OMB Director Mick Mulvaney's plan to seek offsets for the next batch of disaster relief. "I'm as concerned about the deficits and debt as anybody, but this is emergency spending and we need to get help to the people who need the help," he told reporters.

INHOFE: GRASSLEY'S RFS POSTURING 'QUESTIONABLE': Sen. Jim Inhofe isn't a fan of fellow Republicans Chuck Grassley and Joni Ernst holding up EPA nominees last week to extract concessions on the Renewable Fuel Standard. "I think it's questionable in terms of being appropriate," he told ME. "I think [Grassley] used a lot of pressure there that was very effective, I'll say, but that I didn't agree with."

And Ernst bashes new hold: After a delay in the confirmation vote on EPA air nominee Bill Wehrum (who passed out of committee on Wednesday), Sens. Ted Cruz and Mike Lee retaliated by slapping a hold on Bill Northey's selection to become undersecretary for Farming Development and Conservation at USDA. But that move drew swift condemnation from Ernst. "That has nothing to do with Bill Northey, they need to get that right," Ernst told ME, referring to the USDA hold. "I don't see the connection. Bill Northey, he'll be in charge of conservation programs, it will have nothing to do with the RFS. So why are they blocking him because of the RFS? Just because Big Oil doesn't like it."

So is this officially a fight? Senior Republicans downplayed the likelihood their conference would continue to hold up Trump nominees over biofuels. "This happens every day, just happens to be the topic du jour, but we'll work it out," Cornyn told reporters. And EPW Chairman John Barrasso suggested the move might have just been the senators doing what's in the best interest of their states: "Every senator gets to speak for themselves and do whatever they need to do," he told ME.

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gyQXsp> **

DUCKWORTH: JUST WAIT! She's been urging her GOP colleagues to let EPA's final biofuels volumes come out on Nov. 30 before considering Wehrum's nomination on the Senate floor, because Duckworth questions the legality of the reassurances Pruitt sent to corn-state senators last week. "I don't know that it doesn't open the administration to lawsuits from the very same oil interests Mr. Wehrum used to represent," she told ME. "I've been pressuring them to not accept just the word of Mr. Pruitt ... It's simple — just wait, let the rulemaking be done. Just wait!"

MAIL CALL! GOTTA SHOW YOUR WORK! A group of 19 members of the Senate Democratic caucus requested all the documents related to EPA's cost-benefit analysis that they argue relied on "mathematical sleights of hand to over-state the costs of industry compliance" but formed an important part of the proposed repeal of the Clean Power Plan. "Denying the science and fabricating the math may satisfy the agency's paperwork requirements, but doing so will not satisfy the requirements of the law," the letter, led by EPW ranking member Tom Carper, said.

Senators: This won't be popular: Eleven Democratic senators are wagging their fingers at Zinke's decision to dramatically increase entrance fees to many of the country's most popular national parks, such as Grand Canyon, Yellowstone and Yosemite. "We believe that it is especially problematic for your Department to propose fee increases at the same time that the Trump Administration is recommending slashing National Park Service funding levels and holding virtual fire-sales on our public resources at below market value," the letter, led by Cantwell, said. The timing of the increase is especially curious as Zinke proudly boasted of record numbers of visitors just a few months ago.

Wildfire funding must come next: A bipartisan group of eight senators asked Trump in a letter to prioritize federal funding for wildfires in the next round of disaster relief funding. "We urge you to make it a priority that all Americans who need emergency assistance get what they need, whether affected by a hurricane, wildfire, or other disaster," the letter, led by Sen. Kamala Harris, wrote.

LAWSUIT ROUNDUP! 'SUE AND SETTLE' ORDER GETS FIRST TEST: The state of North Dakota says EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's recent "sue and settle" directive bolsters its own argument to nullify a court order requiring the agency to review oil and gas wastewater rules. Environmental groups complained that EPA had not updated its oil and gas wastewater disposal rules since 1988, despite major changes related to the fracking boom and a statutory requirement that EPA reconsider the rules every three years. In December, they struck a deal that requires EPA to decide whether or not to update those rules by March 2019.

North Dakota says Pruitt's order backs up their request that the D.C. Circuit overturn the consent decree. Pruitt's "sue and settle" order "aligns with North Dakota's argument that the settlement in this case imposed obligations on U.S. EPA that go beyond" the law's requirements, the state wrote in a short letter to the court on Thursday. Environmental groups have pointed out that, in the event EPA does decide to take action, the agency will go through the normal notice-and-comment rulemaking process. Oral arguments are slated for Nov. 7.

Not waiting any longer: Environmental Defense Fund sued EPA Thursday over a series of unfiled FOIA requests concerning Pruitt's ethics conflicts, schedule and plans for agency science, Pro's Emily Holden reports. The agency has faced a flood of public records requests during the Trump era with the Office of Public Affairs warning some may take more than a year — well over statutory limits — to fulfill.

Not a pleasant diversion? A handful of green groups filed a lawsuit in federal district court challenging federal approval of a project that would divert water from the Colorado River to customers in the Front Range area of Colorado, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. The Windy Gap Firing Project would divert tens of thousands of acre feet of water from the Colorado River each year to help fill a new reservoir on the Front Range area of Colorado.

ANALYSES OF PERRY GRID PROPOSAL RELEASED: Implementing Energy Secretary Rick Perry's grid resiliency proposal could cost consumers up to $10.6 billion per year, according to new research from the Energy Innovation and the Climate Policy Initiative. Ninety percent of the benefits to the nuclear sector would go to just five companies — Exelon, Entergy, PSEG, NextEra and FirstEnergy — while 80 percent of the benefits to the coal industry would also go to just five companies — NRG, Dynegy, FirstEnergy, American Electric Power and Talen Energy. Former FERC Commissioner Colette Honorable co-authored initial perspectives on the grid proposal comments for Reed Smith here.

THEY'RE GOING TO MIAMI: A large group of Transportation Committee members — Chairman Bill Shuster, Garret Graves, Grace Napolitano, Brian J. Mast, Daniel Webster, Frederica Wilson, Lois Frankel, Mario Diaz-Balart, Carlos Curbelo and Eddie Bernice Johnson — gather this morning at 9:30 a.m. at Port Miami to discuss concepts for the next Water Resources Development Act. Webcast here.

STANDING STRONG: There may be a new political dynamic in Germany, but all the parties involved in talks to form a government agreed Thursday to uphold previously set climate goals for 2020, 2030 and 2050, POLITICO Europe's Emily Schultheis and Cynthia Kroet report. The parties — the center-right CDU/CSU alliance, the liberal Free Democratic Party (FDP) and the Greens — did not, however, discuss all the specific means by which these goals would be reached.

MOVER, SHAKER: Mary Martin is the new chief counsel for both the House Energy and Commerce Energy and Environment subcommittees. She's previously been deputy chief counsel for both subpanels and before that was policy counsel and committee executive to the environment, technology & regulatory affairs division at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

QUICK HITS

- EPA: Michigan Should Boost Water Safety in Flint, Statewide. AP.
- Trump pledges to speed up Lake Okeechobee dike repairs. Palm Beach Post.
- Four Quitters Walk Into a Bar... Huffington Post.
- Latest U.S. State to Offer Nukes a Lifeline Is Connecticut. Bloomberg.
- Trump's devotion to coal mining puts Utah dinosaur discoveries in danger, scientists say. Los Angeles Times.
- Trump pick for top environmental post once wrote Texas would be 'better off' as an independent republic. CNN.
- Top Venezuela oil executive Chacin arrested in graft probe -sources. Reuters.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:30 a.m. — World Resources Institute hosts press call on what to expect from COP23 held in Bonn, Germany, RSVP: rgerholdt@wri.org

11:30 a.m. — The Puerto Rico Institute for Competitiveness and Sustainable Economy will hold a discussion on "Puerto Rico: How Best to Get and Keep the Lights Back on." 2043 Rayburn

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gyQXsp> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/energy-dominance-meets-market-realities-025254>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Interior's 'fire sale' for oil leases may come up short Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 10/27/2017 05:01 AM EDT

The Interior Department's latest attempt to jump-start President Donald Trump's pledge to unleash American "energy dominance" might run into cold market reality.

Interior plans to offer up for lease every available tract in the Gulf of Mexico as well as every open acre in Alaska's National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska in a bid to spur more oil and gas development. But with oil still hovering at $50 a barrel, and private land available in West Texas and North Dakota for fracking, Interior's plan to flood the market may find relatively few takers, experts said.

"It's almost like having a fire sale of all the acreage," said Ken Medlock, director of the Baker Institute's Center for Energy Studies at Rice University. "Wouldn't surprise me at all if there's a lot of acreage that doesn't sell."

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has said making the federal land available would prime the pump for more oil and gas production. The department plans to offer 10 million onshore acres in the NPR in northern Alaska in December and 77 million offshore acres across the entire Gulf of Mexico in March. And Interior will start offering leases for the entire Gulf of Mexico twice a year, a change from the previous practice of annual lease sales offering only specific portions of the Gulf at any given time.

"In today's low-price energy environment, providing the offshore industry access to the maximum amount of opportunities possible is part of our strategy to spur local and regional economic dynamism and job creation and a pillar of President Trump's plan to make the United States energy dominant," Zinke said in the offshore lease announcement.

While the lease sales are likely to generate some money for the federal government, analysts said the agency might be limited to a short-term cash infusion from the bids themselves, rather than generating much in royalties on production, since many companies would likely sit on the acreage and wait for oil prices to rise before drilling.

"Bidding on those leases generates revenue in [the first year] for the U.S. taxpayer, which has a benefit all its own," said Kevin Book, managing director for research at ClearView Energy Partners LLC. "As a result, offering as much as possible for lease may have the effect of maximizing bid bonuses, particularly if the leases come with favorable terms."

Interior's lease sales likely won't spur much oil and gas development in the Gulf or Alaska, however. The remoteness of both areas means production costs are high, making new projects in those locations a tough sell to companies that are grappling with low oil prices and are focused on increasing production in the lower 48 states.

U.S. oil production averaged 8.8 million barrels a day last year, up from 5.6 million barrels in 2011, according to Energy Information Administration data. Nearly 1 million barrels per day of U.S. crude are being exported this year.

Deep-water offshore projects cost billions of dollars and can take a decade to develop, and many companies have slashed spending in those areas, according to a recent report from market consulting agency IHS Markit.

The most likely outcome of the Gulf lease sale will be a modest number of companies picking up acreage adjacent to drilling rigs they already have operating, analysts said. That means that the March offshore lease sale may see a repeat of the result from the big offshore sale Interior held in August, said Justin Devery, a principal energy researcher at IHS Markit.

Interior had touted that last offshore lease sale as the biggest ever held by the department, with leases for 76 million acres up for sale. But the revenues for the government still fell relatively short, with Interior garnering $121 million from bids on 508,096 acres.

"The last [sale] was big and wide and there were only about 100 bids, so it wasn't an overwhelming response, that's for sure," Devery said. "The guys out there, they're adding inventories, adding to plays they already have, but there's no wildcatting going on. They're still showing up [to the lease sales], just not buying a lot."

In Alaska, there may be even less interest. BLM offered 1.5 million acres in the NPR-A in December 2016, and oil companies bid on only 613,528 acres.

ConocoPhillips, which announced in January a promising discovery in the area, accounted for nearly half of the 92 overall bids in that sale, with only three other, smaller companies participating. ConocoPhillips declined to say whether it was interested in properties in the upcoming NPR-A lease sale.

Oil companies already hold leases for just over 1 million acres of federal lands in Alaska, according to government data. Of that, only 16,822 acres are in production.

The remainder of those are acres the public cannot use and are not generating income for taxpayers, noted Nada Culver, senior counsel and director of the Wilderness Society's BLM Action Center.

"We will lose the ability to use those lands, and at the same time we're not necessarily going to see a return," Culver said. "So the American taxpayer is getting ripped off twice — you can't use these lands, and you're not getting a return on them letting these companies lock them up."

To view online click here.

Back

Committees seek info on Whitefish Energy contract for Puerto Rico Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Anthony Adragna | 10/26/2017 04:02 PM EDT

Several lawmakers today stepped up their efforts to get more information about how a small Montana company was selected to help rebuild Puerto Rico's electric grid.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee is asking for a briefing from Whitefish Energy. Republicans on the House Natural Resources Committee are seeking answers from the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority, the utility that selected the Whitefish, Mt.,-based firm. And the ranking Democrats from the Senate Energy and Natural Resources and Finance committees requested an investigation from the Government Accountability Office.

"In light of the questions that have been raised about your company's involvement in recovery efforts ... it is important to develop a clear understanding of the facts," a bipartisan group of Energy and Commerce Committee leaders wrote today in a letter to Whitefish Energy CEO

Andrew Techmanski.

Separately, House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop and Oversight Subcommittee Chairman Bruce Westerman sent a letter to PREPA seeking all documents related to its decision to ink the Whitefish contract and for an explanation of how it enters into third-party contracts.

Senate Energy ranking member Maria Cantwell and Sen. Ron Wyden, the top Finance Democrat, asked GAO to investigate the contract in their own letter.

Whitefish Energy's contract with the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority has raised questions about whether the small, young company is equipped to do the work. The company is based in the hometown of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, but officials with the company and department have said that had nothing to do with it winning the contract.

To view online click here.

Back

Murkowski, Cantwell press for distributed power in Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands Back

By Emily Holden | 10/26/2017 05:42 PM EDT

The top Republican and Democrat on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee are calling on the Senate leadership to press for weather-resilient distributed energy to rebuild the power grids in hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Committee chairman Lisa Murkowski and ranking member Maria Cantwell, today signed on to a letter spearheaded by Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.). Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) and Rob Portman (R-Ohio) joined them.

The senators said Hurricanes Irma and Maria exposed the vulnerability of the power grids on the islands, and some communities face months without electricity. Congress has already approved about $52 billion in aid for recent hurricanes and is expected to sign off on more spending.

"Decentralized energy resources operating in microgrids are more likely to remain functioning during and after storms," the letter said, noting that the declining costs of solar, wind, energy efficiency and battery storage in many instances makes them more affordable than existing power sources. The islands rely mostly on power plants fueled by oil, natural gas and coal.

In a speech over the weekend at the Alaska Federation of Natives convention, Murkowski broke with the party line to emphasize that "climate change is real" and she backed adding more alternative energy across the state, where rural communities often rely on diesel generators.

"Our world is changing," she said, according to Alaska Public Media. "And we all know that climate change is at the heart of this change."

To view online click here.

Back

White House seeks offsets for third disaster package Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/25/2017 11:52 AM EDT

The White House plans to ask Congress for "tens of billions" of dollars in additional disaster relief funding next month and urge lawmakers to at least partially offset that spending.

OMB Director Mick Mulvaney told Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell in a letter Tuesday that the Trump administration will formally request the money "in mid-November," marking the third emergency aid package in three months.

Mulvaney also delivered his strongest plea yet for GOP leaders to offset the funding, rather than considering it "emergency" dollars that don't count toward Congress' spending limits, as first reported in POLITICO Playbook.

"As we move toward the longer-term issue of rebuilding the impacted areas of our Nation, we believe it would be appropriate that the Congress consider reducing spending elsewhere," Mulvaney wrote in the letter.

The comments — consistent with Mulvaney's stance when he served in Congress — will likely complicate passage of the next cash infusion for FEMA.

Congress has now approved more than $52 billion in emergency disaster aid this year, clearing the latest $36.5 billion package (H.R. 2266 \(115\)) Tuesday.

The budget director said he will craft the next spending request with direct help from affected lawmakers — an apparent attempt to appease Texas and Florida members who say they were ignored in the White House's last request.

Those frustrations have become an issue for the administration. Sen. John Cornyn has said he plans to block the confirmation of Mulvaney's deputy director, Russ Vought, until the Texas Republican is assured that his home state will receive adequate aid in the next package.

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt issues EPA directive to curb 'sue and settle' Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/16/2017 12:34 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt today signed a directive and accompanying memo meant to curtail what he has criticized as EPA's "sue and settle" practice.

The new directive calls for more agency outreach to industry groups and will require EPA to post various documents related to such lawsuits online.

Pruitt and other Republicans have long been critical of EPA for settling suits with environmental groups over missed statutory deadlines. Green groups and Democrats note the consent decrees generally only lock in a timeline for the agency to act, not the underlying regulatory details.

To view online click here.

Back

EDF sues EPA over delays in releasing public records Back

By Emily Holden | 10/26/2017 04:41 PM EDT

The Environmental Defense Fund said today it is suing EPA for failing to release public records about Administrator Scott Pruitt's potential ethics conflicts, schedule or plans for agency science that the group has sought under the Freedom of Information Act.

According to the lawsuit filed with the D.C. Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals, one of EDF's requests dates back to January, and the others are from March and June. A statutory deadline gives EPA 20 days to make a determination on whether to release information unless there are certain "unusual circumstances." EDF says EPA has not demonstrated those circumstances or sought an extension.

The agency has said it is receiving high volumes of public records requests. The Office of Public Affairs, for example, recently said it received 154 requests in fiscal 2017, compared to 14 in fiscal 2016. OPA has said some requests will take more than a year to fulfill.

An EPA spokesperson said the agency does not comment on pending litigation.

EDF is seeking information about an ethics agreement Pruitt signed while his nomination was pending, including why he determined he could work on a rule to withdraw the Clean Power Plan even though he brought lawsuits against it as attorney general of Oklahoma.

The group is seeking Pruitt's daily schedules, too. EDF argues that releases so far have included many redactions and that a recently published public calendar is brief and vague.

To view online click here.

Back

Green groups sue over federal approval of Colorado River diversion project Back

By Esther Whieldon | 10/26/2017 04:28 PM EDT

A handful of environmental groups today filed a lawsuit challenging the federal government's approval of a project that would divert water from the Colorado River to customers in the Front Range area of Colorado.

The lawsuit filed with the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado challenges the Bureau of Reclamation's decision in 2014 and the Army Corps of Engineers' action in May approving the Windy Gap Firing Project. That project, proposed by the Northern Colorado Water Conservancy District, would divert tens of thousands of acre feet of water from the Colorado River each year to help fill a new reservoir on the Front Range area of Colorado.

The decision comes as lower basin states are working on a plan to voluntarily reduce their usage beyond mandatory levels to address problems caused by the river's shrinking supplies.

The green groups contend the agencies failed to consider alternatives to the project and ignored flaws and gaps in the data and in Reclamation's review.

"This case boils down to inadequate analysis and poor decisionmaking resulting in significant water diversions from the already depleted Colorado River," said the lawsuit filed by the Save the Colorado, Save the Poudre: Poudre Waterkeeper, WildEarth Guardians, Living Rivers and Waterkeeper Alliance.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: FERC sets quick timeframe to consider Perry's request — Trump heads to Puerto Rico today — Heavyweights weigh in on solar tariffs today
Date: Tuesday, October 03, 2017 5:45:00 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/03/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff, Lauren Gardner and Alex Guillén

FERC AIMS FOR QUICK WORK: FERC is asking for initial comments on DOE's proposed rule that would benefit nuclear and coal-fired power plants to be submitted in just three weeks — a timeline that suggests the independent commission is eager to move quickly on the Trump administration's proposal that is already generating push-back from a diverse group of major industry players. In a notice out late Monday, FERC set an Oct. 23 comment deadline and said reply comments would be due by Nov. 7.

Energy super-group says slow down: Representatives of oil, natural gas, wind, solar and other sectors urged FERC in a Monday letter to pump the brakes on Energy Secretary Rick Perry's request for a quick turnaround on the new rules, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. "This is one of the most significant proposed rules in decades related to the energy industry and, if finalized, would unquestionably have significant ramifications for wholesale markets under the Commission's jurisdiction," wrote the 11 groups, including the American Petroleum Institute, Solar Energy Industries Association and Electric Power Supply Association. They called Secretary Rick Perry's proposed timeline "unreasonable on its face."

Murkowski seems lukewarm: Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski also seemed lukewarm to Perry's push, saying in a statement she respects "Secretary Perry for taking an action that he believes is necessary" and "will be following the proceedings closely" at FERC.

DOE's proposal should be a hot topic on the Hill today. The House Science Committee takes a look at grid resilience at a hearing at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2318. Then this afternoon a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee will hear a wide variety perspectives on reliability in a changing electric sector, including representatives of the coal and nuclear industries as well as several of the groups who signed that letter, at 2 p.m. in Rayburn 2123.

TRUMP HEADS TO PUERTO RICO TODAY: President Donald Trump heads to the devastated island of Puerto Rico today even as information released Monday by the federal government hints at the lengthy recovery road ahead. Puerto Rican Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said at a news conference that just one in 10 of the island's nearly 3.5 million people are likely to have power within two weeks, and only a quarter of the island should have the lights on by next month. It's a similarly dire situation for drinking water: 47 percent of residents have potable drinking water right now, though Rosselló said that number should climb to around 60 percent by the end of the week.

The president summed up his view of the situation Monday. "It's been amazing what's been done in a very short period of time on Puerto Rico. There's never been a piece of land that we've known that was so devastated," Trump said in Oval Office remarks. "The bridges are down, the telecommunications was nonexistent, and it's in very, very bad shape. The electrical grid, as you know, was totally destroyed. But we've gotten tremendous amounts of food and water, and lots of other things — supplies — generally speaking, on the island." The White House said San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz, who drew Trump's wrath over the weekend, has been invited to events with him today.

Disaster relief request coming: Meanwhile, the Trump administration is expected to by the end of this week request between $10 billion to $15 billion to respond to the disaster, Playbook reports.

The Center for American Progress today is out with a policy roadmap for lawmakers as they consider the next round of assistance for Puerto Rico and other areas impacted by hurricanes. They urge Congress to enact policies to improve resiliency, update flood risk information and prioritize underserved communities, among other ideas, rather than just throwing money at the problem.

PERMANENT JONES ACT REPRIVE? Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell on Monday fast-tracked potential consideration of legislation S. 1894 \(115\) that would permanently exempt Puerto Rico from the Jones Act, which bans foreign-flagged ships from traveling between U.S. ports. After sustained pressure, Trump granted a 10-day Jones Act waiver for Puerto Rico last week.

WELCOME TO TUESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the American Chemistry Council's Jon Corley was first to ID former Rep. Cynthia McKinney as the 2008 Green Party nominee. For today: What "Love Boat" actor went on to serve four terms in Congress for Iowa? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

ITC TO GET AN EARFUL ON REMEDY FOR THAT SOLAR BURN: The U.S. International Trade Commission will hear arguments this morning about how to best level the playing field for U.S. solar manufacturers, and it looks like it's going to be quite a show, with hours' worth of speakers lined up. The commission found last week that U.S. solar manufacturing had been harmed by cheap solar imports, over the objections of the rest of the solar industry.

In this corner, for the installers: The Solar Energy Industries Association, along with solar producer SunPower, told the ITC in its brief that a tariff will result in the loss of 62,800 jobs in 2018 and 80,000 jobs in later years. Sen. Martin Heinrich will bat for the no-tariffs team, along with a laundry list of SEIA witnesses. They will also be backed by representatives from the embassies of China, Korea, Brazil, and Mexico.

And in this corner, for the petitioners: In their public briefs, Suniva and SolarWorld Americas offered the commission two choices: A tariff plus a price floor for solar cells, or a tariff plus a quota. Sen. Ron Wyden and Rep. Suzanne Bonamici, both of Oregon, will speak in support of their home-state SolarWorld, which wants tariffs and a price floor. "I urge the Commission to recommend a remedy robust enough to repair the serious injury already experienced by the U.S. solar manufacturing sector and to ensure its long-term growth and competitiveness," Wyden will say according to an excerpt of his statement obtained by ME. "In practical terms, that means identifying a remedy that helps to revive a domestic manufacturing sector central to our leadership in energy innovation yet long under siege."

And First Solar shall be first: SEIA also locates a winner if tariffs are imposed, Arizona-based thin film manufacturer First Solar, which does much of its manufacturing in Malaysia. "Thin-film solar directly competes with CSPV solar in the marketplace. Consequently, global trade restrictions on [crystalline silicon photovoltaic] would raise rivals' costs and drive customers toward First Solar's products, strengthening First Solar's already strong hand."

MORE CONCERNS RAISED OVER RFS POTENTIAL CHANGES: Nearly all major biofuel trades and the corn growers are out with a letter this morning to Trump urging him to abandon "drastic, unprecedented changes" to change the Renewable Fuel Standard that they said would benefit a select few petroleum refiners. "The proposed changes are inconsistent with the law and threaten the growth and prosperity of the U.S. biofuels industry," wrote signatories of the letter, including National Corn Growers Association, Renewable Fuels Association and Growth Energy. "EPA's changes are also inconsistent with Administrator Pruitt's assurances to uphold the law and your long-standing support of ethanol and the RFS." EPA released a notice last week suggesting it might reduce the already set 2018 biomass-based biodiesel requirement and shrink the mandate in 2019.

Grassley confirms Trump conversation: Iowa Sen. Chuck Grassley told reporters he discussed his concern over potential changes to the RFS during a Friday phone conversation with Trump. "They're trying to respond to big oil and not take into consideration the needs of alternative energy, biofuels," he said. "Cutting back on the mandate isn't a way you're going to encourage capital and capital is what we need now to get pumps to pump E15 instead of E10."

Seems relevant: The White House previously granted EPA deputy general counsel Erik Baptist, a senior counsel to the American Petroleum Institute for more than six years, an ethics waiver to work on RFS issues given his "expertise in this program and its policy and implementation." Copy of that waiver here.

NO OZONE DESIGNATIONS AS DEADLINE PASSES: EPA appears to have missed the Oct. 1 deadline to say which parts of the U.S. meet the 2015 ozone standard and which don't, a key step toward implementing the regulation. The agency is remaining mum; a spokesperson told ME Monday that there is "no further information" on when the designations will be released. The matter has been controversial for months, ever since Administrator Scott Pruitt said he would delay the designations by a year — a delay he later reversed following lawsuits from Democratic attorneys general and environmental groups. (The 2015 standard itself is also under review, with no specific timeline attached.) It may be a while before green groups can take Pruitt to court. The Clean Air Act requires them to provide EPA with 60 days' notice before filing a lawsuit over a missed deadline, meaning any suit couldn't be filed until December at the earliest.

Also adding uncertainty to the process is a pending proposed rule at OMB that appears to set new thresholds for how EPA classifies ozone areas. That rule arrived at OMB on Sept. 21. EPA had previously proposed classification details last November that the agency characterized as only minor changes to the implementation rules for the 2008 ozone standard. An EPA spokesperson declined to comment on a rule under review at OMB.

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2fvfOTm> **

WHAT ABOUT LOLA? Two House Democrats want Interior's inspector general to expand its newly announced investigation into Secretary Ryan Zinke's non-commercial travel to also include his wife, Lola, in light of her involvement with a GOP Senate campaign in Montana, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. "Because the secretary's spouse is leading a Senate campaign in Montana, tax-payer funded travel for Mrs. Zinke, especially to or from Montana, deserves heightened scrutiny," Raul Grijalva and Donald McEachin wrote in a letter Monday.

HEARING ROUNDUP! SEEMS LIKE A PATTERN HERE: The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee axed a vote slated for this morning on the nominations of Steven Winberg to be assistant Energy secretary for fossil energy and Bruce Walker to be assistant Energy secretary for electricity, delivery and energy reliability. No reason was given.

RALLY AGAINST DOURSON: Ahead of Wednesday's hearing on four EPA nominations, Sens. Tom Udall and Richard Blumenthal are holding a press conference with advocates today at 2:30 p.m. to protest Michael Dourson's nomination to run the agency's chemicals office. Udall, you'll remember, was a key architect of the revamped national chemicals law last year.

LIFELINE FOR NAVAJO GENERATING? Peabody Energy said Monday it had found "a number of highly qualified potential investors" interested in taking an ownership stake in the Navajo Generating Station that would allow it to continue operating beyond 2019. It did not provide further details. The plant's current owners said back in February they planned to close the facility after 2019, several decades before expected. But Zinke said in late June that "one of Interior's top priorities" has been finding a way to keep it operating.

MAINE ATTRACTION: Democrat Lucas St. Clair, who led a successful push to create the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument, announced Monday he'll challenge incumbent Rep. Bruce Poliquin, the Bangor Daily News reports. St. Clair is the 39-year-old son of Burt's Bees entrepreneur Roxanne Quimby and resigned his post as president of the Friends of Katahdin Woods and Waters to run for office.

NOT IN SLO'S BACKYARD: Energy company Phillips 66 will drop its lawsuit challenging a California county's denial of a proposal that would have let the refiner bring millions of gallons of oil per week by train to its facility in Santa Maria, environmentalists who opposed it said Monday. The county's decision to reject the project came after the Surface Transportation Board last year declined to prevent another California city from denying Valero Energy's bid to expand crude-by-rail operations. The San Luis Obispo Tribune reports that the parties reached a settlement, which must be approved by a court.

PAUSE BUTTON HIT: Amid the worst mass shooting in modern U.S. history, a broad sportsmen's package with controversial gun silencer provisions is no longer expected to get a House vote in the near future, POLITICO's John Bresnahan and Heather Caygle report. Democrats said the Las Vegas massacre was just one more reason to shelve the bill. "There's a lot we need to do in the wake of this mass shooting. We don't need to make it easier to get hold of items that could make mass casualty events even more deadly," Grijalva said in a statement.

TAKE A GLANCE! STUDY: U.S. PAYS BIG FOSSIL FUEL SUBSIDIES: Oil Change International is out with a report today finding the U.S. provides more than $20 billion toward oil, gas and coal production annually. Those include $14.7 billion in annual federal subsidies and $5.8 billion in yearly state-level incentives.

REPORT: GETTING EASIER TO HIT CLEAN POWER PLAN GOALS: The Institute for Policy Integrity at NYU's School of Law is out with a report today arguing the emissions reduction targets of the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan are more achievable due to changes in the electric sector. If the agency were to redo its regulatory impact analysis with recent developments, the report argues compliance costs would be even lower than originally thought.

MOVER, SHAKER: Peter Tomasi has joined Foley & Lardner LLP's environmental practice as of counsel in its Milwaukee office. He was previously a partner at Quarles & Brady LLP.

QUICK HITS

- In the heart of China's coal country, a city bans most coal: Xinhua. Reuters.
- Residents: Tests find toxic chemicals after Texas plant fire. AP.
- Trump closes WH event to highlight deregulation. Washington Post.
- Can Hollywood Movies About Climate Change Make a Difference? New York Times.
- Gina McCarthy holds out hope on climate policy. High Country News.
- EPA nominee has ties to WV chemical controversies. Charleston Gazette-Mail.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:00 a.m. — "Carbon Capture: A Business Opportunity in the Global Low-Carbon Economy," Global CCS Institute, National Press Club, 529 14th Street Northwest

10:00 a.m. — "Resiliency: The Electric Grid's Only Hope," House Science, Space and Technology Committee, Rayburn 2318

10:00 a.m. — Legislative hearing on H.R. 3400, House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1334

10:15 a.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee holds hearing to consider various nominations, Dirksen 366

10:30 a.m. — "Full Committee Hearing to Examine Energy Storage Technologies," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

11:30 a.m. — Manchin, Capito, McKinley and Welch introduce the American Miners Pension Act, S-120

2:00 p.m. — "Part II: Powering America: Defining Reliability in a Transforming Electricity Industry," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

2:30 p.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Subcommittee hearing on various bills, 366 Dirksen

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2fVfOTm> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/heavyweights-weigh-in-on-solar-tariffs-today-024877>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

DOE's Perry pushes FERC to support coal power plants Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/29/2017 02:48 PM EDT

The Trump administration on Friday called on FERC to create new rules to protect coal-fired and nuclear power plants that are being squeezed by cheaper natural gas and renewable sources, saying they were "indispensable for economic and national security."

Energy Secretary Rick Perry, who told miners in Pennsylvania on Thursday that "it's time for coal in this country to be revived," pressed electricity regulators to alter power markets and protect the resilience of the power grid with payments to generators that keep fuel supplies on site, a clear reference to the coal-fired and nuclear power plants.

The proposal, which DOE said gave FERC 60 days to create a final or interim rule, comes just a month after Perry's agency issued a report saying FERC should "expedite" its work with grid operators to ensure the stability of the nation's power network.

"In terms of process, this is a pretty bold move," said Tony Clark, a Republican former FERC commissioner. DOE often conducts studies on issues it believes need attention, he said, but "actually forwarding to the commission something specific for action is a pretty bold way of moving the issue right up the batting order at FERC."

The new proposal, directed at FERC under a rarely used Section 403 authority of the Department of Energy Organization Act, stops short of specifically seeking market incentives for coal. But it calls for full-cost recovery for power generating units that provide essential power and "ancillary" services — and have a 90-day fuel supply on site in case of natural or man-made disruptions. That would exclude most natural gas power plants, which do not typically keep large fuel inventories on hand and instead receive supplies via pipeline.

Perry's request represents a departure from the two decades of U.S. policy that has trended toward more market-based tools, which has helped natural gas to nearly double its power market share. Renewable energy sources like wind and solar, though still modest when compared to fossil fuels or nuclear power, have also grown quickly as federal incentives helped drive down their costs.

But the growth of renewables and natural gas — combined with tighter pollution controls and weak new demand for electricity — has forced hundreds of old coal-fired power plants into retirement. Nuclear power plants in some parts of the country are also under financial pressure, hurt by negative wholesale power market prices that sometimes require the plant owners to pay to deliver their power supplies.

"If this gets the debate started, then my hat's off," said former FERC Chairman Pat Wood, a friend of Perry and a strong advocate for market-based power systems. "But it's a pretty arresting [thing] to wake up and read. That would never have played in Texas. ... If there is a service to be valued, then a market can value that."

In the grid study ordered by Perry and released in August, DOE experts pointed to low power prices and cheap natural gas as the single biggest reason for coal ceding its position as the nation's biggest source of electricity. And that report also called for "reforms" to power markets that would help bolster the electricity network's resilience by easing the financial pressures on many power providers.

In its Friday proposal, DOE cited a spike in demand during the 2014 "polar vortex" that hit much of the U.S., which prompted utilities to run many coal plants that were slated for retirement. Without those plants, as many as 65 million people in the PJM market would have seen their power resources threatened, DOE said.

But the new regulatory pitch from the agency also fueled the growing feud between the gas and coal industries.

Paul Bailey, president and CEO American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, commended Perry for "initiating a rulemaking by FERC that will finally value the on-site fuel security provided by the coal fleet."

But the American Petroleum Institute, which also represents natural gas producers, said DOE drew the wrong conclusions from the 2014 event, and that forcing new mandates on the power market wasn't the solution.

"[A]s we review the proposal we are concerned the agency has mischaracterized the lessons learned from past weather-related events and appears to suggest that additional regulation is the answer where markets have already proven the ability to greatly benefit consumers and give our electric system the flexibility needed to meet constantly, and often rapidly, changing electricity demands," said API Executive Vice President and Chief Strategy Officer Marty Durbin in a statement.

FERC, which has struggled to integrate states' energy policies that aim to boost renewables or support aging nuclear power plants, has long maintained a fuel-neutral stance in the regional markets that it oversees. If it were to follow Perry's directive to create incentives for grid resilience to plants that maintain their own fuel inventories on site, it would be an implicit move at the national level to alter the electricity markets to support the fuels that both Perry and Trump have touted.

Montana regulator Travis Kavulla suggested on Twitter that rather than deal with the pressing issues facing the grid, "Instead, this reform is sort of the @ENERGY equivalent of the Oprah "you get a car, and you get a car. And you? A car!" approach."

However, FERC, whose members are appointed by the president and operate as an independent body, isn't obligated to implement the specific policy pushed by Perry. The commission will so be back to operating with a full five members in the coming weeks, with a Republican majority.

"FERC's going to follow its own procedures," said Marc Spitzer, a Republican former FERC commissioner. "It would be a mistake for people to assume that this is going to be some partisan Republican rubber stamp given the way FERC works."

FERC can spend months or years digging into complex issues that underpin the power markets, and its commissioners tend to seek common ground with each other to ensure that its rules are clear and ensure long-lasting regulations that give utilities stability to plan their operations.

"Is someone really going to invest [billions of dollars] when it's a 3-2 vote that partisans and the parties can flip next year? Is that a good forum for investment as opposed to a 5-0 order?" Spitzer said.

FERC declined to say when the agency last received a rulemaking from DOE using Section 403.

To view online click here.

Back

Gas, oil, renewables, utility groups ask FERC to lengthen debate on DOE pricing rule

Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/02/2017 05:43 PM EDT

Nearly a dozen energy-related trade associations are pleading with FERC today to pump the breaks on an Energy Department request for rules that would benefit nuclear and coal-fired power plants, calling the Trump administration's proposed timeline "unreasonable on its face."

DOE last week asked FERC to quickly implement a proposal mandating payments to power plants for their on-site fuel stocks. Today, representatives of oil, natural gas, wind, solar and other sectors were unified in their opposition to that time frame.

"This is one of the most significant proposed rules in decades related to the energy industry and, if finalized, would unquestionably have significant ramifications for wholesale markets under the Commission's jurisdiction," wrote the 11 groups, including the American Petroleum Institute, Solar Energy Industries Association and Electric Power Supply Association. DOE's time frame is "wholly unreasonable and insufficient to allow for an informed consideration of the significant issues proposed therein."

DOE directed FERC to take "final action" on the proposal within 60 days of its publication in the Federal Register, and make it take effect within 30 days after that. Alternately, DOE said regulators should institute it as an interim final rule with the potential for later changes.

The groups, which have asked for FERC to convene a technical conference and offer a 90-day comment period, said the commission "is justified in setting its own schedule for seeking comments on the NOPR, should it choose to notice it or a similar proposed rule for comment at all."

WHAT'S NEXT: The timeline on DOE's proposed rule will start once it's published in the Federal Register, but it is unclear when that might be.

To view online click here.

Back

White House: Trump to allow foreign ships to supply Puerto Rico Back

By Colin Wilhelm | 09/28/2017 08:59 AM EDT

President Donald Trump will grant a 10-day waiver to the Jones Act to allow non-U.S.-flagged ships to transport supplies to Puerto Rico in a bid to speed the commonwealth's recovery from Hurricane Maria's devastation.

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders announced the waiver Thursday morning via Twitter and said "it will go into effect immediately."

Puerto Rico had petitioned the Department of Homeland Security for a waiver as it struggles with shortages of water and fuel. The administration denied that request two days ago, and the president told reporters Wednesday that, "we have a lot of shippers and a lot of people and a lot of people who work in the shipping industry that don't want the Jones Act lifted."

Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló had continued to press the U.S. government for a waiver, including on morning cable news television on Thursday. Senate Republicans John McCain of Arizona and Marco Rubio of Florida also called for the relief, as did most congressional Democrats.

Later Thursday morning House Democrats pushed Trump for more.

"The waiving of the Jones Act was a good idea, but we want to stretch it out to be longer than ... 10 days," Rep. Jose Serrano (D-N.Y.) said. "Much longer than that."

McCain and Sen. Mike Lee (R-Utah) introduced legislation today to permanently exempt Puerto Rico from the Jones Act.

Lawmakers argued that more help was needed from the military as well, needling Trump over reports from Puerto Rico that there's not enough support from the federal government to distribute supplies sitting in the capital of San Juan.

The military response continues to gradually ramp up after the repeated calls from Congress and the commonwealth government.

The deputy commander for the regional Department of Defense command coordinating relief efforts, Brig. Gen. Rich Kim, is scheduled to arrive in Puerto Rico on Thursday. The USS Comfort, a naval hospital ship, will depart Norfolk, Va., on Friday for Puerto Rico.

But that didn't satisfy lawmakers calling for more.

In a letter sent Thursday afternoon, Rubio pushed for Trump to use his constitutional authority as commander in chief to increase the military's involvement in coordinating disaster relief efforts.

"There is no clear command, control, and communication between local officials on the ground and federal agencies, and many roads and bridges remained unpassable, making it even more difficult for repair crews to restore power and communications to areas of the island outside of San Juan," Rubio wrote. That has resulted in "lifesaving supplies sitting in containers rather than being distributed upon arrival," he wrote.

"This unique situation requires a well-coordinated response led by the Department of Defense (DOD), which is the only entity capable of executing a recovery effort of this scale and complexity," he said. "I urge you, as commander-in-chief, to make DOD the lead agency in the ground phase of recovery efforts."

"We have the resources," said Congressional Hispanic Caucus Chair Michelle Lujan Grisham (D-N.M.), referring to the U.S.

The number of Americans affected by Hurricane Maria in the Caribbean is equivalent to "the combined populations of the states of Wyoming, Vermont and Alaska," she added. "I have no doubt that the responses to those states in this situation would be far different than the situation we're having today."

Several states have offered to help deploy their own personnel to help Puerto Rico, and the Congressional Hispanic Caucus chair said House Democrats were looking for ways to expedite that.

In an interview with CBS, Rene Plasencia, a Republican in the Florida state house who accompanied emergency responders to Puerto Rico, said those responders could not get transportation from officials on the ground to provide help.

"We've been trying to get [rescue] planes in [from Florida] since last Friday," Plasencia said.

Democrats also criticized Trump's remarks earlier this week that delivering emergency supplies to Puerto Rico is difficult because it's an island.

"Well, you built a golf course there so you certainly knew where it was," Rep. Luis Gutierrez (D-Ill.) said. He was referring to a Trump brand golf course that went bankrupt a few years after the president began his involvement with the project, leaving the commonwealth government on the hook for millions in debt.

"Mr. President, talk to your national security team," Serrano said. "They certainly had plans for 50 years to invade an island in the Caribbean," he said, referring to Cuba. "So they know how to get troops and the military into an island."

Talk has already begun in Congress around an aid package. Some on the left want a suspension of the law that Congress passed last year to allow the commonwealth to restructure its $70 billion in bond debt that also instituted an unpopular federal oversight board. But Republicans, who have promised ample disaster relief funding when a request comes from the Trump administration, would likely reject that.

Rep. Nydia Velazquez (D-N.Y.) estimated that $50-$70 billion would be needed to rebuild Puerto Rico, and Gutierrez pushed for the federal government to pick up the total bill for the cash-strapped island, likening it to a sick patient in the hospital.

"It's bankrupt," Gutierrez said. "There is no money in Puerto Rico to make copayments."

"This is Katrina 2017," he said.

Seung Min Kim contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

White House praises solar manufacturers in statement on trade decision Back

By Eric Wolff | 09/22/2017 01:15 PM EDT

The White House praised the role of U.S. solar manufacturing in providing "energy security and economic prosperity" in its response to a federal trade panel's finding today that will give President Donald Trump the final word on setting tariffs and quotas on solar imports.

In a unanimous vote, the U.S. International Trade Commission said domestic panel and cell makers had been harmed by cheap imports, agreeing with the petition filed by Suniva and SolarWorld USA.

"The President will examine the facts and make a determination that reflects the best interests of the United States," said Natalie Strom, a White House spokeswoman. "The U.S. solar manufacturing sector contributes to our energy security and economic prosperity."

Solar manufacturing made up 13 percent of the 260,000 jobs in the solar industry was the slowest growing segment between 2010 and 2016, according to the 2016 National Solar Job Census from the nonprofit Solar Foundation.

WHAT'S NEXT: The commission will send recommendations for tariffs to the president by Nov. 13.

To view online click here.

Back

Suniva, SolarWorld modify remedy proposal in trade case Back

By Eric Wolff | 09/28/2017 07:20 PM EDT

Suniva and SolarWorld USA are pressing a U.S. trade panel to recommend that President Donald Trump institute either a floor price for imported solar equipment or tariffs plus a quota that caps the amount of solar panels and cells that can enter the country.

The two solar panel manufacturers filed a joint brief to the U.S. International Trade Commission, and each recommended different remedies, though they said that either option could be selected.

Suniva recommends a price floor for all solar modules that starts at 74 cents per watt and declines over the four years of the tariff, as well as tariffs for both modules and the solar cells. SolarWorld said it was seeking a a quota of 220 MW on imported cells and 5,700 MW on imported modules.

"Both co-petitioners agree that an effective remedy must include either the co-petitioners' requested tariff plus Suniva's requested module floor price or the co-petitioners' requested tariff plus SolarWorld's requested quota," the companies said in a joint statement.

Briefs were due on Wednesday to the ITC, and the companies publicly released their proposals to today, excluding proprietary company information.

The ITC voted unanimously last week that low-cost imports had harmed the domestic solar manufacturing industry. Under the "safeguard" provisions of the Trade Act, Trump will have the final say in what tariffs to impose.

WHAT'S NEXT: The commission will have a hearing on remedies on Oct. 3.

To view online click here.

Back

Biofuel producers unite against potential EPA biodiesel cuts Back

By Eric Wolff | 09/27/2017 06:57 PM EDT

Biofuels producers and their farm-state backers in Congress are keeping the pressure on EPA, accusing the agency of betraying President Donald Trump's promises to back the Renewable Fuel Standard after the agency signaled it would cut its biodiesel volume mandates.

EPA's Tuesday notice seeking input on whether to reduce the already set 2018 biomass-based biodiesel requirement and shrink the mandate in 2019 is drawing opposition from both biodiesel and ethanol producers, who say EPA's move marks its second attempt to undermine the program this year.

The new EPA notice has already driven down prices for biofuel credits, which are used by refiners to meet the obligations under the RFS. That's a boon to refiners like CVR Energy, the company owned by former Trump adviser Carl Icahn who had joined with other fuel processors like Valero Energy earlier this year in an unsuccessful effort to shift the compliance burden of the RFS away from their companies.

Trump has repeatedly offered public support for ethanol producers and the RFS, and just last month, he told Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) to assure Iowans he had their backs on the RFS — a position Trump staked out early in his presidential campaign and which helped him carry Iowa and other Midwestern states.

On Wednesday, Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) blasted the new EPA move, saying in a letter to Trump that the biodiesel cut would be "bad for American farmers, American manufacturing and American rural communities," adding that she hoped "that your EPA has not forgotten about the pledges that were made to my constituents and to farmers across the country."

That letter came a day after Grassley said the proposal "seems like a bait-and-switch from the EPA's prior proposal and from assurances from President Trump himself and Cabinet secretaries in my office. ... This all gives me a strong suspicion that Big Oil and oil refineries are prevailing, despite assurances to the contrary."

And biodiesel makers are drawing strong support from the ethanol industry, who see the EPA's move as a step toward undercutting the RFS.

"This would undermine renewable fuel production in the U.S. and cause severe harm to our friends in the biodiesel industry," Robert Walther, vice president of federal advocacy for ethanol producer POET, told POLITICO. "That harm would radiate throughout the entire biofuel value chain from starch biofuel plants, to cellulosic facilities now scaling up, to the corn and soybean farmers who voted overwhelmingly for Trump."

In its Tuesday notice, EPA relied on letters from Valero, the American Petroleum Institute, and the American Fuel and Petrochemical Manufacturers to argue the agency expects biodiesel prices to climb because of the expiration of a tax credit last year — as well as the new tariffs the administration is putting on biodiesel imports from Argentina and Indonesia.

As a result, the agency asked for comment on revising down the amount of biodiesel to be used in 2018 by 15 percent, and on setting 2019 biodiesel requirements possibly as low as the 1 billion gallon floor laid out in the law, less than half the original 2018 level of 2.1 billion gallons.

Biodiesel credits are linked to the ethanol credits — called Renewable Identification Numbers — since U.S. ethanol producers typically fall short of supplying the volumes required under the RFS program. Oil refiners then must buy biodiesel RINs to meet requirements, according to research by University of Illinois economist Scott Irwin.

While corn ethanol credit prices are cheaper than biodiesel RINs, the two tend to move in tandem, so the effect of EPA's notice on RIN prices for ethanol, advanced biofuel and biodiesel was immediate: a 20 percent decline in prices for credits of biodiesel and ethanol after EPA's notice, according to the fuel price tracking service OPIS.

The proposal to cut the biomass-based fuel shocked the biodiesel makers such as Gene Gebolys, CEO of World Energy, who said the industry "froze" as soon as the notice came out.

"The more baffling part is Trump has been consistently supportive of the RFS, over and over and over and over again, he has been supportive of the RFS," he said. "This has been a frontal assault on the RFS. You have to ask yourself, is EPA taking direction from the White House or the oil industry?"

EPA also did not respond to a request for comment. Nor did API or Valero, both of whom EPA cited in its notice, although the AFPM trade association was pleased by the action.

"EPA is on the right track in adjusting renewable fuel requirements," AFPM CEO Chet Thompson said in a statement. "This proposal more appropriately advances Congress's stated purpose of bolstering America's energy independence. American drivers shouldn't have to shoulder more costs to help foreign biofuel producers."

But ethanol producers think EPA may be putting key states in play if it follows through and makes cuts to biodiesel.

"If I am a Democrat thinking of taking Trump on in Iowa and Wisconsin in 2020, I am licking my chops," Walther from POET said.

To view online click here.

Back

Grijalva asks Interior IG to include Zinke's wife in travel probe Back

By Esther Whieldon | 10/02/2017 04:10 PM EDT

Two House Democrats are calling on the Interior Department's inspector general to investigate how often Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's wife joined him on taxpayer-funded charter or military flights in light of her involvement in a Republican Senate campaign.

Lolita Zinke is chairing the campaign of Troy Downing, a businessman who is vying to unseat Sen. Jon Tester next year.

"Because the secretary's spouse is leading a senate campaign in Montana, tax-payer funded travel for Mrs. Zinke, especially to or from Montana, deserves heightened scrutiny," wrote Raúl M. Grijalva and Donald McEachin in a letter today to Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall, the top watchdog within Interior. Grijalva is the top Democrat on the House Natural Resources Committee, and McEachin is ranking member of its oversight subcommittee.

POLITICO reported earlier today that the IG's office has opened an investigation into Zinke's travels.

The inspector general's office has not decided on the scope of its investigation but it is "focused on the secretary's travel at this point," said Nancy DiPaolo, IG spokeswoman. The investigation, which was launched Friday, "is at its earliest phases," she said. "We'll likely be looking into travel, modes of travel, costs and schedules, etc."

To view online click here.

Back

STB clears way for California city to block oil train facility Back

By Lauren Gardner | 09/21/2016 06:41 PM EDT

The Surface Transportation Board declined this week to block a California city from rejecting a plan to build a facility that would enable more oil trains to pass through the area, but only because the project's owner was an energy company, not a railroad.

Oil refiner Valero Energy had petitioned the STB to step in and prevent Benicia, Calif., from denying the company permits to build the facility in the city, which is also home to one of the company's refineries.

Environmentalists cheered the Tuesday rejection as a victory in their effort to encourage local governments — which fear catastrophes like the oil train explosion in Lac Megantic, Quebec, that killed 47 people in 2013 — to reject projects that could bring vast quantities of crude oil through their communities.

The regulator is likely to find itself at the center of future high-profile cases like this since trains remain one of the most viable methods of transporting oil, much like the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has become a hotbed of controversy as green groups have sought to block permits for pipelines that ship fossil fuels.

But STB made it clear that its members rebuffed Valero in this instance only because it was not a rail carrier, nor was it handling transportation services for one, and therefore does not fall under the board's jurisdiction.

STB's decision that interstate commerce law doesn't allow it to preempt the Benicia government from denying the permits to Valero came hours ahead of a unanimous city council vote scuttling the project.

It's not yet clear whether Valero will take its fight to court. A company spokeswoman said executives are "considering our options moving forward."

"After nearly four years of review and analysis by independent experts and the city, we are disappointed that the city council members have chosen to reject the crude by rail project," Valero spokeswoman Lillian Riojas said.

STB's decision included guidance that even if Benicia had approved the permits, the bayside city near San Francisco wouldn't have carte blanche to impose conditions on Valero, since they could "unreasonably" bleed into operations by Union Pacific, the freight railroad the refiner planned to have service the offloading facility.

"As an initial matter, any attempt to regulate UP's rail operations on its lines would be categorically preempted," STB wrote. "Otherwise, state and local regulation is permissible where it does not unreasonably interfere with rail transportation."

If circumstances changed and the railroad were to build or own the offloading facility project, "then it would clearly be preempted by the federal law," Karen Torrent, federal legislative director at the Environmental Law and Policy Center, said of Benicia's permit denial.

The Association of American Railroads declined to comment on Tuesday's decision, but it had voiced its support for Valero's petition in July, expressing concern that a "patchwork" of rules among states and localities could stymie freight operations.

"This case now presents the Board with the situation where state and local permitting requirements are being applied to rail-served customer facilities with the purpose of controlling — and often preventing — rail transportation," AAR attorney Timothy J. Strafford wrote.

Jackie Prange, a Natural Resources Defense Council staff attorney, said the ruling has broader implications because local governments in California and the Pacific Northwest grappling with similar projects have monitored the Benicia case.

The San Luis Obispo County Planning Commission is scheduled to hold its final hearing Thursday on a proposal by refiner Phillips 66 to bring millions of gallons of crude per week into its Santa Maria refinery by train. The company asked the county last month to delay the hearing, anticipating that STB would not have issued its decision in the Benicia case by now, according to a local report.

Staff at the county commission have recommended that officials reject the project.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: House muddles through EPA-Interior amendments — Wehrum picked as EPA air chief — Florida hopes to avoid fuel shortages as Irma looms
Date: Friday, September 08, 2017 5:51:10 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 09/08/2017 05:48 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff, Alex Guillén, Esther Whieldon and Eric Geller

GLIMPSES INTO DECEMBER DEBATE: House lawmakers churned through about 70 of the 80 amendments related to EPA and Interior during a debate on a spending package H.R. 3354 \(115\) Thursday evening. Final votes on the overall measure will now occur next week, but the results so far offer some glimpse into what may happen during the forthcoming December government funding debate, so here are some highlights:

1. There's love for addressing park maintenance (a priority for Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke)! In a voice vote, lawmakers backed an amendment adding $9.7 million to address the backlog.
2. An effort to restore funding to EPA's environmental justice program by cutting from the Interior secretary's budget fell short by a vote of 190 to 218.
3. Rep. John Katko's amendment to restore $250 million in Clean Water State Revolving Funds, an infrastructure program that typically enjoys broad bipartisan support, passed by voice vote.
4. Republican Frank LoBiondo and Democrat Don Beyer's bipartisan push to block offshore drilling in a host of Atlantic sites came up short on a voice vote.
5. An amendment giving EPA $6 million to implement a long-term monitoring program for water quality of the waters affected by the Gold King Mine spill passed the House 220 to 191.
6. Rep. Scott Perry's amendment to block EPA from issuing any regulations under Section 115 of the Clean Air Act, an obscure section of the statute some fear could be used to force carbon rules, passed by voice vote.

Rather extraordinary: Rep. Don Young had to apologize after calling Democratic Rep. Pramila Jayapal a "young lady" who "doesn't know a damn thing what she's talking about" concerning his amendment blocking regulations on sport hunting and trapping in national preserves in Alaska. He apologized later, though his amendment passed 215 to 196. Video here.

Reminder: This bill won't become law in anything approaching its current form and likely won't resemble the Senate's version, so take its contents with a grain of salt. That said, a bunch of amendments will get votes next week.

TGIF EVERYONE! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and New York was home to the first ATM in the U.S. way back in 1969. For today: How many states have had a lawmaker serve as president pro tempore of the Senate? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

CONGRATS! ME's warmest wishes go out to our own Annie Snider and her husband, Joel, as they welcomed Henry Terhune Kirkland into the world in the wee hours of Tuesday morning. "He is passing all his tests with flying colors and we are quite certain he is the most incredible little guy ever!" Annie writes.

Pro subscribers: Are you getting all the content you want? Make sure your keywords are up to date and customized via your settings page at <http://politico.pro/1iDALk9>.

GOTTA GET RIGHT BACK TO WHERE WE WEHRUM: Pros learned it was coming in July, but Bill Wehrum, a George W. Bush-era EPA official who has represented a variety of energy industry interests at law firm Hunton & Williams, received President Donald Trump's formal nod Thursday to run EPA's powerful air office, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. He's been critical of EPA's authority to regulate greenhouse gases, even after the Supreme Court's 2007 ruling saying the agency did have such authority. Democrats blocked his nomination from proceeding in the Senate during the Bush administration, though the threshold has since been lowered to just a majority level to clear the chamber.

FLORIDA PREPS FOR IRMA: EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, seeking to ensure there's enough fuel for Florida as Hurricane Irma bears down on it, on Thursday extended a fuel waiver for summer reformulated fuel requirements for 38 states through Sept. 30, Pro's Ben Lefebvre and Bruce Ritchie report. "It was important to send a message I think to the citizens of Florida but also those producing gasoline they would have certainty to the end of September with respect to these issues," Pruitt said in an interview. "And we'll do it beyond that obviously if necessary. We have the authority to do that." That comes as Florida Gov. Rick Scott told reporters the state was working to mitigate any potential fuel shortages. "While we are making progress, you will see lines and outages, unfortunately," he added. "I know this is frustrating. We are laser-focused on how we get as much fuel as possible to our ports while they remain open."

Getting Superfund sites ready: Perhaps learning a lesson from Hurricane Harvey, EPA said Thursday evening it's assessing 80 Superfund sites from Miami to North Carolina for potential vulnerabilities to the impending storm. The agency also said it has 43 Region 2 personnel and 34 from Region 4 responding to the storm.

Pruitt: 'Not now': Pruitt also told CNN Thursday now is not the time to discuss whether climate change has exacerbated these hurricanes. "To have any kind of focus on the cause and effect of the storm; versus helping people, or actually facing the effect of the storm, is misplaced," he said. Instead, the focus should be on ensuring access to clean water and protecting Superfund sites, among other issues, he said. His comments echo those made by Energy Secretary Rick Perry last week.

Cornyn won't go there either: Texas' John Cornyn, the Senate's No. 2 Republican, told ME he wasn't sure if climate change exacerbated the storm that slammed his state last week. "Beats the heck out of me," he said. "I've never read anything on [that] point." Asked if it people should be debating the link right now, he said: "It's a free country."

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xaoDCa> **

IF I WAS A RICH MAN, YEAH I'D HAVE ALL THE ARPA-E: Microsoft co-founder

Bill Gates lauded DOE's ARPA-E program and urged strong congressional support for what he called the potential "key" to major energy breakthroughs. "Private companies depend on public research," he wrote on his personal blog. "ARPA-E is bringing private investors to the table, and it is delivering results." Gates' strong endorsement comes as a bipartisan group of House lawmakers, including top Science ranking member Eddie Bernice Johnson, introduced legislation H.R. 3681 \(115\) authorizing reasonable growth in funding for ARPA-E through 2022.

A WARNING ON GRID HACKS: Senior cybersecurity officials warned Thursday that hackers are growing more audacious in exploiting dangerous links between critical infrastructure systems and the business networks of their operators. "We have control systems that are connected to business systems," said John Felker, the director of the Department of Homeland Security's cyber watch center, during a panel at the Intelligence and National Security Summit. "The biggest thing we see is that vulnerability of that connection." Some sectors, he said, "have done a good job of segregating that, but others have not." His comments came one day after Symantec said that suspected Russian hackers may have begun a new phase of power company hacking. Scott Smith, head of the FBI's Cyber Division, said, "This is an area that there's no easy solutions to."

STEPPING UP FOR HARVEY RELIEF: Texas oil and gas companies have contributed $27.3 million toward Hurricane Harvey relief efforts, according to the Texas Oil and Gas Association. Contributions include: $1 million from Anadarko; $1 million from Chevron; $5 million from ConocoPhillips; up to $10.3 million from Exxon Mobil; $1 million from Koch; $1 million from Shell and $1 million from Valero. The funding will go to various charities and other relief organizations.

HOEVEN PRAISES TRUMP'S REFINERY SPEECH: Count Sen. John Hoeven among the fans of Trump's Wednesday speech at a North Dakota refinery. "I thought it was a good message and it's helpful for what we're trying to do," Hoeven told ME, adding he wasn't disappointed by the lack of energy-specific chatter. But the North Dakota Republican didn't take ME's bait on how he felt about Trump calling his Democratic colleague Heidi Heitkamp a "good woman" during the speech.

SENATE SAVES SOME CLIMATE FUNDING: The Senate Appropriations Committee added $10 million for the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change after Republican Sens. Lamar Alexander and Susan Collins bucked their party to support an amendment to the panel's State and Foreign Operations bill Thursday. But the committee did not restore any funds to the Green Climate Fund, which aims to help developing countries adapt to the effects of climate change.

CLEAN POWER PLAN REPEAL EXPECTED THIS FALL: Pruitt expects to sign a proposed repeal of the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan "in the fall of 2017," Pro's Alex Guillén reports, citing a new court filing. The agency offered no additional details on its repeal effort, which has been under review by OMB since June 8.

WYOMING TRESPASS LAW VIOLATED FIRST AMENDMENT, COURT RULES: Collecting environmental information on public lands is a protected form of First Amendment speech, the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Thursday. A three-judge panel struck down a Wyoming law setting strong punishments for anyone who crossed private lands in order to get to public lands to collect information, which includes taking water or soil samples, making observational notes or snapping photos. "Although trespassing does not enjoy First Amendment protection, the statutes at issue target the 'creation' of speech by imposing heightened penalties on those who collect resource data," the court ruled. Trespassers on private land can still be prosecuted under the state's weaker general trespassing law, but a special law targeting trespassers who gather environmental information is unconstitutional, the court noted.

STICKING AROUND: Legal challenges to the delay of an Obama-era BLM methane rule will stay in California rather than moving to Wyoming, as Interior requested, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. Litigation over the original underlying regulation, known as the venting and flaring rule, are still playing out in Wyoming but Magistrate Judge Elizabeth Laporte of the U.S. District Court for Northern California said the two issues are rather different and likely would not be combined anyway.

Speaking of methane, eight Senate Democrats led by Sheldon Whitehouse sent a letter to Pruitt asking for information on his reported plans to enforce EPA's separate methane emissions standards for new oil and gas wells on a "case by case" basis.

INDUSTRY PONDERING BREAKING 15B GALLON ETHANOL BARRIER: Pruitt has set off an ethanol industry debate about lifting the volume requirement beyond the 15 billion gallon conventional biofuel limit established under the Renewable Fuel Standard. "We're all just starting to talk about it as a broad industry," Growth Energy's Emily Skor tell ME. "You've got the head of the EPA saying well you could consider a reset beyond 15 billion gallons." Pruitt told Radio Iowa last month that he would consider going beyond the limit set by Congress if biofuel volumes are reset in two years' time. Skor said it was the second time the administrator made a such a remark. "The first time you don't know, did he mean to say that?" she said. "The second time well, he did mean to say that."

It's all about demand: EPA told ME in a statement, "Administrator Pruitt believes that RFS volume obligations should be reflective of actual demand. As Administrator Pruitt told Radio Iowa, if demand exceeds current statutory limits, then the reset volumes will be reflective of that fact. However, much work remains to be done before we can come to this type of conclusion."

ETHANOL WANTS FEDS TO RESPOND TO BRAZIL ETHANOL DUTIES : Growth Energy, the Renewable Fuels Association and the U.S. Grains Council are collaborating on letters to U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue asking them to respond to ethanol quotas imposed by Brazil last month. The groups have not released the letters to the media, but Skor told ME, "What we're saying to the government is, here's the impact and we need your help." Brazil set a 20 percent tariff on ethanol imported beyond 600 billion liters (158 million gallons), and the groups would like to see the tariff removed or the quota raised. The U.S. exported 277 million gallons of ethanol to Brazil in 2016, a sharp rise from the previous year, according to EIA. Skor said they make no specific ask of the administration, saying, "We don't want to be prescriptive right now with the U.S. government."

REPORT ROUNDUP! CLEAN ENERGY BOOMING OUT WEST: The Clean Energy Trust and Environmental Entrepreneurs released an analysis Thursday finding nearly 600,000 people are employed in clean energy jobs throughout the Midwest, up five percent since 2015 alone. That's more than double the number of computer programmers in the region, according to the groups.

FIXING INFRASTRUCTURE YIELDS BIG ENVIRONMENTAL BENEFITS:

Investing in significant infrastructure improvements over the next decade could fuel huge environmental benefits, according a report from the BlueGreen Alliance. Among them: 4.4 billion gallons of saved fuel; reducing leaked drinking water by 6 billion gallons and reducing overall carbon dioxide emissions by 12 percent. More here.

INTERIOR RELEASES RECREATION SURVEY: The Interior Department released a preliminary report Thursday that shows 40 percent of the U.S. population ages 16 and older partook in at least one wildlife recreation activity last year. While there were more wildlife watchers and anglers than in the last survey the Census Bureau conducted for the agency in 2011, hunting was down by 16 percent. The data from these reports is often used by agencies and companies to gauge business opportunities and for wildlife management decisions. Interior's Fish and Wildlife Service expects to issue the full data in early 2018.

DAINES PUSHES WILDFIRE REFORMS: Montana Republican Sen. Steve Daines urged new U.S. Forest Service Chief Tony Tooke to pursue immediate wildfire policy reforms as his state deals with ongoing devastating fires. "Fire season always reminds us that either we manage our forests, or our forests manage us," he wrote in a Thursday letter. "We need to focus our time and energy on pursuing reforms that better equip the U.S. Forest Service with the tools and resources needed to accomplish its goals."

GOT YOUR BACK! Kansas Sen. Pat Roberts ran interference to save Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski from a pack of energy reporters. Asked by the self-proclaimed newest Dodge City Globe reporter what she'd done for Kansas, the affable Alaskan replied: "I grew a sunflower this summer."

QUICK HITS

— Texas Chemical Plant Sued For Millions, First Responders Charge Gross Negligence. International Business Times.

— Climate Change Speeds Beach Erosion With Huge Storms. Bloomberg.

— As Hurricane Irma approaches, BP evacuates Gulf platform and drilling rig. Houston Chronicle.

— Florida cites complaints over Chevron gas prices as shortages mount. Reuters.

— Shailene Woodley says she was strip searched after Dakota pipeline arrest. ABC News.

— Former Wagoner County sheriff receives deferred sentence on reduced charge related to cash seizure during 2014 traffic stop. Tulsa World.

— Record-setting smoke haunts Seeley Lake. Missoulian.

HAPPENING TODAY

*crickets*

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In

'75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xaoDCa> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/09/house-muddles-through-epa-interior-amendments-024495>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump expected to pick Bush EPA official turned industry lawyer for agency's air office Back

By Alex Guillén | 07/24/2017 10:03 AM EDT

President Donald Trump is expected to nominate Bill Wehrum, a former George W. Bush-era EPA official, to run the agency's powerful air office, according to two sources outside the administration familiar with the plans.

While Wehrum would bring critical knowledge of EPA's workings and environmental law, he also represents several high-profile industry groups in lawsuits challenging numerous Obama-era EPA regulations, meaning he may face recusal and conflict issues similar to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt.

Wehrum served as acting assistant administrator for the Office of Air and Radiation from 2005 to 2007. Bush pulled Wehrum's formal nomination to that post after Democrats blocked him as too industry-friendly, though the new simple majority threshold on nominees likely will prevent that from happening again. Wehrum spent 2001-2005 as counsel to Jeff Holmstead, Bush's first air administrator. Holmstead emerged last month as a possible Trump pick to be EPA deputy administrator, though coal lobbyist Andrew Wheeler remains the frontrunner for that job.

In a 2013 interview with Law360, Wehrum said that despite the Supreme Court's 2007 ruling that said EPA has the authority to regulate greenhouse gases, he believes "Congress never intended the EPA to address an issue such as climate change under the Clean Air Act."

He also called for lengthening the review cycle for National Ambient Air Quality Standards beyond five years — House Republicans recently passed a bill that would stretch that to ten years — and said the Obama administration tried to shift power away from the states and toward EPA, comments since echoed by Pruitt.

And in a 2015 Wall Street Journal editorial, Wehrum said the EPA-caused Gold King mine spill highlighted how the agency "often criminalizes actions that are nothing more than accidents, many far less damaging to the environment than the Animas River disaster." That spill fouled Colorado's Animas River and downstream areas for several weeks before water quality returned to normal and the river was reopened to recreational activities.

Wehrum pointed to the 2014 chemical spill that fouled drinking water for hundreds of thousands of West Virginia residents, which led to an EPA investigation and the company's bankruptcy, as an example of "unjust" treatment.

For the last decade Wehrum has been a partner at the high-powered D.C. law firm Hunton &

Williams, where he currently represents high-profile clients, including two leading oil and gas industry lobbying groups, in a number of ongoing lawsuits against EPA.

Wehrum represents the American Petroleum Institute in a challenge to EPA's methane rule for new oil and gas wells, as well as the separate legal battle over EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's decision to stay that rule while under review, where API has defended Pruitt's stay.

He also represents either API or American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers, a refinery sector group, in lawsuits over a 2015 rule limiting pollution from oil refineries; a "regional consistency" rule that governs how court rulings apply to nationwide EPA regulations; and permitting rules for Indian lands.

He represents the Utility Air Regulatory Group, a coalition that challenges EPA air regulations, in a legal challenge over an Obama-era rule meant to decrease explosions at chemical plants and other facilities. Pruitt has put that rule on hold while it is under review.

Wehrum helped the Gas Processors Association challenge two greenhouse gas reporting rules. He took an EPA boiler regulation to court on behalf of a coalition of industry groups, including the American Chemistry Council, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Forest & Paper Association. He is challenging an EPA emissions rule for brick manufacturers on behalf of an industry group. And he represented construction interests in various lawsuits against the Labor Department, including an ongoing challenge to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's 2016 silica exposure rule.

Wehrum did not immediately reply to a request for comment on Monday. EPA and White House spokespeople did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump picks Bush-era EPA official for air chief Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/07/2017 07:16 PM EDT

President Donald Trump has nominated Bill Wehrum, a George W. Bush-era EPA official who since has represented a variety of energy industry interests, to run EPA's powerful air office.

POLITICO reported in July that Wehrum was expected to receive the nod.

As head of EPA's Office of Air and Radiation, Wehrum will play a key role in undoing many of the Obama-era regulations most opposed by Republicans, including the Clean Power Plan, the 2015 ozone standard and forthcoming vehicle emissions rules. Wehrum has been critical of EPA's authority to regulate greenhouse gases, even after the Supreme Court's 2007 ruling saying EPA did have such authority.

He served as a counsel to Jeff Holmstead, Bush's first-term air chief, before replacing Holmstead in an acting capacity from 2005 to 2007. Bush nominated Wehrum to the job permanently, but Democrats blocked his nomination from proceeding in the Senate.

Wehrum spent the past decade as a partner at the Washington, D.C., law firm Hunton & Williams. His clients have included the American Petroleum Industry, American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers, the Utility Air Regulatory Group, the American Chemistry Council, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Forest & Paper Association.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will review Wehrum's nomination in what is certain to be a contentious process.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA extends fuel waivers to help Florida prep for Irma Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Bruce Ritchie | 09/07/2017 07:09 PM EDT

Florida is racing to stock up on gasoline before Hurricane Irma slams into its ports this weekend.

EPA on Thursday extended a fuel waiver for summer reformulated fuel requirements for 38 states through Sept. 30 to ensure gasoline is available in Florida in advance of Hurricane Irma. The move extends by 15 days a waiver EPA issued Aug. 31 in response to Hurricane Harvey, which badly damaged pipelines and refineries when it struck Texas.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt told POLITICO he was responding to requests from Florida Gov. Rick Scott and the oil industry because of shortages in Florida.

"It was important to send a message I think to the citizens of Florida but also those producing gasoline they would have certainty to the end of September with respect to these issues," Pruitt said in an interview Thursday. "And we'll do it beyond that obviously if necessary. We have the authority to do that."

A day earlier, EPA approved the Florida Department of Environmental Protection's request for a fuel dye waiver. That allows off-road diesel fuel to be used in on-road vehicles.

Florida Petroleum Council Executive Director David Mica applauded both moves.

"I think that [Administrator] Pruitt was deliberative and expeditious in historic fashion," Mica said. "They really jumped on it doing all they can to assist out there on several waiver requests."

Irma is currently expected to hit southeastern Florida early Sunday.

The storm will be a one-two punch for the region, coming mere weeks after Hurricane Harvey slammed into Texas and forced many of the refineries dotting the Gulf Coast to shut down. At one point last week, Harvey had forced 4 million barrels a day of Gulf Coast refining capacity offline.

"We know fuel is very important," Scott said earlier Thursday as he addressed Florida residents on the dangers of the storm. "We are devoting every state resource to address this.

"While we are making progress, you will see lines and outages, unfortunately," he added. "I know this is frustrating. We are laser-focused on how we get as much fuel as possible to our ports while they remain open."

Refinery outages and damaged pipelines in Harvey's wake forced fuel sellers to dip into inventories to meet demand. Between Aug. 25, the day Harvey made landfall in Texas, and Sept. 1, gasoline inventories on the East Coast fell 3.5 percent to 60.5 million barrels, according to the latest EIA data.

State-by-state figures are only available up to June, at which point Florida had about 34 million gallons of gasoline stored. At the time, wholesale gasoline consumption averaged 15.5 million gallons per day, according to EIA.

Emergency contractors for Florida secured 1.5 million gallons of fuel for immediate delivery and identified additional supply for the future, Scott's office said in a press release.

Florida is also searching for other fuel barges that can be diverted to Florida ports. Scott told the state's emergency response team to provide a military escort for a ship delivering fuel from a refinery in Mississippi to the Port of Tampa, the governor's office said. The governor said he also asked state police to escort gasoline trucks through traffic so they could quickly shuttle between fuel terminals and gas stations.

A gallon of regular gasoline now costs an average of $2.72 in Florida, 5 cents higher than the national average and 30 cents above where it was a week ago, according to AAA.

"Supplies are tight. Everyone is looking for fuel," said Ned Bowman, executive director for the Florida Petroleum Marketers and Convenience Stores Association, which represents gas stations in the Sunshine State. "Everyone is putting five gallons into their tanks, so that's stretching things."

But now that the Texas refineries are coming back up, Irma is threatening the more than two-dozen ports that receive the fuel they deliver across the Gulf. Florida's main fuel barge receiving centers are in Miami, Fort Lauderdale, Tampa and Jacksonville, according to EIA. The former two sites are on the southeastern tip of the peninsula, smack dab where Irma is forecast to make landfall.

"When you have back-to-back storms, it exacerbates logistics for distribution," said Mica, of the Florida Petroleum Council. "As [refineries] come up, that will help supply, but as the storm approaches, it does not allow vessel traffic, it does not allow fuel in."

To view online click here.

Back

EPA projects fall proposal to repeal Clean Power Plan Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/07/2017 02:59 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt expects to sign the proposal to repeal the Clean Power Plan "in the fall of 2017," the agency said in a court filing today.

The filing offered no other details on the Trump administration's plan to repeal the rule, which has been under review at the White House Office of Management and Budget since June 8.

EPA added that the CPP repeal's classification as a "long term action" in the July update to the Unified Agenda was inadvertent. Environmental groups had seized on that classification, which indicates rules will not progress within the following 12 months, to argue that the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals should issue its ruling on the Clean Power Plan rather than keep the lawsuit suspended indefinitely.

EPA said it will correct the classification error in the next edition of the Unified Agenda.

WHAT'S NEXT: The repeal proposal will most likely be released within the next few months.

To view online click here.

Back

Judge keeps methane waste rule delay lawsuit in California federal court Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/07/2017 04:35 PM EDT

A federal judge said today that legal challenges to the Interior Department's delay of an Obama-era methane waste rule will remain in a California court rather than be moved to Wyoming.

Interior had asked for the lawsuits to be transferred to a federal court in Wyoming where cases over the original regulation, also known as the venting and flaring rule, are still playing out.

But Magistrate Judge Elizabeth Laporte of the U.S. District Court for Northern California said she's keeping the case on her docket because, legally speaking, the two matters are rather distinct. Interior's delay relied on Section 705 of the Administrative Procedure Act, but the underlying rule does not, meaning the two cases likely would not be combined anyway, she concluded.

In addition, the lead challenger in the suit over the delay is the state of California, adding weight to the arguments to keep it in a California court.

Laporte noted she is "already familiar with the legal issues in this lawsuit" because it is very similar to the challenge to Interior's delay of its royalty valuation rule — which Laporte last week said violated Section 705 of the APA by not seeking public input first.

However, she stopped short of issuing a ruling in the methane case today.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Low expectations for energy action this fall in Congress — Superfund sites flooded in Houston area — Flurry of new nominees announced
Date: Tuesday, September 05, 2017 5:51:57 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 09/05/2017 05:49 AM EDT

THAT'S FALL FOLKS: Congress returns from its August recess today, but don't count on much energy work getting done this year given a jam-packed to-do list on other policy priorities, your ME host reports. September's daunting agenda includes lifting the debt ceiling, funding the government (or, more likely, kicking the can until December) and funding Hurricane Harvey relief efforts. Here's a breakdown of how the busy few months on the Hill will affect energy issues:

— Tax reform: Energy companies are closely watching the push for comprehensive tax reform that would slash the corporate tax rate significantly — but don't expect it to be accomplished this year. There seems to be little chance that congressional leaders will move a carbon capture and sequestration tax credit or extend tax incentives for several renewable energy technologies unless the broader tax overhaul falters.

— Appropriations: Speaker Paul Ryan said over recess that a short-term spending bill into December would "probably be necessary" but the familiar fights over policy riders is likely to be less intense this year now that Republicans control federal agencies. Democratic votes will almost certainly be necessary to pass spending legislation, giving the party more leverage to determine what riders make it in.

— Energy bill: Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Maria Cantwell are likely to keep pushing for a floor vote on their energy bill S. 1460 \(115\), but multiple observers say they've seen no inclination from Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to move the package this year. And that measure has no chance of passing the House in its current form. "There absolutely needs to be a bicameral discussion. It's not there yet," Christopher Guith, senior vice president for policy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said.

— Broader statutory overhauls: Look for additional hearings on this fall on overhauling statutes like the Renewable Fuel Standard and Antiquities Act, but any substantive push to move legislation will wait until next year, at the earliest.

— Nominations: The Senate cleared many pending nominations off its plate before August, but there's a new crop to consider (more on that below). A key question for how many of those nominations will be approved before the end of year will depend on whether Democrats continue to erect procedural hurdles that force Republicans to burn large amounts of floor time for each nominee.

What about Europe? Among the key questions across the pond this fall are whether whether the U.K. sticks to its plan to pull out of the European Atomic Energy Community when it leaves the European Union in March 2019. And, of course, climate negotiators will return to the table in November to try to hammer out rules on transparency and accounting aspects of the Paris agreement when they meet in Bonn to ensure nations — except the U.S., which is pulling out of the agreement — meet their emissions reduction pledges, POLITICO Europe's Sara Stefanini reports.

WELCOME TO TUESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and I hope everyone had a restful Labor Day! Way back when, Craig Meyers identified Alabama's John M. Patterson as the oldest living former governor. For today: What is the most recently-created country on Earth? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

** A message from Chevron: We're piloting a program that uses drones to keep an eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2grzhHE> **

SUPERFUND MESS IN TEXAS: EPA confirmed Saturday that aerial assessments found 13 of the 41 Superfund sites around Houston were flooded during Hurricane Harvey and suffered potential damage in the storm. "The EPA is going to get on top of that," Texas Gov. Greg Abbott said on "Fox News Sunday." "We are working with the EPA to make sure that we contain any of these chemicals harming anybody in the greater Houston area or any other place." That followed an Associated Press report documenting that seven of the sites in and around Houston had flooded and no EPA personnel had yet assessed them. The agency said Monday that 11 of the 13 flooded sites had not yet been inspected by officials, though the two that had did not require emergency cleanup actions. EPA did not respond to requests for comment on whether additional sites had been inspected, though a press release indicated officials visited three of the 11 outstanding flooded sites. AP video of the sites is here and EPA's page with updates on its hurricane response is here.

The agency hit back aggressively to the original AP story in an extraordinarily unusual and personal attack on one of the reporters who authored it. "Yesterday, the Associated Press' Michael Biesecker wrote an incredibly misleading story about toxic land sites that are under water," the statement began. EPA, without identifying any factual errors in the story, went on to say that "state agencies worked with responsible parties to secure Superfund sites before the hurricane hit." The agency declined to identify who authored the almost entirely unsigned statement when asked by POLITICO's Matthew Nussbaum.

Refineries begin coming back online: Many of the energy sector's largest refineries were making progress at restarting operations after shutting down last week. Exxon Mobil said in a Sunday update it was "making progress" at booting up its Baytown refinery, the second-largest U.S. fuel-making plant, with a refining capacity above 560,000 barrels a day. Colonial Pipeline Co. plans to restart its gasoline fuel lines in Texas today after restarting its main distillate line that was closed due to Harvey. The Energy Department said Monday eight Gulf Coast refineries — accounting for 11.4 percent of total U.S. capacity — remained closed, while eight others had begun the process of restarting. Meanwhile, the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement said nearly 7 percent of oil production and 8 percent of natural gas production remained shut-in in the Gulf of Mexico.

Tapped again: The Energy Department has so far authorized the sale of 5.3 million barrels of crude from the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve as of Monday, according to a release. Refineries receiving the emergency crude include: Phillips 66 Lake Charles (400,000 barrels sweet crude, 600,000 barrels sour crude); Marathon Petroleum Company (3 million barrels sweet crude); Valero Marketing and Supply Company (1 million barrels sweet crude) and Placid Refining Company LLC (300,000 barrels sweet crude). The shipments came from the West Hackberry and Bayou Choctaw sites.

Perry scoffs at climate link: Energy Secretary Rick Perry told CBS News on Friday that conversations about the storm's link to climate change were "secondary" to restoring services and saving lives of those affected. "This is not the time to be having this conversation," the former Texas governor said. "Everyone wants to run to the climate change debate, but that is very secondary at this particular time."

Immediate danger at Arkema passes: Authorities lifted an evacuation order for the immediate area surrounding a chemical plant at risk of exploding last week after executing a controlled burn of the remaining combustible containers stored on site. "The Crosby Fire Department and unified command has determined it is safe for residents to return to their homes," Arkema said early Monday. But questions about what happened at the Arkema site will continue, and Sen. Tom Carper, top Democrat on the Environment and Public Works Committee, asked EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt on Friday for information on the last time inspectors visited the site and whether he continued to support a two-year delay of a chemical safety rule he put on hold earlier this year.

MORE RETRIBUTION FOR MURKOWSKI'S HEALTHCARE VOTE? Pros learned several weeks ago that Pruitt had taken the unusual step of having a political appointee vet all new grant solicitations, but The Washington Post reports the agency placed a two-week long hold on all grants to Alaska — the same day Murkowski voted against the GOP healthcare bill. Agency staffers were told without explanation to stop all grants to EPA Region 10, in a move that was later narrowed to just Alaska.

NEXT WAVE OF NOMINEES ARRIVES: ICYMI, Trump announced nearly four dozen nominations late Friday night, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. A look at those of interest to ME readers:

— EPA's top water chief: David Ross, currently an assistant Wisconsin attorney general, has been a top state lawyer for both Wyoming and Wisconsin. He had stints at D.C. law firms from 2002 to 2014, mostly Crowell & Moring, and helped on challenges to EPA's Waters of the U.S. rule.

— EPA general counsel: Matt Leopold, who currently works at the Tallahassee law firm of Carlton Fields but previously worked in DOJ's environmental division. He's been involved with the civil trial team for the Deepwater Horizon disaster and advised clients on EPA's then-proposed Clean Power Plan.

— DOE's fossil fuels chief: Steven Winberg, who previously led research and development for CONSOL Energy. He's also been a member of DOE's National Coal Council and chaired the FutureGen Industrial Alliance. Back in 2013, he told a Pennsylvania paper he didn't think the Obama administration was putting enough money into coal and gas technologies.

— DOE's assistant secretary for electricity, delivery and energy reliability: Bruce Walker, who previously did stints at National Grid and Consolidated Edison, founded Modern Energy Insights, a company that assesses utilities' electric infrastructure risks.

— NOAA's number two: Timothy Gallaudet, a 32-year Navy veteran, was commander of the Navy's Meteorology and Oceanography Command and also served as deputy director of a Navy task force on climate change.

— Mine safety chief: David Zatezalo, a former coal company executive with Rhino

Resources, would run the Mine Safety and Health Administration. The Charleston Gazette-Mail reports his company "repeatedly clashed with federal regulators" in the aftermath of April 2010 explosion at Massey Energy's Upper Big Branch Mine that killed 29 miners.

— NASA chief: Oklahoma Republican Rep. Jim Bridenstine previously blamed the Obama administration for "gross misallocation" of funding on climate change research. Both Florida senators, Democrat Bill Nelson and Republican Marco Rubio, swiftly voiced opposition to his nomination.

STAFFING UP: James Danly, an associate with Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP since 2014, is expected to be named FERC's new general counsel as soon as today, Pro's Eric Wolff and Darius Dixon report, citing two industry sources. He graduated from Vanderbilt Law School in 2013 and clerked at the 6th Circuit for a year, according to his biography.

STICK AROUND FOR THE SHOW: Smart money is expecting that Congress will ultimately pass a short-term CR extending government funding into December, but the House still intends to move a spending package H.R. 3354 \(115\) that includes EPA and Interior funding this week. The House Rules Committee meets today at 4 p.m. to consider which of the 174 amendments filed to the Interior title will get floor time. Amendments on everything from a push to restore funding to the Green Climate Fund, a ban on using government funds to enforce an Obama-era methane rule and a prohibition on Interior and EPA from using unmanned planes remain in play.

TAKE A GLANCE! The Smart Electric Power Alliance is out today with its first-ever energy storage market snapshot. It finds there are 622 megawatts and 661 megawatt hours of installed energy storage across 2,399 systems nationally. Utilities added 207 megawatts and 257 megawatt hours in 2016 with the states of California, Indiana and Ohio leading the way.

MORE GERMAN MONEY IN AIR POLLUTION FIGHT: Chancellor Angela Merkel said Monday her government will double a fund meant to help cities cut air pollution to 1 billion euros, POLITICO Europe's Kalina Oroschakoff reports. It's part of an effort to fight air pollution in German cities without resorting to bans of diesel-powered cars that would draw the ire of the nation's powerful auto industry.

MOVERS, SHAKERS: Rob Thormeyer has joined the Utilities Technology Council as its first director of communications and advocacy; he was previously strategic advisor to former FERC commissioner Colette Honorable.

Steven Petersen, a 28-year Hill veteran in various capacities, is the new staff director for the House Natural Resources Subcommittee on Federal Lands; he'll replace Erica Rhoad, who is departing for opportunities in the private sector.

QUICK HITS

— China's Oil Lifeline to North Korea Targeted After Nuclear Blast. Bloomberg.

— U.S. gasoline prices slip as oil industry bounces back from Harvey. Reuters.

— Interior Secretary Zinke Connects With Local Communities in Protected Lands. Wall Street Journal.

— Pipeline builders want to create butterfly, bee habitats. Fayetteville Observer.

— Former Bush EPA Chief: Harvey Response Understaffed. Newsmax.

— Once-confidential oilfield data worth millions is about to hit the streets. Alaska Dispatch News.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

TUESDAY

12:00 p.m. — Press call on clean cars ahead of EPA hearing featuring Maine Attorney General Janet Mills, Contact: smichaels@ucsusa.org

4:00 p.m. — House Rules Committee meets to consider Make America Secure and Prosperous Appropriations Act, 2018, H.R. 3354, H-313

WEDNESDAY

9:00 a.m. — "Fostering Public-Private Innovations in the U.S. Water Market," A. O. Smith Corporation and The Water Council, CVC 201-00

10:00 a.m. — "Powering America: Reevaluating PURPA's \(Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act\) Objectives and its Effects on Today's Consumers," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee holds a hearing on various bills, 1334 Longworth

10:00 a.m. — "Examining the Scientific and Operational Integrity of EPA's IRIS \(Integrated Risk Information System\) Program," House Science Environment and Oversight subcommittees, Rayburn 2318

10:15 a.m. — "EPA Oversight: Unimplemented Inspector General and GAO Recommendations," House Energy and Commerce Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee, Rayburn 2322

11:00 a.m. — "Expediting Economic Growth: How Streamlining Federal Permitting Can Cut Red Tape for Small Businesses," House Small Business Committee, Rayburn 2360

THURSDAY

9:00 a.m. — "NAFTA and North American Energy: What Comes Next?" Atlantic Council, 1030 15th ST NW, 12th Floor

10:00 a.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing on three nominations, Dirksen 366

FRIDAY

*crickets*

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about energy, safety, and some truly high-flyin' doin'. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping to help keep a close eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2grzhbE> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/09/little-on-energy-horizon-this-fall-in-congress-024428>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Crowded schedule in Congress to put energy issues on hold Back

By Anthony Adragna | 09/05/2017 05:02 AM EDT

The overcrowded congressional calendar is squelching the chances that any substantial energy legislation will move ahead this fall, with lawmakers consumed with tax reform, lifting the debt ceiling and passing aid packages to rebuild the battered Gulf Coast.

