Good. Glad you two got to meet.

I'll plan on attending the Friday session as well.

George Fisher issued the Task Order and Shulman should sign tonight. Privacy and Security are moving quickly to issue the green light to us.

good meeting, talked process not anything that could be work. However, we did schedule a training session for me at 10 am Friday, presuming the rest of the privacy process goes as anticipated. He said Terri and company told him they were much more confident about proceeding after their discussion. He took my partial list of terms to use in developing initial sorting codes for review later, and is aware that I am still working on this, and on refining the list of categories for sorting those comments that provide new information. Will have those to you tomorrow to share with him; this is what I gave him today:

Many of the general comments do not appear to be form letters, but the non-form-letters often use similar wording. Based on a non-statistical sampling of comments displayed, use of the following words or terms indicates a general comment against the review or against changes to existing monuments:

“Backcountry Hunters & Anglers”, “awe inspiring monuments”, “continue to preserve”, “please preserve”, “Do not alter or change”, “as is”, “maintaining the current national monument designations”, “Theodore Roosevelt”, “should have been protected 50 years ago”, “an attack on America”, “preserved for future generations”, “citizen co-owner of our country's public lands”, “created through a process of public input” “treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo”, “deep concern about the current review”, “opposition to the review”, “all monuments under review”, “protect our national parks and public lands”