Instead, congressional aides and observers expect that the once-routine work of approving agency nominees and funding federal agencies may be the biggest accomplishments for the energy world.

"It's not just an energy thing, but there's really not time for anything outside of those must-dos," said Christopher Guith, senior vice president for policy at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Longer-term initiatives like revamping the Renewable Fuel Standard or the Antiquities Act may generate some hearings in the coming weeks, but any substantive push to move legislation will slip into next year at the earliest. And efforts to advance an energy bill will also have to wait until next year since the House has not engaged on the subject, even as Sen. Lisa Murkowski, chairwoman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, has pushed her chamber's leadership to fast-track the legislation for a floor vote.

Both fossil fuel and renewable energy interests are closely watching the simmering fight over tax reform, although many observers doubt that congressional leadership will succeed in getting any major legislation passed this year.

"Energy provisions in tax legislation will preoccupy lobbyists, but any attempt at tax bill passage will wait until next year," said Paul Bledsoe, a former Senate Finance Committee staffer now with the Progressive Policy Institute.

Energy companies support slashing the corporate tax rate, which President Donald Trump has floated dropping to 15 percent, below the 20 percent rate proposed by House Republicans. Trump is planning to pitch the tax cuts on Wednesday with a speech in North Dakota, home of the Bakken Shale.

And odds are slim that efforts to keep a carbon capture and sequestration tax credit or extend tax incentives for several renewable energy technologies will have enough momentum to move on their own — unless congressional leaders abandon the effort for a comprehensive tax package.

The House has teed up a broad spending package, H.R. 3354 \(115\), including EPA and Interior funding, for floor consideration when it returns, and it's already passed its Energy title. But the Senate remains sharply divided, and most observers expect a short-term spending package will be needed to fund the government into December, when the real spending showdown will happen.

And while policy riders have riled the appropriations process over the last several years, those fights may subside now that Republicans control federal agencies, giving them a freer hand to implement their policy preferences. Republicans may back off any controversial riders to avoid provoking Democratic lawmakers, whose votes will be needed to pass any spending legislation.

"Things seem to be so chaotic that it's going to take a lot of bipartisan support to get anything done," said Athan Manuel, director of the Lands Protection Program at the Sierra Club. "That gives Democrats a lot of leverage."

The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will push for the full chamber to take up the bipartisan nuclear energy (S. 512 \(115\)) and conservation (S. 1514 \(115\)) bills. And a committee aide said Chairman John Barrasso will "continue working to limit government overreach" and "examine new and innovative technologies to protect America's air, water and species."

In the House, Rep. John Shimkus expects the bills addressing nuclear waste management, drinking water and brownfields that passed out of his House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee earlier this year could reach the floor under suspension in September.

"When I was fighting with Harry Reid, I just pledged to myself that I was going to outlast him. I thought to myself, the guy is 20 years older than me, I'll just outlast him," he told a local newspaper last month, referring to the long battle over nuclear waste and the stalled Yucca Mountain repository project. "He's retired, and now the door is open to get this done."

The House Natural Resources Committee plans to tackle a host of bills regarding onshore and offshore drilling, as well as hardrock mining, that would loosen restrictions and grant greater control to the states. "Once these are drafted, they'll hopefully get a legislative hearing on the sooner side with the intention of moving through the committee process to make it to the floor," a committee aide told POLITICO. "We could see these bills in subcommittee hearings and marked up before the end of this year."

The Senate cleared much of the backlog of nominees before breaking for August recess, but moving White House appointees through the chamber in the coming weeks and months will hinge on whether Democrats continue to draw out the process through procedural hurdles. Among those waiting in the wings: Susan Bodine for EPA enforcement chief; a host of Energy and Interior nominations; NRC nominees Annie Caputo, David Wright and current Commissioner Jeff Baran; and FERC nominees Kevin McIntyre and Richard Glick.

The FERC picks, along with the selections of Joseph Balash to be an Interior assistant secretary and Ryan Nelson to be Interior's solicitor, will get a hearing Thursday with the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

The list of nominations to consider grew with a flurry of late-night Sept. 1 nominations from

Trump that included: Matthew Leopold as EPA general counsel; David Ross as EPA's top water official; Steven Winberg as assistant Energy secretary for fossil energy; Bruce Walker as assistant Energy secretary for electricity, delivery and energy reliability; David Zatezalo as head of the U.S. mine safety agency; Timothy Gallaudet for the number two position at NOAA; and Rep. Jim Bridenstine (R-Okla.) to be NASA administrator.

Murkowski and Sen. Maria Cantwell will keep pushing for floor time on their energy bill, S. 1460 \(115\), but several observers say they've seen no interest from Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell in moving any energy-related measures this year — and there's been even less engagement in the House.

There's not a chance the current iteration of the energy package would be taken up by the House, Guith said. "There absolutely needs to be a bicameral discussion. It's not there yet."

To view online click here.

Back

Ryan: 'I don't think anyone's interested in having a shutdown' Back

By Louis Nelson | 08/23/2017 03:09 PM EDT

House Speaker Paul Ryan said Wednesday he did not think Republican lawmakers are interested in shutting down the government over funding for President Donald Trump's long-promised border wall.

Trump told the crowd at a rally Tuesday night in Phoenix, "believe me, if we have to close down our government, we're building that wall," a promise that prompted the crowd to chant "build that wall."

But Ryan (R-Wis.), who spoke to reporters during a visit to Intel Corp. offices in Oregon, said the House has already passed border security legislation that includes money for a wall. He said lawmakers shouldn't have to choose between keeping the government open and making good on the president's border security pledge.

"I don't think a government shutdown is necessary, and I don't think most people want to see a government shutdown, ourselves included. And Congress, in the House, has already done its work on this issue. There are very legitimate problems and concerns on the border that need to be addressed," Ryan said. "I don't think anyone's interested in having a shutdown. I don't think it's in our interests to do so while we work on doing what we actually said we would do, what we've done already in the House and we need to do, which is to control our border. So I don't think you have to choose between the two."

Congress must pass funding legislation by the end of next month in order to avoid a government shutdown, and lawmakers are scheduled to have just 12 working days after their Sept. 5 return before the deadline hits. Ryan said he expects Congress will keep the government open via a short-term continuing resolution, as opposed to a full appropriations bill, because the schedule won't offer sufficient time for the Senate to process the latter.

"The fact is though, given the time of year it is and the rest of the appropriations we have to do, we're going to need more time to complete our appropriations process, particularly in the Senate. So that's something that I think we all recognize and understand, that we're going to have to have some more time to complete our appropriations process," the speaker said.

Asked if that meant a continuing resolution, he replied, "I think that will probably be necessary, yes, because I can't imagine the Senate will be able to process the appropriations bill as quickly as the House is."

To view online click here.

Back

Trump's EPA attacks AP reporter in personal terms Back

By Matthew Nussbaum | 09/03/2017 05:52 PM EDT

President Donald Trump's habit of singling out reporters for attacks is being adopted by his federal agencies, with the Environmental Protection Agency excoriating an Associated Press reporter in unusually personal terms on Sunday after the reporter wrote a story that cast the agency in an unfavorable light.

"Yesterday, the Associated Press' Michael Biesecker wrote an incredibly misleading story about toxic land sites that are under water," the statement began. "Despite reporting from the comfort of Washington, Biesecker had the audacity to imply that agencies aren't being responsive to the devastating effects of Hurricane Harvey. Not only is this inaccurate, but it creates panic and politicizes the hard work of first responders who are actually in the affected area."

The article in question, which was written by Biesecker and his AP colleague, Jason Dearen, noted that seven toxic Superfund sites around Houston had been flooded during Hurricane Harvey. The Saturday report also noted that the "EPA had not yet been able to physically visit the Houston-area sites," which the EPA confirmed, arguing the sites were not accessible.

Dearen appears to have reported from on the ground in Texas, and he was not singled out by the EPA statement.

The statement went on to say that "state agencies worked with responsible parties to secure Superfund sites before the hurricane hit."

It then continued the attacks on Biesecker, saying he "has a history of not letting the facts get in the way of his story" and noting that a July story he wrote inaccurately characterized an interaction between EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and Dow Chemical CEO Andrew Liveris. Biesecker's story, based on EPA schedules, initially said the two met for half an hour at a Houston hotel.

A spokesperson for the EPA later said the meeting was canceled and that the two had only a "brief introduction in passing." The AP issued a correction to the story.

The bulk of Sunday's EPA statement was unsigned. It did, however, include one portion attributable to associate administrator Liz Bowman.

"Once again, in an attempt to mislead Americans, the Associated Press is cherry-picking facts, as EPA is monitoring Superfund sites around Houston and we have a team of experts on the ground working with our state and local counterparts responding to Hurricane Harvey," Bowman's statement said. "Anything to the contrary is yellow journalism."

The statement did not point to any specific factual inaccuracies in Saturday's story, besides accusing Biesecker of leaving out information about the EPA's other efforts to monitor the toxic land sites, and the AP has not offered any corrections on the piece.

The EPA declined Sunday to provide additional information about who drafted the statement, with EPA spokesperson Amy Graham calling the statement "pretty self-explanatory" in an email to POLITICO.

Bowman later followed up with an additional email to POLITICO.

"We understand you are very focused on our press release; we hope you will apply the same focus to the facts, which include that a national reporter from a wire service publishing [sic] inaccurate and misleading stories about the agency and it's [sic] staff on the ground," Bowman wrote. "We think that is more important than who drafted a press release."

The Associated Press on Sunday evening pushed back on the EPA's claims.

"AP's exclusive story was the result of on-the-ground reporting at Superfund sites in and around Houston, as well as AP's strong knowledge of these sites and EPA practices," it said in a statement. "We object to the EPA's attempts to discredit that reporting by suggesting it was completed solely from 'the comforts of Washington' and stand by the work of both journalists who jointly reported and wrote the story."

To view online click here.

Back

EPA delays chemical facility safety rule until 2019 Back

By Alex Guillén | 06/12/2017 12:26 PM EDT

EPA is giving refineries, chemical plants, fertilizer makers and other facilities until 2019 to comply with an Obama-era rule meant to prevent explosions and other disasters at those sites and protect nearby communities.

The Risk Management Program rule was finalized in January and had been set to go into effect in March as part of the federal government's response to the West, Texas, fertilizer plant explosion that killed 15 people in 2013.

"We are seeking additional time to review the program, so that we can fully evaluate the public comments raised by multiple petitioners and consider other issues that may benefit from additional public input," Administrator Scott Pruitt said in a statement. In a Federal Register notice to be published later, Pruitt gave regulated facilities until Feb. 19, 2019 to comply with the rule, although any changes to its requirements likely will push that back even further.

In a separate response to comments, EPA dismissed complaints that the delay poses environmental, safety or national security risks.

"EPA's legal mandate ... is not to ratchet up regulatory requirements to prevent all conceivable accidental releases regardless of the burden of implementation and regardless of how such regulations fit in overall chemical safety," the agency said, adding that the law requires the agency to be "reasonable."

Sen. Jim Inhofe (R-Okla.) pushed unsuccessfully to kill the RMP rule via a Congressional Review Act resolution earlier this year after arguing it would reveal too much sensitive information to terrorists. His resolution never received a vote.

WHAT'S NEXT: EPA will continue its review of objections to the rule raised by industry groups and companies.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA puts grants under scrutiny, cuts some funding Back

By Annie Snider | 08/24/2017 02:11 PM EDT

The Trump EPA is undertaking a wide-ranging review of all grants to nonprofits, universities and other institutions, and has already decided to end multiple awards made by the Obama administration.

The Bay Journal, a 27-year-old non-profit news organization that covers Chesapeake Bay cleanup efforts, learned Wednesday that EPA will end a six-year grant it awarded the organization two years ago. The Journal, which began as an EPA-funded newsletter, was due to receive its next annual distribution of $325,000 in February.

"It's not unprecedented for a new administration to conduct a thorough review of the previous administration's funding decisions, which is currently ongoing for all grants, including those that are mid-cycle," EPA spokeswoman Amy Graham said in a statement, confirming that multiple mid-cycle grants are already on the chopping block. "We are focused on ensuring taxpayer funds are spent responsibly on programs that yield tangible results to protect clean air, land and water."

The agency is also requiring that all new grant solicitations be approved by a political appointee in its Office of Public Affairs, according to a memo first reported by E&E News.

The Trump administration called for sharp cuts for EPA in its budget blueprint, including to the Chesapeake Bay cleanup effort and other watershed programs across the country. But those programs are broadly popular with lawmakers of both parties, and EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt voiced strong support for the Chesapeake Bay cleanup effort during his confirmation hearing, despite having sued over it in his previous job as Oklahoma's attorney general.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump names nominees for posts at EPA, DOE, NOAA Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/01/2017 09:41 PM EDT

The White House on Friday evening announced a number of new nominations at EPA, the Energy Department and at other key energy-related posts.

— Matthew Leopold to be EPA's general counsel. An attorney at a Tallahassee law firm, Leopold previously was general counsel to the Florida Department of Environment Protection and an attorney with the Justice Department's environmental division, where he worked on the civil trial team for the Deepwater Horizon disaster.

— David Ross to be EPA's assistant administrator for water. Ross runs the Wisconsin Department of Justice's Environmental Protection Unit and was a top state lawyer for Wisconsin and Wyoming. He worked from 2002 to 2014 at D.C. law firms, mostly Crowell & Moring and helped on challenges to EPA's Waters of the U.S. rule.

— Steven Winberg to be assistant Energy secretary for fossil energy. Winberg, a program manager at the Battelle Memorial Institute, headed up research and development for CONSOL Energy. Winberg has been a member of DOE's National Coal Council and chaired the FutureGen Industrial Alliance, which backed an unsuccessful carbon capture project in Illinois.

— Bruce Walker to be assistant Energy secretary for electricity, delivery and energy reliability. Walker founded Modern Energy Insights, a company that assesses utilities' electric infrastructure risks. His resume includes executive positions at National Grid and Consolidated Edison.

— David Zatezalo to be assistant Labor secretary for mine safety and health, which runs the Mine Safety and Health Administration. Zatezalo in 2014 retired as president and CEO of coal miner Rhino Resources.

— Timothy Gallaudet to be assistant secretary of Commerce for oceans and atmosphere, the No. 2 position at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. A Navy admiral and commander of the service's Meteorology and Oceanography Command, and has a doctorate from the Scripps Institution of Oceanography. He also served as deputy director of a Navy task force on climate change.

— Rep. Jim Bridenstine (R-Okla.) to be NASA administrator. Bridenstine has criticized federal spending on climate change research. The White House's budget would cut funding from NASA's climate change-related activities.

To view online click here.

Back

Rubio, Nelson blast Trump's NASA pick Back

By Marc Caputo | 09/01/2017 08:09 PM EDT

Florida's senators are voicing opposition to President Donald Trump's pick for NASA administrator, Oklahoma Congressman Jim Bridenstine, saying a "politician" shouldn't lead the nation's space program.

Republican Marco Rubio and Democrat Bill Nelson wouldn't say whether they'd buck the president and vote against Bridenstine, who was nominated Friday. But they suggested the GOP congressman's political past would needlessly spark a partisan fight in the Senate that could ultimately damage NASA.

Bridenstine also trashed Rubio during last year's GOP presidential primary, although Rubio said he doesn't hold that against the congressman.

The bipartisan pushback against Trump's nominee for NASA administrator underscores the importance of the agency to Florida, home of the Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral. Nelson, as a member of Congress, in 1986 flew on a Space Shuttle Columbia mission; he also has a home on what's known as the state's Space Coast.

"The head of NASA ought to be a space professional, not a politician," Nelson said in a brief written statement to POLITICO.

Nelson serves as the ranking member on the Senate's Committee on Commerce, Science & Transportation, which oversees NASA and would hear Bridenstine's nomination. Bridenstine's office did not return calls seeking comment.

The White House officially announced in a statement on Friday night that Trump intended to nominate Bridenstine to the role of NASA administrator.

Rubio said he and Nelson "share the same concerns" and worry Bridenstine's "political baggage" would weigh him down in a GOP-led Senate that has grown increasingly resistant to Trump. NASA can't afford that, Rubio said.

"I just think it could be devastating for the space program. Obviously, being from Florida, I'm very sensitive to anything that slows up NASA and its mission," Rubio told POLITICO.

"It's the one federal mission which has largely been free of politics and it's at a critical juncture in its history," Rubio said. "I would hate to see an administrator held up -- on [grounds of] partisanship, political arguments, past votes, or statements made in the past -- because the agency can't afford it and it can't afford the controversy."

Noting NASA's mission to Mars, Rubio said the agency is at critical moment in its history and he would prefer an administrator who has the "respect of the people who work there from a leadership and even a scientific perspective."

Rubio said he relayed his thoughts to the White House.

Rubio said he would wait to meet with Bridenstine, a former Navy pilot who once served as director of Tulsa's Air and Space Museum, and review his credentials before deciding how to vote.

Bridenstine was harshly critical of Rubio during the GOP presidential primary when the Oklahoma representative supported Texas Sen. Ted Cruz. In two ads for Cruz that suggested Rubio was weak on terror, Bridenstine also attacked Rubio's support of comprehensive immigration reform.

"I have seen Ted Cruz stand up to both Obama and Marco Rubio, when they joined forces to provide amnesty without border security," Bridenstine said in one of the spots. "The Rubio amnesty bill would have expanded the U.S. refugee resettlement program."

When asked about Bridenstine's politicking against him, Rubio wisecracked that "there's a couple people in the executive branch who didn't always say nice things about me in a political campaign. This is largely a secondary issue. I don't think it speaks to a person's ability to work at NASA."

Cristiano Lima contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Sources: Skadden lawyer to be FERC general counsel Back

By Eric Wolff and Darius Dixon | 09/01/2017 03:59 PM EDT

James Danly will be announced as FERC's new general counsel as early as Tuesday, two industry sources tell POLITICO.

FERC declined to comment, and Danly could not be reached by phone or email today.

Danly has been an associate in the Energy Regulatory and Litigation Group at the law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP since 2014. He graduated from Vanderbilt Law School in 2013 and clerked at the 6th Circuit for a year, according to his biography on the firm's website.

Danly served two tours as an Army officer in Iraq, winning the Bronze Star and a Purple Heart, according to a bio on the Council on Foreign Relations, where he was a fellow in 2009. He became managing director at the Institute for the Study of War, a think tank, and he has written op-eds for major publications on military issues.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Mixed signals from U.S. as world leaders arrive in Bonn — More shots fired in RFS fight — Senate panel votes on ANWR measure today
Date: Wednesday, November 15, 2017 5:47:01 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 11/15/2017 05:44 AM EDT

With help from Sara Stefanini, Eric Wolff and Alex Guillén

POLITICAL COPS HIT THE CLIMATE BEAT: Politicians roll into Bonn, Germany, today to take over the final three days of the COP23. The opening ceremony will include German Chancellor Angela Merkel, French President Emmanuel Macron, and U.N. Secretary General António Guterres around 10 a.m. EST. The goal over the remaining days of the summit is to make as much progress as possible on the complex rules supporting the Paris climate agreement.

No Bonn voyage: Citing "a family emergency," career State Department diplomat Tom Shannon will no longer arrive in Bonn today to lead the U.S. delegation to the climate talks, Pro's Emily Holden reports. Other delegations had been anxiously waiting to see what tone and direction he'd set for the U.S. at the talks. Leading the delegation in his place will be Judith Garber, acting assistant secretary of State for oceans and international environmental and scientific affairs.

Optimism among other diplomats: Career U.S. diplomats negotiating technical elements of the deal with their foreign counterparts have stuck to many of the same stances they did under the Obama administration and that's raising hopes the Paris accord will survive the presidency of Donald Trump, POLITICO's Emily Holden, Kalina Oroschakoff and David Siders report. Christiana Figueres, a former United Nations climate envoy who helped orchestrate the Paris climate agreement's adoption two years ago, said that in the long-term effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, Trump is "going to be a blip" in history.

Walking the line: Dave Banks, Trump's energy adviser, argued the U.S. policy on fossil fuels is totally separate from what American diplomats are discussing in negotiation halls. The administration hasn't made any effort to start renegotiating the agreement, which would have set off an immediate diplomatic fray. And Banks said Shannon would not have pushed the administration's coal efforts if he made the trip. "So you think he's going to say, 'We're going to promote coal'? No, that's a policy discussion. It's not a negotiation," Banks said.

How one senior African negotiator summed up the situation for career State diplomats: "I think the mandate is not to be a blocker. They engage, but in the end they're not the ones calling the shots," he said.

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and ME led you astray with an imprecise trivia question. Alaska has the most federal land by acreage and Nevada has the greatest percentage federal land within its border. Sorry! For today: Which former congressman was convicted of voter fraud by forging ballots at a nursing home? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

NET NEUTRALITY 101: The long-running fight over net neutrality, which pits telecom giants against tech companies, is heating up at the Federal Communications Commission. To understand what the fight is all about and where it's headed, check out POLITICO's latest explainer video featuring technology reporter Margaret Harding McGill and the artwork of Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist Matt Wuerker. Click HERE to watch.

New for Pros! The Pro app brings real-time policy intelligence and customizable notifications to your smartphone and tablet. Download the Pro app for iPhone and iPad | Get the Pro app on Google Play.

ANWR SET TO CLEAR COMMITTEE: The Senate Energy Committee convenes at 9 a.m. to consider reconciliation legislation offered by Chairman Lisa Murkowski that would open a small part of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas development. The CBO estimates the package would raise $1.092 billion over the 10-year budget window, though Democrats and public lands groups say that overestimates how much lease sales could raise. Expect the package to pass on a largely party-line vote with West Virginia Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin likely to vote in favor.

ME first — New ad blitz launched: The League of Conservation Voters is unveiling a $550,000 television ad campaign in the districts of Republican Reps. Erik Paulsen, Bruce Poliquin, John Katko and Washington today opposing the effort to open ANWR to drilling. Watch it here.

BISHOP: SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE: Don't expect Congress to send tens of billions in relief funds to Puerto Rico until the island's government and a congressionally created independent financial oversight board are able to work together, House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop told reporters. "If they don't do that, then it's going to be a very difficult ask to ask this body to appropriate a whole bunch of money without some kind of guarantee that things will be different," he said. "The power struggle has got to stop if they expect Congress to actually come up with the money." Bishop said he doesn't think additional legislation is necessary to improve that relationship, but he's willing to insert language into forthcoming spending packages if necessary.

What about Whitefish? Bishop's not worried about the details of the now-cancelled contract, but wants to ensure the process that led to it is never replicated. "The details of Whitefish and PREPA are insignificant — that's history," he said. "The process that created Whitefish cannot happen again and cannot be replicated. This is what's bothersome to me." He declined to say whether Ricardo Ramos, the head of the utility who inked the Whitefish deal, should be fired.

That comes as documents showed the utility ignored advice from its law firm of Greenberg Traurig to include language in the contract that would cap the amount of money Whitefish Energy could charge, allow PREPA to terminate the agreement for any breach of contract and make Whitefish responsible for paying Puerto Rican taxes, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports.

CRUZ TO IOWA: COME TO THE TABLE OR NORTHEY GETS IT: Sen. Ted Cruz, having seemingly failed to secure a meeting with Midwestern senators brokered by the White House, has turned to newly fledged Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds to try and bring corn-staters to the table. Cruz wrote to Reynolds Tuesday to explain why he has put a hold on the nomination of Iowan Bill Northey to become an undersecretary for the Department of Agriculture. He cites high costs of biofuel credits in the Renewable Fuel Standard that refiners in Texas and elsewhere say is hurting their bottom line (Reuters reported yesterday that at least one refinery is selling off high priced credits to meet debt payments). "Both sides of the debate must negotiate in good faith to find a mutually agreeable solution to secure the fate of liquid fuels in America," Cruz wrote.

You started it! Cruz said Iowa Sens. Joni Ernst and Chuck Grassley blocked "multiple EPA nominations (and threatened to do the same to judicial nominations)" to protect the RFS from EPA interference. Ernst blocked only EPA air chief Bill Wehrum. The rumor that Grassley, who chairs the Senate Judiciary committee, threatened to block judicial nominations has circulated for months. A spokesman told ME that the Iowa Republican "did not place a hold on any EPA nominee and has not threatened to place a hold on any judicial nominee."

What about that meeting? Cruz and eight colleagues wrote to Trump last month asking the White House to broker a meeting with the Midwestern senators within three weeks. Three weeks is up today, and as of Monday, aides to two Midwestern Senators said they had received no outreach from the White House to set up a meeting.

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yQ8q7z> **

PAGING GRASSLEY: It's not just Cruz you have to worry about. Sen. Lamar Alexander, one of the chamber's top wind energy critics, took aim at the production tax credit in a floor speech Tuesday. The Senate Finance Committee is expected to begin processing amendments today to its tax bill, and Alexander said the wind incentive should go on the chopping block. "I'm here today to challenge my colleagues to be willing to consider all energy subsidies for mature technologies - wind, solar, oil and gas - as candidates for elimination in a tax reform bill," he said. "These dollars could be better spent to lower rates for taxpayers." Senate tax-writers did not follow the lead of their House counterparts and left the PTC alone in their tax bill, and Grassley, a senior Finance Committee member, is likely to make sure it stays that way after the markup.

Green group targets bill: The Sierra Club launched a digital ad campaign urging 29 House Republicans to oppose the chamber's tax package H.R. 1 \(115\). "The GOP's plan even manages to raise taxes on the middle class, while sneaking in an outrageous attack on the Arctic Refuge by opening it up for drilling," Melinda Pierce, the group's legislative director, said in a statement.

FOR YOUR RADAR: Vice President Mike Pence joins Energy Secretary Rick Perry, FEMA Administrator Brock Long and Texas Gov. Greg Abbott in Austin for a briefing on recovery efforts from Hurricane Harvey today at 1:40 p.m. EST.

VOTE EXPECTED ON MINE SAFETY PICK: A final vote is scheduled for noon today to confirm David Zatezalo to be assistant secretary of Labor for Mine Safety and Health. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell hailed his "keen understanding of the challenges and risks sometimes associated with mining" on the floor Tuesday and said "this firsthand experience will serve him well in his new role." The cloture vote was 52 to 45.

House clears flood insurance, final NDAA bills: Lawmakers cleared by a 237-189 vote legislation H.R. 2874 \(115\) would reauthorize and overhaul the National Flood Insurance Program, which has struggled to meet its obligations to policyholders in the midst of a string of hurricanes, Pro Financial Services' Zachary Warmbrodt reports. The House also passed a compromise defense policy bill H.R. 2810 \(115\) that includes language requiring a study of the threats posed by climate change to military installations by a 356-70 vote, Pro Defense's Connor O'Brien reports.

SASC CLEARS ARMY CORPS NOM, EPW UP NEXT: The Senate Armed Services Committee on Tuesday gave the green light to R.D. James' nomination to run the Army Corps of Engineers, but thanks to the Corps' dual role in water policy, he also has to clear the Environment and Public Works Committee before he can hit the floor. An EPW spokesman said the hearing for James will happen sometime in December, though that timeline means a committee vote may not happen until the new year.

HEARING ROUNDUP — E&C SUBPANEL VOTES ON AIR BILLS: The House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee today marks up legislation on the brick MACT H.R. 1917 \(115\), wood heaters H.R. 453 \(115\), racing vehicles H.R. 350 \(115\) and a bill H.R. 1119 \(115\) meant to help waste coal-to-energy power plants cope with the Cross-State Air Pollution Rule and the mercury rule. That vote takes place at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2123.

Science panel tackles research bills: The full House Science Committee marks up a series of bills today, including one H.R. 4376 \(115\) making upgrades to DOE research capacities and another H.R. 4378 \(115\) boosting nuclear energy research infrastructure. The session convenes at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2318.

EPW looks at reducing emissions: Senate EPW holds a hearing entitled "Promoting American Leadership in Reducing Air Emissions Through Innovation" at 10 a.m. in Dirksen 406. Look for the National Association of Manufacturers to call for Congress to "work with the EPA to fix [the New Source Review program] so that it functions properly and does not stand in the way of efficiency." Watch here.

MAIL CALL! RESTORE CLIMATE WEBPAGES: Seven members of the Senate Democratic caucus asked EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt in a letter to restore a series of removed webpages on climate change and for explanations of modifications. "These latest website alterations are part of a sequence of disturbing EPA actions that appear designed to censor dialogue about climate change in the United States," the group, led by Cory Booker, wrote.

WHAT A WASTE: The Environmental Defense Fund is out with a new report finding wide discrepancies between flaring rates among the top 15 oil and gas producers working in the Texas Permian Basin and concluding the industry continues to struggle to tamp down on natural gas waste.

NEW LIFE FOR OLD MINES? The Rocky Mountain Institute released new research on how to evaluate old mining sites for potential renewable energy siting opportunities. Link here.

TAKE A GLANCE! The Federalist Society launched the Regulatory Transparency Project, which it aims to "foster a national discussion about where government regulation seems to be doing more harm than good."

MOVERS, SHAKERS: Members of New Jersey Gov.-elect Phil Murphy's transition team on environmental and energy issues include: former NRG Energy CEO David Crane, former John Kerry senior advisor Kathleen Frangione, Earthjustice VP Lisa Garcia and former state Board of Public Utilities President Jeanne Fox, according to NJ.com.

QUICK HITS

— Grand Staircase-Escalante monument will be pruned by half, Hatch official says. Salt Lake Tribune.

— LG&E and KU credits LED lights as it announces plans to shut down two coal-burning units. Louisville Courier Journal.

— Climate Change and Water Woes Drove ISIS Recruiting in Iraq. National Geographic.

— Lawsuit Seeks to Stop Work on Appalachian Gas Pipeline. AP.

— Trump's team may move the Bureau of Land Management headquarters to Salt Lake City. Salt Lake Tribune.

— 61 EPA Staff Have Left Chicago Office in 2017, And They're Missed. WTTV.

— U.S. Steel dumps more toxic chromium near Lake Michigan, faces lawsuit. Chicago Tribune.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

8:00 a.m. — Roll Call Live's "Energy Decoded," Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW, 8th Floor Knight Conference Center

9:00 a.m. — Business Meeting to consider Reconciliation Legislation, Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

10:00 a.m. — "Legislative Hearing on Bills to Empower Indian Tribes, Promote Self-Determination," House Natural Resources Indian, Insular and Alaska Native Affairs Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

10:00 a.m. — House Science Committee markup of several bills, Rayburn 2318

10:00 a.m. — House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee marks up several bills, Rayburn 213

10:00 a.m. — "Promoting American Leadership in Reducing Air Emissions Through Innovation," Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Dirksen 406

10:00 a.m. — The Information Technology and Innovation Foundation holds a panel discussion on "ARPA-E: A Catalyst of Clean Energy Innovation," 1101 K Street NW, Suite 610A

10:30 a.m. — "Legislative Hearing on National Park, Fish and Wildlife Service Bills," House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee, Longworth 1334

12:00 p.m. — "Restore the Mississippi River Delta releases report on priority restoration projects for the Mississippi River Delta, RSVP: alina@sandersonstrategies.com

12:30 p.m. — "Coming Clean: Improving Transparency and Accountability to End Pollution's Chokehold on Development," World Resources Institute, 10 G Street NE, Suite 800

12:30 p.m. — University of Wisconsin researchers discuss comprehensive assessment of ethanol mandate impacts on climate change, RSVP: lubetkin@nwf.org

2:00 p.m. — "Nord Stream and European Energy Security," Jamestown Foundation, Choate Conference Room, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 1779 Massachusetts Avenue, NW

2:30 p.m. — Media briefing on PJM's energy price formation proposal, RSVP: kassandra.meholick@edelman.com

4:30 p.m. — The Friends Committee on National Legislation hosts conversation with Reps. Costello and Eshoo about climate change and conservation, 205 C Street NE

6:00 p.m. — Press briefing on Marine Mammal Protection Act featuring Actress Miranda Cosgrove, Rayburn 2045

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yQ8q7z> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/11/mixed-signals-from-us-as-world-leaders-arrive-in-bonn-025554>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

State Department: Shannon to miss climate talks Back

By Emily Holden | 11/14/2017 03:43 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — Tom Shannon, the State Department career diplomat who was set to head the U.S. delegation at international climate talks here, will not attend, according to the State Department.

Delegations from other countries had been waiting to see what tone and direction Shannon would set at the talks for the U.S. He was to be the top politically appointed U.S. diplomat at COP23.

Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs Judith Garber will travel to Bonn on Wednesday to lead the delegation.

To view online click here.

Back

House Natural Resources: Puerto Rico utility ignored lawyers' advice in hiring Whitefish Energy Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/14/2017 05:12 PM EDT

Puerto Rico's electric utility ignored advice from its own lawyers when it signed a contract with Whitefish Energy in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria, according to documents released ahead of a House Natural Resources Committee hearing today.

Law firm Greenberg Traurig advised Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority to include language in the contract that would cap the amount of money Whitefish Energy could charge, allow PREPA to terminate the agreement for any breach of contract and make Whitefish responsible for paying Puerto Rican taxes, among other requirements. But none were included, the committee said in its summary of the documents.

PREPA last month canceled the $300 million contract with Whitefish, a relatively unknown, two-man operation based in Montana.

Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rossello reiterated to lawmakers that he has launched two investigations into how the contract came about, but Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop (R-Utah) said the governor would have to do more if he wants Congress to support his request for disaster assistance.

"You have a credibility gap," Bishop said of PREPA's behavior. "You're asking for $90 billion. Simply telling me you've launched two investigations isn't sufficient."

PREPA Director Ricardo Ramos, who declined to attend the House hearing, told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee earlier today that he ultimately chose Whitefish Energy because no other companies would work with the bankrupt territory. In response to questions from Ranking Democrat Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.), Ramos said he was not aware of anyone with PREPA receiving kickbacks from the company.

To view online click here.

Back

House passes flood insurance renewal in wake of massive storms Back

By Zachary Warmbrodt | 11/14/2017 07:23 PM EDT

House Republicans overcame bipartisan opposition Tuesday to pass a bill that would reauthorize and overhaul the National Flood Insurance Program, which has strained to pay out billions of dollars to policyholders after this year's run of devastating hurricanes.

The House passed the bill in a 237-189 vote following months of debate and dealmaking over how much to scale back the primary tool that millions of homeowners rely on to protect themselves from the financial risks of flooding.

The bill, H.R. 2874 \(115\), would reauthorize the NFIP for five years and enact several operational changes championed by Financial Services Chairman Jeb Hensarling (R-Texas), the fiscal conservative who led an effort to pare back the program as part of the reauthorization bill.

During the process, Hensarling clashed with influential business groups and coastal Republicans who argued that his committee's proposals threatened homeowners and local economies.

After agreeing to a series of concessions going back to this summer, Republicans secured the votes they needed. The bill the House passed Tuesday retained measures sought by Hensarling that would make it easier for private companies to compete with the NFIP in the flood insurance market and prohibit the government from offering coverage to certain homes that flood over and over again.

"It is a bankrupt program," Hensarling said on the House floor. "It is unsustainable."

The vote marked Congress' first attempt this year to pass a long-term renewal of the flood insurance program before it expires on Dec. 8. The Senate, where negotiations are ongoing, was not expected to take up the House package.

The debate in the House this week underscored why progress has been so slow on the issue.

Hensarling and other lawmakers who helped draft the House bill argued that the changes they were seeking in the program would help protect taxpayers while giving consumers the opportunity to find more affordable options beyond what the government offers.

"A federal program that conceals actual risk through artificially low rates is neither compassionate nor responsible," Rep. Dennis Ross (R-Fla.) said.

But Republicans representing coastal districts urged their colleagues to vote against the bill, warning that it would make flood insurance less affordable for their constituents and threaten the solvency of the NFIP. They were unpersuaded by sections of the bill that would limit premium increases and allow states to create programs that would identify homeowners who need financial assistance. Other sections of the bill would escalate premium increases and charge homeowners more to fill a reserve fund.

Critics argued that the nascent private flood insurance market championed by Hensarling would not necessarily be a boon for homeowners, and that insurers would likely cherry pick the least risky properties while leaving behind the rest for the government to cover.

California Rep. Maxine Waters, the top Democrat on the Financial Services Committee, fought the legislation. House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer (D-Md.) also tried to rally opposition, a spokeswoman said.

Until two weeks ago, House Majority Whip Steve Scalise, who represents a southern Louisiana district, had also withheld support for the bill. Scalise, the No. 3 House Republican, came around after Hensarling agreed to ease proposed penalties for properties that repeatedly flood.

Still unsatisfied, Rep. Frank LoBiondo (R-N.J.) spoke out against the legislation on the House floor Tuesday, questioning why the concerns of his constituents and others in the Northeast didn't have more sway in the debate.

"I'm angry and disappointed I have to fight with my own party on these issues," said LoBiondo, who last week announced his plans to retire.

In the end, 14 Republicans and 175 Democrats voted against the bill. Fifteen Democrats voted for it. The White House on Monday said it supported the bill, despite wanting to see additional changes to the flood program.

The House Financial Services Committee drafted the legislation well before hurricanes Harvey, Irma and Maria ravaged the southern coast of the United States and its territories. As the proposal lingered for months, the monster storms added a new sense of urgency behind efforts to update the flood insurance program.

An earlier series of devastating hurricanes had overwhelmed the program's financial resources, forcing it to borrow money from Treasury that it could not repay.

A new set of claims piled up this fall, and the program hit its roughly $30 billion borrowing limit. In response, Congress agreed in October to forgive $16 billion of the NFIP's debt.

The program borrowed another $6.1 billion on Nov. 9, FEMA said Tuesday, bringing its debt to more than $20.5 billion.

"No legislation currently pending before the 115th Congress addresses the underlying, core challenge facing the NFIP — the reality that the NFIP was not designed to address catastrophic losses," said Tom Glassic, a consultant who previously served as senior insurance counsel to the Financial Services Committee.

"This makes it likely we'll be dealing with many of the same issues in five or six years or whenever the NFIP is next up for reauthorization."

Meanwhile, senators from both parties oppose the proposals in the House package and are pushing their own competing bills. One would freeze interest payments that the NFIP pays on its debt — an issue the House bill does not address directly.

Sen. John Kennedy (R-La.) said the House proposal failed to strike the right balance between "the integrity of the program, the financial stability of the program and the affordability." Sen. Bob Menendez (D-N.J.) said it was "Republicans' first concrete step towards dismantling a critical program that more than 200,000 New Jersey families rely on."

"It doesn't resolve all of the issues that we have in the Senate," Banking Chairman Mike Crapo (R-Idaho) said in an interview Tuesday.

To view online click here.

Back

House passes $700B compromise defense bill Back

By Connor O'Brien | 11/14/2017 05:29 PM EDT

The House on Tuesday overwhelmingly passed a $700 billion compromise defense policy bill that would authorize a military buildup beyond that proposed by President Donald Trump, but vastly exceed the cap on defense spending to fund it.

The vote was 356-70.

The Senate will debate the fiscal 2018 National Defense Authorization Act after Thanksgiving and is expected to handily approve it and send it to the president for his signature.

With fewer contentious issues than in previous years, the annual legislation was hammered out by House and Senate Armed Services leaders in just a few weeks.

In all, the measure would authorize nearly $700 billion in national defense spending. Within that, the bill endorses $626.4 billion in base spending, including $20.6 billion for nuclear national security programs under the Energy Department. And it would authorize $65.7 billion for a separate Pentagon war account.

The legislation, which tallies billions of dollars more than Trump's $603 billion budget request, would authorize more spending for missile defense technology to counter North Korea, more ships and fighters, and would continue to rebuild the Army.

On the floor Tuesday, House Armed Services Chairman Mac Thornberry (R-Texas) called the bill a down payment on a yearslong military buildup.

"We will not rebuild and fix our problems in one year or one bill ... but we can head in the right direction," Thornberry said. "That's what this conference report does."

But the final NDAA is also tens of billions of dollars above the $549 billion cap on national defense spending set by the Budget Control Act for the current 2018 fiscal year.

House and Senate leaders must strike a budget deal that increases the caps in order to boost defense spending as prescribed by the bill, approved on Tuesday by the House.

"It goes $80 billion, roughly, over the budget caps, and the bill can't do that on its own," said House Armed Services ranking Democrat Adam Smith of Washington state.

"Unless the budget caps are lifted and the appropriators pass the appropriations bill, that doesn't happen," Smith said. "And we haven't made a lot of progress on that."

The final measure includes a 2.4 percent troop pay raise, higher than the 2.1 percent sought by the Pentagon.

It would authorize 90 F-35 Joint Strike Fighters, 20 more than the Pentagon requested, and 24 Navy F/A-18 Super Hornets, 10 more than requested. And it would boost Navy shipbuilding by authorizing 13 new ships, five more than requested, including an extra Littoral Combat Ship, destroyer and amphibious ship.

The bill would also authorize more personnel in the active-duty military services and Reserves.

Notably, the Army would grow by 7,500 active-duty soldiers and the active-duty Marine Corps would increase by 1,000. The Air Force would grow by 4,100 active-duty personnel.

And the Navy would increase by 4,000 active-duty personnel.

The legislation also continues efforts, spearheaded by Senate Armed Services Chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.), to shake up the Pentagon's senior leadership ranks.

It would establish the Pentagon's newly created chief management officer as the third most senior post and give it more information technology functions performed by the chief information officer.

The final NDAA compromise would also eliminate one assistant secretary of Defense and limit the total number of deputy assistant secretaries to 48.

Additionally, the bill includes a series of provisions aimed at streamlining the Pentagon's acquisition process, including a proposal pushed by Thornberry to set up an online marketplace for purchasing commercial products.

Lawmakers, however, dropped a House-backed proposal to create a new Space Corps under the Air Force.

Instead, the final bill would require an independent plan to establish a separate service responsible for space as well as a slew of changes to streamline national security space acquisitions and operations.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Pruitt's flight, meeting habits raise eyebrows — Four EPA nominees get hearings today — Bishop sends broad letter on Zinke's travel habits
Date: Wednesday, October 04, 2017 5:47:37 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/04/2017 05:43 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén, Eric Wolff, Darius Dixon and Ben Lefebvre

SCRUTINY MOUNTS OF PRUITT'S HABITS: Critics of EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt increasingly see a chief who avoids contact with the broader public and distrusts even his own agency's career staff, opting instead for meetings with like-minded industry and political leaders that could prove useful in a future political run, Pro's Emily Holden and Alex Guillén report. The Trump administration doesn't consider Pruitt's $58,000 in charter and military flight expenses to be as troubling as former HHS Secretary Tom Price's and now consider the controversy resolved after Price's resignation last week, one administration official said.

Environmentalists and other critics say Pruitt's spending is at best tone-deaf given agency budget reductions and at worst speaks to paranoia. Christine Todd Whitman, a Republican who ran EPA during President George W. Bush's first term, said she recalls taking chartered planes only while visiting remote areas of Alaska that were otherwise inaccessible. "Most people have to wait in line for a long time for planes," Whitman said. "The fact that you just turn around and order a private plane ... that starts to look really problematic. It's a lot of money." The agency said the flights were all cleared by ethics officials and say Pruitt's unprecedented around-the-clock security protection is necessary given increased threats.

Others point to who he met with as especially revealing. An analysis of Pruitt's broader schedule shows he's met most often with oil and gas executives, followed by agriculture and farming interests. And the former Oklahoma attorney general has paid especially close attention to his home state. Of at least 30 meetings or speaking engagements Pruitt had with oil and gas executives or trade groups, seven appear to have connections to Oklahoma. He's also spoken at events or held calls with right-wing policy groups that spend little of their time on environmental issues, such as the Family Research Council, Council for National Policy, State Policy Network and Federalist Society.

PRUITT LIEUTENANTS HOP ONTO HOTSEAT: Sparks are guaranteed to fly as Senate Environment and Public Works Committee hears from four EPA nominees and an NRC candidate today. Expect Democrats to pay close attention to William Wehrum, the EPA air nominee, and his long history as an industry attorney, the same issue that kept him from this post in the pre-nuclear option George W. Bush era. Since leaving EPA a decade ago, Wehrum's client list is a who's who of industry groups, including the American Petroleum Institute, American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers and the Utility Air Regulatory Group. Wehrum just last week helped industry groups challenge OSHA's silica rule in court — though the judges indicated they weren't buying his arguments that the agency had failed to prove new health benefits.

Heavy focus expected on Dourson: The other nominee likely to face heat is Michael Dourson, nominee for EPA chemicals and pesticides chief. The job will be vital as EPA works to implement the reformed Toxic Substances Control Act. Critics were also incensed when Pruitt earlier this year rejected agency scientists' suggestion to ban the pesticide chlorpyrifos.

Dourson's work as an independent toxicologist often concluded that safe levels of various chemicals and pesticides were significantly higher than the findings of government and university scientists. Dourson is also the author of a series of self-described "science-Bible stories."

Also slated to attend: Matt Leopold, the nominee for EPA general counsel, and David Ross, the pick to run EPA's water office. Leopold is a Florida lawyer who was previously the Florida Department of Environmental Protection's general counsel. Ross heads the Wisconsin Department of Justice's Environmental Protection Unit and previously helped challenge the Obama administration's WOTUS rule, which EPA is working to repeal and replace. Joining the EPA nominees is Democrat Jeff Baran, who is up for renomination to the NRC through 2023.

If you go: Chairman John Barrasso will gavel in the hearing at 10 a.m. in Dirksen 406.

WHAT ABOUT THE BOSS?: Pruitt himself hasn't been to an EPW hearing since he was confirmed in February, and the committee's top Democrat Tom Carper is out of patience. "It's almost nine months into the administration and we're still waiting for the head of EPA to come in and defend the administration's budget for EPA, which is appalling," Carper told ME.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee has never heard from Pruitt in a public hearing, though it is traditional for the EPA boss to testify there at least once a year. Illinois Republican John Shimkus, who chairs the E&C environment subcommittee, says a visit is overdue, especially in light of the heightened scrutiny of his spending. Shimkus said he thinks Cabinet officials should fly commercial, just like members of Congress do. "We're also stewards of taxpayers' dollars and these agencies, we're asking them to do more with less," Shimkus told ME Tuesday. "It probably would have been better had he come earlier than later."

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the Joyce Foundation's Ed Miller first identified Rep. Fred Grandy, aka Gopher from The Love Boat, as the Iowa congressman. For today: Who did Nancy Pelosi succeed when she first won election to Congress in 1987? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

ADMINISTRATION PICKS ARMY CORPS CHIEF: Trump announced late Tuesday his choice of R.D. James to lead the Army Corps of Engineers. He's previously served on the Mississippi River Commission where he's provided water resources advice to several administrations and Congress. James has also served as president of the Southern Cotton Ginners Association. Among other responsibilities, James would have a major role as the Trump administration revamps the Waters of the U.S. regulation. An April report made it sound like James was lukewarm on taking the post: "I'm a country boy, and I can't imagine living up there, but, if chosen, I will, and I will do my very best."

TRUMP STRIKES HARSH TONE IN PUERTO RICO: Visiting the devastated island of Puerto Rico Tuesday, President Donald Trump warned the island's millions of residents — many of whom have been told not to expect electricity or potable drinking water for months — they had "thrown our budget a little out of whack because we've spent a lot of money on Puerto Rico" and avoided a "real catastrophe" like Hurricane Katrina. As POLITICO's Matthew Nussbaum and Nolan D. McCaskill note, Trump maintained his boasts about a wildly successful response effort that hasn't matched the reality of the hurricane-ravaged island.

At a stop later in the day Trump insisted residents didn't need flashlights (it's unclear what he meant) even though 95 percent of the island lacks electricity. "The power grid, honestly, was devastated before the hurricanes even hit. And then the hurricanes hit and they wiped them out," Trump said, as he repeatedly seemed to blame the island for its poor infrastructure and financial situation. Joining him on the trip were Pruitt and Energy Secretary Rick Perry.

POLITICO's Burgess Everett and Seung Min Kim report the administration will today ask for $13 billion in hurricane recovery funding, $16 billion in flood insurance relief and more than $500 million for wildfires with congressional consideration likely in mid- to late-October.

BISHOP PROBES YEARS OF NON-COMMERCIAL TRAVEL: House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop and Rep. Bruce Westerman sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Tuesday asking for all records of non-commercial travel by the Interior secretary since the start of the Obama administration, as well as copies of department policies on the matter. "When partisan opportunists conflate diligent conformance to scandal, no one wins," they wrote. "Let's get all facts on the table, ensure taxpayers are protected and proceed with the peoples' business."

More questions raised for Zinke: A group of 26 House Democrats, led by Nanette Barragan and Don Beyer, asked Zinke in a Tuesday letter to immediately disclose all details of his use of charter aircraft.

Zinke doesn't plan to repay the government for his charter flights, the Associated Press reports.

NUCLEAR WASTE BILL ON ICE — FOR NOW: Shimkus said plans to bring a committee-passed nuclear waste package, H.R. 3053 \(115\), to the House floor are on hold for now as Nevada lawmakers, some of the most vocal opponents of the measure, deal with Sunday's massacre. "In light of the tragedy, there's no desire to move quickly," he said.

BISHOP: SILENCER CONTROVERSY 'SILLY': Delaying a broad sportsmen's package over language loosening gun silencer restrictions amid the response to the Las Vegas tragedy would be silly, Bishop told reporters. As your ME host reports, Bishop added: "If that's a hang-up, that's sad that that's a hang-up." GOP sources have previously indicated the SHARE Act, H.R. 3668 \(115\), likely won't come to the floor anytime soon after the shooting that killed 59 people and injured hundreds others.

COAL, NUCLEAR CAUTIOUSLY BACK PERRY'S PLAN: Representatives of the coal and nuclear industries offered qualified support before a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee for Perry's plan to extend their plants a lifeline through FERC, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. Nuclear Energy Institute CEO Maria Korsnick voiced support for an extended public comment period while Paul Bailey, who heads the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, said he'd back the proposal if forced to answer yes or no with "a huge caveat [that] we're still looking at it."

Lotsa wiggle room: FERC General Counsel James Danly told Senate lawmakers Tuesday the commission intends to act on DOE's resiliency pricing rulemaking proposal within the 60 days outlined by Perry, but he left plenty of room to tease out what that might look like, Pro's Darius Dixon reports.

Not giving up: Three new groups — the Energy Storage Association, the American Biogas Council, and the Business Council for Sustainable Energy — have linked arms with the other 11 energy groups asking DOE and FERC to slow down. The groups were spooked by FERC's decision on Monday to take comments on DOE's proposal even before the rulemaking was published but it's unclear how the processes will mesh. They have asked FERC to respond by Friday to their request for an extended comment period and technical conference.

** A message from Chevron: Advanced technology is helping us find safer ways to deliver energy. We're piloting a program that uses drones to monitor tanks and pipelines. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xO60oe> **

GREENS PLAN SUIT OVER MISSED OZONE DEADLINE: A group of 10 environmental groups said Tuesday they plan to sue Pruitt after he missed a deadline to decide which parts of the U.S. do or do not meet the 2015 ozone standard, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. In response, an agency spokesman told ME: "The agency is continuing to work closely with the states to work through the designations process for the 2015 ozone standard."

SEIA GOES TO THE WHITE HOUSE: The Solar Energy Industries Association has a meeting today at the White House with presidential aides and staff from DOE, USTR and other cabinet agencies, Abigail Ross Hopper from the Solar Energy Industries Association said Tuesday. SEIA is trying to ward off tariffs on imported solar panels that will ultimately be decided by the president. The group would not specify who they'd be meeting with. "We are speaking with all of those folks who have a seat at the table and will help advise the president what the right decision is," Hopper said. "This is a conversation about American jobs, American blue collar jobs from many of the states that voted for our president."

LET'S GET TOGETHER, ROYALLY: Interior convenes the initial meeting of its new Royalty Policy Commission today. Counselor to the Secretary for Energy Policy Vincent DeVito will chair the commission, which he said will help with "looking at financial elements [at Interior] that have not been looked at in quite some time." The department caught flak earlier this year for stacking the commission with industry representatives but failing to fill slots reserved for public interest groups. NGOs said they will provide public comments, however, with The Wilderness Society set to ask Interior to increase royalty rates for oil and gas developed on public land from the current 12.5 percent. "Remarkably, for oil and gas, this rate has not changed since the 1920s," TWS said in prepared remarks seen by ME.

MORE JABS AT MANCHIN FROM BLANKENSHIP: Former West Virginia coal executive Don Blankenship released an ad Tuesday attempting to link Sen. Joe Manchin to both the Benghazi consulate attack and the deaths at Upper Big Branch Mine, Campaign Pro's Kevin Robillard reports. The spot, airing on state television, provocatively asks: "Does Manchin have blood on his hands?" Blankenship, who served a year in prison for conspiring to violate mine safety standards, has previously mused about challenging Manchin for his Senate seat as a Republican.

MURRAY JOBS SUIT REACHES SUPREME COURT: Coal producer Murray Energy asked the Supreme Court Tuesday to conclude Section 321(a) of the Clean Air Act requires EPA to produce a detailed study of its effects on coal jobs, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. A federal appeals court said that study represents a discretionary duty after a district court judge originally called it a mandatory one. But keep your expectations in check: It'll likely take the administration months to respond and there's no guarantee SCOTUS will ultimately hear the appeal.

AHEAD OF THE CLASS: Solar energy capacity in 2016 was 4,500 percent higher than the government thought it would be 10 years earlier, and wind supply is 350 percent above projections, the Natural Resources Defense Council finds in a report out Tuesday. "When you look at how clean energy development has exploded beyond official government projections from just 10 years ago, it offers hope that its potential will continue to far surpass expectations and we'll meet our U.S. climate goals," Amanda Levin, co-author of the report, said.

CEI SUES FOR PARIS DOCUMENTS: The Competitive Enterprise Institute filed a lawsuit Tuesday seeking emails and text messages concerning the communications of three former Obama-era State Department officials in the lead up to the Paris climate agreement being reached. In particular, the lawsuit seeks records related to Todd Stern and Sue Biniaz's communications with officials at NRDC and the World Wildlife Fund.

LAWSUIT FILED OVER ADVISORY BOARD RECORDS: The Center for Biological Diversity filed a lawsuit Tuesday seeking NOAA records concerning its decision to end a federal climate change advisory panel — Advisory Committee for the Sustained National Climate Assessment — over the summer. Copy of the filing here.

MOVERS, SHAKERS: State Energy & Environmental Impact Center at NYU School of Law, which aims to help state attorneys general fight Trump environmental rollbacks, today announced the additions of Elizabeth Klein as deputy director and Chris Moyer as communications director. Klein was most recently Interior's associate deputy secretary under the Obama administration and Moyer was most recently deputy communications director for California Attorney General Xavier Becerra.

Former FERC Commissioner Colette Honorable has joined the Bipartisan Policy Center as a senior fellow.

QUICK HITS

- EPA Asks Drillers and Miners for Advice on Regulating Them. Bloomberg.
- Pipeline wins federal OK to carry hazardous liquids across Kentucky. Lexington Herald-Leader.
- Former DEP official tapped to lead EPA regional office. State Impact.
- 'The new OPEC bromance': How Saudi Arabia and Russia are bonding over oil. CNBC.
- Coal-state lawmakers introduce bill to shore up pensions for miners. Washington Examiner.
- Miles of Algae Covering Lake Erie. New York Times.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:00 a.m. — Rob Bishop addresses Heritage Foundation on Antiquities Act, Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave. NE

9:30 a.m. — Natural Gas Supply Association holds its winter outlook media briefing for 2017-2018, RSVP: hinson.peters@ngsa.org

10:00 a.m. — Full committee markup on various bills, House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1334

10:00 a.m. — Senate Environment and Public Works Committee holds hearing on various EPA, NRC nominees, Dirksen 406

10:00 a.m. — "Air Quality Impacts of Wildfires: Perspectives of Key Stakeholders," House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

12:45 p.m. — House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop holds a press call to discuss emergency response efforts in hurricane-impacted U.S. Territories, RSVP: molly.block@mail.house.gov

2:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources Subcommittee on Indian, Insular and Alaska Native Affairs holds legislative hearing on three bills, Longworth 1334

3:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources Committee holds members forum to discuss rescue and recovery in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, location: TBD

3:00 p.m. — Senate HELP Committee holds hearing on mine safety nominee, Dirksen 430

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: Advanced technology is helping us find better and safer ways to deliver energy to America. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping capabilities to monitor Chevron wells, tanks, and miles of pipeline. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xO60oe> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/pruitts-flight-meeting-habits-raise-eyebrows-024898>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Pruitt critics see political motives in flights and meetings Back

By Emily Holden and Alex Guillén | 10/03/2017 07:02 PM EDT

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt is facing growing political blowback about his taxpayer-funded spending and meetings with industry allies, with critics seizing on his expensive flights, $25,000 soundproof phone booth and 18-person security detail just days after lavish travel costs brought down former HHS Secretary Tom Price.

The travel expenses drawing the most scrutiny for Pruitt — $58,000 at last count — don't come close to the more than $1 million that taxpayers had spent to fly Price on private and government planes since May. But to his detractors, the EPA chief's spending on charter and government flights, eavesdropper protection and round-the-clock security point to an administrator who avoids contact with the broader public and distrusts even his own agency's career staff.

Instead, according to multiple interviews and POLITICO's review of agency travel records,

Pruitt spends much of his time meeting with like-minded industry and political leaders — the kind of people who could back him in a future political campaign — but meets relatively seldom with environment and public health groups that oppose President Donald Trump's policies.

Pruitt, who spent six years as Oklahoma's elected attorney general, is already facing an EPA inspector general investigation for taking at least 10 commercial flights in March, April and May to his home state, where he is widely seen as a potential candidate for U.S. senator in 2020. Since then, he's been back to Oklahoma several times, including to meet with oil and gas companies and state political leaders and participate in media interviews, according to his published schedule.

Agency records released in the past week show that he has also spent tens-of-thousands of dollars on four private or government flights, including more than $36,000 to travel on an Air Force plane from Cincinnati to New York in June. House Democrats have asked the inspector general to review those as well. Senate Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) also cited some of Pruitt's travels last week in a letter urging Trump to rein in Cabinet spending.

The White House has taken note of the negative news coverage surrounding Pruitt's travels but doesn't consider his expenses to be as troubling as Price's, one administration official told POLITICO on Tuesday. Administration officials have said they consider the travel-expense controversy to have been resolved by Price's departure, which was quickly followed by an order requiring Cabinet officials to get chief of staff John Kelly's approval for almost any trips on chartered or government planes.

But environmentalists and other critics say the records raise questions about Pruitt's priorities.

Pruitt "has traveled extensively and spent an inordinate amount of time in Oklahoma, which begs the question of whether or not he's laying the groundwork for a campaign," said Tiernan Sittenfeld, senior vice president of government affairs at the League of Conservation Voters.

Pruitt's staff has defended all his trips, and has said the four non-commercial flights were approved by ethics officials and were necessary for him to make it to key meetings.

But Christine Todd Whitman, a Republican who ran EPA during President George W. Bush's first term, said she recalls taking chartered planes only while visiting remote areas of Alaska that were otherwise inaccessible.

"Most people have to wait in line for a long time for planes," Whitman said. "The fact that you just turn around and order a private plane ... that starts to look really problematic. It's a lot of money."

Whitman said Pruitt's other expenses are troubling, too. The agency already had a secure enclosure where people can talk and use the phone protected from eavesdropping — but, as The Washington Post reported last week, EPA is spending nearly $25,000 to install a customized private phone booth that is outfitted against eavesdropping inside his office at DC's Federal Triangle.

Whitman said she "can't imagine what the reasoning is behind this, except the paranoia."

One current EPA employee, who requested anonymity to discuss internal agency affairs without authorization, told POLITICO that it's difficult for anyone outside Pruitt's office to hear someone speaking inside. A few hand-picked administrative staffers work outside the office's thick wooden doors, and beyond that are several unoccupied rooms, which are also guarded by security.

And Whitman said EPA administrators typically haven't needed the around-the-clock protection that Pruitt is demanding. "The problem that I have with it is not that he's getting the security details but that it's at the same time they're cutting the budget of the agency," she said.

Pruitt's aides say he needs his security detail, which is far bigger than what any previous administrator had, to guard him against increased threats. On one of his trips, the agency decided that his security needs warranted chartering a private flight so that Pruitt wouldn't have to fly commercial without a bodyguard or wait for a delayed plane.

His guards were initially drawn away from other duties in EPA's enforcement office until the agency made an exception to a hiring freeze to bring on more officers.

Eric Schaeffer, executive director of the Environmental Integrity Project and a former director of civil enforcement at EPA, called Pruitt's travel habits "arrogant" and "tone-deaf."

"What would Republicans have done if Gina McCarthy had done this?" Schaeffer said, referring to former President Barack Obama's second-term EPA chief. "They would have gone ape. And now they're not concerned."

Penn State climate researcher Michael Mann, a frequent critic of Trump's and Pruitt's environmental policies, said via email Monday that "ethical violations demand that Pruitt step down."

"And by ethical violations, I don't just mean his abuse of the public trust through frivolous personal use of government-funded private plane trips," Mann added. "I also mean the manner in which he has betrayed the citizens he is supposed to represent by endangering them through the dismantling of environmental protections built up over decades, under Democratic and Republican administrations."

Critics say they are most upset because Pruitt's spending comes amid potential budget cuts. He has indicated, for example, that he wants to end payments to Justice Department lawyers who force polluters to pay to clean up Superfund sites, The New York Times reported last week.

They say his travel records are just as telling in showing whom he chooses to meet with as EPA administrator.

His four non-commercial flights included a trip to visit with Oklahoma farmers, meetings with Republican officials in North Dakota and a tour to criticize a Colorado environmental project mishandled by the Obama administration.

In July, he flew in an Interior Department plane from Tulsa to Guymon, Okla., where he met with farmers as part of a tour highlighting his effort to withdraw an Obama administration water rule. Pruitt and his aides then continued in the plane to visit state officials in Oklahoma City. The total cost for both legs was $14,434.50.

EPA declined to provide a more detailed schedule or a list of business leaders who were present. Spokesman Jahan Wilcox provided local news clips that report 90 farmers and ranchers from Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas attended.

In August, Pruitt toured the site of the Gold King Mine spill, a 2015 mining-waste disaster caused by EPA and its contractors, for a visit in which he said the Obama administration had "failed those who counted on them." He got there via a plane that EPA had chartered from Denver to Durango, Colo., at a cost of more than $5,000.

The agency says Pruitt had initially traveled on a commercial flight to Denver, only to learn that his planned connection to Durango would be delayed by several hours. Individual seats were available on other commercial planes but didn't have enough space for Pruitt's bodyguard or other staff, the agency said.

In a third trip, Pruitt had lunch with North Dakota Republicans — Gov. Doug Burgum, Sen. John Hoeven and Rep. Kevin Cramer — in Fargo. He and two staffers then flew with the governor on his state plane to meet farmers and tour an energy research center that studies ways to keep the state's struggling coal industry alive. The ride cost EPA $2,144.40, according to The Washington Post. A spokesman said Pruitt needed to fly with Burgum to keep up with the governor's schedule. Driving between the two cities would have taken about an hour and a half.

The flight with the biggest price tag, $36,068.50, was on an Air Force plane from Cincinnati to New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport on June 7. Pruitt then flew on to Rome, on what Wilcox described as a scheduled commercial flight, where he arrived several days early for a meeting with foreign environment ministers. Wilcox said Pruitt had to find a way to New York after the president invited him at the last minute to Cincinnati to promote infrastructure development.

EPA spokespeople have said they explored all other options for the Rome trip, although they did not comment on why Pruitt couldn't have flown commercially from Cincinnati to another U.S. international hub and then to Italy.

Trump's event with Pruitt was set to conclude by 2:10 p.m., according to the president's schedule. Pruitt's public schedule for the following day, June 8, didn't show any public meetings until 1 p.m., at the U.S. Embassy, and 2 p.m., with a business roundtable — which could have left time for even a lengthy international flight. Travel sites show that on a typical Wednesday, multiple options from Cincinnati to Rome would fit the time window and cost around $3,000 per person when purchased last-minute.

On June 9, Pruitt met with officials from the Catholic Church and attended a judicial roundtable. Not until June 10 and 11 did he meet with foreign ministers, before leaving the high-profile event early to make it back for a Cabinet meeting at the White House on the morning of June 12, according to his schedule. During the trip, EPA tweeted pictures of Pruitt rolling pasta and eating prosciutto with Italian environment minister Gian Luca Galletti, which critics were quick to highlight when he left ahead of schedule.

A POLITICO analysis of Pruitt's broader schedule, as shown in EPA records, demonstrate he's spent much of his time meeting with key industries, including ones back home. He's met most often with oil and gas executives, followed by agriculture and farming.

Of at least 30 meetings or speaking engagements Pruitt had with oil and gas executives or trade groups, seven appear to have connections to Oklahoma. He's spent time with executives of companies whose employees donated at least $37,000 for his 2014 campaign to be Oklahoma attorney general, according to state campaign finance records.

For example, Pruitt met in March with representatives from Oklahoma Gas & Electric, whose executives were a major source of cash for his 2014 reelection campaign. Pruitt has also had face-to-face sit-downs with John Minge, the head of BP America, Duke Energy's Lynn Good and the boards of the National Mining Association, the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, the American Petroleum Institute and American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers.

Pruitt spends far more time with industry and political leaders than with environmental advocates, according to two months of calendars released under public records requests and another six months of far less detailed schedules that the agency has published.

EPA maintains a list of environmental or public health groups the agency has met with, but they do not appear officially on Pruitt's schedule.

The EPA chief has also spoken at events or held calls with right-wing policy groups that spend little of their time on environmental issues. For example, he had a call in May with the Family Research Council, a conservative group that lobbies against abortion rights and believes homosexuality is "unnatural" but has never filed comments on EPA proceedings.

In the same month, he had a speaking engagement with the Council for National Policy, which advocates for limited government and "Judeo-Christian values," and was on a call with the State Policy Network, an umbrella group for state-level conservative think tanks.

He continues to appear at events for the Federalist Society, a group that advocates for an originalist interpretation of the Constitution and has become an established gatekeeper for conservatives seeking judicial posts.

To view online click here.

Back

Price resigns from HHS after facing fire for travel Back

By Dan Diamond, Rachana Pradhan and Adriel Bettelheim | 09/29/2017 04:40 PM EDT

HHS Secretary Tom Price resigned Friday in the face of multiple federal inquiries and growing criticism of his use of private and government planes for travel, at a cost to taxpayers of more than $1 million since May.

The White House said the former seven-term Georgia congressman, 63, offered his resignation earlier in the day and that President Donald Trump had accepted it.

Price becomes the first Trump administration Cabinet secretary to step down. The White House said Trump asked Deputy Assistant Health Secretary Don Wright to serve as acting secretary of the agency, which has an annual budget $1.15 trillion and includes the Medicare and Medicaid programs, as well as the FDA, NIH and CDC.

As late as Thursday, Price said he believed he had the president's support. But the tumult surrounding his travel became another distraction for an administration already reeling from the defeat of repeated Senate efforts to repeal Obamacare and criticism for its hurricane relief efforts in Puerto Rico.

Price ran afoul of Trump in part because his actions seemed to symbolize everything the president had inveighed against on the campaign trail by vowing to "drain the swamp." The fallout extended to the entire Cabinet Friday night when the White House announced that chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft."

Price, in his resignation letter, expressed regret that "recent events" distracted from efforts to overhaul the health care system. "In order for you to move forward without further disruption, I am officially tendering my resignation as the Secretary of Health and Human Services effective 11:59 PM on Friday," he wrote.

Senate Democrats quickly served notice they were preparing for a potential confirmation fight over Price's successor, saying the next HHS secretary must not undermine Obamacare. Under Price, the department cut the law's enrollment period in half and slashed advertising and outreach for the enrollment period starting in November.

"The next HHS secretary must follow the law when it comes to the Affordable Care Act instead of trying to sabotage it," said Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer.

"Tom Price's replacement needs to be focused on implementing the law as written by Congress and keeping the president's promise to bring down the high cost of prescription drugs," Senate Finance ranking Democrat Ron Wyden of Oregon said in a statement.

House Speaker Paul Ryan, a close ally, praised Price as a dedicated public servant. "His vision and hard work were vital to the House's success passing our health care legislation," Ryan said in a statement.

POLITICO revealed that Price flew at least 26 times on private aircraft at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, a sharp break with his predecessors' practice. Many of Price's flights were between major cities that offered inexpensive alternatives on commercial airlines, including Nashville, Philadelphia and San Diego.

On some of those trips, Price, an orthopedic surgeon, mixed official business with leisure. He took a government-funded private jet in August to get to St. Simons Island, an exclusive Georgia resort where he and his wife own land, a day and a half before he addressed a medical conference he and his wife have long attended. In June, HHS chartered a private jet to fly Price to Nashville, where he owns a condominium and where his son resides. Price toured a medicine dispensary, spoke to a local health summit organized by a friend and had lunch with his son, an HHS official confirmed.

Price also used military aircraft for multi-national trips to Africa, Europe and Asia, at a cost of more than $500,000 to taxpayers. The White House said it had approved those trips but not the private jets within the United States.

Price tried to defuse the controversy by promising on Thursday to reimburse the government for the approximately $52,000 cost of his own seat on his domestic trips. But that wasn't enough to tamp down the scandal, which had infuriated the president and prompted a bipartisan inquiry from the House Oversight Committee and separate calls for accountability from lawmakers including Republican Sen. Chuck Grassley. The inspector general of Price's own agency is reviewing if Price complied with federal travel regulations.

The White House put Cabinet officials on notice Friday that it would crack down on use of private planes, telling them chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft."

Mick Mulvaney, director of the Office of Management and Budget, sent out the memo soon after Price's resignation was made public, reminding department and agency heads that, by regulation, "Government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft should not be used for travel by Government employees except with specific justification."

The issue of Cabinet members' travel has already extended beyond Price: POLITICO reported Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and his aides took several flights on private or military aircraft, including a $12,000 charter plane to take him to events in his hometown in Montana and private flights in the Caribbean. Zinke dismissed the furor as a "little B.S." during a Friday appearance at the Heritage Foundation.

Price's wife, Betty, accompanied him on the military flights, while other members of the secretary's delegation flew commercially to Europe.

HHS spokeswoman Charmaine Yoest said Price reimbursed the agency for his wife's travel, but declined to elaborate.

White House officials have grouched about Price's frequent travels, with one senior White House official saying the HHS secretary was "nowhere to be found" as they mounted a last-ditch unsuccessful push to repeal Obamacare.

Congressional Democrats attacked Price for advocating spending cuts to the health agencies he oversaw and health care programs while spending taxpayer dollars on private jets. "There could not be a clearer statement of the Trump administration's priorities," Sen. Maggie Hassan (D-N.H.) said. Key Democrats overseeing health issues in Congress had formally requested that HHS's inspector general review Price's travel practices.

In June, Price defended a proposed fiscal 2018 budget for HHS that included a $663,000 cut to the agency's $4.9 million annual spending on travel, or roughly 15 percent. "The budgeting process is an exercise in reforming our federal programs to make sure they actually work — so they do their job and use tax dollars wisely," Price told the Senate Finance Committee on June 8.

Ethical questions dogged Price even before questions about his travel arose. During his Senate confirmation hearing to helm HHS, Price faced pointed questions about his personal investments in health care companies during his time in Congress. Democrats called on government ethics officials to investigate Price's health care stock trades, following reports that he got a sweetheart deal from a biotech company and invested in Zimmer Biomet, a medical device-maker, just days before writing legislation that would have eased regulations on the sector.

The Senate confirmed Price by a 52-47 margin in February after he maintained full Republican support.

Price carved out a reputation as a staunch fiscal conservative during his decade-plus tenure in the House of Representatives. He generally supported reducing government spending on health care while shifting more of the financial burden onto individuals. Like most conservatives, he's supported privatizing Medicare so that seniors would receive fixed dollar amounts to buy coverage and limiting federal Medicaid spending to give states a lump sum, or block grant, and more control over how they could use it.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump expected to pick Bush EPA official turned industry lawyer for agency's air office

Back

By Alex Guillén | 07/24/2017 10:03 AM EDT

President Donald Trump is expected to nominate Bill Wehrum, a former George W. Bush-era EPA official, to run the agency's powerful air office, according to two sources outside the administration familiar with the plans.

While Wehrum would bring critical knowledge of EPA's workings and environmental law, he also represents several high-profile industry groups in lawsuits challenging numerous Obama-era EPA regulations, meaning he may face recusal and conflict issues similar to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt.

Wehrum served as acting assistant administrator for the Office of Air and Radiation from 2005 to 2007. Bush pulled Wehrum's formal nomination to that post after Democrats blocked him as too industry-friendly, though the new simple majority threshold on nominees likely will prevent that from happening again. Wehrum spent 2001-2005 as counsel to Jeff Holmstead, Bush's first air administrator. Holmstead emerged last month as a possible Trump pick to be EPA deputy administrator, though coal lobbyist Andrew Wheeler remains the frontrunner for that job.

In a 2013 interview with Law360, Wehrum said that despite the Supreme Court's 2007 ruling that said EPA has the authority to regulate greenhouse gases, he believes "Congress never intended the EPA to address an issue such as climate change under the Clean Air Act."

He also called for lengthening the review cycle for National Ambient Air Quality Standards beyond five years — House Republicans recently passed a bill that would stretch that to ten years — and said the Obama administration tried to shift power away from the states and toward EPA, comments since echoed by Pruitt.

And in a 2015 Wall Street Journal editorial, Wehrum said the EPA-caused Gold King mine spill highlighted how the agency "often criminalizes actions that are nothing more than accidents, many far less damaging to the environment than the Animas River disaster." That spill fouled Colorado's Animas River and downstream areas for several weeks before water quality returned to normal and the river was reopened to recreational activities.

Wehrum pointed to the 2014 chemical spill that fouled drinking water for hundreds of thousands of West Virginia residents, which led to an EPA investigation and the company's bankruptcy, as an example of "unjust" treatment.

For the last decade Wehrum has been a partner at the high-powered D.C. law firm Hunton & Williams, where he currently represents high-profile clients, including two leading oil and gas industry lobbying groups, in a number of ongoing lawsuits against EPA.

Wehrum represents the American Petroleum Institute in a challenge to EPA's methane rule for new oil and gas wells, as well as the separate legal battle over EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's decision to stay that rule while under review, where API has defended Pruitt's stay.

He also represents either API or American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers, a refinery sector group, in lawsuits over a 2015 rule limiting pollution from oil refineries; a "regional consistency" rule that governs how court rulings apply to nationwide EPA regulations; and permitting rules for Indian lands.

He represents the Utility Air Regulatory Group, a coalition that challenges EPA air regulations, in a legal challenge over an Obama-era rule meant to decrease explosions at chemical plants and other facilities. Pruitt has put that rule on hold while it is under review.

Wehrum helped the Gas Processors Association challenge two greenhouse gas reporting rules. He took an EPA boiler regulation to court on behalf of a coalition of industry groups, including the American Chemistry Council, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Forest & Paper Association. He is challenging an EPA emissions rule for brick manufacturers on behalf of an industry group. And he represented construction interests in various lawsuits against the Labor Department, including an ongoing challenge to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's 2016 silica exposure rule.

Wehrum did not immediately reply to a request for comment on Monday. EPA and White House spokespeople did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump expected to pick Bush EPA official turned industry lawyer for agency's air office

Back

By Alex Guillén | 07/24/2017 10:03 AM EDT

President Donald Trump is expected to nominate Bill Wehrum, a former George W. Bush-era EPA official, to run the agency's powerful air office, according to two sources outside the administration familiar with the plans.

While Wehrum would bring critical knowledge of EPA's workings and environmental law, he also represents several high-profile industry groups in lawsuits challenging numerous Obama-era EPA regulations, meaning he may face recusal and conflict issues similar to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt.

Wehrum served as acting assistant administrator for the Office of Air and Radiation from 2005 to 2007. Bush pulled Wehrum's formal nomination to that post after Democrats blocked him as too industry-friendly, though the new simple majority threshold on nominees likely will prevent that from happening again. Wehrum spent 2001-2005 as counsel to Jeff Holmstead, Bush's first air administrator. Holmstead emerged last month as a possible Trump pick to be EPA deputy administrator, though coal lobbyist Andrew Wheeler remains the frontrunner for that job.

In a 2013 interview with Law360, Wehrum said that despite the Supreme Court's 2007 ruling that said EPA has the authority to regulate greenhouse gases, he believes "Congress never intended the EPA to address an issue such as climate change under the Clean Air Act."

He also called for lengthening the review cycle for National Ambient Air Quality Standards beyond five years — House Republicans recently passed a bill that would stretch that to ten years — and said the Obama administration tried to shift power away from the states and toward EPA, comments since echoed by Pruitt.

And in a 2015 Wall Street Journal editorial, Wehrum said the EPA-caused Gold King mine spill highlighted how the agency "often criminalizes actions that are nothing more than accidents, many far less damaging to the environment than the Animas River disaster." That spill fouled Colorado's Animas River and downstream areas for several weeks before water quality returned to normal and the river was reopened to recreational activities.

Wehrum pointed to the 2014 chemical spill that fouled drinking water for hundreds of thousands of West Virginia residents, which led to an EPA investigation and the company's bankruptcy, as an example of "unjust" treatment.

For the last decade Wehrum has been a partner at the high-powered D.C. law firm Hunton & Williams, where he currently represents high-profile clients, including two leading oil and gas industry lobbying groups, in a number of ongoing lawsuits against EPA.

Wehrum represents the American Petroleum Institute in a challenge to EPA's methane rule for new oil and gas wells, as well as the separate legal battle over EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's decision to stay that rule while under review, where API has defended Pruitt's stay.

He also represents either API or American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers, a refinery sector group, in lawsuits over a 2015 rule limiting pollution from oil refineries; a "regional consistency" rule that governs how court rulings apply to nationwide EPA regulations; and permitting rules for Indian lands.

He represents the Utility Air Regulatory Group, a coalition that challenges EPA air regulations, in a legal challenge over an Obama-era rule meant to decrease explosions at chemical plants and other facilities. Pruitt has put that rule on hold while it is under review.

Wehrum helped the Gas Processors Association challenge two greenhouse gas reporting rules. He took an EPA boiler regulation to court on behalf of a coalition of industry groups, including the American Chemistry Council, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Forest & Paper Association. He is challenging an EPA emissions rule for brick manufacturers on behalf of an industry group. And he represented construction interests in various lawsuits against the Labor Department, including an ongoing challenge to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's 2016 silica exposure rule.

Wehrum did not immediately reply to a request for comment on Monday. EPA and White House spokespeople did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA nominee's case against OSHA rule draws skepticism from judges Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/26/2017 12:24 PM EDT

Federal judges seemed skeptical today of arguments made by William Wehrum, President Donald Trump's pick to head EPA's air office, against the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's silica rule.

Wehrum, an attorney at Hunton & Williams, argued on behalf of various industry groups that OSHA had not proven that lowering the silica standard would provide any significant health benefits.

"OSHA had a thumb on the scale" because it had already decided to lower the standard and had "lost objectivity," Wehrum told a three-judge panel at the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Judge David S. Tatel called Wehrum's comment "curious" and pointed to reams of data and studies OSHA used to justify the new standard.

Chief Judge Merrick Garland noted that there are some legitimate disagreements among scientists about silica's health effects — but he said the law says the regulation in such situations should lean in favor of caution. "There's supposed to be a thumb on the scale in terms of safety," Garland said.

"We believe that skepticism is well warranted," Wehrum replied.

A Justice Department attorney defending the rule faced light questioning from the judges about OSHA's methodologies and called Wehrum's arguments about uncertainty in epidemiology "flimsy."

As air administrator, Wehrum would be charged with implementing or writing new versions of a number of health-based standards, including the 2015 ozone rule. EPA officials last week noted that Wehrum can argue against the OSHA rule since it is not an EPA regulation and is unrelated to his nomination.

WHAT'S NEXT: The D.C. Circuit will weigh Wehrum's argument along with arguments made by other attorneys on technological, economic and union issues with the silica rule. Wehrum's nomination hearing was postponed last week and has not yet been rescheduled.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA nominee's case against OSHA rule draws skepticism from judges Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/26/2017 12:24 PM EDT

Federal judges seemed skeptical today of arguments made by William Wehrum, President Donald Trump's pick to head EPA's air office, against the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's silica rule.

Wehrum, an attorney at Hunton & Williams, argued on behalf of various industry groups that OSHA had not proven that lowering the silica standard would provide any significant health benefits.

"OSHA had a thumb on the scale" because it had already decided to lower the standard and had "lost objectivity," Wehrum told a three-judge panel at the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Judge David S. Tatel called Wehrum's comment "curious" and pointed to reams of data and studies OSHA used to justify the new standard.

Chief Judge Merrick Garland noted that there are some legitimate disagreements among scientists about silica's health effects — but he said the law says the regulation in such situations should lean in favor of caution. "There's supposed to be a thumb on the scale in terms of safety," Garland said.

"We believe that skepticism is well warranted," Wehrum replied.

A Justice Department attorney defending the rule faced light questioning from the judges about OSHA's methodologies and called Wehrum's arguments about uncertainty in epidemiology "flimsy."

As air administrator, Wehrum would be charged with implementing or writing new versions of a number of health-based standards, including the 2015 ozone rule. EPA officials last week noted that Wehrum can argue against the OSHA rule since it is not an EPA regulation and is unrelated to his nomination.

WHAT'S NEXT: The D.C. Circuit will weigh Wehrum's argument along with arguments made by other attorneys on technological, economic and union issues with the silica rule. Wehrum's nomination hearing was postponed last week and has not yet been rescheduled.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump brings harsh edge to Puerto Rico trip Back

By Nolan D. McCaskill and Matthew Nussbaum | 10/03/2017 05:03 AM EDT

President Donald Trump brought a jarring tone to Puerto Rico as he toured the hurricane devastation Tuesday, appearing to blame the U.S. territory for having "thrown our budget a little out of whack" and complimenting officials for sustaining only 16 deaths, compared with the much higher human toll of Hurricane Katrina.

"I hate to tell you, Puerto Rico, but you've thrown our budget a little out of whack because we've spent a lot of money on Puerto Rico," Trump said as he met with local officials from the island, which declared a form of bankruptcy in May. "And that's fine."

The president also appeared to boast that the death toll in Puerto Rico pales in comparison to the more than 1,800 fatalities that followed Katrina in 2005.

"We saved a lot of lives," said Trump, who added that "every death is a horror" and broached what he called "a real catastrophe" in Katrina.

"Sixteen people versus in the thousands," the president said, overstating Katrina's death toll.

"You can be very proud of all of your people, all of our people working together," he told Gov. Ricardo Rosselló. "Sixteen versus literally thousands of people. You can be very proud. Everybody around this table and everybody watching can really be very proud of what's taken place in Puerto Rico."

A Rosselló spokesman said Tuesday night that the death toll had more than doubled, to 34, news agencies reported.

Trump landed in Puerto Rico on Tuesday after spending much of the past week boasting about a wildly successful response effort that hasn't matched the reality of the hurricane-ravaged island — and after picking a fight over the weekend with San Juan's mayor and other "political motivated ingrates" who have questioned the robustness of the federal response.

The visit came as he's attempting to be soother-in-chief for the nation after a shooting in Las Vegas left at least 59 dead on Sunday night — the first time he's had to navigate two disasters of national scope that are politically perilous for any president, but especially one prone to off-the-cuff riffs.

The Puerto Rico stop marks only the start of emotionally charged travels for Trump this week. On Wednesday, he is scheduled to travel to Las Vegas to meet with the families of victims of Sunday's massacre.

Trump struck a somber and unifying tone Monday when discussing the attack in Las Vegas. But on Tuesday, he traded the scripted and controlled setting of the Diplomatic Room for a storm-ravaged island where more than half of the residents remain without access to drinking water and only 5 percent of the island has electricity.

Throughout the day, he boasted about his administration's response and appeared to repeatedly blame Puerto Rico for its poor infrastructure and financial situation before Hurricane Maria ripped through and left a humanitarian crisis in its wake.

Early on Tuesday, Trump extended praise to his officials and to Rosselló, Puerto Rico's Democratic governor. And he asked the island territory's Republican non-voting congresswoman, Jenniffer González-Colón, to repeat past accolades of the administration's response for the television cameras.

"He's not even from my party, and he started right at the beginning appreciating what we did," Trump said of Rosselló. "Right from the beginning this governor did not play politics. He didn't play it at all. He was saying it like it was, and he was giving us the highest grades. And on behalf of our country, I wanna thank you."

Trump, however, sought to have the plaudits reciprocated, noting that he watched González-Colón say "such nice things about all of the people that have worked so hard" the other day and asking her to repeat her compliments.

"Jenniffer, do you think you can say a little bit [of] what you said about us today?" Trump asked. "And it's not about me. It's about these incredible people, from the military to FEMA to first responders. I mean, I've never seen people working so hard in my life. Perhaps you could say, congresswoman?"

Cameras captured the president engaging in a conversation with a hurricane victim, asking multiple questions and commending public officials in closing, but also telling another group of victims impacted by the storm to "have a good time."

The pool of reporters accompanying the president described a pair of basketball-related exchanges. Trump asked a teenager whether he played basketball and was going to the NBA. After handing out bags of rice at a church, Trump began tossing paper towels into the crowd — mimicking the motions of a jump shot.

In later remarks Tuesday — as the president handed out flashlights — Trump insisted Puerto Ricans don't need flashlights, though much of the territory is still without power, as he acknowledged to reporters just minutes prior.

"The power grid, honestly, was devastated before the hurricanes even hit. And then the hurricanes hit and they wiped them out," Trump said. "A lot of generators have been already brought to the island. Most of the hospitals are open — or at least partially open. But most of them now are open. And, again, the job that's been done here is really nothing short of a miracle. It's been incredible."

Trump has courted controversy by blasting on Twitter the "poor leadership ability" of Puerto Rican officials, who he said "want everything to be done for them." Trump had also said the island's leaders "are not able to get their workers to help," and he accused Carmen Yulín Cruz, the Democratic mayor of San Juan — who repeatedly slammed the Trump administration's response to Hurricane Maria — of trying to score partisan political points by criticizing him.

"We have done a great job with the almost impossible situation in Puerto Rico. Outside of the Fake News or politically motivated ingrates," Trump tweeted on Sunday.

All the while, he's kept up an upbeat tone about the response. He told reporters in the Oval Office on Monday that it's "amazing what's been done in a very short period of time." He added: "There's never been a piece of land that we've known that was so devastated."

Other officials have echoed his attitude. "The federal government is doing everything within our powers and capabilities to first focus on the life-sustaining and life-saving measures as well as on the rebuilding process," press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters on Monday.

But Trump's comments on Tuesday at times distracted from his administration's response efforts, with Cruz, the San Juan mayor, freshly criticizing the president for his comments about Puerto Rico's impact on the U.S. budget.

"It goes to prove the lack of sensibility," she told CNN in an interview.

Colin Wilhelm contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

White House seeking $29 billion more in disaster assistance Back

By Burgess Everett and Seung Min Kim | 10/03/2017 08:54 PM EDT

The Trump administration is expected to request about $29 billion in disaster assistance on Wednesday, according to three sources familiar with the matter.

The administration is expected to ask Congress to deliver nearly $13 billion in funding for recovery from hurricanes that struck Puerto Rico and other parts of the United States, $16 billion in flood insurance relief, and more than $500 million for wildfires, the source said. Congress is expected to consider the package in mid- to late-October.

The figures were first reported by the Associated Press. The nearly $13 billion in FEMA funding is estimated to last through Dec. 31, one source said, although the government has been spending disaster money more quickly than expected because of the recent spate of hurricanes.

Congress previously approved more than $15 billion in disaster assistance for hurricanes in Texas and Florida in September.

To view online click here.

Back

Nuclear waste bill clears House committee with bipartisan backing Back

By Darius Dixon | 06/28/2017 12:05 PM EDT

The House Energy and Commerce Committee approved nuclear waste reform legislation this morning on a bipartisan 49-4 vote, facing only a handful of Democratic holdouts.

The bill, H.R. 3053, sponsored by E&C Environment Subcommittee Chairman John Shimkus, would make the first changes in 30 years to the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, which names Yucca Mountain as the nation's sole waste repository.

The committee agreed to a compromise manager's amendment that would let DOE open one interim storage facility while regulators continue to work on a permanent repository. That eliminated most of the Democratic objections to a draft version of the bill that would have barred such work until the Nuclear Regulatory Commission issued a decision on Yucca Mountain.

Yucca Mountain supporters have been concerned that a storage site would take the pressure off of approving a repository. Meanwhile, lawmakers have been anxious to move the waste building up at defunct nuclear power plants in their states.

Another bipartisan amendment, also approved on a voice vote, removed the bill's original language impacting Nevada's water rights and air permitting. The amendment would also increase Yucca's capacity from 70,000 metric tons to 110,000 metric tons.

The bill also authorizes payments to host states and limits work on any defense waste-only repository.

New Jersey Rep. Frank Pallone, the top Democrat on E&C, said that the bill was "a delicate and difficult negotiation, but I believe we have arrived at a very good compromise."

WHAT'S NEXT: Shimkus has said he expects the bill to get a vote by the full House before the August recess, but GOP leaders have not yet scheduled floor time for the bill.

To view online click here.

Back

Bishop: 'Silly' to delay sportsmen's package over silencer provision Back

By Anthony Adragna | 10/03/2017 02:26 PM EDT

House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop told reporters today it would be "silly" to remove provisions in a broad sportsmen's package, H.R. 3668 \(115\), loosening restrictions on purchasing gun silencers even after the nation's worst shooting massacre in modern history.

"The suppressor part actually helps people," he said. "To remove it, you're not helping anybody out. That would be silly to do that."

He added: "If that's a hang up, that's sad that that's a hang up."

GOP sources previously told POLITICO the Las Vegas shooting would derail consideration of the Sportsmen's Heritage and Recreational Enhancement Act at least in the short term.

Bishop said he'd been told by leadership the legislation would get a floor vote "soon," but said he'd never been given a specific date. But the Utah Republican said he hadn't spoken to them about the matter this week.

"To get a floor vote for things, I would strip naked if I had to," he said.

WHAT'S NEXT: Republican sources have previously indicated the SHARE Act is unlikely to get a floor vote in the near future.

To view online click here.

Back

Coal, nuclear industry leaders cautiously supportive of DOE proposal Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/03/2017 05:38 PM EDT

Coal and nuclear power industry representatives offered qualified endorsements today of the Energy Department's proposed regulation that offer their plants an economic lifeline.

Many experts are already confused about DOE's proposal to FERC, and a strange-bedfellows coalition of energy groups, including oil and renewables trade associations, has asked regulators to slow down.

Testifying before a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee, Nuclear Energy Institute CEO Maria Korsnick said she'd support having another 30 days to comment on the Energy Secretary Rick Perry's plan to FERC, which gave regulators just 60 days to finalize the rule or issue an interim final rule. She said the proposal is "a good baseline but additional conversations need to be had through the rulemaking process."

Paul Bailey, who heads the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, demurred when asked how long FERC should collect comments, stressing that the work "needs to be done very, very quickly." Bailey said he'd back the proposal if he was only given a yes-or-no option, but he added there was "a huge caveat [that] we're still looking at it."

Rep. Fred Upton (R-Mich.) noted that FERC often allows 180 days to comment on complex proposals.

Meanwhile, Marty Durbin, an executive with the American Petroleum Institute, which has criticized the proposal, said it was "totally inconsistent" with the grid study DOE issued in August.

John Moore, of the Natural Resources Defense Council, said he would toss the proposal "in the trash can because I don't think it meets the minimum standards of due process and the Administrative Procedures Act."

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC has asked for comments on the proposal to be submitted by Oct. 23 and for reply comments by Nov. 7. DOE has not yet published its proposal in the Federal Register, which will kick off the 60-day countdown clock.

To view online click here.

Back

Official: FERC will take 'appropriate action' on DOE pricing rule within 60 days Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/03/2017 04:22 PM EDT

FERC intends to act on the Energy Department's resiliency pricing rulemaking proposal within the 60 days Energy Secretary Rick Perry directed last week, FERC General Counsel James Danly told lawmakers this afternoon. But his comments left plenty of room for interpretation.

"Right now, the commission is internally reviewing the notice of proposed rulemaking that was put forward by the secretary," Danly told members of a Senate Energy and Natural Resources subcommittee, while noting that FERC has already requested comments on the proposal.

"We're reviewing the options that are available and we are in the process of building the record by soliciting these comments and reply comments," he said. "Once they're assembled, we're going to review them and take the appropriate action within the 60-day timeframe established by the NOPR."

The law that Perry is using to initiate the rulemaking at FERC directs regulators to take "final action" within a reasonable timeframe, but it's unclear what FERC might consider a final action. Similarly, Danly's phrase "appropriate action" could represent a number of decisions by FERC.

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC has asked for comments on the proposal to be submitted by Oct. 23 and for reply comments by Nov. 7. DOE has also not yet published its proposal in the Federal Register, which will kick off the 60-day countdown clock.

To view online click here.

Back

Greens will sue Pruitt over missed ozone deadline Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/03/2017 05:13 PM EDT

Ten environmental groups say they plan to sue EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt for missing the Oct. 1 deadline to decide which parts of the U.S. do or do not meet the 2015 ozone standard, a critical step toward implementing the rule and curbing pollution.

"It's an outrage that Scott Pruitt just willfully ignored his legal and moral obligation to keep American communities safe from dangerous air pollution that sends children to the hospital," Matthew Gravatt of the Sierra Club said in a statement.

Pruitt earlier this year announced plans to delay the designations by one year, citing trouble with data collection from states. Following lawsuits from green groups and Democratic attorneys general, EPA reversed course and said Pruitt would work to meet the deadline. But the deadline passed this week without any word from EPA on any designations.

The underlying 2015 standard is itself under review at EPA, along with a host of other Obama-era regulations. EPA in recent weeks also sent for White House review what appears to be a proposal setting new thresholds for which areas would have to take action to improve their air quality.

EPA on Monday had no comment on when the agency plans to issue the designations.

Groups suing include the Sierra Club, Natural Resources Defense Council, American Lung Association and National Parks Conservation Association.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Clean Air Act requires anyone suing EPA over a missed deadline to give the agency at least 60 days' notice. The lawsuit could be filed as soon as early December.

To view online click here.

Back

Taxpayer advocate, Democrats see industry tilt on Zinke's royalties panel Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 09/14/2017 03:33 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has pledged to increase energy revenue from federal lands, but congressional Democrats and public watchdogs are worried the agency is putting key policy decisions about royalties in the hands of the industry.

Interior officials have said increasing drilling on federal lands would help fulfill President Donald Trump's promise to "usher in a golden age of energy dominance" — and help restore the agency's coffers back to levels seen a decade ago, when they were bolstered by oil prices that flirted with $150 a barrel.

Now, with oil prices under $50 a barrel, the portion of Interior's budget from those revenues has dropped to $6.2 billion, one-quarter of where it was in during the heady market of 2008.

"I will be looking at revenue," Zinke told senators during a June budget hearing, pointing to the federal income from natural gas, oil and wind. "If you're going to operate on public land, then the public should have a say, because we are all stewards of our public lands. We want to make sure we have a fair return. That return should be transparent."

But public interest groups and Democrats say the 20-member advisory committee Zinke named to review royalty rates that oil, natural gas and coal companies pay for access to federal land and water is stocked with industry-linked members.

The committee includes five energy company representatives and six others members who hail from energy-friendly, GOP-led local governments. Critics say it lacks representatives from public interest groups or Democrats who might question whether the public is getting a fair deal from new drilling.

"We should be exploring better royalty structures," Sen. Tom Udall (D-N.M), whose state is the fifth largest oil producer in the country, said in an email. "But I'm skeptical that the royalty policy committee established by Secretary Zinke is structured to ask the most probing and balanced questions to benefit citizens." Udall plans to reintroduce his legislation, S. 2254 \(108\), next week that would institute royalties on gold, silver and other precious minerals currently excluded from generating royalties.

Ryan Alexander, president of public watchdog group Taxpayers for Common Sense, lauded Zinke's move to restart that commission as an opportunity to make sure taxpayers get a fair return for energy developed on public lands, but its make-up didn't give her confidence that would happen.

"There's a lot of people who know a lot of stuff on that committee," said Alexander, whose nomination to the committee was rejected by Interior. "But there isn't anyone who focuses on taxpayer interest. It is a definitely a concern that this is weighted toward the industry. We're going to be watching carefully."

Republicans have backed Zinke's exclusion of environmental and public interest groups.

"Many of these public interest groups have been driving this debate in court and so forth at the demise of our natural resource industry, and our economies and jobs in places like Montana," Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.) told POLITICO. "So it's time to change it up."

Interior's royalty rates dictate the percentage of the proceeds from oil, gas or other energy produced from federal lands or waters that companies must share with the government. The new committee will "provide advice to the Secretary ... on the fair market value of and on the collection of revenues derived from, the development of energy and mineral resources on Federal and Indian lands," according to the charter Zinke approved in March.

Oil production on federal lands reached an all-time high of 580 million barrels in 2016 from the surge in offshore production, according to data from the Office of Natural Resources Revenue, an overall increase of 33 percent from 2008.

Even as oil production surged, oil revenues flowing to Interior dropped to $2.8 billion, however, the lowest point since 2005, largely because of weak market prices. U.S. oil averaged $43.29 per barrel last year, less than half the price in 2014.

Natural gas volumes have fallen by a third since 2008, with most of the drop because of offshore drillers' shift to more profitable oil production. And coal production on federal land fell by a third between 2008 and 2016, following electric utilities' switching to cheaper natural gas.

Interior's decisions on royalties have a major impact on state budgets. In 2016, Wyoming received $684 million from federal leases, nearly one-quarter of the state's $3 billion budget that year, while New Mexico got $386 million, about 6 percent of the state's total budget.

Interior lowered the minimum royalty payments for oil and gas produced from shallow-water areas of the Gulf of Mexico that it offered in a lease in August. But that cut failed to attract companies to the area, which is largely tapped out of oil and gas from years of development, and only 10 percent of the tracts up for auction were leased.

Interior has also rolled back an Obama-era rule on assessing the value of coal from federal lands that required mining companies to use the price they sold the coal at on the open market — not to affiliate companies they may have sold it to at a steep discount. Zinke's move did away with a rule that the department estimated would increase Interior's coal royalty revenues by up to $85 million a year, but that coal companies complained was too burdensome.

Zinke's appointments to the committee include employees of ConocoPhillips, Anadarko Petroleum and the National Ocean Industries Association, a trade group representing offshore drilling companies.

He also included Matthew Adams, vice president of taxation at Cloud Peak Energy, a Wyoming-based coal company that donated $10,000 to Zinke's PAC in 2016. Cloud Peak paid the department $80 million in royalties last year, according to government data.

Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift called the commission members "eminently qualified individuals," and added that Cloud Point Energy's donation to Zinke's PAC was "absolutely not" a factor in appointing a company representative to the commission.

Another member of the committee is John Sweeney, an investor relations executive at VWR Corp., a Pennsylvania-based company that provides laboratory services to the pharmaceutical, biotech, industrial and healthcare industries.

Sweeney nominated himself to the commission and was appointed because of "his education and experience in business connecting investors with developers," Swift said. Sweeney did not reply to messages seeking comment.

Swift also pointed to the native American tribes on the commission as operating some renewable energy projects. Those tribes on the board are also heavily invested in oil, gas and coal projects. The Navajo Nation, whose president Russell Begaye is on the royalty commission, runs the largest coal-fired power plant in the western United States, and Begaye wrote an op-ed in March asking for government assistance to keep plant from shutting.

Zinke promised to appoint up to four members representing "academia and public interest" groups when he announced plans for the commission, and he has stressed the importance of public oversight on royalties.

But the sole slot that was allotted in the end for a representative for the public interest went to Daniel Ruzs , a coal expert from energy industry consulting group Wood MacKenzie.

Interior's Swift initially said the choice came about because "no groups identifying themselves as public interest were nominated or self-nominated." She didn't address the rejection of the Taxpayers for Common Sense nomination, but said the group was "still permitted to attend the public meetings and the public comments are taken into consideration in decision making processes."

The commission also doesn't include any local government representatives identified as Democrats or nominated by Democratic governors. No one from Colorado or California was appointed, despite those two states producing more energy resources from federal lands than Alaska or Texas.

Gov. Steve Bullock, the Democratic head of Zinke's home state of Montana, nominated a Montana Department of Natural Resources employee who helps manage 6.2 million acres in the state that received $23 million in royalties from Interior in 2016, though that nominee was rejected. Interior did name a Montana representative as an alternate board member in case a sitting member drops out.

Instead, Interior appointed a Clinton Carter, Alabama's Republican state finance director. Alabama received $1.9 million in royalties from the department in 2016.

The lack of public accountability advocates on the board threatens to undermine its purpose of helping Interior increase public revenue, House Natural Resources committee ranking member Raul Grijalva (D-Ariz.) said in a letter to Zinke.

Appointing a committee dominated by the fossil fuel industry with no public interest voices does not build "greater trust and transparency," Grijalva said in his letter, adding that the committee "should not be allowed to act as a fig leaf for actions designed solely to favor the interests of drilling and mining companies."

To view online click here.

Back

Convicted coal exec attacks Manchin in new ad Back

By Kevin Robillard | 10/03/2017 04:15 PM EDT

Don Blankenship, a former energy executive convicted of a misdemeanor related to the deaths of 29 coal miners in West Virginia, is paying for an inflammatory new television ad attacking Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin.

The 30-second ad, which is airing on broadcast television in the state, starts by talking about the deaths of four Americans at the U.S. consulate in Benghazi, Libya and then links it to the deaths at Upper Big Branch Mine, which Blankenship blames on the federal government. The ad repeatedly shows Manchin side-by-side with former President Barack Obama and Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, along with captions asking: "Does Manchin have blood on his hands?"

"In 2012, four Americans were killed by terrorists in Benghazi, Libya. Many say the Obama administration hid the Benghazi truth," a male narrator says. "The truth about more killed Americans has also been hidden. In 2010, 29 Americans were killed. None of them were an ambassador, none were CIA agents, none were killed by terrorists. They were coal miners who were killed when the U.S. government reduced their mines' airflow. President Trump must be told the truth about Obama's deadliest cover-up."

The ad is the latest in a series of amateurish spots Blankenship has paid for attacking Manchin and asserting federal officials are to blame for the deaths at Upper Big Branch. The United Mine Workers of America have blasted the ads as "desperate, low-life attempt to once again shift the blame for a decade of death, destruction and despair at Massey Energy while Blankenship was CEO."

Manchin is considered a slight favorite to win reelection in a state President Donald Trump won handily. Rep. Evan Jenkins and Attorney General Patrick Morissey are competing in the Republican primary to challenge Manchin in 2018. Blankenship has previously mused about running for the seat himself as a Republican.

To view online click here.

Back

Murray asks Supreme Court to force EPA study of coal job losses Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/03/2017 03:21 PM EDT

Coal producer Murray Energy has asked the Supreme Court to force EPA to study how its regulations and other actions affect coal jobs.

A federal judge in West Virginia initially sided with Murray in ruling that Section 321(a) of the Clean Air Act required EPA to produce a separate, detailed study of its effects on coal jobs, despite EPA arguments that it did so on a rolling basis as it worked on each rule.

But just days before the July 1 deadline for EPA to cough up a study going back through 2009, the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the study is a discretionary duty, not a mandatory one open to enforcement in the courts, thus freeing EPA from having to produce the study.

Last week, Murray appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that the 4th Circuit's ruling "creates a substantial blind spot where EPA will be left to its own devices.

"An evaluation of the job losses that have occurred and those jobs that remain under threat because of EPA's decisions will be a powerful tool in helping EPA, Congress, the States, and Plaintiffs address and correct a policy that, up until now, has been far 'too narrow a policy and a cruel one at that for workers' in the coal industry," Murray wrote.

The case is Murray Energy v. Pruitt, 17-478.

WHAT'S NEXT: It will likely take months for the Trump administration to reply. If the Supreme Court agrees to hear the appeal — a major question — it likely will do so next spring or fall.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very

Somewhat

Neutral

Not really

Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Senate takes up massive disaster aid package — Pruitt science adviser directive coming — Interior political appointee lands new responsibilities
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 5:44:42 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/23/2017 05:42 AM EDT

With help from Esther Whieldon, Tim Starks and Darius Dixon

CONGRESS MOVING ON DISASTER AID: The Senate takes the first procedural step today toward getting additional resources to Puerto Rico — more than a month after Hurricane Maria hit — even as 80 percent of the island remains without power and 30 percent lacks clean drinking water. The House-passed $36.5 billion disaster aid package H.R. 2266 \(115\) includes nearly $19 billion for FEMA while also providing a much needed cash infusion to the National Flood Insurance Program's borrowing capacity. It's expected to pass by Wednesday after Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn received a commitment that additional hurricane aid for his state of Texas would come in a subsequent bill, removing one of the largest obstacles to passage.

Calls for an emergency response CEO: Calling the long delays in restoring electricity and clean water "unconscionable," Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, along with Reps. Nydia Velazquez and Jose Serrano, are asking President Donald Trump to appoint a CEO of response and recovery to help coordinate the government's response. "This person will have the ability to bring all the federal agencies together, cut red tape on the public and private side, help turn the lights back on, get clean water flowing and help bring about recovery for millions of Americans who have gone too long in some of the worst conditions," Schumer said in a statement. He called for the person to have a "direct line" to Trump.

And time is of the essence: Thousands of low-income properties across the island may no longer be able to meet legal standards for housing assistance if power cannot be restored soon, Pro Financial Services' Lorraine Woellert reports. "Due to the ongoing and unique circumstances in Puerto Rico, we're reviewing every available option to assist residents during this difficult time," HUD spokesman Brian Sullivan said.

Presidents tout fundraising: The five living former presidents announced Saturday they'd raised $31 million in private funds from over 80,000 donors to help hurricane recovery in Texas, Florida, Puerto Rico and other areas. ME will admit to having Lin-Manuel Miranda's benefit song stuck in his head.

WELCOME TO MONDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Andeavor's Stephen Brown was first to identify Rep. Chris Stewart as the author of Elizabeth Smart's book. For today: How many states have just one congressman? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

ON TAP THIS WEEK — PRUITT'S LATEST DIRECTIVE: The timing isn't exactly clear yet, but look for EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to issue a directive limiting scientists who receive agency research grants from being able to serve on its various advisory boards. "If we have individuals that are on those boards that are receiving money from the agency, sometimes going back years and years to the tune of literally tens of millions of dollars, over time, that to me causes questions on the independence and the veracity of the transparency of the recommendations that are coming our way," Pruitt said in an interview posted Friday by the Heritage Foundation's Daily Signal. It's unclear if the same restrictions would apply to scientists that receive funding from industry groups regulated by EPA.

Pruitt's view on environmentalism: "True environmentalism from my perspective is using natural resources that God has blessed us with to feed the world, to power the world with the sensitivity that future generations cultivate, to harvest, to be respectful good stewards, good managers of our natural resources, to bequeath those natural resources for the next generation."

WORTH A READ: The New York Times looks at how the arrival of Nancy Beck, a former American Chemistry Council executive, at EPA has led to weaker chemical regulation that may result in the "underestimation of the potential risks to human health and the environment." Beck returned from the private sector in May after receiving an ethics waiver and began pressing right away for changes to chemical regulations long-sought by industry. "It was a clear demonstration this administration has been captured by the industry," said Elizabeth Southerland, an Office of Water employee who retired in July.

EPA's eyebrow-raising response: "No matter how much information we give you, you would never write a fair piece. The only thing inappropriate and biased is your continued fixation on writing elitist clickbait trying to attack qualified professionals committed to serving their country," Liz Bowman, a spokeswoman for the agency who worked at the American Chemistry Council before joining the administration, said in an email to the newspaper.

CLIMATE DATA PUSH GROWS: Seventeen cities around the U.S., including New Orleans, Atlanta and Boston, are now hosting climate change data that EPA has removed from its website, Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel announced. "While the Trump administration buries their heads deeper in the sand when it comes to climate change, local leaders from across the country continue to confront the challenge head-on," he said. Chicago wants to expand its site to include an open-sourced repository of new scientific research.

ARE YOU A YES PERSON OR A NOPR-SON? If you have any thought on the Energy Department's grid resilience pricing proposal, you're just about out of time. FERC set a deadline on initial comments for today — less than a month after the rule was filed with regulators. The deadline for reply comments is Nov. 7, two weeks from Tuesday. If you've misplaced FERC's list of questions, here it is.

Days for FERC to take a "final action": 49

MANY A TARGET: The Homeland Security Department and the FBI issued a joint warning about a sophisticated hacking campaign that has targeted the energy, nuclear, water, aviation and manufacturing sectors. The targets include both governments and other organizations. Although the alert, issued late last week, doesn't identify the nationality of the attackers, it does reflect a Symantec report from last month where the company found similarities between those attackers and a campaign that U.S. officials tied to Russia.

"This campaign comprises two distinct categories of victims: staging and intended targets. The initial victims are peripheral organizations such as trusted third party suppliers with less secure networks," the joint DHS-FBI report states. "The threat actor uses the staging targets' networks as pivot points and malware repositories when targeting their final intended victims. The ultimate objective of the cyber threat actors is to compromise organizational networks."

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gyQXsp> **

TWO HOUSE BILLS OF NOTE: Lawmakers are expected to vote on two bills of interest to ME readers this week. One, H.R. 732 \(115\), would bar federal agencies from requiring defendants to donate money to outside groups as part of federal government settlements. The other, H.R. 469 \(115\), would place various limitations on the use of federal consent decrees that frequently require new regulatory actions. The House Rules Committee meets today at 5 p.m. to consider how to structure debate on both bills.

SECOND TIME'S THE CHARM? After winning the support of Sen. Joni Ernst for Trump's pick to run the EPA air office, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will try again on Wednesday to move a host of nominees. On deck is the highly controversial selection of Bill Wehrum to run the air office and Michael Dourson's selection for EPA chemicals chief, as well as the less contentious picks of David Ross as head of the EPA water office, Matthew Leopold for EPA general counsel, Jeff Baran's re-nomination to the NRC and Paul Trombino's selection to be administrator of the FHWA.

CELEBRATION FROM BIOFUEL BACKERS: Pruitt's letter Thursday making major concessions on the Renewable Fuel Standard led to sighs of relief from biofuel backers but frustration from oil refiners, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. "[Pruitt] didn't kick tires on changing the RFS, he tried to take a baseball bat to the program, and the response was matching and in response to, from a magnitude perspective, to the initial foul," Brooke Coleman, head of the industry lobby group Advanced Biofuels Business Council, said.

That's not how refiners felt: "Some Midwesterners cannot accept any premise that the RFS could be improved. As a result, their overreaction included everything from holds on confirmations to even more personal threats launched at the White House and EPA," one refining source told Eric.

Help wanted: Meanwhile, Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf sent Trump a letter Friday asking him to take steps to help Northeast refiners deal with the high costs associated with compliance credits, known as RINs. "I specially request that you ask Administrator Pruitt to waive the renewable volume obligation for Northeast refiners until or unless the market prices deflate," Wolf wrote.

PRUITT VISITS NEBRASKA: Continuing his state visits, Pruitt stopped by Nebraska Friday where he met with Gov. Pete Ricketts and other officials to discuss the agency's efforts to revamp the Waters of the U.S. regulation. "In his work of rolling back the old rule and writing a new one, Pruitt is returning power to the states and protecting the rights of our farm families and small business owners," Ricketts said. Afterwards, Pruitt hit up Omaha where he met with officials from railroad giant Union Pacific about the agency's agenda.

BLM ANNOUNCES SAGE GROUSE PUBLIC MEETINGS: The Bureau of Land Management will hold a series of public meetings in Idaho, Colorado, California and Oregon in November on potential changes to plans for protecting greater sage grouse habitat. The meetings will be in Idaho on Nov. 2, 6 and 7, in California on Nov. 3, in Oregon on Nov. 7, and in Colorado on Nov. 9. The sage grouse plans involve 10 Western states, so BLM may announce more meetings in the weeks ahead and it will accept emailed comments through either Nov. 27 or 15 days after the last public meeting, whichever is later. The agency created the plans in 2015 under an agreement with states in lieu of listing the bird as either endangered or threatened under the Endangered Species Act but re-opened them at Zinke's bidding.

WESTERN VALUES PROJECT SUES FOR SAGE GROUSE RECORDS: The Montana-based Western Values Project, which focuses on public land issues, is suing Interior to release copies of emails between Zinke, members of his sage grouse review team and oil and gas groups to determine the extent to which they were able to influence the agency's decision to reshape the sage grouse plans and guidance on energy development.

ME FIRST -- INTERIOR BEEFS UP BLM, BOEM SENIOR STAFF OVER NOMINEE DELAY: The Interior Department last week quietly assigned a senior political staffer to lend an extra hand overseeing the agencies that are key to carrying out the administration's energy goals until the Senate confirms Joe Balash as secretary for land and minerals management.

In Secretarial order No. 3357 dated Oct. 17, Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt said there is a "an immediate need for additional executive level supervision and direction" over the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement and the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement and assigned Aurelia Skipworth, the deputy assistant secretary for fish, wildlife and parks; to help out.

Balash's nomination easily cleared the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee in September with a voice vote but Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift in an emailed statement accused Senate Democrats of dragging their feet on the nomination. "Rather than let that slow our progress, we are utilizing team members across the bureaus to move the ball forward for the American people," she said. In related news, Virginia Johnson, an Interior beachhead staffer and principle deputy secretary for fish wildlife and parks in July left for a job at the USO, according to her LinkedIn profile.

HANNITY V. INGRAHAM ON SOLAR TARIFFS: Whether to slap cheap imported solar equipment with tariffs has split Laura Ingraham and fellow Fox News host Sean Hannity, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. Ingraham said on her radio show Friday that "Chinese manipulation of the solar market has hurt U.S. manufacturers" and urged Trump to hit back with steep tariffs. But Hannity has made an ad warning that Suniva and SolarWorld are trying to manipulate U.S. trade laws and pointing out that both had foreign owners. "American taxpayers should not have to bail out one foreign company so another foreign company can get a payout," he said.

NO MINCING WORDS HERE: Russian President Vladimir Putin bashed efforts by some European nations, Poland and Denmark chief among them, to block two Russian gas pipelines, POLITICO Europe's David M. Herszenhorn reports. "Attempts are being made to create obstacles in the way of our efforts to forge new energy routes - South Stream and Nord Stream - even though diversifying logistics is economically efficient, beneficial for Europe and promotes its security," Putin said in a speech at the Valdai Discussion Club.

SIGNED, SEALED, DELIVERED: The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management approved a key step of Deepwater Wind's 144-megawatt Revolution Wind project that will enable the company to collect the biological and wind performance data it needs to file a construction plan, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports. Massachusetts is slated to pick the winning contracts in July, and Deepwater Wind has said it could bring the project online by the end of 2023.

FRIESS WON'T RULE OUT BARRASSO CHALLENGE: Wealthy GOP megadonor Foster Friess tells Fox Business he won't raise money to pick off Republican incumbents, but he's not ruling out launching a bid to unseat Wyoming Sen. John Barrasso. "Better messaging, return of civility and untangling the health care logjam are my motivation; not that I am hell bent on replacing John Barrasso," he said.

Not amused: During an appearance on "Fox News Sunday," Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell referred to Steve Bannon and others not backing GOP incumbents as "specialists at nominating people who lose, and that isn't going to help President Trump achieve his agenda," POLITICO's Rebecca Morin reports.

QUICK HITS

- E.P.A. Cancels Talk on Climate Change by Agency Scientists. New York Times.
- Governor Brown Signs Order Allowing EPA to Help With Cleanup of Hazardous Waste from North Bay Fires. NBC Bay Area.
- OKC firm secures $200 million contract to restore power in Puerto Rico. News OK.
- U.S.-backed forces take Syria's largest oil field from Islamic State. Chicago Tribune.
- The World's Next Environmental Disaster. Wall Street Journal.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

1:00 p.m. — Press call with PJM president and CEO, contact: kassandra.meholick@edelman.com.

5:00 p.m. — House Rules Committee holds a hearing on various bills, H-313

6:00 p.m. — "Can Fossil Fuel Companies Be Held Liable for Climate Change?" Columbia Law School, Jerome Greene Hall, Room 104, 435 West 116th Street, New York, NY

TUESDAY

1:00 p.m. — Lawmakers host "Half-Earth Day" celebration and conversation with E.O. Wilson, U.S. Capitol Building Visitor Center: Congressional Auditorium and Atrium

2:30 p.m. — "Reauthorization of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act: Fisheries Science," Senate Commerce Coast Guard Subcommittee, Russell 253

4:00 p.m. — "Crude Nation: How Oil Riches Ruined Venezuela," Cato Institute, 1000 Massachusetts Ave. NW

6:00 p.m. — 'Flint' viewing and panel discussion with Rep. Dan Kildee, U.S. Capitol Visitors Center Auditorium

WEDNESDAY

10:00 a.m. — "Empowering State Based Management Solutions for Greater Sage Grouse Recovery," House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1324

10:00 a.m. — Senate Environment and Public Works Committee holds a business meeting and hearing on "The Wildfire Prevention and Mitigation Act of 2017," Dirksen 406

2:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on American Indian lands bill, House Natural Resources Indian, Insular, and Alaska Native Affairs Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

THURSDAY

10:00 a.m. — "Examine Cyber Technology and Energy Infrastructure," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

10:00 a.m. — "Improving Oversight of the Regulatory Process: Lessons from State Legislatures," Senate Homeland Security Subcommittee on Regulatory Affairs and Federal Management, Dirksen 342

12:00 p.m. — Natural Gas Roundtable hosts USTDA's Energy Sector Worldwide Team Lead, Carl B. Kress, University Club, 1135 16th Street, NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gyQXsp> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/senate-takes-up-massive-disaster-aid-package-today-025166>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Cornyn extracts Trump pledge of Texas hurricane aid Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/19/2017 05:47 PM EDT

The Senate's No. 2 Republican today endorsed a $36.5 billion disaster aid package, resolving one of the standoffs holding up the bill.

A spokesman for Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas) said Cornyn will support the House-passed aid package, H.R. 2266 \(115\), after personal assurances from the White House that more money for Texas will be delivered next month.

"The president strongly indicated his preference that a second appropriations request, which will come in November, will include funds specifically to aid Texans recovering from Harvey," Cornyn told Texas reporters in a call.

The House package includes nearly $19 billion to replenish FEMA, largely intended for emergency efforts in Puerto Rico. It would also restore the National Flood Insurance Program's borrowing capacity to ensure all hurricane victims, including in Texas and Florida, receive timely payments.

But just two days ago, Cornyn said the package was "inadequate" for his home state, which was recently slammed by Hurricane Harvey.

Texas lawmakers in Congress have been pressured by Gov. Greg Abbott to seek more funding — and fast. After the House denied the Texas delegation's $18.7 billion request for Harvey-specific aid last week, Abbott blasted the representatives for lacking a "stiff spine."

Without a cash infusion, the National Flood Insurance Program's claims funding would run dry on Oct. 23, a FEMA spokesman told POLITICO this week.

To view online click here.

Back

Puerto Rico housing subsidies at risk as blackout drags on Back

By Lorraine Woellert | 10/20/2017 06:42 PM EDT

Puerto Rico could lose funding for thousands of low-income housing units if power to the island isn't restored soon.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development, which subsidizes 203 housing projects on the island, is prohibited by law from providing Section 8 assistance to buildings that aren't "decent, safe, and sanitary."

As an electrical blackout drags on a month after Hurricane Maria, it's likely that fewer properties will be able to meet that standard, and the agency is being forced to review its options.

"Due to the ongoing and unique circumstances in Puerto Rico, we're reviewing every available option to assist residents during this difficult time," HUD spokesman Brian Sullivan said in a statement. About 20,000 housing units in 203 projects on the island receive project-based subsidies to provide affordable housing.

The agency has long interpreted "decent, safe and sanitary" housing to include continuous running water and electricity. In Puerto Rico, evaluating the livability of HUD's subsidized units has been slow going, and it's too soon to know how much damage has been done.

Meanwhile, property owners and managers say they're shipping generators to the island and sending couriers armed with cash to pay for gas to keep the machines running.

The Institute of Real Estate Management, an affiliate of the National Association of Realtors, whose members manage nearly 40 percent of federally assisted housing units, is urging HUD Secretary Ben Carson to keep the subsidies flowing.

"Penalizing these properties and, more importantly, these tenants, is simply adding more hardship to this community," the group wrote in a letter to HUD. "Without the federal portion of the rent, many of these properties will simply fail, and this stock of affordable housing will be lost."

After Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans, some subsidies to ruined housing projects were converted to rental vouchers, which were distributed to individuals in need. Many of those low-income households pulled up roots and moved away from the city. In Puerto Rico, there are far fewer, if any, places for families to go.

"It's not only an invitation for people to leave the island, it means you're going to displace that many more families," said Mike Ford, NAR's point person on Puerto Rico. "Maybe it's not what we would call safe and decent housing in Mississippi or Arkansas, but it's better to have a house with a roof over your head in a rainstorm than be outside."

Colin Wilhelm contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Biofuel backers claim victory in EPA battle Back

By Eric Wolff | 10/20/2017 05:37 PM EDT

Biofuels backers were breathing a sigh of relief on Friday after EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt backed away from changes to the Renewable Fuels Standard, a reversal that left oil refiners frustrated.

Pruitt acceded to demands from Sen. Joni Ernst that he publicly promise not to pursue plans to change the biofuel program rules — changes that had been sought by oil refiners who have long complained about the costs of implementing the program that many see as a giveaway to the corn states.

Pruitt's letter to Ernst, Sen. Chuck Grassley and five other Midwestern Republican senators delivered what they'd asked for: A promise not to expand the group of companies required to comply with the program, to keep the biodiesel volume requirements at levels proposed in July, to not alter the policy that strips RFS credits from exported ethanol, and to explore allowing year-round sale of gasoline with 15 percent ethanol nationwide.

The quick reversal by Pruitt — at the direction of President Donald Trump — showed the influence of the biofuel lobby, corn growers and farm-state lawmakers to scuttle changes in the decade-old policy sought by the energy industry.

"This was a basket of bad ideas for biofuels," said Brooke Coleman, head of the industry lobby group Advanced Biofuels Business Council. "And there's no way that we could have any other response than to take this approach. [Pruitt] didn't kick tires on changing the RFS, he tried to take a baseball bat to the program, and the response was matching and in response to, from a magnitude perspective, to the initial foul."

The push by the senators, as well as Midwestern governors, "made a huge difference in this matter," said Michael McAdams, head of the Advanced Biofuels Association. "In addition, the collective unity of the entire biofuels industry, including those who distribute and market these fuels, made a significant impression on the importance and support for the RFS program."

But oil refiners who have said the high cost of biofuel credits, called Renewable Identification Numbers, was costing them hundreds of millions of dollars, lamented the power of the biofuels lobby and the corn-belt lawmakers.

"The [Pruitt] letter is a result of political pressure applied by Midwestern politicians," said one refining source. "Some Midwesterners cannot accept any premise that the RFS could be improved. As a result, their overreaction included everything from holds on confirmations to even more personal threats launched at the White House and EPA."

The unified and vociferous campaign by the biofuels industry in attacking the proposal that would have lowered biodiesel volume mandates surprised some in the refining industry, as well as the political staff in the EPA, sources tell POLITICO.

The Trump administration's embrace of the oil industry had raised refiners' hopes that it could have the best opportunity in years for significant RFS changes, and refining giant Valero Energy, along with a group of Pennsylvania companies, believed they would get relief from what they considered an onerous program.

But Grassley took to the Senate floor to blast Pruitt's biofuel plans as a "betrayal" of Trump's promises to protect ethanol, and he arranged a call with Trump and Pruitt that led to the meeting in his office with Pruitt and Ernst as well as Deb Fischer (Neb.), John Thune (S.D.), Ben Sasse (Neb.), Pat Roberts (Kan.) and Mike Rounds (S.D.). Following that meeting, Ernst demanded the public statement from Pruitt, and said she would withhold her support for Bill Wehrum, who was nominated to run the agency's air office, forcing a delay in the Environment and Public Works Committee's vote until next week.

Ernst spokeswoman Brook Hougerson told POLITICO, "Now that Sen. Ernst has received the assurances that the EPA will support the spirit and the letter of the RFS, she will support Mr. Wehrum."

Valero was disappointed its efforts to change the program had been shot down by the fierce political opposition.

"These senators have intervened in a regulatory process, and the proposals and concepts in the letter address RFS implementation problems to which these senators have offered no constructive solutions," Valero said in a statement. "The only unifying principle of their bullying opposition seems to be a desire to maintain the status quo at all costs and to protect windfall profits associated with unregulated trading of renewable identification numbers, or RINs. Their position advances neither the goals nor the efficient implementation of the RFS, and places U.S. manufacturing jobs at risk."

But in a statement, the White House made clear that Trump remained fully behind the biofuels program.

"President Donald J. Trump promised rural America that he would protect the Renewable Fuel Standard, and has never wavered from that promise," spokeswoman Kelly Love said in a statement. "The president has had constructive conversations with several key officials about the RFS over the past week, and he understands their concerns. The Trump administration will protect the RFS and ensure that our Nation's hardworking farmers continue to fuel America."

One energy executive said the biofuel backers were victorious because they were unified in their support for the RFS, while Republicans, the oil industry, and even the refiners were not on the same page.

"The ethanol boys won this round, no doubt, but at a pretty high cost," said Stephen Brown, vice president for federal government affairs for Andeavor. "The refining industry is anything but united on the RFS beyond a sunset as individual companies have each made investments and honed mitigation strategies to comply with the statute. As those investment decisions become increasingly operationally embedded, the industry will continue to splinter on the suite of RFS issues."

But some producers are still wary of Pruitt's pledge in his Thursday letter, and they note that he promised to release a final rule in which none of the mandatory volumes will be less than he proposed in July. For some producers, those volumes were already too low.

"There's some work to do here," Coleman said. "We won't know until the rule is done. And we recognize it's an ongoing rulemaking, it's not like they're going or republish the rule, they've said what they can say. The final rule really matters."

To view online click here.

Back

Solar tariff fight pits Ingraham against Hannity Back

By Eric Wolff | 10/20/2017 03:53 PM EDT

Conservative talk radio host Laura Ingraham urged President Donald Trump to impose tariffs on solar equipment imports today — rebutting the argument by Fox News host Sean Hannity that such tariffs would be a bailout to two foreign-owned companies in the U.S.

"Chinese manipulation of the solar market has hurt U.S. manufacturers," Ingraham said on her show while interviewing Matt Card, an executive with Suniva, one of the companies that brought the trade case seeking tariffs on imported solar panels.

"This is where Trump fulfills his promises that he made on the campaign trail to stand up for American manufacturing by using current U.S. law that other presidents basically didn't pay that much attention to," Ingraham said.

But most of the industry opposes tariffs, and solar installers have enlisted Hannity to urge Trump not to implement trade barriers. He made an ad saying the two companies were trying to manipulate U.S. trade laws, and pointed out that both had foreign owners. "American taxpayers should not have to bail out one foreign company so another foreign company can get a payout," he says in the ad.

Suniva, which is backed by a Chinese solar company, and SolarWorld, a U.S. subsidiary of a German company, last month won a 4-0 decision from the U.S. International Trade Commission saying that they had been harmed by cheap solar panel imports.

WHAT'S NEXT: The ITC will hold a hearing to discuss tariff options next week.

To view online click here.

Back

BOEM approves key step for Deepwater Wind-Tesla offshore wind project Back

By Esther Whieldon | 10/20/2017 04:17 PM EDT

The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has approved a key step for Deepwater Wind's 144-megawatt Revolution Wind project proposed off the coast of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

In a letter dated Oct. 12 and posted by the agency today, BOEM said it approved Deepwater's "site assessment plan" to install a meteorological buoy at the site of the project. The buoy will give the company the biological and wind performance data it needs to file a construction plan.

Deepwater has held a lease for the area since 2013 and in July announced plans with Tesla to combine the wind project with a 40 megawatt-hour onshore battery in their bid to win a long-term clean-energy contract in Massachusetts.

Deepwater late last year brought the nation's first offshore wind project online — the 30-megawatt Block Island project off the Rhode Island coast.

WHAT'S NEXT: Massachusetts is slated to pick the winning contracts in July, and Deepwater Wind has said it could bring the project online by the end of 2023.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson

Bld. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Trump feuds as Puerto Rico struggles — Deregulatory push gets White House spotlight today — White House clamps down on non-commercial travel
Date: Monday, October 02, 2017 5:43:56 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/02/2017 05:41 AM EDT

DIRE SITUATION IN PUERTO RICO AMID TRUMP ATTACKS: President Donald Trump spent the weekend tweeting defenses of his administration's response to Hurricane Maria in Puerto Rico from his New Jersey golf resort but his words bear little resemblance to the dire situation on the ground. Just 5 percent of the island has electricity and more than half of people lack access to clean drinking water more than a week and a half after the hurricane.

View from the ground: Trump in a series of weekend tweets bashed the "poor leadership ability" of Puerto Rican officials, who he said "want everything to be done for them," POLITICO's Matthew Nussbaum and Marc Caputo report. But Lt. Gen. Jeffrey Buchanan, who the Defense Department tapped to lead its response efforts, told the PBS NewsHour "this is the worst I've ever seen" in terms of damage from the storm. And Carmen Yulín Cruz, San Juan's mayor and the target of a number of Trump's Twitter missives, told ABC's "This Week" of the federal officials responding: "Their heart is in the right place, but we have to cut the red tape. That's the one message."

Several relief officials told Matthew and Marc over the weekend that the administration's patting itself on the back over the response was not helping, especially as the conditions on the ground in no way matched the rhetoric. "We have to think of this as societal collapse: no power, no water, no food, no nothing," one relief official told them from Puerto Rico. "We came in thinking this would be a traditional model of disaster response ... It is up to us to keep everything moving. Civil society is pretty much gone, and we didn't realize that until like 36 or 48 hours ago. And who knows when it's going to end." Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer summed up his view of the response during an interview with CBS' "Face the Nation": "The bottom line is at least for the first week and a half the effort has been slow footed, disorganized, and not adequate," he said.

Administration mounts defense: FEMA Director Brock Long told "Fox News Sunday" the administration continued to make daily progress on improving the situation but added "absolutely" there was a long road ahead. "This is the most logistically challenging event the United States has ever seen and we have been moving and pushing as fast as the situation allows," Long said. "It's going to be multiple — multiple months before power is restored to many of these areas and that's just a reality." In an update obtained by Axios, Tom Bossert, Trump's homeland security adviser, wrote: "Lack of power and the persistent commodity distribution problems on the island are major focuses right now. This is still an urgent situation."

WELCOME TO MONDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and NOIA's Nicolette Nye was first up to name Rep. Dana Rohrabacher as the former Reagan speechwriter. For today: Which former congressperson joined the Green Party in 2008 and became their presidential candidate? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

WHITE HOUSE TIGHTENS REINS ON CABINET TRAVEL: After Tom Price's resignation Friday over hundreds of thousands in private flights, White House Chief of Staff John Kelly must now approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft," POLITICO's Matthew Nussbaum reports. "Every penny we spend comes from the taxpayer," OMB Director Mick Mulvaney wrote in a memo shortly after Price's resignation. "We thus owe it to the taxpayer to work as hard managing that money wisely as the taxpayer must do to earn it in the first place." Officials should stick to commercial travel "with few exceptions," he wrote. Remember both EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke have faced scrutiny in recent days for non-commercial travel.

Key line from memo: "Put another way, just because something is legal doesn't make it right."

Questions for Zinke continue: The Campaign for Accountability on Friday asked Office of Special Counsel and Interior's inspector general to probe whether Zinke violated the Hatch Act by speaking to the NHL's Vegas Golden Knights. He spoke at the dinner organized by team owner Bill Foley, one of Zinke's biggest campaign donors. Then, as POLITICO first reported, he hopped a $12,000 charter flight to an airport 20 minutes away from his Montana residence.

Some argue Pruitt, Zinke deserve Price's fate: A number of green and progressive groups urged Trump to also fire Pruitt and Zinke due to their non-commercial travel. "Forcing Tom Price from office does not come close to answering questions in the Trump Administration about the abuse of taxpayer funds when Ryan Zinke and Scott Pruitt are unrepentantly wasting hundreds of thousands on their own luxurious travel and sticking hardworking Americans with the bill," Sierra Club executive director Michael Brune said in one statement. "They deserve Price's fate and should be removed from office immediately."

MORE PUSHBACK TO PERRY'S FERC ASK: Count the solar and wind industries among those concerned by Energy Secretary Rick Perry's push to throw a lifeline to the struggling coal and nuclear industries (ICYMI Pro's Darius Dixon dived deep into the proposal Perry launched Friday). "The best way to guarantee a resilient and reliable electric grid is through market-based compensation for performance, not guaranteed payments for some, based on a government-prescribed definition," Amy Farrell, senior vice president for the American Wind Energy Association, said in a statement.

Same worries for solar: Christopher Mansour, vice president of federal affairs for the Solar Energy Industries Association: "While we agree that wholesale markets should fully compensate generators for all the energy, capacity and ancillary services they provide, healthy competition should always promote the best, most innovative solutions," he said. The conservative R St. Institute called Perry's plan "an arbitrary backdoor subsidy to coal and nuclear plants."

DEREGULATORY PUSH GETS SPOTLIGHT TODAY: Trump is expected to deliver remarks today at 11 a.m. highlighting his administration's efforts to remove regulatory burdens across the federal government to drive economic growth. Don't expect any major new initiatives to be announced, but ME would be shocked if the efforts of EPA to halt or delay a host of Obama-era regulations don't make a major appearance. That'll be followed by a series of breakout sessions with 10 agencies, including the Energy and Interior departments.

Not on the list? EPA, though the agency is doing its own event Tuesday to launch what it's calling Smart Sectors. EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman said it's "a program that aims to facilitate meaningful collaboration with regulated sectors, sensible policies to improve environmental outcomes, and better EPA practices and streamlined operations." As Pro's learned last week, the event will designate staff liaisons for specific industries including oil and gas and utilities and power generation.

Pre-buttal: Public Citizen and Coalition for Sensible Safeguards put out their pre-buttal to the speech and say Trump's agenda is "premised on a series of demonstrably false claims about the costs of regulation, defies public opinion and major campaign promises, and represents a craven attempt at self-enrichment and payback to corporate donors." They'll host a press call at 1:30 p.m., along with Rep. David Cicilline, responding to his remarks.

A taste of today's remarks: Here's how Trump summed up his deregulatory efforts to the National Association of Manufacturers on Friday: "We are cutting regulations at a pace that has never even been thought of before — not even thought of. This is a groundbreaking campaign and involves every department and agency across our government."

A preview (via Playbook): A photo inside the White House from a tipster with the pages on the right showing "the number of pages in the [Code of Federal Regulations] today, which is a measure of all regs on the books (Fed Register are just new ones), versus the # about a half-century ago" on the left side. Click here.

** A message from Chevron: We're piloting a program that uses drones to keep an eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xO60oe> **

ARKEMA UNDER INVESTIGATION: The Harris County District Attorney's Office announced Friday it was investigating the Houston-area Arkema plant whose volatile chemicals exploded in the aftermath of Hurricane Harvey, The Houston Chronicle reports. "Companies should be on notice that we care when they pollute our air, our water, our environment," District Attorney Kim Ogg said. "We are looking into exactly what happened at the plant. We are gathering facts and we will apply the law. Arkema is under criminal investigation."

MAIL CALL! LET'S DO IT, PRUITT: The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee Democrats, led by ranking member Tom Carper, sent Chairman John Barrasso a letter Friday urging him to schedule a hearing on EPA's budget request where Pruitt would testify. "We are concerned that this necessary hearing is long overdue," they wrote. Barrasso would only tell reporters last week he planned to have Pruitt appear before the committee "this year."

BORING BUT IMPORTANT: POLITICO's Danny Vinik looks at an important issue likely floating under your radar: the federal government's workforce continues to get older and younger people aren't stepping in to fill in the gaps. "It's that smart agencies develop a plan for a pipeline. The federal government's biggest problem is it's not very good at pipeline planning," Don Kettl, a professor at the University of Maryland who has written extensively on government management, said.

TAKE A GLANCE! Interior released a report Friday finding it contributed 1.7 million jobs and $254 billion in economic output during fiscal 2016. Among the conclusions: Interior-managed lands and waters produced 768 million barrels of crude oil, 4.7 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, and 310 million tons of coal. Its lands and facilities also generated enough hydropower to power 3.4 million homes.

SOMETHING'S PHISHY HERE: EPA employees were targeted by a phishing scheme seeking to steal large amounts of office supplies from the U.S., according to a podcast released Friday by the agency's inspector general. Photos of some of the phishing messages posted here.

MOVER, SHAKER: Brandon VerVelde has joined the House Science, Space and Technology Committee as press secretary and as an on-the-record spokesperson. He was previously director of communications for the Asian American Hotel Owners Association.

LIGHTER CLICK: Count Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski as those sharing super awkward old pictures of themselves to help fundraise help for Puerto Rico (though she left out the key hashtag of #PuberMe). Anyways, pic here. Also, apparently you can catchy your super trendy energy chairman playing cornhole down by Nats Park during the weekend.

QUICK HITS

- Oil Prices Bounce Back in Third Quarter. Wall Street Journal.
- Ancient bristlecone pine forests are being overwhelmed by climate change. Los Angeles Times.
- Renewable energy investors see opportunity in Puerto Rico's demolished grid. Reuters.
- In a Warming World, Keeping the Planes Running. New York Times.
- A Labor of Love: Coal mining continues despite unsettling trends. Casper Star-Tribune.
- Activists in 4-state pipeline protest embrace unique defense. AP.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

12:00 p.m. — "The Trump Administration and Federal Land," Women's Council on Energy and the Environment, Beveridge & Diamond PC, 1350 I Street NW

TUESDAY

9:00 a.m. — "Carbon Capture: A Business Opportunity in the Global Low-Carbon Economy," Global CCS Institute, National Press Club, 529 14th Street Northwest

10:00 a.m. — "Resiliency: The Electric Grid's Only Hope," House Science, Space and Technology Committee, Rayburn 2318

10:00 a.m. — Legislative hearing on H.R. 3400, House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1334

10:15 a.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee holds hearing to consider various nominations, Dirksen 366

10:30 a.m. — "Full Committee Hearing to Examine Energy Storage Technologies," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

2:00 p.m. — "Part II: Powering America: Defining Reliability in a Transforming Electricity Industry," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

2:30 p.m. — Senate Energy and Natural Resources Subcommittee hearing on various bills, 366 Dirksen

WEDNESDAY

9:30 a.m. — Natural Gas Supply Association holds its winter outlook media briefing for 2017-2018, RSVP: hinson.peters@ngsa.org

10:00 a.m. — Full committee markup on various bills, House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 133

10:00 a.m. — Senate Environment and Public Works Committee holds hearing on various EPA, NRC nominees, Dirksen 406

10:00 a.m. — "Air Quality Impacts of Wildfires: Perspectives of Key Stakeholders," House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

2:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources Subcommittee on Indian, Insular and Alaska Native Affairs holds legislative hearing on three bills, Longworth 1334

3:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources Committee holds members forum to discuss rescue and recovery in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, location: TBD

3:00 p.m. — Senate HELP Committee holds hearing on mine safety nominee, Dirksen 430

THURSDAY

9:30 a.m. — CSIS discussion on the future of electrification, Center for Strategic & International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Ave NW

10:00 a.m. — "Powering America: Consumer-Oriented Perspectives on Improving the Nation's Electricity Markets," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

12:00 p.m. — "The Growing Role of Liquefied Natural Gas in Latin America," Atlantic Council, 1030 15th ST NW, 12th Floor

12:30 p.m. — "How Agencies Reverse Policy: Stays, Remands, and Reconsideration," Environmental Law Institute, 1101 K Street, NW, President's Room

FRIDAY

9:00 a.m. — 2017 Veterans In Energy Forum, NRECA, 4301 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA 22203

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about energy, safety, and some truly high-flyin' doin'. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping to help keep a close eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xO60oe> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/trump-feuds-as-puerto-rico-struggles-024851>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump picks risky Puerto Rico fight Back

By Matthew Nussbaum and Marc Caputo | 09/30/2017 07:50 AM EDT

The natural disaster in Puerto Rico has escalated into a firestorm for President Donald Trump, whose Saturday Twitter attack on the mayor of San Juan drew harsh condemnations, new charges of insensitivity, and warnings about political fallout.

In a series of Saturday morning tweets, Trump blasted the "poor leadership ability" of Puerto Rican officials, who he said "want everything to be done for them." Trump also said the island's leaders "are not able to get their workers to help," and accused the Democratic mayor of San Juan — who has publicly criticized his administration's response to Hurricane Maria — of scoring partisan political points.

Even Republicans were uncomfortable seeing television images of suffering Puerto Ricans juxtaposed with Trump's fighting words, tweeted from his luxury golf course in Bedminster, New Jersey.

"He is definitely not helping," said Republican state Rep. Bob Cortes, a Puerto Rico native who lives in Central Florida, which has seen a huge influx of Puerto Rican families in recent years. Cortes added that the controversy "gives [Democrats] a platform to register new voters."

Other Republicans also worry that Trump's comments could be a godsend to Democrats in Florida—a swing state whose Puerto Rican population of more than 1 million is expected to swell as people flee the storm's aftermath.

Ten days after Maria ravaged the island, most of Puerto Rico is still without power and many of its 3.4 million residents, most of them U.S. citizens, lack basic supplies like food and water. Critics say the Trump administration has been slow to help, with some invoking the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans a decade ago.

The perception that George W. Bush oversaw an incompetent and insensitive response to Katrina dealt a crippling blow to his presidency from which he never recovered, helping to drive his approval ratings to the low 20s. Trump officials scoff at the comparison with Katrina, saying their response to Maria has been appropriate.

In Washington, Democrats were swift to condemn Trump's tweets Saturday.

Rep. Bennie Thompson of Mississippi, the top Democrat on the House Homeland Security Committee, released a statement calling Trump's tweets "abhorrent, baseless, and ... beneath the dignity of the office of the Presidency."

"Lives are on the line and people are dying," he added.

Trump's early morning broadsides, which began at 7:19 a.m., came after San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz slammed the administration's response repeatedly on Friday amid growing media coverage of the devastation on her island.

"We are dying here," Cruz said in an emotional plea. "If anybody out there is listening to us, we are dying, and you are killing us with the inefficiency and the bureaucracy." Puerto Rican officials say Maria killed at least 16 people there — a number experts believe will grow significantly.

From Bedminster, Trump defended his response while dismissing Cruz as a partisan.

"The Mayor of San Juan, who was very complimentary only a few days ago, has now been told by the Democrats that you must be nasty to Trump," Trump wrote on Twitter. "Such poor leadership ability by the Mayor of San Juan, and others in Puerto Rico, who are not able to get their workers to help."

Trump added that the Puerto Ricans "want everything to be done for them when it should be a community effort. 10,000 Federal workers now on Island doing a fantastic job."

But Republicans are anxious about the political effect the Puerto Rico crisis might have on Trump's national standing as well as their fortunes in Florida, where Gov. Rick Scott is mulling a bid against Democratic incumbent Sen. Bill Nelson next year. The past four top-of-the-ticket races in Florida were decided by 1.2 percentage points or less. Puerto Rican voters already tend to favor Democrats.

"It is a political nightmare for both Trump and Scott," a consultant associated with the Republican National Committee said in a text message. He said the disaster and Trump's "asinine response to criticism" have given Democrats "a way to 1) energize Puerto Rican voters in Florida and 2) motivate Puerto Rican residents who will be Florida residents after this disaster."

While echoing those concerns, Cortes also said Puerto Rico deserves its share of the blame, thanks to the commonwealth's endemic corruption and mismanagement. "It took a storm of this magnitude to show how underprepared they were," Cortes said.

Meanwhile, the White House is fighting against the narrative that it has been slow to act. Trump's Saturday schedule lists five phone calls to discuss the storm response, including one with Federal Emergency Management Agency administrator Brock Long.

Trump also reiterated his plan to visit the island on Tuesday, saying he would "hopefully" stop off in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Trump's White House social media director, Dan Scavino, joined the fray on Twitter, calling Cruz a "hater" and "an opportunistic politician." Cruz denied that her criticism of Trump was fueled by personal animus.

"Actually, I was asking for help," she told MSNBC on Saturday morning. "I wasn't saying anything nasty about the president." Cruz noted that even Trump's point man for the disaster recovery effort, Army Lt. Gen. Jeff Buchanan, said on Friday that the number of U.S. troops assisting is "not enough." (Buchanan said more manpower and equipment like helicopters were headed to the island.)

Trump's tweets also targeted media outlets that have dedicated increasing amounts of air time to the suffering and chaos on the pummeled island.

"Fake News CNN and NBC are going out of their way to disparage our great First Responders as a way to 'get Trump.' Not fair to FR or effort!" he wrote.

Under mounting pressure, in recent days Trump officials have defended their relief effort as a success. On Thursday, acting Homeland Security Secretary Elaine Duke called the response "a good news story."

The comment only inflamed frustrations on an island where a sense of helplessness prevails, however.

"Damn it, this is not a good news story," Cruz told CNN on Friday. "This is a people are dying story. This is a life or death story. This is a there's a truckload of stuff that cannot be taken to people story. This is a story of a devastation that continues to worsen because people are not getting food and water."

Cruz, a liberal Trump critic, initially avoided tussling with the president for fear that it would become a distraction to relief efforts and "not productive."

But as the week unfolded, Puerto Rico officials felt their pleas for faster action and less red tape went unheeded. Then, on Thursday, Trump touted the recovery effort on Twitter, writing, "Governor said 'great job!'" That was an apparent reference to Cruz, who finally let loose with harsh criticism.

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) also pointed to problems on the island in a Friday tweet, writing that criticism of the Trump administration response is "missing [the] main problem." FEMA "has sent lots of aid problem is distribution once it gets to #PuertoRico," Rubio wrote.

Rubio, though, warned the Trump administration privately and publicly that Puerto Rico could become a "Katrina-like" situation.

Behind the sharp debate over disaster response are internal political tensions on the island. Cruz is eyeing the job of Puerto Rico's Republican governor, Ricardo Rossello, who has taken pains to avoid publicly criticizing Trump. She is developing strong ties to Florida Democrats and met Wednesday with Miami Beach Mayor Philip Levine, a likely candidate for Florida governor, when he delivered 7,000 pounds of relief supplies to the island.

About 24 hours later, Florida's Republican governor met with Rossello in Puerto Rico, then debriefed Trump on the disaster response over lunch the following day.

"This is not a time for politics," Scott said on the White House lawn Friday, saying that Rossello is "going through an unbelievable crisis."

To view online click here.

Back

Trump's breaking point with Price Back

By Andrew Restuccia, Josh Dawsey and Dan Diamond | 09/29/2017 08:24 PM EDT

Tom Price's downfall was his penchant for pricey jets.

But his demise was months in the making, as the president continued to lose trust in the Health and Human Services secretary who rarely attended Oval Office strategy meetings, had little sway or influence on Capitol Hill, and was associated in the president's mind with one of the administration's biggest defeats — the failure to repeal Obamacare.

Of particular notoriety: A picture of Price in March drinking at Bullfeathers, a famed Capitol Hill bar, as his colleagues tried to wrangle votes for the president's signature initiative.

Price's lack of goodwill with Trump and other senior administration officials ultimately doomed his chances of survival, even though many administration officials believed the furor would blow over when news first broke that Price spent hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars on private jets.

By early this week, however, it became clear that the growing firestorm over Price's travel was only getting worse. A number of officials in the White House said HHS had badly handled the response to the controversy — and was caught off guard by the facts. And it was hard to find a power player in the White House who would defend Price to the president.

POLITICO published five stories over the last 10 days that revealed Price had spent more than \$1 million in taxpayer money on travel since May, including overseas flights on military aircrafts and more than two dozen domestic trips on private planes.

Other media outlets amplified the revelations, with cable news frequently running damaging chyrons and reporters peppering Trump and press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders about the growing scandal throughout the week.

The president grew more angry, fuming to West Wing aides about the optics of a member of the administration spending so lavishly. The almost daily drip of revelations — including that Price took a government-funded private jet in August to get to a Georgia resort where he and his wife own land — further incensed the president.

Meanwhile, Trump was intensely frustrated by his unsuccessful health care push and associated Price with the failure, several aides said. He joked at a rally in July he would fire Price if he didn't get the votes for the Obamacare repeal.

While the White House has weathered a steady stream of mini-scandals since Trump took office, this one was different, according to administration officials, because it made Price look like the kind of creature of Washington that the president had railed against on the campaign trail.

Trump himself blasted Price on Friday for what he suggested was frivolous spending in light of the administration's efforts to impose fiscal conservatism on the federal government.

"I've saved hundreds of millions of dollars," the president told reporters on Friday when he was asked if he had lost confidence in Price. "So I don't like the optics of what you just saw."

Administration officials grew increasingly certain on Friday that Price would be ousted, but the final decision happened quickly, according to aides, who had cautioned as late as Friday afternoon that Trump might change his mind.

Though he nurtured a reputation as a ruthless boss on The Apprentice, Trump often hesitates to fire people — and sometimes takes weeks to make a final decision. In this case though, the president was counseled that the travel stories had become a distraction from his policy agenda, especially his tax reform push, according to an administration official.

There was also little personal chemistry between the two men.

The president was initially attracted to Price because he was a doctor, a supporter and "looked the part," one adviser with direct knowledge said, plus he was given positive reviews from House Speaker Paul Ryan and others on Capitol Hill.

He soon became a bit player in the administration.

Price was often left out of senior level meetings in the Oval Office on Obamacare repeal, even as other top deputies attended, according to several people with knowledge of the matter.

The president and a number of top aides had little faith in his political instincts.

Leading the effort to negotiate with senators on the Hill was Seema Verma from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services and Marc Short, head of legislative affairs. Two senior White House officials said Price's relationships at the Capitol were not as good as he promised — and that some members preferred not to deal with him. Many members saw him as prickly and not particularly likable, one senior GOP aide said, damaging his ability to negotiate.

Andrew Bremberg, the head of the White House's Domestic Policy Council, was more involved in policy decisions than Price, these people said.

Price was often out of town during key stretches of the presidency, and while several senior officials said they weren't aware of his private jet use, there was a general consensus that he was often nowhere to be found.

"I didn't know he was on private jets," one senior administration official said. "I knew he was never there."

Price's press office initially reassured the White House that the story would quickly pass and argued that Price needed charter jets to respond to public health emergencies like the recent hurricanes.

After POLITICO identified at least 17 charter flights that took place before the first storm — Hurricane Harvey — hit in late August, and included flights that did not appear to be for urgent public health priorities, HHS then changed its argument: Price needed charter aircraft "to accommodate his demanding schedule," a spokesperson allowed last week.

As he often does when making a big decision, the president began making calls on Thursday night and Friday morning to ask whether he should fire Price.

Trump also told aides that if Price had a defense, he would give it. "I don't think he has any defense for it," one person said, summarizing Trump's comments. "He is just taking it."

Price did make a last-ditch effort to save his job, announcing on Thursday that he would reimburse the federal government for the cost of his seat on the domestic flights, a figure that reportedly totals nearly $52,000 — just a fraction of the total cost of the trips. The president didn't like that Price was only offering to pay back some of the flights, and was struck by TV coverage that showed the total cost as more than $1 million, officials said.

The secretary also tried to go on Fox News and assuage the president. It didn't work.

Rumors began swirling in HHS early Friday that Price might be fired. But, in an apparent sign of how quickly the final decision was made, Price was conducting business as usual late Friday.

Just minutes before Price's resignation became official, the secretary sent an email to HHS officials outlining next steps on the "Reimagine HHS initiative," a broad reorganizational effort of the department that was expected to result in staff reductions. The email outlined senior HHS officials who will be spearheading the process.

"Thank you for all your dedication and support, and we look forward to being in touch soon," Price wrote, according to the email, which was obtained by POLITICO.

Across town at the White House, Trump's chief of staff John Kelly was calling Hill leadership to tell them Price was out.

One senior official said the tipping point was when the White House couldn't contain the scandal and it became an administration-wide story.

Other members of Trump's Cabinet were coming under increased criticism for their use of military and private aircraft, including Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin.

"Got to the point he was causing problems for everybody," this person said. "He could have lasted maybe if it didn't just get worse every day."

To view online click here.

Back

White House to Cabinet: No private air travel without Kelly's approval Back

By Matthew Nussbaum | 09/29/2017 06:57 PM EDT

The White House cracked down on Cabinet officials' use of private planes Friday, telling them chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft," after Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price resigned over his own taxpayer-funded flights.

Mick Mulvaney, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, sent out the memo soon after Price's resignation was made public. His exit came after a series of POLITICO reports about his frequent use of private planes to conduct government — and sometimes personal — business.

"In light of recent events, the President has asked me to remind the heads of all executive departments and agencies of Administration policies on travel," Mulvaney wrote.

He reminded the department and agency heads that, by regulation, "Government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft should not be used for travel by Government employees except with specific justification."

"However, beyond the law and formal policy, departments and agencies should recognize that we are public servants," Mulvaney wrote. "Every penny we spend comes from the taxpayer. We thus owe it to the taxpayer to work as hard managing that money wisely as the taxpayer must do to earn it in the first place."

Mulvaney added: "Put another way, just because something is legal doesn't make it right."

Officials should stick to commercial travel "with few exceptions," he wrote.

In the wake of the controversy, other administration officials' travels have come under scrutiny. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has used military planes for some trips, POLITICO reported, while EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin have also raised eyebrows with their travel itineraries.

President Donald Trump was livid over the Price scandal and accepted his resignation on Friday.

"We have great secretaries, and we have some that actually own their own planes, so that solves that," Trump told reporters earlier on Friday.

To view online click here.

Back

Interior Secretary Zinke traveled on charter, military planes Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 09/28/2017 07:54 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and his aides have taken several flights on private or military aircraft, including a $12,000 charter plane to take him to events in his hometown in Montana and private flights between two Caribbean islands, according to documents and a department spokeswoman.

Zinke is at least the fourth senior member of the Trump administration to have used non-commercial planes at taxpayer expense, along with Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price. President Donald Trump has fumed at Price's pricey travel, and Democrats say the revelations demonstrate a cavalier attitude by Cabinet members toward excessive spending.

Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift said Zinke's charter or military plane trips were booked only after officials were unable to find commercial flights that would accommodate Zinke's schedule and that all were "pre-cleared by career officials in the ethics office." Swift said she had not spoken to Zinke about whether he would reimburse the government for the cost of the flights, as Price plans to do for some of the $400,000 tab he racked up on charter flights.

On June 26, a Beechcraft King Air 200 carried Zinke and several staffers from Las Vegas to Glacier Park International Airport in Kalispell, Montana, about a 20-minute drive from Zinke's home in Whitefish, according to his official schedule. The flight cost $12,375, Swift said.

Zinke left after speaking at an event for the city's new professional hockey team, the Vegas Golden Knights Development Camp Dinner, according to his schedule. Earlier in the day, he had been in Pahrump, Nevada, for an announcement related to public lands.

Zinke's flight left Las Vegas at 8:30 p.m. PST and landed in Kalispell around 1:30 a.m. MST. The secretary stayed overnight at his residence, Interior documents show.

Las Vegas is one of the main connecting airports for commercial flights to Glacier International. Commercial flights between the two cities are available for several hundred dollars a ticket, according to travel planning websites.

In Whitefish, Zinke attended the Western Governors' Association's annual meeting, where he spoke for about 20 minutes without taking questions. He then had a private lunch with association members. In the afternoon Zinke was the subject of a photo shoot with GQ magazine at Lake McDonald and fished while being interviewed by Outside Magazine, the records show.

Zinke and staffers flew commercial back to Washington, D.C., the next day, according to the records.

The trip was not the first in which Interior booked a private jet for Zinke. On March 31, Interior chartered two flights to take Zinke and staff from St. Croix to St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands to attend the centennial of the Danish government turning the islands over to the United States. Another two flights were chartered to return to St. Croix later that night.

Swift said she did not know how much the flights cost but that no other arrangements were available.

Commercial flights between the two islands generally run a few hundred dollars, according to travel booking websites.

In May, Zinke and his wife, Lolita, used a military aircraft to travel to Norway. From there, they flew on a military plane to Alaska for events organized by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. The trip included charter planes to travel within Alaska, a common occurrence in the large, remote state. The Zinkes paid for Lolita's share of the trip, the full cost of which was not immediately available, Swift said.

Zinke also took a military helicopter from Fort Bliss to review the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument in New Mexico in June, and he used a Bureau of Land Management helicopter to review the Basin and Range National Monument on July 30. "It is difficult to survey a half-million-acre piece of land with few roads by foot or car in an hour-and-a-half," Swift said.

Along with Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, Zinke took a military plane to Ravalli County, Montana, to check on wildfires in the area in August. "The military plane was used because of a very tight travel window, with no viable commercial airline options to transport two secretaries, security details, and associated USDA, Forest Service and Interior staff to Missoula in the time required," said USDA spokesman Tim Murtaugh. The cost of the flight was not immediately available, but the two agencies plan to reimburse the Air Force, Murtaugh said.

To view online click here.

Back

DOE's Perry pushes FERC to support coal power plants Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/29/2017 02:48 PM EDT

The Trump administration on Friday called on FERC to create new rules to protect coal-fired and nuclear power plants that are being squeezed by cheaper natural gas and renewable sources, saying they were "indispensable for economic and national security."

Energy Secretary Rick Perry, who told miners in Pennsylvania on Thursday that "it's time for coal in this country to be revived," pressed electricity regulators to alter power markets and protect the resilience of the power grid with payments to generators that keep fuel supplies on site, a clear reference to the coal-fired and nuclear power plants.

The proposal, which DOE said gave FERC 60 days to create a final or interim rule, comes just a month after Perry's agency issued a report saying FERC should "expedite" its work with grid operators to ensure the stability of the nation's power network.

"In terms of process, this is a pretty bold move," said Tony Clark, a Republican former FERC commissioner. DOE often conducts studies on issues it believes need attention, he said, but "actually forwarding to the commission something specific for action is a pretty bold way of moving the issue right up the batting order at FERC."

The new proposal, directed at FERC under a rarely used Section 403 authority of the Department of Energy Organization Act, stops short of specifically seeking market incentives for coal. But it calls for full-cost recovery for power generating units that provide essential power and "ancillary" services — and have a 90-day fuel supply on site in case of natural or man-made disruptions. That would exclude most natural gas power plants, which do not typically keep large fuel inventories on hand and instead receive supplies via pipeline.

Perry's request represents a departure from the two decades of U.S. policy that has trended toward more market-based tools, which has helped natural gas to nearly double its power market share. Renewable energy sources like wind and solar, though still modest when compared to fossil fuels or nuclear power, have also grown quickly as federal incentives helped drive down their costs.

But the growth of renewables and natural gas — combined with tighter pollution controls and weak new demand for electricity — has forced hundreds of old coal-fired power plants into retirement. Nuclear power plants in some parts of the country are also under financial pressure, hurt by negative wholesale power market prices that sometimes require the plant owners to pay to deliver their power supplies.

"If this gets the debate started, then my hat's off," said former FERC Chairman Pat Wood, a friend of Perry and a strong advocate for market-based power systems. "But it's a pretty arresting [thing] to wake up and read. That would never have played in Texas. ... If there is a service to be valued, then a market can value that."

In the grid study ordered by Perry and released in August, DOE experts pointed to low power prices and cheap natural gas as the single biggest reason for coal ceding its position as the nation's biggest source of electricity. And that report also called for "reforms" to power markets that would help bolster the electricity network's resilience by easing the financial pressures on many power providers.

In its Friday proposal, DOE cited a spike in demand during the 2014 "polar vortex" that hit much of the U.S., which prompted utilities to run many coal plants that were slated for retirement. Without those plants, as many as 65 million people in the PJM market would have seen their power resources threatened, DOE said.

But the new regulatory pitch from the agency also fueled the growing feud between the gas and coal industries.

Paul Bailey, president and CEO American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, commended Perry for "initiating a rulemaking by FERC that will finally value the on-site fuel security provided by the coal fleet."

But the American Petroleum Institute, which also represents natural gas producers, said DOE drew the wrong conclusions from the 2014 event, and that forcing new mandates on the power market wasn't the solution.

"[A]s we review the proposal we are concerned the agency has mischaracterized the lessons learned from past weather-related events and appears to suggest that additional regulation is the answer where markets have already proven the ability to greatly benefit consumers and give our electric system the flexibility needed to meet constantly, and often rapidly, changing electricity demands," said API Executive Vice President and Chief Strategy Officer Marty Durbin in a statement.

FERC, which has struggled to integrate states' energy policies that aim to boost renewables or support aging nuclear power plants, has long maintained a fuel-neutral stance in the regional markets that it oversees. If it were to follow Perry's directive to create incentives for grid resilience to plants that maintain their own fuel inventories on site, it would be an implicit move at the national level to alter the electricity markets to support the fuels that both Perry and Trump have touted.

Montana regulator Travis Kavulla suggested on Twitter that rather than deal with the pressing issues facing the grid, "Instead, this reform is sort of the @ENERGY equivalent of the Oprah "you get a car, and you get a car. And you? A car!" approach."

However, FERC, whose members are appointed by the president and operate as an independent body, isn't obligated to implement the specific policy pushed by Perry. The commission will so be back to operating with a full five members in the coming weeks, with a Republican majority.

"FERC's going to follow its own procedures," said Marc Spitzer, a Republican former FERC commissioner. "It would be a mistake for people to assume that this is going to be some partisan Republican rubber stamp given the way FERC works."

FERC can spend months or years digging into complex issues that underpin the power markets, and its commissioners tend to seek common ground with each other to ensure that its rules are clear and ensure long-lasting regulations that give utilities stability to plan their operations.

"Is someone really going to invest [billions of dollars] when it's a 3-2 vote that partisans and the parties can flip next year? Is that a good forum for investment as opposed to a 5-0 order?" Spitzer said.

FERC declined to say when the agency last received a rulemaking from DOE using Section 403.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Trump team not pitching Paris renegotiation in Bonn — NERC head on leave after arrest — Perry raises eyebrows with roundtable for big donors
Date: Monday, November 13, 2017 5:49:20 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 11/13/2017 05:45 AM EDT

With help from Emily Holden

LAISSEZ LES BONN TEMPS ROULER? Government officials and industry executives will urge developing countries to pursue "cleaner" fossil fuel and nuclear power in a presentation today in Bonn, Germany, Pro's Emily Holden reports. At tonight's event George David Banks, special assistant to President Donald Trump on energy and environment, will make introductory remarks, while Francis Brooke, an aide to Vice President Mike Pence, moderates a discussion with executives from the liquefied natural gas company Tellurian, the coal company Peabody Energy and the nuclear power company NuScale. Barry Worthington, director of the U.S. Energy Association who will participate in the discussion alongside industry executives, told Climate Home News that striking fossil fuel trade deals was a major goal of the presentation.

Not on the agenda? Paris. Diplomats entering the second week of the COP23 climate negotiations won't be getting any hints from the U.S. delegation about how to convince Trump to stay in an international deal to slash greenhouse gas emissions. A White House official briefing reporters last week said climate mitigation is a "lesser priority" than energy security and economic development, "but it's still a priority" for the White House. "The president has left the door open, the president has said multiple times that he's willing to reconsider our engagement in the Paris agreement if we can find a fairer deal that works for American businesses, taxpayers, consumers, so yeah it's up to the president," the official told reporters.

Out of the shadows: A host of prominent Democratic officials, including five senators, stressed over the weekend that the U.S. remained committed to action on climate change despite Trump's stance on issue, POLITICO California's David Siders and Emily report. "I want to make it clear: The federal government is not just the president of the United States," Sen. Ben Cardin, ranking member on the Foreign Relations Committee, told activists on Saturday. The senators met with delegations from India, Japan, the European Union, Mexico, Indonesia and Canada to assuage concerns about U.S. inaction. They also participated in side events including one decrying efforts to weaken automobile CAFE standards.

Governors tout actions too: Four Democratic governors — Virginia's Terry McAuliffe, California's Jerry Brown, Washington's Jay Inslee and Oregon's Kate Brown — plan to highlight their climate ambitions in a panel this morning with Christiana Figueres, former executive secretary of the UNFCCC. And that comes after Jerry Brown and former New York mayor Michael Bloomberg, released a report touting the role of U.S. states and cities in addressing climate change that nonetheless acknowledged non-federal efforts won't be sufficient to meet the 26 to 28 percent emissions reductions below 2005 levels that the U.S. promised by 2030.

Steyer stays focused (on impeachment): Tom Steyer, the billionaire Democratic donor, on Sunday morning made his case for impeaching Trump to Democrats in Bonn, asking them to "confront the liars and deniers," David also reports. The governors seemed unimpressed, and Steyer acknowledged himself that congressional Republicans, not voters, would have to back his impeachment campaign for it to work.

IT'S ANOTHER MONDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and NRDC's Ed Chen was first up to identify the L.A. County board of supervisors as the body with two former congresswomen (Janice Hahn and Hilda Solis). For today: Rahm Emanuel is the most famous former congressman-turned-mayor but there's another former member that now runs the largest city in their state. Who is it? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

NERC CHIEF ON LEAVE AFTER ARREST: Gerry Cauley is on a leave of absence from the North American Electric Reliability Corporation "until further notice" following his arrest on a domestic violence charge. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reports Cauley has been charged with a misdemeanor, battery/family violence. Charles Berardesco has been named interim CEO.

EYEBROWS RAISED BY PERRY ROUNDTABLE: Energy Secretary Rick Perry headlines an intimate gathering today on behalf of the pro-Trump outside group America First Policies in a growing trend of giving donors access to Cabinet officials that many worry is an ethical gray area, POLITICO's Maggie Severns reports. Perry won't solicit donations but America First officials plan to ask for contributions after he departs. He's allowed to take part in events for the group's nonprofit policy arm, which is legally separate from the super PAC even though the same officers run both groups.

But campaign finance reform advocates say the arrangement takes advantage of a loophole. "This is all part of the very close coordination we're seeing between the campaign itself and what's supposedly an outside group," said Craig Holman, the government affairs lobbyist at the good-government group Public Citizen.

INSIDE LOOK AT PRESSURE ON PERRY'S GRID STUDY: Alison Silverstein, the veteran energy consultant who authored Perry's electric grid study, resisted pressure from the agency to blame regulations for the struggles of coal and nuclear plants, Forbes reports. After being hit for not faulting regulations in the first draft, Silverstein said she asked officials to provide data to back up their assertion: "I said, 'Bring me the data. I've been in the building three or four weeks now, you guys are the ones who own the issue. Prove to me, bring me all of your research on how regulation has killed these.' 'Well, we don't have any.' 'Then how am I supposed to do this?'"

ACTIVISTS WILL BE PROSECUTED: The Justice Department said Friday it would aggressively prosecute activists who damage pipelines or "critical energy infrastructure in violation of federal law," Reuters reports. That comes after more than 80 House members sought information on what DOJ planned to do about an increase in protest activities around pipelines in a late October letter.

ON TAP IN CONGRESS — DISASTER AID REQUEST EXPECTED: The latest disaster relief request is expected to arrive on Capitol Hill sometime this week and is likely to top $50 billion, Pro Budget and Appropriations Brief reports. Like the two previous requests, it won't be broken down state-by-state. But the governors of Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands will be town to push for recovery funds and the Texas congressional delegation hopes to meet with OMB Director Mick Mulvaney to make their case for their full $61 billion request.

Speaking of which, Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló and Del. Jenniffer González hold a press conference at 11 a.m. today at the Hall of States to make their case.

And you're out: Abner Gómez resigned his post as head of Puerto Rico's emergency management department on Friday and Lt. Gen. Jeffrey Buchanan, who led the Trump administration's military response to the hurricanes, will be reassigned off the island this week, CNN reports.

And remember Whitefish? While senior linemen from Florida working on grid restoration work on behalf of Whitefish Energy earned $63 an hour working in Puerto Rico, the tiny Montana-based company billed the island's utility $319 an hour for linemen, the New York Times reports. Experts said those charges were well above normal, even for emergency work, though a spokesman for the company defended the charges, saying "simply looking at the rate differential does not take into account Whitefish's overhead costs," included in the rate.

Status check: More than 7 weeks after Hurricane Maria hit, more than 52 percent of the island remains in the dark and more than 10 percent of residents still lack drinking water, according to government figures.

MINE SAFETY PICK COULD GET VOTE: Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell filed cloture last week on David Zatezalo's selection to be the administration's mine safety chief, teeing up a final confirmation vote as soon as this week. He chaired the coal company Rhino Resources when it received pattern of violation notices in 2010 and 2011, but said during his confirmation hearing he wouldn't have a problem working with career staff at MSHA that issued those notices.

FLOOD INSURANCE READY TO ROLL! House Republicans are ready to try again with a revised version H.R. 2874 \(115\) of their flood insurance reauthorization and the Rules Committee meets today at 5 p.m. That comes even as coastal lawmakers continued to raise concerns with the proposal. Pro Financial Services' Zachary Warmbrodt with more here.

FORMER EPA ATTORNEYS BASH PRUITT ORDER: Fifty-seven former EPA career attorneys today sent a letter to Administrator Scott Pruitt "to correct the many mistakes of law and fact" concerning his October directive boosting the role of industry in settlement negotiations. "It is EPA's failure to comply with legal requirements that is the problem, not the people who sue EPA, the courts that hear the suits, or the EPA and DOJ staff who faithfully negotiate settlements that provide EPA longer and more flexible schedules than it would receive if there were no settlement," they wrote. The former agency attorneys urge Pruitt to revise the directive to promote "fair, transparent, and efficient settlement of well-founded suits against the agency."

NORTH CAROLINA OFFICIAL ALSO ON LEAVE: Donald van der Vaart, a recent appointee to EPA's Scientific Advisory Board and top North Carolina environmental regulator during the prior Republican governor's term, has been placed on "investigatory leave," The News & Observer reports. Van der Vaart's selection to the advisory board generated significant controversy and prompted the new head of the state's Department of Environmental Quality to say he didn't represent North Carolina on the EPA board. His deputy John Evans was also placed on "investigatory leave" for unspecified reasons. Both men demoted themselves to be shielded from termination under the new incoming Democratic administration.

WHY BROWN'S A CLIMATE WARRIOR: David Siders' entire profile of Brown is worth your time but of particular interest to ME readers is why termed-out governor has devoted so much energy to climate change. "I find a lot of what is included in politics doesn't count that much, at least for my salvation or my peace of mind or my interest in life," Brown said. The climate, he went on, "is fundamental. It's not like dietary requirements. It's not like a tax measure, or a school curriculum, or many of the issues, even a crime bill. It goes to the essence of being alive, living things. Whether it's humans or fauna, flora, the basis of life is embedded in this chemical structure, biological structure. And it's threatened."

But not good enough for some: Environmental activists interrupted Brown's speech in Bonn Saturday, shouting his refusal to ban fracking in California was a major blemish on his record. But the long-time governor shot back, according to The Sacramento Bee, "I agree with you, 'in the ground. Let's put you in the ground so we can get on with the show here."

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yQ8q7z> **

MAIL CALL! SAVE TANGIER! Virginia Sens. Tim Kaine and Mark Warner asked Trump in a letter to follow through on his pledge to protect Tangier Island, thought likely to become uninhabitable within 50 years due to rising seas. "We can debate the causes for why this is happening, but regardless, the effects are clear. It is urgent that we address those effects," they wrote.

FOR YOUR RADAR: Delaware Gov. John Carney and Rep. Donald Norcross headline a rally today at the Delaware City Refining Company at 10 a.m. urging Trump to fix the Renewable Fuel Standard to protect East Coast refining jobs.

HIGH PRICE TO PAY? Food and Water Watch and Greenaction for Health and Environmental Justice are out with a report arguing pollution trading programs are "undermining successful environmental laws like the Clean Air Act and the Clean Water Act" by allowing industries to pay to pollute and that they inflict the brunt of the damage on low-income and minority communities. Read it here.

QUICK HITS

- $300 Billion War Beneath the Street: Fighting to Replace America's Water Pipes. New York Times.
- California Westlands water settlement in limbo. High Country News.
- Can Carbon-Dioxide Removal Save the World? New Yorker.
- Schwarzenegger calls on climate activists to change methods. AP.
- Lessons From Hurricane Harvey: Houston's Struggle Is America's Tale. New York Times.
- Canada, U.K. team up in push to end coal-power use. The Globe and Mail.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

MONDAY

2:00 p.m. — The Environmental and Energy Study Institute hosts briefing to examine how high-octane, low-carbon fuel can enable CAFE compliance, Dirksen 106

2:00 p.m. — "Approaches for International Collaboration and Financing for CCUS Pilot Projects," U.S. Energy Association, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 550

5:00 p.m. — The House Rules Committee holds hearing on H.R. 2874 \(115\), the National Flood Insurance Program reauthorization bill, H-313

TUESDAY

9:30 a.m. — "Hurricane Recovery Efforts in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

9:30 a.m. — The NAACP, Clean Air Task Force and National Medical Association hold briefing to unveil report on impacts of oil and gas development on African-American communities, National Press Club, 529 14th St NW

10:00 a.m. — "Response and Recovery to Environmental Concerns from the 2017 Hurricane Season," House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — "Legislative Hearing on S. 1857, S. 203, S. 839 and S. 1934," Senate Environment and Public Works Clean Air and Nuclear Safety Subcommittee, Dirksen 406

11:30 a.m. — SEEC, Center for American Progress, the League of Conservation Voters, and more hold press conference touting commitment to Paris accord, Senate swamp

2:00 p.m. — "The Need for Transparent Financial Accountability in Territories' Disaster Recovery Efforts," House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1324

2:00 p.m. — "Sustaining U.S. Leadership Against Nuclear Terrorism and Proliferation," Hudson Institute, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Suite 400

4:00 p.m. — "Status and Prospects for U.S. Nuclear Power," John Hopkins SAIS, Room 806, 1619 Massachusetts Avenue NW

WEDNESDAY

8:00 a.m. — Roll Call Live's "Energy Decoded," Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW, 8th Floor Knight Conference Center

9:00 a.m. — Business Meeting to consider Reconciliation Legislation, Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

10:00 a.m. — "Legislative Hearing on Bills to Empower Indian Tribes, Promote Self-Determination," House Natural Resources Indian, Insular and Alaska Native Affairs Subcommittee, Longworth 1324

10:00 a.m. — House Science Committee markup of several bills, Rayburn 2318

10:00 a.m. — "Promoting American Leadership in Reducing Air Emissions Through

Innovation," Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Dirksen 406

10:00 a.m. — The Information Technology and Innovation Foundation holds a panel discussion on "ARPA-E: A Catalyst of Clean Energy Innovation," 1101 K Street NW, Suite 610A

10:30 a.m. — "Legislative Hearing on National Park, Fish and Wildlife Service Bills," House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee, Longworth 1334

12:30 p.m. — "Coming Clean: Improving Transparency and Accountability to End Pollution's Chokehold on Development," World Resources Institute, 10 G Street NE, Suite 800

2:00 p.m. — "Nord Stream and European Energy Security," Jamestown Foundation, Choate Conference Room, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 1779 Massachusetts Avenue, NW

6:00 p.m. — Press briefing on Marine Mammal Protection Act featuring Actress Miranda Cosgrove, Rayburn 2045

THURSDAY

8:30 a.m. — Progressive Policy Institute and Common Good host a Capitol Hill forum on "Rebuilding America: What Are We Waiting For?" The Reserve Officers Association Building, Symposium Center, 4th Floor, 1 Constitution Ave NE

10:00 a.m. — "Successful Pre-Salt Auctions put Brazil's Oil & Gas Sector on Promising Path," Wilson Center, One Woodrow Wilson Plaza, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave. NW

12:00 p.m. — "Beyond Batteries: Grid-interactive Efficient Buildings," Alliance to Save Energy, Rayburn 2045

FRIDAY

11:15 a.m. — EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt addresses The Federalist Society's National Lawyer Convention, 1127 Connecticut Avenue, NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yQ8q7z> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/11/trump-team-not-pitching-paris-renegotiation-in-bonn-025509>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

U.S. climate delegation won't outline conditions to stick with Paris deal Back

By Emily Holden and David Siders | 11/12/2017 03:33 PM EDT

BONN, Germany—The Trump administration does not plan to give international diplomats any clues about how they could convince the U.S. to stay in a global agreement to fight climate change but will use meetings this week as an opportunity to promote U.S. coal, gas and nuclear companies, according to a White House official.

The centerpiece of the White House presence at the climate talks in Bonn, Germany, will be a Monday evening presentation where government officials and industry executives will urge developing countries to pursue "cleaner" fossil fuel and nuclear power — a pitch that could be meant to widen the market for American energy exports.

The White House source said State Department diplomats and Trump aides would not engage on remaining in the 2015 Paris agreement, which Trump has said he would exit unless he got terms more favorable to U.S. businesses.

"We're not going to address that issue," the official said on an embargoed call with reporters on Thursday. "The president has left the door open, the president has said multiple times that he's willing to reconsider our engagement in the Paris agreement if we can find a fairer deal that works for American businesses, taxpayers, consumers, so yeah it's up to the president."

Trump has never repudiated his view that man-made climate change is a hoax, although the White House has since said he "believes the climate is changing" without elaborating on the cause. But the lack of engagement from his negotiating team suggests he has little interest in reaching a better deal to limit global greenhouse gas emissions.

The U.S. panel is not expected to discuss ways to reach the Paris agreement goals of reducing greenhouse gas emissions enough to avoid a 2 degrees Celsius rise above pre-industrial levels, which scientists say would be a dangerous tipping point.

"The president believes that we can reduce our emissions while growing our economy," the White House official said.

Climate activists were mulling protest actions ahead of the Monday night forum, while fearing the event would only further cast a shadow over the United States' role in the conference.

"It's what you expect when we have fossil fuel billionaires running our government," said Garrett Blad, executive director of the SustainUS, a youth advocacy group. "I think it's irresponsible and dangerous, and I think the American people know that and are on our side."

Former Vice President Al Gore said he expected the forum would do little to alter dynamics of the conference.

"I think that people will see it for what it is," he said in an interview. "The president has surrounded himself with some of the most notorious climate deniers, and people who come to these meeting know who these characters are, and I think they see it for what it is."

The White House official said he didn't expect other countries to ask what kind of deal the president is looking for, adding that the United Nations conference "is really not the place for that to happen," and that the conversation would be more likely to occur between world leaders. Trump returns Tuesday from a 12-day trip to Asia, which included meetings with Chinese President Xi Jinping and other heads of state. He did not mention climate change once while abroad.

The Trump administration is rolling back President Barack Obama's climate efforts and also trying to boost coal-fired power--a major driver of rising temperatures that are making seas swell and extreme weather intensify.

Despite Trump's stance, a delegation of career officials from the State Department is on site at the United Nations conference to represent U.S. interests as countries negotiate how they will achieve and verify their commitments to curb emissions.

In the discussion Monday, George David Banks, special assistant to President Trump on energy and environment, will make introductory remarks. Francis Brooke, an aide to Vice President Mike Pence, will moderate the talk among executives from the liquefied natural gas company Tellurian, the coal company Peabody Energy and the nuclear power company NuScale, as well as Barry Worthington, director of the U.S. Energy Association.

The panel will outline ways U.S. could encourage developing countries to build "cleaner, more efficient," fossil fuel plants to mitigate climate change, the White House source told reporters last week.

Worthington told Climate Home News that striking fossil fuel trade deals was a major objective of the discussion.

"The flavor du jour is LNG but we're also exporting crude oil and derivative products and continue to export a sizeable volume of coal," he told the outlet.

The White House source said climate mitigation is a "lesser priority" than energy security and economic development, "but it's still a priority."

Without U.S. involvement, "the Chinese will build the coal plants and use inefficient technology," the official said.

"Quite frankly, if we don't bring it up and want to engage people on it, it's just not going to happen," he said. "It's burying your head in the sand if you don't have a conversation, just simply because of the facts, again because of the role coal is going to play in the energy mix...because of the role that natural gas is going to play."

The official cited International Energy Agency projections that natural gas demand will grow 50 percent and coal demand will increase by 2040, especially in South and Southeast Asia. And he pointed to reports that at least 1,600 coal plants are planned or under construction in 62 countries, according to the environmental group Urgewald. Chinese companies are reportedly planning many of them, but the Chinese government in January canceled plans for 103 plants.

As part of the Paris agreement, China pledged to begin shrinking total emissions by 2030. Trump has said it's unfair that China would be able to keep increasing its carbon output in the meantime, although the U.S. over time has contributed more greenhouse gases to the atmosphere than any other nation and China's economy was slower to begin growing.

The White House official did not explain how the U.S. would seek to push of more efficient coal plants abroad, but he said the conversation in Bonn Monday would cover "high efficiency, low emissions coal, but then also the more advanced technologies that either improve efficiency, or the carbon capture and utilization pieces."

Trump on his trip to Asia last week unveiled a slate of deals with China, but none were to promote more efficient coal-fired power plants. One is for sales and rentals of Caterpillar mining equipment to China's largest coal mining company and another is a joint venture between a U.S. industrial gases company and state-owned Chinese firm to build a coal-to-syngas facility, according to Bloomberg. Trump's travels focused far more on promoting the export of U.S. liquefied natural gas.

To view online click here.

Back

Top Democrats stage anti-Trump revolt at Bonn climate summit Back

By David Siders and Emily Holden | 11/12/2017 10:56 AM EDT

BONN, Germany — A handful of Democratic governors and scores of other lawmakers and mayors are mounting an insurgency at the United Nations climate conference here, orchestrating a highly choreographed campaign to persuade world leaders that President Donald Trump doesn't speak for the United States on climate change.

Several Democratic U.S. senators began meeting last week with officials from other countries, seeking to minimize Trump's withdrawal from the Paris climate agreement. Meanwhile, the governors of California, Virginia, Oregon and Washington — along with mayors from throughout the nation — were expected to touch off a blitz of public appearances at the conference as the meeting enters its final week.

"We are still in!" Sen. Ben Cardin of Maryland told cheering activists Saturday at a pavilion set up just outside the official meeting zone, a de facto headquarters for the opposition. "I want to make it clear: The federal government is not just the president of the United States."

The Democrats' diplomacy — part lobbying, part public relations — comes amid widespread international concern about Trump's decision to pull the United States out of the Paris accord. War-torn Syria announced last week that it would join the agreement, leaving the United States — if it goes through with its withdrawal — as the only country in the world outside of the pact.

On Saturday, Democratic politicians, climate activists and like-minded business interests sought to present the United States as a country divorced from its president. Speakers repeated the slogan, "We are still in," a message splayed across an electronic ticker and on buttons at the unofficial U.S. pavilion. The pavilion's estimated $235,000 cost was being covered by a coalition including former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg and the billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer.

Steyer, who is spending millions of dollars on a national television ad campaign calling for Trump's impeachment, was expected to outline his case for Trump's ouster in a speech here Sunday.

While pavilion organizers plied guests with big-name speakers and free beer and wine, a subtler campaign was unfolding inside the conference halls. Starting late last week, a small delegation of U.S. senators, including Cardin, Brian Schatz (D-Hawaii), Ed Markey (D-Mass.) and Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.) — began meeting with officials from other countries in an effort to assuage nerves about Trump. Schatz said he and other lawmakers met with delegations from India and Japan and were planning to meet with representatives of the European Union, Mexico, Indonesia and Canada.

The senators argued Trump could not quickly undo eight years of Obama-era climate policies or significantly affect state-level efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

"I think that there's an understanding of the American system of government, which is sometimes cumbersome and slow, and frustratingly so, but in this instance it works in favor of climate action," said Schatz. "Whatever the president's rhetoric, he can't prevent us from moving forward on clean energy."

Following a meeting with Mexican officials, Markey said Saturday, "Obviously, I think it's important for them to understand that there are 30 states that have renewable electricity standards, that the fuel economy standards are still the federal law, that the appliance efficiency standards are still federal law."

Democrats trying to thwart attacks on climate action have on their side bureaucracy, the courts and a narrowly divided Congress that often gets stuck in legislative stalemates. Although Republicans control Congress and the White House, they need 60 votes to proceed to most legislation.

The Trump administration is moving to undo President Barack Obama's climate standards — including carbon limits for the roughly one-third of emissions that come from the power sector. Those regulatory rollbacks could take years and will have to stand up to legal review, but in the meantime, the federal government will not move forward to curb greenhouse gases.

Markey promised that Democrats will fight to maintain fuel economy standards and will block any effort to cut back wind and solar tax credits. He told a crowd on Saturday that Trump has "assembled a Cabinet of Big Oil all-stars" but that, "On our side, we have 100 years of science and nearly 100 percent of the scientists in the planet. And inside the United States, we have city after city, state after state, standing up to take action."

Diplomats are paying close attention to American representatives pledging to keep fighting climate change, said Jens Mattias Clausen, a Copenhagen-based climate change adviser for Greenpeace who is attending the talks.

The most important thing those representatives can do is "show the rest of the world that even if the Trump administration refuses to face reality here and continues with this very isolationist style that the rest of the U.S. is actually ready to step up and help with the commitments that they have," Clausen said. In terms of specific numbers they can offer, "the more concrete it gets ... the better," he added.

California Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown and Bloomberg are leading a group called America's Pledge, which aims to release more specific reduction commitments from states and localities next year. On Saturday, they released a report asserting the combined economic power of every state and city that has committed to the Paris agreement would outmatch every country except for China and the U.S.

Yet even their own report acknowledged, as previous studies have, that non-federal efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions are not sufficient to meet the United States' commitments under the Paris agreement given Trump's stated policies. And local and state climate efforts are fraught with their own, internal disagreements about how aggressively subnational governments should pursue climate policies on their own. On Saturday, Brown had a speech interrupted for an extended period by activists protesting California's cap-and-trade program and its permissiveness on hydraulic fracturing.

"You have a positive message insofar as what individual states and individuals are doing" about climate change, Mairead McGuinness, a member of the European Parliament, told Brown at a forum last week.

However, she said, "Sometimes when we make a step forward, there are forces that ask us to step back by half."

McGuinness added, "One of the comments we hear from EU citizens is that, why should we act when others are not?"

For all of the Democrats' efforts, Trump looms large over the conference, and the power of the White House is not lost on the international community. Trump, who has called climate change a hoax, is publicly promoting coal production. He has said he is withdrawing from the Paris agreement because it puts the United States at a "big economic disadvantage."

Last week's elections in the United States provided a rare, positive talking point for Democrats trying to combat Trump's message in Bonn. The Democrats' sweep in the off-year contests, they said, presaged a return to Democratic power in Washington and re-engagement in climate talks abroad.

"Tuesday's election marked that Trump is alone and isolated," said Garrett Blad, executive director of SustainUS, a youth advocacy group. "It's going to be our job back home — 2018 is going to be a huge year with the elections — to make sure that states ... are moving forward with the most aggressive action that we can."

When Bloomberg mentioned Saturday that the official U.S. delegation to the conference under Trump was preparing to host a controversial panel on Monday on the use of fossil fuels, the crowd booed.

"The Trump administration did send a delegation here to Bonn, and it might be the first climate conference where — this is not a joke, folks — coal is being promoted as an example of sustainability," Bloomberg said.

He added, "It will also likely be the last. The world is moving on, and so is the United States."

Former Vice President Al Gore, a major draw for climate activists at the conference, told POLITICO in an interview Saturday that commitments made by states, cities and businesses all "adds up to a very impressive reduction in U.S. emissions."

He added, "I mean, [Trump] can prohibit EPA employees from talking to the public, and he can remove the word 'climate' from all the government websites. But he can't stop the technological and business revolution that's gaining speed around the world and especially in the U.S."

Sara Stefanini contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Top Democrats stage anti-Trump revolt at Bonn climate summit Back

By David Siders and Emily Holden | 11/12/2017 10:56 AM EDT

BONN, Germany — A handful of Democratic governors and scores of other lawmakers and mayors are mounting an insurgency at the United Nations climate conference here, orchestrating a highly choreographed campaign to persuade world leaders that President Donald Trump doesn't speak for the United States on climate change.

Several Democratic U.S. senators began meeting last week with officials from other countries, seeking to minimize Trump's withdrawal from the Paris climate agreement. Meanwhile, the governors of California, Virginia, Oregon and Washington — along with mayors from throughout the nation — were expected to touch off a blitz of public appearances at the conference as the meeting enters its final week.

"We are still in!" Sen. Ben Cardin of Maryland told cheering activists Saturday at a pavilion set up just outside the official meeting zone, a de facto headquarters for the opposition. "I want to make it clear: The federal government is not just the president of the United States."

The Democrats' diplomacy — part lobbying, part public relations — comes amid widespread international concern about Trump's decision to pull the United States out of the Paris accord. War-torn Syria announced last week that it would join the agreement, leaving the United States — if it goes through with its withdrawal — as the only country in the world outside of the pact.

On Saturday, Democratic politicians, climate activists and like-minded business interests sought to present the United States as a country divorced from its president. Speakers repeated the slogan, "We are still in," a message splayed across an electronic ticker and on buttons at the unofficial U.S. pavilion. The pavilion's estimated $235,000 cost was being covered by a coalition including former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg and the billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer.

Steyer, who is spending millions of dollars on a national television ad campaign calling for Trump's impeachment, was expected to outline his case for Trump's ouster in a speech here Sunday.

While pavilion organizers plied guests with big-name speakers and free beer and wine, a subtler campaign was unfolding inside the conference halls. Starting late last week, a small delegation of U.S. senators, including Cardin, Brian Schatz (D-Hawaii), Ed Markey (D-Mass.) and Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.) — began meeting with officials from other countries in an effort to assuage nerves about Trump. Schatz said he and other lawmakers met with delegations from India and Japan and were planning to meet with representatives of the European Union, Mexico, Indonesia and Canada.

The senators argued Trump could not quickly undo eight years of Obama-era climate policies or significantly affect state-level efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

"I think that there's an understanding of the American system of government, which is sometimes cumbersome and slow, and frustratingly so, but in this instance it works in favor of climate action," said Schatz. "Whatever the president's rhetoric, he can't prevent us from moving forward on clean energy."

Following a meeting with Mexican officials, Markey said Saturday, "Obviously, I think it's important for them to understand that there are 30 states that have renewable electricity standards, that the fuel economy standards are still the federal law, that the appliance efficiency standards are still federal law."

Democrats trying to thwart attacks on climate action have on their side bureaucracy, the courts and a narrowly divided Congress that often gets stuck in legislative stalemates. Although Republicans control Congress and the White House, they need 60 votes to proceed to most legislation.

The Trump administration is moving to undo President Barack Obama's climate standards — including carbon limits for the roughly one-third of emissions that come from the power sector. Those regulatory rollbacks could take years and will have to stand up to legal review, but in the meantime, the federal government will not move forward to curb greenhouse gases.

Markey promised that Democrats will fight to maintain fuel economy standards and will block any effort to cut back wind and solar tax credits. He told a crowd on Saturday that Trump has "assembled a Cabinet of Big Oil all-stars" but that, "On our side, we have 100 years of science and nearly 100 percent of the scientists in the planet. And inside the United States, we have city after city, state after state, standing up to take action."

Diplomats are paying close attention to American representatives pledging to keep fighting climate change, said Jens Mattias Clausen, a Copenhagen-based climate change adviser for Greenpeace who is attending the talks.

The most important thing those representatives can do is "show the rest of the world that even if the Trump administration refuses to face reality here and continues with this very isolationist style that the rest of the U.S. is actually ready to step up and help with the commitments that they have," Clausen said. In terms of specific numbers they can offer, "the more concrete it gets ... the better," he added.

California Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown and Bloomberg are leading a group called America's Pledge, which aims to release more specific reduction commitments from states and localities next year. On Saturday, they released a report asserting the combined economic power of every state and city that has committed to the Paris agreement would outmatch every country except for China and the U.S.

Yet even their own report acknowledged, as previous studies have, that non-federal efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions are not sufficient to meet the United States' commitments under the Paris agreement given Trump's stated policies. And local and state climate efforts are fraught with their own, internal disagreements about how aggressively subnational governments should pursue climate policies on their own. On Saturday, Brown had a speech interrupted for an extended period by activists protesting California's cap-and-trade program and its permissiveness on hydraulic fracturing.

"You have a positive message insofar as what individual states and individuals are doing" about climate change, Mairead McGuinness, a member of the European Parliament, told Brown at a forum last week.

However, she said, "Sometimes when we make a step forward, there are forces that ask us to step back by half."

McGuinness added, "One of the comments we hear from EU citizens is that, why should we act when others are not?"

For all of the Democrats' efforts, Trump looms large over the conference, and the power of the White House is not lost on the international community. Trump, who has called climate change a hoax, is publicly promoting coal production. He has said he is withdrawing from the Paris agreement because it puts the United States at a "big economic disadvantage."

Last week's elections in the United States provided a rare, positive talking point for Democrats trying to combat Trump's message in Bonn. The Democrats' sweep in the off-year contests, they said, presaged a return to Democratic power in Washington and re-engagement in climate talks abroad.

"Tuesday's election marked that Trump is alone and isolated," said Garrett Blad, executive director of SustainUS, a youth advocacy group. "It's going to be our job back home — 2018 is going to be a huge year with the elections — to make sure that states ... are moving forward with the most aggressive action that we can."

When Bloomberg mentioned Saturday that the official U.S. delegation to the conference under Trump was preparing to host a controversial panel on Monday on the use of fossil fuels, the crowd booed.

"The Trump administration did send a delegation here to Bonn, and it might be the first climate conference where — this is not a joke, folks — coal is being promoted as an example of sustainability," Bloomberg said.

He added, "It will also likely be the last. The world is moving on, and so is the United States."

Former Vice President Al Gore, a major draw for climate activists at the conference, told POLITICO in an interview Saturday that commitments made by states, cities and businesses all "adds up to a very impressive reduction in U.S. emissions."

He added, "I mean, [Trump] can prohibit EPA employees from talking to the public, and he can remove the word 'climate' from all the government websites. But he can't stop the technological and business revolution that's gaining speed around the world and especially in the U.S."

Sara Stefanini contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

McAuliffe, top Democrats dismiss impeachment talk Back

By David Siders | 11/12/2017 11:19 AM EDT

BONN, Germany — Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe said Sunday he does not support impeaching President Donald Trump, after Democratic billionaire Tom Steyer pressed the case for impeachment at the United Nations climate conference here.

"Let [special counsel Robert] Mueller, and let the people who are doing the process, go through and do what they're doing," McAuliffe said after a breakfast speech by Steyer, a supporter of the Virginia Democrat. "You don't prejudge investigations."

Steyer, who is spending millions of dollars running television ads in the United States calling for Trump's impeachment, told a small crowd Sunday that "lack of action is a choice."

But Steyer's message did not appear to resonate with top Democratic politicians in Germany for the climate talks. Oregon Gov. Kate Brown, who also attended the breakfast, said she has no position on impeachment, which she said is "something that Congress is going to deal with." California Gov. Jerry Brown was also dismissive.

"Do you want me to start an impeachment movement by saying, 'Yes, I agree with Steyer. Let's go.' What will that do?" Jerry Brown told reporters on Saturday night. "That would be counterproductive. It would undermine all that we're trying to do."

Former California GOP Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, a vocal critic of Trump, declined to answer questions about impeachment Sunday.

Steyer, who is considering running for U.S. Senate in California, spoke in a pavilion set up by United States climate advocates and financed by a coalition including Steyer and former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg.

McAuliffe, a potential presidential contender who described Steyer as a friend, said, "He paid for the breakfast. He's entitled to clearly say what he wants."

To view online click here.

Back

Pro-Trump group courts donors with Cabinet access Back

By Maggie Severns | 11/10/2017 03:22 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry will headline an intimate gathering of high-powered business executives in Texas next week for the pro-Trump outside group America First Policies, the first in a series of "roundtable discussions" giving donors face time with top Trump officials.

The Houston event featuring Perry, detailed in an invitation sent to a Republican donor and obtained by POLITICO, will include roughly 30 people and cover topics from energy policy to the Trump administration's broader agenda, America First spokeswoman Erin Montgomery said. Perry will not solicit donations from the attendees at the Monday event, which would be a violation of federal law — but America First officials plan to ask for contributions after Perry leaves the room.

The event highlights the cozy and growing ties between officials in President Donald Trump's administration and outside allies spending millions of dollars pushing administration policies this year. America First is brandishing its relationships with government officials to establish itself as the White House's preferred outside ally, among a mass of pro-Trump groups that have popped up this year.

In addition to holding more roundtable events, America First Policies recently held conference calls featuring White House Legislative Affairs Director Marc Short, House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy and Rep. Erik Paulsen, all key players on tax reform. America First leaders also huddled with White House officials recently.

America First Policies and its affiliated super PAC, America First Action, plan to raise and spend $100 million supporting Trump's agenda in the next year. Super PACs are not permitted to coordinate with candidates and there are strict rules governing Cabinet officials' political activities. But there is a loophole: Perry and others can participate in events put on by America First's nonprofit policy arm, which is legally separate from the super PAC even though the same officers run both groups.

"As long as the super PAC and the 501(c)(4) each stays in its own lane they can both operate under the same umbrella," said Brett Kappel, a campaign finance lawyer and partner at Akerman LLP.

But campaign finance reform advocates said the arrangement crosses an ethical line.

"This is all part of the very close coordination we're seeing between the campaign itself and what's supposedly an outside group," said Craig Holman, the government affairs lobbyist at the good-government group Public Citizen. The activities constitute "coordination in anyone's definition except for the Federal Election Commission's," he said.

Perry is an ideal ambassador for America First Policies in Texas, where the former governor has deep ties to the energy industry and donors who fueled his state campaigns as well as two presidential bids.

An Energy Department spokesperson did not return a request for comment. Perry was in France this week meeting with energy leaders from other countries. He is slated to attend a similar meeting in Texas on Monday, prior to the America First event, with leaders from Canada and Mexico.

America First was silent for much of this year and went through multiple staff shakeups, but has recently been working to restore its original position as the central group backing Trump's agenda.

But it has competition. Future45, which supported Trump during the 2016 elections with funding from casino billionaire Sheldon Adelson and the Ricketts family, announced a project that will spend in the tens of millions of dollars promoting tax reform earlier this month. Great America PAC, which is affiliated with former White House strategist Steve Bannon, began endorsing 2018 candidates in recent days.

Great America PAC's support for Roy Moore broke from Trump's support for Sen. Luther Strange in Alabama. America First plans to stay closely aligned with Trump and Trump's agenda, which Texas businessman Roy Bailey said could be a differentiator.

"We're not second-guessing anything; we're totally confident in [Trump's] ability to lead this nation and we're supporting him and the vice president," said Bailey, who is involved with America First.

That message has intrigued Texas-based energy executive Dan Eberhart, who said he hasn't yet made a donation to America First but is "interested in what they have to say."

"A lot of people who supported Republicans in 2016 are frustrated with the way things have turned out," Eberhart said. "If the Republican establishment won't support the president's agenda, we need alternatives who will."

To view online click here.

Back

Perry's grid study: 4 things that may have legs Back

By Darius Dixon | 08/24/2017 06:56 PM EDT

The Energy Department's study of the electric grid arrived late Wednesday, but it's not yet clear whether Secretary Rick Perry's efforts to help support nuclear and coal-fired power plants will have legs.

The 187-page report called for DOE to focus mostly on R&D and coordinating efforts to prepare for disasters, and left the heavy lifting for other agencies, such as FERC, EPA, the National Science Foundation and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Among the recommendations are for FERC to "expedite" its work to reformulate how electricity markets pay power generators, and for EPA to revisit its New Source Review permitting program that requires plants to tighten emissions controls when they upgrade their plants — both issues that have proven difficult for the two agencies.

"If these recommendations, as a suite, are something that the administration really wants to do, someone in the White House is going to have to quarterback that," said Greg Gershuny, who served as chief of staff in DOE's Energy Policy and Systems Analysis office during the Obama administration and worked on the Quadrennial Energy Review.

"In the next four or five weeks, as Congress gets back, we'll see if these things are going to move," he said. "How engaged Perry is and how many times a week he's going to the Hill and talking to other agency heads is going to tell us a lot about how serious they are about this."

DOE, which did not submit the report for OMB review before its release, is now taking public comments on the study. Here's a breakdown of the issues.

Wholesale electricity markets: The new report calls on FERC to speed its work with states, grid operators and market players to "improve" how power producers are paid in the wholesale markets under the agency's jurisdiction. FERC had been grappling with the issue under its "price formation" initiative over the past three years, rolling out proposals and new rules to try to adapt to the increasing complexity of the electric grid — and to make sure power generators are fairly compensated.

However, grid operator PJM has argued regulators were thinking too small, and it released a trio of working papers earlier this year highlighting FERC's initiative while quickly noting that "fundamental" price formation issues hadn't been addressed. DOE suggested that FERC consider "fuel-neutral" markets to pay for essential grid reliability services.

So far, FERC seems sympathetic.

Soon after President Donald Trump gave him the gavel this month, FERC Chairman Neil Chatterjee stressed that generators, including coal and nuclear plants, "need to be properly compensated to recognize the value they provide." FERC has broad authority to alter market pricing rules, but that can be a slow process, and can have vastly different impacts in different states and regions — and draw sharp political pushback.

ClearView Energy Partners analysts warned against dismissing opposition to market rules that raise electricity prices on consumers.

"FERC-led initiatives can often create strange bedfellows, strong alliances and more opposition than state-led proposals," a ClearView report issued Thursday said. "We are reluctant to assume this all goes as quickly as the change advocates hope."

DOE's study also argued that "negative offers should be mitigated to the broadest extent possible," a reference to the fact that renewables like wind power can still make money even if power prices go negative because they can rely on a federal production tax credit.

Grid reliability R&D: The new report says that DOE should "focus R&D efforts to enhance utility, grid operator, and consumer efforts to enhance system reliability and resilience." That view stands in contrast to the Trump administration's first budget proposal, which suggested cutting DOE's electricity office by 42 percent from current levels, to $120 million.

Nevertheless, Perry has said he wants his agency to focus on "early-stage" research, with the intention of transitioning that work to the private sector as quickly as possible.

DOE's study says more research should be done on technology that will make it easier for grid operators to integrate increasing amounts of renewable power, facilitate technical coordination with Canada and Mexico, and increase "targeted" R&D to boost the efficiency of coal-fired power plants.

Infrastructure development: The new push calls on the federal government to "accelerate and reduce costs for the licensing, relicensing, and permitting of grid infrastructure" — including power plants and transmission — which could easily involve a half-dozen federal agencies.

DOE, the study says, "should review regulatory burdens for siting and permitting for generation and gas and electricity transmission infrastructure and should take actions to accelerate the process and reduce costs."

The Obama administration sought to quicken the electric transmission permitting process in 2013 with a memo to the chiefs at the departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Energy and Interior, which resulted in a final rule last year. Several members of Congress have also pressed the issue in legislation, including in the 2015 highway bill that included directives to more than a dozen agencies to join a new permitting council tasked with speeding up the federal process for large infrastructure projects.

DOE also recommends that the NRC "ensure the safety of existing and new nuclear facilities without unnecessarily adding to the operating costs and economic uncertainty of nuclear energy" and, without much explanation, "[r]evisit nuclear safety rules under a risk-based approach."

The report doesn't target specific NRC regulations, but does discuss the agency's license renewal process and the expenses associated with equipment upgrades, which may make it a prime target for cost reductions.

Breaking down barriers for coal power: The study recommends that policymakers "encourage EPA to allow coal-fired power plants to improve efficiency and reliability without triggering new regulatory approvals and associated costs." That's a reference to the New Source Review permitting program, which was created under the 1977 Clean Air Act amendments to prevent coal plants and other major emitters from making equipment changes or upgrades that would increase their emissions.

Reforming the program has been an industry priority for decades, with companies arguing that power plants have held back on making upgrades that would increase their efficiency because of concerns that they would have to go through the NSR permitting process. A collection of unions earlier this summer, for example, called for NSR reform as part of any replacement rule for the Clean Power Plan.

But multiple Bush administration attempts to weaken permitting requirements show that NSR reform is much easier said than done. A 2002 rule was partly struck down by the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, which said several new exemptions were not allowed under the Clean Air Act. Another 2003 rule introducing another major exemption was completely tossed out by the D.C. Circuit. A third NSR rulemaking, issued in the final days of Bush's presidency, dealt with how sources report emissions changes. Environmentalists sued, and the rule remains under reconsideration at EPA to this day.

To view online click here.

Back

MSHA nominee: 'I was not proud' of violations notice Back

By Ian Kullgren | 10/04/2017 05:55 PM EDT

President Donald Trump's nominee for assistant secretary of Labor for Mine Safety & Health told a Senate committee today that his coal company ignored safety conditions at one of its mines.

David Zatezalo was chairman of Rhino Resources when it received pattern of violation notices in 2010 and 2011, the Charleston Gazette-Mail previously reported. The company was later fined when a wall collapsed, killing a worker.

When questioned by Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) about the notice, Zatezalo blamed the mine manager.

"The management of that particular group and that particular site was not doing what they should have been doing," Zatezalo said. "I was not proud of the fact that we got designated as a [potential pattern of violations] mine. I did not try to lawyer up and stop anything from happening."

"I replaced that management," he added, "because I wasn't too happy with their performance and hadn't been for sometime."

Zatezalo appeared before the Senate HELP Committee for a confirmation hearing with Cheryl Stanton and Peter Robb, Trump's nominees for Wage and Hour Division administrator and NLRB general counsel, respectively. Few senators showed up to the hearing, though, and Patty Murray (D-Wash.) complained that the Senate's busy schedule didn't leave enough time to probe as deeply as she would have liked.

Zatezalo assured Kaine that he wouldn't have a problem working with career staff at MSHA who issued the notice to his company.

"They did what they were supposed to do," he said.

To view online click here.

Back

Coastal lawmakers push back on House flood insurance proposals Back

By Zachary Warmbrodt | 11/08/2017 03:59 PM EDT

A bipartisan group of coastal lawmakers is pushing for major changes to the National Flood Insurance Program reauthorization bill that's awaiting a floor vote.

Republicans and Democrats representing the Atlantic and Gulf coasts have filed several amendments, which have been released by the House Rules Committee.

Some of the amendments would attempt to further shield policyholders from flood insurance premium increases, following concessions won by House Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) that reduced proposed penalties for properties that repeatedly flood.

One amendment by Reps. Frank LoBiondo (R-N.J.) and Peter King (R-N.Y.) would strike three sections of the bill, H.R. 2874, including a prohibition on coverage for buildings valued above $1 million. Their amendment would also lower the bill's proposed cap on annual premium increases to $5,000 from $10,000.

"While discussions continue with the committee, Congressman LoBiondo feels the flood insurance bill is not at a point it needs to be to earn his vote and those of other coastal legislators," LoBiondo chief of staff Jason Galanes said. "He drafted the amendment to address those outstanding concerns."

LoBiondo and King were two of 26 House Republicans who wrote to House leadership this summer warning that they would not support an earlier iteration of the House Financial Services Committee package in part because they said it would make flood insurance unaffordable for their constituents.

Another lawmaker who signed on to that letter, Rep. Garret Graves (R-La.), has offered four amendments, including one that would restrict FEMA from raising insurance rates if a property was at a higher risk of flooding because of actions undertaken by the federal government.

Rep. Dan Donovan (R-N.Y.), who was part of the group fighting the bill this summer, has offered an amendment that would freeze insurance premiums in areas where flood maps are being redrawn.

Other coastal Republicans who signed the July letter were trying to put their stamp on the final bill.

Rep. Leonard Lance (R-N.J.) raised concerns about the bill this week, a spokesman said. Rep. Clay Higgins (R-La.) is part of the negotiations, his spokesman said.

Rep. Steven Palazzo (R-Miss.) is pushing for changes addressing several concerns with the bill, including increasing surcharges, how premium rates will be determined for coastal versus inland locations and the lack of provisions that address the NFIP's debt, a spokeswoman said.

"He will continue to push for a program that protects South Mississippians, provides flood insurance that is affordable and available, and ensures the long term success of the program," she said.

House aides said the Financial Services Committee was preparing to rewrite a section of the bill laying out annual assessments that FEMA charges policyholders to fill a reserve fund.

The new provision would require FEMA to impose a 16 percent assessment on insurance premiums, up from the flood program's current rate of 15 percent.

Aides said the change was being made to address member confusion and issues raised by the CBO.

To view online click here.

Back

House Rules reschedules hearing on flood insurance bill Back

By Zachary Warmbrodt | 11/10/2017 04:51 PM EDT

The House Rules Committee will hold a hearing Monday on the National Flood Insurance Program reauthorization bill, as Republicans try to move ahead with a floor vote.

The Rules Committee will resume consideration of the bill, H.R. 2874 \(115\), after postponing a Tuesday hearing on the legislation. At the time, the committee said it delayed the meeting after the CBO flagged a scoring issue.

In the interim, House Financial Services Chairman Jeb Hensarling (R-Texas) decided to revise a section of the bill that would impose assessments on premiums to fill a reserve fund, drop a prohibition of coverage for homes worth more than $1 million and delay the implementation of an exemption for commercial properties subject to mandatory coverage requirements.

This week, a group of coastal lawmakers continued to raise concerns with the bill and offered several amendments.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Rules Committee hearing on the bill will be at 5 p.m. on Monday.

To view online click here.

Back

SAB appointee doesn't represent North Carolina, state says Back

By Alex Guillén | 11/08/2017 10:16 AM EDT

Donald van der Vaart, the former head of North Carolina's Department of Environmental Quality, will not represent the agency or the state in his recent appointment to EPA's Science Advisory Board, the DEQ told a local television station.

Van der Vaart, a Republican who was considered for a top EPA appointment, demoted himself at DEQ to a non-political position that cannot be removed at will following last fall's gubernatorial win by Democrat Roy Cooper.

But his position on SAB will not come with Cooper's blessing, according to DEQ.

"DEQ does not support his participation on the EPA's SAB," the agency told local TV station WRAL. DEQ will not participate as a representative of the DEQ or North Carolina, the agency added.

Neither van der Vaart nor EPA immediately returned requests for comment this morning.

To view online click here.

Back

Jerry Brown, President of the Independent Republic of California Back

By David Siders | 11/11/2017 07:06 AM EDT

VATICAN CITY—On his way to the United Nations climate talks in Bonn, Germany, this week, Jerry Brown stopped over at the Vatican, where a doleful group of climate scientists, politicians and public health officials had convened to discuss calamities that might befall a warming world. The prospects were so dire—floods and fires, but also forced migration, famine and war—that some of the participants acknowledged difficulty staving off despair.

California's doomsayer governor did not express much optimism either. Seated between an economist and an Argentine bishop at the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, Brown leaned into his microphone and said, "It is despairing. Ending the world, ending all mammalian life. This is bad stuff."

"There's nothing that I see out there that gives me any ground for optimism," he went on. Still, he promised action: "I'm extremely excited about doing something about it."

Even though President Donald Trump has abandoned the Paris climate agreement and called climate change a "hoax," and even though he is proceeding to scrap the Obama-era Clean Power Plan and promoting the production of coal, Brown insisted to his audience at the Vatican that these policies do not reflect the true sensibilities of the United States.

"This is not just a top-down structure that we have in the United States," the governor said. The small crowd burst into applause when he added, "Over time, given the commitments that we're seeing in this room today, and what we're seeing around the world, the Trump factor is very small, very small indeed."

In the raw balance of power between a governor and a president, Brown has almost no standing abroad. What he does have is a platform, and a proposition: Crusading across Europe in his Fitbit and his dark, boxy suit, Brown advances California and its policies almost as an alternative to the United States—and his waning governorship, after a lifetime in politics, as a quixotic rejection of the provincial limits of the American governor. In the growing chasm between Trump's Washington and California—principally on climate change, but also taxes, health care, gun control and immigration—Brown is functioning as the head of something closer to a country than a state.

In his final term, Brown has lobbied other states and regions to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions, while augmenting California's already expansive suite of climate change programs. But Trump's election—and the specter of Brown's own retirement—have lately set the governor on a tear. In a rush of climate diplomacy this year, Brown traveled to China to meet with President Xi Jinping, then to Russia to participate in an international economic forum. This past week saw him address lawmakers in Brussels and Stuttgart, Germany, and he was preparing for roundtable meetings with scientists in Oslo before arriving in Bonn for a climate conference, where Brown will serve as special adviser for states and regions. And he is preparing for California to host an international climate summit of its own next year in San Francisco.

In one sense, Brown's fixation on climate change would seem unremarkable, the predictable conclusion of a career steeped in the ecological and environmental movements of the 1960s and 1970s. The 1969 Santa Barbara oil spill, early Earth Day rallies and the Stockholm conference on the environment weighed heavily on the public consciousness when Brown was starting out in politics, and observers of a certain age will still recall him mystifying audiences with pronouncements about "planetary realism" and the "spaceship Earth." He was still talking about the need for a fundamental shift in lifestyle when he said at the Vatican that confronting climate change will require "a transformation of the relationship of human beings to all the mysterious network of things."

"It's not just a light rinse," Brown said. "We need a total, I might say, brainwashing. We need to wash our brains out and see a very different kind of world."

But in his climate diplomacy today, Brown is performing a more urgent, final act. For nearly all his public life—from secretary of state to governor, to mayor of Oakland and state attorney general before becoming governor once again, at age 72—Brown's near-constant state was to run for public office. Now, for the first time, he is not. Term limits will chase Brown from the state Capitol in January 2019, and today he calls climate change his "campaign," dismissing the idea that after running unsuccessfully for president three times, he might try again in 2020. "I've thought because people like you ask me," he said in an interview before leaving for Europe. "But no, I'm not running."

Now, Brown's future rests on a family ranch in Northern California, where he is nearly finished building a remote, off-the-grid home. These days, he talks more about rattlesnakes and wild boar than the presidential election, and he has turned his focus from electoral politics to more existential concerns.

"I find a lot of what is included in politics doesn't count that much, at least for my salvation or my peace of mind or my interest in life," Brown said. The climate, he went on, "is fundamental. It's not like dietary requirements. It's not like a tax measure, or a school curriculum, or many of the issues, even a crime bill. It goes to the essence of being alive, living things. Whether it's humans or fauna, flora, the basis of life is embedded in this chemical structure, biological structure. And it's threatened."

Sitting in the back of a Ford Crown Victoria on a tarmac at Los Angeles International Airport, Brown added, "This, to me, seems worthwhile."

***

Brown often borrows from the writer Carey McWilliams' description of California as "the great exception," a colossus that McWilliams said, "always occupied, in relation to other regions, much the same relation that America has occupied toward Europe: it is the great catch-all, the vortex at the continent's end into which elements of America's diverse population have been drawn, whirled around."

Trump's election nearly spun that vortex off its axis. In a state where Democrats had already battered Republicans to near-irrelevance, voters last year installed Democratic super-majorities in both houses of the state Legislature. They approved higher taxes and stricter gun controls, legalized marijuana and made certain felons eligible for early parole. They handed Trump the most lopsided loss a Republican presidential nominee has suffered in California in 80 years. Then they slumped in front of their TV sets as the rest of America went the other way.

The morning after the election, the leaders of the state Senate and assembly issued a joint statement in which they said they "woke up feeling like strangers in a foreign land." Brown had joked before the election that if Trump were to become president, "We'd have to build a wall around California to defend ourselves from the rest of this country."

Now, the state Legislature and a large share of Brown's constituents expected him to hoist it up—to assert California's sovereignty in the Trump state. As Trump started dismantling his predecessor's climate policies, Brown helped organize an alliance of 14 states and the island of Puerto Rico, pledging to meet their share of the U.S. commitment to the Paris climate accord. He redoubled his efforts outside of the United States, expanding on a joint project with the German state of Baden-Württemberg: recruiting nearly 200 mostly subnational governments to sign a nonbinding pact to limit global temperature rise to below 2 degrees Celsius, the threshold beyond which many scientists predict environmental catastrophe. On top of that, Brown negotiated legislation extending California's signature cap-and-trade program for an additional 10 years, then signed an agreement with leaders of Ontario and Quebec to integrate their cap-and-trade systems with California's.

Trump's election shook Brown and his home state in other ways, too: California relied on billions of dollars in federal health care funding that Trump threatened to undo, and the president's hard line on immigration sowed fear among California's large population of undocumented immigrants. When the Trump administration started conducting immigration sweeps in Los Angeles, protesters strung "No I.C.E" signs from freeway overpasses, and Brown—who had signed legislation granting undocumented immigrants driver's licenses and access to college financial aid—negotiated state legislation curbing local law enforcement officials' ability to cooperate with federal immigration agents.

By this fall, California's feuding with Washington had grown so routine that it barely registered as news when, during the span of seven hours one day last month, state Attorney General Xavier Becerra announced four separate lawsuits against the Trump administration on issues ranging from health care and education to immigration and oil extraction on public and tribal lands.

Before Trump's election, Brown existed largely at the margins outside California. When he returned to office in 2011, a fellow Democrat held the White House, and no one had to look West for an expression of leftist causes. In that context, Brown presented as a moderate, taking criticism from environmentalists for his permissiveness of hydraulic fracturing, while others dismissed as insignificant the nonbinding climate agreements he pursued.

But then Trump, less than a month in office, told a national TV audience, "California is in many ways out of control." Former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon, addressing California Republicans shortly after Brown signed legislation expanding protections for undocumented immigrants, said that if California kept this up, it would eventually "try to secede from the union." The governor factored so heavily in the specter of a civil war that House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy, himself a Californian, slipped in a speech last month in which he rebuked one "President Brown."

The nation's most populous state was cleaving from Washington, and Brown was its marshaling force.

"Trump is leaving many vacuums, and I think Jerry Brown has long imagined himself as a kind of global player," says Orville Schell, who wrote a biography of Brown in 1978 and remains in contact with him. "He does see California, as the sixth-largest economy of the world, as capable of playing more of a nation-state-like role."

Brown "sort of accidentally has had the world thrust in his lap through the climate issue, which he passionately believes in," Schell adds. "The opportunity has presented itself, the inclination is there, and he's sort of ratcheting the state up to rush into that breach that Washington is leaving."

***

In the role of a statesman, Brown so far has been met with dotting audiences in Europe. When he arrived in Stuttgart for meetings this week, local officials sent a seven-car motorcade to the airport to deliver him to his hotel with lights flashing, an unheard-of accommodation back home. And when Brown spoke in Brussels on Tuesday, before the hemicycle of the European Parliament, the body's president, Antonio Tajani, said the governor's presence gave Europeans "some comfort" in the era of Trump. Muhterem Aras, president of the parliament of Baden-Württemberg, told Brown through an interpreter, "You and your work are needed more than ever." She cast Brown as a warrior "facing a mighty lobby as an adversary."

Yet in the polished, grip-and-grin world of diplomacy, Brown can also seem out of place. He has sprinted through his trip on a borrowed charter plane with his tiny entourage—a handful of aides, a small protective detail and his wife and adviser, Anne Gust Brown, straightening his collar. He maintains an exasperatingly loose schedule, suffers posing for photographs and sometimes wanders on stage.

Before he strode into the Vatican headquarters of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, a 16th century summer residence for Pope Pius IV, Brown darted for a table of coffee and cookies that waiters were starting to clear away.

"You had to eat, didn't you, love?" his wife asked her husband, who has a sixth sense for free food.

Throughout his trip, Brown has also carried copies of two articles he wrote about the threat of nuclear proliferation, his principal concern other than climate change. The first, "Nuclear Addiction: A Response," was written in 1984 for a now-defunct Jesuit publication. The second is Brown's review in the New York Review of Books last year of former defense secretary William Perry's My Journey at the Nuclear Brink. Leaving a meeting one night in Rome with Arturo Sosa, the superior general of the Jesuits, Brown squinted over his hawk-like nose and said that while "going around enlisting allies ... I bring my two little articles and I pass them around."

Depending on his audience and mood, Brown vacillates between optimism and dread for the future. Signing a government guestbook in Brussels this week, he quoted Virgil: "Ad astra per aspera"—to the stars through difficulties. Later, when the elevator taking Brown from a meeting went up instead of down, he first complained, half-joking—"Mistake!"—and then said, "That can happen with missile launches, too."

As frequently as Brown is asked about Trump, Brown has mentioned the president only sparingly on his European tour. Although he has called Trump the "null hypothesis" for climate change, a politician who by "making his case of denial so preposterous, helps the other side," he insists the problem of climate change is bigger than one leader, and has acknowledged he is trying to make "lemonade out of a lemon."

A year ago, it appeared that Brown might not be able even to do that. Two nights before the election, he was eating chips and salsa at an airport bar in Durango, Colorado, where he had spent the day campaigning for Hillary Clinton. If Trump took the White House, he said in an interview, it would be "game over" for climate change. "Game over," he said again.

Asked about it recently, on the tarmac in Los Angeles, Brown said, "I say a lot of things while waiting for a drink in bars across America."

"We're fighting," he added. "The game is over in Washington for the moment ... But not in the world."

Later, at the Vatican, he put it this way: "You should despair, but that won't help. So be optimistic, and do whatever you can."

***

Brown said he has met Trump once, when he was mayor of Oakland in the 2000s and considered bringing a casino to the city. The two flew together in Trump's plane to Oakland from Palm Springs. The governor recalled being impressed with a Renoir that Trump had hung on a wall in the plane. "I don't know whether it was real or not," Brown said last year. "But I thought it was. I thought it was a hell of a statement."

Brown, more than many politicians, could appreciate the populist appeal that swept Trump into the White House—and that Brown sought to capture in his own three presidential campaigns. In 1976, he called for an "era of limits," then campaigned against the North American Free Trade Agreement and the influence of corporate money in politics in his 1992 campaign. He refused campaign contributions greater than $100 and, in rhetoric reminiscent of Trump's "drain the swamp," criticized "the basic fact of unchecked power and privilege."

Pat Caddell, the veteran pollster and political analyst who gave advice to Brown in 1992 and Trump in 2016, says, "Brown was way ahead of his time, really ... I think if Jerry had run in '16, he could have won the Democratic nomination."

Today, Brown's mind is elsewhere. He deflects questions about his legacy, arguing, "Everything we're doing can be framed as either a model for everybody else or building my legacy that I'm going to be reviewing in my dotage." Yet the issues that consume him—climate change and nuclear proliferation—are legacy concerns of humankind.

"Human civilization is on the chopping block," Brown told an auditorium full of lawmakers and students this week in Stuttgart, his voice rising almost to a yell. "We have to wake up the world. We have to wake up Europe, wake up America, wake up the whole world to realize that we have a common destiny."

While climate change has afforded Brown a degree of notoriety outside California, he believes that history is not kind to governors and a politician's relevance quickly fades. "It's just a matter of time before your irrelevance engulfs your total being," he said in Los Angeles, chuckling. "I'm pretty focused on today."

He is at least thinking a little about the near future. Dna Hoover, who is building the Browns' ranch house, said Anne Gust Brown called recently to ask about stucco samples and a generator, and the couple ran a herd of goats through the property, where the Browns have planted olive trees, to chew down grass to prevent fire. "He's ready," Hoover says. "He's really so connected with that place and is ready to get up there full-time."

Brown has even discussed the possibility of creating some kind of meeting space on the ranch.

Before he was to arrive in Bonn on Saturday, he left his aides behind and swung south to Bremen, Germany, to visit with Silja Samerski, who had once helped him organize a salon he called the "Oakland Table," attracting intellectuals such as the late social critic Ivan Illich. "We're going to talk about unfinished issues from the Oakland Table," Brown said of his visit with Samerski. "The good life, and how are we supposed to lead it. What are we doing? So, that's getting ready for the Colusa Institute," he explained, laughing a bit. Colusa is the name of the county where he is building his ranch.

Brown is also contemplating writing when he leaves office, something he tried, but largely gave up, after his first two terms as governor. His work at the time, he says, "didn't rise to the quality that met my standards."

Decades later, Brown says, "I have much more to say."

At an event held alongside the Democratic National Convention last year, Brown had compared his retirement to that of a Roman statesman, "a fellow named Cincinnatus who saved the Republic, and then he went back to the plow."

Reminded of that comparison recently, Brown smiled and said, "I like to be on my plow." But he added, "Maybe I'll be sending out pronouncements from the plow."

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Trump's tax pitch heads to North Dakota refinery today — EPA wraps initial Houston Superfund screenings — Hundreds head to the exits at EPA
Date: Wednesday, September 06, 2017 6:02:57 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 09/06/2017 06:00 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén, Eric Geller and Ben Lefebvre

TRUMP HITS ENERGY-RICH NORTH DAKOTA: President Donald Trump isn't expected to dwell on any energy topics when he heads to Andeavor Corp's (formerly Tesoro) North Dakota refinery in Mandan today. Instead, he'll talk tax reform and mainly rehash the message he delivered last week in Missouri, a source who helped plan the event tells ME. Trump's main aim is to speechify in a state that he won by more than 30 points — but's still within a day's round-trip flight from D.C., our source said. Expect to hear a lot of talk on "unrigging" the tax code but not a lot of details on how it will be done. ME will keep an ear out for nuanced policy discussion about revamping deductions for the depletion of oil shale deposits and the marginal wells tax credit, but we're not holding our breath.

Planning to hitch a ride is North Dakota Democratic Sen. Heidi Heitkamp, who is of course facing a challenging reelection battle next year. As POLITICO's Burgess Everett reports, she's planning to tag along on Air Force One and attend Trump's speech. Heitkamp told reporters she's not down with some of the tax policies the administration has been floating but has been in touch with senior aides regularly. "We've always said that we're interested in tax reform," she said. "I continue to be curious about what the actual plan is." With her in the audience for the speech, perhaps Trump will spare her attacks similar to the ones he directed at Sen. Claire McCaskill in Missouri last week.

ADMINISTRATION BACKS HOUSE EPA/INTERIOR BILL: The House Rules Committee won't decide which Interior and EPA-related amendments lawmakers will consider on the floor until later around 2 p.m. today, but the Trump administration is already out with a statement of administration policy indicating the president would sign the unwieldy-bus (ME term's) into law. The White House objected to provisions in the 1,300-page bill H.R. 3354 \(115\) regarding federal funding for land acquisition and cutting the Clean Water Act state revolving fund that it warned "would result in less funding going to States to finance critical wastewater and storm water infrastructure investments."

TAKING A STEP BACK: Parts of the Gulf Coast were swamped with four feet of rain during Hurricane Harvey last week in what the National Weather Service called an "unprecedented" event "beyond anything experienced." Now, major swaths of South Florida are evacuating in anticipation of Hurricane Irma, which may become the strongest hurricane ever recorded in the Atlantic. And dozens of intense wildfires across the West are causing ash to rain in Seattle like snow and threatening iconic national parks sites after the La Tuna blaze menaced Los Angeles in what was called the city's "largest fire in history." Given these devastating events have all occurred so close together, it's worth noting the 2014 National Climate Assessment concluded: "Human-induced climate change has already increased the number and strength of some of these extreme events."

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and CEQ's Ted Boling was first up to name South Sudan as the world's newest country (established in 2011). For today: What's the least densely populated state? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xaoDCa> **

EPA FINISHES INITIAL SUPERFUND ASSESSMENTS IN HOUSTON: EPA says it has finished assessing the 13 Superfund sites around Houston that suffered the hardest hits from Hurricane Harvey and its flooding. Two of those sites will need more study, EPA said: the San Jacinto River waste pits, a group of impoundments holding 1960s-era paper mill waste; and the U.S. Oil Recovery Site in Pasadena, which holds hazardous waste from a former hydrocarbon recovery operation. More here from Alex Guillén.

Speaking of Harvey: EPA's response to the hurricane will get an early critique today at a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee hearing. Although the topic is unimplemented recommendations made by the EPA inspector general and the Government Accountability Office, aides from both sides say lawmakers plan to bring up Harvey, and in particular whether any of the recommendations EPA hasn't put in place over the years could have contributed to its response these past weeks, or could help the agency respond to future disasters. No EPA officials are testifying, but witnesses from the OIG and GAO will be on hand. Expect to hear from Democrats about the White House's proposal to slash 30 percent from EPA's Superfund program, particularly since that's one of the handful of EPA activities championed by Administrator Scott Pruitt.

History lesson: Although FEMA and the Bush administration took heavy criticism over their response to Hurricane Katrina in 2005, EPA's response back then earned it flying colors from the agency's inspector general. A 2006 IG report concluded EPA provided "quality and timely information" in the wake of Katrina which left New Orleans and more than a dozen Superfund sites soaked. According to the report, EPA and Louisiana officials made their initial assessments of the Superfund sites from Sept. 2-9, with further study conducted from Sept. 13 through Oct. 14.

EPA HOLDS MEETING ON MIDTERM AUTO REVIEW: EPA will hold a public meeting today to get comments on its plan to re-open the midterm review of 2022-2025 vehicle emissions standards. The agency is taking written comment through Oct. 5. Expect to hear plenty from green groups, public health advocates and others who oppose weakening the standards, and also about EPA's recent move to reconsider the locked-in 2021 standards as well. If EPA ultimately does decide to change the standards, it will have to go through a full rulemaking process with another commenting round. The meeting starts at 9 a.m. at the Renaissance Washington D.C. Downtown Hotel. You can also listen in (but not speak) by phone; information here.

One regulation, undivided: Maine Attorney General Janet Mills told reporters Tuesday that she and a dozen other AGs who warned Pruitt in June against changing the standards remain steadfast. She also dismissed questions about whether Maine and other states could simply stick to a stricter California standard in the event of changes to the national program, noting that Maine sits at the end of the nation's tailpipe. "To roll back the national standards would result in disparities among the states, disparities for purposes of manufacturing, for consumer safety, for consumer choice and efficiency," Mills said. "It is clearly to everyone's benefit to have a national standard."

ME FIRST — NEW AD HITS ZINKE IN MONTANA: The Western Values Project is out with a second ad today hitting Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for what it calls his "sham" review of national monuments. It's part of a six-figure digital and television campaign in Zinke's home state as rumors swirl about his potential future political plans. Polling out today on behalf of the Montana Conservation Voters finds 54 percent of Montanans disagree with Zinke's recommendations to shrink national monuments and 86 percent want more transparency in the process.

EPA TO SHED HUNDREDS: EPA's workforce will drop to late-1980s levels by the end of September when it hits 14,428 due to a combination of early retirements and buyout packages, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. An agency official says 362 agency workers accepted the voluntary buyouts last week, while another 45 employees are still mulling offers. And another 45 employees will have retired by the end of this month. "We're giving long-serving, hard-working employees the opportunity to retire early," EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said in a statement. It was not immediately clear how much the agency spent on the buyouts.

Speak of the devil: Two senior House Energy and Commerce Committee lawmakers — Chairman Greg Walden and Oversight chief Tim Murphy — sent Pruitt a letter requesting a briefing on the buyout effort to ensure it is "an efficient use of taxpayer money."

MAIL CALL! ME FIRST — CARPER PROBES WOTUS REPEAL PROCESS: The top Senate Environment and Public Works Democrat, Tom Carper, is sending a letter today to Pruitt on the agency's efforts to rewrite the Obama-era Waters of the U.S. rule amid reports political appointees directed EPA career scientists to simply delete $500 million in economic benefits from the regulatory package it submitted to OMB for review. "Erasing the scientific and economic benefits of a rule designed to protect the drinking water of 117 million Americans will not erase the environmental and public health risk that the drinking water sources may pose if the rule is repealed," Carper wrote, requesting copies of the documents submitted to OMB for review and any communications from political appointees on costs and benefits.

GOP LAWMAKERS PROBE INTERIOR LAND HABITS: Two senior House Natural Resources Committee lawmakers — Chairman Rob Bishop and Oversight Subcommittee Chairman Bruce Westerman — sent a letter to Zinke Tuesday seeking information on land purchases made with grant money. Their inquiry comes on the heels of an inspector general report finding the agency doesn't track data on such purchases and many recipients don't report back to Interior. "The inadequate reporting and oversight of grants with such massive taxpayer funding raises serious concerns of fraud and abuse vulnerabilities," they wrote. Of particular interest to Bishop is the activities of the Land and Water Conservation Fund, which he has repeatedly described as "broken."

GREENS DEMAND GREATER TRANSPARENCY FROM INTERIOR: A group of environmental advocates, including the Wilderness Society, Center for American Progress and the Natural Resources Defense Council, sent separate letters today to Zinke arguing his review of policies concerning oil and gas development, methane waste prevention, and mitigation is unnecessary. The letters urge the agency to be more responsive to Freedom of Information Act requests to honor transparency requirements and expand meaningful opportunities for public comment.

LAYING THE GROUNDWORK: A Russia-linked hacker group targeting the energy sector may be preparing to move from exploratory probes to more disruptive cyberattacks, according to researchers. In a report published today, the cybersecurity firm Symantec said that a group it calls "Dragonfly" launched a second wave of attacks on energy companies in December 2015 with a "distinct increase" in intrusion attempts this year. Notably, the latest attempts may be part of "a new phase" for the hackers, the researchers wrote, "with recent campaigns potentially providing them with access to operational systems, access that could be used for more disruptive purposes in future." Previously, Symantec said, Dragonfly was in more of an "exploratory phase where the attackers were simply trying to gain access to the networks of targeted organizations."

Cyber experts believe that Dragonfly, also known as "Energetic Bear," is a Russian hacker organization, although Symantec didn't address the group's possible government affiliation. Dragonfly targeted more than 1,000 companies in the first known phase of its operations. In the most recent attacks, it used infected email attachments to penetrate corporate networks and "attempt to leak victims' network credentials to a server outside of the targeted organization," according to Symantec. They also took over websites popular among their victims and added malware to the sites' code that would download when victims visited the websites. Symantec linked the latest activity with Dragonfly's earlier campaign by comparing the malware that the hackers used. The same two variants appeared in both campaigns.

ANOTHER PANEL JUMPS INTO PERMITTING TANGLE: The House Small Business Committee today becomes the latest congressional panel to look at how the federal permitting process affects businesses around the country. "We need streamlined, expedited procedures that allow for timely implementation of projects to protect the long-term health of our forests, our small businesses, and the overall economies of the communities we serve," one of the witnesses, Missoula Electric Cooperative General Manager Mark Hayden, will say in testimony. The session begins at 11 a.m. in Rayburn 2360.

SIGNED, SEALED, DELIVERED: The White House formally sent over to the Senate on Monday the nominations for a host of EPA, DOE and other energy-related nominees picked Friday, as well as the renomination of Jeff Baran to another five-year term on the NRC.

CHEMICALS PROGRAM UNDER THE MICROSCOPE: Two House Science subcommittees today examine EPA's Integrated Risk Information System, a program that develops health assessments used to support regulatory decisions. They'll look at "scientific and operational integrity issues as they relate to the functionality and goals" of the program. The session kicks off at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2318.

REPORT: HIDDEN DANGER IN YOUR TAP WATER: The Environmental Working Group is out with a report today finding an industrial solvent likely to cause cancer — 1,4-dioxane — can be found in the tap water of 90 million Americans across 45 states. It concludes 2.5 million people in California; 1.2 million people in North Carolina and 700,000 people in New York are exposed to the chemical in quantities above the threshold thought to increase cancer risk. An interactive map of test data is available here.

MOVER, SHAKERS: Mike Schon has joined the U.S. Chamber's litigation center as deputy chief counsel for energy and environmental issues. He joins from the Portland Cement Association and also previously worked at Baker Botts LLP and DOJ's Energy and Environmental Resources Division.

Justin Savage has joined Sidley Austin LLP's environmental practice as a partner in its Washington office. He comes there after nearly ten years with DOJ's Energy and Environmental Resources Division as a senior lawyer.

Environment and Public Works Committee Chairman John Barrasso on Tuesday named Teri Donaldson, most recently a partner at DLA Piper LLC in Houston, to be general counsel to majority staff. He also announced the promotion of Matt Leggett to chief counsel; he's served as deputy chief counsel since January.

ANOTHER JOINS CLEAN ENERGY WEEK: American Gas Association has joined the steering committee of National Clean Energy Week bringing the number of energy groups on that committee to 13.

BLAST FROM THE PAST! Ken Bone (remember him?) will be on "Real Time with Bill Maher" this Friday. "Yes, I will be wearing a sweater. They asked me to wear it so I will," he tweeted.

INFOGRAPHIC — GUIDE TO LEGISLATION: Brush up on your knowledge of the complicated legislative process. Our guide to legislation infographic covers each step of the legislation proposal process, the changes legislation goes through before it becomes a law and how legislative differences are resolved. Download the guide.

QUICK HITS

— When workers died, Tampa Electric vowed to stop doing this. But weeks later, they did it anyway. Tampa Bay Times.

— A two-decade crusade by conservative charities fueled Trump's exit from Paris climate accord. Washington Post.

— Those 3 percent of scientific papers that deny climate change? A review found them all flawed. Quartz.

— As Houston grew, officials ignored 'once-in-a-lifetime' chance to spare thousands from flooding. Dallas Morning News.

— McMillan stepping down at Los Alamos. Albuquerque Journal.

— Motiva refinery in Port Arthur begins to roar back after Harvey shutdown. Houston Chronicle.

— Western Australia temporarily bans fracking to examine risks. Business Day.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:00 a.m. — "Fostering Public-Private Innovations in the U.S. Water Market," A. O. Smith Corporation and The Water Council, CVC 201-00

10:00 a.m. — "Powering America: Reevaluating PURPA's \(Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act\) Objectives and its Effects on Today's Consumers," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee holds a hearing on various bills, 1334 Longworth

10:00 a.m. — "Examining the Scientific and Operational Integrity of EPA's IRIS \(Integrated Risk Information System\) Program," House Science Environment and Oversight subcommittees, Rayburn 2318

10:15 a.m. — "EPA Oversight: Unimplemented Inspector General and GAO Recommendations," House Energy and Commerce Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee, Rayburn 2322

11:00 a.m. — "Expediting Economic Growth: How Streamlining Federal Permitting Can Cut Red Tape for Small Businesses," House Small Business Committee, Rayburn 2360

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2xaoDCa> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/09/trumps-tax-pitch-heads-to-north-dakota-refinery-today-024451>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump still pushing for a 15 percent corporate rate Back

By Ben White and Nancy Cook | 09/05/2017 08:30 PM EDT

President Donald Trump is increasingly fixated on slashing the top corporate tax rate to 15 percent — a level that pretty much no one else working on the issue in the White House or Congress thinks is workable.

In a White House meeting on Tuesday, Trump again expressed his strong desire to hit the 15 percent target, from today's 35 percent.

"You can't get to 15 percent, and anyone who has a back of an envelope can make that calculation," said a senior official working on tax reform. "And he may not like that truth, but it's the truth. It's just math."

This debate over how low to bring the corporate rate as part of a larger overhaul foreshadows the difficulties the administration faces as it attempts to tackle tax reform, while also trying to raise the debt ceiling, pass a budget to keep the government funded, address immigration reform and dole out money for Hurricane Harvey relief.

Congressional leaders, tax writers and key administration officials known as the "Big Six" met Tuesday in the Oval Office to talk about their progress — largely as a way to publicly show momentum on an issue significant to Republicans, the business community and conservative activists.

On Wednesday, Trump plans to travel to North Dakota to make his second tax sales pitch in a week. He will deliver a speech focused on the way tax reform will boost the financial lives of the middle class and help businesses.

Accompanying him on Air Force One will be North Dakota Sen. Heidi Heitkamp, one of 10 Democratic senators up for reelection in 2018 in states that Trump won. A key part of the administration's strategy to push a tax package through Congress is to earn these members' support.

In his speech, Trump is expected to bring up the fact that the 1986 tax overhaul under President Ronald Reagan was also a bipartisan effort, according to excerpts released by the White House.

"Both of the Reagan tax cuts were passed by a Democratic majority in the House, a Democratic speaker and the vast majority of Democrats in the Senate, including a Democratic senator from the great state of North Dakota," the president intends to say. "If Democrats continue their obstruction, if they don't want to bring back your jobs, raise your pay and help America win, voters should deliver a clear message: Do your job to deliver for America or find a new job."

Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn will also join the president on the trip.

As in his speech in Missouri last week, Trump is not expected to go into specific details about proposed changes to the tax code beyond wanting to lower corporate and individual rates and allow companies to bring back money from overseas.

He's expected to continue trying to make a populist-style push for tax cuts, arguing that they will encourage businesses to invest and hire more workers while making it less attractive to open manufacturing facilities abroad and ship products back into the United States.

Lost in much of this rhetoric is the way a major tax cut would help businesses and their bottom line.

Part of the challenge for the White House is crafting a major legislative package that can appeal to the fractured Republican Party in Congress, where hard-core conservatives and more moderate members often find themselves at odds.

"The key hurdle is very simple. It's how to craft a package that can get 50 votes in the Senate and avoid the problems they had with Obamacare," said Stephen Moore, an informal economic adviser to Trump and distinguished visiting fellow at the Heritage Foundation. "I still maintain they will end up with something really scaled back that can give the president a bill-signing ceremony."

"The politics of the issue keep changing as to what is attainable here, but it's time to get realistic about what we can pass," Moore added.

Tuesday's 45-minute Big Six meeting at the White House offered some hints of the difficulty of developing a major piece of tax legislation. The meeting was largely devoid of policy details — more of a show for the media than anything else, said one congressional source.

"This was mostly about procedure: How we get from point A to point B and make sure tax reform doesn't get lost," said one source familiar with the meeting. "That means the House has to start moving in September, because it takes the Senate awhile."

Another issue that has cropped up in recent weeks is the state of play on the corporate tax rate.

Trump surprised some people closely following the tax reform process by publicly sticking with the 15 percent figure in his speech in Missouri last week.

"Ideally — and I say this for our secretary of the Treasury — we would like to bring our business tax rate down to 15 percent, which would make our tax rate lower than most countries, but still, by no means the lowest, unfortunately, in the world," he said. "But it would make us highly competitive."

Most of the Big Six negotiators have come to the conclusion that the corporate rate will end up somewhere between 20 percent and 25 percent, despite the president's insistence on lowering it to 15 percent, a key promise from the campaign trail.

The thinking is that lowering the rate to 15 percent is unattainable without introducing a major new tax, such as the border adjustment tax long favored by House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) and Chairman of the Ways & Means Committee Kevin Brady (R-Texas).

Negotiators now must decide how hard to push on limiting expensing for capital investments and cutting into other current deductions to get that rate close to 20 percent. More immediate expensing and continuing to allow deductions for corporate interest, for instance, would mean pushing the top corporate rate closer to 25 percent.

"Where the rubber meets the road is how much you are willing to cut into all this stuff to get the number closer to 20," said the administration official.

While Trump continues to push to get as low on the top rate as possible, he is mainly sticking to the 15 percent figure so as not to be "negotiating with himself," said White House officials working on tax reform, and they expect the president eventually to endorse a plan that has a higher rate, probably closer to 20 percent or slightly higher.

Administration officials also cautioned against expecting any new detailed plan on taxes from the White House in the near term. Some on Wall Street began expecting those details after Mnuchin, in an interview on CNBC last week, appeared to suggest that a new blueprint would be coming soon.

Instead, the officials said that the Big Six have already agreed on the basic framework and that it would now be up to the "regular order" process in Congress, in which the tax writing committees take the framework and create legislation with specific details on rates and deduction changes.

To view online click here.

Back

Heitkamp to hitch a ride with Trump on Air Force One Back

By Burgess Everett | 09/05/2017 06:19 PM EDT

President Donald Trump is giving Heidi Heitkamp far warmer treatment than he gave Claire McCaskill.

The president will host Sen. Heitkamp (D-N.D.) on Air Force One on Wednesday as they travel to North Dakota for Trump's event on tax reform, suggesting that Trump won't attack the vulnerable Heitkamp as he did similarly imperiled McCaskill in Missouri last week.

Heitkamp told reporters that she opposes some of the tax policies the Trump administration has been floating, like taxing 401(k) accounts, but that she's been in regular contact with chief economic adviser Gary Cohn and other administration officials. It's a sharp contrast from most other Democrats, who believe Trump and the congressional GOP merely want to cut taxes for corporations and the wealthy.

"We've always said that we're interested in tax reform," Heitkamp said. "I continue to be curious about what the actual plan is."

Heitkamp is one of just three Senate Democrats who declined to sign a letter to GOP leaders demanding that Republicans abstain from using the party-line budget reconciliation maneuver for tax reform. McCaskill signed it, and Trump urged Missourians to vote her out if she doesn't back his tax reform effort.

In contrast, Heitkamp met with Trump during the transition last year about a Cabinet position, which would have flipped her seat to the GOP but never materialized. She recalled that effort was "pretty real" in a lengthy interview in North Dakota earlier this year, one of several face-to-face encounters she's had with Trump.

She said it's all part of how she's dealing with a president who is popular in North Dakota but reviled by the Democratic base and most of her colleagues.

"I'm doing the best that I can, when I disagree with the president it's pretty obvious. And when I agree with the president I'm willing to work with him," she said in the interview earlier this year.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA finishes initial assessments of flooded Houston Superfund sites Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/05/2017 06:22 PM EDT

EPA says it has finished assessing the 13 Superfund sites around Houston that suffered the hardest hits from Hurricane Harvey and its flooding.

Two of those sites will need more study, EPA said: the San Jacinto River waste pits, a group of impoundments holding 1960s-era paper mill waste; and the U.S. Oil Recovery Site in Pasadena, which holds hazardous waste from a former hydrocarbon recovery operation.

The San Jacinto waste pits require more time to inspect because a temporary underwater "armored cap" that prevents waste from migrating must be inspected by EPA dive teams. The agency said it will also plan for "longer-term assessments" at 41 Superfund sites in the broader area.

EPA also says its sniffer plane has been flying above the cluster of industrial sites along the Houston Ship Channel, particularly following concerns about emissions from a Valero Energy facility. Along with ground-based monitors, EPA says its readings of volatile organic compounds have been within "first responder screening levels."

EPA has assigned 157 workers to Harvey-related tasks, along with about 500 state environmental employees, the agency said.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA sheds 450 workers through buyouts, retirements Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/05/2017 08:31 PM EDT

EPA will shed more than 450 workers by the end of September, largely via early retirement and buyout packages, according to an agency official.

After a monthslong process, 362 workers last week accepted the voluntary buyouts, known in federal jargon as VERA and VSIP. Another 45 workers are still considering offers. Meanwhile, 12 more employees retired at the end of August, and another 33 are expected to retire at the end of this month, bringing EPA's workforce to 14,428, according to the official.

That's roughly in line with late-1980s levels. According to EPA's website, the agency employed 14,370 workers in 1989 before hitting a high of more than 18,000 in 1999.

"We're giving long-serving, hard-working employees the opportunity to retire early. We're proud to report that we're reducing the size of government, protecting taxpayer dollars and staying true to our core mission of protecting the environment and American jobs," EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said in a statement.

It was not immediately clear how much EPA spent on those buyouts, which can run as high as $25,000 per person. During a similar round of buyouts in 2014, EPA spent $11.3 million in incentives on 456 employees — though many of those positions were refilled, unlike most of the positions in this round.

The White House's proposed EPA budget sought single-year workforce reductions of 3,200, or about 21 percent of the agency, although Congress has resisted such drastic cuts to EPA's budget.

To view online click here.

Back

Why I let the Land and Water Conservation Fund expire Back

12/08/2015 11:52 AM EDT

The Land and Water Conservation Fund is broken. Created more than 50 years ago to "ensure access to outdoor recreation" and paid for by revenues from American offshore oil and natural gas development, the fund was supposed to help Americans. Unfortunately, the law has been hijacked by special interests too close to the government and must be reformed.

Since I chose to let the fund expire — due to fundamental flaws — on Sept. 30, a few have hurled criticisms and impugned the motives of members of Congress for wanting to reform the LWCF. Special interests have fought tooth and nail to protect the status quo, denigrating efforts to reprioritize funding for state and local recreation needs as a means to "pervert," "eviscerate," "torpedo" and even "destroy" the 1965 statute.

But on the contrary, efforts to blindly reauthorize the LWCF are denying the fact that the law's original intent to develop recreational opportunities close to home for more Americans was perverted long ago.

The LWCF currently authorizes money for purposes including federal land acquisition and something called the Stateside Assistance Grant Program. The Stateside program provides matching grants to states to help them expand public recreational access. Because states know best the needs of the people in their communities, the original 1965 law required that states receive the lion's share of funding from the LWCF. Unfortunately, the Stateside Program has been gradually crowded out over the years by the federal government's powerful drive to acquire more and more land. Originally, 60 percent of the fund went to the states; in 2015, a mere 16 percent went to the Stateside Program, about one-quarter of what was originally envisioned when Congress created the fund in a bipartisan effort.

Even more troubling is how the feds prioritize and spend the money they're given, acquiring millions of acres of land with little transparency, scant oversight and minimal local input. Federal agencies can't even identify how much land has been acquired with LWCF funds. Earlier this year, I wrote a letter to the Department of the Interior, requesting information about the total amount of federal land acquisitions over the life of the program and the goals accomplished through those acquisitions. The department has been utterly incapable of answering this request. As more land is acquired, federal land management agencies are racking up as much as $19 billion in federal maintenance backlogs on existing lands. This is unacceptable.

Continued federal land acquisition is especially disturbing for the West, where so much of the land is already owned by the federal government. More federal land means lost economic opportunity and lost tax revenue that should be available for schools and infrastructure. Furthermore, even state and local recreation projects — the main purpose of the law — are stymied since states simply don't have the revenues to pay for them. According to the National Parks Service, states today struggle with more than $18.5 billion in unmet recreational needs.

The means by which land is acquired using LWCF funding must be addressed as well. Recently, The Wall Street Journal reported that at least 19 states have been using LWCF funds for controversial eminent domain projects. Private property is the cornerstone of our land policy and has made our nation free and prosperous, but that right is compromised when the government uses a fund that was intended to create greater public access to lands as a way to take away people's property.

So, how should we reboot the LWCF? I recently unveiled legislation that eliminates the corrosion of the law and restores the honorable intent of public recreation and access. The Protecting America's Recreation and Conservation Act strengthens the original intent of LWCF — a robust, successful program chiefly aimed at helping states — while eliminating eminent domain and significantly curtailing the ballooning federal land acquisition. The PARC Act leaves no room for funding abuses and ensures the federal government's priorities properly focus on strictly identified inholdings that actually expand public access or improve maintenance of the hundreds of millions of acres that it already owns.

Since the LWCF's inception, the needs and geographical distribution of our population have changed. Communities across the country - particularly in urban areas - lack opportunities to enjoy America's land. The Community Improvement Through Innovation, Engagement and Support Program in the PARC Act will encourage people, particularly children in urban areas, to get the kind of recreational access they need to lead healthy, flourishing lives.

Governors, state park advocates and recreation groups are calling to restore the LWCF to its original purpose. Congress has an obligation to evaluate the laws that have been on the books for decades, and when found failing, improve them. The LWCF is one of those laws. By acknowledging the successes and failures of the LWCF, we can end its longstanding abuses and restore its benefit to more and more Americans. The PARC Act is a renewed and transparent framework that achieves these ends. Those who favor more of the same for the sake of political convenience will have to answer to the American people.

Rep. Rob Bishop, a Republican, represents Utah's 1st Congressional District.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump names nominees for posts at EPA, DOE, NOAA Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/01/2017 09:41 PM EDT

The White House on Friday evening announced a number of new nominations at EPA, the Energy Department and at other key energy-related posts.

— Matthew Leopold to be EPA's general counsel. An attorney at a Tallahassee law firm, Leopold previously was general counsel to the Florida Department of Environment Protection and an attorney with the Justice Department's environmental division, where he worked on the civil trial team for the Deepwater Horizon disaster.

— David Ross to be EPA's assistant administrator for water. Ross runs the Wisconsin Department of Justice's Environmental Protection Unit and was a top state lawyer for Wisconsin and Wyoming. He worked from 2002 to 2014 at D.C. law firms, mostly Crowell & Moring and helped on challenges to EPA's Waters of the U.S. rule.

— Steven Winberg to be assistant Energy secretary for fossil energy. Winberg, a program manager at the Battelle Memorial Institute, headed up research and development for CONSOL Energy. Winberg has been a member of DOE's National Coal Council and chaired the FutureGen Industrial Alliance, which backed an unsuccessful carbon capture project in Illinois.

— Bruce Walker to be assistant Energy secretary for electricity, delivery and energy reliability. Walker founded Modern Energy Insights, a company that assesses utilities' electric infrastructure risks. His resume includes executive positions at National Grid and Consolidated Edison.

— David Zatezalo to be assistant Labor secretary for mine safety and health, which runs the Mine Safety and Health Administration. Zatezalo in 2014 retired as president and CEO of coal miner Rhino Resources.

— Timothy Gallaudet to be assistant secretary of Commerce for oceans and atmosphere, the No. 2 position at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. A Navy admiral and commander of the service's Meteorology and Oceanography Command, and has a doctorate from the Scripps Institution of Oceanography. He also served as deputy director of a Navy task force on climate change.

— Rep. Jim Bridenstine (R-Okla.) to be NASA administrator. Bridenstine has criticized federal spending on climate change research. The White House's budget would cut funding from NASA's climate change-related activities.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: U.S. coal pitch draws immediate blowback in Bonn — Hurricane hearings swarm the Hill — Rehearing sought in Atlantic Coast pipeline approval — Keystone decision coming Nov. 20
Date: Tuesday, November 14, 2017 5:42:10 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 11/14/2017 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén, Steven Overly, Sara Stefanini and Darius Dixon

ADMINISTRATION'S FOSSIL FUELS PITCH FALLS FLAT: The Trump administration made few friends with its promotion of fossil fuels and nuclear energy on the sidelines of an international climate change conference Monday, POLITICO's Emily Holden and Kalina Oroschakoff report from Bonn, Germany. Protesters interrupted the only public event planned by the Trump administration, a panel of White House aides and industry officials arguing that fossil fuels would be around for decades but could be made more efficient to address climate-related concerns. "This panel is only controversial if we choose to bury our heads in the sand and ignore the realities of the global energy system," White House energy aide George David Banks said.

Some diplomats were dismayed that the U.S. would appear in Bonn to try to bolster American coal sales. "There's no such thing as clean fossil fuels. ... We can't move to the future like that," Tuaoi Uepa, a delegate from the Marshall Islands, said, describing the event as "ridiculous." Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg was blunter: "Promoting coal at a climate summit is like promoting tobacco at a cancer summit."

Trump's political appointees also appear to be getting the cold-shoulder from the official State Department negotiating team, Bloomberg Environment reports. The formal COP23 talks are focused on technical issues around implementing the 2015 Paris agreement, and the career diplomats representing the U.S. in those seem primarily focused on nitty-gritty technical priorities such as preventing developing countries from dodging strict transparency requirements. Bloomberg reports the political appointees are being housed in a hotel an hour away from the conference, rather than downtown with the rest of the delegation, and have been frozen out of bilateral meetings with countries including China and Fiji. "They don't want us here," one political appointee told the news service.

Allies rally on the Hill: A whole bunch of Senate and House Democrats, joined by League of Conservation Voters, the Center for American Progress, MoveOn.org, 350.org and others, hold a rally at 11:30 a.m. in the Senate swamp to tout their support for climate action even absent action from the Trump administration.

WELCOME TO TUESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and DOE's Marty Dannenfelser was first up to identify Milwaukee mayor Tom Barrett as the former congressman who now runs the biggest city in his state. For today: Which state has the greatest amount of federally-owned land within its borders? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

HURRICANE HEARINGS HIT THE HILL: Three separate panels today convene to take a close look at the federal government's response to the hurricanes that ravaged the U.S. earlier this year. Arguably the highest-profile is the Senate Energy and Natural Resources, which features the governors of Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, as well as the controversial head of Puerto Rico's utility Ricardo Ramos. Ranking member Maria Cantwell vowed ahead of the session to probe the "inadequate" federal response to the hurricanes and look for especially tough questions to go to Ramos, who inked the now-cancelled $300 million contract with Whitefish Energy for grid restoration work. If you go, the hearing kicks off at 9:30 a.m. in Dirksen 366.

A House Energy and Commerce subcommittee takes the broader view and looks at the response to environmental concerns in Texas, the Gulf Coast, Florida, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Witnesses include regional EPA officials, state environmental regulators and local groups. ME expects Superfund sites to be a major focus of the sessions. The hearing kicks off at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2123.

Several hours later, the House Natural Resources Committee holds its own session with Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló and Virgin Islands Gov. Kenneth Mapp. They'll be focused on how to properly oversee how the billions in federal aid is being spent. After receiving an initial batch of documents, the committee has "grave concerns" about the ability of the island's utility to negotiate contracts "without significant independent oversight," according to a memo. "Confidence in the utility's ability to manage contracts and time-sensitive disaster related infrastructure work is long gone," Chairman Rob Bishop said in a statement. The hearing is also especially timely as Rosselló sent a request for $94 billion in disaster relief to Congress and a federal judge denied a bid to have an outsider oversee the utility on Monday. If you go, the session gavel in at 2 p.m. in Longworth 1324.

Rosselló defends decision on mutual aid: Saying he thought it was a more expedient solution, Rosselló said he rejected requesting aid from other states to repair the electrical grid in favor of seeking assistance from the Army Corps of Engineers as well as the FEMA-funded Whitefish contract, Pro Budget and Appropriations Brief's Sarah Ferris and Pro Financial Services' Colin Wilhelm report. "Of course, as we know, that didn't happen," the governor added.

CONSULTANT DISPUTES REPORT ON GRID: Alison Silverstein, a veteran energy consultant, emails to say a Forbes article mentioned in Monday's ME mischaracterized her role in preparing Perry's electric grid study. "In fact, DOE staff told me (properly) to look at regulations and I did so," she said. "But DOE staff did not try tell me what to conclude in that inquiry."

SUIT FILED FOR OBAMA-ERA PARIS RECORDS: The Competitive Enterprise Institute filed a lawsuit Monday seeking records during the Obama administration from two State Department aides — Trigg Talley and Alexandra Costello — related to the decision not to classify the Paris climate agreement as a treaty, which would have required Senate ratification. Talley is part of this year's State Department delegation to Bonn. Link to the lawsuit here.

HEATED CLIMATE IN ALABAMA: Several ME faithful have asked so here's what Republican Roy Moore and Democrat Doug Jones have said about climate change. Jones has an entire section of his website devoted to the environment where he says "the consequences of our unchecked use of fossil fuels for our planet and our health have been clear for decades" and voices opposition to Trump's withdrawal from the Paris climate accord. Moore's website says "coal mining and oil drilling should be encouraged, subject only to reasonable regulations" and denied the scientific consensus on climate change back in 2009, writing in an

op-ed "not only do scientists disagree on 'global warming,' but there is little hard evidence that carbon emissions cause changes to the global climate."

Meanwhile, former House Energy and Commerce Chairman Fred Upton called on Moore to leave the race amid new allegations of inappropriate sexual contact with minors. "These are real life stories with real life consequences — not a soap opera. Heartbreaking. Past time to pull the plug on Roy Moore," he tweeted.

DECISION TIME: The Nebraska Public Service Commission announced it would decide Nov. 20 at 10 a.m. whether to approve the Keystone XL pipeline's route through the state, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. A favorable ruling could be the last regulatory hurdle facing the controversial pipeline, though legal appeals are likely.

Decision time, part 2: Trump now has 60 days to decide whether to slap imports of solar cells and panels with tariffs or other restrictions after the International Trade Commission formally sent its recommendations to the White House on Monday, Pro Trade's Doug Palmer reports.

ANOTHER INTERIOR PICK NAMED: Trump has selected Timothy Petty, a Sen. Jim Risch staffer and former Interior Department official during the George W. Bush administration, to be the agency's assistant secretary on water and science, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports.

** A message from Chevron: Advanced technology is helping us find safer ways to deliver energy. We're piloting a program that uses drones to monitor tanks and pipelines. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yPsOFP> **

REHEARING SOUGHT ON ATLANTIC COAST PIPELINE: A coalition of environmental and community groups, represented by the Southern Environmental Law Center, asked FERC in a Monday petition for a rehearing over its approval last month of the Atlantic Coast pipeline.

STEYER AIDES PITCHED ON OIL LAWSUITS: An environmental attorney briefed two aides to environmentalist Tom Steyer on early plans to file lawsuits on behalf of cities and states against the oil industry, the Daily Mail reports, citing a nine-page confidential memo. Both San Francisco and Oakland filed lawsuits in September asking major oil companies to fund infrastructure projects they say are necessary due to the impacts of climate change. Steyer told POLITICO in September 2016 he was not involved in the push.

EPW TAKES UP SMALL AIR BILLS: The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will consider a slate of highly targeted air pollution bills at a hearing today, so anyone hoping for action on remote Alaskan generators or other specialized issues can get excited. The bills are: S. 203 \(115\), which bars EPA from regulating emissions from vehicles used in racing competitions; S. 839 \(115\), which would delay implementation of the brick MACT (which coincidentally last week was argued in front of the D.C. Circuit); S. 1934 \(115\), which targets emissions regulations on remote diesel power engines in Alaska; and S. 1857 \(115\), which would delay emissions compliance deadlines for residential wood heaters and similar devices. Some, like the brick bill, cleared the House in previous congresses without going anywhere. The hearing starts at 10 a.m. in Dirksen 406.

Dept. of Good Timing: The House Energy and Commerce Committee's environment panel on Wednesday will mark up House versions of three of those Senate bills, on the brick MACT, wood heaters and racing vehicles, among others. That vote will be Wednesday at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2123.

WITH A LITTLE HELP FROM MY FRIENDS: Energy Secretary Rick Perry convenes the North American Energy Ministerial in Houston at 2:45 p.m. with Mexican Secretary of Energy P. Joaquin Coldwell and Canadian Minister of Natural Resources Jim Carr. They'll hold a press conference following their meeting.

GENE GREEN STEPS ASIDE: Texas Democratic Rep. Gene Green, who took a more moderate streak on oil and gas issues than much of the rest of his caucus, announced he would not seek reelection in 2018, POLITICO's Heather Caygle reports. The long-time House Energy and Commerce Committee member has significant energy interests in his district that nevertheless is overwhelmingly Democratic.

OFFICIAL: ADMINISTRATION 'STILL WORKING' ON CLIMATE: Michael Kratsios, the White House's deputy chief technology officer, told the Internet Association's conference on Monday the Office of Science and Technology Policy would continue to work on climate change issues. "We will continue to do that work and play our part along the 13 or so agencies," he said, adding he personally acknowledged the scientific consensus that human activity drives the problem. "What we're focused on is creating the next great technologies for the energy sector to be created in the US."

ON AUTOPILOT: Sean Cunningham, the head of the Energy Department's policy office, held firm to agency talking points Monday when he defended Energy Secretary Rick Perry's controversial grid resilience plan at a National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners gathering in Baltimore: Coal and nuclear plants "came to the rescue" during the 2014 "polar vortex"; the grid is a "paramount national security issue"; and that "both of these resources need to be revived, not reviled," he said. When state commissioners asked about cost estimates, Cunningham countered with a response about the potential cost of not rescuing economically struggling plants. And when asked about whether the grid plan should be narrowed to a particular set of plants necessary for resilience, Cunningham basically said the proposal was narrowly written.

The press didn't have any better luck. When reporters gathered around him, one asked why DOE officials like to reference the polar vortex. "Please just read the text of the NOPR and the accompanying letter [covers] all this," Cunningham said before taking off.

CLIMATE LAB TO CLOSE: A U.S. Geological Survey science center in Virginia that studies climate change east of the Mississippi River will close due to an expected 71 percent cut to its funding for fiscal 2018, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports, citing a letter to a union representative for federal employees at the center. But an Interior spokeswoman tells ME: "While the office will technically close in order to save on administrative overhead expenses, the work done by scientists will continue at USGS."

AVIATION BIOFUELS CUTS COMING? The International Civil Aviation Organization's governing body intends to drastically scale back sustainability requirements for aviation biofuels, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. The body intends to cut 10 of 12 sustainability provisions intended to guide the production of biofuel that carriers could buy to produce carbon offsets, though a final decision won't come until next year.

GREENS WANT MORE CPP HEARINGS: The Natural Resources Defense Council sent a letter to Pruitt requesting additional hearings on the agency's proposed repeal of the Clean Power Plan "in the nation's capital and in a range of communities" affected by climate change and power plant pollution. There's currently just one hearing scheduled for Nov. 28 in Charleston, W.Va.

REPORT: MINORITY COMMUNITIES BEAR BRUNT OF AIR POLLUTION: The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Clean Air Task Force and the National Medical Association are out with a report finding low-income and minority communities are "disproportionately" affected by air pollution from oil and gas development. The groups and Rep. Al Green will discuss the report at a National Press Club event at 9:30 a.m.

LIGHTER CLICK: HBO's John Oliver will air a commercial about clean coal on "Fox & Friends" this week in the Washington area. But you can watch it already beginning around 21:50 of this clip.

QUICK HITS

— Interior Decorator: Zinke's Push To Redesign Flags And Accessorize With Dead Animals. Huffington Post.

— These Climate Skeptics Have The Trump Administration's Ear. Here's Their Wishlist. Buzzfeed.

— Thousands of scientists issue bleak 'second notice' to humanity. Washington Post.

— After Trump shrinks Bears Ears, it will still be larger than Zion and Bryce combined, says Interior secretary. Salt Lake Tribune.

— OPEC Defends Oil Policy Ahead of Crucial Meeting. Wall Street Journal.

— America's 'Renaissance' to Gains for Renewables: Global Energy Trends. New York Times.

— From the Everglades to Kilimanjaro, climate change is destroying world wonders. The Guardian.

— The GE-Baker Hughes Romance May Be Ending After a 4-Month Run. Bloomberg.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:30 a.m. — "Hurricane Recovery Efforts in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands," Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Dirksen 366

9:30 a.m. — The NAACP, Clean Air Task Force and National Medical Association hold briefing to unveil report on impacts of oil and gas development on African-American communities, National Press Club, 529 14th St NW

10:00 a.m. — "Response and Recovery to Environmental Concerns from the 2017 Hurricane Season," House Energy and Commerce Environment Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

10:00 a.m. — "Legislative Hearing on S. 1857, S. 203, S. 839 and S. 1934," Senate

Environment and Public Works Clean Air and Nuclear Safety Subcommittee, Dirksen 406

11:30 a.m. — SEEC, Center for American Progress, the League of Conservation Voters, and more hold press conference touting commitment to Paris accord, Senate swamp

2:00 p.m. — "The Need for Transparent Financial Accountability in Territories' Disaster Recovery Efforts," House Natural Resources Committee, Longworth 1324

2:00 p.m. — "Sustaining U.S. Leadership Against Nuclear Terrorism and Proliferation," Hudson Institute, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Suite 400

2:00 p.m. — Experts hold briefing on the implications of waiving environmental laws in the Arctic Refuge, RSVP: Gwen@AlaskaWild.org

4:00 p.m. — "Status and Prospects for U.S. Nuclear Power," John Hopkins SAIS, Room 806, 1619 Massachusetts Avenue NW

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: Advanced technology is helping us find better and safer ways to deliver energy to America. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping capabilities to monitor Chevron wells, tanks, and miles of pipeline. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2yPsOFP> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/11/us-coal-pitch-draws-immediate-blowback-in-bonn-025532>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

White House coal pitch sparks climate outcry in Bonn Back

By Emily Holden and Kalina Oroschakoff | 11/13/2017 01:54 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — The Trump administration's effort to pitch coal at the international climate change meeting backfired on Monday, drawing heckling and booing at White House officials and energy industry representatives at a U.S. event.

The White House-sponsored panel discussion — held on the sidelines of the annual international climate change conference — was designed to promote more efficient use of coal and natural gas as well as nuclear power, but the event quickly turned into an outpouring of anger at the U.S. for pushing for energy sources blamed for boosting the Earth's temperatures.

"Clean coal is bull---," one person yelled. "Liars, you are a bunch of liars," another bellowed from the back of the room. About 100 people stood and broke into song after remarks by a White House energy aide, accusing the U.S. speakers of greed that's "killing across the world for that coal money," sung to the tune of "God Bless the USA."

After the event — the only public gathering planned by the White House — some world diplomats were dismayed that the U.S. would then appear in Bonn to try to bolster American coal sales.

Tuaoi Uepa, a delegate from the Marshall Islands, called the event "ridiculous."

"There's no such thing as clean fossil fuels. ... We can't move to the future like that," Uepa said.

But some others were resigned to President Donald Trump's plans to exit the Paris climate agreement struck in 2015 to curb greenhouse gas emissions and the new public push to bolster the market for U.S. coal abroad.

Jochen Flasbarth, secretary of state at the German environment ministry, said Germany was moving toward renewable energy and away from nuclear power, while also trying to speed its a shift from coal. "So, that's very clearly not the German path," he said of the U.S. policy. "But the Americans wanted to present this here. They can certainly do this. That's also found protest, but that's also OK. I think that's part of a conference."

At the event, White House energy aide George David Banks argued that solar and wind were not yet able to supplant fossil fuels in the developing world, and that coal and natural gas will be needed to lift people out of poverty.

"This panel is only controversial if we choose to bury our heads in the sand and ignore the realities of the global energy system," he said.

Barry Worthington, executive director of the United States Energy Association, a group consisting of government agencies and business, said that the U.S. would finance cleaner-burning coal plants for developing nations, but neither he nor Banks offered details.

Activists and journalists grilled Banks and the panelists — Amos Hochstein, senior vice president of the liquefied natural gas company Tellurian; Holly Krutka, vice president of coal generation and emissions technologies at Peabody Energy; and Lenka Kollar, director of business strategy at the nuclear company NuScale Power — about whether they supported the president's call to withdraw from the Paris climate pledge.

One reporter from a Chinese news outlet pushed Banks on Trump's tweet from before he became president that climate change was a "hoax" created by the Chinese.

Banks defended the president's statement, saying it was taken out of context and that Trump meant that forced climate action in the U.S. would hurt the economy and manufacturing jobs.

Trump's stance on climate change and fossil fuels has put the U.S. delegation in an uncomfortable spot in Bonn, where advocates are urging countries to ramp up their goals made under the Paris deal because emissions reductions are not yet on track to avoid some of the worst effects of climate change.

Fijian Prime Minister Frank Bainimarama, president of the meeting, called the COP23 summit, said on Sunday that coal is the dirtiest fossil fuel and indisputably bad for the climate.

"I really don't want to get into an argument with the United States of America, but we all know what coal does and we all know the effects of coal mining and of coal," Bainimarama told reporters. "There is really no need to talk about coal because we all know what coal does with regard to climate change."

Meanwhile, a group of U.S. state governors were pushing the message that much of the U.S.

still intended try to meet the goals laid out by former President Barack Obama in the Paris deal.

"Not one single nation has decided to slow down one mile per hour because Donald Trump has surrendered," Gov. Jay Inslee (D-Wash.) told reporters shortly before the event. "Every single nation we have talked to, if anything, is more energized, as is the state of Washington, to defeat climate denial."

Inslee called the administration's panel discussion a "side show" and a "blip."

Peabody Energy's Krutka told the audience that technologies to significantly reduce carbon emissions from coal and natural gas would be vital to achieving the goals of the Paris agreement.

"Nations around the world continue to use coal," Krutka said. "We cannot ignore their emissions or we cannot meet international climate goals." And she said technology to capture carbon emissions from power plants is "dramatically underfunded."

Despite the high-profile event, the White House has been silent about that technology, and White House press aides did not respond to a request for comment. The Department of Energy has continued to issue research grants to capture coal emissions, but the White House also proposed halving the funding for the agency's fossil office, which handles carbon-capture research.

The administration has supported investments in highly efficient coal plants, with Treasury in July changing its guidance to U.S. representatives on boards of multilateral development banks like the World Bank.

Eric Wolff contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Puerto Rico seeks $94B in disaster aid Back

By Sarah Ferris and Colin Wilhelm | 11/13/2017 11:49 AM EDT

Puerto Rico is seeking $94 billion in immediate emergency money to fund hurricane recovery, the U.S. territory's governor told reporters Monday morning.

Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said he plans to send the request to the White House later Monday afternoon, asking for money for more than a dozen agencies.

Rep. Jenniffer González (R-Puerto Rico), the commonwealth's nonvoting delegate, said the eye-popping funding request would be distributed across multiple supplemental appropriations bills.

"I do understand that that money is going to be split in many supplementals, I don't think it's going to be just one bill," González said. "At least that's the way they did it in Katrina and they did it in the rest of the states."

Gonzalez said she anticipates two supplementals to be considered by Congress before the end of the year.

About $30 billion of Rosselló's request would go directly to the Federal Emergency Management Agency's disaster relief fund, which has been depleted by the string of hurricanes and wildfires that came in quick succession over the last few months.

About $46 billion would fund Community Development Block Grants, which would help rebuild hundreds of thousands of homes.

Rosselló is also seeking $17.9 billion in other federal grants from the likes of the departments of Transportation, and Health and Human Services.

"The task ahead is as daunting as it is urgent, and recovery cannot be accomplished unless Puerto Rico receives substantial federal assistance," the governor wrote in a nine-page request to the White House.

The Trump administration is expected to release its third supplemental funding request to Congress this week. Lawmakers have already approved more than $52 billion in disaster aid following the trio of deadly hurricanes this year.

Rosselló also addressed his dispute with the federal board that Congress created last year to oversee Puerto Rico's fiscal recovery.

A federal judge in San Juan overseeing Puerto Rico's debt restructuring proceedings Monday ruled in favor of a government challenge to the board's installment of a de facto emergency manager for the island's electric utility, according to media reports. A formal order from the judge is expected later this week.

The board installed Noel Zamot as chief revitalization officer following questions surrounding the award of a multimillion-dollar, no-bid contract for electrical repairs to Whitefish Energy, a Montana-based company with two full-time employees. That contract has since been canceled, though Whitefish says its subcontractors will continue work on the beleaguered energy grid through the end of the month.

The installment of the officer, which the board justified as the commonwealth's trustee in ongoing debt proceedings, is part of its larger struggle with the governor. That conflict also includes the board's recent request for explicit oversight power over additional federal funds flowing to the island.

Rosselló said the board was overreaching.

"I just don't think it should attribute to itself more powers than it already has," he said, while also distancing himself from the decision of the utility, known as PREPA, to contract with Whitefish.

Rosselló also defended his decision not to request mutual aid for electrical repairs from other states, such as Florida and New York, in the days immediately following the hurricane hits, leaning instead on Whitefish, which subcontracts to local workers, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

In the days following Hurricane Maria's landfall, he said Puerto Rico was offered several alternatives instead of requesting aid from other states to repair the electrical grid, a common practice in emergency response. He said due to the territory's fiscal constraints, as well as what he thought would be a more expedient solution, he opted for assistance from the Army Corps of Engineers as well as the FEMA-funded Whitefish contract.

"Of course, as we know, that didn't happen," the governor added, so he then requested mutual aid from those states.

As he left Monday's press conference Rosselló and his representatives declined to respond to questions about a $1.5 billion, no-interest loan proposed by one of the larger investor groups in Puerto Rico's bonds.

Rosselló will appear before the House Natural Resources Committee on Tuesday for a hearing about the recovery of Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands from their respective hurricane-related disasters titled, "The Need for Transparent Financial Accountability in Territories' Disaster Recovery Efforts."

To view online click here.

Back

Woman accuses Moore of assaulting her when she was 16 Back

By Gabriel Debenedetti | 11/13/2017 03:40 PM EDT

NEW YORK — An Alabama woman said Senate candidate Roy Moore sexually assaulted her when she was 16 years old in 1977, becoming the fifth woman to go on record to accuse Moore of misconduct with them when they were young.

Appearing with attorney Gloria Allred at a news conference here on Monday, Beverly Young Nelson recounted how Moore, now 70, assaulted her when she was a waitress at a restaurant that the then-district attorney of Etowah County frequented.

Fighting through tears, Nelson recounted how one night, Moore forced himself on her in his car behind the restaurant in Gadsden.

After she screamed at him to stop, she said, "Instead of stopping, he began squeezing my neck, attempting to force my head onto his crotch. I continued to struggle."

"I thought he was going to rape me," Nelson said.

"At some point he gave up," she continued. "And he then looked at me, and he told me, he said, 'You're just a child, and I am the district attorney of Etowah County, and if you tell anyone about this, no one will ever believe you.'"

Nelson said her neck was "black and blue and purple" for the following days. "I did not tell anyone about what would happen — I was scared," she said. "I felt that if I told anyone, Mr. Moore would do something to me or my family."

Allred, who said Nelson approached her, called for the Senate Judiciary Committee to subpoena Moore and hold a hearing with him within the next two weeks. She said Nelson would volunteer to testify.

After Nelson gave her statement, Allred presented Nelson's high school yearbook from 1977, carrying a note from Moore, which is signed, "Roy Moore, D.A." She was 15 years old at the time. Allred said she had spoken with Nelson's sister, mother, and husband, who all said they knew about the alleged assault.

The Washington Post, in a story published last week, identified four other women who said Moore pursued them as teenagers.

Noting that she supported Donald Trump in the election, Nelson said her accusation has nothing to do with politics. She said she would not have come forward had the other four women not done so. They have not been in touch with Nelson, Allred said.

"This has nothing to do with Republicans or Democrats," Nelson said. "This has everything to do with Mr. Moore's assault when I was a teenager."

Ahead of the news conference, Moore's campaign chairman Bill Armistead responded: "Gloria Allred is a sensationalist leading a witch hunt, and she is only around to create a spectacle. Allred was the attorney who claims credit for giving us Roe v. Wade, which has resulted in the murder of tens of millions of unborn babies."

"We've said this before and we'll say it again: Judge Moore is an innocent man and has never had any sexual misconduct with anyone. This is a witch hunt against a man who has had an impeccable career for over 30 years and has always been known as a man of high character," Armistead continued in the statement circulated by the campaign. "Let it be understood: The truth will come forward, we will pursue all legal options against these false claims and Judge Moore will be vindicated."

The news conference, held at New York's Palace Hotel, came just hours after Republican Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell called on Moore to exit the race, saying he believes the women who have launched the allegations. Moore promptly fired back on Twitter: "The person who should step aside is @SenateMajLdr Mitch McConnell."

Later Monday, the head of the Senate Republican campaign arm said Moore should be expelled from Congress if he wins the election.

To view online click here.

Back

Nebraska to rule on Keystone XL route next week Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 11/13/2017 05:35 PM EDT

The Nebraska Public Service Commission will decide Nov. 20 whether to approve the Keystone XL pipeline's route through the state, the regulatory body announced today.

The five-member commission will vote on whether Keystone XL developer TransCanada can build a section of the 1,200-mile pipeline along its proposed route, use an alternative route or go back to the drawing board. A favorable ruling could be the last regulatory hurdle facing the controversial pipeline, although anti-KXL activists likely would appeal and eventually challenge any approval in court.

Enough customers signed 20-year contracts to ship up to 500,000 barrels of crude from the Canadian oil sands in Alberta via the pipeline to the U.S. Midwest to make the project profitable, TransCanada said last week. The interest came despite market winds blowing away from West Canadian oil sands, with ConocoPhillips and others leaving the region to concentrate on U.S. oil shale development.

Environmental groups are also targeting Keystone XL in court, having filed a lawsuit claiming the State Department did not perform due diligence before approving a cross-border permit for the pipeline.

WHAT'S NEXT: Commissioners will vote on the ruling at 10 a.m. Monday.

To view online click here.

Back

Keystone XL fight shifts to Nebraska Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 03/23/2017 04:50 PM EDT

With the State Department set to grant a long-sought permit to build the Keystone XL, pipeline politics are about to go local.

The State Department is expected to issue its permit by Monday, leaving a relatively obscure, five-member state commission in Nebraska as the last regulatory hurdle that pipeline developer TransCanada needs to clear to start building the 1,200-mile line that will deliver Canadian heavy crude to U.S. Gulf Coast refiners.

TransCanada has asked the Nebraska Public Service Commission to approve the pipeline's route through the state. Now the commission — consisting of four elected Republicans and one Democrat — along with the state Legislature are feeling the full weight of the White House's decision to back the Keystone XL pipeline, said Gavin Geis, executive director for good governance watchdog Common Cause Nebraska.

"If the review happens now, it will get ugly," Geis said. "It is a big deal, and it will be big deal. There's already more partisan infighting than we normally see here."

Calgary-based TransCanada asked the commission in February to approve the route the pipeline will take through the state, beginning a process that could end with the NPSC in September accepting, rejecting or suggesting an alternate route.

TransCanada had tried, and failed, to have the state approve a route when it first attempted to build Keystone XL a few years ago, and the company spent more than a million dollars lobbying the state government before the Obama administration quashed the project in 2015.

But the NSPC is engulfed in its own local politics, and the Commission whose docket is mostly focused on petitions for local telephone service rate hikes may be ill-suited to judge a project of this size, sources in the state said. The NPSC didn't even have regulations governing oil pipeline siting until 2011, when TransCanada first came calling about Keystone XL.

Now the commission is gathering information and testimony about how the 1,200-mile pipeline and the 830,000 barrels a day of oil it can carry past state cornfields and waterways will affect local landowners — some of whom are planning legal challenges to keep the pipeline off their property.

None of the NPSC commissioners replied to calls for comment. But they're already getting an earful from TransCanada lobbyists, environmental advocates and their own state politicians, said commission spokesperson Deb Collins.

"Commissioners are well aware of the passion and conviction surrounding the application," Collins said.

The commission also got a nudge earlier this month when 33 of Nebraska's 49 state senators — the state's sole legislative body — sent a letter to the commission "respectfully urg(ing) the members of the Public Service Commission to approve the route outlined in TransCanada's recent permit application."

"It's going to bring construction jobs, it's going to bring tax revenue. It's just money that comes in," said Nebraska Republican Party Executive Director Kenny Zoeller.

And the tax revenue isn't the only money Keystone XL is again generating.

TransCanada is also paying Omaha-based lobbying firm Heartland Strategy Group $5,000 a month to discuss "pipeline construction and management," according to a January 2017 filing with the Nebraska Accountability and Disclosure Commission.

While far less than the $579,000 it spent in Nebraska in 2011 alone, it represented a re-opening of the taps that some in Nebraska had expected to remain closed, Geis said.

TransCanada's U.S.-based subsidiaries have separately donated $23,000 to Nebraska state political campaigns since September 2014, according to disclosure forms. Nearly $10,000 of that was a June 2015 donation to the Nebraska Republican Party.

While TransCanada spends, Keystone opponents are also lining up for a battle at the NPSC.

In the short-term, Bold Alliance's Nebraska chapter has been recruiting local landowners to register as "intervenor" to give official testimony at NSPC hearings as to why Keystone XL may hurt their legal rights or interests.

Jane Kleeb, president of the group's parent Bold Alliance and chair of the Nebraska Democratic Party, said Keystone XL opponents are prepping for possible challengers to run against NPSC Chairman Tim Schram and member Frank Landis Jr., both Republicans who are up for reelection in 2018.

"Landis is the big target for Bold, his is the district where we have many supporters," Kleeb said. "Our focus is protecting the water and property rights of farmers and ranchers."

Climate advocacy group 350.org has also applied for intervenor status, and may use its national mailing list to help "turn out people in droves to the NPSC hearings," according to Sara Shor, manager for its Keep It In The Ground campaign.

"We proved Keystone XL wasn't in the national interest, and we think it's the same for the public interest in Nebraska. We're setting out to prove that at the state level," Shor said.

To view online click here.

Back

ITC formally gives Trump solar recommendations, starting 60-day clock Back

By Doug Palmer | 11/13/2017 05:19 PM EDT

The U.S. International Trade Commission today formally gave President Donald Trump its recommendations for restricting imports of solar cells and panels, a move that triggers a 60-day clock for Trump to decide what to do, an agency spokeswoman told POLITICO.

ITC commissioners held a public meeting on Oct. 31 that announced their recommendations to impose restrictions. But the "Section 201" import relief statute that provided the basis for the case also requires them to deliver their recommendations to Trump in a confidential report that explains their reasoning.

Three members of the ITC have recommended Trump establish both quotas and tariffs on imported solar cells and panels, while a fourth member called for only a quota. It is ultimately up to Trump to decide what to do.

Over the weekend in Manila, Trump told reporters that he planned to make a major trade announcement on Wednesday when he returned from his five-nation, 12-day Asian trip. However, it would be an extraordinarily short turnaround time if Trump was ready to make a decision in the solar case.

A White House spokeswoman today did not respond to a request asking for additional information on what Trump could announce.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump to nominate Risch staffer to head up water, science at Interior Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/13/2017 05:43 PM EDT

President Donald Trump intends to nominate Timothy Petty, a Sen. Jim Risch (R-Idaho) staffer and former Interior Department official, to be the agency's assistant secretary on water and science, the White House announced today.

Petty heads up water, natural resources, environment and several other issues in Risch's office and previously served as acting assistant secretary and deputy assistant secretary for water and science during the George W. Bush administration.

Petty also worked for former Sens. Connie Mack of Florida and Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania and he spent time in California and Indiana as a geologist and hydrogeologist.

WHAT'S NEXT: Trump will next send the nomination paperwork to the Senate.

To view online click here.

Back

Divided FERC approves Atlantic Coast, Mountain Valley pipeline projects Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/13/2017 08:00 PM EDT

FERC gave a green light to the contentious Atlantic Coast natural gas pipeline project tonight, with Commissioner Cheryl LaFleur as a dissenting vote.

FERC voted 2-1 on approvals for both Atlantic Coast as well as a the Mountain Valley Pipeline Project.

"Given the environmental impacts and possible superior alternatives, approving these two pipeline projects on this record is not a decision I can support," LaFleur wrote in a 5-page dissent attached to both orders, saying that "I cannot conclude that either of these projects as proposed is in the public interest."

To view online click here.

Back

Gene Green to retire Back

By Heather Caygle | 11/13/2017 06:37 PM EDT

Texas Democratic Rep. Gene Green won't seek reelection next year after serving more than two decades in Congress.

Green, who represents the Houston area, was first elected in 1992 and is a longtime member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. Green said he was confident he would have won reelection in 2018 but wanted to spend more time with his family after 46 years in public office, including 20 years in the Texas legislature.

"I think that it is time for me to be more involved in the lives of our children and grandchildren," Green said in a statement. "I have had to miss so many of their activities and after 26 years in Congress it is time to devote more time to my most important job of being a husband, father and grandfather."

Green's district, which is more than three-quarters Hispanic, is overwhelmingly Democratic. Green won his last election with more than 70 percent of the vote.

More than a dozen House members, mostly Republicans, have announced they won't run for reelection or will seek higher office next year.

Green also joins a wave of Texas delegation departures, including Republican Reps. Sam Johnson, Jeb Hensarling, Lamar Smith and Ted Poe and Democratic Rep. Beto O'Rourke, who is challenging GOP Sen. Ted Cruz.

To view online click here.

Back

Interior plans to close USGS Eastern climate change office Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/13/2017 04:01 PM EDT

The Interior Department is closing down a U.S. Geological Survey science center in Virginia that studies climate change east of the Mississippi River, according to a letter obtained today by POLITICO.

Interior plans to shut down the USGS Eastern Geographic Science Center in Reston, Va., due to an expected 71 percent cut to its funding for fiscal 2018, following several years of declining budgets, according to a Nov. 8 letter to a union representative for federal employees at the center. The center also studies how hydraulic fracturing in the Marcellus Shale region of Pennsylvania changes the landscape and the center compiles data used in Chesapeake Bay ecosystem restoration.

"Future appropriated budgets are not anticipated to improve," writes Interior Human Resources Specialist Yansi Hernandez in a letter to David Donato of the American Federation of Government Employees Local 3403. "For this reason, it is management's intention to close the science center."

The union can request to negotiate the decision, and Interior managers will try to reassign affected employees or offer early retirement packages "before considering any adverse action," Hernandez writes.

The Trump administration earlier this year proposed to cut USGS climate research and eliminate half the agency's regional climate adaptation science centers. President Donald Trump has called climate change a hoax and directed his administration to unwind numerous Obama-era climate policies at Interior and other agencies.

In a statement, Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift said the Eastern Geographic Science Center "is a small center based in Reston, Virginia, that has been undergoing a number of cost-savings measures over the past several years. While the office will technically close in order to save on administrative overhead expenses, the work done by scientists will continue at USGS."

To view online click here.

Back

International aviation body eyes cuts to sustainability requirements for biofuels Back

By Eric Wolff | 11/13/2017 05:35 PM EDT

An international standards-setting group is planning to dramatically cut back on the sustainability requirements for aviation biofuels, sources tell POLITICO.

The International Civil Aviation Organization's governing body, which is meeting privately in Montreal through this week, likely will drop 10 of 12 sustainability provisions intended to guide the production of biofuel that carriers could buy to produce carbon offsets, according to sources familiar with the discussion. The ICAO Council will not make a final decision until it meets again next year, after further studying the issue, the sources said.

Brazil was the lead proponent of dropping the sustainability provisions, and the idea won support from other developing nations that want to be able to produce biofuels at lower cost, the sources said.

The council intends to preserve a provision requiring that biofuels produce at least 10 percent fewer lifecycle greenhouse gas emissions than traditional jet fuel and to maintain a ban on feedstocks from land that was a forest or wetlands before 2009. The carbon losses of plowing under those types of land, called carbon stock, are far worse than could be made up with biofuels.

It is expected to drop requirements related to preserving air and water quality, protecting labor rights and protecting endangered species, among others.

ICAO last year agreed to create a carbon offset market to allow carriers alternative means of curbing emissions. The biofuels provisions were to define which biofuels could be used as offsets in that market.

WHAT'S NEXT: The ICAO Council will make a final decision at its next meeting in 2018.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: U.S. speaks today in Bonn — Burr, Tillis won't support EPA nominee — Durbin lifts some Interior holds
Date: Thursday, November 16, 2017 5:45:20 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 11/16/2017 05:42 AM EDT

With help from Darius Dixon, Alex Guillén, Sara Stefanini and Eric Wolff

FINDING TEA LEAVES TO READ: The top U.S. diplomat at an international climate summit is scheduled to deliver a closely watched speech today, as world diplomats attempt to tease out a firmer sense of where the country stands in the climate negotiations. Judith Garber, the acting assistant secretary for oceans, environment and science who stepped in at the last minute to lead the State Department delegation in Bonn, Germany, is not expected to promote the White House effort calling for developing countries to build more efficient fossil fuel-fired power plants. Garber is set to speak sometime in the mid-to-late morning in the U.S., and a webcast will be available here.

World leaders who descended on COP23 Wednesday didn't dwell on President Donald Trump's intention to leave the landmark climate accord, focusing instead on the need for action, Pro's Emily Holden reports from Bonn. "The point is now to keep working [with] those that are in the agreement, those that are staying in the agreement, to walk forward, to walk fast and be able to implement Paris," said J. Antonio Marcondes, chief negotiator for Brazil. "The U.S. decision is the U.S. decision and it's up to them."

But some were worried about funding. "The U.S. team has been on the ground and they are working with us," said South Africa's Minister of Environmental Affairs Edna Molewa. "But the actual payment of the money they have committed already — it has to come." The Trump administration has said it would not pay what's left of the $3 billion the Obama administration promised to the Green Climate Fund — while leaving open the possibility working with other countries or institutions like the World Bank to finance fossil fuel or nuclear plants.

A carbon tax on EU imports?: French President Emmanuel Macron called for the European Union to impose a border tax on carbon emissions, Sara Stefanini reports from Bonn. "We need a border tax to make it possible for us to protect imports from countries that do not protect our goals," Macron said in a speech at the summit.

Germany's coal problem: Chancellor Angela Merkel broached the uncomfortable topic of Germany's coal addiction at the summit, as talks to form a coalition government after the country's recent election get down to the wire. "We know we have a long way yet to go," Merkel said in her speech. Still, coal has to make a "very important contribution" to cutting emissions, and how it does that will be discussed "very precisely" in the coming days, she said.

WELCOME TO THURSDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the Pebble Partnership's Peter Robinson was first to identify former Rep. Austin Murphy as the person convicted of voter fraud at nursing homes. For today: Who was the other congressman, in addition to Dan Rostenkowski, convicted in the Congressional Post Office scandal? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energ, and @POLITICOPro.

New for Pros! The Pro app brings real-time policy intelligence and customizable notifications to your smartphone and tablet. Download the Pro app for iPhone and iPad | Get the Pro app on Google Play

TROUBLE FOR EPA CHEMICAL NOMINEE: Michael Dourson is one vote away from seeing his nomination go down the drain. North Carolina Republican Sens. Richard Burr and Thom Tillis announced late Wednesday they would vote against confirming his nomination to lead EPA's chemicals office, according to the Wilmington Star News. The senators cited their home state's water problems and Dourson's industry-friendly history. One more Republican defection would leave Dourson short of the support to clear the chamber, with Democrats expected to oppose him unanimously. Burr confirmed his opposition to ME: "I will not be supporting the nomination of Michael Dourson. With his record and our state's history of contamination at Camp Lejeune as well as the current Gen X water issues in Wilmington, I am not confident he is the best choice for our country."

Don't forget: Dourson is already working at EPA as a senior adviser to Administrator Scott Pruitt — a position that does not require him to go through Senate confirmation. Ethics groups said that was inappropriate when reports of the arrangement emerged last month, but EPA defended itself by pointing to other administrations that had brought on employees who were waiting to be confirmed. In fact, Pruitt began laying the groundwork to get Dourson into the building without waiting on the Senate even before his first committee hearing. Pro's Alex Guillén lays out the timeline, based on a newly FOIA'd document.

Senate EPW Ranking Member Tom Carper tweeted: "Dr. Dourson's nomination must be pulled, he should not remain in an unconfirmed role at @EPA and we must find a credible regulator who the American people can trust."

What's EPA to do? If it becomes clear Dourson doesn't have the votes, EPA would face criticism for circumventing the Senate's duty to provide advice and consent, but its other option would be to acknowledge hiring someone who couldn't clear a Republican Senate and fire him. Both seem super awkward. The agency didn't respond to request for comment.

** A message from Chevron: We're piloting a program that uses drones to keep an eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2zx6RdM> **

QUOTABLE: From former EPA transition official David Schnare at the Heartland Institute's gathering last week in Houston on a recording obtained by The Washington Post:

—On getting allies in the administration: "There are ways to get names in, and we've used every door and window and crack in the wall we can use."

—On forcing EPA to challenge the endangerment finding using what conservatives have derided as the "sue and settle" approach: ""If we come up with this case and say, well, this is what we want to do, and then we send a little note off to Scott Pruitt and say, 'We are going to sue you, would you like to sit down and talk.' It's not exactly sue and settle, it's just, 'We are going to sue your a--, and you ought to settle.'"

EPA WANTS TWO YEARS TO RECONSIDER COAL ASH RULE: EPA told the D.C. Circuit on Wednesday night that it would take until December 2019 to finish reconsidering a swath of technical issues in the coal ash rule. That answer may not please the court, which will hold oral arguments over the rule on Monday and has already once rejected EPA's request to pause that lawsuit in the meantime. EPA only just last week asked for a handful of issues be remanded for reconsideration, enraging environmental groups who noted the court date is so close. In a filing Wednesday night, EPA noted that it's already working on several provisions that were remanded back in June 2016, and said completing a review and potential rewrite of all the provisions in question would mean a proposal in September 2018 and finalization in December 2019.

EASY DOES IT: The National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners urged the Trump administration in a resolution approved Wednesday to tread carefully as it considers trade tariffs for imported solar panels, Pro's Eric Wolff reports. "NARUC is concerned that at least some of the requested trade protections could significantly increase the price of solar panels and therefore the cost of solar electricity generation," the resolution said.

YEAH I'M THE TAX MAN: House lawmakers expect to pass their tax package, H.R. 1 \(115\), today but that isn't stopping the flurry of groups pushing their priorities for the final product. Upset with reductions in value to the wind production tax credit, more than 200 companies in the wind industry asked House leaders to scrap an "unprecedented claw back" of the credit and stick to a phase-out deal reached two years ago.

Ahead of the vote: A roundup of the energy and environmental provisions in the legislation here.

Wither infrastructure? The House tax vote may also spell doom for Trump's hope for a trillion-dollar infrastructure package, Pro Financial Services' Colin Wilhelm reports. The bill eliminates tax preferences for private activity bonds, which support public-private partnerships similar to those Trump had pitched as a way to pay for infrastructure investments. "If that moved forward it would pretty substantially undermine the Trump infrastructure plan," said Michael Likosky, a principal at the infrastructure advisory firm 32 Advisors.

DURBIN LIFTS SOME HOLDS: After meeting with Secretary Ryan Zinke on Tuesday, Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin lifted two of his holds on Interior nominations, your ME host reports. That may clear a floor path for Joseph Balash's nomination to be assistant secretary for land and minerals management and Brenda Burman's selection to lead Interior's Bureau of Reclamation. Durbin didn't offer details on Zinke's decisions on each national monument designation, but told reporters: "He went through his reasoning on each one of them." Five Senate Democrats attended the session, according to the Illinois Democrat.

DOE nominees announced: Trump announced Wednesday his selection of John Vonglis, a senior adviser with Cross Range Capital, a private equity firm in New York, as the Energy Department's chief financial officer, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. He also tapped Melissa Burnison, currently the Nuclear Energy Institute's director of federal affairs, as the agency's head of congressional affairs.

TODAY'S FERC MEETING: This is expected to be Neil Chatterjee's last FERC meeting as chairman before Kevin McIntyre takes the gavel, and regulators have a few items of note on the agenda. Commissioners are slated to get their annual briefing on the agency's enforcement work, and they will consider a petition from NERC, the electric industry's reliability organization, to rework standards for detecting, assessing and limiting faults on the electric grid.

The agenda also includes the Millennium Pipeline Co.'s 7.8-mile Valley Lateral Project. FERC on Wednesday night denied a rehearing request from New York environmental regulators who were upset that FERC overrode their opposition to the pipeline. But that order did not appear to address a challenge to the underlying certificate that acted as FERC's initial green light, so commissioners may weigh in on that rehearing request today.

FERC on top? When Chatterjee met with reporters last week, he said he hoped that by the end of today's meeting he might be able to announce that FERC was "dug out from that backlog" that accumulated when it was without a quorum earlier this year. So...?

NEW PAGE: A proposal issued Wednesday by PJM Interconnection to alter its wholesale power market that is likely to lead to higher electricity prices in the region, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. "We expect that under this proposal energy market prices — and therefore energy market payments — will go up," Stu Bresler, a PJM operations and markets executive, told reporters.

FLINT MAYOR TO MEET PRUITT: Fresh off beating back a recall attempt, Flint mayor Karen Weaver returns to Washington today for meetings with White House officials and Pruitt. "This is a significant step in our effort to communicate to White House officials what we still need in Flint to fully recover from the water crisis," she said in a statement.

McCASKILL PROBES GRID CONTRACTS IN PUERTO RICO: Senate Homeland Security ranking member Claire McCaskill sent a letter to the Army Corps of Engineers on Wednesday seeking additional information on four contracts the agency awarded for grid restoration work on Puerto Rico. Among her requests: How it awarded each of the four contracts, how they each relate to grid restoration contracts given out by the island's utility and what the terms of performance are for each of them.

Ahem, seems timely: McCaskill's letter comes as much of the island was left in the dark again Wednesday after a line repaired by Whitefish Energy under its now-cancelled $300 million contract failed again, Mashable reports. Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló set Wednesday as his goal of restoring power to half the island, which government figures showed he met.

INHOFE OKAY WITH CLIMATE STUDY: Sen. Jim Inhofe, arguably the most ardent denier of mainstream climate science, said he has no problem with a provision in the compromise version H.R. 2810 \(115\) of the National Defense Authorization Act requiring the Pentagon to detail threats posed by climate change to military installations. "Let's have it so we know if they really believe that [it's an increasing security threat to the United States]," he told reporters. "I didn't object at all to that."

FIAT CHRYSLER HIRES TSCA REFORM AUTHOR TO LOBBY ON EMISSIONS: The American subsidiary of automaker Fiat Chrysler, has hired a bipartisan team of lobbyists from Holland & Knight, according to a newly filed disclosure. They include Dimitri Karakitsos, a Republican former EPW aide who helped write the Toxic Substances Control Act reform bill, and Rich Gold, a former aide to then-EPA Administrator Carol Browner. FCA US is currently battling EPA allegations that the company sold more than 100,000 diesel vehicles equipped to cheat emissions tests.

MAIL CALL! BIODIESEL TO TRUMP: HIGHER VOLUMES, PLEASE: The National Biodiesel board is calling on Trump to ask EPA to set advanced biofuel and biodiesel volumes significantly higher than the agency proposed over the summer. "These base numbers contained in EPA's original, July proposal ... are themselves so low that, if finalized, they will halt the growth of the biomass-based diesel industry," the board writes.

— The National Association of Convenience Stores sent a letter to the Senate Finance Committee urging it "to retain the biodiesel tax credit as a blenders' credit and phase it out responsibly." Link here.

SHOTS FIRED BACK: The Renewable Fuels Association is taking issue with a letter sent earlier this week by the Petroleum Marketers Association of America arguing the underground storage tank systems of many small businesses would be unable to handle higher percentage ethanol blends. "PMAA's claims that underground storage tanks at fueling stations cannot legally store gasoline containing 15% ethanol are grossly overstated, and their conclusion that the Renewable Fuels Standard (RFS) should thus be reduced is completely unfounded," Bob Dinneen, the group's head, said in a letter to EPW Chairman John Barrasso. "There is no basis whatsoever to PMAA's claims and there is no legal justification for this group or any other to seek a reduction in ethanol volumes under the RFS."

NEWSPAPER SUES EPA: Bay Journal Media, Inc., publisher of the Bay Journal newspaper, filed a lawsuit against EPA seeking documents that might explain why the agency abruptly cut off grant funding to the newspaper that had been funded since 1991. "If this decision stands, it will leave a gap in Chesapeake Bay news coverage by threatening our ability to provide the public with information about how actions by the EPA, and others, may affect restoration efforts," editor Karl Blankenship said.

MOVER, SHAKER: Colin Hayes, who stepped down as Senate Energy staff director in September, will team up with Josh Lahey, a principal at the Podesta Group, to launch their own public affairs firm, called Lot Sixteen. The new firm will focus on energy work, but "it's absolutely going to be broader than that," Lahey said (h/t POLITICO Influence).

QUICK HITS

- Perry says renegotiating NAFTA needed because of U.S. energy bounty. Houston Chronicle.
- Chemical Plant Owners Urged to Prepare for Worst-Case Flooding. Wall Street Journal.
- Woman injured in pipeline protest still being investigated. AP.
- OPEC Nears Meeting Without Clear Plan on How to Extend Cuts. Bloomberg.
- Pence promises to bring Texas 'all the way back' from Harvey. San Antonio Express-News.
- Internet Reacts to Interior Secretary Participating in Indigenous Hashtag. Teen Vogue.

HAPPENING TODAY

8:30 a.m. — Progressive Policy Institute and Common Good host a Capitol Hill forum on "Rebuilding America: What Are We Waiting For?" The Reserve Officers Association Building, Symposium Center, 4th Floor, 1 Constitution Ave NE

10:00 a.m. — "Successful Pre-Salt Auctions put Brazil's Oil & Gas Sector on Promising Path," Wilson Center, One Woodrow Wilson Plaza, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave. NW

12:00 p.m. — "Beyond Batteries: Grid-interactive Efficient Buildings," Alliance to Save Energy, Rayburn 2045

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about energy, safety, and some truly high-flyin' doin'. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping to help keep a close eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2zx6RdM> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/newsletters/morning-energy/2017/11/us-speaks-today-in-bonn-025575>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

World leaders press climate case as poor countries decry loss of U.S. funds Back

By Emily Holden | 11/15/2017 03:13 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — Heads of state arrived at the international climate conference Wednesday to press ahead with negotiations on implementing the global pact, while developing countries warned the loss of U.S. money would imperil their ability to meet their goals.

Few world leaders dwelled on President Donald Trump's move to withdraw the U.S. from the Paris agreement, instead focusing on the need to set the rules for the pact.

But Germany's Chancellor Angela Merkel lauded the U.S. governors and mayors who traveled here to promote their efforts to curb carbon pollution despite the Trump administration's work to erase any trace of former President Barack Obama's climate actions.

"I very much welcome this," Merkel said. "It underlines the importance attached to climate change in broad swaths of American society, irrespective of the decision of President Donald Trump to leave the Paris agreement."

J. Antonio Marcondes, chief negotiator for Brazil, declined to comment on how the U.S. negotiators were influencing the talks other than to say "[w]e're working with them. We're talking with them. They are participating in meetings."

Countries were disappointed by the U.S. plan to withdraw from the Paris agreement, he said, but the talks were proceeding.

"The point is now to keep working [with] those that are in the agreement, those that are staying in the agreement, to walk forward, to walk fast and be able to implement Paris. The U.S. decision is the U.S. decision and it's up to them."

China's special representative for climate change, Xie Zhenhua, said the U.S. remained active in the talks and that China "hopes that the United States will continue to play a constructive role in those negotiations."

State Department negotiators in talks hadn't veered far from the positions held under previous administrations. And the White House hasn't sought to renegotiate terms already settled in Paris, raising hopes that the U.S. might ultimately alter its course and decided to remain a party to the deal after all.

Still, developing countries were worried about Trump's pronouncements that he won't fulfill Obama-era promises to fund climate action around the world.

"The U.S. team has been on the ground and they are working with us," said South Africa's Minister of Environmental Affairs Edna Molewa. "But the actual payment of the money they have committed already — it has to come."

The U.S. has contributed $1 billion of the $3 billion that Obama pledged to help poor nations fight climate change under the Green Climate Fund, but the Trump administration has said it would not pay the rest. The GCF funding, which the Paris deal says should rise to $100 billion annually from 2020 to 2025, has long been a source of tension between industrialized nations that produced most of the carbon pollution over the past century and developing countries that are seeing their emissions now climb.

Asked whether the world should trust the U.S. after it has backed out of more than one climate agreement in recent decades, Molewa said the global community is "fairly concerned."

"That's why everybody is doing the level best to get all of us sobering up and really just thinking hard about what the world needs," she said. "The issue of climate change, the fight we are engaging in, is not about us only as individual countries, but it is beyond us. For humanity to survive, it is important that we all work together."

After a last-minute announcement that U.S. Undersecretary of State Tom Shannon would not attend the high-level segments of the talks because of a family emergency, acting Assistant Secretary Judy Garber is set to make the first big speech on behalf of the U.S. on Thursday. Like Shannon, she is a career State Department official, and she is not expected to promote the White House effort calling for developing countries to build more efficient fossil fuel-fired power plants.

Although the U.S. won't contribute to the GCF, Trump aides here say they're open to working with other countries to build coal, natural gas and nuclear plants. White House energy adviser George David Banks said the U.S. may band together with countries that may want coal plants but can't get financing for fossil fuels.

"It's come up a few times, but I don't know if we've had any sort of real international discussions or lengthy discussions with potential partners on that kind of arrangement," Banks said. "I would say that the administration is interested in the idea and would like to explore exactly what it means."

The White House may also initiate discussions with development banks, like the World Bank, about financing coal projects, he said.

The administration's coal pitch could cheer politicians from heavy coal-producing nations. Jerzy Buzek, the former prime minister of Poland and current chair of the European Parliament's Committee on Industry, Research and Energy, raised questions in Brussels last week about the financing necessary to transition off of fossil fuels.

"In the medium term, we still need huge investments also into existing systems," he told reporters in Brussels.

Buzek said he supports a transition to cleaner technologies but that it "is not very easy to achieve in all the regions of the European Union. In the regions with heavy industry — let's say coal- and carbon-intensive regions — it's not easy."

Banks said the administration also supports renewable energy but couldn't offer any evidence of how.

"The United States has been helping finance the deployment of renewable energy technologies, right? But it's essentially been a job program for China and for other countries," he said.

He said the White House is conducting a review of its renewable energy policies, but declined to offer details.

David Siders, Kalina Oroschakoff and Sara Stefanini contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Macron to call for a carbon border tax and other climate measures Back

By Sara Stefanini | 11/15/2017 03:07 PM EDT

BONN, Germany — France will call on the EU to impose a border tax for carbon emissions and include environmental goals in its trade policy, among other efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, President Emmanuel Macron said Wednesday.

"We need a border tax to make it possible for us to protect imports from countries that do not protect our goals," Macron said in a speech at the COP23 climate summit.

He also said France will work in the coming months on a "CO2 plan for Europe" to push the carbon trading price to €30 per ton.

"It will not be easy in any European country, there will be industrial groups who will ask for more time, say they won't be able to reach these goals," Macron said, adding that the plan will build on the "excellent" deal reached last week to reform the EU's Emissions Trading System from 2021.

"This agreement is in the right direction, but in the coming year it must be complemented with more action," he said.

Furthermore, France will support the development of electricity interconnectors with Germany, Ireland, Spain, Italy, Benelux and elsewhere to boost renewable energy use, Macron said.

France is "literally obsessed with reducing our greenhouse gases," he said, noting that it aims to close all coal-fired power plants by 2021.

That's why the government decided to drop a goal to reduce the share of nuclear power in France from 75 to 50 percent of the mix by 2025, Macron said, as closing nuclear plants would mean re-opening coal-fired power.

This article first appeared on POLITICO.EU on Nov. 15, 2017.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA started hiring process for Dourson ahead of hearing, document shows Back

By Alex Guillén | 11/15/2017 05:18 PM EDT

EPA began laying the groundwork to get Michael Dourson onto the agency payroll without waiting for him to be confirmed — even before his nomination hearing occurred, according to documents obtained by POLITICO via a Freedom of Information Act request.

Dourson joined EPA as a senior adviser to Administrator Scott Pruitt sometime last month. On Sept. 20, Pruitt and EPA chief of staff Ryan Jackson signed Dourson's "position description coversheet," outlining his duties advising Pruitt on legislative and regulatory issues related to chemicals and pesticides. That was two weeks before Dourson's Oct. 4 hearing before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, though President Donald Trump nominated him in July as the assistant administrator for toxic substances. (In an apparent error, the document does not include Dourson's name, but was identified by EPA as Dourson's paperwork.)

The committee approved his nomination along party lines Oct. 25, but a Senate floor vote has not yet been scheduled. Dourson has drawn criticism over his past toxicology work for various companies, and some Republicans have indicated they have reservations.

EPA last month pointed out that previous administrations had hired nominees to begin working before their confirmation. The agency did not immediately respond to a request for a comment today.

Susan Bodine, who is awaiting a confirmation vote to become EPA's enforcement chief, also has already started at EPA. Pruitt and Jackson signed off on her job description July 12, according to a copy of the document obtained by POLITICO.

WHAT'S NEXT: It is unclear when Dourson may receive a final floor vote in the Senate.

To view online click here.

Back

State power regulators oppose hefty solar tariffs Back

By Eric Wolff | 11/15/2017 05:50 PM EDT

The National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners today approved a measure asking the Trump administration to go easy on trade tariffs for imported solar panels.

The group, a trade association for public utility regulators, approved a resolution at its annual meeting in Baltimore that said it "does not dispute" the U.S. International Trade Commission's finding that cheap imports from China and elsewhere harm U.S. manufacturing, but was concerned about potential trade barriers.

"NARUC is concerned that at least some of the requested trade protections could significantly increase the price of solar panels and therefore the cost of solar electricity generation," the resolution said.

The ITC sent its recommendations for tariffs and quotas to President Donald Trump on Monday. The Office of the U.S. Trade Representative is now taking comments on proposed remedies that it will present to Trump, who will make the final decision.

NARUC "urges the USTR, in its consideration of potential action, to carefully weigh the harm that could result to energy customers from increasing the costs of solar inputs across the country, and the potential challenges to achieving state renewable energy and greenhouse gas goals that may result from higher solar energy prices," the group said.

WHAT'S NEXT: The USTR will take comment until Nov. 20. Trump has until January to make a decision.

Emily Holden contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Tax bill teed up for House vote Back

By Rachael Bade and Heather Caygle | 11/15/2017 01:15 PM EDT

House Republicans are set to pass a sweeping rewrite of the tax code Thursday, bringing President Donald Trump and the GOP closer to the major legislative win they so desperately want. And leadership apparently barely lifted a finger to whip votes this week.

Speaker Paul Ryan and his top lieutenants have been working behind the scenes on a few tax reform holdouts in recent days. But House Republicans think they've already got enough votes lined up — and have not needed to turn to Trump to flip opponents.

Republicans cleared a key procedural vote on the massive tax-cuts package Wednesday afternoon on a party-line vote. The final passage vote is expected soon after Trump rallies the GOP Conference at an 11:30 a.m. closed-door meeting in the Capitol on Thursday.

There's little room for error for Republicans. House Democrats have been working to keep their 194-member caucus together, not only to show unified opposition but to deny Republicans any opportunity to tout the bill as a bipartisan effort.

Massachusetts Rep. Richard Neal, ranking member on the Ways and Means Committee, has been keeping close tabs on the Democratic Caucus' most squishy members for months and recently redoubled his outreach to individuals who may be considering voting for the GOP plan. On Wednesday, House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer predicted that not a single Democrat will vote for the tax package.

"I don't think we'll lose anybody," Hoyer told reporters. "I think the consensus conclusion of almost every Democrat — pro-business Democrat, conservative Democrat — is that this bill is not good for the country, is not good for average working people."

White House sources say they're focusing all their energy on the Senate, with little concern about the House vote. The House whip team has not had to turn to the president to move people from "no" to "yes" — if only because most Republicans are so desperate for a legislative win. That's a shift from a few months ago, when Trump persuaded wavering House members to pass legislation repealing Obamacare.

Republicans can afford to lose only 22 GOP votes. Most of those opponents, House Republican sources say, will be lawmakers from high-tax states, including half the delegation from New York and most of New Jersey, and perhaps one or two from California. Those members' constituents could see a tax increase under the GOP plan because the bill axes their most prized tax break: the state and local tax deduction.

House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy of California has been working to keep fellow California Republicans on board after Rep. Darrell Issa peeled off last week. It's unclear whether any other Golden State Republicans will join him in opposing the legislation, though sources say several are concerned about how the bill will affect their districts.

Issa told reporters Wednesday that he expects "two or three" California Republicans to follow suit.

Meanwhile, some conservatives are sulking over leadership's refusal to include a repeal of Obamacare's individual mandate in the tax bill.

GOP leaders originally argued that mixing controversial health care matters with taxes could kill the tax package, legislation they believe they must pass to save their majority in 2018. They speculated that the Senate would be unlikely to pass such legislation if the two were combined — particularly because the upper chamber failed to rally around a single Obamacare replacement proposal.

But on Tuesday, Senate Republicans added the mandate repeal to their bill, surprising House GOP leaders and causing envy among some rank-and-file House members. Republican Study Committee Chairman Mark Walker of North Carolina tried to persuade House leaders Tuesday night to add the mandate repeal to the House bill, offering an amendment cosigned by 60 House Republicans during a Rules Committee hearing to combine the two issues. Leaders rebuffed him.

Despite some unhappiness with the final House product, GOP leaders have been selling members on the House plan by arguing that the bill they pass Thursday will not be the final version that heads to Trump's desk. Ryan has promised lawmakers that the House will go to conference with the Senate — and that any outstanding concerns could be addressed at that time.

That argument appears to have won over a large swath of lawmakers. Conservatives who want the individual mandate in the bill are willing to wait. Others with more niche concerns — like preserving the historic tax credit to renovate older buildings, or changes they want made to the small business tax cuts — are similarly holding their fire.

That's still a few weeks away, as Senate Republicans are expected to vote on their tax bill after Thanksgiving. After Senate passage, GOP leaders in both chambers will appoint conferees to begin hashing out their differences, from the phase-in of the corporate tax cuts to how they handle high-tax areas.

House Democrats, meanwhile, are working to keep members unified in opposition to the bill.

The White House and Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady had courted some Blue Dogs and other moderate Democrats since the spring, hoping to pick off a few when their bill eventually made it to the floor.

Neal has met with each coalition within the caucus in recent months from the pro-business New Democrats to the Congressional Progressive Caucus to get a read on members. And in the two weeks since the House GOP bill was first introduced, he touched base with members considering supporting the plan, working them on the House floor or coordinating with other messengers to talk to them.

In a coup for Democrats, the leaders of the centrist Blue Dog Coalition put out a statement Wednesday announcing their opposition to the bill. The group, whose 18 members were seen as the most likely defectors, cited the tax bill's deficit-busting numbers as the ultimate reason they decided to oppose the plan.

But privately, Democrats said they also were discouraged by Republicans' promises of bipartisanship before shutting them out of every part of the process.

"I think this is probably one of the most hypocritical bills that I've seen on the floor of the House of Representatives," Hoyer said. "It is one of the most fiscally reckless bills that has been presented. And I think there's a consensus in our party that that's the case."

To view online click here.

Back

House tax bill slashes value of wind energy tax credit Back

By Eric Wolff | 11/02/2017 02:20 PM EDT

The House tax bill released Thursday would substantially reduce the value of a key wind energy incentive, tighten requirements on what renewable energy companies have to do to qualify for tax credits, extend a nuclear energy tax break, and restore support for clean energy technologies that had been "orphaned" from an earlier tax extenders law.

The bill also eliminates an electric vehicle tax credit and jettisons some little-used oil industry tax breaks — as well as getting rid of the more significant domestic production tax deduction enjoyed by oil companies and other manufacturers.

The wind industry was quick to condemn the changes to its tax treatment.

"Despite comments to the contrary, this proposal reneges on the tax reform deal that was already agreed to, and would impose a retroactive tax hike on an entire industry," Tom Kiernan, CEO of the American Wind Energy Association, said in a statement. "The House proposal would pull the rug out from under 100,000 U.S. wind workers and 500 American factories, including some of the fastest growing jobs in the country. We expect members of the House and Senate to oppose any proposal that fails to honor that commitment, and we will fight hard to see that wind energy continues to work for America."

Here are some highlights from the text and a section-by-section summary provided by the Ways and Means committee.

— PTC cutbacks: The bill would reduce the value of the Production Tax Credit to 1.5 cents per kilowatt-hour, the level it was set at in 1992, rather than indexing it for inflation. That would reduce its value far beyond the terms of a tax credit phase-out that was implemented with bipartisan support in 2015. Wind farms and other eligible projects that begin construction this year can now claim a 1.9 cents/kWh credit, down from 2.3 cents/kWh for projects that started last year. The credit is scheduled to disappear for projects built after 2019 under current law, a schedule maintained in the House bill.

Developers also would face tougher requirements to claim the credit, the value of which is determined by when construction begins. The House bill requires a "continuous program of construction" until a facility comes online in order to qualify for the credit, eliminating provisions of existing law that allow developers to make "safe harbor" investments to qualify. The Joint Committee on Taxation says eliminating the inflation-adjustment and tightening the construction requirements will save $12.3 billion over 10 years, according to the bill summary.

— ITC repealed after 2027, orphan credits revived : The House bill extends the investment tax credit for a set of "orphaned" technologies left out of the 2015 legislation phasing out the ITC and PTC over five years. Fuel cells, small wind turbines, combined heat and power systems and microturbines can now claim the ITC until Jan. 1, 2022, with the credits phasing down at the same rate as the solar ITC. But what was to be a permanent 10 percent tax credit for solar investments will now terminate at the end of 2026. The House bill includes similar "continuous construction" requirements for the ITC as for the PTC. The changes would cost the government $1.2 billion in reduced revenues over 10 years, according to JCT estimates cited in the bill summary.

— Advanced nuclear tax credit extended: The bill extends a tax credit for advanced nuclear projects, allowing the secretary of Treasury to transfer unused credits after 2020, which was the in-service deadline under current law. The extension has long been a priority for South Carolina Republican Sens. Lindsey Graham and Tim Scott, among others. The credits would cost $400 million over 10 years.

— Utilities keep interest deduction: The bill would change how much loan interest some businesses can deduct from their taxes, while allowing them to take advantage of full expensing of capital investments. However, it excludes regulated utilities from the new rules, providing a win for the industry. Eric Grey, director of government relations for the Edison Electric Institute, a trade group, told POLITICO in September that losing the interest tax deduction was a major concern for utilities. Overall, JCT estimates the deduction-and-expensing changes would save the government $172 billion over 10 years.

— No more 199: The House bill would eliminate the domestic manufacturing credit known as section 199. Current law allows certain oil and gas companies to claim a 6 percent tax deduction, and other manufacturers can claim a 9 percent deduction, but the House bill would strip section 199 from the tax code starting next year. Doing so would save $95.2 billion over 10 years.

— Minor oil credits repealed: The bill repeals two small oil industry credits that have barely been used because they only kick in when commodity prices are low. Repealing the enhanced oil recovery credit would cost the government about $200 million over 10 years, while eliminating the marginal well production credit would have no effect on revenues.

— EVs lose credit: The bill repeals a $7,500 tax credit for electric vehicles. It is part of a slew of tax credits, along with a mortgage credit, and an adoption credit, that the bill proposes repealing. Repealing all of the credits would save $4 billion over 10 years, but the summary does not include a JCT estimate for the electric vehicle credit alone.

— Biodiesel, CCS missing: An expired biodiesel blenders credit was not restored, something likely to become an issue in the Senate where Sen. Chuck Grassley wants it revived as a producers credit; and a credit for carbon capture and sequestration did not get in the text, despite having bipartisan support.

To view online click here.

Back

Tax reform may doom Trump infrastructure plan Back

By Colin Wilhelm | 11/16/2017 05:01 AM EDT

The tax reform bill set to be voted on Thursday by the House of Representatives could kill any chance of the Trump administration's trillion-dollar infrastructure plan ever happening.

At best, House support for the plan would signal lukewarm backing among Republicans for President Donald Trump's ambitions. At worst, the bill would effectively end the funding structure that the administration touts as a way to reach its $1 trillion target and minimize the burden on taxpayers.

The House bill ends tax breaks for private activity bonds, a key part of public-private partnerships in projects ranging from roads to low-income housing. The administration has said it wants to leverage those partnerships to reduce the direct cost of the president's building plan.

Private activity bonds leverage local or state government debt for a project deemed to be a public good but too expensive for that government to manage, so it arranges for a private entity to run it. Examples range from aquariums to water systems. Those bonds come with a tax exemption, as other municipal bonds do, on what they pay out to entice investors to buy them.

The White House did not comment on the change, but suggested that it would attempt to restore tax breaks for that type of infrastructure financing.

"We will continue working with Congress throughout the process to ensure that the President's priorities are reflected in the tax cut bill that reaches his desk," White House deputy press secretary Lindsay Walters said in an emailed statement to POLITICO.

Rep. Bill Shuster (R-Pa.), chairman of the House Transportation Committee, said he was concerned about repealing the tax exemption for those bonds.

"I don't know that there's a commitment" to restore the bond exemption between the House and Senate when they reconcile their bills. "There's a lot of money on the sidelines that comes into play, so I think it's something that would hopefully be put back in there."

Added Shuster: "The president's talked about doing these kinds of things, so it's not a helpful thing" for Trump's building plan.

Infrastructure experts agreed.

"If that moved forward, it would pretty substantially undermine the Trump infrastructure plan," said Michael Likosky, a principal at the infrastructure advisory firm 32 Advisors. "A large amount of infrastructure is financed through the tax code."

The head of the infrastructure financing desk for one major bank, who asked not to be named for fear of being seen as critical of Congress, said he viewed the tax reform provision as a sign of the House's rejection of Trump's infrastructure plan.

"Infrastructure is a lower priority for the House of Representatives as they've wrestled with tax reform," he said.

Matt Fabian, a partner at Municipal Market Analytics, estimated that 80 percent of the public-private partnerships that Trump would rely on to pay for new building use private activity bonds.

Elimination of such bonds would "effectively neuter" any infrastructure agenda that would use private financing, Fabian said.

The Joint Committee on Taxation, which does nonpartisan economic and budgetary analysis for Congress, estimates that eliminating those bonds would raise almost $40 billion over 10 years, which would help make up for lost revenue from tax cuts made by the House reform bill.

Republicans need to meet strict budget requirements to pass tax reform along a party-line vote in the Senate.

Unless Trump can create an unlikely alliance of Democrats and Republicans to pass $1 trillion in new infrastructure spending, repeal of the bonds could effectively end those hopes. That may set up a high-stakes fight to save the exemption if the House and Senate have to agree on unified tax reform legislation.

Shuster and other infrastructure spending supporters hope that the issue will be fixed, in part because the Senate's version of tax reform includes the private activity bond exemption. But the Senate tax bill is already over the budgetary limit for money the government may lose under the tax reform bill it's considering. That makes it more likely that provisions repealed by the House to fit those budgetary requirements will be included in a final product.

Even Republican supporters of private activity bonds sounded pessimistic.

"Finding revenue, finding the scorer space, it's an inside-D.C./Beltway problem; but it's the reality of the legislative sausage-making process that we're dealing with, and so finding the revenue is one of the difficult questions that has to be answered," said Rep. Tom Reed (R-N.Y.). "Even after tax reform, we're not going to give up the fight, because I believe in these types of programs."

Likosky and other infrastructure financing experts expected major municipal bond market distortions for the remainder of the year, due to a rush to market for private activity bonds before they would be repealed by the House bill.

"The muni market itself would shrink accordingly," Fabian said, and federal government aid to assist those programs would likely need to increase to offset it. Airports, hospitals and other institutions reliant on private activity bonds may increase costs to individuals to make up for the shortfall if that federal aid didn't come.

Fabian said he expected projects important to the constituencies of many Republicans, like rural hospitals, small religious universities and charter schools, to be hit particularly hard by loss of the bonds.

According to Chris Hamel, head of the infrastructure investment group for Royal Bank of Canada, a portion of low-income housing construction would also likely stall out. According to RBC, private activity bonds financed over $4 billion worth of low-income housing projects in 2016.

But some view private activity bonds skeptically as government subsidization and see no problem killing them, regardless of the impact on Trump's infrastructure ambitions.

"What it does is dries up another revenue source with regard to that particular form of infrastructure," said Rep. Mark Sanford (R-S.C.), who sits on the House Transportation Committee. "But I think that there is fairly unanimous consent, within at least the House [Republican] conference, that they need to go."

Multiple members said they have yet to hear much pushback on the repeal from the White House, either, suggesting a potential abandonment of the private financing route for Trump's infrastructure plan.

"I think that's been a valuable tool," said Rep. Pat Tiberi (R-Ohio), a Ways and Means member. "If there is some abuse, which some say there has been, I would be for trying to limit [the private activity bond tax exemption's] scope. If it ends up being repealed, I think it will have an impact on the housing market."

To view online click here.

Back

Durbin lifts some Interior holds after Zinke meeting Back

By Anthony Adragna | 11/15/2017 03:13 PM EDT

Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin told reporters today he's lifting holds on two Interior nominees after a meeting Tuesday in which Secretary Ryan Zinke walked five senators through his decisions on national monument designations.

"He went through his reasoning on each one of them," Durbin (D-Ill.) said. "I thought it was terrible reasoning on Bears Ears." He didn't offer further details.

Also attending the meeting with Zinke were Democratic Sens. Catherine Cortez Masto of Nevada, Martin Heinrich of New Mexico, Jeff Merkley of Oregon and Tom Udall of New Mexico, according to Durbin.

A spokesman clarified Durbin lifted his hold on Joseph Balash's nomination to be assistant secretary for land and minerals management and would also lift his hold this afternoon on Brenda Burman to lead Interior's Bureau of Reclamation.

Durbin and Zinke got into a war of letters last week over holds on two additional nominees besides Balash and Burman: Ryan Nelson to be agency solicitor and Susan Combs to be Interior's assistant secretary for policy, management and budget.

WHAT'S NEXT: Lifting the holds could clear the way for fast floor consideration of Balash and Burman.

To view online click here.

Back

White House announces picks for DOE CFO, congressional affairs Back

By Darius Dixon | 11/15/2017 05:54 PM EDT

President Donald Trump intends to nominate John Vonglis as the Energy Department's chief financial officer, and Nuclear Energy Institute official Melissa Burnison as the agency's head of congressional affairs, the White House announced today.

Vonglis is a senior advisor with Cross Range Capital, a private equity firm in New York. He has previously held positions with Red Apple Group, The Hudson Group and IBM. During the George W. Bush administration, Vonglis, a colonel in the Army Reserve, served in the Department of Defense in various roles, including acting assistant secretary for financial management and the chief management officer of the Air Force. He also ran for a House seat in 2000, the White House states.

Burnison, who will be nominated as the DOE assistant secretary for congressional intergovernmental affairs, is NEI's director of federal affairs. Before NEI, she was a senior advisor at DOE and with the House Natural Resources Committee. According to the White House, she began a career on Capitol Hill with Sen. Mitch McConnell, of her home state of Kentucky, and worked for former Tennessee Rep. Zach Wamp.

WHAT'S NEXT: The White House must formally nominate the picks and send their paperwork to the Senate before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee will hold a hearing.

To view online click here.

Back

FERC overrules New York's pipeline project rejection Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/15/2017 01:32 PM EDT

FERC cleared the way today for a natural gas pipeline in New York, ruling the state had taken too long to issue its rejection of the project — a decision today that may signal how Washington could curtail states' efforts to stall energy infrastructure projects.

FERC's three sitting commissions ruled in favor of the Millennium Pipeline Co.'s 7.8-mile Valley Lateral Project, saying the New York Department of Environmental Conservation had waived its right to determine whether the project met CWA requirements because it had wrongly interpreted when the law's one-year review period for the application had started.

The NYDEC argued that its clock to review applications starts when it deems the paperwork complete — a date that was delayed by two state requests for additional information in Millennium's case. But FERC decided the one-year period started when the application was initially received by state regulators in 2015, making New York's rejection of the water quality clearance on Aug. 30 invalid.

"Giving effect to the plain text of a statute, the one-year review period began November 23, 2015, the date that New York DEC received the application," FERC's order states.

The new pipeline is designed to connect Millennium's mainline to the proposed CPV Valley Energy Center.

WHAT'S NEXT: New York can challenge FERC's interpretation in at the agency and request that a federal court issue an injunction on construction.

To view online click here.

Back

PJM floats market plan that would boost power prices Back

By Darius Dixon | 11/15/2017 05:16 PM EDT

The PJM Interconnection issued a proposal today to alter its wholesale power market that is likely to lead to higher electricity prices in the region.

"We expect that under this proposal energy market prices — and therefore energy market payments — will go up," Stu Bresler, a PJM operations and markets executive, told reporters on conference call this afternoon.

While payments to power plants that participate in PJM's capacity markets would likely go down, he said, "the net impact in the total, combined energy and capacity markets, costs will be [up] somewhere between around 2 and 5 percent."

PJM's plan would allow power plants that can't quickly alter their output, like nuclear generators, to set market prices.

"When the cost of an inflexible unit that is needed to serve demand is precluded from setting price, the [local price] does not accurately reflect the true incremental cost to serve load," PJM's proposal states.

Second, the proposal would increase the window for the market's so-called shortage pricing, a period when power payments are higher because of a lack of generating capacity. Shortage pricing currently doesn't kick in until the 10 minutes before a potential shortfall, but PJM wants that increased to 30 minutes.

Bresler emphasized that PJM's proposal was under development long before Energy Secretary Rick Perry's grid resiliency proposal.

"We don't think we have the issue that the DOE seems to think we have," Bresler said, noting that PJM has been working on pricing issues for a year.

WHAT'S NEXT: Bresler said that a panel within PJM would start looking at the proposal on Dec. 7 but the plan is unlikely to get to FERC until fall 2018.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Zinke's close ties to "scam PACs" scrutinized — Report finds huge costs to federal government from climate change — Comments roll in on Perry's grid resiliency proposal
Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 5:44:19 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/24/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Esther Whieldon, Heather Caygle, Nick Juliano and Darius Dixon

ZINKE'S 'SCAM PAC' PALS: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has worked for years with a group of Washington political operatives who have been accused by fellow conservatives of raising money on false pretenses, Pro's Ben Lefebvre and Nick Juliano report. Their investigation sheds new light on Zinke's fundraising practices as a member of Congress and since joining Interior. In his first month on the job, Zinke flew to the Virgin Islands at taxpayers' expense for a series of official events tied to the 100th anniversary of the territory's handover to the U.S. — and while there he squeezed in a personal detour to attend a fundraiser for the Virgin Islands Republican Party. That group, known as VIGOP, is one of several "scam PACs" run by Washington-area political consultant Scott Mackenzie, according to numerous critics that include some Republicans in the Virgin Islands.

Prominent GOP politicians have recoiled from working with Mackenzie and firms that have been linked to him, such as ForthRight Strategy, formerly known as Base Connect and BMW Direct before that. Texas Rep. Will Hurd says they "are preying on seniors," and former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli filed a lawsuit accusing Mackenzie and others of running a "national fundraising scam." ForthRight CEO Kimberly Bellissimo introduced Zinke to the VIGOP in 2015, when she accompanied him on a trip to the island chain.

But not Zinke. He substantially increased his spending on firms linked to ForthRight between his first race for Montana's sole House seat in 2014 and his re-election two years later, when he spent nearly $3 million on direct mail fundraising firms operating out of the same address as ForthRight between his congressional campaign and leadership political action committee, SEAL PAC. And he provided a testimonial for the firm's website praising the "professional as well as personal relationship we have developed over many years."

SEAL PAC seemed to operate on the same model as VIGOP and other groups Mackenzie has run, raising huge sums from small donors and spending the vast majority of its money on fundraising consultants. The group raised $2 million of its $3 million haul last cycle in increments of $200 or less, and it spent $2.6 million on overhead, far more than the $118,000 it sent to other congressional committees. That made it an outlier among other leadership PACs, which typically court high-dollar donors and allow lawmakers to spread contributions among their colleagues.

There is no evidence Zinke did anything illegal, but his relationship with the consultants and PACs is raising eyebrows. "To say the least, this is highly unusual," said Karl Sandstrom, a former Democratic FEC commissioner now at the law firm Perkins Coie.

WELCOME TO TUESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and ME baffled the crowd on Monday's trivia. There are seven states (North Dakota, South Dakota, Vermont, Delaware, Montana, Wyoming and Alaska) with just one congressperson. For today: What state has the fewest counties? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

IT'S HERE AND IT'S EXPENSIVE: The impacts stemming from climate change are already costing the federal government lots of money to address and will likely continue to grow rapidly over the next several decades, according to a GAO report out today. Noting that precise economic estimates are difficult to calculate, the report nevertheless urges policymakers to collect better data to prioritize adaptation actions that could blunt the financial risks to the government as the owner of vulnerable infrastructure, insurer of property and crops and provider of disaster assistance.

Requested by the bipartisan duo of Democratic Sen. Maria Cantwell and Republicans Sen. Susan Collins back in 2015, GAO's release comes as Congress continues to respond to various natural disasters with hundreds of billions in estimated damages. It calls for the executive branch to "identify significant climate risks facing the federal government and craft appropriate federal responses."

"Our government cannot afford to spend more than $300 billion each year in response to severe weather events that are connected to warming waters," Collins said in a statement. "I hope the release of this analysis will cause all of us to think more broadly about this issue, take a harder look at the economic consequences of inaction, and use what is known about climate risks to inform federal policy."

Sound familiar? It should, because former President Barack Obama issued a similar directive back in 2013 calling for all federal agencies to take steps to prepare for the impacts of climate change. President Donald Trump rescinded that order as part of a sweeping directive in March that began the process of dismantling his predecessor's climate legacy. Both the White House and EPA declined to provide official comments on the report.

Speaking of adaptation, six state attorneys general released a letter to congressional leaders Monday calling for the reinstatement of a federal flood standard that requires federally funded construction projects be built to withstand the stronger storms and additional flooding projected to occur as the climate changes. Trump suspended the measure in August.

** A message from Chevron: We're piloting a program that uses drones to keep an eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gzHlxs> **

READ 'EM AND WEEP: FERC's comment deadline for DOE's controversial resiliency proposal hit Monday, and a lot of people had a lot to say despite the short timeline. ME plucked the highlights of those that rolled under the closing gate like Indiana Jones. Energy Secretary Rick Perry's plan got praise from state coal associations, FirstEnergy, Exelon, and coal producer Murray Energy, which said it was threatened with bankruptcy if too much coal power tanked. But some of the state regulators and grid operators expected to be most affected by the proposal were unafraid to brandish their boom sticks.

The heart of PJM: The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio urged FERC to reject the plan, found it "deeply concerning" that DOE "makes no attempt to quantify the costs" of the rule (which Perry said was equal to the "the cost of freedom") and suggested it could cost $8.1 billion a year. Pennsylvania regulators said DOE's "hastily drafted" plan threatens markets "without adequate justification" and using the 2014 "polar vortex" to justify the proposal is "inadequate and inappropriate." PJM CEO Andy Ott said DOE's rule didn't meet legal muster and ISO-New England said it wouldn't address the region's fuel concerns. The attorneys general of Massachusetts, California, Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, North Carolina, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington also submitted a six-point attack.

The Counterintuitive Awards: A few entities tried to praise DOE's goals around resiliency while making it clear that they weren't willing to stomach the proposal at face value. "DOE is heading in the right direction, but the industry needs more time," American Electric Power argued. "[T]he proposal put forward by DOE should not be adopted by FERC without comprehensive discussions and inputs from stakeholders in all sectors of the industry" — a vast departure from DOE's argument that there's already been too much talk. Entergy, which has nuclear plants that could benefit from the proposal, says DOE's rule is "not well-defined" and could "produce conflicts with current market rules and otherwise create unintended consequences." Even the West Virginia regulators, who aren't thrilled with PJM markets, said having 90 days of fuel on site was "excessive" and urged FERC to do something like 45 days.

The magic minute: People were filing into the docket at such a clip on Monday that five different notices came from the docket at 4:29 p.m. Things got bad enough that we couldn't access FERC's system for a few hours on Monday, and eventually the agency said that it would accept filings for another day.

ZINKE'S SUPER SECRET HILL MEETING: Zinke is scheduled to meet this afternoon with House Natural Resources Committee members in a room typically reserved for issues involving a high-security clearance. Zinke will meet separately with committee Democrats and Republicans and copies of invitations obtained by ME say he will be "raising a confidential matter" and only members and staff with top-secret level clearance may attend.

Topic not specified: The invitations do not say what topics Zinke plans to discuss and the Interior declined to comment. But the agency does oversee park and wilderness areas that abut the US-Mexico border and Zinke raised concerns in a leaked report to the White House earlier this year that Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument in New Mexico can be used as a drug smuggling route and needs to be monitored. Also, the U.S. territory of Guam faces possible missile threats from North Korea. Or it could simply be that Zinke, who reportedly flies his official flag over the Interior building when he occupies it, is looking to limit the number of people who know what the agency has in store on a number of topics, such his plans for national monuments.

'Everything about this is weird': A former Interior staffer could not recall a time when prior secretaries Sally Jewell or Ken Salazar ever called a meeting with lawmakers in a secure room on the hill or in the agency's Washington headquarters. "Everything about this is weird," the former staffer said. And Democratic Rep. Ruben Gallego said there's "nothing normal" about having a meeting with Zinke in such secure meetings and also found it odd the secretary would split up Democrats and Republicans.

MURKOWSKI: 'CLIMATE CHANGE IS REAL': Senate Energy committee Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski broke sharply with the party line over the weekend during a speech at the Alaska Federation of Natives convention with the message that climate change is real, and she urged action to install alternative energy systems across her state, KTOO reports. "Climate change is real," she said. "Confronting climate change and adapting to it will take leadership, it will take partnership and attention to social justice if we are to find the strength to tackle the issue together."

HOUSE TO VOTE ON SETTLEMENT BILL: Lawmakers today take up a bill H.R. 732 \(115\) that would restrict the government's ability to enter into settlement agreements that fund third-party activities. Though the House report on the package says it "explicitly" permits "payments to remediate environmental damage," it also condemns a settlement with Volkswagen that funded a $2 billion electric vehicle initiative and says it is "critical that Congress act to prevent these activities in the future."

MAIL CALL! MENENDEZ SEEKS PROBE OF EPA CHEMICAL CHANGES: New Jersey Sen. Bob Menendez asked EPA's inspector general in a Monday letter to investigate the influence of a former chemical industry insider in revising regulations in light of a New York Times report. In particular, Menendez wants the inspector general to look into potential suppression of scientific evidence, whether the agency's hiring practices run afoul of ethics and conflict of interest requirements and whether EPA has caved to industry requests in rulemakings.

INFORMATION SOUGHT ON PIPELINE ATTACKS: More than 80 House members sent Attorney General Jeff Sessions a letter Monday wanting to know what's being done to address recent attacks on pipeline infrastructure around the country. "While we are strong advocates for the First Amendment, violence toward individuals and destruction of property are both illegal and potentially fatal," the letter, led by Ken Buck, said.

GET YOUR GREAT LAKES PITCH IN: A bipartisan group of senators, led by Rob Portman and Debbie Stabenow, sent a letter to OMB Director Mick Mulvaney on Monday asking for $300 million for the Great Lakes Restoration Initiative in the fiscal 2019 budget resolution. "Now is not the time to scale back our nation's commitment to restore the Great Lakes environment and economy," they wrote. Link here.

DURBIN FIGHTS FOR... UTAH MONUMENTS: Sixteen Senate Democrats, led by Minority Whip Dick Durbin, asked Trump in a letter not to alter the existing boundaries of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase Escalante national monuments in Utah. "It is clear that any changes to these monuments threaten their important natural, archeological, and cultural resources," they write. The push comes as Zinke is expected to meet later this week with Trump.

SUPPORT URGED FOR CCS TECHNOLOGY: A group of unions, environmental advocates, coal companies and others sent a letter to congressional Appropriations leaders Monday urging full support for the DOE Office of Fossil Energy for fiscal 2018. Link here.

RENEWED PUSH ON ARPA-E LEGISLATION: A bipartisan quartet — Reps. Mia Love, Eddie Bernice Johnson, Ryan Costello and Marcy Kaptur — sent a dear colleague letter urging support for legislation H.R. 3681 \(115\) that would reauthorize and allow "reasonable growth" in the ARPA-E program through 2022.

WORTH NOTING: A group of deep-pocketed donors gather today at oilman T. Boone Pickens' Mesa Vista ranch to lay out plans to raise money for the Trump-aligned America First Action super PAC ahead of the 2018 and 2020 elections, POLITICO's Alex Isenstadt reports.

WHO'S IN? Leaders of the We Are Still In coalition, which is still aiming to hit the U.S. reduction goals of the Paris agreement, are holding a press call today at 11 a.m. to discuss the upcoming Bonn, Germany, climate meetings. Participants include Washington Gov. Jay Inslee.

REPORT: MARKETS NOT REGULATIONS FOULED COAL PLANTS: Resources for the Future released a report Monday finding declining energy consumption and low natural gas prices accounted for much of the decline in coal plant profitability. The stringency of regulations affected emissions levels but had little impact on the balance sheets of plants.

TAKE A GLANCE! The Union of Concerned Scientists is out with a new playbook describing how some companies manipulate the findings of scientists to distort the impacts of their products on public health and the environment. There's also a PSA from former NFL player Chris Borland.

NEW TOOL! The U.S. Chamber's Global Energy Institute and Beveridge & Diamond released a new tool to track regulatory, judicial and legislative developments across the government.

LCV ALL-IN FOR NORTHAM: The Virginia League of Conservation Voters Political Action Committee announced today it's now spent $3.1 million on the commonwealth's upcoming elections, including Ralph Northam's bid to become governor. That investment includes $1.1 million of direct contributions to candidates, a $1.4 million field program and a $500,000 digital program that includes a website on Republican Ed Gillespie's environmental record.

DUNCAN JOINS E&C: The House Steering Committee picked Rep. Jeff Duncan for the spot on the Energy and Commerce Committee that opened up with the resignation of former Rep. Tim Murphy. Chairman Greg Walden said he was confident Duncan would "make an immediate impact on the committee with some of the broadest jurisdiction in Congress."

TWO MORE JOIN ENERGY COUNCIL: ClearPath CEO Jay Faison and former Aerospace Corp. CEO Wanda Austin are joining American Energy Innovation Council, whose members also include Bill Gates, Tom Fanning and others.

HERE'S RICK PERRY WITH A SHARK: Energy Secretary Rick Perry is in South Africa for Africa Oil Week. On Monday, he tweeted a picture from a speech he delivered with a menacing looking shark in the background. Picture here.

QUICK HITS

- EPA Looks At Cleanup Alternatives For Lead-Contaminated Indiana Site. AP.
- GOP senators propose wildfire management bill. The Hill.
- Russian Troll Efforts Extended To Standing Rock. BuzzFeed.
- Price-Fixing Inquiry Moves From BMW to Daimler and Volkswagen. New York Times.
- Nicaragua will join Paris climate pact, leaving U.S., Syria isolated. Reuters.
- Small Montana firm lands Puerto Rico's biggest contract to get the power back on. Washington Post.
- China: Where natural gas market could boom next. USA Today.

HAPPENING TODAY

10:00 a.m. — 12 energy groups host press event to discuss comments on DOE's grid resiliency proposal, K&L Gates LLP, Conference Room 1-B, 1601 K Street, NW

12:45 p.m. — Sen. Cory Booker and Rep. Raul Ruiz hold call to announce environmental justice legislation, RSVP: Kristin\_Lynch@booker.senate.gov

1:00 p.m. — Lawmakers host "Half-Earth Day" celebration and conversation with E.O. Wilson, U.S. Capitol Building Visitor Center: Congressional Auditorium and Atrium

2:30 p.m. — "Reauthorization of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act: Fisheries Science," Senate Commerce Coast Guard Subcommittee, Russell 253

4:00 p.m. — "Crude Nation: How Oil Riches Ruined Venezuela," Cato Institute, 1000 Massachusetts Ave. NW

6:00 p.m. — 'Flint' viewing and panel discussion with Rep. Dan Kildee, U.S. Capitol Visitors Center Auditorium

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about energy, safety, and some truly high-flyin' doin'. We're piloting a program that uses drones, HD imaging, and thermal mapping to help keep a close eye on Chevron wells, tanks, and pipelines—all to keep DOERS and what they're doin' safer. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2gzHlxs> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/zinke-close-ties-to-scam-pacs-scrutinized-025188>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Zinke boosted fortunes of 'scam PAC' operators Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Nick Juliano | 10/23/2017 09:48 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has directed millions of dollars in political contributions since 2014 to a network of Washington operatives that prominent conservatives have accused of profiting by misleading donors.

Beneficiaries of Zinke's largesse include groups linked to Washington-area political operative Scott Mackenzie, organizer of a Virgin Islands GOP political action committee that hosted the secretary at a St. Croix fundraiser in March. Before that, when Zinke was a Republican congressman from Montana, his political operation steered significant portions of its spending to a handful of Washington, D.C.-area consulting firms that also have had ties to Mackenzie and his associates.

Zinke has continued this relationship even as other Republicans have recoiled from dealing with Mackenzie, whose critics say he operates "scam PACs" that raise small-dollar donations from conservative voters but then spend the bulk of the money on consultants and overhead.

The critics include former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who filed a suit accusing Mackenzie and other defendants of running a "national fundraising scam" after they gave his 2013 campaign for governor less than a half percent of the money they had raised in his name.

Similarly, Zinke's own leadership PAC also relied heavily on small donors while spending heavily on consultants, in a departure from how most members of Congress operate those kinds of groups.

The details about Zinke's fundraising and spending practices have not been previously reported, nor has his yearslong relationship with Mackenzie's Virgin Islands Republican Party, a group that some Republicans in the Caribbean island chain have accused of misrepresenting itself to donors. POLITICO's analysis of Federal Election Commission filings, plus interviews with campaign finance lawyers and people familiar with the Virgin Islands group's fundraising, offer a deeper picture of the political activism of the retired Navy SEAL who serves in President Donald Trump's Cabinet.

None of the records indicate that Zinke violated the law or received any direct compensation from his association with Mackenzie, the Virgin Islands PAC or its consultants. But one campaign finance expert said the information shows that Zinke was not behaving like a typical politician.

"To say the least, this is highly unusual," said Karl Sandstrom, a former Democratic FEC commissioner who now works at the law firm Perkins Coie.

An Interior Department spokeswoman declined to comment on the assistance Zinke has offered to the Virgin Islands group or his use of political consultants. Mackenzie declined to be interviewed, and officials from the Virgin Islands organization — also known as VIGOP — did not respond to requests for comment.

Zinke is separately facing investigations by Interior's internal watchdog and the independent Office of Special Counsel over his habit of mixing politics and official business.

Legal limits on Zinke's partisan activities have tightened now that he's Interior secretary, and he has cut ties with his PACs since being sworn in. Still, he has kept up appearances at fundraisers and other political events — averaging more than one per month — a pace that is unusual for a Cabinet member. Those include his appearance at the March fundraiser in the Virgin Islands, which occurred during a taxpayer-funded trip less than a month after he became secretary.

Complaints among Republicans about "scam PACS" have been on the rise for years, focusing on groups that target conservative voters as a source for donations. Those complaints have repeatedly focused on Mackenzie, the founder of a number of GOP-leaning PACs that have used slogans such as "Stop Hillary Clinton" to raise money from conservatives — then appeared to do little actual politicking.

Such groups make use of what past FEC leaders have described as a loophole in campaign finance law. The commission declined to take action against one of Mackenzie's Virginia-based PACs, the Conservative StrikeForce, after former Rep. Allen West (R-Fla.) complained in 2012 that it had been "fraudulent" in raising money from his supporters while falsely implying it would aid his reelection campaign. While the PAC's actions were "troubling," the commission's attorneys wrote, they didn't violate any laws or rules that the FEC has the power to enforce.

Cuccinelli made similar criticisms in his 2014 lawsuit, which accused Mackenzie, Conservative StrikeForce and other defendants of using the bulk of the money they had raised in his name to "enrich themselves." The case was eventually settled, with Conservative StrikeForce agreeing to pay Cuccinelli's campaign $85,000 and turn over its donor lists.

Conservative commentator Erick Erickson warned campaigns back as far back as 2010 that he might not endorse any Republican candidate who used one Mackenzie-linked consulting firm, then known as Base Connect and now called ForthRight Strategy. Montana Democrats accused Zinke of facilitating a "political Ponzi scheme" with his connections to Mackenzie-linked firms during his 2014 congressional campaign, though the charges apparently gained little traction.

More recently, Rep. Will Hurd (R-Texas) — who was angered last year when the Virgin Islands GOP used his photo without his permission on fundraising solicitations — said in a statement to POLITICO that the Virgin Islands group and ForthRight "are preying on seniors in a disgusting attempt to enrich themselves."

Adav Noti, a former FEC associate general counsel who now works for the nonprofit watchdog Campaign Legal Center, said in an interview that he had dealt with the Virgin Islands group and Mackenzie as an FEC official, and in his opinion, "They are a scam-PAC."

"Scott Mackenzie has a number of scam-PACs," Noti said. "He was probably the first, or one of the first, with the idea of bilking people out of money through PACs. People are being defrauded, and that needs to stop."

The FEC is scheduled to decide Thursday whether to fine Mackenzie for less-serious discrepancies in campaign filings by two other PACs of which he's the treasurer, Freedom's Defense Fund and the Conservative Majority Fund.

None of the criticism has seemed to deter Zinke, who used part of a government-paid trip to the Virgin Islands in March to attend a VIGOP fundraiser, where — as POLITICO reported in early October — an invitation listed tickets costing as much as $5,000 a couple, and Zinke's schedule indicated that high-dollar donors had a chance to take photos with him. It was at least the third VIGOP event Zinke had attended there since 2015.

VIGOP, which the FEC classifies as a "non-party" PAC, directed more than a third of its spending during the 2016 election cycle to a handful of Washington-area consulting firms, including ForthRight and at least three other companies that share its address on 15th Street Northwest, according to campaign filings and other documents. Those firms also received more than $3.2 million during the same period from Zinke's congressional campaign, leadership PAC and a super PAC he founded before running for Congress, federal campaign records show.

Between the 2014 and 2016 elections, Base Connect had renamed itself ForthRight Strategy after a former executive pleaded guilty to child pornography charges. A number of the firm's clients left, but Zinke's campaign and his newly formed leadership PAC not only stayed with the firm but spent substantially more on it in the next election.

Zinke also publicly endorsed ForthRight's performance in his 2014 congressional race, offering a testimonial that was displayed on the firm's website until this month, when the watchdog group Campaign for Accountability filed an ethics complaint.

"Your results and personal commitment to Team Zinke were bar none!" the company quoted Zinke as saying on its website. "I greatly value the professional as well as the personal relationship we have developed over many years."

This praise came even though Zinke's campaign appears to have received less than it spent from its relationship with the firm.

ForthRight says it raised $1.9 million for Zinke's 2014 race by sending out 1.6 million pieces of mail, attracting nearly 44,000 new donors whose average contribution was $44. About $550,000 of that haul went to Zinke's campaign for "voter mail, radio ads, TV ads, get-out-the-vote activities and lawn signs," according to the firm's website. But that was less than the $608,000 that Zinke's campaign spent on postage and direct mail from Century Data Mailing Service, a firm located at the same 15th Street address as ForthRight, according to FEC records.

In the run-up to last year's election, Zinke's campaign and his leadership PAC, known as SEAL PAC, spent about $3 million combined on ForthRight Strategy, Direct Support Services and Legacy Lists — all of which operate out of the same office and list ForthRight CEO Kimberly Bellissimo among their executives. (Bellissimo did not respond to POLITICO's requests for comment.)

Special Operations for America, a super PAC that Zinke founded in 2012 before running for office, also paid firms at that address a total of about $1.8 million during the 2014 and 2016 campaign cycles.

Mackenzie is not listed on ForthRight's website or business filings but was long associated with the firm under its previous names, Base Connect and BMW Direct, both of which listed him as a staff member as far back as 2007.

Besides sharing an affinity for the same consultants as Mackenzie's VIGOP, Zinke's SEAL PAC has also followed a similar fundraising model: It raised two-thirds of its money from small donors in 2016, then steered only 4 percent of its spending to other campaigns, with almost all the rest going to operating expenses and overhead.

Typically, members of Congress use their leadership PACs to cover expenses that cannot be funded from their campaign accounts and to contribute to fellow politicians, using donations of up to $5,000 from lobbyists and other PACs. But SEAL PAC relied on donations of less than $200 for about two-thirds of the $3 million it collected during the 2016 cycle, according to a review of the donations. The group then spent more than $2.6 million on overhead and gave just $118,000 to other congressional campaign committees.

Relying heavily on small-dollar donations is one hallmark of the "scam PAC" play, said Brett Kappel, a partner at the law firm Akerman LLP who specializes in campaign finance, lobbying and government ethics.

"Unfortunately, they generally target the most vulnerable segment of the population with the least disposable income — retired people living on fixed incomes," said Kappel, who declined to discuss specific cases. "Frequently, these are elderly conservative voters who are upset with the direction of the country."

Lorraine Hutchinson, of Butler, Pa., told POLITICO that these elderly voters included her mother, who she noticed was repeatedly contributing to SEAL PAC and other organizations, though she didn't have the disposable income to spare. Hutchinson said Zinke's PAC was one of the slowest to cease soliciting money when she asked them to stop. At one point, Hutchinson resorted to posting a plea on SEAL PAC's Facebook page.

"It took a great deal of time and effort but I managed to get most of them to stop. The Seal PAC was one of the most persistent," Hutchinson told POLITICO in a Facebook message last week. "I am convinced that these groups knowingly take advantage of the vulnerable elderly and this is a widespread problem without any easy solutions."

Erickson told POLITICO in 2015 that groups that raise political donations without doing much actual politicking are "completely a drain" on the conservative movement, saying they threatened to sap the donors' enthusiasm while achieving no concrete results.

But Bellissimo, the ForthRight CEO, defended direct-mail fundraising in a 2014 post for The Daily Caller.

Donors who send checks in response to mail solicitations "are some of the most patriotic, conservative, generous, and sophisticated people on the planet. ... They are also 'movement' people," Bellissimo wrote. "They are willing to sacrifice their dollars on a principled conservative even when they know that candidate is an underdog."

Mackenzie has similarly defended his high operating costs, telling the FEC in response to West's complaint that "fundraising is expensive and getting more so every year."

Bellissimo's firm has played a crucial role in partnering with Mackenzie's Virgin Islands PAC: Several months before Mackenzie filed the VIGOP's initial paperwork with the FEC in December 2013, Virgin Islands Republican Party Chairman John Canegata signed a contract with Base Connect Vice President Timothy Webster making the firm the exclusive fundraiser for the PAC, according to a copy of the confidential document reviewed by POLITICO.

Some Republicans in the Virgin Islands objected to the use of their name in fundraising mailers urging voters to "Stop Hillary Clinton," and Canegata's involvement with Mackenzie has exacerbated divisions within the local party's governing body.

The anti-Clinton pieces, "at best, solicit donations under false pretenses," four members of the Virgin Islands Republican Territorial Committee wrote in a February 2015 internal report, a copy of which was obtained by POLITICO. The members reported that "not a single penny of the funds received through these solicitations have been used for any purpose identifiable to any effort to oppose the election of Hillary Clinton as president."

Bellissimo introduced Zinke to VIGOP in 2015, his first year in Congress, a source familiar with VIGOP's operations told POLITICO. Zinke, his wife Lola and Bellissimo flew to St. Thomas to attend a VIGOP event in November of that year. Photos the VIGOP members posted on Facebook show Zinke and Bellissimo mingling at the Caribbean venue alongside Canegata and Saul Anuzis, a Michigan-based GOP operative who helped raise money for VIGOP. Neither Anuzis nor Canegata responded to requests for comment.

In February 2016, Bellissimo posted a photo of Zinke speaking at the Hay-Adams hotel across from the White House and bragged that she had "the privilege of playing staffer for Congressman Zinke this afternoon." When a friend commented on the Facebook post, saying the then-House freshman should run for president, she replied: "Maybe someday.... Will you help me campaign for him?"

Zinke returned for another VIGOP event at the Ritz-Carlton in St. Thomas less than two weeks after the 2016 election, according to social media posts. Then came his appearance at the VIGOP fundraiser this past March — this time as a member of Trump's Cabinet.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump signs order to end 'crushing attack' of Obama climate legacy Back

By Alex Guillén | 03/28/2017 05:08 AM EDT

President Donald Trump ordered his administration to begin dismantling his predecessor's climate change policies on Tuesday with a sweeping directive to end what he called a "crushing attack" on the U.S. economy — by halting efforts to reduce the carbon pollution of electric utilities, oil and gas drillers and coal miners.

The executive order Trump signed represents his biggest blow yet to former President Barack Obama's climate legacy. But it does not go as far as some conservatives would like to dismantle the EPA's authority to regulate greenhouse gases, nor will it begin to separate the U.S. from a landmark international climate accord — two areas of intense disagreement within the administration.

"My administration is putting an end to the war on coal," Trump told an audience at the EPA headquarters signing, where he was joined by a group of coal miners whom he promised would be put back to work quickly.

"We're going to have clean coal. Really clean coal," Trump added. "Together we will create millions of good American jobs, also so many energy jobs, and really lead to unbelievable prosperity."

Democrats argue that Trump is ignoring the risks of climate change for the sake of rewarding supporters in the fossil fuel industry.

"Thanks to this executive order, our future is looking darker, it's looking dirtier and it's looking less prosperous," Sen. Tom Carper (D-Del) told a press conference. "Today Donald Trump is shirking our nation's responsibilities, disregarding clear science and undoing the significant progress that we've made to ensure we leave a better, more sustainable planet for generations to come."

After last week's embarrassing failure of Trump's attempt to repeal and replace Obama's health care law, the energy executive order offers the president a chance to refocus on another key campaign-trail promise: unleashing the American energy industry. The order comes on the heels of Trump's move to ease Obama's ambitious vehicle fuel efficiency requirements and his order to reverse EPA's controversial Waters of the U.S. rule. The president has also recently signed legislation undoing Obama-era rules on Appalachian coal mining and energy companies' payments to foreign governments.

Trump order calls for the EPA to rewrite tough rules that critics said make it virtually impossible to build a new coal-fired power plant, and he instructed the Interior Department to end Obama's moratorium on new coal mines on federal lands, among other steps.

Additionally, the president's "energy independence" executive order also repeals several Obama-era environmental directives aimed at reducing the federal government's own carbon footprint, and it directs agencies to ferret out any additional policies that "result in impediments" to U.S. energy production, a likely reference to restrictions on fracking and offshore drilling. The president also told federal regulators to stop using the "social cost of carbon," which attempts to quantify the effects of climate change, in economic analyses of future rules.

"There is every reason to believe that the federal government will no longer seek to punish American consumers and businesses for using the energy resources that fuel our economy," U.S. Chamber of Commerce President and CEO Thomas J. Donohue said in a statement welcoming the order.

But Trump has not ordered EPA to reconsider the underlying policy that lets it regulate carbon emissions — the 2009 "endangerment finding" in which it declared that greenhouse gas pollution threatens human health and welfare. Nor will he address whether the U.S. will stay in the 2015 Paris climate accord.

"We're happy with it so far and we look forward to the right decisions on Paris and endangerment, but I think those are still to be made and they're a ways down the road," said Myron Ebell, director of the Center for Energy and Environment at the Competitive Enterprise Institute and the former leader of Trump's EPA transition team.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt went on national TV earlier this month to declare that carbon dioxide is not "a primary contributor to the global warming that we see," a statement that is at odds with the conclusions of the vast majority of climate scientists, including those at his own agency. But Pruitt has not followed up on that statement with any effort to reverse the Obama-era endangerment finding — a factor that sources say contributed to last week's abrupt departure of a Trump appointee from the agency.

On Monday, a writer for Breitbart.com, the site previously run by White House strategist Steve Bannon, suggested that a failure to revoke the endangerment finding would be grounds for Pruitt to resign.

"If Scott Pruitt is not up to that task, then maybe it's about time he did the decent thing and handed over the reins to someone who is," wrote James Delingpole, a prominent climate skeptic.

The White House has not ruled out later revisiting the endangerment finding, which Trump promised on the campaign trail to review. But environmentalists hope the administration decides that would be too much trouble, given that the policy already survived judicial scrutiny, and that courts are unlikely to support revoking it given the overwhelming scientific data on climate change.

Trump has not nominated anyone to fill key leadership positions below Pruitt and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, leaving open the question of how quickly his order will yield any concrete results.

"It's going to be harder if you don't have those positions filled," said David Doniger, director of the climate and clean air program at the Natural Resources Defense Council. "Unless, actually, their intention is never to fill them and work through political operatives who are not accountable."

Trump's advisers are split over whether to withdraw from the Paris climate deal, which Obama joined with a pledge to reduce U.S. emissions at least 26 percent from 2005 levels by 2025. The U.S. would face no penalty for missing that target, but many conservatives nonetheless say Trump should abandon the agreement altogether, as he pledged to do during the campaign.

But more moderate advisers, including Trump's daughter Ivanka and his son-in-law Jared Kushner, fear that pulling out would damage relations with key U.S. allies. Administration officials are now considering a middle-ground approach: Stay in the deal in exchange for more international support for technologies to reduce emissions from fossil fuels.

The order was also silent on a carbon tax, another issue that has become a flashpoint in disputes between moderates and hardliners in the White House.

Despite the lofty rhetoric coming out of the White House, Tuesday's order will have relatively little immediate effect.

It will take EPA years to rewrite its Clean Power Plan and accompanying rules on future power plants — both of which courts already had frozen while lawsuits play out.

The Trump administration plans to ask federal courts to suspend lawsuits over the EPA climate regulations and send the rules back to the agency to be rewritten or withdrawn. But the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, which heard arguments on the Clean Power Plan six months ago, does not have to go along. The appeals court judges could rule any day on the Clean Power Plan, and a separate D.C. Circuit panel has scheduled oral arguments on the future plant rule for April 17.

If EPA will not defend the regulation, environmentalists and states like California and New York have indicated they will step up and do so. And the ultimate fate of EPA's climate authority likely will eventually be decided by the Supreme Court, which ruled in 2007 that the agency had to regulate greenhouse gases if they endanger public health — but did not say how.

Trump's plans for the social cost of carbon are less clear.

The Obama administration estimated that each ton of carbon dioxide imposes $36 in costs to society to evaluate its climate rules. But Republicans and fossil energy supporters argued it arrived at that figure by counting global benefits while specifying only domestic costs — and they complain the metric was not subjected to a traditional notice-and-comment period before it was employed.

Critics also said the Obama administration used the social cost of carbon to impose stricter rules at EPA, the Energy Department and elsewhere that would be too costly to justify otherwise. Many environmentalists, meanwhile, complained that the amount was too low.

Whether Trump significantly lowers the cost of carbon or abolishes it altogether, the change could have a serious impact on energy regulations that will play out over a period of years. And it remains unclear how the courts might react. Federal judges have upheld agencies' use of the metric before, but some may be inclined to give deference to the Trump administration over what amounts to a highly technical calculation.

Meanwhile, Trump's order will also lead to the resumption of federal coal leasing. But major coal companies are hardly champing at the bit to sign new leases on federal land, although the Bureau of Land Management could make new tracts available relatively quickly. For example, a spokesman for Peabody Energy, which mines more U.S. coal than anyone else, told Bloomberg that the company will not need a new lease in Wyoming's Powder River Basin for "approximately a decade."

The Obama administration imposed a moratorium in February 2016 as part of a three-year review of the federal coal program. That followed reports from the Government Accountability Office, Interior's inspector general and a coalition of environmentalists and government spending watchdogs that concluded Interior was undervaluing coal on public lands.

Zinke hinted earlier this month that he will continue the underlying review, despite lifting the moratorium, to ensure taxpayers get the full value of coal being sold off of federal lands.

It's not clear that the moratorium cost any jobs, particularly since most coal mining is happening on private rather than public lands. The National Mining Association has not calculated the costs of the moratorium so far, but the group noted that coal mines on federal lands employ 14,000 miners.

Anthony Adragna and Esther Whieldon contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump to roll back climate-focused flood standard Back

By Annie Snider | 08/15/2017 12:41 PM EDT

President Donald Trump will roll back a flood standard designed to protect federal investments from stronger storms as part of an executive order set to be signed this afternoon, according to a White House source.

The Federal Flood Risk Management Standard was established under an executive order issued by President Barack Obama in 2015. It requires that new federally funded projects — from government buildings like Veterans Administrations hospitals to bridges and schools funded by federal grants — be built to withstand the stronger storms and additional flooding projected to occur as the climate changes. It does not apply to the National Flood Insurance Program.

The Obama administration's standard offers multiple options for achieving greater flood protection, but generally requires construction to withstand a 500-year storm. The previous standard, on the books for more than four decades, required construction to take place outside of the 100-year floodplain. The new standard has not actually taken effect yet; each federal agency is tasked with developing its own regulation for implementing the standard, and none have yet been finalized.

Industry groups objected to the standard, arguing it was developed behind closed doors and could greatly increase costs.

Environmental groups have objected to efforts to repeal the standard.

"Ninety percent of all natural disasters in the United States involve flooding. These events claim lives and strain the capacity of government agencies and local communities to adequately respond and provide relief," Laura Lightbody with the Pew Charitable Trusts said in a statement.

WHAT'S NEXT: Trump is slated to sign an executive order on infrastructure containing the roll back of the Federal Flood Risk Management standard at 3 p.m. today.

To view online click here.

Back

PJM CEO: Perry grid plan 'contrary to law' Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/23/2017 02:38 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry's proposal to support coal and nuclear power generation is unworkable and may be contrary to law if enacted, according to Andy Ott, CEO of PJM Interconnection.

"Some of the concerns raised by DOE we certainly understand [and] agree with a need for action. However, the DOE's proposed remedy is simply unworkable," Ott told reporters on a conference call this afternoon.

He argued that Perry's plan flew in the face of FERC's core statute and the agency's practice of treating energy sources fairly.

"It's not a uniform proposal across the nation. It seems to be a proposal that's targeted at specific resources, which we think is discriminatory and inconsistent with the Federal Power Act," Ott said. "We believe that it's contrary to law and ... [won't] really solve any problems."

The proposal was discriminatory, he said, because in boosting coal and nuclear power, the rule would create a special group of power sources that are "providing very similar or the same services" to the grid. In addition, Perry's plan was tweaked after its release but before its official publication to stipulate that the rule would apply to power markets that also had capacity markets.

"Certainly, there are generators in non-RTO areas and certainly generators in areas without capacity markets," Ott said. "The point is, why would they be compensated any differently?"

He added: "I don't know how you incorporate such a proposal without having a significant detrimental impact on markets. "

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC is accepting initial comments on the DOE proposal through the end of today.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by Chevron: Zinke's mixing politics with business draws scrutiny — Report: Perry took charter flight last week — Federal judge reinstates parts of methane waste rule
Date: Thursday, October 05, 2017 5:43:55 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/05/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Ben Lefebvre and Darius Dixon

Morning Energy will not publish on Monday Oct. 9. Our next Morning Energy newsletter will publish on Tuesday Oct. 10. Please continue to follow PRO Energy issues here.

MIXING PUBLIC LANDS AND POLITICS: Over the course of his first months in office, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has met with big donors or political groups more than a half-dozen times while on official travel, raising questions about the appropriateness of those habits even if they don't cross any legal red lines, Pro's Ben Lefebvre and Esther Whieldon report. GOP donors shelled out up to $5,000 per couple for a photo with him during a nearly two-hour Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser during a stop on an official trip related to the Interior Department's role overseeing the U.S. territory. Tickets for the fundraiser, which was attended by local party members and elected officials, ranged from $75 per person to as much as $5,000 per couple.

Though ethics watchdogs said Zinke's appearance was legal, they said attending a fundraiser during his first month as secretary is not in line with past administrations' conduct. "It happens on occasion with other Cabinet secretaries, perhaps even a little more often as you get near the election, but it is not a very common practice for Cabinet members to be hopping around from campaign event to campaign event like we're seeing with Zinke," said Craig Holman, government affairs specialist for government watchdog Public Citizen. An Interior spokeswoman said Zinke always follows the law but declined to answer specific questions about his appearance at the Virgin Islands fundraiser, nor would say if he planned to continue raising funds.

Zinke's not alone: Obama administration officials had their own struggles mixing official business with politics. A watchdog group requested a probe of whether then-Secretary Ken Salazar had violated the Hatch Act while taking an Obama re-election campaign RV tour of Colorado. The Office of Special Counsel found HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius violated the Hatch Act in 2012, saying she had made "extemporaneous partisan remarks" in North Carolina. Former Interior chief Sally Jewell said she thought Zinke was within his rights, noting she once appeared at a fundraiser for Democratic Sen. Maria Cantwell that she paid her own way to. "If he had legitimate business while he's on the island, to do a political thing on the side I don't think that is that unusual," Jewell said.

But some see Zinke's activity as trying to maintain political contacts so can keep his options available for what to do after he leaves the Trump administration. "I think he's definitely got political aspirations, that that's one of the reasons why he is where he is at right now," said Land Tawney, executive director of Backcountry Hunters and Anglers. "You don't go from being a Montana legislator to a first-term congressman to [Interior] secretary without having ambition." He's widely seen an attractive candidate for Montana's open-seat governor's race in 2020.

Quotes that keep coming back to ME: "Put another way, just because something is legal doesn't make it right," OMB director Mick Mulvaney wrote last week. "So much of what happens around here is based on appearances. If it just appears wrong, don't do it," Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski told reporters last week.

REPORT: PERRY TOOK CHARTER TOO — LAST WEEK: Energy Secretary Rick Perry took a chartered flight last week from Hazleton Regional Airport in Pennsylvania to the Greater Portsmouth Regional Airport in Ohio one day before HHS Secretary Tom Price resigned last week, Reuters reports, citing "PMH Aviation, the company that runs the Portsmouth airport." Information about the cost of the flight were not available and the agency did not respond to requests for comment. PMH declined to confirm the flight when contacted by ME Wednesday night. But FlightAware has details of a Sept. 28 trip that appears to match Perry's itinerary that day; his tour of a uranium facility started at 8:30 the following morning. After the tour, Perry tweeted that he was headed to the Cincinnati/Northern Kentucky International Airport.

SPEAKING OF TRAVEL: The Western Values Project told ME it plans to file a complaint in federal court today complaining Interior has not responded to FOIA requests it filed in June asking the extent that Zinke's wife has accompanied him on official work business. Lola Zinke has accompanied her husband on some official trips, either ceremonial events to which she had been officially invited or on trips on which she has paid her way, Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift told ME. And CNN reports Interior's inspector general expanded its existing probe on Zinke's non-commercial travel to also include a summer visit to the Vegas Golden Knights hockey team.

WELCOME TO THURSDAY EVERYBODY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and DOE's Diane Meck was first up to identify Rep. Sala Burton as the lawmaker Nancy Pelosi replaced in Congress. For today: How many — and which — members of Congress replaced their spouses in their seats? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

"I DID NOT SIGN UP TO GO BLOW UP THE MARKETS": Recently minted FERC Commissioner Robert Powelson didn't hold back Wednesday making it clear that he's not going to be a rubber stamp on the Energy Department's grid pricing proposal, and warned against politicizing FERC. According to SNL, the audience gathered for a meeting of the Organization of PJM States broke into a standing ovation when the former longtime Pennsylvania regulator declared, "We will not destroy the marketplace." Powelson, a Republican, reportedly said he wouldn't support a rule that undoes the power markets FERC oversees. "When that happens, we're done. I'm done; I don't need this job," he said, according to SNL. "FERC does not do politics. We don't do energy politics," he also said. "I did not sign up to go blow up the markets."

Something to keep in mind: Organization of PJM States includes state regulators spanning Illinois to New Jersey and down to North Carolina, and its meetings include not only officials from PJM, the nation's largest power market, but consumer counsels from those states and plenty of power companies. PJM is also the market that would be the most affected by DOE's proposed rule. This is Powelson's crowd.

We need lots of information: Late Wednesday, FERC posted 53 questions and other requests for information as it dives into DOE controversial resiliency pricing proposal, Pro's Darius

Dixon reports. The six-page document splits those questions into categories looking for feedback on rates, the 90-day on-site fuel requirement envisioned by DOE, and how pricing changes would be implemented, among other issues.

METHANE RULE LIVES — FOR NOW: A federal court in California ruled Wednesday that BLM unlawfully postponed key compliance dates for a methane waste rule in June, effectively putting the rule back on the books for now. Pro's Alex Guillén reports. Magistrate Judge Elizabeth Laporte said the agency was too late to delay components of the regulation because its effective date had already passed and therefore should have gone through a round of notice-and-comment rulemaking before suspending any part of the rule. Her decision came the same day Interior proposed an 18-month delay of the methane waste rule as it works to rewrite it. BLM will accept comments on that proposal for 30 days.

** A message from Chevron: When an endangered butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery, we protected the habitat and still plant the only thing they eat—buckwheat. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2fVfOTm> **

EPA STRATEGIC PLAN DROPS CLIMATE FOCUS: EPA's priorities for the next four years would no longer make reference to climate change or rules to reduce carbon emissions under a draft strategic plan, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. The document, which went out to EPA employees Wednesday, instead defines the agency's "core mission" as ensuring clean air, water and land, calls for more "cooperative federalism" and touts the "rule of law and process." Accompanying graphic that went to employees here.

DEMOCRATS OFFERING CLIMATE METRIC BILL: Led by Sen. Michael Bennet, eight Senate Democrats today are introducing a bill — the Transparent Pollution Accounting Act — that would standardize the metric used across the federal government to quantify the cost of climate pollution. The Trump administration suspended use of the existing social cost of carbon earlier this year, prompting the need for a codified value, the Democrats argue.

WATCH THAT WRAP UP TODAY: Murkowski wants to have Kevin McIntyre, Trump's pick to chair FERC, and Rich Glick, who serves as general counsel to energy committee Democrats, onto the commission before the chamber adjourns for the Columbus Day recess, Pro's Darius Dixon reports.

Barrasso: Baran's renom needs a big offset: If Democrats want to secure a full five-year term for Nuclear Regulatory Commission member Jeff Baran, they're going to have to agree to "a fairly significant, robust [nomination] package for me to agree to allow him through," Sen. John Barrasso told ME. Democrats have insisted that Baran, a former aide to ex-Rep. Henry Waxman who has been on the commission since 2014, get a new term alongside the confirmations of GOP commission nominees Annie Caputo and David Wright, who were approved by EPW in July.

Barrasso's comments suggest that Democratic support for Caputo and Wright likely isn't enough to get him to go along with Baran, especially considering his frustration with objections to EPA enforcement nominee Susan Bodine. Still, there's not much to hang over the Democrats in the near term: It's a Republican administration with plenty of EPA nominees they don't like, and Baran's seat doesn't expire until June.

ADMINISTRATION SENDS OVER DISASTER FUNDING REQUEST: Officials formally sent over a request for nearly $30 billion in disaster relief Wednesday that included

$12.8 billion for FEMA's disaster relief fund, $16 billion for the National Flood Insurance Program and $576.5 million for the forest service's firefighting fund, Pro Budget and Appropriations Brief's Sarah Ferris reports. That came as San Juan's mayor blasted Trump on Wednesday as the "miscommunicator in chief" and called his visit to the island "insulting."

Murkowski's focused on immediate relief: Murkowski expressed concern about the "slow" federal response to Hurricane Maria and said building a more resilient Puerto Rican grid was secondary to getting the lights back on. "When you think about the extent of a disaster like this, we all want to say, 'Okay, let's improve, let's improve the grid here, let's build the Puerto Rican grid of the future,' but first and foremost—we've just gotta try and clean up," she told reporters. An aide said Murkowski planned to visit the island with other lawmakers next week but that those details are still being finalized.

PHMSA, NOAA PICKS ADVANCE: The Senate Commerce Committee advanced the nominations of Howard Elliott to run PHMSA and Timothy Gallaudet to be No. 2 at NOAA by voice vote Wednesday. Add them to the ever-increasing backlog of nominees waiting for a Senate floor vote.

DEMOCRATS SEEK PROBE OF PRUITT'S SPENDING: Two senior House Transportation Democrats — Peter DeFazio and Grace Napolitano — asked EPA's inspector general in a letter to probe "wasteful" spending by Pruitt on round-the-clock security and a $25,000 soundproof phone booth. "This culture, which is reflected in travel and lifestyle choices from the president on down, seems to embolden senior, politically appointed officials of the Trump administration to undertake lavish spending of taxpayer dollars for their sole and personal benefit, and not for the benefit of the Americans paying the tab," they write.

Udall considering private plane rider: Sen. Tom Udall, top Democrat on Appropriations subcommittee responsible for EPA spending, told ME he was "exploring" some sort of rider barring officials from private plane travel. "What I end up seeing is there's some very wasteful things going on," he said.

SENIOR E&C MEMBER MURPHY TO RETIRE: Rep. Tim Murphy, who chairs the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Oversight, announced late Wednesday he'll retire at the end of his current term, POLITICO's Rachael Bade, Elena Schneider and John Bresnahan report. The staunchly pro-life Murphy allegedly suggested a mistress get an abortion.

MINE SAFETY PICK ACKNOWLEDGES FAULTS: David Zatezalo, Trump's mine safety pick, told a Senate panel Wednesday he was "not proud of the fact" the coal company Rhino Resources he used to run got notices of safety violations, Pro Labor's Ian Kullgren reports. He also said he'd have no trouble working with career staff that issued the notices in 2010 and 2011.

ZINKE HEADS TO FLORIDA: Today, the Interior secretary will get a briefing on "infrastructure upgrades and Everglades restoration at Lake Okeechobee." He'll also visit National Park Service sites Friday impacted by recent hurricanes.

CONSERVATIVES FOR CLEAN ENERGY: Hundreds are expected to gather today at the Hyatt Regency for the Conservative Clean Energy Summit. Multiple lawmakers are expected to address the gathering, including Sens. Mike Rounds, Rob Portman and Lindsey Graham, as well as Rep. Scott W. Taylor. More information here.

Milestone for House climate caucus: There are now 60 members of the House Climate Solutions Caucus with the additions of Reps. Pete Aguilar and Mimi Walters.

PERRY AIDE ADDS MORE CLIENTS: Jeff Miller, a former adviser to Energy Secretary Rick Perry during his second presidential run, has signed three new clients — including Pacific Gas and Electric, the massive California utility. Miller reported lobbying DOE in the second quarter on behalf of six clients, including AECOM, Lucid Motors (as a subcontractor to Hobart Hallaway & Quayle), the Nuclear Energy Institute, Occidental Petroleum, Southern Company and Valero Energy. He's signed 15 clients since he started lobbying in Washington this year and Perry became DOE chief (h/t POLITICO Influence).

END OF A (SHORT) ERA: The Rogue EPA Twitter account is going on hiatus, it announced Wednesday. "We started this account to be sure the public knew what was happening at EPA. Now, the world sees...It may be time to take a step back and let others carry the torch for a while. Those of us at the helm, here, are tired," a couple of tweets said.

QUICK HITS

— Putin Says He'd Drive a Tesla. Bloomberg.

— Interior Department whistleblower resigns, calling Ryan Zinke's leadership a failure. Washington Post.

— Contrary To Original Plan, Atlantic Coast Pipeline May Extend Beyond North Carolina. WUNC.

— Former AG Sorrell Skips Deposition, Sparks War of Words. Seven Days.

— Here's the leaked anti-leak training email sent to DOE staff. Wired.

— Putin says oil cut deal with OPEC could last to end of 2018. CNBC.

— Climate change could nearly triple airplane turbulence in the next decades, study says. ABC News.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:30 a.m. — CSIS discussion on the future of electrification, Center for Strategic & International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Ave NW

9:30 a.m. — Sens. Burr and Cantwell hold press conference on Land and Water Conservation Fund, Senate Swamp

9:30 a.m. — Lawmakers hold press conference to discuss the wildfire threat in the West and potential legislative fixes, HVC 110 Studio B

10:00 a.m. — "Powering America: Consumer-Oriented Perspectives on Improving the Nation's Electricity Markets," House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee, Rayburn 2123

12:00 p.m. — "The Growing Role of Liquefied Natural Gas in Latin America," Atlantic Council, 1030 15th ST NW, 12th Floor

12:30 p.m. — "How Agencies Reverse Policy: Stays, Remands, and Reconsideration," Environmental Law Institute, 1101 K Street, NW, President's Room

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

** A message from Chevron: This is a story about DOERS, butterflies, and buckwheat. In '75, the endangered El Segundo Blue butterfly was found near a Chevron refinery. We protected the habitat and planted the only thing they eat—buckwheat. We're still planting and keeping an eye on our littlest neighbor. Watch the video: <http://politi.co/2fVfOTm> **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/zincke-mixing-politics-with-business-draws-scrutiny-024920>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Interior secretary draws flak for mixing politics, official travel Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Esther Whieldon | 10/04/2017 07:31 PM EDT

Republican donors paid up to $5,000 per couple for a photo with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke at a fundraiser held during a taxpayer-funded trip to the U.S. Virgin Islands, according to documents reviewed by POLITICO — raising questions about his habit of mixing official government business with political activism.

The new details about Zinke's March trip to the Caribbean, including the previously undisclosed invitation to the Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser, emerged after weeks of scrutiny of the former Montana GOP congressman's travels. The nearly two-hour event was one of more than a half-dozen times Zinke has met with big donors or political groups while on department-paid trips, Interior travel records and other documents show.

Ethics watchdogs say Zinke is combining politics with his Interior duties so frequently that he risks tripping over the prohibitions against using government resources for partisan activity, even though his appearance at the Virgin Islands event seems to have been legal. Democrats have also seized on the issue, including 26 House members who wrote in a letter Tuesday that Zinke's travels "give the appearance that you are mixing political gatherings and personal destinations with official business."

Zinke has said all his actions have obeyed the law, dismissing concerns about his travel as "a little B.S."

But some ethics advocates say Zinke's attendance at a fundraiser during his first month as secretary is not in line with past administrations' conduct, even if he crossed no legal red lines.

"It happens on occasion with other Cabinet secretaries, perhaps even a little more often as you get near the election, but it is not a very common practice for Cabinet members to be hopping around from campaign event to campaign event like we're seeing with Zinke," said Craig Holman, government affairs specialist for government watchdog Public Citizen.

The secretary is already under investigation by his department's inspector general over his use of taxpayer-funded private planes for some of the trips, and the Justice Department's Office of Special Counsel is looking into an activist group's allegations that he violated the Hatch Act, the law limiting political activism by federal employees. The White House has cracked down on Cabinet members' travel habits following former HHS Secretary Tom Price's resignation on Friday, which occurred after POLITICO reported on his own expensive flights.

Zinke visited the Virgin Islands from March 30 to April 1 on an official trip related to the Interior Department's role overseeing the U.S. territory. On his first day, following a "veterans meet and greet" and a reception with Gov. Kenneth Mapp, he appeared in his personal capacity at a March fundraiser for the local Republican Party at the patio bar of the Club Comanche Hotel St. Croix, department records show.

Tickets for the fundraiser ranged from $75 per person to as much as $5,000 per couple to be an event "Patron," according to Zinke's official calendar and a copy of the invitation. Patrons and members of the host committee, who paid $1,500 per couple, could get a photo with Zinke at the start of the event, which was attended by local party members and elected officials.

The following day, Zinke took a $3,150 flight on a private plane, paid for by the department, from St. Croix to official functions on St. Thomas and returned later that evening. Interior Department officials said there was no other way to accommodate his schedule, which included official events on both islands commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Dutch government transferring control of the islands to the United States.

Zinke is allowed to engage in partisan political activity in a "purely personal (not official) capacity," so long as he does not use government resources, according to Interior Department guidelines on the Hatch Act and other federal laws. The invitation to the GOP fundraiser did not identify Zinke by his official title and included a disclaimer that the money is being solicited by the local party and "not by any federal official."

All told, Zinke has spent around $20,000 for three charter flights as secretary, nowhere near the $1 million tab Price racked up on non-commercial trips. But he has on numerous occasions attended political receptions, spoken to influential conservative groups or appeared alongside past campaign donors during trips he takes outside of Washington, D.C., for official department business.

In one instance, Zinke gave a motivational speech for a professional hockey team owned by a major campaign contributor that he said was official business — and which required him to charter a $12,000 flight to Montana for an appearance at the Western Governors Association the next day.

In another case, during a speech to the Western Conservative Summit in Denver, he was introduced via a recorded voice as the Interior secretary and Zinke proceeded to talk about the agency's priorities. The summit was organized by the Centennial Institute, which bills itself as Colorado Christian University's think tank and is a part of the State Policy Network of organizations that collectively push for conservative state-level legislation.

An Interior spokeswoman said Zinke always follows the law but declined to answer specific questions about his appearance at the Virgin Islands fundraiser, nor say whether he would keep raising political money. The agency also has yet to post Zinke's trip expenses involving any of the political events.

"The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources," spokeswoman Heather Swift said in a statement.

Swift did not respond to questions about whether the department had gotten reimbursement for the political portion of Zinke's three-day Virgin Islands trip, as the head of one watchdog group says it should have.

"Some of this travel is clearly political and that part of the travel should have been paid for by the RNC, NRCC, state political parties, a campaign committee or Zinke personally," said Daniel Stevens, executive director of the Campaign for Accountability.

No payments to the department are listed in the Virgin Islands Republican Party's FEC records.

Zinke is not the first Interior secretary, or Cabinet member, to have his activities questioned.

In 2012, a watchdog group called Cause of Action urged the Office of Special Counsel to investigate whether President Barack Obama's then-Secretary Ken Salazar had violated the Hatch Act while taking an Obama reelection campaign RV tour of Colorado with a couple of lawmakers and the state lieutenant governor. Local organizers of one stop on that tour had billed Salazar on its online events calendar as attending the political rally in his official role. OSC would not say whether its investigation uncovered any problems, but travel records Interior has posted show that one of Salazar's aides had told the tour's coordinator the schedule "should not refer to (Salazar as) 'secretary.'" Salazar did not respond to a request for comment.

A former Salazar aide, who was not authorized to speak on the record, said the Obama administration generally tried to avoid scheduling political events that coincided with official travel because it was difficult to divvy up what expenses should be reimbursed by a campaign.

The special counsel's office found Obama HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius in violation of the Hatch Act in 2012, saying she had made "extemporaneous partisan remarks" by endorsing a candidate for North Carolina governor during a speech she made in her official capacity. Sebelius tried to scrub the violation by reclassifying the appearance as political and reimbursing the Treasury Department for costs associated with the trip.

Sally Jewell, who was Interior secretary during Obama's second term, said Zinke was within his rights to appear at the fundraiser in the Virgin Islands. Jewell said she once appeared at a fundraiser for Democratic Sen. Maria Cantwell while in Obama's Cabinet, though she paid her own way to Washington state and was not identified by her official title.

"If he had legitimate business while he's on the island, to do a political thing on the side, I don't think that is that unusual," Jewell said in an interview.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt canceled his scheduled appearance at a fundraiser for the Oklahoma Republican Party in April because an invitation had identified him by his official title and said he would discuss his work at the agency. EPA ethics officials said he would have been cleared to attend the event if not for that language on the invitation.

Watchdog groups say Zinke's behavior fits a pattern for Trump's Cabinet.

"These government resources have been abused by this administration," said Virginia Canter, an executive branch ethics counsel for Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington who previously worked as an ethics official for Presidents George H.W. Bush, George W. Bush and Obama. "To the extent that some of that supports their political ambitions is inconsistent with the intent of this authority."

The Campaign for Accountability called on Interior's inspector general and the Office of Special Counsel to investigate whether Zinke violated the Hatch Act or department ethics rules with his speech to the hockey team, which the group said appeared to be a favor for a donor. Interior's IG office announced its investigation earlier this week, and OSC told the Campaign for Accountability that it was looking into the group's complaint, according to an email shared with POLITICO. The OSC declined to comment.

Reps. Raúl Grijalva (D-Ariz.) and Donald McEachin (D-Va.) have asked Interior's IG to also look into any trips on which the secretary was accompanied by his wife, Lola Zinke, who is chairing the campaign of Montana Republican Troy Downing, a candidate to unseat Democratic Sen. Jon Tester next year. Swift said Lola Zinke was not in the Virgin Islands and has paid her own way whenever she has traveled with her husband on official trips.

Many who know him see Zinke's travels as an attempt to keep in touch with political contacts as he contemplates what he will do after leaving the Trump administration. Back home, the 55-year-old former Montana congressman is seen as an attractive candidate for the open-seat governor's race in 2020, when Democratic Gov. Steve Bullock will have to step down because of term limits.

"I think he's definitely got political aspirations, that's one of the reasons why he is where he is at right now," said Land Tawney, executive director of Backcountry Hunters and Anglers, a Montana-based sportsman group that supported Zinke's bid for Interior secretary. "You don't go from being a Montana legislator to a first-term congressman to [Interior] secretary without having ambition."

The Virgin Islands trip was Zinke's first interaction with big donors or influential conservative groups during his travel as Interior secretary.

A weeklong trip in May that took Zinke through Montana, Utah and California also offered a chance to squeeze in some political events.

Zinke delivered the keynote speech at the RNC spring meeting on May 11 in Coronado, Calif. Zinke had flown to California the previous night, after several days touring monuments in Utah, and the RNC speech was his only event in the state aside from a meeting earlier that afternoon with Rep. Amata Radewagen, the Republican delegate from American Samoa, and members of the American Tunaboat Association.

The next day, Zinke flew back to Montana where he joined Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.) and Vice President Mike Pence to tour a coal mine on the Crow Indian reservation operated by the Westmoreland Coal Co.

The trip offered Zinke and Pence an opportunity to tout the Trump administration's work to promote new coal mining on federal lands — and it allowed them to make a brief detour to promote Zinke's congressional replacement. That Friday night, Zinke, Pence and Daines attended a political rally for GOP candidate Greg Gianforte, and Zinke attended a get-out-the vote event for the Montana GOP the next day.

Zinke apparently paid for his return trip to Washington out of his own pocket — it was marked "personal travel" on his calendar, a designation not applied to the other flights on that trip.

Gianforte, whose wife is a major political donor in Montana, won the May 25 special election to take over Zinke's House seat.

Greg and Susan Gianforte donated more than $10,000 to Zinke's 2016 congressional campaign and another $10,000 to joint Zinke-Daines PAC, according to federal records. The couple donated $5,000 for his earlier run for Congress.

Zinke met with big influencers and donors in June as well.

On June 25, he flew from D.C. to Reno, Nev., where his only scheduled event was a meeting of the Rule of Law Defense Fund, a group of Republican attorneys general that has been linked to the Koch brothers, where he spoke and took questions for about 30 minutes, according to his schedule.

After his remarks, he sat at a dinner table with Montana's attorney general, the government relations specialist for the Venetian Resort Hotel Casino and Las Vegas Sands, and Koch Industries lobbyist Allen Richardson, Interior documents show.

The next day, Zinke flew to Las Vegas for an event on public lands in nearby Pahrump, Nev., and a speech that night to the National Hockey League's Vegas Golden Knights. Bill Foley, the team owner and chairman of Fidelity, introduced Zinke. Foley donated $7,800 to Zinke's 2014 campaign, while employees and PACs associated with Fidelity and related companies gave another $180,000. Interior officials said the speech to the NHL team was part of Zinke's official duties, and they pointed to scheduling conflicts it created to justify his use of a $12,000 private plane to get to a Western Governors Association meeting in Montana the next day.

In July, Zinke spoke to several conservative groups in Colorado during a three-day trip that also included tours of Interior Department facilities in the state. He flew into Denver on July 20 so he could appear that evening at a closed-door reception for the American Legislative Exchange Council, a group of conservative state legislators, lobbyists and industry groups that has pushed for more state control over federal lands.

And over the next two days, he was a featured speaker at a Republican committee roundtable and attended the Western Conservative Summit in Denver.

Eric Wolff contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Report: Sebelius violated Hatch Act Back

By Jennifer Haberkorn | 09/12/2012 03:13 PM EDT

HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius violated the Hatch Act, which prohibits certain political activity, when she made "extemporaneous partisan remarks" during a speech in her official capacity earlier this year, the U.S. Office of Special Counsel said Wednesday.

The office sent an official report outlining the rare Hatch Act violation and Sebelius's response to President Barack Obama.

The special counsel's office said it "found no evidence that Secretary Sebelius made any other political statements in her official capacity."

During a speech to the Human Rights Campaign Gala in North Carolina in February, Sebelius said North Carolina Lt. Gov. Walter Dalton "needs to be the next governor of North Carolina." She also outlined the Obama administration's accomplishments so far and said, "One of the imperatives is to make sure that we not only come together here in Charlotte to present the nomination to the president, but we make sure that in November he continues to be president for another four years."

The Office of Special Counsel said she made the political remarks in her capacity as a federal employee and thus violated the Hatch Act. If Sebelius had made those remarks in her personal capacity, they would have been acceptable.

After that appearance, Sebelius had the event reclassified from official to political, and done in her personal capacity, in an attempt to avoid a Hatch Act violation. She and HHS also reimbursed the Treasury Department for all the costs associated with the trip. At least some of the cost was picked by the Democratic National Committee, according to the OSC.

But the OSC said the reclassification doesn't mean the violation didn't occur, particularly because the gala was advertised using Sebelius's HHS title.

"OSC concluded that Secretary Sebelius violated the Hatch Act by making extemporaneous political remarks," OSC Special Counsel Carolyn N. Lerner wrote in a letter to President Barack Obama. "As the upcoming elections approach, this report offers an opportunity to remind federal employees of the complex Hatch Act restrictions."

Hatch Act violations against sitting Cabinet secretaries are relatively rare.

"This particular type of violation, where you have a Cabinet secretary speaking at an event, is pretty uncommon," said Scott Coffina, a former associate counsel in President George W. Bush's White House and a partner at Drinker Biddle & Reath. He said there are "a lot of very garden-variety violations," citing federal employees who forward political emails or put up campaign photos.

Republicans immediately criticized Sebelius, and conservative groups called for her dismissal.

But Sebelius told the OSC that the endorsements of Obama and the government were unscripted and a "mistake." OSC quoted her as saying that she "got a little caught up in the notion that the gains which had been made would clearly not continue without the president's reelection."

Sebelius, in her response, said the ruling was "somewhat unfair" and the use of her title amounted to a "technical and minor" violation. She said that OSC should have concluded that the violation was "corrected" when the event was reclassified as political.

OSC said that by reimbursing the Treasury, she didn't violate rules prohibiting government-funded political events, but it didn't correct the prohibition on making political statements in an official role.

"It is my understanding that the Hatch Act permits Cabinet members to engage in political activities, without regard to location and duty hours, due to the 24-hour nature of our jobs," Sebelius wrote. "I believe that you should have concluded that the consequence of my going 'off script' at an official event was to change the nature of my appearance for cost reimbursement purposes only.

"Keeping the roles straight can be a difficult task, particularly on mixed trips that involve both campaign and official stops on the same day," Sebelius wrote.

Republicans were quick to pounce on Sebelius's violation.

"That the secretary violated federal law in this manner is disturbing, but hardly a surprise," said Antonia Ferrier, spokeswoman for Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). (The law was named after a different Sen. Hatch: Sen. Carl Hatch of New Mexico.)

"Since almost day one, this administration has had a singular focus on politicking — not governing — that's borne out by the secretary ignoring a strict prohibition on electioneering while working for federal taxpayers," Ferrier said.

House Oversight Committee Chairman Darrell Issa said Obama should carefully consider how to respond to the report.

"As he decides the appropriate consequences for Secretary Sebelius, the president should consider the important leadership role of Cabinet secretaries and the example they must set for the entire executive branch," he said in a statement.

Conservative advocacy groups said the violation warranted her departure.

"This is the most high-profile example of a Hatch Act violation since the act was passed in 1939," said Dan Epstein, executive director of Cause of Action. "Never before has a member of the president's Cabinet been found to have committed a Hatch Act violation. President Obama should immediately fire HHS Secretary Sebelius for her violation of federal law."

Maureen Ferguson and Ashley McGuire of The Catholic Association said most of Sebelius's actions "have advanced the president's political interests" throughout her tenure. "We already know she is willing to violate the First Amendment rights of Americans for political purposes, so why should we be surprised when she bends other laws to score political points?"

This article first appeared on POLITICO Pro at 3:10 p.m. on September 12, 2012.

To view online click here.

Back

White House to Cabinet: No private air travel without Kelly's approval Back

By Matthew Nussbaum | 09/29/2017 06:57 PM EDT

The White House cracked down on Cabinet officials' use of private planes Friday, telling them chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft," after Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price resigned over his own taxpayer-funded flights.

Mick Mulvaney, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, sent out the memo soon after Price's resignation was made public. His exit came after a series of POLITICO reports about his frequent use of private planes to conduct government — and sometimes personal — business.

"In light of recent events, the President has asked me to remind the heads of all executive departments and agencies of Administration policies on travel," Mulvaney wrote.

He reminded the department and agency heads that, by regulation, "Government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft should not be used for travel by Government employees except with specific justification."

"However, beyond the law and formal policy, departments and agencies should recognize that we are public servants," Mulvaney wrote. "Every penny we spend comes from the taxpayer. We thus owe it to the taxpayer to work as hard managing that money wisely as the taxpayer must do to earn it in the first place."

Mulvaney added: "Put another way, just because something is legal doesn't make it right."

Officials should stick to commercial travel "with few exceptions," he wrote.

In the wake of the controversy, other administration officials' travels have come under scrutiny. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has used military planes for some trips, POLITICO reported, while EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin have also raised eyebrows with their travel itineraries.

President Donald Trump was livid over the Price scandal and accepted his resignation on Friday.

"We have great secretaries, and we have some that actually own their own planes, so that solves that," Trump told reporters earlier on Friday.

To view online click here.

Back

FERC floats dozens of questions on DOE pricing proposal Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/04/2017 06:52 PM EDT

FERC opened the floodgates tonight for comments on the Energy Department's controversial resiliency pricing proposal, posting 53 questions and other requests for information about the rulemaking.

The six-page document signed by FERC's director for energy policy and innovation, groups the questions into broader categories looking for feedback on rates, the 90-day on-site fuel requirement envisioned by DOE, and how pricing changes would be implemented, among other issues.

But many of the questions, which are open to anyone seeking to comment before FERC's initial comment deadline of Oct. 23, are directed at the foundation of DOE's proposal.

For example, DOE's 19-page proposal leans heavily on the grid stresses that occurred during the "polar vortex" to press for new regulatory action. But, FERC doesn't treat the premise as a given. "The proposed rule references the events of the 2014 Polar Vortex, citing the event as an example of the need for the proposed reform. Do commenters agree?"

There are also questions directed at how on-site fuel would address power outages triggered by damage to the electric transmission and distribution system, and several questions seeking to define ostensibly basic information about how the 90-day fuel supply concept should be applied.

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC's initial comment deadline is Oct. 23, with reply comments due Nov. 7.

To view online click here.

Back

Judge says Interior delay of methane waste rule was illegal Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/04/2017 07:32 PM EDT

A federal judge ruled today that the Bureau of Land Management's June postponement of key compliance dates for the methane waste rule was unlawful.

BLM relied on Section 705 of the Administrative Procedure Act to justify the delay. But Magistrate Judge Elizabeth Laporte of the U.S. District Court for Northern California said it was too late because the rule's effective date had already passed. That means BLM should have gone through a round of notice-and-comment rulemaking before suspending any part of the rule, she said.

Coincidentally, the ruling came on the same day that Interior proposed an 18-month delay of the methane waste rule as it works to rewrite it.

Laporte's ruling acknowledges the pending rulemaking but said it could be months before it is finalized and takes effect, and may not survive its own legal challenge, giving her no reason to pause now.

She vacated the delay and ordered the requirements reinstated. She rejected BLM's arguments that the delay should be kept in place, saying that doing so would create "a free pass for agencies to exceed their statutory authority and ignore their legal obligations under the APA, making a mockery of the statute." And Laporte said any company that misses upcoming

January deadlines because of Interior's delay is in "a problem to some extent of their own making."

Laporte previously used similar legal reasoning to strike down Interior's delay of a resource valuation rule.

WHAT'S NEXT: BLM will take public comment for 30 days on its new proposal to delay the methane waste rule.

To view online click here.

Back

BLM proposes 18-month delay to methane rule Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 10/04/2017 09:59 AM EDT

The Interior Department proposed to suspend enforcement of an Obama-era rule on methane emissions for 18 months as it plans to rewrite it, according to a document to be filed tomorrow in the Federal Register.

"The BLM is currently reviewing the 2016 final rule and wants to avoid imposing temporary or permanent compliance costs on operators for requirements that may be rescinded or significantly revised in the near future," the agency said in the document.

The agency said it is concerned that the final rule analysis "may have underestimated costs and overestimated benefits, and [BLM] is therefore presently reviewing that analysis for potential inaccuracies."

The 2016 rule was intended to require oil and gas developers on federal lands to capture more of the methane that leaked during their operations. The rule went into effect in January 2017 and survived an effort by Congressional Republicans to repeal it.

WHAT'S NEXT: BLM will accept public comments on the proposal for 30 days.

To view online click here.

Back

Draft EPA strategic plan drops all reference to climate change Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/04/2017 04:26 PM EDT

The Trump administration has dropped all mention of climate change or rules to reduce carbon emissions from a strategic plan outlining EPA's priorities for the next four years, according to a draft obtained by POLITICO.

The draft was circulated around EPA for comment earlier today along with an accompanying one-page graphic.

The document creates a new framework for EPA's mission that reflects the management style of Administrator Scott Pruitt. It defines EPA's "core mission" as ensuring clean air, water and land. It calls for more "cooperative federalism" to empower state governments. And it touts the "rule of law and process," which is meant to "refocus the Agency on its statutory obligations under the law."

The draft was released to EPA employees just days after Pruitt missed a key statutory deadline to implement the 2015 ozone standard. EPA has offered no update on that issue.

"I believe this draft Plan provides the foundation for a more efficient and effective agency, enabling us to accelerate progress and deliver real, tangible results for the American people," Pruitt wrote in an email to EPA staff today.

The previous strategic plan released by the Obama administration in 2014 listed climate change as "goal one," along with broader air quality issues. The new draft plan makes no mention of climate change, though it does address non-climate air issues, as well as a litany of other regulatory, permitting and administrative goals for EPA.

WHAT'S NEXT: EPA will publish the draft plan in Thursday's Federal Register and take comments through Oct. 31.

Lorraine Woellert contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Draft EPA strategic plan drops all reference to climate change Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/04/2017 04:26 PM EDT

The Trump administration has dropped all mention of climate change or rules to reduce carbon emissions from a strategic plan outlining EPA's priorities for the next four years, according to a draft obtained by POLITICO.

The draft was circulated around EPA for comment earlier today along with an accompanying one-page graphic.

The document creates a new framework for EPA's mission that reflects the management style of Administrator Scott Pruitt. It defines EPA's "core mission" as ensuring clean air, water and land. It calls for more "cooperative federalism" to empower state governments. And it touts the "rule of law and process," which is meant to "refocus the Agency on its statutory obligations under the law."

The draft was released to EPA employees just days after Pruitt missed a key statutory deadline to implement the 2015 ozone standard. EPA has offered no update on that issue.

"I believe this draft Plan provides the foundation for a more efficient and effective agency, enabling us to accelerate progress and deliver real, tangible results for the American people," Pruitt wrote in an email to EPA staff today.

The previous strategic plan released by the Obama administration in 2014 listed climate change as "goal one," along with broader air quality issues. The new draft plan makes no mention of climate change, though it does address non-climate air issues, as well as a litany of other regulatory, permitting and administrative goals for EPA.

WHAT'S NEXT: EPA will publish the draft plan in Thursday's Federal Register and take comments through Oct. 31.

Lorraine Woellert contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Murkowski pressing to have FERC nominees approved this week Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/04/2017 04:17 PM EDT

Sen. Lisa Murkowski is aiming to have President Donald Trump's two pending FERC nominees confirmed before the Senate flies off for its recess at the end of the week.

"I was talking with our leadership today about it. I want to try to get it shook loose before we take a break," the Alaska Republican, who chairs the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said of the nominees. The Senate is not scheduled to be in session next week.

Kevin McIntyre, Trump's pick to chair the agency, and Rich Glick, who serves as general counsel to energy committee Democrats, were approved by Murkowski's committee on a voice vote last month to become FERC members.

Sen. Maria Cantwell, the top Democrat on the energy committee, has said she was "favorably impressed" by McIntyre who, when confirmed by the full Senate with Glick, will bring FERC's leadership board back to full strength for the first time since late 2015.

WHAT'S NEXT: The Senate is scheduled to be on recess for the week of Columbus Day and is rarely in session on Friday, suggesting that the FERC nominees could be confirmed in the next day or so.

To view online click here.

Back

White House seeks nearly $30B in disaster aid package Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/04/2017 06:13 PM EDT

The White House this afternoon formally requested nearly $30 billion in emergency funding for its ongoing recovery efforts in hurricane-battered regions like Puerto Rico, Florida and Texas.

In a letter to congressional leaders, the Trump administration asked for $12.8 billion for FEMA's disaster relief fund, $16 billion for the National Flood Insurance Program and $576.5 million for the forest service's firefighting fund.

"We need the help of Congress to stabilize the affected communities and replenish dwindling and depleted funds," Office of Management and Budget chief Mick Mulvaney wrote. He said the money should be classified as "emergency spending," meaning it would not require spending offsets.

House and Senate appropriators immediately released statements in support of the White House's request and pledged to act quickly. House Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen (R-N.J.) said he would "put legislation forward as soon as possible."

Rep. Nita Lowey, his Democratic counterpart on the panel, said she supported Trump's request for FEMA, but added it needed to go further.

"Congress should add to this request by appropriating funding for flexible Community Development Block Grants; rebuilding coastlines, roads, transit systems, airports, ports, and other infrastructure; small business loans; and repairs to military installations and other federal facilities damaged in the storms," said Lowey, of New York.

The White House's request had previously been reported by POLITICO.

To view online click here.

Back

Embattled GOP Rep. Tim Murphy to retire Back

By Rachael Bade, Elena Schneider and John Bresnahan | 10/04/2017 02:44 PM EDT

Rep. Tim Murphy of Pennsylvania announced Wednesday that he will retire at the end of his term, after allegations that the married Republican lawmaker, who opposes abortion rights, asked his mistress to terminate a pregnancy.

Murphy admitted several weeks ago to an affair with forensic psychologist Shannon Edwards — news that came to light during the woman's divorce proceedings with her husband.

"After discussions with my family and staff, I have come to the decision that I will not seek reelection to Congress at the end of my current term," Murphy said in his statement. "I plan to spend my remaining months in office continuing my work as the national leader on mental health care reform, as well as issues affecting working families in southwestern Pennsylvania."

Murphy added: "In the coming weeks I will take personal time to seek help as my family and I continue to work through our personal difficulties and seek healing. I ask you to respect our privacy during this time."

Murphy met privately with Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) before his retirement announcement, as well as with Pennsylvania GOP Reps. Bill Shuster and Charlie Dent.

A number of top Republicans have said privately that Murphy should retire or resign in light of the scandal.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported Tuesday that Murphy suggested Edwards get an abortion during a pregnancy scare, citing leaked text messages between the two.

"And you have zero issue posting your pro-life stance all over the place when you had no issue asking me to abort our unborn child just last week when we thought that was one of the options," Edwards texted to Murphy in late January, according to the Post-Gazette.

Edwards was responding to a Facebook post by Murphy touting his anti-abortion position in Congress. Murphy is a member of the House Pro-Life Caucus and voted Tuesday for legislation to ban abortions after 20 weeks.

The story also highlighted a toxic work environment in Murphy's office, citing a June 8 memo in which his chief of staff, Susan Mosychuk, warned Murphy about mistreating staff. The document, titled "Office Conduct and Behavior: Harassment/Legal Compliance," suggests there was a "pattern of sustained inappropriate behavior."

Mosychuk wrote that the office has experienced 100 percent staff turnover over the past several years and attributed it to the congressman's behavior. She said he often worked staff through the weekends, only to berate them for failing to meet expectations.

Murphy's district leans heavily Republican, backing Donald Trump by almost 20 points in 2016 and Mitt Romney by nearly 17 points in 2012. It is likely to remain in Republican hands.

Indeed, national Democrats scoffed at the idea that Democrats might be able to retake the seat — even if Murphy, crippled from scandal, were to run again. One Democratic consultant called it "completely unwinnable" as an open seat.

"[Murphy] is certainly weaker today than he was yesterday, but it'd be a stretch to say this is a Democratic pickup opportunity," another national Democratic strategist said.

The chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, Rep. Steve Stivers of Ohio, likewise said in a statement late Wednesday evening that he was "confident" the district would stay in GOP hands next year.

"While I am extremely disappointed in the circumstances surrounding Congressman Murphy's retirement, I remain confident that PA-18 will remain under Republican control next year," Stivers said. "I look forward to working with the eventual Republican nominee to ensure the district's conservative values are represented in Congress."

Still, Democrats on the ground are more hopeful, pointing to competitive down-ballot results in the district.

"It's a tough district, no doubt about it, but Democrats have been able to keep it close in other races," said Mike Mikus, a longtime Democratic operative in the state. "I think you'll see more Democrats taking a look at this and considering jumping in now."

A handful of Democrats are already in the race, including Pam Iovino, a Navy veteran and former Veterans Affairs official; Mike Crossey, a former member of the Allegheny County Council; and Bob Solomon, a physician.

But former Rep. Jason Altmire — a centrist Democrat who represented Western Pennsylvania and lost his seat, partially due to redistricting, in 2012 — said "it would have to be the right kind of Democrat" to put the seat in play.

"If you had a social conservative Democrat, it's been proven that a Democrat like that and who fits that mold can win," Altmire said.

To view online click here.

Back

MSHA nominee: 'I was not proud' of violations notice Back

By Ian Kullgren | 10/04/2017 05:55 PM EDT

President Donald Trump's nominee for assistant secretary of Labor for Mine Safety & Health told a Senate committee today that his coal company ignored safety conditions at one of its mines.

David Zatezalo was chairman of Rhino Resources when it received pattern of violation notices in 2010 and 2011, the Charleston Gazette-Mail previously reported. The company was later fined when a wall collapsed, killing a worker.

When questioned by Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) about the notice, Zatezalo blamed the mine manager.

"The management of that particular group and that particular site was not doing what they should have been doing," Zatezalo said. "I was not proud of the fact that we got designated as a [potential pattern of violations] mine. I did not try to lawyer up and stop anything from happening."

"I replaced that management," he added, "because I wasn't too happy with their performance and hadn't been for sometime."

Zatezalo appeared before the Senate HELP Committee for a confirmation hearing with Cheryl Stanton and Peter Robb, Trump's nominees for Wage and Hour Division administrator and NLRB general counsel, respectively. Few senators showed up to the hearing, though, and Patty Murray (D-Wash.) complained that the Senate's busy schedule didn't leave enough time to probe as deeply as she would have liked.

Zatezalo assured Kaine that he wouldn't have a problem working with career staff at MSHA who issued the notice to his company.

"They did what they were supposed to do," he said.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

---

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by ExxonMobil: Clean Power Plan reversal comes today — Perry reveals non-commercial travel — Barrasso faces primary challenger?
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2017 5:45:28 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/10/2017 05:42 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén and Darius Dixon

CLEAN POWER PLAN WALKBACK ARRIVES: From the heart of coal country in Hazard, Ky. and alongside Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt announced Monday he'd sign a proposed rule today formally kicking off what's expected to be a protracted, years-long regulatory and legal process of withdrawing the Obama-era Clean Power Plan. "The past administration was unapologetic, they were using every bit of power, authority to use the EPA to pick winners and losers on how we pick electricity in this country. That is wrong," Pruitt told the crowd.

POLITICO's Emily Holden and Andrew Restuccia got the talking points ahead of the announcement, which show President Donald Trump's administration will frame the regulation's repeal as "another step advancing the president's America First strategy." It's worth noting the country is more than halfway toward meeting the rule's goals even though it never formally took effect. New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman vowed to sue over that action Monday.

Long haul ahead: It'll take a ton of time to actually formally remove the Clean Power Plan from the books and to defend those actions in court, Emily reports. So environmentalists and Obama-era EPA leaders say Pruitt seems to be setting himself up to never actually issue a replacement rule limiting carbon emissions from power plants. "Scott Pruitt's politics really does militate against him signing a regulation on greenhouse gas emissions," said Joe Goffman, the lead attorney at EPA when it filed the rule in 2015. But even without the rule, many companies and states are moving away from coal, opting for cheaper natural gas or renewable power.

Farmers count more: Pruitt didn't seem too concerned Monday that his schedule includes few meetings with environmental groups. Speaking at a Kentucky Farm Bureau Monday afternoon, Pruitt said he was asked by reporters earlier about the lack of meetings. "Well, what about those farmers and ranchers in Iowa? What about those farmers and ranchers in North Dakota and Kentucky?" he asked. "Then I sat down and I listened to them about issues that impact them. Do they not count? And the answer is, you count more. Because every single day, what we do impacts you and we have to work together to achieve better outcomes for water and air quality in this country."

Gina McCarthy's thoughts? The former EPA administrator who authored the regulation: "They're using stall tactics to defer action, ignoring the courts and the demands of the American people ... They're adding more pollution into our air and threatening public health at a time when the threats of climate change are growing and the costs are growing immeasurably higher on our children and their future."

Somebody tell Rick Perry: Pruitt blasted the Obama administration, saying "regulatory power should not be used by any regulatory body to pick winners and losers." Not sure where he might come down on the latest move by Energy Secretary Rick Perry, who has asked FERC to write rules to prop up the struggling coal and nuclear sectors.

WELCOME TO TUESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and I hope everyone had a wonderful Columbus Day holiday! Senate Energy's Patrick McCormick (a fellow alumnus) identified Susan Collins as the first U.S. Senate Youth Program graduate subsequently elected to the Senate. For today: Who's the most recent physician elected to the Senate? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

PERRY RELEASES DEETS ON NON-COMMERCIAL TRAVEL: Joining the ranks of Trump officials utilizing non-commercial travel arrangements while in office, Perry announced Friday he'd spent as much as $56,246 during four trips on government-owned or chartered aircraft, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. In a letter to House Oversight and Government Reform Committee leaders, the former Texas governor detailed the trips:

— A mid-May one-day round trip from Reagan to Olathe, Kan. for DOE's Small Business Forum & Expo that cost an estimated $35,000,

— A private charter flight on Sept. 28 (one day before HHS Secretary Tom Price resigned after a series of POLITICO reports on his lavish private plane usage) from Dulles to Hazleton Regional Airport in Pennsylvania that later continued to the Greater Portsmouth Regional Airport in Ohio at a cost of an estimated $11,000,

— Use of a DOD plane in May to travel from Idaho Falls, Idaho to Santa Fe, N.M. at an estimated cost of $7,000, and,

— Use of a Bonneville Power Administration plane in August to fly from Seattle to Richland, Wash., to visit the Hanford nuclear site, which cost an estimated $3,246

DOE spokesperson Shaylyn Hynes said in a statement. "The Secretary travels almost exclusively on commercial aircraft. In the rare instances where government-owned or chartered aircraft have been used, trips were pre-approved by an Ethics officer within the Office of General Counsel."

Speaking of questionable travel, EPA's inspector general confirmed Friday it had expanded a prior investigation to include all of Pruitt's travel, Pro's Alex Guillén reports. The watchdog has faced pressure to look into whether Pruitt's non-commercial flights were necessary and appropriate expenses as it's already looking into whether the former Oklahoma attorney general's frequent trips back to his home state were appropriate.

New probe sought: Meanwhile, the Campaign Legal Center has asked DOJ's Office of Special Council to investigate whether Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's appearance at a political fundraiser in the U.S. Virgin Islands while on an official trip ran afoul of the federal law prohibiting federal officials from using government resources to engage in partisan political activity, Pro's Nick Juliano, Ben Lefebvre and Esther Whieldon report. "This activity constitutes impermissible solicitation of political contributions if event organizers conditioned the opportunity to take a photograph with Secretary Zinke on paying a higher fee," Walter Shaub, the Campaign Legal Center's senior director for ethics, wrote, citing POLITICO's reporting.

Meanwhile, CNN is reporting that Obama's Interior secretaries had spent $971,000 on non-commercial air travel over seven years. Read it here.

DISASTER FUNDING FIGHT ON TAP: The House is expected this week to consider a massive $29 billion disaster funding relief package to provide aid to Florida, Texas and Puerto Rico in the aftermath of four consecutive blows from hurricanes. That comes as Puerto Rican Gov. Ricardo Rosselló asked Congress to provide an additional $4 billion from various federal programs and agencies to meet the island's "immediate emergency needs."

Congressional delegation vows support: A bipartisan, bicameral group of lawmakers toured the devastated territory over the weekend and vowed long-term support to rebuild the island. Multiple lawmakers, including Sens. Cory Gardner and Ron Johnson, said reconnecting the island's electric grid was their top priority. "If you're a utility CEO and you're listening to this right now, I hope you will contact the Puerto Rico power authority," Gardner said, according to McClatchy. "Come into Puerto Rico. Contact them. Let's make sure we get this grid built."

Vice President Mike Pence visited the island on Friday and said the Trump administration would be there for the long haul ahead. "The people of Puerto Rico can be assured that we will be with you every step of the way," he said. "We will see this challenge through." The most recent government figures show 59.5 percent of residents now have potable drinking water and 15 percent of people have electricity.

Feud with mayor goes on: FEMA Administrator Brock Long dismissed the criticism of the federal government's response by San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz as "political noise" during a Sunday interview on ABC's "This Week." That comes after Cruz tweeted Sunday "Increasingly painful to understand [sic] the american people want to help and US Gov does not want to help. WE NEED WATER!" She had previously called Trump's remarks during a visit to the island "insulting."

Florida seeks more hurricane relief funding: All of Florida's congressional delegation (except for Rep. Daniel Webster) signed a letter Friday seeking nearly an additional $27 billion in disaster relief as the state recovers from Hurricane Irma.

BARRASSO GETTING A CHALLENGER? Erik Prince, the founder of the security contractor Blackwater, is taking a hard look at challenging Senate Environment and Public Works Chairman John Barrasso for the Republican Senate nomination in deep red Wyoming, the New York Times and Associated Press report. The brother of Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, Prince, wouldn't challenge Barrasso's conservative bona fides, but would instead go after his close ties to McConnell. Steve Bannon is leading the charge for Prince to run despite his scant ties to Wyoming (he had a residence in Wapiti, Wyo. in the late 1990s and early 2000s).

** Presented by ExxonMobil: We're collaborating with FuelCell Energy on a novel idea to use fuel cells to capture carbon at natural gas power plants, and in the process reduce emissions and increase electrical output. This technology could be a game changer in addressing the world's growing need for energy, while also reducing the impact on the environment. Learn more. **

JONES ACT WAIVER LAPSES: The Trump administration declined to renew a Jones Act waiver allowing foreign vessels to load ships at domestic ports for delivery to Puerto Rico, Pro's Ben Lefebvre reports. "We believe that extending the waiver is unnecessary to support the humanitarian relief efforts on the island," DHS spokesman David Lapan said. "There is an ample supply of Jones Act-qualified vessels to ensure that cargo is able to reach Puerto Rico." Ships previously loaded at U.S. ports now have until Oct. 18 to deliver their cargos.

BONN MOVE: Quashing rumors that Pruitt might lead the U.S. delegation to the major international climate change summit in Bonn, Germany next month, the Trump administration has picked the State Department's Thomas Shannon to head up the U.S. delegation, POLITICO's Andrew Restuccia reports. The appointment of Shannon, undersecretary for political affairs at State, comes as the administration has declined to appoint a climate envoy, who would normally lead the trip.

MOVING ON ANTIQUITIES ACT REFORM: House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop released legislation H.R. 3990 \(115\) Monday revamping the Antiquities Act ahead of a Wednesday markup of the bill. "This legislation provides for accountability in the Act's uses," he said in a statement. "It modernizes the law to restore its intent, allowing for the protection of actual antiquities without disenfranchisement of local voices and perspectives. It standardizes and limits the president's power to reshape monuments. "

MAIL CALL! CONSERVATIVES URGE TRUMP TO IMPLEMENT RFS REFORMS: A group of conservative organizations are out with a letter today urging Trump to revamp the Renewable Fuel Standard by moving its point of obligation, which they describe as a "mandate [that] hinders economic growth and stifles innovation" particularly among smaller companies. "Moving the 'point of obligation' would level the playing field between large oil companies and independent refiners as well as reduce the unfair advantage that the mandate gives large gas station chains over small mom-and-pop gas stations," wrote the groups, including Tea Party Nation and Institute for Liberty. Of course, shifting that obligation to comply with the program had been a major goal of Carl Icahn, the Trump adviser and refinery owner who resigned his unpaid White House position in August amid concerns he was using his influence to help one of his companies.

Lawmakers write letter of their own: Pennsylvania Sens. Bob Casey and Pat Toomey, as well as 12 House members, sent a letter Trump urging him to revamp the RIN credit program which they said is "undermining the continued viability" of Northeast oil refiners. "We are concerned that current compliance costs and the volatile RIN market may lead to the closure of one or more these merchant refineries, which would have a devastating impact on the regional economy," they wrote.

WOTUS WATCH AT SCOTUS: Supreme Court justices hear arguments Wednesday on the relatively simple but ultimately important, question of which court should hear arguments over the waters of the U.S. regulation (and a forthcoming replacement), Pro's Alex Guillén reports in Energy Regulation Watch. At issue is whether Clean Water Act cases like this should start at the district courts or, like many Clean Air Act challenges, skip that step and go to the federal appeals court level.

WALK, DON'T RUN: 134 of the the nation's mayors are launching a push today to ensure their citizens live within a 10-minute walk from a park or public green space. "I am proud we're supporting the goal of a 10-minute walk to a quality park for all," New Orleans Mayor Mitch Landrieu said in a statement.

FERC ASKS COURT FOR LIMITED REHEARING ON STUDY: FERC appealed a federal court decision that directed the agency to amend an environmental study for the Southeast Market Pipelines Project to include an assessment of greenhouse gas emissions from the power plants that may use the fuel. On Friday afternoon, regulators said they plan to comply with the Aug. 22 ruling but asked that the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals provide the agency with more time to address the order as well as reconsider their decision to vacate FERC's certificate approving the project.

"Vacatur would revoke the certificates of public convenience and necessity for these pipelines - pipelines that are currently providing natural gas to power plants in Florida," FERC attorneys wrote in their rehearing request. "Without such certificates, the pipelines would have to cease operating, at least temporarily. That outcome risks significant disruption to natural gas and electricity service to Florida consumers." FERC issued a 5-page draft supplemental environmental impact statement on Sept. 27 to start compliance with the court order, and has asked for comments through Nov. 20. The court could respond in the next few weeks.

ARNOLD'S LIFE AFTER POLITICS: POLITICO's Edward-Isaac Dove takes a look at what Arnold Schwarzenegger's been up to in the six years since the Republican terminator left the California governor's mansion and gets this quote on climate change efforts that seems like it could have come from Gov. Jerry Brown. "If the federal government, Republicans and Democrats, and Donald Trump and his whole White House would be smart, they would just copy exactly what we are doing in California," he said.

ANOTHER ONE BITES THE DUST: One of Texas' largest coal-fired power plants will permanently close Jan. 4, 2018, the Houston Chronicle reports. Vistra Energy's 1,800 megawatt Monticello power plant will lay off approximately 200 employees with the closure. "This was a difficult decision made after a year of careful analysis," CEO Curt Morgan said.

STAFFING UP: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke formally announced six hires on Friday: Jason Larrabee as principal deputy assistant secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks; Austin Ewell as deputy assistant secretary for Water and Science; Brian Steed as deputy director of BLM; Cally Younger as counselor to BLM; Kathleen Benedetto as senior adviser to BLM and Benjamin Cassidy as senior deputy director for Intergovernmental and External Affairs.

SAD STATE OF AFFAIRS: EPA's inspector general has launched 70 investigations into a surge of threats against agency employees this year, NBC Washington reports. Patrick Sullivan assistant inspector general for investigations, told the local news station: "I do feel we've prevented acts of violence through our investigations. I feel very confident we have." There's been a rise in threats against Pruitt, the report says.

But the one that caught ME's eyes was one that targeted McCarthy. In that case, former EPA employee Barbara Jordan wrote an email that she was outside a hotel and that "i am going to murder those (expletive)... and i hope they drop dead like flies." Jordan has pleaded not guilty.

MOVERS, SHAKERS: Two former George W. Bush administration Interior veterans have been named to lead Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck's energy practice. Jon Hrobsky worked in the Office of the Secretary and was also deputy director for policy and planning of the U.S. Minerals Management Service. Luke Johnson was former chief of staff for BLM.

QUICK HITS

— Review of Dakota Access Pipeline to Extend into Spring. AP.

— After Irma, Rubio Vows To Rebuild Everglades National Park 'Stronger Than Ever.' CBS Miami.

— Oil prices stable after OPEC signals possible further action. Reuters.

— Ex-Grassley aide helps his firm makes millions on tax deduction he shepherded in Congress. Des Moines Register.

— Hurricane Nate shuts down about 90% of Gulf of Mexico oil production. CNBC.

— Tony Abbott says climate change is 'probably doing good'. The Guardian.

— In New Rule, Trump EPA Allows Texas Coal Plants to Pollute Even More Than They Already Do. Texas Observer.

HAPPENING THIS WEEK

TUESDAY

9:55 a.m. — NRECA hosts a cybersecurity forum, "Insights on Cybersecurity for Electric Utilities," 4301 Wilson Boulevard, First Floor, Arlington, VA 22203

12:30 p.m. — "Greening Governance Seminar Series: Open Government for Climate Action," World Resources Institute, 10 G Street NE, Suite 800

3:30 p.m. — "Party Talks, Trade Dialogue, and the Role of Energy Exports," Atlantic Council, 12th Floor, 1030 15th St. NW

5:00 p.m. — House Rules Committee holds hearing on Dr. Chris Kirkpatrick Whistleblower Protection Act of 2017, H-313

WEDNESDAY

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee holds hearing on several bills, Longworth 1334

2:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources Committee's Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee holds a hearing on ASTRO Act, Longworth 1334

THURSDAY

8:00 a.m. — Canadian Embassy hosts the 28th annual Energy Efficiency Forum, Canadian Embassy, 501 Pennsylvania Ave NW

9:30 a.m. — "IEA's Renewable Energy Market Report 2017," Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Avenue, NW

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Water, Power and Oceans Subcommittee holds a legislative hearing on several bills, Longworth 1334

10:00 a.m. — House Energy and Commerce holds hearing with DOE Secretary Rick Perry, Rayburn 2123

FRIDAY

9:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee holds hearing on onshore energy policy discussion draft, Longworth 1334

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

**Presented by ExxonMobil: Energy is fundamental to modern life and drives economic prosperity - in small communities across America and around the world. We need a range of solutions to meet growing energy demand while reducing emissions to address the risk of climate change. Visit the Energy Factor to learn more about some of the bold ideas and next-generation technologies we're working on to meet this challenge: EnergyFactor.com **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/clean-power-plan-reversal-comes-today-024964>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump's climate rule rollback will focus on 'America First' talking points Back

By Emily Holden and Andrew Restuccia | 10/07/2017 05:32 PM EDT

The Trump administration plans to highlight its "America First" strategy when unveiling a proposal to roll back the biggest part of former President Barack Obama's climate legacy next week, according to talking points obtained by POLITICO.

An administration official said the final announcement to withdraw the Clean Power Plan — a rule to limit greenhouse gas emissions from coal plants — would probably be made by EPA, not the White House, making the prospect of a Rose Garden speech from the President Donald Trump unlikely.

The official said it's unclear whether EPA will hold an event to make a formal announcement, though multiple sources tracking the issue expect the agency to release its plans on Tuesday.

EPA did not immediately respond to request for comment.

"Repealing the Clean Power Plan is another step advancing the president's America First strategy," guidance from the administration said. The rule was the focal point of the Obama administration's plans to meet its international pledges to curb the carbon emissions that cause climate change.

The lack of a Rose Garden ceremony would give the rule's withdrawal less drama than Trump's June speech outside the White House in which he announced he was exiting the Paris climate agreement — an action he said he took for the "citizens of Pittsburgh, not Paris." Both Trump and EPA administrator Scott Pruitt have discounted man-made climate change, with Trump dismissing it as a "hoax" and Pruitt questioning carbon dioxide's role.

EPA and the White House will say the regulation was "premised on a novel and expansive view of agency authority." It will also emphasize that the Supreme Court stayed implementation of the rule while a lower court reviewed challenges to the regulation — a stay the administration will describe as "unprecedented and historic," according to a brief summary.

The talking points say the rule "ignored states' concerns and eroded longstanding and important partnerships that are a necessary part of achieving positive environmental outcomes."

Obama's EPA officials have said they talked frequently with states before, during and after finishing the rule.

The Clean Power Plan called on states to write their own plans to reduce carbon levels, by using less coal power, ramping up natural gas and renewable energy use, and limiting power demand by making electricity systems and consumer use more efficient. States also could have grouped together to form trading systems, and coal-heavy states could have purchased allowances from greener states to keep some of their plants online. The U.S. is already more than halfway to meeting the Clean Power Plan's goals, although the rule never took effect.

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt will take first step to repeal Clean Power Plan but could slow-walk replacement

Back

By Emily Holden | 10/06/2017 06:20 PM EDT

EPA chief Scott Pruitt is finally making his first move to rescind Barack Obama's marquee climate change rule — but he may not be done by the time President Donald Trump leaves office.

The agency is preparing to publish a proposal to eliminate the Clean Power Plan and may consider replacing it but will not outline options immediately, according to a draft obtained by POLITICO on Friday. Given the amount of time and effort it will take just to get the current rule off the books — and then to defend that move in court — environmentalists and Obama-era EPA leaders say Pruitt appears to be setting himself up to never have to issue a replacement rule limiting carbon emissions from power plants.

"They're not committing to doing anything at all," said Sean Donahue, an attorney representing environmental groups that support the Clean Power Plan. "This is not a kind of, 'We have a better way to do it.' This is a, 'We really don't want to do it.'"

Pruitt's moves leave federal climate action facing years in limbo as the world experiences warming that is already threatening the environment and public health, with heat waves, drought, sea-level rise and flooding. The Clean Power Plan was the linchpin of U.S. efforts to reduce emissions that cause those problems under an international deal to slow climate change, which Trump has said the country will exit. Even if Pruitt does eventually issue a new rule, he is expected to tailor it so narrowly that it would not lead to any significant carbon reductions.

Joe Goffman, the lead attorney at EPA when it filed the rule in 2015, said it is clear Pruitt's strategy is to slow-walk any action to replace the rule, delaying any of the regulations to curb carbon emissions that the Supreme Court called for a decade ago.

"Scott Pruitt's politics really does militate against him signing a regulation on greenhouse gas emissions," he said.

Pruitt, the former Oklahoma attorney general who sued the federal government more than a dozen times, including over the Clean Power Plan, has said he wants to lead public debates on the merits of science linking human activity to the Earth's rapid warming. Critics speculate he is prepping for a future campaign for Congress or a state-wide office.

EPA has a legal obligation to regulate carbon from power plants, following a 2007 Supreme Court decision and the agency's own declaration that heat-trapping gases endanger public health by causing climate change. But environmental groups can't sue until Pruitt officially withdraws the rule and again if he publishes a replacement. It will be years before the courts settle the issue.

Fossil-fuel trade groups on Friday lauded the proposal. Paul Bailey, president of the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, said the regulation would have increased energy prices while reducing global temperatures a fraction of a degree.

"We are pleased to see EPA repeal this very bad rule," he said.

National Mining Association CEO Hal Quinn said the Clean Power Plan was "an unlawful attempt to transform the nation's power grid." Nixing it would save coal jobs, he argued.

Green groups still must weigh their options, but Donahue indicated they may try one final push to get the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals to issue its ruling on the Clean Power Plan, which would cement an answer to the legal issues EPA is raising in its repeal effort.

The new draft discounts most of the value that the Obama administration had estimated would come from reducing carbon emissions and air pollutants that cause health problems. It uses the term "climate change" only once.

"That's the problem with this and other things that these guys are doing, is that they do not acknowledge the fundamental health and environmental threats they're charged with protecting people from," Donahue said. "Their whole thing is about rewarding a subset of industry who are their bankrollers."

The Clean Power Plan would have shifted the U.S. away from coal power and toward lower-carbon natural gas and emissions-free renewable power. It still would have secured only a fraction of the emissions cuts the U.S. would need to achieve to comply with its pledge under the Paris climate agreement.

Power-sector emissions are about a third of the country's carbon pollution, and the Clean Power plan aimed to cut them about 15 percent below 2015 levels. Even without the rule, many companies and states are moving away from coal, opting for cheaper natural gas or renewable power.

Goffman said he's optimistic that Trump's moves won't torpedo a global movement away from fossil fuels because countries have already invested political capital in choosing their commitments.

Jeff Holmstead, an EPA deputy under the George W. Bush administration who now represents groups suing against the Clean Power Plan, believes Pruitt will write a replacement rule focused only on coal plants. Holmstead thinks that move will make it hard for a future administration to write different power-sector climate rules.

"The big picture is that if EPA actually does what it's supposed to do under the Clean Air Act, it will push the issue back to Congress," Holmstead said.

EPA's proposal sets the tone for how Pruitt will express his opinions about climate change in regulatory actions.

Joanne Spalding, a climate attorney at the Sierra Club, said the draft shows that "it's completely irrelevant to this administration the harm that these power plants are doing by spewing out all this carbon pollution, and they don't even talk about it."

A replacement rule would be more of a defensive legal maneuver, meant to protect against judges who might require EPA to move forward after federal climate action has languished for more than a decade. A new regulation would probably call on coal plants to run slightly more efficiently, according to arguments EPA laid out in its draft.

"It's basically saying that these dinosaur coal plants that were built in the '60s and '70s decades ago get to operate forever — even though there are all sorts of clean power sources out there that we could be using that are not destroying our health and the planet," Spalding said.

Alex Guillén contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

DOE's Perry pushes FERC to support coal power plants Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/29/2017 02:48 PM EDT

The Trump administration on Friday called on FERC to create new rules to protect coal-fired and nuclear power plants that are being squeezed by cheaper natural gas and renewable sources, saying they were "indispensable for economic and national security."

Energy Secretary Rick Perry, who told miners in Pennsylvania on Thursday that "it's time for coal in this country to be revived," pressed electricity regulators to alter power markets and protect the resilience of the power grid with payments to generators that keep fuel supplies on site, a clear reference to the coal-fired and nuclear power plants.

The proposal, which DOE said gave FERC 60 days to create a final or interim rule, comes just a month after Perry's agency issued a report saying FERC should "expedite" its work with grid operators to ensure the stability of the nation's power network.

"In terms of process, this is a pretty bold move," said Tony Clark, a Republican former FERC commissioner. DOE often conducts studies on issues it believes need attention, he said, but

"actually forwarding to the commission something specific for action is a pretty bold way of moving the issue right up the batting order at FERC."

The new proposal, directed at FERC under a rarely used Section 403 authority of the Department of Energy Organization Act, stops short of specifically seeking market incentives for coal. But it calls for full-cost recovery for power generating units that provide essential power and "ancillary" services — and have a 90-day fuel supply on site in case of natural or man-made disruptions. That would exclude most natural gas power plants, which do not typically keep large fuel inventories on hand and instead receive supplies via pipeline.

Perry's request represents a departure from the two decades of U.S. policy that has trended toward more market-based tools, which has helped natural gas to nearly double its power market share. Renewable energy sources like wind and solar, though still modest when compared to fossil fuels or nuclear power, have also grown quickly as federal incentives helped drive down their costs.

But the growth of renewables and natural gas — combined with tighter pollution controls and weak new demand for electricity — has forced hundreds of old coal-fired power plants into retirement. Nuclear power plants in some parts of the country are also under financial pressure, hurt by negative wholesale power market prices that sometimes require the plant owners to pay to deliver their power supplies.

"If this gets the debate started, then my hat's off," said former FERC Chairman Pat Wood, a friend of Perry and a strong advocate for market-based power systems. "But it's a pretty arresting [thing] to wake up and read. That would never have played in Texas. ... If there is a service to be valued, then a market can value that."

In the grid study ordered by Perry and released in August, DOE experts pointed to low power prices and cheap natural gas as the single biggest reason for coal ceding its position as the nation's biggest source of electricity. And that report also called for "reforms" to power markets that would help bolster the electricity network's resilience by easing the financial pressures on many power providers.

In its Friday proposal, DOE cited a spike in demand during the 2014 "polar vortex" that hit much of the U.S., which prompted utilities to run many coal plants that were slated for retirement. Without those plants, as many as 65 million people in the PJM market would have seen their power resources threatened, DOE said.

But the new regulatory pitch from the agency also fueled the growing feud between the gas and coal industries.

Paul Bailey, president and CEO American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, commended Perry for "initiating a rulemaking by FERC that will finally value the on-site fuel security provided by the coal fleet."

But the American Petroleum Institute, which also represents natural gas producers, said DOE drew the wrong conclusions from the 2014 event, and that forcing new mandates on the power market wasn't the solution.

"[A]s we review the proposal we are concerned the agency has mischaracterized the lessons learned from past weather-related events and appears to suggest that additional regulation is the answer where markets have already proven the ability to greatly benefit consumers and give our electric system the flexibility needed to meet constantly, and often rapidly, changing electricity demands," said API Executive Vice President and Chief Strategy Officer Marty Durbin in a statement.

FERC, which has struggled to integrate states' energy policies that aim to boost renewables or support aging nuclear power plants, has long maintained a fuel-neutral stance in the regional markets that it oversees. If it were to follow Perry's directive to create incentives for grid resilience to plants that maintain their own fuel inventories on site, it would be an implicit move at the national level to alter the electricity markets to support the fuels that both Perry and Trump have touted.

Montana regulator Travis Kavulla suggested on Twitter that rather than deal with the pressing issues facing the grid, "Instead, this reform is sort of the @ENERGY equivalent of the Oprah "you get a car, and you get a car. And you? A car!" approach."

However, FERC, whose members are appointed by the president and operate as an independent body, isn't obligated to implement the specific policy pushed by Perry. The commission will so be back to operating with a full five members in the coming weeks, with a Republican majority.

"FERC's going to follow its own procedures," said Marc Spitzer, a Republican former FERC commissioner. "It would be a mistake for people to assume that this is going to be some partisan Republican rubber stamp given the way FERC works."

FERC can spend months or years digging into complex issues that underpin the power markets, and its commissioners tend to seek common ground with each other to ensure that its rules are clear and ensure long-lasting regulations that give utilities stability to plan their operations.

"Is someone really going to invest [billions of dollars] when it's a 3-2 vote that partisans and the parties can flip next year? Is that a good forum for investment as opposed to a 5-0 order?" Spitzer said.

FERC declined to say when the agency last received a rulemaking from DOE using Section 403.

To view online click here.

Back

Energy Department discloses $56K in Perry travel Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/06/2017 07:06 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry has racked up as much as $56,246 in non-commercial air travel since taking office in early March, the Energy Department disclosed Friday in response to congressional questions about Cabinet-level trips.

Political appointees at DOE did not use private non-commercial aircraft, but on four occasions

Perry did fly on government-owned aircraft or chartered aircraft, DOE Deputy General Counsel Eric Fygi wrote in a letter to the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee. That committee is seeking information about Trump administration officials' travel following the revelations that led to Tom Price's resignation from the job as HHS secretary.

Perry's single biggest expense, according to agency documents submitted to the committee, was a one-day round trip in mid-May from Reagan National Airport near Washington D.C. to Olathe, Kan. for DOE's Small Business Forum & Expo, and included a tour of the DOE Kansas City National Security Campus, which is responsible for manufacturing and procuring non-nuclear components for nuclear weapons.

Joining Perry on that trip were a handful of other agency officials, including National Nuclear Security Administrator Frank Klotz and deputy chief of staff Dan Wilmot. The total cost to taxpayers for using the Federal Aviation Administration's Gulfstream IV plane was an estimated $35,000.

Perry's second most expensive trip was a private charter flight on Sept. 28 from the Washington Dulles Airport to the Hazleton Regional Airport in Pennsylvania, which later continued to the Greater Portsmouth Regional Airport in Ohio, and was disclosed by a Reuters report earlier this week. The trip, costing an estimated $11,000, occurred just a day before Price resigned after a series of POLITICO reports of him running up a government travel tab exceeding $1 million — a figure that dwarfs Perry's apparent billing.

After visiting the coal mine in Pennsylvania and a defunct uranium enrichment facility in Ohio, the DOE documents say Perry planned to "secure commercial transportation for the continuation of his travel out of Ohio."

Perry and his staff also made use of a Defense Department plane in May for travel from Idaho Falls, Idaho, to tour the national lab there, to Santa Fe, N.M., to visit the Los Alamos National Laboratory. The trip continued from Santa Fe to Carlsbad, N.M., to visit the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, a low-level nuclear waste storage facility. The estimated cost of the trip was $7,000.

The last trip documented by DOE was for the round-trip use of plane owned by the Bonneville Power Administration, a quasi-independent utility within DOE, to fly from Seattle to Richland, Wash., to visit the Hanford nuclear site in August. The cost of the trip: $3,246.

The information sent to Capitol Hill did not include trips senior DOE non-career officials took with President Donald Trump and Vice President Mike Pence on government-owned aircraft or trips with officials at other agencies with their own aircraft, such as DoD and DHS.

"This response does not address this travel as such travel arrangements were not made by DOE," Fygi wrote.

"The Department of Energy strictly follows both government-wide and internal DOE travel regulations and policy," DOE spokesperson Shaylyn Hynes said in a statement. "The Secretary travels almost exclusively on commercial aircraft. In the rare instances where government-owned or chartered aircraft have been used, trips were pre-approved by an Ethics officer within the Office of General Counsel."

The White House has backed steep spending cuts across the executive branch, including a roughly 9 percent to DOE for fiscal 2018, a decline of roughly $2.7 billion compared to current levels.

In the wake of Price's resignation, several other Cabinet-level Trump officials have found their taxpayer spending scrutinized.

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has flown on military planes for some trips that also coincided with appearances at fundraising events, raising questions about his habit of mixing official government business with political activism, POLITICO has reported. The EPA Inspector General has also recently expanded a probe into EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's travels.

An investigation into seven military flights taken by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin that cost about $811,798 ultimately found that the former Goldman Sachs alum had not violated any ethics requirements or other regulations.

The White House began cracking down on Cabinet officials' use of private planes amid Price's resignation, telling them chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft."

To view online click here.

Back

Price resigns from HHS after facing fire for travel Back

By Dan Diamond, Rachana Pradhan and Adriel Bettelheim | 09/29/2017 04:40 PM EDT

HHS Secretary Tom Price resigned Friday in the face of multiple federal inquiries and growing criticism of his use of private and government planes for travel, at a cost to taxpayers of more than $1 million since May.

The White House said the former seven-term Georgia congressman, 63, offered his resignation earlier in the day and that President Donald Trump had accepted it.

Price becomes the first Trump administration Cabinet secretary to step down. The White House said Trump asked Deputy Assistant Health Secretary Don Wright to serve as acting secretary of the agency, which has an annual budget $1.15 trillion and includes the Medicare and Medicaid programs, as well as the FDA, NIH and CDC.

As late as Thursday, Price said he believed he had the president's support. But the tumult surrounding his travel became another distraction for an administration already reeling from the defeat of repeated Senate efforts to repeal Obamacare and criticism for its hurricane relief efforts in Puerto Rico.

Price ran afoul of Trump in part because his actions seemed to symbolize everything the president had inveighed against on the campaign trail by vowing to "drain the swamp." The fallout extended to the entire Cabinet Friday night when the White House announced that chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft."

Price, in his resignation letter, expressed regret that "recent events" distracted from efforts to overhaul the health care system. "In order for you to move forward without further disruption, I am officially tendering my resignation as the Secretary of Health and Human Services effective 11:59 PM on Friday," he wrote.

Senate Democrats quickly served notice they were preparing for a potential confirmation fight over Price's successor, saying the next HHS secretary must not undermine Obamacare. Under Price, the department cut the law's enrollment period in half and slashed advertising and outreach for the enrollment period starting in November.

"The next HHS secretary must follow the law when it comes to the Affordable Care Act instead of trying to sabotage it," said Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer.

"Tom Price's replacement needs to be focused on implementing the law as written by Congress and keeping the president's promise to bring down the high cost of prescription drugs," Senate Finance ranking Democrat Ron Wyden of Oregon said in a statement.

House Speaker Paul Ryan, a close ally, praised Price as a dedicated public servant. "His vision and hard work were vital to the House's success passing our health care legislation," Ryan said in a statement.

POLITICO revealed that Price flew at least 26 times on private aircraft at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, a sharp break with his predecessors' practice. Many of Price's flights were between major cities that offered inexpensive alternatives on commercial airlines, including Nashville, Philadelphia and San Diego.

On some of those trips, Price, an orthopedic surgeon, mixed official business with leisure. He took a government-funded private jet in August to get to St. Simons Island, an exclusive Georgia resort where he and his wife own land, a day and a half before he addressed a medical conference he and his wife have long attended. In June, HHS chartered a private jet to fly Price to Nashville, where he owns a condominium and where his son resides. Price toured a medicine dispensary, spoke to a local health summit organized by a friend and had lunch with his son, an HHS official confirmed.

Price also used military aircraft for multi-national trips to Africa, Europe and Asia, at a cost of more than $500,000 to taxpayers. The White House said it had approved those trips but not the private jets within the United States.

Price tried to defuse the controversy by promising on Thursday to reimburse the government for the approximately $52,000 cost of his own seat on his domestic trips. But that wasn't enough to tamp down the scandal, which had infuriated the president and prompted a bipartisan inquiry from the House Oversight Committee and separate calls for accountability from lawmakers including Republican Sen. Chuck Grassley. The inspector general of Price's own agency is reviewing if Price complied with federal travel regulations.

The White House put Cabinet officials on notice Friday that it would crack down on use of private planes, telling them chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft."

Mick Mulvaney, director of the Office of Management and Budget, sent out the memo soon after Price's resignation was made public, reminding department and agency heads that, by regulation, "Government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft should not be used for travel by Government employees except with specific justification."

The issue of Cabinet members' travel has already extended beyond Price: POLITICO reported Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and his aides took several flights on private or military aircraft, including a $12,000 charter plane to take him to events in his hometown in Montana and private flights in the Caribbean. Zinke dismissed the furor as a "little B.S." during a Friday appearance at the Heritage Foundation.

Price's wife, Betty, accompanied him on the military flights, while other members of the secretary's delegation flew commercially to Europe.

HHS spokeswoman Charmaine Yoest said Price reimbursed the agency for his wife's travel, but declined to elaborate.

White House officials have groused about Price's frequent travels, with one senior White House official saying the HHS secretary was "nowhere to be found" as they mounted a last-ditch unsuccessful push to repeal Obamacare.

Congressional Democrats attacked Price for advocating spending cuts to the health agencies he oversaw and health care programs while spending taxpayer dollars on private jets. "There could not be a clearer statement of the Trump administration's priorities," Sen. Maggie Hassan (D-N.H.) said. Key Democrats overseeing health issues in Congress had formally requested that HHS's inspector general review Price's travel practices.

In June, Price defended a proposed fiscal 2018 budget for HHS that included a $663,000 cut to the agency's $4.9 million annual spending on travel, or roughly 15 percent. "The budgeting process is an exercise in reforming our federal programs to make sure they actually work — so they do their job and use tax dollars wisely," Price told the Senate Finance Committee on June 8.

Ethical questions dogged Price even before questions about his travel arose. During his Senate confirmation hearing to helm HHS, Price faced pointed questions about his personal investments in health care companies during his time in Congress. Democrats called on government ethics officials to investigate Price's health care stock trades, following reports that he got a sweetheart deal from a biotech company and invested in Zimmer Biomet, a medical device-maker, just days before writing legislation that would have eased regulations on the sector.

The Senate confirmed Price by a 52-47 margin in February after he maintained full Republican support.

Price carved out a reputation as a staunch fiscal conservative during his decade-plus tenure in the House of Representatives. He generally supported reducing government spending on health care while shifting more of the financial burden onto individuals. Like most conservatives, he's supported privatizing Medicare so that seniors would receive fixed dollar amounts to buy coverage and limiting federal Medicaid spending to give states a lump sum, or block grant, and more control over how they could use it.

To view online click here.

Back

Price traveled by private plane at least 24 times Back

By Rachana Pradhan and Dan Diamond | 09/21/2017 05:58 PM EDT

Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price has taken at least 24 flights on private charter planes at taxpayers' expense since early May, according to people with knowledge of his travel plans and a review of HHS documents.

The frequency of the trips underscores how private travel has become the norm — rather than the exception — for the Georgia Republican during his tenure atop the federal health agency, which began in February. The cost of the trips identified by POLITICO exceeds $300,000, according to a review of federal contracts and similar trip itineraries.

Price's use of private jets represents a sharp departure from his two immediate predecessors, Sylvia Mathews Burwell and Kathleen Sebelius, who flew commercially in the continental United States. HHS officials have said Price uses private jets only when commercial travel is not feasible.

But many of the flights are between large cities with frequent, low-cost airline traffic, such as a trip from Washington to Nashville that the secretary took on June 6 to make a morning event at a medication distributor and an afternoon speech. There are four regular nonstop flights that leave Washington-area airports between 6:59 a.m. and 8:50 a.m. and arrive in Nashville by 9:46 a.m. CT. Sample round-trip fares for those flights were as low as $202, when booked in advance on Orbitz.com. Price's charter, according to HHS' contract with Classic Air Charter, cost $17,760.

HHS spokespeople did not respond to questions about specific aspects of Price's travels, including how many charter trips he has taken. Charmaine Yoest, the agency's top spokesperson, said Price's travel for official business "comes from the HHS budget."

In a statement, Yoest said, "The Secretary has taken commercial flights for official business after his confirmation. He has used charter aircraft for official business in order to accommodate his demanding schedule. The week of September 13 was one of those times, as the Secretary was directing the recovery effort for Irma, which had just devastated Florida, while simultaneously directing the ongoing recovery for Hurricane Harvey . . . Some believe the HHS Secretary should be Washington-focused. Dr. Price is focused on hearing from Americans across the country."

Nonetheless, POLITICO identified at least 17 charter flights that took place before the first storm — Hurricane Harvey — hit in late August, and included flights that did not appear to be for urgent HHS public health priorities.

For example, Price took a Learjet-60 from San Diego to the Aspen Ideas Festival — a glamorous conference at the Colorado resort town — that arrived at 3:33 p.m. on Saturday afternoon, June 24, nearly 19 hours before his scheduled panel. That flight likely cost more than $7,100, according to one charter jet agency estimate.

"If you're going to a conference, you have some [advance] flexibility to book travel" and shouldn't need last-minute charters, said Walter Shaub, who was the Barack Obama-appointed director of the United States Office of Government Ethics until July. "This shows a complete disregard for the expense to the taxpayer."

Since being confirmed in early February, Price has developed a reputation inside the agency for flying on private charters rather than taking other means of transportation, people inside and outside the Trump administration said.

After a POLITICO investigation identified five private flights that Price took up and down the East Coast last week, Price took a charter jet to Oklahoma on Tuesday of this week, Sept. 19, where he met with Native American tribes and toured health care facilities by car — although HHS initially explored flying him by charter around the state, two people with knowledge of Price's travels said. "There was a push from political [staff] at HHS to fly him and not drive him to these small communities," said one of the people.

Price's staff cut short his news conference in Oklahoma on Wednesday when reporters raised questions about his use of taxpayer funds, an attendee said.

Price's frequent trips around the country have rankled staff inside the White House, with a senior official saying many trips aren't related to priorities like Obamacare repeal and other items on the president's agenda. While Price has flown to Maine, New Hampshire, Oklahoma and Pennsylvania since last Wednesday, President Donald Trump and Senate Republicans have been frantically rallying support to pass an Obamacare repeal bill by Sept. 30. After that date, the GOP will need 60 Senate votes, not 50, to overturn the 2010 health law.

"No one is quite sure what [Price] is doing," a senior White House official said. "You look at this week, we're doing a last final push trying to get this over the finish line, and he's nowhere to be found."

Many of Price's trips have centered on making announcements related to the use of opioids and holding listening sessions about the epidemic, which Trump labeled a national emergency and continues to contribute to rising death rates from drug abuse. Price has labeled fighting the opioid epidemic one of his top priorities.

But rather than fly commercially to these events, which are scheduled well in advance, Price tends to rent corporate-style jets. Sometimes, he ferries big-name guests along with him. In May, Price and Kellyanne Conway — the White House counselor and former Trump campaign manager who traveled with Price to Philadelphia last week to tour an addiction treatment center — made stops in four different states in the span of two days.

The pair traveled to Lansing, Michigan, and Charleston, West Virginia, for opioid-related meetings in the morning and early afternoon on May 9. That happened to be the same day Trump abruptly fired FBI Director James Comey. On May 10, Conway and Price were in Augusta, Maine, and Concord, New Hampshire, for more opioid-related events.

On July 6, Price again made an opioid-related visit to Chattanooga, Tennessee, where he took a private plane, according to two sources with knowledge of the situation. According to records, HHS signed a $14,570 charter plane contract for Washington to Tennessee travel with a July 6 effective date.

In June, Price spoke at a physicians association conference in San Diego, where he vowed to wring out wasteful spending in the government's health care programs. Getting "value" for spending "is incredibly important," he said.

Price took a private plane to get to the meeting, which was one stop on a five-state sprint of charter travel that cost $50,420.

Josh Dawsey and Josh Gerstein contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA watchdog expands investigation into Pruitt's travel Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/06/2017 03:26 PM EDT

EPA's inspector general says it is expanding the scope of its previously announced probe into Administrator Scott Pruitt's travel to include all of his travel.

The IG's office already opened an audit of Pruitt's travel to and from Oklahoma following complaints that he spent too much time back in his home state. In recent weeks, Democratic lawmakers and outside groups have called for the IG to look at whether Pruitt's non-commercial flights were necessary and appropriate expenses.

According to a memo dated Thursday and released today, the significantly expanded scope will consider the "frequency, cost and extent" of Pruitt's travel through Sept. 30, as well as whether agency procedures were followed by Pruitt, his security and his staff, and whether those procedures are properly designed to prevent fraud, waste or abuse.

"To accomplish these objectives, we will review supporting documentation and conduct interviews with management and staff to determine whether the EPA followed applicable policies and practices, and complied with federal requirements," the memo says.

WHAT'S NEXT: The investigation is likely to take several months to complete.

To view online click here.

Back

Watchdog group requests Hatch Act probe of Zinke's appearance at Virgin Islands Back

By Nick Juliano, Ben Lefebvre and Esther Whieldon | 10/06/2017 06:14 PM EDT

A watchdog group is asking the Justice Department's Office of Special Council to open a Hatch Act investigation into Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke after POLITICO reported he had appeared at a political fundraiser in the U.S. Virgin Islands while on an official trip less than a month after being confirmed.

Donors who gave the Virgin Islands Republican Party between $1,500 and $5,000 per couple were invited to get their photos taken with Zinke at the March 30 event, according to a copy of the invitation seen by POLITICO and Zinke's official schedule.

The nonprofit Campaign Legal Center says that activity may have run afoul of the federal law prohibiting federal officials from using government resources to engage in partisan political activity.

"This activity constitutes impermissible solicitation of political contributions if event organizers conditioned the opportunity to take a photograph with Secretary Zinke on paying a higher fee," writes Walter Shaub, the Campaign Legal Center's senior director for ethics, in a request to the OSC, citing POLITICO's story.

The invitation to the event said donors could get into the event at a St. Croix hotel with a contribution of as little as $75. Zinke's official schedule from that day said he participated in a photo line with "host committee" members and "patrons" at the event. Those designations were given to donors who gave $1,500 or $5,000 per couple, according to the invitation.

Shaub, a former director of the U.S. Office of Government Ethics, asked the OSC to investigate whether lower-paying guests also were allowed into the photo line. "Should OSC determine that this privilege was reserved for host committee members and Patrons, OSC should take action against Secretary Zinke," he writes.

The OSC typically opens an investigation in response to complaints it receives.

Interior officials have said all of Zinke's travel was legal and cleared in advance with ethics officials. A spokeswoman did not immediately respond to a request for comment on the Campaign Legal Center's request.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump's Interior chief 'hopping around from campaign event to campaign event' Back

By Ben Lefebvre and Esther Whieldon | 10/05/2017 05:01 AM EDT

Republican donors paid up to $5,000 per couple for a photo with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke at a fundraiser held during a taxpayer-funded trip to the U.S. Virgin Islands, according to documents reviewed by POLITICO — raising questions about his habit of mixing official government business with political activism.

The new details about Zinke's March trip to the Caribbean, including the previously undisclosed invitation to the Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser, emerged after weeks of scrutiny of the former Montana GOP congressman's travels. The nearly two-hour event was one of more than a half-dozen times Zinke has met with big donors or political groups while on department-paid trips, Interior travel records and other documents show.

Ethics watchdogs say Zinke is combining politics with his Interior duties so frequently that he risks tripping over the prohibitions against using government resources for partisan activity, even though his appearance at the Virgin Islands event seems to have been legal. Democrats have also seized on the issue, including 26 House members who wrote in a letter Tuesday that Zinke's travels "give the appearance that you are mixing political gatherings and personal destinations with official business."

Zinke has said all his actions have obeyed the law, dismissing concerns about his travel as "a little BS."

But some ethics advocates say Zinke's attendance at a fundraiser during his first month as secretary is not in line with past administrations' conduct, even if he crossed no legal red lines.

"It happens on occasion with other Cabinet secretaries, perhaps even a little more often as you get near the election, but it is not a very common practice for Cabinet members to be hopping around from campaign event to campaign event like we're seeing with Zinke," said Craig Holman, government affairs specialist for government watchdog Public Citizen.

The secretary is already under investigation by his department's inspector general over his use of taxpayer-funded private planes for some of the trips, and the Justice Department's Office of Special Counsel is looking into an activist group's allegations that he violated the Hatch Act, the law limiting political activism by federal employees. The White House has cracked down on Cabinet members' travel habits following former HHS Secretary Tom Price's resignation on Friday, which occurred after POLITICO reported on his own expensive flights.

Zinke visited the Virgin Islands from March 30 to April 1 on an official trip related to the Interior Department's role overseeing the U.S. territory. On his first day, following a "veterans meet and greet" and a reception with Gov. Kenneth Mapp, he appeared in his personal capacity at a March fundraiser for the local Republican Party at the patio bar of the Club Comanche Hotel St. Croix, department records show.

Tickets for the fundraiser ranged from $75 per person to as much as $5,000 per couple to be an event "Patron," according to Zinke's official calendar and a copy of the invitation. Patrons and members of the host committee, who paid $1,500 per couple, could get a photo with Zinke at the start of the event, which was attended by local party members and elected officials.

The following day, Zinke took a $3,150 flight on a private plane, paid for by the department, from St. Croix to official functions on St. Thomas and returned later that evening. Interior Department officials said there was no other way to accommodate his schedule, which included official events on both islands commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Dutch government transferring control of the islands to the United States.

Zinke is allowed to engage in partisan political activity in a "purely personal (not official) capacity," so long as he does not use government resources, according to Interior Department guidelines on the Hatch Act and other federal laws. The invitation to the GOP fundraiser did not identify Zinke by his official title and included a disclaimer that the money is being solicited by the local party and "not by any federal official."

All told, Zinke has spent around $20,000 for three charter flights as secretary, nowhere near the $1 million tab Price racked up on non-commercial trips. But he has on numerous occasions attended political receptions, spoken to influential conservative groups or appeared alongside past campaign donors during trips has taken outside of Washington, D.C., for official department business.

In one instance, Zinke gave a motivational speech for a professional hockey team owned by a major campaign contributor that he said was official business — and which required him to charter a $12,000 flight to Montana for an appearance at the Western Governors Association the next day.

In another case, during a speech to the Western Conservative Summit in Denver, he was introduced via a recorded voice as the Interior secretary and Zinke proceeded to talk about the agency's priorities. The summit was organized by the Centennial Institute, which bills itself as Colorado Christian University's think tank and is a part of the State Policy Network of organizations that collectively push for conservative state-level legislation.

An Interior spokeswoman said Zinke always follows the law but declined to answer specific questions about his appearance at the Virgin Islands fundraiser, nor say whether he would keep raising political money. The agency also has yet to post Zinke's trip expenses involving any of the political events.

"The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources," spokeswoman Heather Swift said in a statement.

Swift did not respond to questions about whether the department had gotten reimbursement for the political portion of Zinke's three-day Virgin Islands trip, as the head of one watchdog group says it should have.

"Some of this travel is clearly political and that part of the travel should have been paid for by the RNC, NRCC, state political parties, a campaign committee or Zinke personally," said Daniel Stevens, executive director of the Campaign for Accountability.

No payments to the department are listed in the Virgin Islands Republican Party's FEC records.

Zinke is not the first Interior secretary, or Cabinet member, to have his activities questioned.

In 2012, a watchdog group called Cause of Action urged the Office of Special Counsel to investigate whether President Barack Obama's then- Interior Secretary Ken Salazar had violated the Hatch Act while taking an Obama reelection campaign RV tour of Colorado with a couple of lawmakers and the state lieutenant governor. Local organizers of one stop on that tour had billed Salazar on its online events calendar as attending the political rally in his official role. OSC would not say whether its investigation uncovered any problems, but travel records Interior has posted show that one of Salazar's aides had told the tour's coordinator the schedule "should not refer to (Salazar as) 'secretary.'" Salazar did not respond to a request for comment.

A former Salazar aide, who was not authorized to speak on the record, said the Obama administration generally tried to avoid scheduling political events that coincided with official travel because it was difficult to divvy up what expenses should be reimbursed by a campaign.

The special counsel's office found Obama HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius in violation of the Hatch Act in 2012, saying she had made "extemporaneous partisan remarks" by endorsing a candidate for North Carolina governor during a speech she made in her official capacity.

Sebelius tried to scrub the violation by reclassifying the appearance as political and reimbursing the Treasury Department for costs associated with the trip.

Sally Jewell, who was Interior secretary during Obama's second term, said Zinke was within his rights to appear at the fundraiser in the Virgin Islands. Jewell said she once appeared at a fundraiser for Democratic Sen. Maria Cantwell while in Obama's Cabinet, though she paid her own way to Washington state and was not identified by her official title.

"If he had legitimate business while he's on the island, to do a political thing on the side, I don't think that is that unusual," Jewell said in an interview.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt canceled his scheduled appearance at a fundraiser for the Oklahoma Republican Party in April because an invitation had identified him by his official title and said he would discuss his work at the agency. EPA ethics officials said he would have been cleared to attend the event if not for that language on the invitation.

Watchdog groups say Zinke's behavior fits a pattern for Trump's Cabinet.

"These government resources have been abused by this administration," said Virginia Canter, an executive branch ethics counsel for Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington who previously worked as an ethics official for Presidents George H.W. Bush, George W. Bush and Obama. "To the extent that some of that supports their political ambitions is inconsistent with the intent of this authority."

The Campaign for Accountability called on Interior's inspector general and the Office of Special Counsel to investigate whether Zinke violated the Hatch Act or department ethics rules with his speech to the hockey team, which the group said appeared to be a favor for a donor. Interior's IG office announced its investigation earlier this week, and OSC told the Campaign for Accountability that it was looking into the group's complaint, according to an email shared with POLITICO. The OSC declined to comment.

Reps. Raúl Grijalva (D-Ariz.) and Donald McEachin (D-Va.) have asked Interior's IG to also look into any trips on which the secretary was accompanied by his wife, Lola Zinke, who is chairing the campaign of Montana Republican Troy Downing, a candidate to unseat Democratic Sen. Jon Tester next year. Swift said Lola Zinke was not in the Virgin Islands and has paid her own way whenever she has traveled with her husband on official trips.

Many who know him see Zinke's travels as an attempt to keep in touch with political contacts as he contemplates what he will do after leaving the Trump administration. Back home, the 55-year-old former Montana congressman is seen as an attractive candidate for the open-seat governor's race in 2020, when Democratic Gov. Steve Bullock will have to step down because of term limits.

"I think he's definitely got political aspirations; that's one of the reasons why he is where he is at right now," said Land Tawney, executive director of Backcountry Hunters and Anglers, a Montana-based sportsman group that supported Zinke's bid for Interior secretary. "You don't go from being a Montana legislator to a first-term congressman to [Interior] secretary without having ambition."

The Virgin Islands trip was Zinke's first interaction with big donors or influential conservative groups during his travel as Interior secretary.

A weeklong trip in May that took Zinke through Montana, Utah and California also offered a chance to squeeze in some political events.

Zinke delivered the keynote speech at the RNC spring meeting on May 11 in Coronado, Calif. Zinke had flown to California the previous night, after several days touring monuments in Utah, and the RNC speech was his only event in the state aside from a meeting earlier that afternoon with Rep. Amata Radewagen, the Republican delegate from American Samoa, and members of the American Tunaboat Association.

The next day, Zinke flew back to Montana, where he joined Sen. Steve Daines (R-Mont.) and Vice President Mike Pence to tour a coal mine on the Crow Indian reservation operated by the Westmoreland Coal Co.

The trip offered Zinke and Pence an opportunity to tout the Trump administration's work to promote new coal mining on federal lands — and it allowed them to make a brief detour to promote Zinke's congressional replacement. That Friday night, Zinke, Pence and Daines attended a political rally for GOP candidate Greg Gianforte, and Zinke attended a get-out-the vote event for the Montana GOP the next day.

Zinke apparently paid for his return trip to Washington out of his own pocket — it was marked "personal travel" on his calendar, a designation not applied to the other flights on that trip.

Gianforte, whose wife is a major political donor in Montana, won the May 25 special election to take over Zinke's House seat.

Greg and Susan Gianforte donated more than $10,000 to Zinke's 2016 congressional campaign and another $10,000 to a joint Zinke-Daines PAC, according to federal records. The couple donated $5,000 for his earlier run for Congress.

Zinke met with big influencers and donors in June as well.

On June 25, he flew from D.C. to Reno, Nev., where his only scheduled event was a meeting of the Rule of Law Defense Fund, a group of Republican attorneys general that has been linked to the Koch brothers, where he spoke and took questions for about 30 minutes, according to his schedule.

After his remarks, he sat at a dinner table with Montana's attorney general, the government relations specialist for the Venetian Resort Hotel Casino and Las Vegas Sands, and Koch Industries lobbyist Allen Richardson, Interior documents show.

The next day, Zinke flew to Las Vegas for an event on public lands in nearby Pahrump, Nev., and a speech that night to the National Hockey League's Vegas Golden Knights. Bill Foley, the team owner and chairman of Fidelity, introduced Zinke. Foley donated $7,800 to Zinke's 2014 campaign, while employees and PACs associated with Fidelity and related companies gave another $180,000. Interior officials said the speech to the NHL team was part of Zinke's official duties, and they pointed to scheduling conflicts it created to justify his use of a $12,000 private plane to get to a Western Governors Association meeting in Montana the next day.

In July, Zinke spoke to several conservative groups in Colorado during a three-day trip that also included tours of Interior Department facilities in the state. He flew into Denver on July 20 so he could appear that evening at a closed-door reception for the American Legislative Exchange Council, a group of conservative state legislators, lobbyists and industry groups that has pushed for more state control over federal lands.

And over the next two days, he was a featured speaker at a Republican committee roundtable and attended the Western Conservative Summit in Denver.

Eric Wolff contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump administration does not plan to extend Puerto Rico Jones Act waiver past Sunday Back

By Ben Lefebvre | 10/06/2017 03:58 PM EDT

Foreign vessels may soon be barred again from delivering goods from other U.S. ports to disaster-struck Puerto Rico, DHS said today.

The administration does not plan on renewing the Jones Act waiver, DHS spokesman David Lapan said. The 10-day waiver issued last month ends on Sunday, after which foreign vessels will no longer be able to load ships at domestic ports for delivery to the U.S. territory; those ships will have until Oct. 18 to deliver their cargoes.

"We believe that extending the waiver is unnecessary to support the humanitarian relief efforts on the island," Lapan said in an email to POLITICO. "There is an ample supply of Jones Act-qualified vessels to ensure that cargo is able to reach Puerto Rico."

President Trump authorized a lifting of the Jones Act on Sept. 28 to help deliver fuel and other goods after Hurricane Maria devastated Puerto Rico a week earlier. The island is still recovering from the storm, with electricity only reaching a small fraction of the population.

Rep. Nydia Velazquez (D-N.Y.) sent a letter to Trump today asking that the waiver be extended for at least a year, her spokesman said, arguing that reinstating it will drive up the cost of shipping supplies to the island.

WHAT'S NEXT: The waiver will end Sunday unless another request is received.

To view online click here.

Back

State Dept's Shannon to lead U.S. delegation to climate talks Back

By Andrew Restuccia | 10/06/2017 07:18 PM EDT

Thomas Shannon, the State Department's undersecretary for political affairs, will lead the U.S. delegation to a major international climate change summit next month in Bonn, Germany, according to an administration official.

The news comes amid swirling rumors that Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt was angling to lead the delegation, a move that would have made a skeptic of established climate science the face of the United States at the talks.

In previous years, the State Department's climate envoy led the U.S. delegation to the annual gathering. But the Trump administration has declined to fill that position.

The Bonn negotiations are aimed at implementing the 2015 Paris climate change agreement, from which President Donald Trump has said he intends to withdraw.

Neither the White House nor the State Department responded to requests for comment.

To view online click here.

Back

D.C. Circuit: FERC must consider GHG emissions tied to gas pipelines Back

By Esther Whieldon | 08/22/2017 11:38 AM EDT

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit ruled today that FERC must consider the potential greenhouse gas emissions that could result from its 2016 approval of three natural gas pipeline segments in the Southeast, marking a major victory for environmental groups.

The court vacated FERC's approval of the Southeast Market Pipelines Project's three natural gas pipelines now under construction in Alabama, Georgia and Florida, and said the agency must redo the environmental impact statement it used in its decision.

Two of the three judges on court's panel rejected FERC's assertions that it could not know the level of GHG emissions that would result from its projects, specifically from power plants burning the natural gas the pipelines would provide.

"We conclude that at a minimum, FERC should have estimated the amount of power-plant carbon emissions that the pipelines will make possible," the opinion said, agreeing with the Sierra Club's arguments.

The court in 2016 made a much different ruling when it held FERC did not evaluate the climate change effects of exporting natural gas from LNG terminals since the agency had no legal authority to consider the environmental harm those exports may cause.

But Judge Janice Rogers Brown, a President George W. Bush appointee, dissented and said FERC lacks authority in this case as well, and is not required to consider the downstream emissions. "The truth is that FERC has no control over whether the power plants that will emit these greenhouse gases will come into existence or remain in operation," Brown said.

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC will have to rerun its EIS for the pipeline projects.

To view online click here.

Back

FERC amends pipeline study to add climate impact Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/27/2017 04:31 PM EDT

FERC announced today that it is amending an environmental study for a natural gas pipeline to meet a federal court's requirement that it include an assessment of greenhouse gas emissions from the power plants that may use the fuel.

The new 5-page analysis of the Southeast Market Pipelines Project, which consists of three natural gas pipelines under construction in Alabama, Georgia and Florida, conducted by FERC staff says they "would not result in a significant impact on the environment" so long as the developer followed the mitigation measures mentioned in the final 2015 environmental impact statement.

The original EIS didn't include an assessment of carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide emissions associated with use and combustion of the natural gas that would be transported by the project when it was done. Last month, the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals sided with the Sierra Club and vacated FERC's approval of the project, saying the agency must redo the EIS it used in its decision.

FERC's move to issue a supplemental EIS on greenhouse gas emissions suggests that it may not appeal the court's decision.

The analysis also states that using the social cost of carbon in its greenhouse gas analysis "is not appropriate for use in any project-level NEPA review."

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC has until Oct. 6 to decide whether it will appeal the D.C. Circuit's Aug. 22 ruling, which could require the agency to revisit the EISs it conducted for several pipelines.

To view online click here.

Back

The Strange Political Afterlife of Arnold Schwarzenegger Back

By Edward-Isaac Dove | 10/06/2017 05:04 AM EDT

MUNICH, Germany—The Governor is off to conduct the band at his favorite beer tent at Oktoberfest. Why? Well, he finished his salty half-chicken, gave the photographers the pose he knew they wanted—the one in which he's holding the giant beer stein and mime-biting the oversize pretzel—and he's not quite ready for dessert.

Oh, but why? Because he wants to. The crowd chants his name. He crouches forward, making a show of drawing out the tubas with his fingers. He does a muscleman pose. He pretends to blow a trumpet. In the beer tent, he makes his pecs dance.

Welcome to the strange and wondrous political afterlife of Arnold Schwarzenegger, a rural Austrian kid who parlayed his success as perhaps the greatest bodybuilder of all time into a lucrative career as Hollywood's top action hero, then parlayed that into becoming the improbable Republican governor of California for two terms.

Now, six years after leaving Sacramento, he's still reinventing himself—as a kind of globetrotting do-gooder, promoting a handful of causes like fighting climate change and gerrymandering. But mostly, he's having a hell of a good time. Wherever he goes, everybody knows him. Everybody loves him. With a net worth estimated at $300 million, he zips around the world in private jets and has restaurant owners pick up his tab because they're just so honored he chose to eat there. Constant selfies. He sounds off on whatever he wants, but has no actual responsibility. His perfect day is waking up and not knowing what country he'll eat dinner in.

On this particular Tuesday afternoon, Schwarzenegger is stopping at the Munich Oktoberfest just for fun, part of a whirlwind 10-day European tour that began with inspirational speeches in England, then a jaunt to a factory in Austria to test out the new electric Hummer converted just for him, then to Barcelona for his Arnold Classic bodybuilding tournament, then popping up to San Sebastián, Spain, to premiere the 3-D "Wonders of the Sea" movie from Jean-Michel Cousteau that he narrated and produced. Then here to Munich, for a stop he's been making regularly since he was a young bodybuilder and won a stone-lifting contest (508 German pounds, or about 560 American pounds). The next day, he'll have his assistant scramble a plane for a drop-in at Arnie's Life Museum, the Schwarzenegger shrine in the house where he grew up in the hills outside Graz, Austria. Then, it's back to the U.S. to hear oral arguments in Gill v. Whitford, the nonpartisan redistricting case that's become his latest passion, and to L.A. again to host an appreciation dinner for Republicans in the California Legislature who backed his push for a stiffer crackdown on greenhouse gases.

All of a sudden, a guy who just turned 70—in Barcelona, he celebrated the 50th anniversary of winning Mr. Universe, which began his breakthrough—and had seen politics pass him by is ... back. But why? Schwarzenegger is barred from another run for governor and has no interest in the Senate; a certain clause in the Constitution is keeping him out of the White House. He's making movies again, though nothing huge. In a Hillary Clinton presidency, he had been planning to be one of the Republican moderate voices urging his party to find ways to work together. The Schwarzenegger Institute at USC would be hosting after-school program summits and earnest environmental speeches. It would have been his own peculiar form of keeping busy, but with nothing like the urgency he feels now.

Instead, Schwarzenegger is back in the public eye because of what he calls "a disastrous situation"—the Trump presidency. It's the topic he can't escape, even at his news conference in San Sebastián about the oceans documentary. What do you think of Trump? What do you think people should do about Trump? In Spain, he deflects. He's there to promote the movie, and he wants the headline to be about Cousteau's film, which he backed because the French oceanographer convinced him that people will be more likely to save the ocean if they fall in love with it.

In the air two days later, flying back from checking in on his museum, he answers: He avoids talking about Trump in these situations because after all those years of having cameras chase him wherever he goes, he knows how the media work—whatever he says about Trump becomes the quote, and he wants to talk about his other causes.

But Schwarzenegger is perfectly happy to blow his way into Trump's spotlight when it suits him—he even keeps a bobblehead of Trump in his kitchen that he used for a viral video in which he lectured the president about racism. Cameras swarmed his after-school summit at USC this year after he made another video slamming Trump for a budget proposing major cuts, and Trump took time out of the National Prayer Breakfast to swipe at him. Every word he says about environmentalism gets more attention since Trump announced the withdrawal from the Paris global climate accord, and he gets to brag about relative GDP growth on his watch: "If the federal government, Republicans and Democrats, and Donald Trump and his whole White House would be smart, they would just copy exactly what we are doing in California," he said in Spain.

He also gets Trump on a visceral level—like they're twins, say, separated at birth. They are the same age. Both have been global celebrities for decades—Schwarzenegger ever since he first won the Mr. Universe competition at age 20, which he later said was "my ticket to America, the land of opportunity, where I could become a star and get rich." Each has a history of boasting about his sexual conquests and an instinct for the viral quote—like Schwarzenegger's famous riff comparing pumping iron to orgasms. One man claims never to have had a headache, stomachache or allergy; the other's doctor declared him the fittest man ever to seek the presidency. One was underestimated by political elites because of his Austrian accent and bulging physique; the other due to his outer-borough mannerisms and outrageous statements. And whereas Arnold's fame skyrocketed, thanks to showdowns with Lou Ferrigno and the evil T-1000, Donald has turned his penchant for tabloid-fueled feuds into a governing philosophy.

So doesn't it complicate things to have people ask him about Trump all the time, to have the leader of the free world tweet about his Celebrity Apprentice ratings?

Not at all, Schwarzenegger says. "Trump helps me." And maybe, in a way, he's even doing more good than harm. "A lot of times, we crucify Trump for doing certain things, and then in the end, deep down inside, [it's like] 'Well actually, that was helpful,'" he says. "People get more educated because he starts talking about things that no one ever thought about."

Schwarzenegger's father was literally a Nazi, though an investigation by the Simon Wiesenthal Center found no evidence his dad had ever committed any atrocities. The general subject of Nazis is one he usually avoids, but he says he can't understand Trump's reluctance to condemn the white supremacists after violent protests in Charlottesville, Virginia.

"We have seen the history of that kind of behavior. It's not like this is new," he tells me. "This has always gone in the wrong fucking direction in history. I'm not a history buff or anything, but there's one thing I know: that that is not good."

"Last Action Hero!" an American woman in the crowd shouts as he walks off the bandstand.

"Save America, Arnold!" shouts another next to her.

***

Last Action Hero*, Schwarzenegger tells me later, was a movie he knew was bad as they were making it. The director said he wanted to make E.T. That's not going to work, he remembers saying in his trailer. People come to see an Arnold Schwarzenegger movie, they hear the words "last action hero" and they figure no one else survives and he's shooting his way through.

This is what it's like to hang out with the Governor, who had invited me to tag along with him in Europe because ... well, I'm not exactly sure why. He is bursting with theories and opinions about everything, and enjoys talking about movies, and politics, and culture, and sports, and public policy—and whatever else crosses his mind.

Now we're in the backyard of his childhood home that's been turned into a museum, a two-story yellow house stuffed with memorabilia from his weightlifting and movie careers. For reasons no one can quite explain, the yard is now filled with a collection of giant Transformers sculptures. He wasn't in any of the movies, and he's only seen the first one (it didn't hold him, he says, because it was all explosions and no plot). Nowadays, his tastes run to artier fare, like Black Swan or Dunkirk—lots of shooting and stuff blowing up, but with a point.

There are three mannequins of him inside, plus the giant flexing bronze outside by the front door. He makes fun of the haircut on the one from his bodybuilding days, now standing in what used to be his parents' bedroom.

"What's it like to have a museum to yourself?" I ask him as he takes a seat at a table set up for us downstairs with glasses of schnapps and a spread of pastries. "I don't think about it," he says. He has a jelly-filled doughnut, and launches into a 10-minute speech about what he learned from the local politicians he admired in Austria as a teenager.

Schwarzenegger speaks in sports metaphors. He says that every policy debate, even health care, has a sweet spot that would make it fly if everyone could just work together to hit it. He also talks in terms of machines and guns, when he's not throwing in the odd reference to Milton Friedman. Certain people have a chip wrong in them, he'll say, or he'll explain the philosophy of how he pursues his causes by imagining how a robot from the future might do it. "It's the shotgun approach versus the rifle approach. This is the rifle approach. Specific target. This is where I go. Let's not spread out and try five different things," he says.

Schwarzenegger throws his money around for what he believes in—"I couldn't tell you a system. It's really a gut reaction kind of thing," he says. He talks about it in $100,000 chunks. After Charlottesville, the Simon Wiesenthal Center got a chunk, plus all the proceeds from a "Terminate Hate" T-shirt he had made up with red, white and blue flowers sticking out of the barrel in one of his most iconic images, the one of him in the leather jacket and sunglasses. The center's founder, Rabbi Marvin Hier—also famous for delivering the Jewish blessing at Trump's inauguration—questioned whether they should have a gun on an anti-hate T-shirt. Come on, Schwarzenegger told him. It's the Terminator.

He got involved in after-school programs after visiting schools while working on the president's council on fitness in the 1980s. The Special Olympics taught him the value of government funding. He recycled before he was elected, but only when he was governor did he get interested in actual environmental policy. Infrastructure and immigration stuck with him, and above all, to his surprise, he became attached to the issues of gerrymandering and election reform.

"There were certain things that stuck because I got exposed to it, and then all of a sudden, something in me found great joy in it," he says.

Schwarzenegger has always been ambitious—he's a firm believer in having a vision of success, and willing it to happen, like the first time he bench-pressed 500 pounds—but he got into politics on a whim. He tells the story like this: When he started in movies, Sylvester Stallone was the enemy. Schwarzenegger didn't like him, and didn't like that he was the top box-office draw. He set out to take him down. Twenty years later, he felt like California's then-governor Gray Davis was a jerk to him in a meeting about after-school programs, and suddenly the Terminator became obsessed with knocking him out.

In San Sebastián, over red wine and cheese and bread—after years of fanatic abstemious dieting, he's happy to indulge in some carbs—he whips out his iPad and records a video that he turns into an endorsement on the fly for Rep. Rod Blum, the Iowa Republican who was one of the three dozen members of Congress whom Schwarzenegger called last month, urging them to sign on to an amicus brief in the gerrymandering case. Somewhere over France on the way to Munich the next morning, he tinkers with a statement on an arcane dispute between two warring bodybuilding federations. In Graz the next day, he bats around taking up Prince Albert's offer to have a private jet pick him up for a gala in Monaco celebrating Leonardo DiCaprio and protecting the oceans. Ultimately, he decides not to go. But he was never going to get in a tuxedo for it—"I don't like rules," he explains.

At the Supreme Court on Tuesday for the gerrymandering arguments, he couldn't get around the no cellphone rule. Schwarzenegger loves FaceTime and Snapchat; once, he even pulled out his iPad to record a video in the middle of a papal mass at the Vatican. But he loved seeing the justices in action for the first time, remarking on how they jumped all over the lawyers arguing the case, and each other.

Outside, on the court steps, he rebuts the conservative justices' main argument against killing gerrymandering: that it's a political problem, and not one the courts should adjudicate. "As Einstein said, those who created the problem will not be able to solve it," Schwarzenegger says.

Afterward, at a rally for Common Cause, the good-government group, he explains why of all things, he's made this his cause. In California, he saw gerrymandering lead to the parties running to their respective corners and not getting anything done, and he says the same thing has happened in Washington. "It's time to say, 'Hasta la vista' to gerrymandering. Terminate it!"

The way Schwarzenegger sees it, nothing major has gotten done in America since 2000. Congress has a lower approval rating than herpes, he likes to joke. So that's where he comes in.

"I came to America. I made my money in America. Now, let's fix America," he told me. His adopted country is starting to come apart, he worries, and it's because no one has shown the leadership to bring it together.

"I see down the line a decline, and we get a little bit of a taste of that now. There is a lack of working together. No one sees themselves as a team. It's all about 'Me, me, me.' That's not America," he says. "My biggest fear is: If this plane takes off and the pilot doesn't know where we're going, we'll be flying around and we may crash. Because no one was telling where we're going. Same thing with this."

***

A friend of Schwarzenegger's, the German bodybuilder-turned-actor Ralf Möller, a towering hulk of a man who played a bruiser in Gladiator, tells me at Oktoberfest that he wants me to write that his friend should be secretary of state.

How about that?, I ask Schwarzenegger later.

He responds by rattling off other jobs that might interest him—EPA, Energy. But the State idea clearly intrigues him.

"It's just that if a president asks me, and says, 'Go and step in, you could really move the agenda,' of course, I would do it. We would figure out the rules, figure out what I can do, am I just a puppet in there—'Do I have to ask some schmuck from the White House to go and make a move?'" he says, the misadventures of Rex Tillerson and Jeff Sessions on his mind. "No, I would never do that, because my ego would never allow it. And the country doesn't deserve it."

He says he'd even consider it if the call came in from Trump. His ex-wife's mother, Eunice Kennedy Shriver, he says, taught him, "You never ever turn down a president." (Later, he jokes: "Maybe I can't be in the Cabinet because I fly commercial too much.")

The job he really wants, he knows, is out of reach. "I'd be running in two seconds if I was born in America," he says.

Flying back from his old house to his fancy hotel in Munich in the private jet, having happily obliged the latest airport police officer who slyly slid out his phone for a picture with him, he says he's made his peace with that.

"I can't make myself be angry about it because everything else that I've accomplished is because of America. So how can I complain about the one thing that I can't do? Hello? Look where I'm sitting," he says. "I didn't even dream half of it."

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson

Bld. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

---

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by ExxonMobil: Fireworks expected as White, Wheeler head to EPW — Democrats demand EPA officials testify — Reading the leaves on FERC comments
Date: Wednesday, November 08, 2017 5:43:40 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 11/08/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén, Esther Whieldon, Darius Dixon and Eric Wolff

EPW TAKES UP WHEELER, WHITE NOMS: The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee will hear from two high-profile environmental nominees today: Andrew Wheeler for deputy EPA administrator and Kathleen Hartnett White to lead the White House's Council on Environmental Quality. White has a long history of controversial statements for Democrats to pull from, including her belief that "carbon dioxide is not a pollutant," her declaration that those who believe in climate change subscribe to a "kind of paganism," for "secular elites," and her 2014 blog post arguing fossil fuels helped end slavery in America.

But White's biggest liability may prove to be her position on the Renewable Fuel Standard. As ME wrote last week, Republican Sens. Deb Fischer and Joni Ernst are wary of White, who in 2013 called for repeal of the "counterproductive and ethically dubious" RFS. A single EPW defection could tank White's nomination, and Ernst proved last month with EPA air nominee William Wehrum that she's willing to walk the walk when defending ethanol.

Ranking member Tom Carper summed up his questions for White to ME: "I just want to ask her, 'Did you really say those things?' And there's a lot of them." Ahead of the hearing, nearly 50 environmental advocates sent a letter urging the committee to oppose her nomination. "Ms. White is unfit to hold the highest environmental post in the government to advise the president on the most pressing environmental issues our nation faces," the letter, signed by groups such as 350.org, the Natural Resources Defense Council and the Sierra Club, said.

More familiar face: Wheeler, meanwhile, is a known quantity for lawmakers who have been around for a while. He worked for Sen. Jim Inhofe in various capacities until 2009, when he departed as EPW staff director. He's been an attorney and lobbyist at Faegre Baker Daniels ever since, with his most notable client being Murray Energy, whose owner has proven adept at influencing the Trump administration. ME will be watching to see whether lawmakers delve into Wheeler's work with the ethanol group Growth Energy, which was first reported by POLITICO last month.

If you go: The hearing is at 10 a.m. in Dirksen 406.

BRIDENSTINE GETS COMMITTEE VOTE: The Senate Commerce Committee votes on Oklahoma Republican Rep. Jim Bridenstine's nomination to run NASA at 9:45 a.m. along with several other nominations. He's faced sharp criticism from Democrats, including ranking member Bill Nelson who slammed him in the nomination during his confirmation hearing: "NASA is not political. The leader should not be political." The panel also votes on Neil Jacobs' selection for another top NOAA post.

WELCOME TO WEDNESDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and the American Chemistry Council's Jonathan Corley was first to identify Sen. John Hoeven as the past president of North Dakota's state bank. For today: The father of which senator served three terms of governor of their state before corruption convictions ended their career? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

BIG NIGHT FOR DEMOCRATS: The League of Conservation Voters' $4 million investment in Virginia races paid off handsomely as Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam trounced Republican Ed Gillespie to become the commonwealth's next governor. In New Jersey, Democrat Phil Murphy (also backed by green groups) decisively beat Lt. Gov. Kim Guadagno for the governorship. In Flint, Mich., Mayor Karen Weaver survived a recall attempt by a wide margin. And Democrat Manka Dhingra appeared poised to win a Washington state Senate seat, effectively handing control of the entire state government to her party in a special election that drew millions in outside spending.

DEMOCRATS: IT'S TIME! More than 10 months after his confirmation, Senate and House Democrats are officially fed up with EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's absence from congressional oversight hearings. After calling the lack of agency witnesses "unacceptable" during a Tuesday hearing, Energy and Commerce ranking member Frank Pallone demanded Chairman Greg Walden hold oversight hearings on EPA's review and management of chemicals under the revised Toxic Substances Control Act. "The Committee bears a responsibility to the American public to make sure EPA is protecting human health and the environment," he wrote, joined by senior committee Democrats Paul Tonko and Diana DeGette.

Not alone: All 16 Democrats on the House Science Committee sent their own letter to Chairman Lamar Smith demanding Pruitt come testify "as soon as possible," pointing out Gina McCarthy came before the full panel just four months after confirmation. "Not only is such oversight routine, but as a public official Administrator Pruitt has an obligation to address his conduct and management of EPA," they wrote.

And Carper too: "I wonder what my friend John Barrasso would have said if Gina McCarthy had refused to come before our committee for months? I wonder what my Republican EPW colleagues would have said if our committee hadn't held a single oversight hearing after a Democratic administration had issued multiple environmental executive orders and was the subject of several ongoing investigations? I heard them push for transparency for eight years, but suddenly there's silence over the last eight months."

TELL ME HOW YOU REALLY FEEL ABOUT THE DOE RULE (AGAIN!): Reply comments were due at FERC Tuesday night, and there was no less passion in this set of filings than in the first round two weeks ago. But ME was hard-pressed to see if anyone had really budged from their positions. FirstEnergy's comments started with a refrain that was almost poetic. "This proceeding is not about picking fuel supply winners and losers. This proceeding is not about the reliability of natural gas pipelines... This proceeding is not about the Polar Vortex..." former FERC general counsel Bill Scherman wrote on the company's behalf. Instead, the company pressed for its own resiliency tariffs that would serve as a Band-Aid until new market rules were crafted. "Simply put, the imminent closure of resilient generation presents a clear and present danger to the Nation," Scherman wrote, echoing the call of Energy Secretary Rick Perry. "If the Commission does not act now, our national security will be put at risk."

Where FirstEnergy downplayed the usefulness of the 2014 "polar vortex," Murray

Energy argued the critics just don't get it. "During the Polar Vortex, the country was relying on an unacceptably high percentage of interruptible gas-fired generation," the company said. There's been too much talk as it is, Murray said, and "FERC appears to have lost its moorings." Murray's filing even refers to an article by House Science Chairman Lamar Smith to tally how the federal government has repeatedly created energy subsidies with everything from tax policy to R&D funding.

Among those who tried to find middle ground was PJM itself, a critic and central target of Perry's plan, arguing that FERC should approve an alternative proposal that instructs all the grid operators to report back with new pricing or tariff proposals within 180 days. It also suggests creating a new docket aimed at defining resilience.

SOLAR FOR PUERTO RICO: The Solar Foundation, along with a host of companies and the Clinton Foundation, is launching an industry-wide push to get the lights back on in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Initial priorities will be restoring electricity to two food markets in San Juan and 62 rural medical clinics around the island. More on the project, Solar Saves Lives, available here.

** Presented by ExxonMobil: We're collaborating with FuelCell Energy on a novel idea to use fuel cells to capture carbon at natural gas power plants, and in the process reduce emissions and increase electrical output. This technology could be a game changer in addressing the world's growing need for energy, while also reducing the impact on the environment. Learn more. **

HYDROPOWER BILL STREAMS ONTO FLOOR: House lawmakers are expected today to consider H.R. 3043 \(115\), which would revamp the licensing process for hydropower projects. Ahead of the vote, utility and labor groups sent a letter encouraging support for what they called "a moderate proposal developed with bipartisan input" and warned "the current regulatory environment is placing hydropower at risk."

MODERATE CLIMATE REPUBLICAN HEADS FOR THE EXITS: South Jersey Republican Rep. Frank LoBiondo, one of the few congressional GOPers to land environmental group endorsements in recent years, will retire from Congress. With LoBiondo and Rep. Dave Reichert departing at the end of this Congress, Reps. Chris Smith and Leonard Lance will be the two remaining House Republicans that backed cap and trade legislation in 2009.

LET'S KICK AGAIN? Chatter's already getting louder that Congress may have to consider another kick-the-can extension of government funding by Dec. 8 to keep the lights on, but top Appropriators aren't throwing in the towel yet, Pro Budget & Appropriations Jennifer Scholtes and Sarah Ferris report. "So, hopefully, if we consider one, it will be very, very short," Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen told them. Others say it's too early to give up. "I don't think we even need to be thinking about a CR," says Hal Rogers, who endured tough spending negotiations many times in his six years of chairing the House Appropriations panel.

TRUMP RELATIVE MOVES UP AT DOE: Kyle Yunaska, brother-in-law to Eric Trump, seems to be climbing the ladder at the Energy Department's Energy Policy and Systems Analysis office recently, adding the title of chief of staff to his resume, in addition to his senior adviser role. A DOE source told ME that Sean Cunningham, the head of EPSA, made the announcement in a staff email last week. Yunaska joined DOE early this year as a member of the "beachhead" team. His sister, Lara, married the president's son in 2014. (Greenwire first reported the move.)

ZINKE HIRES FORMER NAVY SEALS TO KEY ROLES: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has hired former Navy Seal Mike Argo as deputy chief of staff and former SEAL Captain Rick May to head up the agency's focus on increasing recreation opportunities on public land. Speaking at a webcast honoring veterans event in Interior's Washington headquarters, Zinke, who is himself a former SEAL, said "we're bringing recreation back."

MARKING ON UP: Nine bills are on the House Natural Resources Committee mark up agenda today, but most of the attention will be on the SECURE American Energy Act H.R. 4239 \(115\). Among other provisions, the bill would give more oil and gas permitting power to the states, create an offshore oil and gas revenue program for East Coast drilling and roll back Obama-era offshore drilling rules. ME hears the measure may be fast-tracked to the floor as quickly as next week. Also of note: H.R. 2907 \(115\) from Rep. Scott Tipton, which would require an all-of-the-above quadrennial federal onshore energy production strategy.

PANELS LOOKS AT GEOENGINEERING LATEST: Two House Science subcommittees today take a look at the latest technologies and possibilities concerning geoengineering, in which humans attempt to alter the worldwide climate system in effort to avoid human-caused climate change. The committee will hear from experts on reducing the total sunlight hitting the earth and pulling carbon from atmosphere. But ahead of the session, nearly two dozen leading proponents warn the committee in a letter that geoengineering should not be viewed as a substitute for swift action to curb greenhouse gases that are fueling climate change. "Geoengineering is not a silver bullet, and treating it as one could greatly increase already severe climate change risks," they wrote. The hearing kicks off at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2318.

MAIL CALL! DON'T EXPAND CCS CREDITS: More than 40 environmental groups released a letter Tuesday urging lawmakers not to include an expansion and extension of the Section 45Q tax credit for carbon capture and sequestration in an emerging tax package. A second letter warned efforts to subsidize CCS technologies are "false solutions" to climate change and impose significant burdens on communities on the front lines.

CHANGE COURSE! Sixty-two members of Congress, led by Rep. Bill Foster, asked Pruitt to reverse a policy instituted last week barring any scientists receiving agency funds from serving on scientific advisory boards. Letter here.

NOT TO BE LEFT OUT: Representatives from the hydropower, biomass power, waste-to-energy and biogas industries sent a letter to the top Republican tax writers asking them to "provide parity and a level playing field for all renewable energy technologies" as they work on the tax package. HR1 "would extend the same tax treatment to fiber-optic solar energy, fuel cells and small wind energy property that is afforded solar technology under current law," they write. "However, the bill fails to provide equal treatment for hydropower, biomass power, waste-to-energy and biogas."

COMMERCE SET TO DO ITS BIODIESEL DUTY: The Commerce Department is expected to announce a final decision on its countervailing duties and anti-dumping cases against Argentine and Indonesian imports of biodiesel. Commerce has already started collecting the duty after making a preliminary determination that both countries were undercutting U.S. biodiesel.

EPA SEEKS REMAND OF PARTS OF COAL ASH RULE AHEAD OF

ARGUMENTS: EPA on Tuesday asked the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals to remand key parts of the coal ash rule to the agency for reconsideration ahead of Nov. 20 oral arguments that could see the case put on ice. The court in September said it would not put the case on hold indefinitely while EPA reconsiders the rule, though it did order attorneys for all sides to be prepared to discuss abeyance at arguments. In a new motion, EPA asks that five specific parts of the rule be remanded without being vacated, meaning they would remain in place while EPA reworks them. Because it is reconsidering the rule, EPA argued, its attorneys "will likely be unable to represent EPA's present position on these issues at oral argument."

Four of the provisions are related to challenges brought by industry groups: rules for temporary coal ash piles; EPA's rules for inactive ponds; a lack of a risk-based compliance option; and a provision dealing with large piles of coal ash intended for "beneficial use" in products like wallboard. The fifth provision, dealing with regulation of legacy ponds, was raised by environmental groups. The industry challengers had no problem with the remand request, but greens plan to object to their provision being remanded.

APPROVED: The California State Water Resources Control Board green lighted a 10-year plan for adding new wildlife habitat and curbing toxic dust from the Salton Sea lake in Southern California, Pro's Esther Whieldon reports.

PERRY SPEAKS... ON TAX OVERHAUL: Even as he attends meetings this week in Paris, Energy Secretary Rick Perry released an op-ed in Syracuse, N.Y.'s local paper Tuesday strongly backing Republican tax overhaul efforts. "Americans deserve a low tax climate and responsible regulation to spur the economic and energy revolution we have been waiting for," the former Texas governor wrote.

NOT MINCING WORDS: Actor Alec Baldwin didn't hold back on his dislike of Pruitt during an interview with Entertainment Weekly. "He's done more damage to one department than anyone in American history," Baldwin, who plays Trump on SNL, said. "It's like being in a vegetarian restaurant and the chef decides he's only gonna cook steak, to insist everyone eat a meal that's abhorrent to them."

QUICK HITS

- Severe air pollution declared public health emergency in Delhi, India. ABC News.
- France backpedals on pledge to cut reliance on nuclear power. AP.
- Fresh From Deluge, Miami Weighs Bonds to Gird for Climate Change. Bloomberg.
- Kinder Morgan Canada denied expedited appeal for oil pipeline. Reuters.
- GOP tax bill would end deduction for wildfire and earthquake victims — but not recent hurricane victims. Los Angeles Times.

HAPPENING TODAY

9:45 a.m. — Senate Commerce Committee holds vote on the Bridenstine nomination and others, Dirksen 106

10:00 a.m. — The House Science Committee's Energy Subcommittee and Environment Subcommittee hold a joint hearing on "Geoengineering: Innovation, Research, and Technology," Rayburn 2318

10:00 a.m. — Markup on Offshore-Onshore Energy Bill, 8 Additional Measures, House Natural Resources Committee, 1324 Longworth

10:00 a.m. — Senate Environment and Public Works Committee holds hearing on White and Wheeler nominations, Dirken 406

10:30 a.m. — API hosts press call on latest efforts to reform the Renewable Fuel Standard, RSVP: press@api.org

12:15 p.m. — EPW Democrats hold press conference on environmental nominees, Senate Swamp

2:00 p.m. — Rep. Keith Ellison hosts briefing on zero waste and environmental justice, Cannon 122

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

**Presented by ExxonMobil: Energy is fundamental to modern life and drives economic prosperity - in small communities across America and around the world. We need a range of solutions to meet growing energy demand while reducing emissions to address the risk of climate change. Visit the Energy Factor to learn more about some of the bold ideas and next-generation technologies we're working on to meet this challenge: EnergyFactor.com **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/11/fireworks-expected-as-white-wheeler-head-to-epw-025437>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

EPA deputy nominee Wheeler represented ethanol group Back

By Alex Guillén | 10/18/2017 03:47 PM EDT

Andrew Wheeler, the nominee for EPA deputy administrator, worked for the ethanol group Growth Energy this year, according to his financial disclosure documents.

Wheeler, an attorney at Faegre Baker Daniels, was previously known to lobby for coal producer Murray Energy, among several other companies, as revealed in lobbying disclosures. But his financial disclosure shows Wheeler provided "strategic advice and counseling" rather than lobbying services to Growth Energy.

Growth Energy hired FBD for lobbying earlier this year, according to records, but Wheeler was never named on those disclosures.

"We hired Faegre Baker Daniels for lobbying and consultant help on renewable fuels issues. Andrew Wheeler has not lobbied on our behalf but has provided consultant services," Growth Energy spokeswoman Jenni Roberson said in an email. Wheeler did not return a request for comment today.

Growth Energy was one of the groups that successfully sued EPA over its 2014-2016 Renewable Fuel Standard volumes. It has also opposed EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's recent move to potentially weaken biodiesel requirements, a proposal that has angered several key corn state Republican senators and threatened to hold up several other EPA nominees.

The financial disclosure shows Wheeler also provided advice and counsel, but not lobbying work, to International Paper, Archer Daniels Midland and General Mills. Previously reported lobbying clients included Xcel Energy, Bear Head LNG and Energy Fuels Resources.

WHAT'S NEXT: Wheeler was nominated earlier this month and has yet to have a nomination hearing in the Senate.

To view online click here.

Back

Northam beats Gillespie in Virginia governor's race Back

By Gabriel Debenedetti | 11/07/2017 05:59 PM EDT

Democrat Ralph Northam was elected governor of Virginia on Tuesday in a sweeping victory that defied the conventional wisdom of a tightening race.

The lieutenant governor's victory joins Democrat Phil Murphy's win in New Jersey's gubernatorial race to hand Democrats new hope in the Donald Trump era.

After a bruising race against former Republican National Committee chairman Ed Gillespie, Northam outran Hillary Clinton in a state she carried by 5 points while losing the presidency in November 2016. A series of late-campaign controversies hitting Northam had Republicans cautiously optimistic that Gillespie could close the gap and pull off an upset, but Democrats rode a wave of anti-Trump backlash and satisfaction with outgoing Gov. Terry McAuliffe's administration.

"It was said that the eyes of the nation are now on the commonwealth," Northam said in his victory speech. "Today, Virginians have answered and spoken. Virginians have told us to end the divisiveness, that we will not condone hatred and bigotry, and to end the politics that have torn this country apart."

Murphy, a former U.S. ambassador, defeated Kim Guadagno, New Jersey's lieutenant governor, to replace unpopular Republican Gov. Chris Christie. Murphy led the race from the start by double digits.

The pair of off-year governors races is traditionally read as a bellwether for the next year's midterm elections, but this year the results — particularly in Virginia — are also likely to be read as referenda on the state of each party's national well-being in the age of Trump.

Democrats had eyed the race nervously, as an opportunity to both demonstrate political momentum and help the party dig out from a historic low in terms of governorships. Democrats currently have just 15 compared to Republicans' 34 (Alaska Gov. Bill Walker is an independent), so party officials had for months seen flipping the New Jersey seat and retaining Virginia's as top priorities. Come January, they will hold 16.

"This was a vote for an inclusive Virginia," said former Rep. Tom Perriello, who lost to Northam in the primary but went on to endorse him and help lead his party's charge in the House of Delegates, where Democrats on Tuesday elected the first Latina members of the House of Delegates and a transgender candidate. "Gillespie went all-in on an identity politics agenda, and we rejected it."

Near tears with excitement, Perriello sounded a bullish note on his party's future.

"We're seeing the Prop 187 of Virginia, and probably of America," he said, referring to the famous California ballot proposition targeting illegal immigration that helped Republicans win in 1994 but has been credited with turning state voters against the Republican Party ever since.

Gillespie sought to strike a balance between engaging moderates with talk of jobs and taxes and firing up his base by running ads on illegal immigration and sanctuary cities — which don't exist in Virginia — and cultural touchstones like Confederate monuments and NFL anthem protests. Gillespie did not initially home in on those subjects, but they became a bigger part of his campaign after he nearly lost the June Republican primary to Trump's former Virginia campaign chairman.

Trump, who tweeted in support of Gillespie before the election, quickly turned on him after the race was called.

"Ed Gillespie worked hard but did not embrace me or what I stand for," Trump tweeted, before referencing Republican special election wins earlier this year. "Don't forget, Republicans won 4 out of 4 House seats, and with the economy doing record numbers, we will continue to win, even bigger than before!"

Democratic turnout in Virginia's primary skyrocketed from previous years' levels. Party leaders including former President Barack Obama and Vice President Joe Biden swooped into the state to back Northam in the final month.

"The initial goal was for Democrats to nationalize the race and make it about the president; our initial goal was to localize the race and make it about Virginia," Virginia Republican Party chairman John Whitbeck said before Tuesday's vote. "If we win, it will say that a mainstream conservative like Ed Gillespie can win in an era of uncertainty. What it says about the Democrats is they have a lot of soul-searching to do: I don't think they know what their message is, their agenda is."

Though Trump loomed over the race, Gillespie did not actually appear with him in Virginia — the first time in years a sitting president did not cross the Potomac River to campaign in the governor's race. "Ralph Northam will allow crime to be rampant in Virginia. He's weak on crime, weak on our GREAT VETS, Anti-Second Amendment and has been horrible on Virginia economy," Trump tweeted during his Asia trip on Tuesday. Gillespie appeared multiple times with Vice President Mike Pence, who is more popular among conservatives and perceived as less likely to fire up Democrats who can't stand the president.

In New Jersey, Murphy was heavily favored in large part because of the unpopularity of Christie. Guadagno, Christie's deputy, tried tacking away from Christie, but the former presidential candidate's abysmal 14 percent approval rating — according to a late October Suffolk poll — proved to be a serious drag on his hoped-for successor.

While Guadagno tried tarnishing Murphy's image by painting him in ads as soft on illegal immigration, Murphy — a former Goldman Sachs executive and Democratic National Committee finance chairman — relied heavily on support from local and national-level Democrats to pad his comfortable margin.

In Virginia, Democrats also aimed to peel back the GOP advantage in the state legislature. The party hopes that Northam's win, combined with continued down-ballot gains, will put Democrats in position to exert more influence over the next round of political map-drawing in Virginia at the end of this decade.

Democrats also won the closely watched mayoral races in Manchester, New Hampshire, and St. Petersburg, Florida.

To view online click here.

Back

LoBiondo to retire from Congress Back

By Elena Schneider | 11/07/2017 02:51 PM EDT

New Jersey Rep. Frank LoBiondo, a senior Republican on the Armed Services Committee, will not run for reelection in 2018, he announced Tuesday.

LoBiondo cited committee term-limits for his departure, but the 12-term incumbent also took parting shots at partisan gridlock in Congress.

"There is no longer middle ground to honestly debate issues and put forward solutions," LoBiondo said in a statement. "... Those of us who came to Congress to change Washington for the better through good governance are now the outliers. In legislating, we previously fought against allowing the perfect to become the enemy of the good. Today a vocal and obstinate minority within both parties has hijacked good legislation in pursuit of no legislation.

LoBiondo said that his decision isn't "electoral" and that he was "very confident voters would again reelect me" in 2018 had he decided to run for reelection.

The decision opens a battleground district in southern New Jersey that LoBiondo has held easily since 1994. New Jersey's 2nd District backed President Donald Trump with 50.6 percent of the vote to Hillary Clinton's 46 percent in 2016. But former President Barack Obama also won the seat twice with between 53 and 54 percent of the vote.

Harry Hurley, a New Jersey talk radio host, first reported the news of LoBiondo's retirement.

LoBiondo raised $117,000 in the last fundraising quarter, among the lowest totals reported by House Republican incumbents, sparking speculation that he would retire instead of running for reelection. Though the district has 147,000 registered Democrats to 132,000 registered Republicans, LoBiondo has managed to easily and consistently win reelection thanks in part to strong labor ties.

National Democrats have actively recruited state Sen. Jeff Van Drew, a conservative-leaning Democrat, in years past, but he's declined to run. Democrat Tanzie Youngblood, a retired teacher, already launched her bid to challenge LoBiondo in July. Democrats also floated retired judge Ray Batten as a potential candidate for the district.

Republican operatives in the state floated two potential GOP candidates to replace LoBiondo: State Assemblyman Chris Brown, who's on the ballot for a state Senate seat on Tuesday, and former Atlantic County Sheriff Frank Balles.

LoBiondo's retirement adds another major opportunity for Democrats to pick up a House seat in New Jersey. Already, two normally well-entrenched New Jersey GOP incumbents in the northern half of the state, Rodney Frelinghuysen and Leonard Lance, have attracted several credible Democratic challengers who are raising substantial amounts of campaign cash.

LoBiondo, a member of the moderate Tuesday Group caucus, is the latest in a string of what Rep. Charlie Dent (R-Pa.) called "governing-wing" Republicans who have opted against running for reelection in 2018. Dent, Florida Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, Washington Rep. Dave Reichert and Michigan Rep. Dave Trott have all announced their plans for retirement.

Matt Friedman, Jake Sherman and Alex Isenstadt contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Pruitt to reconsider parts of 2015 coal ash rule Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/14/2017 04:15 PM EDT

EPA will reconsider key portions of the 2015 coal ash rule, according to a letter from Administrator Scott Pruitt to industry officials released by Earthjustice.

Two petitions were filed in May by AES Puerto Rico and the Utility Solid Waste Activities Group, an umbrella group whose members include the Edison Electric Institute, National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, American Public Power Association and more than a hundred utilities and related companies.

Pruitt's letter does not specify which parts of the rule he plans to reconsider, but both USWAG and AES identified specific issues with the regulation.

USWAG's petition asked that pending deadlines be pushed back and called for the rule to be changed in the wake of a December 2016 law changing the enforcement scheme in order to accommodate new management options based on site-specific risk analyses rather than the original "burdensome, inflexible, and often impracticable requirements." USWAG also argued that various executive orders from President Donald Trump dealing with regulations justify cracking the rule open.

AES' petition focused on requirements for how power plants store their coal ash piles before they are moved off site to be disposed of or to make products such as concrete and wallboard.

Oral arguments at the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals over the rule are currently scheduled for Oct. 17, but EPA is likely to ask the case be put on hold while it reconsiders the rule.

WHAT'S NEXT: Pruitt will initiate a formal reconsideration process. Any actual changes to the rule will have to go through public comment and will be open to legal challenge.

To view online click here.

Back

Court delays coal ash arguments to November Back

By Alex Guillén | 09/27/2017 04:54 PM EDT

The D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals today granted a one-month delay in arguments over EPA's 2015 coal ash rule following Administrator Scott Pruitt's decision to reconsider key parts of the regulation.

Arguments had been scheduled for Oct. 17, but a three-judge panel ordered them delayed until Nov. 20.

The judges ordered EPA to reveal by Nov. 15 which portions of the rule will be reconsidered "and setting forth with specificity the timeline for reconsideration." In addition, all sides, including industry and environmental challengers, are supposed to file new briefs by Oct. 11 addressing whether the new state-based coal ash permitting program that passed Congress as part of the Water Infrastructure Improvements for the Nation Act at the end of 2016 affect the broader lawsuit at all. And the court told attorneys to be ready at arguments to discuss whether a longer delay in the lawsuit is appropriate, opening up the possibility of further delay.

The court set 90 minutes' worth of arguments in total, split into four sections: Three dealing with various legal and technical challenges to the rule and one on whether the case should be delayed longer.

The case will be heard by Judges Karen LeCraft Henderson, a George H.W. Bush appointee, and two Obama appointees, Judges Patricia Millett and Cornelia Pillard.

WHAT'S NEXT: The parties must submit briefs regarding the permitting program by Oct. 11. Oral argument is scheduled for Nov. 20.

To view online click here.

Back

California board approves 10-year Salton Sea water mitigation plan Back

By Esther Whieldon | 11/07/2017 06:31 PM EDT

The California State Water Resources Control Board today approved the state's 10-year plan for adding new wildlife habitat and curbing toxic dust from the Salton Sea lake in Southern California.

The plan addresses expectations the 350-square-mile lake will shrink by one-third as the Imperial Irrigation District, other water users and states continue cutting back on water usage amid diminishing Colorado River supplies.

The lake is an ecological haven for migratory birds, but its receding shoreline is polluted with chemicals from farming irrigation drainage, and the resulting dust from the dry lake bed has caused asthma problems in nearby communities.

The plan is also key to Imperial agreeing to a voluntary water conservation compact among lower Colorado River basin states to preserve water levels at Lake Mead, the river's most important reservoir. Under a deal that expires this year, Imperial has been putting extra water into the Salton Sea in exchange for the state's pledge to install mitigation projects — a commitment California has failed to meet. Imperial has been reluctant to agree to further water cuts without assurances the state will actually act.

The plan outlines the state acreage goals for habitat creation and dust suppression, requires it to come up with a long-term mitigation plan for the Salton Sea by 2022, and would have board staff create a correction plan if the state falls more than 20 percent short of any annual goal.

WHAT'S NEXT: Californians will vote on a ballot measure in June 2018 to issue $200 million in bonds for Salton Sea projects.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by ExxonMobil: Lawmakers to grill Perry on grid resiliency plan — EPA questions GHG authority in replacement draft — Disaster relief package gets House vote today
Date: Thursday, October 12, 2017 5:43:50 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/12/2017 05:41 AM EDT

With help from Eric Wolff and Esther Whieldon

PERRY STEPS INTO E&C HOTSEAT: Energy Secretary Rick Perry makes his much-anticipated debut before the House Energy and Commerce Energy Subcommittee today at 10 a.m. and several members are planning to press him on his grid resilience proposal, which would benefit coal-fired and nuclear power plants. "I have many concerns with this proposal, starting with the fact that this is chiefly a policy matter that should be left to Congress and the states," ranking member Frank Pallone will say in his opening remarks. "You are distorting the market, damaging the environment, and delivering preferential treatment to favored industries."

Pallone plans to send a letter seeking more information on Perry's process in developing the proposal — but don't expect criticism of Perry's plan to be a purely one-party affair: Texas Republican Rep. Pete Olson last week said he was concerned because DOE's proposal "appears to be picking winners and losers" and a normally friendly face, Rep. Joe Barton, declined to discuss his planned line of questioning.

But some panel members are expected to be big fans: West Virginia Rep. David McKinley told ME he'll be "very supportive" of Perry's request of FERC, and he scoffed at criticism that the plan was unfairly playing favorites by propping up the struggling nuclear and coal sectors. "It's an insurance policy that we never have a blackout in this country. Isn't there some value in that?" he asked. "I don't think it's picking winners and losers at all." ME would look for Reps. Morgan Griffith and Bill Johnson to also be big backers of the proposal.

Perry response: According to a copy of his opening statement, Perry will stress that his request of FERC is just a "first step" in a conversation while at the same time emphasizing he'll take whatever action necessary to protect the U.S. grid's resiliency. "I will not sit idly by when I see a threat to that reliability, or a reasonable course of action that is within my authority to mitigate it," he plans to say.

What else what else? At least three other issues seem likely to crop up throughout the hearing:

—Democrats will ask Perry for guarantees and additional information concerning more than \$56,000 in non-commercial travel he took since coming into office. Pallone will ask DOE's inspector general in a letter today to probe his non-commercial travel habits.

—Questions from both parties about DOE's next move in restarting the Yucca Mountain program. Remember Sen. Dean Heller lifted his hold on DOE Deputy Dan Brouillette's confirmation after unspecified progress on the matter, but we haven't heard much since then.

—Why the agency conditionally approved a $3.7 billion increase in federal loan guarantees for the troubled, over-budget Vogtle nuclear project in Georgia and whether it intends to further wade into similar nuclear matters.

If you go: Perry settles into the witness chair at 10 a.m. in Rayburn 2123. More here.

WELCOME TO THURSDAY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and EPA's Aaron Ringel was first up to identify Strom Thurmond as the only senator ever reelected in their 90s. For today: Who is the only chemist currently serving in Congress? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy and @POLITICOPro.

FUNDAMENTAL GHG REGULATORY AUTHORITY PONDERED: EPA plans to question whether it even has the authority to regulate greenhouse gas emissions from power plants and how states might craft their own plans to upgrade coal plants as it ponders a replacement to the Clean Power Plan, Pro's Emily Holden reports, citing excerpts of a draft notice. The agency continues to mull "whether it is appropriate to propose a rule," and must "ascertain the scope of legal authority that Congress conferred to EPA" before proceeding. In the document — an advanced notice of proposed rulemaking in Washington speak — EPA calls itself as "a creature of statute," and notes that the Clean Air Act delegates air pollution control to states and local governments. Pros learned the document went over to OMB for review earlier Wednesday.

CAN ALREADY SMELL THOSE JET FUMES: Two days after posting the measure, the House is expected today to clear a $36.5 billion emergency funding package H.R. 2266 \(115\) for hurricane and wildfire relief and recovery. Senate consideration will have to wait until next week, at least. "We think it's critical that we pass this legislation this week to give the people in California the support they need to fight these fires, to help the victims, and also to help the communities still recovering and dealing with the humanitarian problems with the hurricanes," Speaker Paul Ryan said on Wednesday.

Energy bill clears House: Lawmakers cleared by voice vote legislation S. 190 \(115\) that exempts certain equipment that needs to remain on at all times from energy use restrictions for an additional six years. "Devices like home security alarms or fire detection need to be on 24/7," Olson said on the floor. "But, the 2007 energy law on energy efficiency standards for external power supplies did not allow for this." It now moves to the White House, after having already passed the Senate.

ACCUWEATHER CEO TAPPED FOR NOAA CHIEF: Trump announced late Wednesday his selection of Barry Myers, CEO of weather-forecasting firm AccuWeather, to lead NOAA, POLITICO's Henry C. Jackson reports. CEO since 2007, Myers would take over one of the key agencies in conducting climate research and assessing climate change if confirmed by the Senate. An attorney by training, Myers significant business background fits the mold of many other picks for officials in Trump's administration.

** Presented by ExxonMobil: We're collaborating with FuelCell Energy on a novel idea to use fuel cells to capture carbon at natural gas power plants, and in the process reduce emissions and increase electrical output. This technology could be a game changer in addressing the world's growing need for energy, while also reducing the impact on the environment. Learn more. **

HOUSE PANEL PASSES ANTIQUITIES ACT BILL: The House Natural Resources Committee on Wednesday passed, on a vote of 23-17, Chairman Rob Bishop's bill H.R. 3990 \(115\) that would require a federal environmental review process and approval from local officials to designate any monument bigger than 640 acres in size and block the creation of new marine national monuments "with no archeological or historic sites in need of protection." The committee rejected a resolution by Rep. Raul Grijalva that aimed to have Zinke disclose more information about his review of existing national monument designations.

Bishop defended his bill to ME: "If I was going back to the old mantra of just doing away with the Antiquities Act, [the criticisms] still wouldn't hurt my feelings. We're not doing that. What we're doing is coming up what I think is a moderate, rationale way of establishing process so it's not about any president, it's not about any monument."

But greens and public lands advocates bashed it: "This bill upends a century of the Antiquities Act being successfully used by Republican and Democratic presidents to protect some of the most iconic and loved parks and public lands in our country," The Coalition to Protect America's National Parks said in a statement. "And this is being done to allow development of these lands that belong to all Americans for the benefit of private companies and individuals."

SENATORS: 'FULLY IMPLEMENT' RUSSIA ENERGY SANCTIONS: Sens. John McCain and Ben Cardin urged Trump in a Wednesday letter to "fully implement" sanctions on companies that engage in Russian energy projects, POLITICO's Elana Schor reports. "The administration must also clearly communicate to energy companies in the U.S. and around the world that it will aggressively enforce all mandatory energy sanctions laid out in the law," the bipartisan duo wrote.

TAKING A FIRM STANCE: Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer and environmental advocates are holding an event today at 2:30 p.m. at a Lower East Side community garden "denouncing the polluter takeover of the EPA and the Republican assault on the agency's budget," according to an advisory.

ZINKE'S FUNDRAISING ACTIVITIES DRAW MIXED REACTION: Bishop told ME Wednesday the types of fundraising Zinke's done on official Interior trips has "always been done" and that he wasn't too worried about the revelations. "It's a game that's being played," the Utah congressman said. "I don't take it too seriously." But that's not the unanimous feeling: New Hampshire Democratic Sen. Maggie Hassan tweeted Wednesday Zinke's mixing of fundraising with official business, revealed by POLITICO, "needs to be investigated."

Richard Painter, chief ethics adviser to George W. Bush, tweeted Zinke's attendance of a Montana fundraiser while on official travel was a "Hatch Act violation."

EPA AIR ADVISER PICKED: David Harlow, a lawyer with expertise in the Clean Air Act most recently with Hunton & Williams, has joined EPA in an advisory role to the Office of Air and Radiation, Pro's Eric Wolff reports, citing multiple sources familiar with the move. His role will most closely resemble that of Joe Goffman, who was senior counsel to the Air Office during the Obama administration. The agency did not respond to requests for comment.

AND THE FIRST SOLAR SHALL BE LAST: After months of remaining mum on a solar trade tariff case, thin film solar producer First Solar waded into the fray Wednesday with a filing to the U.S. International Trade Commission arguing that tariffs would be a good idea. The position is a boost for Suniva and Solar World, who won a unanimous injury determination from the ITC last month. "My overarching point is that the Commission should reject the notion that [crystalline silicon photovoltaic] industry must be left to die so that the downstream solar industry may live," writes Mark Widmar, CEO of First Solar. "I firmly believe the commission can design an effective remedy that allows solar demand to continue to flourish."

Tariffs wouldn't affect First Solar's supplies: The Solar Energy Industries Association, of which First Solar is a member, has repeatedly pointed out to reporters and the commission that thin film products are not covered by the case. So if the commission recommends a strict remedy to the president, First Solar could see its competition from much the rest of the sector wane.

EPA MOVES ON HARVEY-IMPACTED SUPERFUND SITE: EPA announced Wednesday it approved a plan that would see the removal of tons of dioxins from the Houston-area San Jacinto Waste Pits Superfund site that sustained damage and leaked material in the aftermath of Hurricane Harvey. "EPA is prioritizing Superfund clean-up by making decisions in a decisive, timely manner," EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said in a statement. Cleaning up the site, which was first added to the National Priorities List in 2008, will cost an estimated $115 million.

Houston-area Democratic Rep. Gene Green thanked EPA for the decision but said: "We will be monitoring the remediation process closely and call on the EPA to move as quickly as possible before more damage is done."

YIKES: There are reports of Puerto Ricans drinking from wells located on Superfund sites on the island, EPA said Wednesday. In a statement, the agency said it "advises against tampering with sealed and locked wells or drinking from these wells." According to government data, just 64 percent of residents have access to potable drinking water and less than 11 percent of the island has electricity.

McKINLEY UPBEAT ON COAL EFFORTS: McKinley says the Trump administration has already made significant progress on 11 of the 14 priority areas to boost coal he presented to Vice President Mike Pence last year. "[Trump] has done a lot of things, but we're not trying to play favorites," he told ME. "Just give us a level playing field." Developed in consultation with the Congressional Coal Caucus, McKinley's memo calls for rolling back Obama administration climate change efforts and several EPA regulations. He now hopes the administration can work on boosting U.S. coal exports globally, where he says there's "voracious appetite."

MAIL CALL! LAWMAKERS WANT BRISTOL BAY PROTECTED: More than 40 congressional Democrats, led by Sen. Maria Cantwell and Rep. Jared Huffman, sent a letter to Trump urging him not to loosen protections on Bristol Bay in Alaska that would enable construction of the Pebble Mine. "The EPA's plan to reverse clean water safeguards is egregious and inconsistent with science, and frankly, inconsistent with basic logic," they wrote in a letter.

TWIN LETTERS OPPOSE ANWR IN BUDGET: A collection of 90 professional athletes and 90 outdoor companies and recreation organizations sent separate letters to Congress opposing efforts to opening ANWR to oil drilling in the budget process.

REPORT: INTERNAL CARBON PRICING UP BIG: The number of companies setting an internal carbon price into operations has increased eightfold over the last four years, according to a report out today from CDP. It concludes a full 75 percent of the energy and utilities sectors' market cap now include an internal carbon price into their operations.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY DOE! Both Perry and Deputy Secretary Dan Brouillette tweeted pictures of a massive cake and birthday celebration DOE held Wednesday.

FOR YOUR VIEWING PLEASURE: Watch PBS' entire episode of "Frontline" on Pruitt here.

QUICK HITS

- BNP Paribas to Stop Financing Shale, Oil Sands Projects. Wall Street Journal.
- O'Halleran hedges bets on climate change action. Arizona Daily Sun.
- Report: Key changes needed to prevent fiery rail crashes. AP.
- Coal Operator Plans to Idle Western Kentucky Mine. AP.
- Most US oil executives see prices below $60 per barrel through 2018. Reuters.
- 10 Weeks, 10 Hurricanes, and a 124-Year-Old Record Is Matched. New York Times.

HAPPENING TODAY

8:00 a.m. — Canadian Embassy hosts the 28th annual Energy Efficiency Forum, Canadian Embassy, 501 Pennsylvania Ave NW

9:30 a.m. — "IEA's Renewable Energy Market Report 2017," Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Avenue, NW

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Water, Power and Oceans Subcommittee holds a legislative hearing on several bills, Longworth 1334

10:00 a.m. — House Energy and Commerce holds hearing with DOE Secretary Rick Perry, Rayburn 2123

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

**Presented by ExxonMobil: Energy is fundamental to modern life and drives economic prosperity - in small communities across America and around the world. We need a range of solutions to meet growing energy demand while reducing emissions to address the risk of climate change. Visit the Energy Factor to learn more about some of the bold ideas and next-generation technologies we're working on to meet this challenge: EnergyFactor.com **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/lawmakers-to-grill-perry-on-grid-resiliency-plan-025010>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

DOE grid proposal sparks more questions than answers Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/03/2017 01:36 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry has prodded federal regulators to rescue economically ailing coal and nuclear plants in the name of "economic and national security."

But several industry players and experts argue that the Energy Department's proposal resembles a back-of-the-envelope sketch more than a regulation, and Capitol Hill is starting to get dragged into the scuffle.

Members of the House Energy and Commerce Committee are expected to get an earful about the rule Tuesday during a hearing scheduled before the release of the new rulemaking, as well as later in the week. And Marc Veasey (D-Texas), on the Science Committee, suggested that DOE may be "redefining grid resiliency to accomplish a political agenda."

The 19-page proposal DOE sent to FERC last week, which directs competitive electricity markets to dole out cash to power plants with 90 days of fuel on-site, raised eyebrows from the moment people looked at the sparse page count. Washington lawyers and policy wonks have been tossing and turning over big gaps in the plan, not to mention a list of unanswered questions about how the regulatory procedure might unfold, where the payments DOE is demanding actually get implemented in the real world, and why Perry put his chips into on-site fuel.

"I'm sympathetic with the 'hurry up and fix something'" attitude, said former FERC Chairman Pat Wood, a Republican who is a strong advocate for markets. "But this is such a draconian way of fixing it that I'm assuming it's put out there to be a lightning rod to get people off their ass and get to focusing on proper solutions to this."

He added: "Everything in our society has a shelf-life and then it goes into retirement."

Even basic issues about how DOE's 60-day timeframe for FERC to take "final action" lines up with routine federal administrative law are unclear, and have already sparked outrage from a range of energy trade associations that don't usually work together.

Still, late Monday FERC announced that it would take comments on DOE's pitch for just three weeks, even before DOE officially published its proposal in the Federal Register.

Nevertheless, the proposal was hailed as a bold, decisive and proactive measure by the nuclear and coal-fired power industries and their allies.

After speaking with more than a half-dozen experts and reviewing documents, here are the biggest questions DOE plopped in FERC's lap:

How does this process even work?

DOE used Section 403 of the Department of Energy Organization Act to initiate a rulemaking at FERC and directed regulators to take "final action" on the new proposal within 60 days of its publication. No one disputes Perry's right to utilize the process, but few fully understand how it works because the section so rarely tapped — DOE hasn't invoked it in 30 years and has used it fewer than a half-dozen times. Although FERC has already requested comments, Section 403 doesn't define "final action" and while it states that Energy secretaries can set "reasonable time limits," another phrase up for debate.

Analysts at ClearView Energy Partners argued that FERC would put Perry's proposal on the fast-track but takes DOE's timeline with a grain of salt. "We view the aggressive timeline mostly as an indication of where DOE wants this on FERC's near term priority list than as a true drop-dead date," ClearView analysts wrote in a note to clients.

In a separate letter Perry sent to the commissioners to push his proposal, he said the short countdown clock was necessary because FERC was not doing enough to deal with the "crisis" facing the sector.

"He uses the word 'crisis.' No one believes that," one former FERC official said. "It also asserts ... that every single inflexible coal and nuclear plant is needed for reliability. Those are two huge leaps. But everything is built on that foundation. If either of those, or both of those, are proven incorrect there's no basis for FERC to act."

How does DOE's plan mesh with the markets?

The most vexing issue looming over DOE's proposal is who pays the power plants for having 90 days of fuel and how does the pricing mechanism get factored into existing wholesale energy markets. DOE offers one page of regulatory text for FERC to adopt but doesn't suggest a way for issuing the payments, which "shall" include "operating and fuel expenses, costs of capital and debt, and a fair return on equity and investment."

The pricing mechanism "is, to me, the biggest question mark," said former FERC Commissioner Tony Clark, who echoed just about everyone interviewed for this story. "It dumps it all on FERC. They can try to come up with something out of thin air but the mechanism is not defined in the rule, which is really the whole name of the game."

DOE's proposal, as written, would make all nuclear plants and many coal plants eligible for payments. But should those payments come out of electricity markets, or capacity markets — which generators bid into in exchange for being available when grid operators call on them — or something else? DOE doesn't say.

"If they did decide to define 90 days of fuel supply, for whatever reason, as a valuable attribute to the market, then they would need to figure out what the mechanism is and think about whether there's a semi-market-friendly way to do that," Clark said.

Miles Farmer, a staff attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council, went so far as to say that the plan has too many plot holes to be considered a proposed rule.

"FERC could not simply enact this," Farmer said. "There are no rules for how the plants would be bidding into the market, or not. There are no rules for how one would evaluate whether these payments ever sunset. Are we talking about infinite subsidies forever?"

There's already a process for power plants to delay a retirement on the electric grid if they're needed for reliability. How should those processes overlap? Regions that have capacity markets have also instituted stiff penalties on plants that promised to deliver but don't follow through. But the plan envisioned by DOE doesn't explain whether a power plant should still get paid if it ever falls short of the 90-day rule or can't operate.

ClearView chose a diplomatic approach: "[W]e would not be surprised if the RTOs and ISOs themselves find accommodation of this proposal difficult or problematic."

Why focus on on-site fuel storage?

DOE's proposal says power plants eligible for the new payments must offer some essential energy services and "have a 90-day fuel supply on site in the event of supply disruptions caused by emergencies, extreme weather, or natural or man-made disasters." But 90 days is never explained in the 19-page document and, according to Paul Bailey, CEO of the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, the nation's coal fleet maintains enough on-site fuel supplies to power their plants 73 to 82 days, on average. Those figures line up with data at the Energy Information Administration.

Another complicating factor for Perry's "grid resiliency pricing rule" is that FERC doesn't have a set definition for what resiliency means in technical terms.

Perry emphasizes the grid stress triggered by the 2014 "polar vortex" to defend the urgency of his new plan. But even there, it's unclear why 90 days was necessary when most outages on the mainland U.S. don't last half that time. Several experts point out that having fuel on-site isn't a panacea for disruptions.

While nuclear plants don't need to swap out their fuel for 18 months or more, some reactors in Florida along the path of Hurricane Irma shut down, including because of a problem with a valve. Last week, Platts highlighted a case where NRG Energy told state regulators in Texas that Hurricane Harvey dumped so much water that stocks of coal at its W.A. Parish power plant were so "saturated with rainwater that coal was unable to be delivered into the silos" and switched to natural gas.

Even with the polar vortex, API's Marty Durbin argues to lawmakers that deliveries cut off during the 2014 cold spell weren't directly weather-related but instead a result of economic decisions made by generators who had customers with "interruptible" contracts.

"I come from an era when major policy and initiatives, including notices of proposed rulemaking, were usually done in 300- or 500-page documents. This looks pretty spare," said former FERC Chairman Jim Hoecker, who served under the Clinton administration. "I'm not sure that the threat that the secretary is alluding to here is imminent. It might be. They just need to explain themselves.

He added: "What they're going to find is that having a different philosophy doesn't relieve the responsibility to testify it."

To view online click here.

Back

Energy Department discloses $56K in Perry travel Back

By Darius Dixon | 10/06/2017 07:06 PM EDT

Energy Secretary Rick Perry has racked up as much as $56,246 in non-commercial air travel since taking office in early March, the Energy Department disclosed Friday in response to congressional questions about Cabinet-level trips.

Political appointees at DOE did not use private non-commercial aircraft, but on four occasions Perry did fly on government-owned aircraft or chartered aircraft, DOE Deputy General Counsel Eric Fygi wrote in a letter to the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee. That committee is seeking information about Trump administration officials' travel following the revelations that led to Tom Price's resignation from the job as HHS secretary.

Perry's single biggest expense, according to agency documents submitted to the committee, was a one-day round trip in mid-May from Reagan National Airport near Washington D.C. to Olathe, Kan. for DOE's Small Business Forum & Expo, and included a tour of the DOE Kansas City National Security Campus, which is responsible for manufacturing and procuring non-nuclear components for nuclear weapons.

Joining Perry on that trip were a handful of other agency officials, including National Nuclear Security Administrator Frank Klotz and deputy chief of staff Dan Wilmot. The total cost to taxpayers for using the Federal Aviation Administration's Gulfstream IV plane was an estimated $35,000.

Perry's second most expensive trip was a private charter flight on Sept. 28 from the Washington Dulles Airport to the Hazleton Regional Airport in Pennsylvania, which later continued to the Greater Portsmouth Regional Airport in Ohio, and was disclosed by a Reuters report earlier this week. The trip, costing an estimated $11,000, occurred just a day before Price resigned after a series of POLITICO reports of him running up a government travel tab exceeding $1 million — a figure that dwarfs Perry's apparent billing.

After visiting the coal mine in Pennsylvania and a defunct uranium enrichment facility in Ohio, the DOE documents say Perry planned to "secure commercial transportation for the continuation of his travel out of Ohio."

Perry and his staff also made use of a Defense Department plane in May for travel from Idaho Falls, Idaho, to tour the national lab there, to Santa Fe, N.M., to visit the Los Alamos National Laboratory. The trip continued from Santa Fe to Carlsbad, N.M., to visit the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, a low-level nuclear waste storage facility. The estimated cost of the trip was $7,000.

The last trip documented by DOE was for the round-trip use of plane owned by the Bonneville Power Administration, a quasi-independent utility within DOE, to fly from Seattle to Richland, Wash., to visit the Hanford nuclear site in August. The cost of the trip: $3,246.

The information sent to Capitol Hill did not include trips senior DOE non-career officials took with President Donald Trump and Vice President Mike Pence on government-owned aircraft or trips with officials at other agencies with their own aircraft, such as DoD and DHS.

"This response does not address this travel as such travel arrangements were not made by DOE," Fygi wrote.

"The Department of Energy strictly follows both government-wide and internal DOE travel regulations and policy," DOE spokesperson Shaylyn Hynes said in a statement. "The Secretary travels almost exclusively on commercial aircraft. In the rare instances where government-owned or chartered aircraft have been used, trips were pre-approved by an Ethics officer within the Office of General Counsel."

The White House has backed steep spending cuts across the executive branch, including a roughly 9 percent to DOE for fiscal 2018, a decline of roughly $2.7 billion compared to current levels.

In the wake of Price's resignation, several other Cabinet-level Trump officials have found their taxpayer spending scrutinized.

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has flown on military planes for some trips that also coincided with appearances at fundraising events, raising questions about his habit of mixing official government business with political activism, POLITICO has reported. The EPA Inspector General has also recently expanded a probe into EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's travels.

An investigation into seven military flights taken by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin that cost about $811,798 ultimately found that the former Goldman Sachs alum had not violated any ethics requirements or other regulations.

The White House began cracking down on Cabinet officials' use of private planes amid Price's resignation, telling them chief of staff John Kelly must approve almost all travel on "government-owned, rented, leased, or chartered aircraft."

To view online click here.

Back

DOE approves big boost for Vogtle loan guarantees Back

By Darius Dixon | 09/29/2017 11:08 AM EDT

The Energy Department has conditionally approved a $3.7 billion increase in the federal loan guarantees for the over-budget Vogtle nuclear project in Georgia, the agency announced this morning.

DOE had already approved $8.33 billion for the two-reactor project under the Obama administration. Now, Energy Secretary Rick Perry is primed to offer an additional $1.67 billion to Southern Co.'s Georgia Power, $1.6 billion to Oglethorpe Power Corp. and $415 million to the Municipal Electric Authority of Georgia.

The Energy Department had originally extended loan guarantees for $3.4 billion to Georgia Power, $3.1 billion to Oglethorpe and $1.8 billion to MEAG.

WHAT'S NEXT: The new DOE loan guarantees are conditional and the firms will not be able to access the financing until they are finalized. It's unclear how long it will take to finalize.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA draft questions greenhouse gas authority, ponders state rules for coal plants Back

By Emily Holden | 10/11/2017 11:13 PM EDT

EPA's proposal to consider a replacement to the Clean Power Plan will question whether the agency has authority to regulate greenhouse gases from power plants, and how it should let states write their own plans to upgrade coal plants, according to excerpts of the draft notice obtained by POLITICO.

The 34-page EPA document is currently under review by the White House and other agencies, and administration officials have said it will be released in a few weeks.

Any replacement EPA might propose is expected to achieve modest greenhouse gas reductions, especially compared to the Obama administration rule, which sought to shrink carbon dioxide levels from the power sector by 32 percent from 2005 levels by 2030.

Some conservatives are lobbying EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to forego a replacement and instead challenge the legal finding that requires the agency to regulate emissions. The draft may leave that option open.

EPA is still considering "whether it is appropriate to propose a rule," and must "ascertain the scope of legal authority that Congress conferred to EPA," before determining how best to implement a policy, according to the document.

On Tuesday, EPA proposed to withdraw the Obama-era power plant standards, arguing they exceeded the agency's authority by pushing electricity companies away from coal and toward natural gas and renewable power.

In the advanced notice of proposed rulemaking, or ANPR, EPA refers to itself as "a creature of statute," and notes that the Clean Air Act delegates air pollution control to states and local governments.

"States will have the primary role in deciding who gets regulated and the scope of that regulation," the document says. "While the CAA is a source of authority, it is also a source of carefully crafted limitations, which this agency must and will respect."

The agency interprets Section 111 of the Clean Air Act, the part used to write the Clean Power Plan, as requiring EPA to rely on a demonstrated system for curbing greenhouse gas emissions and to consider the costs of achieving those reductions and any "non-air quality" health effects. In Tuesday's draft withdrawal of the Clean Power Plan, EPA discounted many of the health benefits the Obama administration had cited in 2015 from cutting air pollutants other than carbon dioxide.

"Each state then develops a plan with its own legally enforceable emission standards to implement the emission guidelines, with flexibility to accommodate the State's particular needs and circumstances," the draft ANPR explains.

The ANPR asks for feedback on "several technologies and equipment upgrades—as well as good operating and maintenance practices," that coal plants could pursue to reduce emissions. The draft also considers in detail whether making those changes would trigger a "new source review," which would require plants to obtain air pollution permits. It covers ways that coal plant operators could avoid those reviews.

To view online click here.

Back

White House reviewing proposal to consider Clean Power Plan replacement Back

By Emily Holden | 10/11/2017 03:48 PM EDT

The White House is reviewing EPA's advance proposal to consider a replacement to the Obama administration's climate standards for power plants, according to a notice that the Office of Management and Budget received the document Tuesday.

EPA officially proposed to revoke the Clean Power Plan Tuesday. On a call with conservative interests, administration officials said a proposal about a replacement could be issued in the next few weeks, as POLITICO reported.

The agency argued in moving to withdraw the regulation that Obama's EPA illegally set requirements that would have required companies to shift away from coal-fired power plants and use more natural gas and renewable power for electricity. EPA argued it only has authority to regulate coal plants directly.

Officials on the call also suggested the agency is considering letting states set their own standards for coal plants.

The document OMB received is called "State Guidelines for Greenhouse Gas Emissions from Existing Electric Utility Generating Units."

Any replacement rule would likely require coal plants to run more efficiently but is not expected to significantly reduce power-sector carbon dioxide emissions that cause climate change.

EPA has said it has not yet decided whether to pursue a replacement, although a Supreme Court ruling and endangerment finding written by the agency require it to address greenhouse gas emissions from power plants. Some conservatives want Administrator Scott Pruitt to fight that endangerment finding.

To view online click here.

Back

Trump nominates AccuWeather CEO to lead key climate agency Back

By Henry C. Jackson | 10/11/2017 10:42 PM EDT

President Donald Trump has nominated the CEO of AccuWeather to run the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, a key agency in conducting climate research and assessing climate change.

Barry Myers has served since 2007 as CEO of AccuWeather, a media company in State College, Pennsylvania, that provides worldwide weather predictions. He graduated from Penn State with a degree in business and received a law degree from Boston University, but has no science training.

In a news release, the White House called him "one of the world's leading authorities on the use of weather information." Trump has nominated him to serve as the Commerce Department's under secretary for oceans and atmosphere, which oversees NOAA.

At AccuWeather, Myers has led a global expansion of the company. His significant private-sector experience fits with many of the other high-profile Trump administration appointees.

NOAA has a vast portfolio that includes the nation's weather forecasts and projecting climate change. The agency oversees the National Weather Service and a vast array of research. It also has responsibility for protecting coastal areas and oceans.

To view online click here.

Back

McCain, Cardin urge Trump to get tough with Moscow Back

By Elana Schor | 09/29/2017 04:12 PM EDT

Two senior senators are urging President Donald Trump to fully use the new authority to punish Russia that lawmakers overwhelmingly granted him last month.

Sens. John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Ben Cardin (D-Md.) wrote to Trump on the eve of a key deadline in the Russia sanctions bill, which won lopsided bipartisan support in Congress and forced the president to get tougher on Moscow over its election meddling. That legislation requires the administration to identify by Friday individuals linked to Russian defense and intelligence operations who could be subject to new penalties.

McCain and Cardin urged Trump to meet the deadline in a way that "expansively defines these actors to ensure that the perpetrators of the attack on our democracy last year — the defense and intelligence sectors — are sanctioned appropriately."

"We are very concerned that Russia may attempt to work around sanctions by funneling the arms trade through companies not included in the administration's guidance," the senators added.

Beyond that deadline, McCain and Cardin pressed Trump to "fully implement" another section of the sanctions measure that adds new penalties for companies connected to Russian oil and gas projects. They also asked Trump to nudge European allies to coordinate their sanctions in line with the U.S. system, asking for a briefing from the State and Treasury Departments.

And the duo also delivered a broader warning to Trump that lawmakers would take advantage of the popular sanctions bill's authority to force a congressional review of any decision to ease or end sanctions against Russia.

"As you know, the law provides for Congress to review any administration determination to remove sanctions designations on individuals or entities," McCain and Cardin wrote. "Based on the overwhelming Congressional support for enacting this law, and that provision in particular, Congress will undoubtedly take that role seriously."

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke's travels: Ski resort and Alaskan steakhouse Back

By Esther Whieldon and Ben Lefebvre | 10/10/2017 07:32 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has attended at least two additional political fundraisers while traveling for official business, including a weekend ski getaway less than three weeks after he was sworn in that donors paid up to $3,000 to attend, according to sources and documents reviewed by POLITICO.

Zinke's previously undisclosed attendance at the events adds to scrutiny he is facing over his habit of mixing political activities with official business when traveling outside of Washington, D.C., and to questions over travel expenses incurred by members of President Donald Trump's Cabinet. In addition to the fundraisers, Zinke has held at least a half-dozen other events with big donors or influential conservative organizations while on official trips.

Zinke, a former Montana congressman who became secretary March 1, started his fundraising appearances even before attending a March 30 Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser in St. Croix that POLITICO reported last week, at which donors paid up to $5,000 per couple for a photo with him. The Office of Special Counsel, which is investigating Zinke's use of travel and political activities in office, has been asked by a watchdog group to look into his appearance there.

In the first of the newly disclosed appearances, Zinke attended a mid-March fundraiser at a ski resort in Big Sky, Montana, organized by committees affiliated with Republican Sen. Steve Daines, according to two attendees who saw him there. And in May, Zinke briefly stopped by a fundraiser for GOP Rep. Don Young at a steakhouse in Anchorage, Alaska, a spokesman for Young's campaign told POLITICO.

All three fundraisers occurred on trips that Zinke took for official Interior Department business. The Hatch Act and other federal laws allow Cabinet secretaries to participate in partisan political activities only if they do so on their own time and do not use any governmental resources. Federal Election Commission records for the campaign committees do not list any reimbursement payments to Interior for the events.

"Both law and common sense tell us that taxpayer resources are supposed to be used when you're doing the taxpayers' business [but] are not supposed to be used to help candidates get elected," said Brendan Fischer of the nonprofit watchdog organization Campaign Legal Center.

An Interior Department spokeswoman did not respond to specific questions about Zinke's attendance at the events nor whether the campaigns reimbursed Interior for any of his travel expenses, but she said ethics officials sign off on the secretary's trips and all of them comply with the law.

"The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in a statement.

Other guests attending the Montana fundraiser included Sens. John Hoeven (R-N.D.) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), according to an invitation to the March 17-19 event posted by a local political blog earlier that month. Donors were asked to contribute $3,000 if they were attending on behalf of a political action committee or $1,500 for an individual. Another invitation for events that weekend obtained by POLITICO sought donations as low as $500 to attend two dinners for Daines.

Hoeven hosted his own reception Friday night before the Daines dinner and a lunch Saturday, according to a campaign invitation obtained by POLITICO, which also informed guests that they could purchase "discounted ski lift tickets" at the resort.

Zinke was not named on the invitations, but his official schedule lists him as attending a "welcoming reception" for Daines on Friday night, spending "personal time with Senator Murkowski" at Big Sky Resort on Saturday and attending a "reception & dinner" for Daines that evening.

Two sources who attended the Daines fundraiser recalled seeing Zinke there. One of the sources, a lobbyist, said Zinke attended the Friday night social and the breakfast buffet the next day. The lobbyist said that when Daines introduced Zinke, the Montana senator mentioned that Zinke was the state's first Cabinet secretary.

The Hatch Act bars Zinke from taking part in political events while acting in his official role as Interior secretary, which includes being identified by his title in invitations. But Richard Painter, a University of Minnesota professor and former White House chief ethics lawyer under President George W. Bush, said Daines referring to Zinke's Cabinet position doesn't appear to violate the law.

Zinke "should take reasonable steps to make sure people aren't using his official title" and not use the title himself at political events, Painter said. "But I don't know that he has an obligation to jump in and tell the senator he can't do that."

The secretary spent most of the day that Friday touring Yellowstone National Park, which the Interior Department manages through the National Park Service. He did not have any other official events listed on his schedule for Saturday and flew back to Washington, D.C., on Sunday.

A report posted by Interior on Zinke's March travel expenses shows that he claimed 75 percent of his per diem that Friday and did not claim any lodging or reimbursements over that weekend, which he took as personal days off. He did fly home on official taxpayer-funded travel, however.

The Young fundraiser occurred May 31, when Zinke was in Anchorage for a speech to the Alaska Oil and Gas Association's annual conference, where he signed a secretarial order for an updated assessment of how much oil exists in part of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. The invitation to the reception, a copy of which was obtained by political blog Must Read Alaska and shared with POLITICO, does not list Zinke as a special guest, nor does it say how much donors had to contribute to attend.

FEC records for the Alaskans for Don Young campaign committee show it received $9,800 in campaign contributions from individuals and political action committees on that day.

Young's campaign spokesman, Matt Shuckerow, said in an email that Zinke made "only very brief remarks" at the event, and that the campaign did not confirm his attendance in advance and did not require guests to pay to attend. "Not only did the campaign seek out the guidance of the Interior Department's ethics personnel prior to the event, it took concerted efforts to follow their strict guidance," Shuckerow said. He did not say whether the campaign reimbursed the Interior Department for any costs associated with Zinke's trip.

Zinke's calendar for that day includes a brief stop at Sullivan's Steakhouse in Anchorage, the same venue listed on the invitation, for a "Rep. Don Young Reception." Later that night, Zinke went to dinner with representatives of sportsmen's groups, according to his schedule.

The Anchorage stop came in the middle of a weeklong trip that included the use of a military plane to fly from Washington, D.C., to Norway, Greenland and then Alaska. Interior paid for Zinke and three Interior staff members to take the flight. Zinke's wife, Lola, also accompanied him on the trip but reimbursed the government for the cost of her seat, Interior has said.

In both of the newly disclosed appearances, Zinke did not pose for photos with high-dollar donors, as had been the case with the Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser. POLITICO's report on Zinke's appearance in that photo line led Walter Shaub, a former director of the U.S. Office of Government Ethics who is now with the Campaign Legal Center, to ask the Office of Special Counsel to open a Hatch Act investigation. The OSC typically opens investigations in response to complaints it receives, but a spokesman declined to comment on the status of Shaub's request.

Still, some watchdogs question whether Zinke is focused enough on his day job given how much attention he has paid to politics.

"There's always the risk that a high-level government official spending more time involved in political events may not be attending to their official duties," said Nick Schwellenbach, director of investigations at Project On Government Oversight.

To view online click here.

Back

EPA hires industry lawyer as adviser to air office Back

By Eric Wolff | 10/11/2017 05:12 PM EDT

EPA has hired David Harlow, a lawyer with expertise in the Clean Air Act, to serve in an advisory role to the Office of Air and Radiation, EPA sources tell POLITICO.

EPA's press office did not respond to a request for comment, but agency sources say Harlow's role will most closely resemble that of Joe Goffman, who was senior counsel to the Air Office during the Obama administration. Should Bill Wehrum be confirmed to serve as the assistant administrator to the office, Harlow will report to him, sources said.

Harlow, like Wehrum, most recently worked at Hunton & Williams where he advised and representing the power and paper industries in enforcement and permitting cases. His biographical webpage for the firm has been removed, but a cached version says he helped utilities with new source permit cases and he defended wood pulp and paper mills from Clean Air Act enforcement. Court documents show that he worked with William Brownell representing the Utility Air Regulatory Group, an informal group of electric utilities who have sued the EPA over regulations many times.

EPA did not respond to a request for comment on Harlow's hiring.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

<input type="radio"/>
Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by ExxonMobil: Reading the tea leaves on Clean Power Plan repeal — More political activity from Zinke revealed — Antiquities Act revamp gets its day in committee
Date: Wednesday, October 11, 2017 5:42:58 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/11/2017 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén and Emily Holden

LONG CARBON RULE BATTLE LIES AHEAD: President Donald Trump's administration sought to frame Tuesday's move to rescind the Obama-era Clean Power Plan as fulfilling a campaign process, but it really just kicked off what's likely to be an arduous and lengthy legal and regulatory process that may ultimately result in a replacement rule with very modest reductions in the emissions that fuel climate change. "This is the beginning of the process to carry out the president's promise to make sure that we do our job at the agency within the bounds of the law and don't declare war on certain sections of our economy," EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said on "Fox News," his only public appearance Tuesday to discuss his proposed rule.

Many state officials, environmental advocates, businesses and reporters were left wondering why they hadn't received any sort of briefing or additional background before or after the proposal's release — especially since senior agency officials had a closed phone call Tuesday morning with conservative organizations where they took questions from groups like the Heartland Institute and State Policy Network, as Pro's Emily Holden reports. Clint Woods, the director of the Association of Air Pollution Control Agencies, which represents mostly conservative state air agencies, said his members got a heads up on timing but would be "looking forward to more engagement prior to major announcements in the future."

Joe Goffman, EPA general counsel when the Clean Power Plan was proposed and finalized, said the agency typically had background conversations with all of those groups when rolling out a major proposal. "We thought that it was an elementary part of our obligation to present information to state governments, to the affected industry, often very broadly defined, and to environmental advocacy groups," Goffman said. A phone call between the administrator and reporters, and a briefing on the Hill for lawmakers was also customary, he said. Pruitt has accused Obama's EPA of not conducting enough outreach or listening enough to states, which Goffman said is "demonstrably false." The agency did not respond to questions about its outreach on the rollback.

ICYMI: Here's links to EPA's fact sheet, proposal and regulatory impact analysis.

Five things: Pro's Alex Guillén and Eric Wolff take a look at five of the biggest policy changes the Trump administration has made to try to prop up the prospects of fossil fuels. 1) Killing the crown jewel of Obama's climate change legacy by axing the Clean Power Plan, 2) A push to shore up coal's place in the nation's electricity marketplace, 3) The likelihood of trade barriers on imported solar products, 4) Tapping the brakes on tightened mileage standards that Obama had imposed for cars sold from 2022 to 2025 and 5) Actions designed to make federal lands more amenable to fossil fuel development.

Push to shutter coal plants gets another jolt: Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg is at the Sierra Club's HQ this morning at 11:45 a.m. where he'll announce "an increased commitment" to shutter the U.S. coal fleet even amid the repeal of the Clean Power Plan. That comes as the Union of Concerned Scientists released an analysis finding 21 percent of the nation's coal fleet uneconomic and an additional 18 percent already slated for retirement or conversion to natural gas.

Quotable: California Senate leader (and potential Sen. Dianne Feinstein primary challenger) Kevin de Lèon not mincing words on the withdrawal: "Washington's utter failure to confront the existential threat of climate change will go down among the most shameful chapters in US history," he tweeted.

Here's where we are: EPA started the process to roll back the signature Obama-era effort to combat climate change even as the U.S. is reeling from back to back to back to back hits from hurricanes and ferocious wildfires slam California. Assuming a disaster aid package eventually clears Congress as expected, lawmakers will have spent more than $50 billion responding to the natural disasters already, and House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy said last week "I do not believe this will be the last of the supplementals." Three weeks after Hurricane Maria slammed into Puerto Rico, 84 percent of the island still lacks electricity and 36 percent of residents still don't have potable water, according to official figures.

TIMELY TELEVISION VIEWING: "Frontline" titles its episode tonight "War on the EPA," as the PBS show focuses on Pruitt's rise from an anti-EPA crusader as Oklahoma attorney general to running the agency. Trailer for the episode here.

WE'RE ROLLING RIGHT THROUGH THE MIDDLE OF THE WEEK! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and Independent Petroleum Association of America's Neal Kirby was first to identify Sen. Bill Cassidy as our most recent physician elected to the Senate. For today: Who is the only senator to win a reelection race in their 90s? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

SKI RESORTS, ALASKAN STEAKHOUSE, OH MY! Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke attended at least two additional political fundraisers during trips he took for official Interior business, Pro's Esther Whieldon and Ben Lefebvre scoop. Federal law permits Cabinet officials to participate in partisan political activities on their own time and without using any federal resources, but FEC records don't list any reimbursement payments to Interior for the events. "Both law and common sense tell us that taxpayer resources are supposed to be used when you're doing the taxpayers' business [but] are not supposed to be used to help candidates get elected," said Brendan Fischer of the nonprofit watchdog organization Campaign Legal Center.

The two events were:

— A mid-March fundraiser at a ski resort in Big Sky, Mont., organized by committees affiliated with Republican Sen. Steve Daines. Donors were asked to contribute $3,000 if they were attending on behalf of a political action committee or $1,500 for an individual. Also in attendance: Sen. John Hoeven and Senate Energy Chairman Lisa Murkowski. He didn't charge for lodging or his per diem for part of the trip.

— A May 31 fundraiser for Alaskan Rep. Don Young where a Young campaign spokesman, Matt Shuckerow, said the secretary made "only very brief remarks." He said the campaign "took concerted efforts to follow" strict guidance from Interior's ethics personnel.

Interior's response: Spokeswoman Heather Swift said ethics officials signed off on all trips and they all complied with the law. "The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources," she said.

NOT PLEASED: Amid weeks of reporting on non-commercial travel and other troubling behavior from Cabinet officials, the acting head of the Office of Governmental Ethics issued a memo warning he is "deeply concerned" by recent actions. Among the suggestions is "modeling a 'Should I do it?' mentality versus a 'Can I do it?' mentality" in their actions. "It is essential to the success of our republic that citizens can trust that your decisions and the decisions made by your agency are motivated by the public good and not by personal interests," David Apol wrote.

THE WOTUS WITH THE MOSTEST: The Supreme Court today will take up a wonky but important question central to federal water law: Should challenges to the Obama administration's Waters of the U.S. rule go through a district court first or straight to an appellate venue? Of course, the Trump administration is working to repeal WOTUS in the coming months and says it will issue a rewritten version early next year. But this venue question is all but guaranteed to apply again, meaning SCOTUS guidance could prove useful.

What you need to know: The Clean Water Act says that most CWA regulations and actions should be challenged first at the district level, but it lists seven exceptions that would go straight to a circuit court. Two are in play here: one regarding rules affecting effluent limitation guidelines, and one for any action approving or denying discharge permits. The Trump administration argues both exceptions apply, and the suits should go to a circuit court first. Various challengers, led by the National Association of Manufacturers, want it to go through district courts first.

History brief: After the rule was released, lawsuits were filed in both district and circuit courts throughout the country. After some district-level proceedings that led to a stay of WOTUS in 13 states only, the circuit-level cases were consolidated into one mega-case before the 6th Circuit, which then issued a nationwide injunction. The 6th Circuit then issued a complicated 1-1-1 ruling that concluded that it should indeed hear the challenge first. One judge said both exceptions apply, one said only one exception applies and the third said neither applies and the challenges should first go through district courts.

Why it matters: This isn't entirely an esoteric spat. Supporters of district-first litigation argue the Clean Water Act gives more time to challenge regulations that go to lower courts first. It also means challengers can pick the district court where they want to sue, whereas circuit-first challenges would be randomly consolidated. Meanwhile, those who want circuit-first review argue that it provides more certainty and helps avoid patchwork problems — such as the 13-state WOTUS freeze.

EPICALLY BUSY DAY AT HOUSE NATURAL RESOURCES: The panel is slated to convene two separate hearings Wednesday to examine controversial measures on offshore drilling and the Antiquities Act:

— At 2 p.m., the Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee considers a draft of the Accessing Strategic Resources Offshore Act, which would expand offshore revenue sharing program to additional states; prevent future presidents from withdrawing sections of the outer continental shelf from drilling or designating marine sanctuaries; and repeal certain Obama-era rules on Arctic drilling, among other things. Witnesses include former Senate Energy Chairwoman Mary Landrieu.

— The full committee then gathers at 4 p.m. to mark up Chairman Rob Bishop's long-awaited effort to overhaul the Antiquities Act. The bill, H.R. 3990 \(115\), would require a federal environmental review process to designate any monument more than 640 acres in size, require the sign off from local officials on new large monuments and prohibit marine national monuments "with no archeological or historic sites in need of protection." Committee members will also consider a resolution requiring Zinke to disclose more information about his review of existing national monument designations.

** Presented by ExxonMobil: We're collaborating with FuelCell Energy on a novel idea to use fuel cells to capture carbon at natural gas power plants, and in the process reduce emissions and increase electrical output. This technology could be a game changer in addressing the world's growing need for energy, while also reducing the impact on the environment. Learn more. **

A NEW DISASTER EMERGES — CALIFORNIA WILDFIRES: Trump declared a major disaster in California Tuesday as wildfires have forced the evacuations of tens of thousands, cost at least 17 lives to date and caused billions in damage. "We are with you, our prayers are with you, and we will be with you every day until we put the fires out and stand with these families to rebuild these communities," Vice President Mike Pence said alongside McCarthy and Rep. Jeff Denham after a briefing Tuesday. Separately, California Sen. Kamala Harris and Feinstein asked Trump in a letter to take all steps to release federal aid "as soon as possible."

Ryan heading to Puerto Rico Friday: According to multiple reports, Speaker Paul Ryan heads to Puerto Rico Friday along with Cathy McMorris Rodgers, the fourth-highest House Republican; Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen; top Appropriations Democrat Nita Lowey and Puerto Rico Resident Commissioner Jenniffer González. That comes as the Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico hired Williams & Jensen to lobby the federal government on disaster relief and recovery efforts (h/t POLITICO Influence). The White House late Tuesday asked for an additional $4.9 billion in emergency hurricane aid to help Puerto Rico as part of a disaster funding package the House is still expected to consider this week, Pro Budget and Appropriation's Sarah Ferris reports.

ON THE HOUSE FLOOR: Lawmakers today are slated to consider a bill of interest to ME fans. The Power And Security Systems Act S. 190 \(115\) would extend energy efficiency standards exemptions for external power devices and is slated to be considered under suspension of the rules, requiring two-thirds support for passage.

PROTESTING PERRY'S PUSH AT FERC: The Nuclear Information and Resource Service and allied organizations are greeting FERC employees today at 8:45 a.m. to protest Perry's push for new rules that "properly value" the coal and nuclear sectors. That comes as National Rural Electric Cooperative Association CEO Jim Matheson sent Perry a letter thanking him for "jumpstarting a conversation" about the nation's electric markets.

DRINKING WATER UTILITIES ENTER FARM BILL FRAY: The American Water Works Association wants Congress to include provisions and funding to better protect drinking water sources from agricultural runoff, Pro Ag's Jenny Hopkinson reports. The group is also pushing for "robust overall funding" for the conservation title — keeping it at $6 billion, if not adding to the current allotment.

FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF WHERE ARE THEY NOW: With his red sweater, coal plant worker Ken Bone rose to national attention as an undecided voter during last year's presidential race but he's since become quite critical of the Trump administration, CNN reports. "Almost anybody who is currently a Democrat in the Senate, I think I would probably vote for over Trump," he said.

DEPARTMENT OF AWKWARD TIMING: Perry gave an interview to the American Gas Association's magazine that prominently features a picture of the secretary with disgraced Rep. Tim Murphy. Read his interview here.

MOVER, SHAKER: Keith Maley has started as director of PR at the Trust for Public Land. He previously was director of regional media in the Obama White House (h/t Playbook).

Liam Donovan has joined Bracewell's Policy Resolution Group as a lobbyist specializing in tax, infrastructure, energy and other issues. He comes from the Associated Builders and Contractors where he was as senior director of legislative and political affairs.

Amy Graham is starting next week as communications director for Sen. Todd Young. She most recently worked as senior communications adviser and deputy associate administrator at the EPA (h/t Playbook).

QUICK HITS

— Hillary Clinton at UC Davis: Climate change a factor in Northern California wildfires. First Coast News.

— IMF tells rich nations that greater urgency needed on climate change. The Guardian.

— Foster Friess confirms interest in primarying 'hero' John Barrasso. Washington Examiner.

— Colonial partners with Enterprise for fuel exports from Beaumont terminal. Reuters.

— Despite some opposition from Los Angeles, giant Southern California water agency approves Delta tunnels project. Sacramento Bee.

— Lake Erie algal bloom cleanup falling short of 40 percent phosphorus reduction goal. Cleveland.com.

HAPPENING TODAY

8:45 a.m. — The Nuclear Information and Resource Service and allied organizations protest Perry's planned rules to benefit coal and nuclear sectors, FERC, 888 First Street NE

10:00 a.m. — House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee holds hearing on several bills, Longworth 1334

11:45 a.m. — Michael Bloomberg and other environmental advocates announce "new investment" to retire U.S. coal fleet, Sierra Club, 50 F St NW

12:00 p.m. — Reps. Bishop and Gosar discuss legislation revamping the Antiquities Act, contact: katie.schoettler@mail.house.gov

2:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources Committee's Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee holds a hearing on ASTRO Act, Longworth 1334

4:00 p.m. — House Natural Resources holds markup of Chairman Bishop's Antiquities Act reform, Longworth 1334

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

**Presented by ExxonMobil: Energy is fundamental to modern life and drives economic prosperity - in small communities across America and around the world. We need a range of solutions to meet growing energy demand while reducing emissions to address the risk of climate change. Visit the Energy Factor to learn more about some of the bold ideas and next-generation technologies we're working on to meet this challenge: EnergyFactor.com **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/reading-the-tea-leaves-on-clean-power-plan-repeal-024987>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

Trump administration takes ax to climate rule Back

By Emily Holden | 10/10/2017 02:16 PM EDT

The Trump administration officially moved to kill the Obama-era climate change rule for power plants Tuesday, fulfilling a campaign pledge but setting off what is expected to be a bitter legal battle between the EPA and several states, health and environmental groups.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt signed an agency proposal to repeal the Clean Power Plan, which would have sped the nation's shift away from coal-burning power plants and toward renewable power and natural gas, which emits less planet-warming carbon dioxide. Less than a third of U.S. emissions come from the power sector, and the rule aimed to shrink them to about 15 percent below 2015 levels by 2030.

Pruitt, the former Oklahoma attorney general who sued Obama's EPA over the rule, claims that it would have cost $33 billion and is illegal because it pushed for a transition away from coal rather than directly limiting emissions from coal plants. EPA released a photo of Pruitt signing the document but did not hold a public event.

EPA is exploring writing a replacement that would let states set their own standards to require coal plants to run more efficiently, or burn less coal while producing the same amount of power. That would likely achieve few emissions reductions.

"The Obama administration pushed the bounds of their authority so far with the CPP that the Supreme Court issued a historic stay of the rule, preventing its devastating effects to be imposed on the American people while the rule is being challenged in court," Pruitt said in a press release. "We are committed to righting the wrongs of the Obama administration by cleaning the regulatory slate. Any replacement rule will be done carefully, properly, and with humility, by listening to all those affected by the rule."

The Trump administration has hailed the withdrawal as a victory for coal, but market experts say the outlook for the fuel is still dim.

"Withdrawing the Clean Power Plan won't clear the deck for new coal generation. The economics of natural gas and renewables are more favorable, now and in our future scenarios," Bloomberg New Energy Finance Policy Editor Steph Munro said.

During President Barack Obama's two terms, the fracking boom turned the U.S. into a natural gas super power, cutting the cost of the fuel by 75 percent and leading to a boom in natural gas-power generation, which tripled between 2009 and 2016, according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration.

Wind power also surged under Obama, tripling in capacity, while solar power grew from virtually zero to become the leading source of new power generation in 2016.

Jim Matheson, CEO of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, said the withdrawal will give cooperatives, which are owned by customers rather than investors, flexibility to decide when to take coal plants offline. Those co-ops got 62 percent of their power from coal in 2016, compared to 71 percent just two years before, he said.

Still, Matheson wants EPA to write a replacement rule to provide business certainty to the utilities, although he acknowledged that process could take years.

"To the extent we can have a level of clarity over time about what the playing field looks like, that matters," he said. Many electricity companies believe that if Pruitt's EPA can write a replacement rule, it will be more difficult for a future administration to challenge than if he takes no action at all. Critics have contended that Pruitt plans to slow-walk the process.

Conservative groups praised the repeal, with lobbying group Americans for Prosperity saying it would prevent "dramatically higher" energy costs.

Health advocates say Trump's EPA is vastly overstating the costs of the rule while ignoring the impacts of climate change and other pollutants that come from coal plants, especially by declining to count the benefits of reducing those emissions in an analysis of the Clean Power Plan.

When EPA finalized the Clean Power Plan, the agency estimated that by 2030 it would annually prevent 3,600 premature deaths, 90,000 childhood asthma attacks and 1,700 heart attacks.

"These are not insignificant benefits, health effects," said Paul Billings, senior vice president of advocacy at the American Lung Association. "I don't necessarily agree with the dollar amount they place on the cost of a human life, but it does create a basis for doing comparisons across rules ... to translate those health effects into dollars costs."

More than half of states sued to stop the Clean Power Plan, and the Supreme Court in early 2016 stayed its implementation while a lower court considered the challenge.

EPA has been asking the court to withhold its decision about whether the rule was legal until the agency has had a chance to withdraw it and explore an alternative.

Tim Profeta, director of Duke University's Nicholas Institute for Environmental Policy

Solutions, said EPA is nixing the rule now to keep the court from issuing a decision.

"The court should decide the case that it has before it in order to clear up any dispute over the extent of EPA's authority to regulate greenhouse gas emissions from power plants," Profeta said.

Since Trump's election, 14 green-leaning states have banded together as part of the Climate Alliance and said they will aim to curb emissions even without the federal government.

"We will push ahead and work with states that share our belief in science and the imperative to combat global warming," California Gov. Jerry Brown said.

Washington Gov. Jay Inslee added that "Washington state is already feeling the harmful and costly effects of climate change — in more devastating wildfire seasons, strained water resources, increasingly acidic coastal waters, and more. And we are taking action to respond."

Inslee argued that "the United States Supreme Court has ruled on three separate occasions that the EPA has a responsibility, under the Clean Air Act and other federal laws, to protect American communities from harmful carbon pollution."

The Supreme Court in 2007 ruled that EPA would have authority to regulate carbon if the agency found it to be a danger to public health. EPA subsequently decided that carbon is a pollutant. For Pruitt to avoid climate regulations outright, he would have to fight that finding, which many legal experts say is a losing battle.

Eric Wolff contributed to this report

To view online click here.

Back

EPA lays out options for replacement to Clean Power Plan Back

By Emily Holden | 10/10/2017 02:06 PM EDT

EPA is considering allowing states to set their own efficiency standards for coal-fired power plants to replace the Obama administration climate regulation that would have imposed stricter pollution limits across the electricity sector, senior agency officials said during a conference call with conservative groups Tuesday.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt has long argued that the Obama-era Clean Power Plan, which he proposed to withdraw Tuesday, was agency overreach because it set state carbon goals that would have forced a shift away from coal and toward natural gas and renewable power, rather than requiring changes solely at individual coal plants.

A proposal issued Tuesday raised the possibility of a coal plant-focused replacement, but the comments on the phone call give a clearer indication of what EPA is considering as a replacement.

EPA is proposing to return to its "traditional view of scope and authority" under the law, one administration official said on the call, "which means we are going out to the facility and setting source-by-source specific standards.

"EPA has authority to set up a process. It is then the states that take that process and based on their source-by-source analysis and respective localized environmental characteristics set standards that are actually feasible and achievable," the official said on the call that POLITICO monitored.

That would "ensure that states can still make the decision to keep a diverse fuel supply," according to the official.

EPA plans to issue an advance notice of proposed rulemaking in a few weeks to take comment on crafting the replacement to the Clean Power Plan, officials said. EPA will also hold a public hearing and take comments for 60 days after the proposal signed Tuesday is published in the Federal Register, according to officials on Tuesday's call.

Another administration official described the Clean Power Plan as a "novel and expansive view of agency authority" that would have cost consumers $33 billion and forced companies to shut down coal plants.

"Repealing the Clean Power Plan is another step advancing the president's America First strategy and is an example of President [Donald] Trump keeping his promises to the American people," the official said, hewing to talking points acquired by POLITICO on Oct. 7.

The officials on the conference call with more than a dozen participants heard from climate science opponents who urged the administration to convince Americans that, contrary to mainstream research, carbon dioxide does not cause global warming. And they called on EPA to fight the legal finding that requires it to write a replacement rule and regulate emissions.

"Eventually we really need to move to get rid of the endangerment ruling of the Supreme Court," said Jay Lehr, science director for the Heartland Institute, which argues that human activity does not affect the climate. "I think in order to do this in everything EPA does and the president does, we need to begin laying the groundwork for the American public to understand that carbon dioxide is not a contaminant. It is in fact why we live on this planet, it is a breath of life, it has no endangering aspects."

One official suggested Lehr file that idea as a comment in response to the agency's upcoming notice about replacing the Clean Power Plan.

"That will be especially beneficial for us to consider as we move forward," the official said.

Another questioner from Heartland, research fellow Sterling Burnett, suggested the Obama rule might have cost even more than the $33 billion that Pruitt's EPA is contending, although that figure has been criticized as too high by former EPA officials and think tanks.

Burnett also urged EPA not to allow states like California to set higher climate standards than the federal government. The administration officials encouraged him to submit that idea to the agency in the comment-gathering period.

The official also noted that EPA's cost estimates were "interim" figures that might be adjusted.

A third administration official added that "if any stakeholders out there feel that the figures presented in this proposal do not adequately reflect costs for one reason or another, that would be a very good thing I think to submit in comment because that may shape the analysis that's attached with any final action we may take on this proposed repeal."

To view online click here.

Back

5 big things Trump is doing to reverse Obama's climate policies Back

By Alex Guillén and Eric Wolff | 10/10/2017 08:34 PM EDT

The Trump administration is gutting President Barack Obama's climate legacy with a series of moves designed to favor the fossil fuel industry while punishing solar and wind energy producers — and Tuesday's proposal to repeal an Environmental Protection Agency rule on power plants is just the most visible.

President Donald Trump's agencies have also taken steps toward buttressing coal's historically dominant role in the electricity markets, protecting it from rising competition from cleaner sources like natural gas and wind. The administration has opened the door to rolling back the stricter fuel-efficiency standards for cars and trucks that are due to take effect in 2022. And Trump's Interior Department is loosening Obama's limits on fossil fuel production on federal lands, while potentially clamping down on leases for wind and solar projects.

Also waiting in the wings is an upcoming trade decision that would allow Trump to sharply increase the cost of solar installations in the U.S. — eroding sun-powered electricity's ability to compete just as it weans itself off federal subsidies.

Trump's supporters say the steps are needed to protect jobs and American energy dominance. But clean-energy advocates say the actions imperil the planet's future.

"In the midst of flood and fire, our federal government is resolutely deciding to cover its eyes," said climate activist Bill McKibben, referring to the intense hurricanes and Western wildfires that have ravaged the U.S. "History will judge few things more harshly."

Here are five of the biggest U.S. energy policy shifts taking place under Trump:

1) Killing the power plant rule

The Clean Power Plan that the EPA is moving to revoke was the crown jewel of Obama's climate change legacy — representing the first time the U.S. had gone after the climate-warming pollution that's belched out of coal-fired power plants' smokestacks. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt — a former Oklahoma attorney general who had sued to block the regulation — signed the paperwork Tuesday to begin the long process of withdrawing the rule, fulfilling a Trump campaign promise.

The power plant rule sought to capitalize on the U.S. electric industry's shift away from coal and toward natural gas and renewables. The Obama EPA had estimated the rule would cut the power sector's carbon dioxide emissions 32 percent below 2005 levels by 2030. (The U.S. is already more than halfway to that goal even without the rule.)

"This is a policy that the world wants and that makes sense because of market forces and a policy the world needs because, hello, we're seeing climate change effects on people every day," said Janet McCabe, Obama's former EPA air chief.

EPA's new repeal proposal echoes the coal industry's arguments — and Pruitt's previous legal filings — in contending that the Obama administration overstepped its authority.

Pruitt's agency is considering a potential replacement rule, but one that would yield much smaller emissions cuts. If that effort succeeds, a future Democratic administration could find itself barred from imposing significant regulations on greenhouse gases from other major polluting industries.

2) Securing coal's place in the markets

Energy Secretary Rick Perry issued a surprise directive last month aimed at altering the nation's electricity markets by giving an economic advantage to power plants that keep large fuel supplies on site — a move clearly aimed at helping the coal industry ward off increasingly stiff competition. (It would also benefit nuclear power, another economically struggling sector.)

Coal is the nation's most abundant power-plant fuel, but a combination of environmental regulations, huge surges in natural gas and wind-energy production and slumping demand for electricity have prompted power companies to shutter many coal-burning plants in the past decade. As recently as 2007, coal fueled more than half the electric power sector's net electricity generation — but as of this summer, that had fallen to less than a third.

Green-energy supporters say simple economics are spelling coal's demise — but Perry has argued that the trend puts the "resiliency" of the nation's power grid at risk, endangering national and economic security. His plan, if enacted by the independent Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, would insulate coal and nuclear power plants from the low power prices that have put dozens of older plants into retirement.

DOE's proposal, according to one Montana utility regulator, would be "the largest change to electricity regulation in decades."

Critics say the rule could heap billions of dollars in additional energy costs on homes and businesses without a guarantee that they wouldn't lose power when the next hurricane rips out their power lines or a polar vortex freezes the pile of coal at a power plant.

But that decision will ultimately fall to the five commissioners of FERC, an agency made up largely of technocrats that has long sought to safeguard the energy markets. The markets aren't perfect, but Perry's rule is "a draconian way of fixing it," said Pat Wood, a former FERC chief who was appointed by President George W. Bush.

3) Launching a solar trade war?

A vote by a federal trade panel last month will allow Trump to impose tariffs or a quota on imported solar panels that make up the vast majority of the fast-growing U.S. renewables market — if he chooses to.

The decision by the U.S. International Trade Commission agreed with bankrupt solar manufacturers Suniva and SolarWorld that the low-cost imports had harmed U.S.-based producers. Now, people following the case expect that Trump will slap trade barriers on the imported solar equipment, which is largely produced by Chinese-based companies at factories across Asia.

Those barriers would help the small number of U.S.-based solar manufacturers that remain in existence but could send costs skyrocketing and hurt the much larger solar installation industry. It would also threaten to end the U.S. solar boom, which saw the technology become the country's biggest source of new power generation last year for the first time ever.

With the help of federal subsidies, which will be fully phased out by 2020, the solar industry has slashed costs far faster than predicted and grown more rapidly than expected. But the production of cells and panels has shifted to countries like Malaysia, Vietnam and South Korea.

The ITC will send its recommendations for trade remedies to Trump by Nov. 13 — though the White House can ultimately implement any barrier it chooses. That has solar installers and project developers in a panic, and many are stockpiling panels ahead of possible tariffs. The Solar Energy Industries Association is predicting up to 88,000 job losses, or nearly a third of the U.S. sector. And if domestic manufacturing ramps over the next year, 2018 is likely to see supply shortfalls and price spikes as production fails to catch even reduced demand.

4) Hitting the brakes on fuel economy

Trump announced in March that EPA would reconsider the tightened mileage standards that Obama had imposed for cars sold from 2022 to 2025, a move the former president's agencies had said would lift the average to about 50 miles per gallon. Trump's agency is expected to roll back the requirements.

In a review hastened to completion just before Obama left office, then-EPA chief Gina McCarthy affirmed that the aggressive mileage standard was feasible.

Trump's decision to review the target came amid pressure from U.S. automakers to cut back the standards, but it could backfire. The Clean Air Act includes an exception for California to set its own mileage standards, and if EPA changes the requirements, it won't affect California or the 11 other states that follow the Golden State's lead. For automakers, it opens up the nightmare scenario of producing cars for two different U.S. standards.

5) Opening federal lands to fossil fuels

Trump's Interior Department is seeking to boost oil, gas and coal production by taking a hatchet to Obama-era regulations that govern fossil fuel production on public land. One of the biggest moves so far would reverse Obama's tightened restrictions on leaks of planet-warming methane from drilling wells, pipelines and other infrastructure.

Interior also said it would postpone and rewrite a controversial Obama administration rule that requires drillers to publicly disclose the chemicals they used to frack wells on federal land, among other things.

Interior also has scuttled a review that probably would likely have increased the royalties that coal companies must pay to mine on federal land. And in August, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recommended that Trump shrink the size of several national monuments in Utah, Oregon and Nevada, a move that would potentially open them up for drilling or mining. Zinke is aiming to lift restrictions on grazing, mining, fishing and timber harvesting at those and a handful of other monuments.

Besides fighting against previous rules, Interior is trying to take steps it says will increase oil production off the Alaskan coasts and in the long-protected Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Darius Dixon, Ben Lefebvre, Emily Holden and Esther Whieldon contributed to this report.

To view online click here.

Back

Zinke's travels: Ski resort and Alaskan steakhouse Back

By Esther Whieldon and Ben Lefebvre | 10/10/2017 07:32 PM EDT

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has attended at least two additional political fundraisers while traveling for official business, including a weekend ski getaway less than three weeks after he was sworn in that donors paid up to $3,000 to attend, according to sources and documents reviewed by POLITICO.

Zinke's previously undisclosed attendance at the events adds to scrutiny he is facing over his habit of mixing political activities with official business when traveling outside of Washington, D.C., and to questions over travel expenses incurred by members of President Donald Trump's Cabinet. In addition to the fundraisers, Zinke has held at least a half-dozen other events with big donors or influential conservative organizations while on official trips.

Zinke, a former Montana congressman who became secretary March 1, started his fundraising appearances even before attending a March 30 Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser in St. Croix that POLITICO reported last week, at which donors paid up to $5,000 per couple for a photo with him. The Justice Department's Office of Special Counsel, which is investigating Zinke's use of travel and political activities in office, has been asked by a watchdog group to look into his appearance there.

In the first of the newly disclosed appearances, Zinke attended a mid-March fundraiser at a ski resort in Big Sky, Montana, organized by committees affiliated with Republican Sen. Steve Daines, according to two attendees who saw him there. And in May, Zinke briefly stopped by a fundraiser for GOP Rep. Don Young at a steakhouse in Anchorage, Alaska, a spokesman for Young's campaign told POLITICO.

All three fundraisers occurred on trips that Zinke took for official Interior Department business. The Hatch Act and other federal laws allow Cabinet secretaries to participate in partisan political activities only if they do so on their own time and do not use any governmental resources. Federal Election Commission records for the campaign committees do not list any reimbursement payments to Interior for the events.

"Both law and common sense tell us that taxpayer resources are supposed to be used when you're doing the taxpayers' business [but] are not supposed to be used to help candidates get elected," said Brendan Fischer of the nonprofit watchdog organization Campaign Legal Center.

An Interior Department spokeswoman did not respond to specific questions about Zinke's attendance at the events nor whether the campaigns reimbursed Interior for any of his travel expenses, but she said ethics officials sign off on the secretary's trips and all of them comply with the law.

"The Interior Department under the Trump Administration has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling, including seeking commercial options at all times appropriate and feasible, to ensure the efficient use of government resources," Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in a statement.

Other guests attending the Montana fundraiser included Sens. John Hoeven (R-N.D.) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), according to an invitation to the March 17-19 event posted by a local political blog earlier that month. Donors were asked to contribute $3,000 if they were attending on behalf of a political action committee or $1,500 for an individual. Another invitation for events that weekend obtained by POLITICO sought donations as low as $500 to attend two dinners for Daines.

Hoeven hosted his own reception Friday night before the Daines dinner and a lunch Saturday, according to a campaign invitation obtained by POLITICO, which also informed guests that they could purchase "discounted ski lift tickets" at the resort.

Zinke was not named on the invitations, but his official schedule lists him as attending a "welcoming reception" for Daines on Friday night, spending "personal time with Senator Murkowski" at Big Sky Resort on Saturday and attending a "reception & dinner" for Daines that evening.

Two sources who attended the Daines fundraiser recalled seeing Zinke there. One of the sources, a lobbyist, said Zinke attended the Friday night social and the breakfast buffet the next day. The lobbyist said that when Daines introduced Zinke, the Montana senator mentioned that Zinke was the state's first Cabinet secretary.

The Hatch Act bars Zinke from taking part in political events while acting in his official role as Interior secretary, which includes being identified by his title in invitations. But Richard Painter, a University of Minnesota professor and former White House chief ethics lawyer under President George W. Bush, said Daines referring to Zinke's Cabinet position doesn't appear to violate the law.

Zinke "should take reasonable steps to make sure people aren't using his official title" and not use the title himself at political events, Painter said. "But I don't know that he has an obligation to jump in and tell the senator he can't do that."

The secretary spent most of the day that Friday touring Yellowstone National Park, which the Interior Department manages through the National Park Service. He did not have any other official events listed on his schedule for Saturday and flew back to Washington, D.C., on Sunday.

A report posted by Interior on Zinke's March travel expenses shows that he claimed 75 percent of his per diem that Friday and did not claim any lodging or reimbursements over that weekend, which he took as personal days off. He did fly home on official taxpayer-funded travel, however.

The Young fundraiser occurred May 31, when Zinke was in Anchorage for a speech to the Alaska Oil and Gas Association's annual conference, where he signed a secretarial order for an updated assessment of how much oil exists in part of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. The invitation to the reception, a copy of which was obtained by political blog Must Read Alaska and shared with POLITICO, does not list Zinke as a special guest, nor does it say how much donors had to contribute to attend.

FEC records for the Alaskans for Don Young campaign committee show it received $9,800 in campaign contributions from individuals and political action committees on that day.

Young's campaign spokesman, Matt Shuckerow, said in an email that Zinke made "only very brief remarks" at the event, and that the campaign did not confirm his attendance in advance and did not require guests to pay to attend. "Not only did the campaign seek out the guidance of the Interior Department's ethics personnel prior to the event, it took concerted efforts to follow their strict guidance," Shuckerow said. He did not say whether the campaign reimbursed the Interior Department for any costs associated with Zinke's trip.

Zinke's calendar for that day includes a brief stop at Sullivan's Steakhouse in Anchorage, the same venue listed on the invitation, for a "Rep. Don Young Reception." Later that night, Zinke went to dinner with representatives of sportsmen's groups, according to his schedule.

The Anchorage stop came in the middle of a weeklong trip that included the use of a military plane to fly from Washington, D.C., to Norway, Greenland and then Alaska. Interior paid for Zinke and three Interior staff members to take the flight. Zinke's wife, Lola, also accompanied him on the trip but reimbursed the government for the cost of her seat, Interior has said.

In both of the newly disclosed appearances, Zinke did not pose for photos with high-dollar donors, as had been the case with the Virgin Islands Republican Party fundraiser. POLITICO's report on Zinke's appearance in that photo line led Walter Shaub, a former director of the U.S. Office of Government Ethics who is now with the Campaign Legal Center, to ask the Office of Special Counsel to open a Hatch Act investigation. The OSC typically opens investigations in response to complaints it receives, but a spokesman declined to comment on the status of Shaub's request.

Still, some watchdogs question whether Zinke is focused enough on his day job given how much attention he has paid to politics.

"There's always the risk that a high-level government official spending more time involved in political events may not be attending to their official duties," said Nick Schwellenbach, director of investigations at Project On Government Oversight.

To view online click here.

Back

White House seeks $4.9B to shore up Puerto Rico finances Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/10/2017 07:11 PM EDT

The Trump administration today sought an additional $4.9 billion in emergency hurricane aid to stave off what Puerto Rico's governor recently warned could become a fiscal catastrophe.

The OMB sent a formal request to House leadership this afternoon, revising its most recent recovery package request to nearly $35 billion.

The extra $4.9 billion would "address the immediate liquidity issue that Puerto Rico is having," OMB spokesman John Czwartacki told POLITICO. It would allow the island government to make its payroll and fund pensions amid its worst natural disaster in decades.

The White House's request exceeds the $4 billion request from Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló last week, though it would be delivered in the form of a loan, rather than a grant.

In his letter to the White House, Rosselló warned that Puerto Rico's government needed an immediate cash infusion.

"In addition to the immediate humanitarian crisis, Puerto Rico is on the brink of a massive liquidity crisis that will intensify in the immediate future," the governor wrote to the White House.

The loan funds would likely be added to the storm recovery package that the House is expected to approve this week.

The House Appropriations Committee has received and is reviewing the request, a GOP aide confirmed.

To view online click here.

Back

Drinking water utilities push for farm bill water protections Back

By Jenny Hopkinson | 10/10/2017 07:17 PM EDT

The American Water Works Association — a group representing drinking water utilities — is urging lawmakers to include in the next farm bill provisions and funding to better protect drinking water sources from agricultural runoff.

Tracy Mehan, AWWA's executive director of government affairs, said the group is getting more involved in the farm bill process than in years past in light of high-profile instances of utilities' source water being contaminated by nitrate and other agriculture-related pollutants — including the Des Moines Water Works' unsuccessful challenge of upstream counties over farm runoff and the algal bloom that shut down Toledo's water supply in 2014.

AWWA is asking lawmakers to include "robust overall funding" for the conservation title — keeping it at $6 billion, if not adding to the current allotment. The group also wants farm bill conservation programs to prioritize protection of drinking water, increase benefits to farmers for practices that safeguard source water, and ensure at least 10 percent of conservation funds are devoted to water-quality efforts.

"We need to sensitize USDA and the relevant committees to the importance of public health" and the issues that arise from farm runoff and chemicals that make their way into bodies of water, Mehan said. For example, nitrogen, a key ingredient in fertilizer, can cause developmental problems and pose cancer risks if present at high levels in drinking water. A report earlier this year from the Environmental Working Group found the contaminant to be present in the drinking water of 218 million Americans.

While conservation programs already address water-quality issues, Mehan said AWWA's focus is to get more resources and reporting aimed at potable water sources. "We assume that a lot of the money that they are spending already is probably useful and could be legitimately categorized as [being spent on] source water protection; we would just like to be more specific and track it," Mehan said of his group's requests.

To view online click here.

Back

Was this Pro content helpful? Tell us what you think in one click.

Yes, very	Somewhat	Neutral	Not really	Not at all

You received this POLITICO Pro content because your customized settings include: Morning Energy. To change your alert settings, please go to <https://www.politicopro.com/settings>

This email was sent to lori_mashburn@ios.doi.gov by: POLITICO, LLC 1000 Wilson Blvd. Arlington, VA, 22209, USA

From: POLITICO Pro Energy
To: lori\_mashburn@ios.doi.gov; POLITICO subscriptions
Subject: Morning Energy, presented by ExxonMobil: Ryan heads to Puerto Rico amid latest Trump dustup — Is Perry abandoning free market principles? — Trump taps climate skeptic White to run CEO
Date: Friday, October 13, 2017 5:43:21 AM

---

By Anthony Adragna | 10/13/2017 05:40 AM EDT

With help from Alex Guillén

DIRE SITUATION IN PUERTO RICO GETTING HELP: Amid the latest controversy over President Donald Trump's tweets about the devastation in Puerto Rico, Congress is stressing its commitment to helping the nearly 3.5 million U.S. citizens still in dire need of assistance. Speaker Paul Ryan leads a bipartisan delegation to tour the devastated island today, a day after the House overwhelmingly passed a bill H.R. 2266 \(115\) that would aid Florida, Texas, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and other sites of recent severe weather. All 69 lawmakers voting against the bill were Republicans. Senate leaders plan to take up the measure once they finish work on a budget resolution.

Meanwhile, the administration sought to walk back Trump's suggestions he might pull the plug on aid to the island. "Our country will stand with those American cities in Puerto Rico until the job is done," Chief of Staff John Kelly said in a press conference. And a FEMA spokeswoman, Eileen Lainez, tweeted: ".@fema will be w/Puerto Rico, USVI, every state, territory impacted by a disaster every day, supporting throughout their response & recovery."

Democrats condemned Trump's comments: "Mr. President, do not send a message to any American that we will turn our backs on them. That is not fair; it's not right; and you ought to correct the statement you made this morning," House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer said on the floor. The island's governor, Ricardo Rossello, took a more measured tone: "The U.S. citizens in Puerto Rico are requesting the support that any of our fellow citizens would receive across our Nation," he tweeted. Meanwhile, two House Democrats — Nydia Velazquez and Bennie Thompson — asked DHS to investigate whether the death toll of 45 currently associated with Hurricane Maria is far lower than the actual toll.

Situation on the ground: Amid reports residents were trying to drink from wells on Superfund sites, EPA said in a status update that it sent crews to Dorado, Caguas, and San Germán to post signs and attempt to ensure water truck deliveries to those neighborhoods. More than three weeks after the hurricane arrived, 83 percent of the island lacks electricity and 36 percent of residents lack potable drinking water, according to government figures.

Meanwhile, California continues to battle wildfires that have devastated wine country and claimed at least 29 lives. Smoke from the fires has resulted in the production of as much as pollution in two days as all of the state's cars produce in a year, according to USA Today, and the Bay Area has experienced its worst air quality week in recorded history.

TGIF EVERYBODY! I'm your host Anthony Adragna, and FERC's Joe McClelland was first to identify Rep. John Moolenaar as the only chemist currently serving in Congress. For today: Who is the tallest U.S. senator in history? Send your tips, energy gossip and comments to aadragna@politico.com, or follow us on Twitter @AnthonyAdragna, @Morning\_Energy, and @POLITICOPro.

WHAT ARE YOU THINKING? A rising chorus of conservative voices are accusing Energy Secretary Rick Perry of betraying free market principles that have long been a GOP hallmark as he presses FERC to fast-track a new regulation that would directly benefit coal and nuclear power plants, Pro's Darius Dixon reports. "This is inconsistent with a longstanding policy of fiscal responsibility and open markets that have always been espoused by what I thought of as the Republican Party. I'm not sure that we're in the same place today," said former Republican FERC commissioner Nora Mead Brownell, adding that Perry's plan "undoes 20 to 25 years of really hard work."

Republicans have long bashed the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan as an example of the government picking winners and losers, but many conservatives are finding it hard to celebrate that regulation's rescission this week as Perry plots a new government intervention. "There is no free market, but you don't fight intervention with intervention," said Tom Pyle, president of the pro-market Institute for Energy Research who led Trump's DOE transition team. "He's recognized the symptoms but he's not proposing the right cure."

Perry defended his proposal Thursday before a House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee, arguing the federal government had provided financial support to various sectors for a long time and that power markets were never really fair. "We have subsidized the energy industry for a long time. I, frankly, don't have a problem with that," he said. Asked about the cost of his proposal on consumers, Perry also shot back that the issue was crucial for the nation's security: "What's the cost of freedom? What does it cost to build a system to keep America free?"

WHITE ON SCHEDULE: The White House announced late Thursday night that Kathleen Hartnett White, an outspoken critic of climate change science, will be nominated as chair of the Council on Environmental Quality. That shouldn't shock Pros who recall the April story from POLITICO's Alex Guillén and Andrew Restuccia previewing her nomination. Expect White to have one of the more contentious nominations of the year as Senate Democrats assail her longtime attacks on climate change science. "Carbon dioxide is not a pollutant," White wrote in an op-ed last year, a major departure from established climate science. She also called for a government commission to review climate science, something Pruitt is carrying out at EPA. ME would also not be surprised if Democrats bring up the 2014 piece in which White argued fossil fuels helped end slavery.

Plus: The White House said Alex Beehler will be nominated to be assistant secretary of the Army for energy, installations and environment. Beehler, a senior Defense Department official during the Bush administration, now runs his own energy consultancy. He worked at Koch Industries from 2000 to 2003 as director of environmental and regulatory affairs, according to his LinkedIn profile.

NOAA PICK CAUSES A STORM: Barry Myers' push to place restrictions on the information on the National Weather Service releases as CEO of AccuWeather is raising concerns for how he'd approach such matters as the head of NOAA, POLITICO's Andrew Restuccia reports. "There seems to be a huge conflict of interest considering his business background and belief system," Daniel Sobien, the president of the National Weather Service Employees Organization, said. Sens. Bill Nelson and Brian Schatz are among the Democrats who've also expressed concerns with the pick.

HOUSE READY FOR A PRUITT APPEARANCE: Energy and Commerce Republicans are getting antsy for EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to make his first appearance before their committee. "There's a lot of interest in him coming," Rep. John Shimkus, who chairs the Environment Subcommittee, tells ME. "Chairman [Greg Walden] is now convinced that it's time the administrator try to make time for us in his schedule." A committee aide said the panel was "currently working" to determine Pruitt's availability, a standard line for the last month.

CONGRESS TO GOVERNOR: DID YOU LIE UNDER OATH? The top House Oversight Republican and Democrat formally asked Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder in a letter Thursday whether he lied to them under oath about when he learned of an outbreak of Legionnaires' disease connected to the Flint water crisis. "If necessary, you may also choose to amend or supplement your testimony," Trey Gowdy and Elijah Cummings wrote. But Snyder shot back with his own letter shortly afterward defending his testimony as "truthful."

EXPANDED WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTIONS PASS: The House unanimously — by a 420-0 vote — sent legislation S. 585 \(115\) expanding whistleblower protections for federal workers to the White House. It would also provide training to employees so they're aware of their rights. The chamber rejected a push from Democrats to expand the measure to include employees who call out superiors for "improper use of air transportation" after the resignation of former HHS Secretary Tom Price.

CASE STUDY IN WATER INFRASTRUCTURE WOES: Dilapidated infrastructure has forced the closure of a key lock on the Ohio River in southern Illinois that's led to a 57-mile backup of 51 towboats and 564 barges waiting to pass, Pro's Eric Wolff and Tanya Snyder report. The closure of Lock 52 highlights the need for the major cash infusion that Trump promised during a speech along the banks of the same river earlier this year. Deb Calhoun, a spokeswoman for the Waterways Council, said the advocacy group for water infrastructure would "hold the administration's feet to the fire," noting "the president said we need to fix it."

Situational awareness: Eric and Tanya note Trump himself hasn't spoken much about his infrastructure package recently — and that the fall timeline for Congress to craft a legislative infrastructure package has slipped away.

BACK IN THE DEEP SOUTH: Pruitt was in Mississippi Thursday where he met with Gov. Phil Bryant and held a roundtable to discuss the agency's recent proposal to pull back the Obama-era Waters of the U.S. regulation. "Our job at EPA is not to look at folks in Mississippi as adversaries, but as partners," Pruitt said in a statement. ME would note Pruitt does not appear to have held anything resembling this type of meeting in either the Northeast or Pacific Northwest to date.

MAIL CALL! THEY FOUND SOME BEEF: Four top House Democrats — Peter DeFazio, Betty McCollum, Frank Pallone and Elijah Cummings — sent a letter Thursday asking GAO to investigate whether EPA violated the Antideficiency Act and other federal laws when Pruitt appeared in National Cattleman's Beef Association video urging members' to speak up as the agency considered whether to repeal WOTUS. "We request that GAO provide a legal opinion that addresses whether the Administrator's appearance in the promotional NCBA video in connection with the hyperlinked material on the NCBA website complies with the relevant limitations on the use of appropriated funds for lobbying and publicity or propaganda purposes and the Antideficiency Act," they wrote.

CONCERNED OVER SCIENTIFIC INTEGRITY: Two senior House Science Republicans — Lamar Smith and Andy Biggs — sent a letter to Pruitt on Thursday seeking a briefing, documents and other information about EPA's Integrated Risk Information System program, which establishes a federal database of the risks of various chemicals. "The Committee is concerned about persistent issues regarding the difficulty to correct IRIS assessments that appear to use low-quality science to justify results," they wrote.

** Presented by ExxonMobil: We're collaborating with FuelCell Energy on a novel idea to use fuel cells to capture carbon at natural gas power plants, and in the process reduce emissions and increase electrical output. This technology could be a game changer in addressing the world's growing need for energy, while also reducing the impact on the environment. Learn more. **

FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF GOOD LUCK WITH THAT: Sen. Dianne Feinstein sent a letter to Pruitt Thursday asking him to reconsider his move to rescind the Clean Power Plan. "Your decision to begin repealing the Clean Power Plan not only endangers the lives of Americans, it also undermines America's international credibility," she wrote.

GAMEPLAN FOR TACKLING SEXUAL HARASSMENT: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and National Park Service acting Director Mike Reynolds will today announce a strategy for eliminating sexual harassment, discrimination and intimidation during an all-employee meeting at the Grand Canyon National Park. Zinke's opening remarks will be public, though an employee question and answer session will be closed.

DEMOCRATIC CONSERVATION GROUP LAUNCHES: A new grassroots organization, Democratic Conservation Alliance, launches today with the goal of electing and defending Democratic politicians who will fight against anti-conservation policies. "On behalf of America's public land owners, the Democratic Conservation Alliance will help kick anti-park politicians out of office and replace them with champions of conservation who will make Teddy Roosevelt proud," Matt Lee-Ashley, a board member, said in a statement.

AU REVOIR? All fossil fuel powered vehicles would be off the streets of Paris by 2030 under a plan the city unveiled Thursday, POLITICO Europe's Marion Sollety reports. "The target is by no means written as a 'ban' by 2030 in the climate plan, but rather as a trajectory which seems both credible and tenable," a press release said. Mayor Anne Hidalgo wants diesel cars off the street by 2024 and gasoline cars gone by 2030.

COULD BE INTERESTING: Harvard's T.H. Chan School of Public Health examines public and private sector responses to climate change today at noon with a panel featuring former EPA chief Gina McCarthy and Washington Gov. Jay Inslee. Watch here.

MOVERS, SHAKERS: Jennifer Y. Brown is leaving her role as chief of staff for the House Science, Space and Technology Committee. The panel's current deputy chief of staff, Mark Marin, will replace her.

GOT PLANS FOR UNITED NATIONS FOOD DAY? Celebrate on Monday with our Pro Agriculture colleagues, who are hosting a high-level conversation on the future of the global food supply. The event, "Greening the Food Supply: Carrots and Sticks that Work," will explore success stories in sustainable agriculture and consider the challenges involved in achieving a sustainable global food supply. Eastern Market is the place: North Hall, 225 7th St., SE. The time is 11:30 a.m. RSVP: here.

QUICK HITS

- The Grandfather Of Alt-Science. FiveThirtyEight.
- Grassley says public could sway EPA rules. Iowa Farmer Today.
- The U.S. solar industry's new growth region: Trump country. Reuters.
- Canada aligning with U.K. to fight global growth in coal-fired electricity. CBC.
- North Dakota landowners' lawsuit against pipeline dismissed. AP.
- Oil Prices Fall on Concerns Over Rising U.S. Production. Wall Street Journal.
- Where's Zinke? The Interior secretary's special flag offers clues. Washington Post.

HAPPENING TODAY

9 a.m. — House Natural Resources Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee holds hearing on onshore energy policy discussion draft, Longworth 1334

THAT'S ALL FOR ME!

**Presented by ExxonMobil: Energy is fundamental to modern life and drives economic prosperity - in small communities across America and around the world. We need a range of solutions to meet growing energy demand while reducing emissions to address the risk of climate change. Visit the Energy Factor to learn more about some of the bold ideas and next-generation technologies we're working on to meet this challenge: EnergyFactor.com **

To view online:

<https://www.politicopro.com/tipsheets/morning-energy/2017/10/ryan-heads-to-puerto-rico-amid-latest-trump-dustup-025030>

Stories from POLITICO Pro

House passes second massive disaster package Back

By Sarah Ferris | 10/12/2017 03:29 PM EDT

The House overwhelmingly passed a $36.5 billion emergency funding package Thursday intended to aid hurricane recovery in Puerto Rico and several mainland states, as well as wildfire response efforts in California.

In approving (353-69) their second tranche of hurricane aid in less than five weeks, House lawmakers agreed to the largest disaster package since Hurricane Sandy. But members from both parties describe the latest infusion as a down payment for a much more costly and comprehensive response.

"We've had some incredible tragedies and natural disasters," House Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen (R-N.J.) said on the House floor Thursday. "We must act quickly to make sure the federal government fulfills its duties to millions of people in need."

The legislation (H.R. 2266 \(115\)) now heads to the Senate, where leaders plan to take it up once the chamber has finished work on a budget resolution.

In the wake of three deadly hurricanes that pounded the U.S. this season, the aid bill would send another $18.7 billion to replenish the Federal Emergency Management Agency's disaster relief fund. That money is used for urgent recovery efforts like power restoration and debris removal, as well as individual needs like housing and child care assistance.

The measure also includes $4.9 billion in loans to help Puerto Rico's government make payroll for emergency services like police and fire departments.

The federal government has declared a dozen major disasters since August, from the hurricane-battered Florida coastline to California wine country.

More than three weeks after Hurricane Maria hit, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands are still reeling from their most devastating disaster in decades and could remain largely without power through the end of the year.

The bill mostly mirrors the White House's request, including a contentious $16 billion to partially wipe out the National Flood Insurance Program's debt.

Several House Republicans, particularly on the Financial Services Committee, balked at the idea of backing a longtime Democratic priority. Other conservatives, fueled by criticism from groups like Heritage Action and Club for Growth, condemned the idea of including a flood program "bailout" in an emergency spending bill without reforms to help reach long-term solvency.

The GOP opposition was not enough to endanger the bill, however. Leadership ultimately fast-tracked the legislation, using a process for non-controversial bills that requires the support of two-thirds of those voting to achieve passage.

Hours before the House began debate, the disaster relief bill took on fresh urgency as President Donald Trump threatened to pull back federal resources from Puerto Rico. "We cannot keep FEMA, the Military & the First Responders, who have been amazing (under the most difficult circumstances) in P.R. forever!" he tweeted.

Using their debate time to condemn those remarks, several House Democrats were warned by the presiding officer not to barrage the president on the floor of the House.

"Mr. President, do not send a message to any American that we will turn our backs on them," the House's No. 2 Democrat, Rep. Steny Hoyer (D-Md.), said before the passage vote. "That is not fair, that is not right, and you ought to correct the statement you made."

Rep. Nita Lowey (D-N.Y.), the top Democrat on the House Appropriations Committee, called the president's outburst "reckless" at a time when "Americans are suffering and simply trying to survive." And Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-Fla.) accused Trump of "indifference and soft bigotry."

Congress has already enacted $15 billion in emergency aid for hurricane-battered states like Florida and Texas — a bill (H.R. 601 \(115\)) signed more than a week before Maria made landfall in Puerto Rico.

Democrats have for weeks demanded another cash infusion for the Caribbean territory, where the Trump administration has been accused of responding too slowly.

GOP leaders initially argued that manpower — not cash — was FEMA's most essential resource in the immediate wake of Maria. And a formal funding request was not expected until mid-to-late October.

But as public pressure mounted, the White House ultimately sped up its timeline and submitted a request last week.

Adding to that wish list on Tuesday, the Trump administration called for $4.9 billion to stave off what Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló warned could become a "liquidity crisis."

Lawmakers from both parties, including the full 38-member Texas delegation, have pressed for funding beyond FEMA aid and debt relief for the flood insurance program. Local lawmakers say they desperately need cash for other rebuilding tools, like the Community Development Block Grant program and the Army Corps of Engineers.

House appropriators have said those programs will likely see boosts in a future aid package, while the current bill is intended for the most urgent, life-saving efforts.

"This is the second step. This is not going to be the last one. We are going to need a lot of more help in the coming months," Resident Commissioner Jenniffer González-Colón, who represents Puerto Rico, said on the floor. "It will take a lot of resources, a lot of money and a lot of commitment of U.S. citizens like we are."

To view online click here.

Back

Trump sparks new backlash after threatening Puerto Rico aid Back

By Matthew Nussbaum and Louis Nelson | 10/12/2017 07:57 AM EDT

President Donald Trump on Thursday suggested that U.S. citizens on the hurricane-ravaged island of Puerto Rico shouldn't get used to assistance from the federal government — a statement that sparked new outrage and left the White House on the defensive.

"Electric and all infrastructure was disaster before hurricanes," Trump wrote on Twitter in a series of posts. "Congress to decide how much to spend. We cannot keep FEMA, the Military & the First Responders, who have been amazing (under the most difficult circumstances) in P.R. forever!"

Trump has come under fire for appearing to blame Puerto Rico for neglecting its infrastructure and financial health in recent years, while sparring with local officials and initially giving the U.S. territory less attention than hurricane victims in Texas and Florida.

The tweets on Thursday — which landed as nearly 90 percent of the island was still without power and nearly 40 percent of residents lack access to clean drinking water — particularly touched a nerve.

"It is not that you do not get it; you are incapable of fulfilling the moral imperative to help the people of PR. Shame on you.![sic]" Carmen Yulín Cruz, the mayor of San Juan, wrote on Twitter. In recent weeks, she has been a target of severe criticism from Trump, who dismissed her and other critics as "politically motivated ingrates."

Puerto Rico's governor, Ricardo Rosselló, sought a less fiery path, writing on Twitter: "The U.S. citizens in Puerto Rico are requesting the support that any of our fellow citizens would receive across our Nation."

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) said at a news conference that Trump's broadside "is heartbreaking and it lacks knowledge."

Two other Democrats, Reps. Nydia Velazquez (D-N.Y.) and Bennie Thompson (D-Miss.), even asked the Department of Homeland Security to investigate the possible underreporting of deaths caused by Hurricane Maria in Puerto Rico.

The concern was not contained to Democrats. House Speaker Paul Ryan echoed Trump's comment that the island needs fiscal reforms, but suggested now was not the time for that debate.

"At the moment, and it's why I'm going down there tomorrow, there's a humanitarian crisis that needs to be attended to and this is an area where the federal government has a responsibility, and we're acting on it," Ryan said.

The White House sought to clean up the comments later on Thursday, with chief of staff John Kelly telling reporters later that "the U.S. military and FEMA can't be there forever."

"The minute you go anywhere as a first responder, and this would apply certainly to the military, you are trying very hard to work yourself out of a job," Kelly said during a surprise appearance at the White House briefing, adding that FEMA and the military can be withdrawn "hopefully sooner rather than later."

He said he had spoken with Rosselló earlier Thursday and that the White House enjoys a "great relationship" with the governor. "Our country will stand with those American cities in Puerto Rico until the job is done," Kelly added.

The White House also released a statement from press secretary Sarah Sanders on Thursday afternoon.

"Our job in any disaster affected location is to help the community respond and recover from that disaster. We continue to do so with the full force of the U.S. government and its resources in Texas, Florida, Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands and other affected areas," Sanders said. "Successful recoveries do not last forever; they should be as swift as possible to help people resume their normal lives. We are committed to helping Puerto Rico. Our Administration is working with Governor Rossello and Congress to identify the best fiscally responsible path forward."

And a White House official stressed that Puerto Rico's debt crisis would be addressed independently of the disaster relief process.

Trump's morning warning came after White House officials had stressed for weeks their intention to work with Puerto Rico throughout the recovery process. And Trump himself had said last month that "we will not rest ... until the people of Puerto Rico are safe."

"These are great people. We want them to be safe and sound and secure, and we will be there every day until that happens," Trump said at a manufacturing event on Sept. 29.

Puerto Rico has struggled with the devastation from a particularly heavy hurricane season, one that included a direct hit from Hurricane Maria late last month that devastated large swaths of the island. The official death toll from the storm has risen to 45, CNN reported Wednesday, and at least 113 people are unaccounted for.

Reports of desperation are piling up, including from federal government officials. The Environmental Protection Agency on Wednesday warned Puerto Rican residents against breaking into industrial waste sites in search of drinking water. And The New York Times reported that medical care remains a challenge on the island, with just 43 of the island's 72 open hospitals currently operating with power.

Still, Trump has asserted that his administration's handling of the storm has been a great success, and he has rejected any criticism of the effort as "fake news."

Even as the president has continued to rail against the territory, Congress on Thursday moved forward on hurricane relief funds, which the White House has also advocated for.

